The World State.

THE only ultimate remedy is a federation of nations —the application of the principle of the State to the whole world,” says the Marquess of Lothian, writing on “The Demonic Influence of National Sovereignty” in “Religion and Life.” “No form of League of Nations can end war. The sovereign State will invariably defeat any League based on contract. Law and order, peace, justice, freedom, social progress, derive from the unity and dedication involved in citizenship in a sovereign State. And it is the fact that, in the last resort, the allegiance of the citizen is owed to his own State and not to the League of Nations, which makes the League impotent as against its own members.”

No system of co-operation can overcome this terrific power. There is no final remedy for the tremendous evils which spring from the fact of national sovereignty, save the pooling of that sovereignty in supernatural matters, in a world federal State, a State which, in its own sphere, will command the allegiance of every individual, be able to legislate for and tax him, and which will represent him while leaving the national State freedom to deal with affairs in the national sphere. When such a body comes into being, then and then only, will war end and the perversions and destructions inherent in the competition of national sovereignties be ended on earth

“Christianity alone offers the remedy,” continues Lord Lothian. “As a noted Oriental scholar has said, all the real achievements of Western civilisation, the respect for human personality, the humanitarian movement, the abolition of slavery, individual freedom, the emancipation of women, the ideal of moral purity, the concept of social reform, the rise of democracy, the assault on war, have all derived their greatest support and their greatest driving power from those who have drawn deeply from the fountains of courage and inspiration and devotion to God and man which spring eternally from the Bible.”

The above statement regarding the needs of the poor troubled world would seem to be remarkably near to what the Scriptures indicate will take place.

We do not know just what may have been in the mind of the Marquess of Lothian respecting- how the one sovereign state could be established. So many have thought that the churches must do, this by missionary effort and other means, and deem that church unity is essential for this purpose. While such anticipations are vain, yet it is true that dolly the glorified Church of Christ associated with her -Lord in His Kingdom of blessing can bring about this desire of all nations.” It is then and the only that the followers of Christ have any responsibility in regard to the world’s government

The work of the Church during the Gospel Age has been quite apart from all politics. The commission given was to preach the gospel of the kingdom as a witness in all the world, in order to call out a special class (Acts 15:14-17) which should be sanctified and prepared for the future work of Messiah’s reign. When the Body of Christ is completed, the full number required gathered, then the government will be inaugurated that will command the whole world as one sovereign state. “For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given and the government shall be upon His shoulders . . . and of the increase of His government there shall be no end . . . to order it and establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever.” (Isa. 9:6, 7.)

While the Church as a company of spiritual beings with Christ will be the real government, though unseen by the human eye, natural Israel will be established once more in Palestine under divine favour, and will be the earthly central government, representing the heavenly controlling power as shown by Micah 4:1-7. “. . . Many nations shall come and say, come let us go up to the mountain of the Lord and to the house of the God of Jacob; and He will teach us of His ways and we will walk in His paths; for the law shall go forth of Zion (Christ and the Church in glory) and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem . . . nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.” The Lord’s prayer will then have fulfilment, “Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven.”

“The light that shines on Zion’s hill
Shall lighten every land,
The king that reigns in Salem’s Towers
Shall all the world command.”

Rebirth of the Jewish Language.

RABBI FALK in the following article sees the revival of culture in Palestine nearing an apex of achievement. The language of Ancient Jewry has been encouraged and after 2000 years a lowly Hebrew has succeeded in a wonderful resurrection of time-hallowed customs:—

The ancient, historical land of Palestine—cradle of the two great world religions, Judaism and Christianity—has throughout the centuries attracted the interest of the whole world. To-day that land arrests still greater attention; not merely because of the recent lamentable disturbances, but mainly by reason of its amazing rural and urban growth.

Too often, however, does this latter phenomenon —the transformation of a land neglected for centuries ‘ into a land equipped with all the amenities of life—obscure the fact that there has been an intellectual and cultural growth of the first magnitude. Particularly does this apply to the revival of historical, Biblical Hebrew; its transformation into a colloquial tongue, and its development within the last decade to a high intellectual level. This rebirth of Hebrew as a spoken vernacular, after 2000 years of potential dormancy, stands out preeminently as a stupendous achievement in the realm of the spirit, and in the history of the movement for the re-establishment of a Jewish national home in the land of Palestine.

The story of the renaissance of Hebrew as a living language begins in the land of Palestine towards the end of the nineteenth century. At this time there were living there a small population of Jews, composed of different nationalities, yet united by the single idea of creating Jewish agricultural colonies in the land of their forefathers.

Curiously enough, no effort was made by them to revive their ancient language. They used Hebrew as a “pis aller,” in much the same way as a group. of University students, of different nationalities, resorts to the Latin language for purposes of mutual understanding. It was, then, not due to, this group, but to a few outstanding personalities, that a movement for the rebirth of the historical Biblical language was begun.

Outshining all other contemporaries in this mission was a withered consumptive man, who was born in a little Ghetto town of Russia, and known as ben Yehuda. Together with his wife he had, in 1880, come to a deserted and ruined Palestine—a place where he knew no one—with the sole purpose of causing the sweet sounds of the language of David and Solomon, of Isaiah and Jeremiah, to re-echo in the hills of Palestine.

Once in the land he spoke nothing but Hebrew, and when his first child was born ben Yehuda was privileged to hear his son babbling in Hebrew. After two thousand years this was the first child to be reared wholly in the Biblical tongue. Thus, was set the matter-of-course habit of the Palestine life of to-day; a precedent which, however, could not have been achieved without almost superhuman self-denial.

His earnestness and idealism gained him the moral and practical support of the Zionist movement. From now on, the recreation of the Hebrew language as the spoken national tongue of the Jews. of Palestine was one of the fundamentals of that organisation. A school of secular education, in which the medium of instruction was the Hebrew tongue, was set up; and a Hebrew paper, at first only a single sheet, was published.

The movement met with bitter opposition. The Turkish Government--at that time the rulers of the country--saw in it the furtherance of a political unity which might weaken their central power. The orthodox Jews, from purely religious motives, joined this opposition. To this group, which had come to Palestine for the purpose of prayer and meditation, the use of Hebrew as a medium of everyday conversation was sacrilege. Hebrew, in their eyes, was the "Loshan Hakodesh"—the Holy Tongue—a language to be used for prayer, meditation, and study alone. Most surprising of all was the antagonism of Jewish parents to this movement. They did not believe that so purely a literary language as Hebrew could give their children a secular education sufficiently thorough to fit them out for the battle of life.

Notwithstanding this opposition from religious, political and parental bodies, these difficulties were fought and overcome; mainly by the self-sacrificing idealism of the teachers and the enthusiasm of their young pupils. Teachers and pupils agreed between themselves to teach and learn in secret what could not be taught and learnt in public; and as time went on the language gained greater and greater recognition. School after school was established, with curricula based on the Hebrew language, and newspaper after newspaper was founded, after the style of the original single sheet of the first Palestinian Hebrew paper.

With the rapid growth of Hebrew it became necessary to augment its vocabulary, the reason being that since a natural development of Hebrew as a spoken vernacular had been arrested 2000 years ago, it was totally inadequate to cope with many words of modern origin, particularly scientific and technical terminology. Thus it is doubtful whether Hebrew could have developed, to the extent it did, were it not for the band of erudite scholars who, on the basis of the old Biblical Hebrew, created those words which were essential for modern conditions.

Various methods were employed by them. An interesting example is the word thermometer. On examination it was found to be derived from flu. Greek therme = heat, metron = measure; so the Hebrew word coined was mad-chon, a literal translation of the Greek.

This analysis of the modern word and. transliteration of its component parts was only one of the methods used. Another was to give new meanings to the old Biblical words, e.g., the modern Hebrew for the noun "strike" is the same as the Biblical Hebrew for the noun "rest." Words were also borrowed from cognate Semitic languages, especially Arabic, and scientific and sporting terms were adopted without change from modern language. ("Football" is a curious exception, being literally translated as "ball of the foot.")

Of course, many of these innovations which were not in harmony with the spirit of Hebrew were soon neglected, and those that remained were absorbed in the language; so much so that words which were looked upon as part and parcel of the Hebrew language were mere coinages and foreign bodies. To guard against too wide a divergence from classical Hebrew there was, in later years, established a body of scholarly Hebraists, called the Vaad Haloshon (Council of Language), which in its outlook may be compared to the Academie Francaise. The purpose of this Vaad Haloshon is to ensure the development, while retaining the purity of the language. From time to time it publishes brochures showing the results of its researches and the words accepted into the language.

From the modest beginnings of ben Yehuda and his supporters, some two generations ago, Hebrew has become an accomplished fact—a fact in the soul and in the blood. The old virtues that classical Hebrew retained in its literature have continued with it in Palestine, namely: remarkable conciseness, allusiveness, concomitant by-values of meaning possible only to a language heavy with ancient memories.

To this Palestine has added unexpected resiliency, mercurial adaptiveness, the innate simplicity of village talk, all of which gives the modern language an untranslated genuineness of thought and feeling. The virile youth of the new Palestinian generation, born and bred in Hebrew-, exhale the language from the air, from the street, from the whole environment.

To-day Hebrew is one of the three official languages, the other two being English and Arabic. With a population of about 400,000 Jews, Palestine has about 65 Hebrew periodical publications, of which four are daily papers--"Haaretz" (The Land), "Door Hayom" (Daily Post), "Dvar" (The World), "Haboker" (The Dawn)—each of superb literary merit;

30 weeklies and fortnightlies, 24 monthlies; and the rest bi-monthlies . and quarterlies. The two large publishing houses of Dvir and Mizpeh, together with the 'University Press, issue thousands of Hebrew books a year, with original works and translations, in all fields of literature.

Living and Walking in the Spirit

“If we live in the spirit let us also walk in the spirit. Let us not be desirous of vain glory, provoking one another, envying one another” --Gal. 5:25,26

THE Apostle says, “If we live in the spirit, let us also walk in the spirit.” What did he mean? Was it possible to live in the spirit, and not walk in it? It would certainly be useless to be professing the spiritual life if not conforming oneself to walk in that direction. The Apostle Paul set such an example of walking in the spirit that he said, “For me to live is Christ.”

Until the personal indwelling presence of the spirit of Christ has become one of the deepest facts of our experience as Christians, we will not have begun to realise the real meaning of these words. This is evident from the testimony of Jesus respecting His own life on earth. He declared that His own life was what it was, solely because of the indwelling- spirit of the Father. He said, “The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of Myself; but the Father that dwelleth in Me, He doeth the works.” John 14:10. Thus it is that, unless we are abiding in Him and He is abiding within our hearts, taking possession of us, we are incapable of doing or being anything acceptable to God.

The way we walk will manifest the measure of thy indwelling spirit of Christ, and according to the teachings of Jesus we must eventually reach the point where we can say, “I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me.” Then, too, we may say, “I am in Christ and Christ is in me, and He that dwelleth in me He doeth the work.”

In the many illuminating figures used by the Apostle Paul, we have the progressive stages of Christian experience set forth. The identification of the true believer with Christ is so complete that the Apostle declares him “crucified with Christ.” We are said to be dead with Him, buried with Him, and also raised with Him. He was raised for our justification, and in order to accomplish the work of sanctification in us He must live with us, for this work is wrought out from within, not miraculously from without.

More important, then, than questions touching the right direction of religious activities is the matter of ‘the hold which Christ -has got upon the interior life. More important than questions of method is that of spirit; more important than questions of form is that of life. If Christ be supreme within, if He has His own way within the domain of the soul, all questions as to the particular shape that service ought to take are of secondary concern. To one wholly given up to Him, it is all, one to lie in the Divine hand or to be led by it; to stand and wait, or to run and work. One thing is sure, the life that Christ possesses and directs cannot miss the mark.

Let Christ be formed within as a spirit and principle of righteousness and the mastery of inborn sin is broken. As His power increases, the power of sin will decrease; as He gains ascendancy, the world, the flesh and the devil will lose their hold; as the image of the heavenly comes out, the image of the earthly will fade away. The Christian will grow as Christ grows in him; the conscience will become tender, softened by His grace, and the will becomes subdued by His all-conquering love. As Christ expands within, Christian life expands without. Christian activity increases as the place which Christ fills in the inner life enlarges. When the indwelling spirit of Christ comes to its full strength the whole life becomes fashioned into the perfect type of a Christ-imaged character. Let us then strive to be of those in whom the spirit of God can dwell and bring about these great attainments.

The Apostle assures us that we stand surrounded by “a cloud of witnesses”—those of a former age who accomplished much through their faith in God. The Lord was able to use them in wonderful ways because they were obedient to His will and because they were subjected to the power of the spirit exercised in their day. There have been many others in the present age whose lives stand out like lighted lanterns, pointing us to greater things, as well. These have been God's faithful witnesses to the power of the indwelling spirit, and we may catch from them an added inspiration enabling us to reflect the light received from the Sun of Righteousness. It is good to think of these resplendent characters and to admire in them the splendid characteristics they displayed, but it is far better to have our eyes fixed upon the source from which their triumphs sprang, beholding "the glory of the Lord," and by the power received when we "see Jesus only," be "changed into the same image from glory to glory." May we with willing selfabandonment, ardent devotion and fervent zeal follow Christ from day to day. If we do so, through praise or otherwise, through peaceful circumstances or seeming failure in dark valleys where faith is tried as in a fire, we shall one day see Him face to face and share with Him: the glory that excelleth. His abiding presence in our hearts in the days of our pilgrimage here below, will accomplish this for us if we will only give Him undisputed control of our lives.

Students of the Bible are no doubt well aware of the fact that the Scriptures clearly show two kinds of believers side by side in the Church, and many of the Apostle's sorrows were traceable to this fact. If this was true at the time of the early Church, it must certainly have been true ever since. Because of this fact, it is important to determine of whom the Apostle was speaking when he spoke of the "more than conquerors." It is the heritage of every believer to become of this class, but very few really attain this standing. Take, for illustration, the Israelites, who, having left Egypt, were free from Pharaoh and their former taskmasters, but they grieved God for forty years through their failure to at once go up and possess their inheritance, Canaan. Through unbelief they did not enter in. They saw such great impossibilities in their natural way—cities with great walls and giants, but saw themselves as grasshoppers. Herein was their sin of unbelief. We need to carefully note that it was not a question of doubting the report of the spies about the desirability of the goodly land, but a matter of supposed inability on their part to take possession of it. However, there were two of those who went to spy out the land who are typical of those in all ages who have been the pioneers in carrying the truth forward. All these records of Israel, their failures and doings, have been written for our instruction. It is God's way of showing us that to-day, the same as in previous times, the "sin of unbelief" shuts many out from the inheritance of blessing provided for those who have the strong desire to obtain and the faith to pursue, until they possess it.

Walking in the spirit means progress. Slipping back would not be walking. . We may, like Israel of old, admit that the land of our inheritance "floweth with milk and honey," but when we sing, "There is joy in the valley of blessing so sweet," do we actually possess it as a permanent reality? —the fulness of joy that Jesus promised to all His own. Then we sing, further, "There is peace in the valley of blessing so sweet," and it is so, but do we really possess that abiding peace? —"the peace that passeth all understanding," and that will abide through all misunderstanding as well. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee."

So, in the epistle of John the Apostle proceeds to probe the life using tests to which each of us must submit, tests that distinguish the true from the false. "He that saith he abideth in Him ought himself also so to walk even as He walked." The Apostle also uses the expression, "If we say" testing our sincerity. Our professed fellowship with Him is put to a practical test. We may ask ourselves: Is that light and love manifested in our daily walk? His spirit flowing in us and actuating us should find a like expression in our life as it did in His. His walk then becomes the standard by which we should strive to walk; it is the inwardness of His life, its controlling principles evidenced in His walk that must control our walk and our lives.

In his Gospel the Apostle John comprehends that matchless walk as a manifestation of light and love. He walked in the light of the Father's presence by constant communion with Him and by a life in all things pleasing in His sight which brought forth the commendation, “This is My beloved Son in whom I am well pleased.” Jesus was in such oneness and communion with the Father that He could say, “He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father.” Then tracing His words and works back to His Father as their source, He said, “The words that I speak unto you I speak not of Myself.” Our Lord so walked in the light of the Father’s face that on the cross, when this light must of necessity be withdrawn from Him, the experience was one of utter darkness and dismay. He so walked that He was “the light of the world,” and could invite others to follow Him with the assurance that they would “not walk in darkness.”

Then He also walked in love. Under test His love never failed—He continued loving. He not only loved His own to the end, but He loved His enemies as well. Being reviled, He reviled not again, but commended God’s love in pouring out His life for the world of mankind, some of whom hated Him with cruel arid malicious hatred. What a standard of love He set for His followers.

The Apostle John associates us with our Lord in that he says, “we ought also so to walk.” And again, “If we walk in the light as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another.” We cannot walk in reliance upon our own resources, but if we have the spirit of God ruling in our hearts, we will have the power to demonstrate that we have been brought out of darkness into His marvellous light.

The Covenant and Confidence of Faith.

My whole though broken heart. O Lord.
From henceforth shall be Thine
And here I do my vow record:
This hand, these words are mine.

All that I have, without reserve, offer here to Thee;
Thy will and honour, all shall serve,
That Thou bestow’dst on me,
All that exceptions save, I lose;

All that I lose I save;
The treasure of Thy love I choose;
And thou art all I crave.
My God, Thou hast my heart and hand;

I all to Thee resign:
I’ll ever to this covenant stand,
Though flesh hereat repine.
Now it belongs not to my care,

Whether I die or live;
To love and serve Thee is my share,
And this Thy grace must give.
If life be long, I will be glad,

That I may long obey:
If short—yet why should I be sad,

That shall have the same pay?

Christ leads me through no darker rooms
Than He went through before;

He that into God’s Kingdom comes
Must enter by this door.

Come, Lord, when grace bath made me meet
Thy blessed Face to see;
For if Thy work on earth be sweet,
What will Thy glory be? —Baxter.

Self-Examination.

IN 2 Cor. 13:5 Paul says, "Try your own selves whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Or know ye not, your own selves, that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?" The context apparently shows that the Corinthians had accused Paul of having no influence over them for good, and his ministry as being weak and insignificant. Paul replies by telling them to look at their present condition as compared with their past, see the change that has taken place in their lives, see the possession they now have, and in the light of these things let them say whether his influence over them has been for good or not, or if his ministry is weak and insignificant. Again, in 1 Cor. 11: '28, the same Apostle says, "Let a man examine himself." But, in this, Paul means only to interpose a caution to prepare the receiver to eat the Lord's supper worthily.

It is impossible to know ourselves by looking at the present. We only partly know ourselves as we see our life in the past. Every day our actions surprise us, and frequently we find that we have done the very thing we never thought we would do. I suppose Abraham did not really know the strength of his faith till called upon to sacrifice Isaac. In the light of that trial we could estimate the real strength of his faith. In the shortness of memory we fail to profit by past mistakes. In every action of ours there are so many details giving rise to so many causes of actions which may differ in each action, thus making it impossible for us to judge truly of our own condition. The Greeks had a favourite motto among their philosophers, "Know thyself"; but by this they did not mean to teach that by merely looking into their own - actions they came to understand their own character and became able to estimate their real worth, but rather that each-one should examine the basis and facts of his philosophy for himself, and not be content to receive them secondhand. Then, again, many people do not grow better from rigid self-introspection. The bad only see good and excuses for the evil in their lives. The good only see evil in theirs, and sadden their lives by deploring it. One of the saintliest women I ever knew, and whom all revered, began to direct her attention to her own life, to examine it, to search it, and to question whether she did truly believe or not, till in a few months she concluded she had no faith, that her life was full of evil deeds, that she was unsaved and had no hope, and that there was none for her; and in this state she lives to-day.

We make a distinction between heart-searching and life-searching, which many fail to make. Our hearts, that is our wills, should be perfect; but our lives cannot be perfect, because "we have this treasure (our new wills or new hearts) in earthen vessels.-(in imperfect bodies)."- He, therefore, who judges of -his acceptableness with God by judging of his perfection or imperfection in thought, word and deed, must condemn himself, if he be honest and if he have a proper estimate of perfection in these respects. But he that judges his heart, his motives, his will, his intentions, should always be able to find it true to the Lord,—however much his life may come short of his new will—the mind of Christ begotten in him by the exceeding great and precious promises of God's Word.

We are not merely to ask ourselves whether we love God, but also whether our love takes the practical form of willing and trying to serve God. This, His Word indicates, is the real test--not what we succeed in doing, but what we honestly and earnestly try to do.

The mother never questions whether she loves her children or not, but shows her love by her services; the industrious man never stops to wonder if he is industrious. Christ says, "He that heareth My words and doeth them, he it is that loveth Me."

We can know our hearts only as God, who sits as a refiner of gold, tries us: under the hand of His proving we learn to know ourselves. God does the searching to see if there is any evil way in us. He searches, tries and proves us, and not we our own hearts. The Christian only grows Godlike, strong in faith and hope, as he learns to look away from himself to the Son of Man. It is said that one of the gifted painters of the world stood before the masterpiece of the greatest genius of the age. This he never hoped to rival, nor even to equal, yet the infinite superiority did not crush him, nor cause him to despair. He saw realised those conceptions that had long floated vaguely before him in unsubstantial form; in every line and touch he felt a spirit immeasurably superior. As he stood gazing at it his heart swelled with emotion, his feelings became elevated, and he turned away exclaiming "And I, too, am a painter." Let the hesitating believer look on Christ, the embodiment of the highest and holiest of all conceptions, till his heart can feel His spirit and touch, then he can turn to the world, believing and declaring, "I, too, am a Christian."

The Books of the Bible.

(Convention Address.)

THE Bible is the most wonderful book in the world—it is the most important book. It is so important that all the forces of evil and darkness have sought to destroy it; no book has had such enemies. Other books have been similarly treated by the enemies of truth, but that has been generally because of their connection with the Bible. Its worst enemies have been those, who, while professing to be Christians, have used their positions as ministers and leaders of religious thought to undermine faith in the inspiration of prophets, evangelists and apostles.

The prince of darkness has done his utmost to hinder the glorious light of the gospel of Christ from shining into the hearts of the people. He has had great success, working through the great Antichrist—the Roman Catholic Church.

In the fifteenth century the Pope thought he had quietened every protesting voice that could proclaim the message of truth, liberty and salvation; the two witnesses, the Old and New Testaments appeared to be slain, but even then the Lord declared “Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments, and they shall walk with Me in White, for they are worthy.” (Rev. 3:4.)

Our thought at this time is to speak of the “Books” in which these names are recorded. We read in Mal. 3:16, 17. “Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another, and a book of remembrance was written before Him for them that feared the Lord and that thought upon His name; and they shall be Mine saith the Lord, in that day when I make up my jewels.”

The thought of such Books of Life runs all through the Bible. In Rev. 17:8, mention is made of a book of life in which some names are written “from the foundation of the world.” Of course, it does not mean that God has literal books in which are written in some language or human writing, such names. It does indicate, however, that God has a record of the faithful in all ages and that His great purpose in respect of a selection of certain persons and classes is working out in an orderly way and the outcome is all foreknown to Him.

When man was created Adam’s name was in a Book of Life, and the whole human race was represented in him.

He had access to the trees of life, the fruits of which would sustain him in health and lasting human life on earth.

His name was not written in the Lamb's book of life; not written among the names of the firstborn, whose names are written in heaven. He was, as Paul says, "Of the earth, earthy" (1 Cor. 15:47, 48), not spiritual but human, not immortal but mortal. (Psa. 8, Leeser.)

By sin Adam forfeited the privilege of partaking of the trees of life—he was compelled to leave the garden, otherwise the sentence of death might not have operated as it has upon himself and his progeny. In other words, his name was removed from the Book of Life; he was sentenced to- death. "So death passed upon all."

Satan had said they would not die, and by that same lie he has been deceiving mankind ever since. He has led men to think that when they seem to die they are simply entering a fuller life in the spirit world, an evolution. So the deceived poet has written, "Call it not death, 'tis but transition," as though the names of the human family were still written in the Book of Life. The majority of church people are still labouring under this great deception; it is embodied in the creeds under the caption of the "Immortality of the soul."

It is, however, very few of earth's millions who will. become spirit beings at all—"whose names are written in heaven." "The heaven of heavens is the Lord's, but the earth hath He given to the children of men." That is, man was made to live on the earth. The names of all the willing and obedient who prove worthy, during the Messianic reign of Christ will be written in "another book of life," which is to be opened before the Great White Throne at the end of the Millennial Age (Rev. 20:12), when all must be judged by Jehovah as to whether they are worthy of life everlasting. That will be a trial corresponding to that under which Adam failed and brought death upon all.

Life on any Plane is ordained only for the Righteous.

Man was created to live in harmony with the righteous laws of his Creator. Sin entered, death passed upon all men (Rom. 5:12), but God in His mercy has made provision by the sacrifice of Christ for paying the penalty and providing an opportunity for each to have an individual trial, and of having their names re-written in the Book of Life.

While mankind generally is "dead in trespass and sins," there have been some in all ages who have felt after God and who have been justified by faith and their names have been entered in a Book of Life. This is indicated in Rom.

7, where Paul, speaking of himself as representing the Israelites under the Law Covenant, says: "I was alive without the law once (being children of the covenant made with Abraham—Acts 3:25), but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died"—the law which was ordained unto life slew me. (Rom. 7:9-1 L.)

We find that there were some prior to the flood, who, because of their faith, and in view of the Ransom, to be paid by Jesus, had their names recorded in a Book of Life—Abel, Seth, Enoch, Noah, and others. In the Patriarchal Age there were Abraham, Melchisedec, Isaac and Jacob, and on through the Law Dispensation there were those, who, unable to keep the Law perfectly, trusted in the great promise to Abraham which the Law did not disannul. (Gal. 3:15.) When the Law Covenant was inaugurated the nation promised to keep its instructions, and by their Atonement Day sacrifices pointing to Christ, Israel became alive towards God, their names were written, as it were, in the mediator's Book of Life. Had any been able to keep that Law perfectly they could have gained everlasting life on earth, and thus be able to appear before the Great White Throne of God, just as the world of mankind will, when led up the highway of holiness under the better Mediator than Moses, in the next age.

However, the Law having been accepted, the failure to keep it brought once -again upon them the sentence of death, as Paul puts it—"Sin revived, and I died." So, by the deeds of the Law no flesh was justified—"none righteous, no, not one." No names remained written in the Law Book of Life excepting that of the Son of Man, who was "born under the Law (that He could keep it, and give His life) to redeem them that were under the Law."

The world of mankind are still under the sentence of death; they are not on trial for life or death, being "condemned already." However, any endeavours towards righteousness will be rewarded by thus having a better character to begin with when raised from the dead and given an opportunity of having their names written in the Book of Life in that restitution age. Those who now act wickedly bring punishment upon themselves, both in the present time and in the time of the resurrection, for they deprave their characters and will have- so much the more to overcome, in order to gain life at that time.

It would seem that God has always had a Book of Life open, in which the names of the faithful could be recorded. Many of these are mentioned in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews. Moses's name was written in a Book of Life.

(Exod. 32:32.) It was when Israel had sinned by making the golden calf, God had said to Moses, "Let me alone, that my wrath may wax hot against them, and that I may consume them: and I will make of thee a great nation." Moses pleaded, "If thou wilt not forgive their sin, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written." The Lord replied, "Whosoever hath sinned against me, him will I blot out of my book."

When the Lord came to Israel nineteen hundred years ago, He offered to release them from the condemnation of the Law Covenant. "He made an end of the Law, nailing it to the cross." He opened up "a new and living way"—a new Book of Life was opened. He came to His own, and "to as many as received Him to them gave He power (privilege) to become sons of God." (John:12.) Israel as a nation rejected Christ—only a remnant believed. The Law Covenant ended, the Book of Life under that Covenant was closed, as God no longer recognised Israel as alive toward Him. That nation became like all other nations, "dead in trespasses and sins," and must wait until another Book of Life will be opened under the New Covenant and greater Mediator.

The indictment and curse of Israel are strongly expressed by the prophetic Psalm 69:17-28: "Let their table become a snare, and that which should have been for their welfare let it become a trap pour out thine indignation upon them.... Let their habitation be desolate, for they persecute him whom thou hast smitten. . . . Let them not come into thy righteousness. Let them be blotted out of the book of the living, and not be written with the righteous." Thus it was that the Book of Life under the Law Covenant was closed; because of unbelief that nation was rejected. Only a remnant was saved and obtained the privilege of having their names recorded in the wonderful Book of Life, as, sons of God, on the spiritual plane, as the church of the firstborn whose names are written in heaven. (Heb. 12:23.) However, the Apostle (Rom. 11:25-27) assures us that when the Book containing the names of the heavenly company is full, "when the fullness from the gentiles be come in," then all Israel shall be saved and have opportunity of having their names written in the further Book of Life—receiving human life on earth.

The New and Living Way.

A new Book was opened at Pentecost for the church of the firstborn. Paul refers to this particular class as being divinely "blessed with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ, according as He hath chosen us in Him before the foundation of the world that we should be holy and without blame before Him, having predestinated us unto the adoption of children," etc. This Book is to contain the names of the “New Creation,” of whom Jesus said, “I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go I will come again and receive you unto Myself, that where I am there ye may be also.”

Prior to Jesus there were no names in this Book. Jesus said, “Of all that have been born, there hath not arisen a greater than John (the Baptist), but he that is least in the Kingdom of Heaven is greater than he” (Luke 7:28.) When we think of the noble characters such as Abraham, Job, Jacob, Moses, Daniel, Isaiah, Jeremiah and others, it seems strange that we should have such a wonderful hope so much greater than theirs; yet, there it is. In Hebrews 11:38-40, Paul speaks of these: “Of whom the world was not worthy . . . these all having obtained a good report through faith received not the promise; God having provided some better thing for us.” Their names are in the Book of Life which will be opened in the Messianic Age, when Christ and the Church reign for the blessing of all the families of the earth, under the New Covenant. These ancient worthies will then be “princes in all the earth,” the earthly representatives of the new heavenly government. Satan and the evil spirits will be bound and Christ and His saints will rule instead.

It is important that we should realise more and more deeply our privilege in Christ of having our names in the same Book of Life, as “joint heirs with Him”—as His Bride, associate members of the Abrahamic Seed. (Gal. 3:16, 29.) We note that all do not have this opportunity; it is only such as “the Lord our God shall call”—only those who are invited by the Heavenly Father. This is seen in the parable of the Great Supper. The invitation was first confined to Israel.

Jesus said: “I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the House of Israel,” go not into the way of the Gentiles. When, however, Israel stumbled into blindness, through unbelief, the gospel invitation went out to the nations, not with the object of converting all nations, but to “take out a people” (Acts 15:14-17), to fill up the vacant places at the table. When the full number of this elect class is complete and the members are all recorded in the heavenly Book of Life, as the spiritual Seed of Abraham, then a wider invitation will go out. (Rev. 22:17.)

However, “many are called (invited) but few are chosen,” Many seem to come so far and have their names written in the heavenly Book, but fail to make their calling and election sure. Their names would seem to be removed from the place allotted to them and others take their places. “Take heed that no man take thy crown.” The failure comes about through allowing earthly, fleshly interests and, selfish desires to quench the spiritual life. They cling to the natural, human things, while still also wishing to serve God; this appears to be the case with most of those who start in the Christian way. The result is that they fail to gain “the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.” While their names may still be maintained in the Book of Life if they are corrected by the “great tribulation” permitted to come upon them, yet it is that instead of sitting with Christ in His throne, they are to serve before the throne—a great multitude. (Rev 7:13, 14.)

How wonderful is the inheritance of the hundred and forty-four thousand overcomers. If we could grasp the glorious thought of it, how earnest it would make us. How anxious we should be to learn and to do everything possible in order to qualify for such honour. It is well that we remember what it cost our Lord, so that we might be eligible to receive the Divine invitation, that our names might be written in heaven as members of the Church of the Firstborn. Seeing that our Lord first loved us and gave Himself for us, our hearts must respond in love to Him and desire to follow His steps and conform our characters to His.

The Lord had chosen seventy disciples and sent them forth to proclaim, the opening up of the new Book of Life-- “the kingdom of heaven is at hand.” These returned rejoicing in the great works that they had been able to perform. Jesus answered, “Rejoice not that the spirits are subject to you, but rejoice that your names are written in heaven,”

How may we know that our names are written in heaven? There are definite steps that must be taken and definite promises to such as take these steps. First, there must be a clear turning away from sin and earnest seeking the Lord and righteousness. "Repent and be converted," says Peter. The Heavenly Father is represented in the father of the prodigal son; He is ready to receive and clothe with righteousness, and more than that. If, after being justified by faith in the precious blood of Christ, we realise that we are not our own, that we are bought with a price and that it is only our reasonable service to present our bodies a living sacrifice to God—a full surrender of self, selfish aims and objects turning entirely to God—saying, "Thy holy will be done, howe'er it cross my own," then it is that the Lord grants the gift of the holy spirit, Which is the spirit of sonship, and we are "accepted in the beloved," as, "sons of God." God has sealed us as His, and, as it were, puts a ring on our finger; we are betrothed to His Son—our names are written in heaven, among the "Church of the Firstborn." Then there is a great feast provided; we feed upon the "Bread from heaven," and the good hopes and rich promises of the Word. In this way grace and strength are provided so that we may make our calling and election sure, and prove overcomers and receive the reward of Rev. 3:21, and Rev. 3:5.

"He that overcometh shall be clothed in white raiment, and I will not blot out his name from the Book of Life."

How separate from the world this class has been all down the age—"Ye are not of the world." The line of demarkation must be kept clear. The Christian who affiliates with the world cannot be an overcomer. The distinct separation is seen in Rev. 13. 8, where all the world are seen worshipping the great beast—the Roman Catholic Church, the anti-christ. "All that dwell upon the earth shall worship him whose names are not written in the Book of Life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. Then in Rev. 17:8, it is interesting to note that this great beast which had been wounded arises again and is then cast into destruction and that the whole world will be astonished, excepting those whose names are written in the Book of Life.

When this Book of Life is completed—the full number of God's elect being recorded — then another Book of Life will be opened and all the Willing and obedient of mankind will have opportunity of having their names written therein. That will be during the thousand years' reign of Christ, the object of which is "the restitution of all things which God has spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began." (Acts 3:20-22.) All will be assisted to go up the highway of holiness; with the way made easy. There will be no devil to deceive or entice and the stumbling stones will be taken out of the way. (Isa. 35.)

Then at the end of that age all must appear before the Great White Throne of Jehovah—a corresponding trial to that of our first parents in Eden. "And another Book was opened which is the Book of Life." All who by that time are not found worthy of being written in the Book of Life will be destroyed in the second death. The sentence of Eden was. to the first death, Adamic death—this is the second sentence of Jehovah and the second death from which there is no recovery. (Rev. 20:7-15; 21:23-27; 22: 1, 2; Dan. 7:9, to.) "Blessed are they that do His commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." (Rev. 22:14.)

Sydney Bible Class.

The friends in Sydney have sent the following information respecting change of address:—"The Class unanimously decided to move from our present room in Rawson Chambers, to the Child Study Rooms, 75 Liverpool Street. The rooms are on the left side of Liverpool Street, a few doors down from George Street. On entering the door, turn to the left. and walk up the stairway.

"Trusting the change will prove profitable to the Class spiritually, as the position will lend itself to quietude."

A Night of Weeping. Joy comes in the Morning

THE following, which has recently reached us, by circular, from the Campaign Director of The United Electors of Australia, reveals the viewpoint of many towards world events at the present time:

“It is generally accepted that the world is in a very critical state—there are grave fears that the time is fast arriving for the collapse or another civilisation. Portents are more than alarming—the situation is desperate. It has become palpably evident that the men conducting the destinies of the world are leading it to destruction. We can no longer place reliance in them to look after our National affairs. The peoples of every country express in no mean way their abhorrence of war, and yet in defiance of the wishes of the people the main activity in the world to-day is preparation for war.

“Definitely the time has arrived when the peoples of the earth have to arise and take action to stop the approaching cataclysm and shape a course in their National affairs that will lead to Peace and Prosperity.

“We, in Australia, are fortunate in having a form of Government which permits us, if we will, to decide our destiny. The principle of Democratic Government is sound. We, as a people, have to put that principle into practice, and do so at once before it is too late. The machine to do so is in operation, and to speed it up we need every assistance available. On that account we apply to you for your co-operation in that you will call your members together as early as is convenient and permit a trained speaker from our class to place the matter before them. We would like you to treat this matter as one of extreme urgency.”

There is no doubt that the minds of thinking people are now alert to the dread possibilities of the present world outlook. Truly we have reached the time of which our Lord spoke—“Upon the earth distress of nations. with perplexity. ... Men’s hearts failing them for fear. . . .” (Luke 21:25, 26.) In Isaiah 24:19, 20, we read: “The earth is utterly broken down. . . . The earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard, and shall be removed like a cottage; and the transgression thereof shall be heavy upon it; and it shall fall and not rise again.” The Psalmist also speaks of this same time, but indicates as well the great remedy that the Lord will provide when mankind are ready to “cry unto Him.” We quote: “They reel to and fro and stagger like a drunken man, and are at their wit’s end. Then they cry unto the Lord in their trouble and He bringeth them out of their distress. He maketh the storm a calm, so that the waves thereof are still.” (Psa. 107:27-29.)

These Scriptures show that all man’s efforts to preserve the present order of things will fail, but’ what consolation there is in knowing that at the height of “the time of trouble such as never was,” the Lord will speak peace to the nations, and “turn to the people a pure language that they may call upon His name.” (Matt. 24:21; Zeph. 3:8, 9.) So, instead of endeavouring to prop up the existing earthly order, the Lord’s people, guided by His Word, will be found in harmony with His will, seeking first the Kingdom and assisting others in the same way, and ever rejoicing that the time is at hand for the new order “wherein dwelleth righteousness.” “Wherefore, beloved, seeing that we look for such things, be diligent that we may be found of Him in peace, without spot, and blameless.” (2 Pet. 3:10-4.)

“Only a few more years to learn our part,
Just a few more miles the race to run,
So gather courage fresh, ‘O fainting heart,’
O weary feet ‘thy journey soon is done.’

“Only a few more months, but full of toil,
For in the field are hungry souls to feed;
Then struggle on, O weary, burdened one,
For thou shalt find a strength in time of need.

“Only a few more days to fill with love,
Love for all God’s creatures, friend and foe;
Love which shall cover every human fault,
And bring a balm for every earthly woe.

“Only a few more hours we know for some
Who in this life have fought a goodly fight; .
Henceforth for them remains a glorious crown,
A rest within the radius of God’s light.

“Only a few more clays of willing sacrifice,
Of patient standing when our work is done;
Soon in his radiant presence we will rejoice,
And praise him in our everlasting home.”

Forever with the Lord

SOME of our readers will remember our elderly Sister Keisewetter who passed peacefully away on Sunday, 18th July, after a comparatively short illness.

For quite a number of years our late Sister had been attending the Adelaide Class; and was much loved and appreciated by the friends generally. Much sympathy is felt for the members of her household in their loss of such a true and devoted mother. At the same time we do not sorrow as those who have no hope; because we have learned from our heavenly Father's Word of the blessed resurrection hope which is ours through Christ.

As we see one and another of the Lord's people passing from us, we are led to look forward more expectantly to the glad day when the whole Body of Christ will be changed and united with the Head in resurrection glory and power.

In the meantime we each have our lessons to learn, lessons of patience, faith, meekness and submission to the will of God.

Our Sister had learned these lessons and was one who deeply appreciated the great love of God manifested in the giving of His only-begotten Son to be our Saviour. We like to think of our dear Sister's loyalty to what she believed to be the truth-of God's Word; also her loyalty to the Class with which she met. It is good to realize that "the Lord knoweth them that are His," and "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints."

"A-little while! 'Tis ever drawing nearer
The brighter clowning of that glorious clay.
Blest Saviour, make our spirit's vision clearer,
And guide, O guide us in the shining way."

QUESTION BOX.

Question.:—Heb. 13: Jo: “We have an altar whereof they have no right to eat which serve the tabernacle.” What is the thought of this verse?

Answer.—There are those who have thought that Paul was here referring to the Levites as those that served the tabernacle but did not have the same privileges as the priests, but there would be difficulty in taking the passage that way. Neither priests nor Levites were allowed to eat of the sin-offerings which Paul had in mind, as shown by the following verses.

The altar of which the consecrated have the privilege to eat would seem to be Christ. “Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink His blood, ye have no life in you.” (John 6:53; 1 Cor.18.) These have the privilege of first being redeemed by the sacrifice of Jesus, “the great High Priest of our profession” (Heb. 9:24; 3:1), and become partakers of the altar as underpriests, and as represented in the body of the High Priest enter into the holiest, “by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way which He hath consecrated for us that is to say, His flesh.” (Heb. 10:19, 20.)

Paul had to combat the Judaizing spirit of those days. He was writing to Hebrews and so expresses the thought here as elsewhere, that it was not possible to be under grace and under the Law at the same time. Those who were still wanting to serve the Tabernacle — the Law Covenant — could not eat of this Altar (Christ) and have life. Jesus fulfilled the Law, and made an end of the Law, “nailing it to the cross.” (Col. 2:9-14.)

Question.- -Acts 15:16. What is meant by the. “tabernacle of David” which is to be. again set up.. Some have suggested that it means the setting up of Ezekiel’s temple.

Answer.—Such a solution seems entirely out of the question. How could Ezekiel’s temple of which David never heard be called “the tabernacle of David”?

It would seem that this passage is one of those clear Scriptures showing the development of the Divine Plan of the Ages. Those who have creeds and theories that are not in accord with the Divine Plan and purposes have to try and explain the passage to correspond, but that will not do—there the Scripture stands. It is in harmony with all the other Scriptures which show that the crown was removed from Zedekiah and would not be restored “until he (David’s greater Son) comes, whose right it is,” and “I will give it him.” (Ezek. 21:25-27.)

The tabernacle of David is the House of David as the King of Israel, and when the Church is complete—the people for God’s name taken out of the Gentiles—then God’s favour returns to Israel at the second advent of Christ. See also Rom. , particularly verses 25-27.

Question.—Would it not be good that brethren visiting other Classes should have letters of introduction from those with whom they have been associated?

Answer.—This would seem to be quite a proper course, for which we have precedents of Apostolic times. To receive such introductory letters would at once give confidence and no doubt acquaint the Elders of any ability the brother might possess which could be used for the benefit of the Class.

It is the duty of Elders to protect the flock and to guard against erroneous teachings. We are admonished, “to lay hands suddenly on no man,” that is, not to be in a hurry to appoint to any responsibility or hand over the charge of a meeting to any not proved true and faithful and clear in doctrine. Yet sometimes strangers may come along who have no opportunity of bringing letters of commendation and we are also exhorted, “Be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for some have entertained angels unawares.”

We are not to be suspicious, but it is necessary to see some evidences of faith and consecration and of the holy spirit, and clearness of the understanding of the truth before offering any great opportunity of service. There need be no fear of offending any one who possesses true Christian spirit, by not requesting any service, or even to offer prayer.

Question.—Isaiah testifies that the sinner an hundred years old shall be accursed. If then men have already stood the test after one hundred years, why the trial at the end of the Millennium? Or, to put it another way: If those surviving to the end of the Millennium have successfully passed the purging processes (each, no doubt, a severe test to the individual) of the Millennium, why should they have to pass another trial at the end of the Millennium, or how could it be possible for them to fall then?

Answer.—In harmony with Psa. 72:1, we read in John 5:22-27, that the Father hath committed all judgment (krisis) unto the Son, . . . “and hath given Him authority to execute judgment also because He is the Son of Man.” Then see Acts. 3:22, 23—“Moses truly said unto the fathers, a prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you, like unto me and every soul that will not hear (obey) that prophet shall be cut off from’ among the people.”

The purpose of Moses under the Law Covenant was by a course of judgment and disciplines to lift that people up to perfection so that they could be judged by the Lord to be worthy of everlasting life. Because of the weakness of man the Law did not accomplish this. That which was ordained unto life, brought death. “By the deeds of the Law shall no flesh be justified.” So, in the Divine Plan a New Covenant has been arranged, under a greater Mediator, who will lift all the willing and obedient of mankind out of sin and death up to perfection and ability to stand the final judgment (krima) of God, before the Great White Throne at the end of the Millennium, when the great Mediator will “deliver up the Kingdom to God.” I. Cor. 15:23, 24.

There has been only one way of life during the Gospel Age—the Narrow Way. There will be only one way of life for the residue of mankind in the coming age—the Highway of Holiness.—Isa. 35^ Only such As will try to do right by complying as far as possible with the favourable requirements of that time would have any possibility of passing the judgment of God before the Great White Throne of absolute justice. Christ has authority to execute judgment, and according to Isaiah 65:20 (Leeser Translation) the incorrigible sinner after one hundred years’ trial will be cut off.

During the thousand years of the Mediatorial Kingdom all who comply with the rules of righteousness and peace will receive rewards of blessing—“Then shall the righteous flourish.” It will be easier; it will pay to do right, for any disobedience and failure to comply with righteousness will be punished. It is to be a resurrection by judgment, a lifting up by a course of disciplines (John 5:21-30; R.V.) The way will be made easy, for there shall be “no lion in the way,” — the stones of stumbling will be all gathered out. Possibly some who may obey righteousness under these conditions may not have attained the true principle of loving righteousness and hating iniquity. The purpose at the end of the Millennium will be to prove whether the heart is truly loyal to God and faithful to the principles of justice and love under the more difficult circumstances of temptation and seeming loss or hardship or suffering.

The judgment of the Great White Throne will correspond to the judgment of Adam in Eden. As Satan was there to tempt our first parents, so while he is to be bound during the Mediatorial Age, he is to be let loose for a little season at the end of that time. As a result of the first judgment man lost the privilege of eating of the tree of life, by which he could have lived for ever. Those who pass the judgment of God at the end of the Millennial Age, having demonstrated their trueness to the principles of righteousness and love, will hear the glad sentence — “Come, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world” (in Eden). “Blessed are they that do. His commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life and enter in through the gates into the city.”—Rev. 22:14.

THE Apostle Paul says, “Ye were once darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord; walk as children of light.” In God is light in its fullness, and this light coming from Him makes known to us His being and nature. True light is incapable of adulteration or contamination; it has no admixture of anything foreign to it. We see our Lord Jesus manifested God’s purity in His walk among men. Passing through the haunts of sin in sympathetic contact with the sorrow of human life He emerged sinless and stainless. What an example of the purity that must characterise all those who hope to become partakers of the divine nature.

Light enters the smallest opening accessible to it. It searches out the recesses that would otherwise remain dismal and dark, thus penetrating the gloom. It is a fact disclosed by science that it lays hold of the lurking germs of disease whether in the home or in the human system. Of Him who came as the world’s light, such is His ministry. Instead of sin fastening upon Him it could not even stand in His presence. We read how that His searching insight penetrated into the hearts of men and in many cases brought about a change of thought and conduct. Sensitiveness to sin is one of the signs of His illuminating, self-revealing presence. Hence, it is according to record that some of the most godly saints, those walking in closest fellowship with Christ, are the most conscious of their own weakness. They are living in the light that makes evident the contrast between themselves and Him, and they realise that it is only by being in Christ that they are acceptable to the Father.

We must always remember that the ministry of light does not terminate in us. The blessing of light upon us is given that it may shine through us. Every sunbeam calls attention to the mighty source from whence it springs; every moment that it shines the sun is magnified. In every place that it penetrates it calls attention to the glories of the sun. So, our Lord called Himself “the light of the world,” and calls us to a life in Him that we in turn may minister light to others. His words define our responsibility—“Ye are the light of the world”; “Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven.”

The human eye cannot look directly at the glaring sun, neither can any man look upon God and live, but His glory was manifested by Jesus while He was here on earth. When we beheld that glory He shined in our hearts to give the light of the knowledge of God in the face of Jesus Christ, and we are to reflect this light. “He that saith he is in the light and hateth his brother is in darkness even until now ... and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes.”

If we live in the spirit we must have some of its power, and one of the principal methods of gaining this strength from above is through the exercise of the great privilege of prayer — the inestimable privilege of personal contact and communion with God. We can confidently affirm that patient, persevering prayer, secret communion of the soul in His presence, where alone we can arrive at a true estimate of ourselves and things around us has a tremendous influence upon our spiritual progress, and not only so but for our gaining spiritual power to act for God amongst our brethren or toward the world without.

We may all know the power of the spirit of prayer. Truly we may say, it is good to wait upon God; it not only leads to happy results as seen in God’s answer to it, but there is also much sweetness and comfort in the exercise itself. How blessed for one to allow his spirit to flow out and ascend to God who alone is able to lift him above the present things into the calmness and light of His presence. Let us all be found waiting more upon God, making the difficulties of our day an occasion for drawing near to the mercy seat, and then we shall not only exert a good influence in our respective spheres but our own hearts will be comforted by such a procedure. “They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength.”

We want to be more in the presence of God in the real sense. If we felt our need more we would have more of the spirit of prayer, and it is this spirit that exalts God in our minds as Giver, and keeps us in our proper place as receivers. It is necessary also to take care that our prayers are the natural outflow of the spirit within us.

It is the teaching of the Scriptures that “strengthening with might in the inner man” is accomplished gradually throughout the years, as the heart responds obediently to the Divine Word of instruction and to the providences of the Lord. One of the figures used in the Scriptures to illustrate the life of faith and the process of gradual development, is that of “new born babes.” Though many of the Lord’s people may be persons of mature years in the natural life, yet in the spiritual life they may be babes, little ones, though very precious in the Lord’s sight. It was of similar ones that the Lord spoke when He said to the Apostle, “Feed my lambs.” Again, under the figure of a tender shepherd caring for a weak and straying lamb, our Lord showed His earnest solicitude for these, saying, “It is not the will of your Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish.” But while these newly formed ones in Christ have much special care bestowed upon them, it is not the will of God that they should always remain so. There should come a time in the experience of every healthy, growing child of God, when he would be able to leave the first principles, the foundation doctrines, having them firmly fixed; established and settled in his mind, and go on growing in spiritual strength, grace and knowledge of the truth unto perfection.

However, it is most essential that the Lord’s people shall be on guard against accepting as strong meat, as deep spiritual truths, that which is more or less contaminated, mixed with error, human theory and speculation. There are many professed teachers of spiritual things endeavouring to impart their beliefs and doctrines to others, and not all of these are sound. Various theories and much that is purely speculation, not sufficiently established on the Divine Word, is published and publicly announced by those, whom the Apostle affirms would seek to draw away disciples after them, whose ministry therefore does not have the wholesome effect of building up the saints in the spiritual qualities of the new creature in Christ Jesus. The Apostle therefore calls upon all the faithful to be of humble mind, to exercise great care and much spiritual discernment that they may distinguish between that which is good and that which is not so good. If some of those not yet strong in Christ are fed on adulterated food, a mixture of truth and error, the result will be that they may sicken and die, unless the unwholesome diet is speedily removed and the pure food sought after and used. The same would apply to those in advanced stages of the Christian life. It behoves all who are truly the Lord’s, to bear in mind the Apostolic advice, to desire and seek after only that which is pure and uncontaminated, whether it relates to the milk or the strong meat of the Word.

In the words of another it has been written, “If we are feeding upon God’s reality we shall unhesitatingly reject Satan’s counterfeit. This is the best possible way in which to escape the entanglements of error in every shape and character. His sheep hear His voice and follow Him, for they know His call, and a stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him, for they know not the voice of strangers.” (John 10:4, 5.) It is not by any means needful to be acquainted with the voice of a stranger in order to turn away from it; all we require is to know the voice of the Good Shepherd. This will secure us against the ensnaring influence of every strange sound. While therefore one would feel called upon to warn against strange sounds, it is not needful to discuss these in detail, but rather seek to arm any against them by unfolding the Scriptures on the particular subjects.

We need to continually keep in mind the thought of the Apostle in his prayer for the church at Ephesus, “That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith (speaking in a figure, that He may sit as king or ruler and direct all thoughts, words and deeds) that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth and length and depth and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye may be filled with all the fullness of God.” When, therefore, we pray to be filled with the Lord’s spirit, we are to look about us and find the provision which He has made for the answer to these prayers which He has thus inspired and directed. We find this provision in the Word of Truth, but it is not enough to find where it is; if we desire to be filled we must eat, we must partake of the feast, or we will not experience the satisfaction which the eating is designed to give. The asking of a blessing upon the food will not fill us; we must partake of it. So, the possession of the Word of God and the offering of our petition to be filled with the spirit will not suffice us; we must eat the Word of God if we would derive His spirit from it.

Our Master declared, "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life." (John 6:63.) The prophet also says, "Thy words were found and I did eat them." (Jer. 15:16.) It is absolutely useless to pray for the spirit if we neglect to walk in the spirit, not using the proper means to obtain the spirit of truth. The Apostle Peter admonishes the brethren to receive pure, spiritual truths, and to grow thereby, and indicates what will be some of the manifestations of strength which they derive from being spiritually nourished and built up. The spirit of submission and resignation to His will and providences will be in evidence in these growing ones, hence it remains that to live in the spirit we must walk and keep walking in it, otherwise the light will become dim and may eventually flicker out. "If we live in the spirit, let us also walk in the spirit."

"Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and He shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you."—Acts 3:19, 20.

IN taking up this 3rd chapter of Acts there are various points to be considered if we would gain a clear understanding of the important truths contained therein. The Lord has given us His Word for our instruction and guidance but has so arranged the lessons that there must be desire and 'effort on our part if we are to reach a correct understanding of His will and purpose.

Rightly Dividing the Word of Truth.

The first things to settle in our minds in connection with any Scripture are, to determine at what time it was spoken, and to whom were the words intended; were they spoken mainly for the benefit of the hearers then or have they special reference to future times—has. this .or that passage of the Lord's Word been fulfilled, has it been partially- fulfilled, or does it apply to a-still future. period of time.

The .settling of such questions in our minds Would be following the advice of: the Apostle Paul when. he said, "Study to show thyself approved unto:God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." (2 Tim. 2:15) We note that he does not say it is quite right to allow others to study for us, and then we shall be thoroughly furnished by accepting their findings. No, this has been the trouble with a great number of Christians throughout the age. Many have thought, if the highly educated of our fellows are not able to understand God's Word correctly, it is little use our trying to do so. They make the mistake of thinking that the treasures of God's Word are to be found as a result of worldly knowledge. On this point let us note the words in Acts 4:13—"Now when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marvelled and took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus.” This is surely one of the finest testimonies to be found in the Scriptures.

Both the Apostles Paul and James give similar quotations for our instruction. The former in writing to the Corinthians says: “For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many mighty, not many noble are called, but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world.” (1 Cor. 1:26, 27) and James adds: “Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which He hath promised to them that love Him.” (James 2:5.).

Therefore, we find that the question is not, how much education have we,—what college have we been through to enable us to learn of the Lord and understand His Word—but rather, how much desire is there in our hearts to know Him, how much time are we prepared to give to search His Word as for hidden treasure? Our Lord’s words are: “Ask, and it shall be given you, seek and ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you. For every one that asketh receiveth, and he that seeketh findeth, and to him that knocketh it shall be opened.” (Matt. 7:7, 8). This is necessary not only at the beginning of the Christian way but right through to the end.

A Teacher Chosen of the Lord.

So, we have in this 3rd chapter of Acts a teacher, who, though “unlearned” had to be acknowledged as having been with Jesus and learned of Him, and we believe he has given in these verses some of the most beautiful and precious truths to be found in God’s Word.

In the first place, we believe that the Apostle’s preaching as recorded in this chapter was intended to convey truths that had special reference to both the Gospel and Millennial Ages and it is our purpose to survey these periods of time and also the prior ages so that the plan of God for the salvation of mankind may be seen to be a connected whole and all revealed in the sure Word of the Lord.

Ages and Dispensations.

The world’s history is divided into three great periods of time, and these are clearly shown to have extended; (1) from the creation of man to the Flood; (2) from the Flood to the second Coming of Christ, and (3) from the second Coming of Christ onward. The first period is called in the Scriptures, “the world that was”; the second, “this present evil world”; and the third “the world to come wherein dwelleth righteousness.” (2 Pet. 3:6; Gal. 1:4; Heb. 2:5, and 2 Pet. 3:13) .

From the account in Genesis we learn of the fall of man so soon after his creation and how sin so overtook the race that God found it necessary to send the great flood of waters to destroy those who had become corrupted, saving only righteous Noah and his family to start the second great period of the world’s history. So greatly had men fallen just prior to the flood that God took them away as He saw good. The result of disobedience on the part of our first parents was surely a sad picture even at that time. (Gem 6:5).

During the second great period of time—from the Flood to the second coming of Christ—we find three ages distinctly marked out in the Scriptures, each being a step onward in God’s plan that He had prearranged even before the foundation of the world.

The first age within this second dispensation is designated the Patriarchal Age, because during that time God dealt with certain individuals such as Noah, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob for a special purpose. It was to faithful Abraham that God gave His wonderful covenant, from which the promise comes down to us to-day and is really the Gospel in a nutshell. This promise was: “In thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed.” (Gen. 22:18).

With the death of Jacob the Patriarchal Age ended, and the Jewish Age began because God no longer dealt with individual patriarchs, but with the twelve tribes of Israel as a whole. This is confirmed in 1 Chron. 16:15-17, which please note. Jacob’s name was changed to Israel, and his twelve sons were the heads of the families that were afterwards known as the twelve tribes of Israel. What of these children of Israel? Did God’s promise of blessing to all come through them? No, indeed, for after seventeen hundred years of experience they not only did not bless the world but they were not ready to be blessed themselves, for though Christ came to bless them “His own received Him not.” (John 1:11).

The True Seed.

However, God had all this in mind at the beginning. The Apostle says that these things were an allegory. Sarah was the representative of the Covenant made with Abraham and when Isaac was promised God was speaking of a greater seed than Isaac “which seed is Christ.” God meant Christ all the time; Isaac was a type of Christ.

When Christ came to Israel at His first advent, the Jewish Age was brought to a close and another opened up which is termed the Gospel Age. Of that time it is written: “The law and the prophets were until John (John the Baptist), since then the kingdom of heaven is preached.” John the Baptist introduced our Lord Jesus with the message: “Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand”, and Jesus Himself used the same words in opening His ministry.

Did God mean that when Christ should come all the families of the earth should be blessed? We look about us and ask, Have all nations been blessed? We are obliged to answer, No. It is over 1900 years since Christ came and yet millions have not even heard of Him. Where, then, is the mistake? What did the promise mean?

The Church, the Body of Christ.

When God, through the Apostle, said “Christ”, He meant not only the Lord Jesus, but the Christ complete—the Lord Jesus as Head, and the Church as His Body. So the Apostle declares: “He is Head over all things to the Church which is His Body.” He says: “which seed is Christ,” (Gal. 3:16) and after reading on to verse 29, we find it plainly stated:

“If ye be Christ’s then are ye Abraham’s seed and heirs according to the promise”. So, then, we see that “Christ” means the entire spiritual Seed, Christ Jesus as the Head and the true Church as His Body.

So, we find that the whole of this Gospel Age, in the close of which we are now living, has been set apart in God’s plan for the selection and perfecting of this spiritual Seed of Abraham, the Christ, Head and Body. This is the reason that the blessing has not yet reached the world. However, before any member of the Lord’s Body could be accepted and approved as such by the Heavenly Father, our Lord’s own life had to be laid down. The ransom, or corresponding price had to be paid into the hands of justice on our account, as our Lord explained to the two disciples on the way to Emmaus: “Ought not Christ to have suffered these things and to enter into His glory.”

How clearly, then, the Scriptures portray that the great plan of redemption on behalf of the human race is based upon the ransom sacrifice of God’s clear Son. There could have been no hope held out for salvation, either to the Church or the world, except, as the Apostle says, “Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, and that He was buried and rose again the third day according to the Scriptures.” “Who was delivered for our offences and raised again for our justification.” (1 Cor. 15:3, 4;

Rom. 4:25)

What a wonderful provision God has made whereby through our exercising faith in the sacrificial death of His Son, our Lord Jesus, we may be justified in His sight. "For all have sinned and come short of the glory of God;

Being justified freely by His grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus: whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood, to declare His righteousness for the remission of sins that are past through the forbearance of God: To declare, I say, at this time His righteousness; that He might be just and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus." (Rom. 3. 23-26).

"Silver and Gold Have I None."

We now come to the words of our chapter, and note the particular time when the Apostle Peter gave out that wonderful message of truth shortly after the death and resurrection of His Master. The thought is not to dwell at length on the actual healing of the lame man, wonderful though it was, but rather to draw the lessons from Peter's discourse that was given after the healing of the man had opened the way.

There is, however, one point in these opening verses of the chapter worthy of special note, as we read concerning this lame man: "Who seeing Peter and John about to go into the temple asked an alms . . . Then Peter said: "Silver and gold have I none: but such as I have give I thee: In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk." "Silver and gold have I none". No, indeed, the Apostle had cast in his lot with the Lord some 3 years previously; he had come to see things in their true value and so was content, yes, he rejoiced to count "all things but loss that he may win Christ and be found in Him."

Let us just briefly recall the time when our Lord commenced His ministry and appealed to Peter and John, also two other disciples to "follow Him", as recorded in Matt. 4. It is stated that when hearing the Lord, "they straightway left their nets and followed Him." The same is also recorded of the other two disciples, "they immediately left the ship and their father and followed Him."

That was undoubtedly a wonderful test of their obedience, but because they were sure that they had "found Him of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write", they were content, yes, and rejoiced to throw in their lot with Him and follow whithersoever He would lead. So, then, by the words, "Silver and gold have I none", we find the Apostle Peter to be of the same mind after following His Lord for 31, years and undoubtedly his example of true discipleship could not have been better expressed.

True Discipleship.

We learn, then, from the Apostle Peter, as well as from all the other Apostles and the Lord Himself, the true requirements of Christian discipleship: "He that loveth father or mother more than Me is not worthy of Me, and he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of Me. And he that taketh not his cross and followeth after Me is not worthy of Me. He that findeth his life shall lose it: and he that loveth his life for My sake shall find it." (Matt. 10:37-39).

However, the Apostle's words, "Silver and gold have I none", are not to be taken as indicating that all followers of Christ should not have some silver or gold, but rather, that while all the Lord's people are expected to live justly in the sight of all men, to pay their debts, etc., they will not be accumulating the earthly treasures, but on the other hand will be faithfully using any of these they possess in the service of their Master, and so would have little of these to pass on to others. What they have got, however, and which is of greater value than all the treasures of earth, is the gospel message of truth, and this they are to dispense freely to all who have ears to hear. "Freely ye have received, freely give."

Christ and Him Crucified.

It was these precious things that the Apostle was able to tell out, as a result of the healing of the lame man in our lesson. Let us hear St. Peter again: “Ye men of Israel, why marvel ye at this? or why look ye so earnestly on us, as though by our own power or holiness we had made this man to walk: The God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, (note that the Apostle recognises the Patriarchs of that former time to which reference was made previously) the God of our fathers hath glorified His Son Jesus; whom ye delivered up and denied in the presence of Pilate, when he was determined to let Him go. But ye denied the Holy One and the Just, and desired a murderer to be granted unto you; and killed the Prince of life, whom God hath raised from the dead; whereof we are witnesses. And His name through faith in His name hath made this man strong, whom ye see and know: yea, the faith which is by Him hath given him this perfect soundness in the presence of you all”. Here, then, we have revealed the true import of Peter’s words. He was preaching Christ and Him crucified, and bravely declared that it was at the hands of his hearers that the Lord had suffered the cruel death of the cross. The healing of the lame man was a means to that end, special power having been given to the early Christians to perform such miracles, and even to the raising of the dead, for the purpose of establishing the Church in its infancy. These gifts of miracles, however, passed away, for none but the twelve Apostles were able to pass on such power to others. Others could receive the gifts but could not pass them on.

The Apostle, then, had a wonderful opportunity of presenting the truth on this occasion and he used it to the utmost. After declaring that it was by wicked hands that they had killed the Prince of Life, he says, “And now, brethren, I wot that through ignorance ye did it as did also your rulers.” In this we see some hope for those who were instrumental in bringing about the death of Christ; they had done this terrible thing under a measure of ignorance and so were not culpable to the fullest extent. The Apostle Paul also confirms this viewpoint when he says: “For had they known it they would not have crucified the Lord of glory.” (1 Cor. 2:8)

“But those things which God before had showed by the mouth of all His prophets, that Christ should suffer, He hath so fulfilled.” (Verse 18). So, in that cruel act of crucifying the Lord of glory, we find the wrath of man being used to the praise of God, for behold, “God hath raised Him from the dead, whereof we are witnesses”, says the Apostle, and henceforth the risen Saviour is He who is “able to save to the uttermost them that come unto God by Him.” (Heb. 7:25). Our Lord also declared in the Revelation to John, after His resurrection: “I am He that liveth and was dead, and behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of the grave and of death”. (Rev. 1:18). What a wonderful truth this is, that Jesus having paid the death penalty for the whole human race, has the authority and power to restore to life “all that are in their graves”, in due time, for, “all shall hear His voice and come forth,” but more on this point later.

Spiritual Refreshing.

Just here we are interested in those to whom Peter was speaking. He had quite rightly accused them of their terrible act, but had admitted that it was committed largely through ignorance, and now let us note his words of counsel and advice to these people. Verse 19 reads,—“Repent ye therefore, and turn again, that your sins may be blotted out, that so there may come seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord” (Revised Version). What did the Apostle mean by these words? Could it be that if his hearers could be brought to a condition of repentance, a desire to seek forgiveness of God for their terrible act of crucifying the Lord, and if this attitude was supported by a complete “turning again”—by exercising faith in the blood of Christ—they may expect their sins to be covered, and to receive such seasons of refreshing from the holy presence of God as would enable them to become His true people? Yes, we believe that is just what the Apostle meant; there and then those who had slain the Son of God could, upon the conditions stated, be forgiven and receive of the Lord such blessings that they could be translated from the Kingdom of darkness (under Satan) into the Kingdom of God's dear Son. This was and is, indeed, a wonderful provision and how it truly manifests and magnifies all the gracious attributes of our God—His justice, wisdom, love and power—in the eyes of all right-thinking people, who seek to worship and glorify His holy name.

A thought from the writings of one on the phrase “from the presence of the Lord ;” will be of interest ;—”The word here rendered ‘presence’ is not ‘parousia’, but ‘prosopon’ and ‘apo prosopon,’ rendered ‘from the presence,’ does not signify ‘as a result of presence,’ but rather, ‘out from the face of’. The thought is common to us and was much more common in eastern countries long ago. To show the face was a mark of favor, while to turn the back was a mark of disfavor. Thus of our Lord at His first advent it was written. ‘We hid as it were our faces from Him’ that is, we were ashamed of and would not acknowledge Him. Thus it is that Jehovah would not look upon sin,’ and hid His face from sinners. Now, however, since the ransom has been given, Jehovah waits to be gracious.”

God no longer disregards men and treats them as sinners by turning His back upon them, when they come to Him in the appointed way, but sends them refreshment from His face, his favor, and will also send Jesus for the great future work as well, His Agent in the restitution of all things. We have the same thought in our hymns,—”Show Thy reconciled face,” and “Show Thy face and all is bright.”

The Blessing of the Lord maketh rich.

So, the Apostle Peter had a wonderful message at that time for all who could receive it, and act upon it in spirit and in truth, for, while there is to be a general refreshing for mankind of an earthly nature throughout the times of restitution over the whole world (to which we shall yet make reference) the refreshing of which Peter desired his hearers to partake is of the spiritual kind, the fulness of which cannot be approximated except by those who have tasted thereof. And can it be that we, now, may also receive of that spiritual refreshing from God's presence of which the Apostle spoke at the early period of the Gospel Age? Yes, indeed, until the full number of God's elect has been selected and developed to become joint-heirs with our risen Lord, the same spiritual refreshment is flowing out to those who hunger and thirst for it. Surely, “the blessing of the Lord it maketh rich.” (Prov. 10:22).

Refreshing not of the future, but present.

If in the past we have not experienced the Lord's refreshing that can relieve the burdened heart and give gladness and rest to the weary soul, which all so much desire, let us come to God's Word with open hearts, and by obedience thereto come into such harmony with Him through Christ that we shall never want any other way. We realise that there never has been a time of such world-wide trouble as to-day, which is in fulfilment of the words of Jesus,—”Upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity; Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth.” (Luke 21 26). But the Lord is sufficient for these things and surely we shall not doubt 1-Es ability to cope with every circumstance and condition, and to give us the desire of peace and happiness, if we take Him at His word.

Further, if we have experienced a measure of refreshing but lack that fulness that will enable us to rejoice in the Lord always, we may be sure that we are living below our privileges. Could we ever think of the Lord's storehouse of blessing being exhausted or even reduced by our calls upon it? Surely not, but, then, the Lord does not pour out His refreshing indiscriminately—He waits to be gracious, to see how much we desire His choicest gifts. “Prove Me now, herewith, saith the Lord of Hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven. and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it” (Mal. 3:10).

Let us ever keep in mind that this promise is to those “even as many as the Lord our God shall call.” When we hear the call, let us respond promptly, praising God for it, and like the Apostle Paul, say, “Lord, what wilt thou have me to do.” There is no time to be wasted; soon this Gospel Age will close and with it all opportunity of ever entering upon the “high-calling of God in Christ Jesus.” It is written respecting this “so great salvation, which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord,” “Behold now is the accepted time; behold now is the day of salvation.” (Heb. 2:3; 2 Cor. 6:2).

What about the masses of mankind?

While many are so glad that the Lord has purposed the exaltation of the elect Class, the Body of Christ, at the close of this Gospel Age, what is to be the provision for the remainder of mankind? Of the saintly class our Lord said,—“Fear not, little flock, it is your Father’s good pleasure to give you the kingdom.” These are the overcomers who shall sit with Christ in His throne, having obtained “so great salvation.” But what about those who are not of this “little flock?” Are they forever lost when death takes hold upon them, and they go down into the cold grave? Can it be that God, who so loved the world as to give His only begotten Son to taste death for every man, should fail to give all the opportunity to hear of the saving power through faith in Jesus’ death? No doubt we will all admit that millions of mankind have lived and died without even hearing of the name of Jesus, and since none can be saved by ignorance,

“as there is none other name (than Jesus’) under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved,” and as the Apostle Paul tells us, “God will have all men to be saved and to come unto the knowledge of the truth,” (Acts 4:12; 1 Tim. 2:4) should we not look further into God’s Word with respect to the future destiny of so many of the human family.

Before doing so, just let us briefly review the ages that are past, and see if we can approximate the number of godly persons in comparison with those who were not. During the First Dispensation, how many righteous people were there? At the time of the Flood there were only eight,—Noah and his family. Then, in the Patriarchal Age, there were only a few righteous persons with whom God held communion, such as Noah, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. Further, during the Jewish Age, there were not many for when Christ came only a “remnant” received Him. All the rest were still a stiffnecked and perverse generation. And how has it been during this Gospel Age? There have not been many saints—only a “little flock,” as noted previously. The vast majority have not known God, nor desired to know Him.

The question then is, What is to become of the others? What is to be the future for all who have not come into harmony with God by faith in His promises and obedience thereto? What plan has God for the blessing of the others, for we must remember that the promise away back in Abraham’s day, was not that a few should be blessed, but that “all the families of the earth should be blessed?” But how? How can the blessing be accomplished ?

Times of Restitution.

Let us note again in our chapter, verses 20 and 21, which please read. “He shall send Jesus Christ.” The Apostle was not here speaking about the first coming of Christ. As seen previously, he spoke the words of this chapter following on the day of Pentecost, after the holy spirit had been poured out upon the waiting disciples and ten days previous he with others had seen Christ ascend to heaven. He was speaking of Jesus’ second advent. “God will send Jesus Christ.”

Our Lord Himself had promised that He would come a second time saying, “If I go away, I will come again.”

The doctrine of our Lord's return is made very prominent in the Scriptures, and also in all the creeds of the various denominations. Along with others Catholics believe in the second coming of Christ. They do not, indeed confess that He is coming to bless the world, but rather, that He is coming to condemn the world. The wonder is that with such a conception of things any are willing to pray, "Even so come, Lord Jesus." The beloved disciple who uttered these words had no such anticipation; he knew of the time of blessing and it was for this that he longed.

The coming of Christ has been the hope of the world (though unknown to themselves). It has been the end of the prayers of all the saints. We have been "looking for the blessed hope and the glorious appearing of our Saviour Jesus Christ" (Tit. 2:13), "whom the heavens must retain until the times of restitution of all things." And what does the word "restitution" mean? It means restoring, restoration. If men's hearts were right and we had perfect men and women, "times of restitution," would not be needed; but we have not. "By one man's disobedience sin entered into the world and death by sin" (Rom. 5:12). What mankind need is to be restored to Edenic perfection, and this it is promised, will be done.

The Resurrection of the Dead.

But now the question is, how is the blessing to come "to all the families of the earth," including the great majority who have passed away in death? It is to come by the resurrection. When Paul spoke to some in his day about the resurrection, many of them mocked; and others said, "We will hear you again on this matter." The idea of a resurrection seems absurd to many, and it is so as viewed by the majority. But nevertheless, "there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust" (Acts 24:15). Our Lord, Himself, also said in John 5:28, "All that are in the graves shall hear His voice (the voice of the Son of God) and come forth;" and on one occasion when He went into the synagogue, and a copy of the book of Isaiah was handed to Him from which to read, He turned to chapter 61, and read;—"The spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; He hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound. To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord." (Luke 4:17-19).

It will be noticed that He does not say He is going to bind up all hearts, but only the "broken" hearts. And what is meant by the prison doors? Did He mean the doors of the jails of Palestine? Did He mean that He would come and set all the convicts free? He certainly could not have meant that. He could not have referred to anything else than the great prison-house of death, and the "prisoners of hope" which the great enemy, Satan, has bound therein. They are "prisoners of hope" because Christ has died for them. Under Satan, the world has been going down into death, but Christ was manifest in order that He might destroy death and "him that hath the power of death, that is the Devil." These prisoners in the tomb, prisoners of hope, will all come forth to the privileges and opportunities of the Millennial Age—of coming to human perfection and securing eternal life afforded under the Millennial reign of Christ and His saints—because, "Jesus Christ by the grace of God tasted death for every man." (Heb. 2:9).

As stated previously, the thing most needed is the promised "Times of Restitution," and be it noted that this restoration of all the obedient of mankind to their former estate,—to that from which our first parents fell—"God hath spoken by the mouth of all His holy prophets since the world began." Who, then, will deny or even doubt the truth of the Apostle's statement concerning the restitution of all things inasmuch as God has testified its truth not only through our Lord and the Apostles, but "by the mouth of all His holy prophets"? Here is a means whereby we may discern God's true prophets, for if any omit to proclaim the Lord's purpose to restore mankind and the earth to perfection on account of the sacrifice of His dear Son, then they are not God's holy prophets.

However, as we search through the prophets in God's Word we shall find they have been true witnesses in all that God required of them. Should anyone desire a complete list of Scriptures from all the prophets confirming this truth it will be gladly forwarded, but for the sake of space we shall note just one or two here, at the same time not overlooking the necessary disciplinary experiences to which the whole world will be subjected in order to prepare their hearts for the blessings to follow. There must be, first of all the great time of trouble upon the earth, of which it is written,—”Seek righteousness, seek meekness, it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord’s anger.” (Zeph. 2:3) And again, “For His anger endureth but for a moment; in His favor is life: weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning.” (Psa. 30:5).

The New Age, wherein dwelleth righteousness.

It is, then to the glad morning that we look, the Millennial Age when “the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea,” for “when Thy judgements are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness.” (Isa. 11:9; 26:9). That is, the majority of mankind will heartily fall into line with the laws of Christ’s Kingdom, but those who wilfully reject the loving and gracious provision whereby they may gain eternal life, shall be cut off from amongst the people. “All the wicked will God destroy ;” “It shall come to pass that every soul which will not hear that prophet (The Christ, Head and Body) shall be destroyed from among the people.” (Psa. 135:20; Acts 3:23).

On this wonderful truth of restitution please read Isa. 35. “The ransomed of the Lord shall return,” compares so beautifully with 1 Tim. 2:5, 6 ;—”There is one God and one Mediator between God and men the man Christ Jesus, who gave Himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time.” How harmonious are these two statements, and inasmuch as the majority of mankind have not had the truth of “the ransom for all” testified to them during the present life, the “due time” must be future. Yes, it will be during the Millennial reign of Christ, “for God hath appointed a day (a day with the Lord is as 1000 years) in the which He will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom He hath ordained; whereof He hath given assurance unto all men, in that He hath raised Him from the dead.” (Acts. 17:31) That will be the time also of which the Prophet Jeremiah speaks in chapter 31:34. “And they shall teach no more every man his neighbour and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know Me from the least of them unto the greatest of them saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity and I will remember their sin no more.”

Heavenly and earthly inheritance separate and distinct.

Let it not be understood that restitution, though grand it will be, is the hope of the Church, —for Christians of the present time. It is not the hope of the Church, for all of this class have special promises of an inheritance far above that of the world. If we walk in the footsteps of Jesus, faithfully to the end of our course, we shall become “partakers of the Divine nature.” Not only is our Lord Jesus to bless the world, but the world is to be blessed by the Church who will reign with Him as His joint heir.

Our Lord Jesus said,—”In My Father’s House are many mansions; I go to prepare a place for you.” The Church is to have the new place prepared by her Lord,—to inhabit that mansion—after having gladly sacrificed everything of an earthly kind, -even life itself, in the Master’s service. The world, under other conditions, is to inhabit another of these mansions—the earth. “The Lord created the earth not in vain; He made it to be inhabited.” Millions are to have the blessings of restitution—to that which was lost, to that which Adam originally possessed in the beginning—hut we (the Church) “shall be like Him” (Christ) “if we make our calling and election sure.”

And now, what does God’s great plan of salvation mean to us? Are we content to say, “the times of restitution” will be grand, we shall wait for that time? Do we think that would please, our God who has done so much for us? Does not the love of, Christ constrain us now _to want to be. His, to have our feet placed upon the rock, and lifted out of the condemnation right now? Yes, indeed, that should be the desire of our hearts, and if this step be taken, though it be a narrow way of sacrifice, it will lead to that-life abundant of which the Apostle says,—”For our light affliction which is but for a moment worketh for us a far more .exceeding and eternal weight of glory,” and in the daily laying down of our little all we shall have such refreshing from the presence of the Lord, that we shall be able to say from our hearts with the Psalmist ;—”The Lord- is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid? Though an host should encamp against me, my heart shall not fear: though war should rise against me in this will I be confident. One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord and to enquire in His temple.” “I had fainted unless I had believed to see the goodness of the Lord in the land, of the living. Wait on the Lord: be of good courage, and He shall strengthen thine heart: wait, I say, on the Lord.” (Psa. 27:1, 3, 4, 13, 14.)

Beheaded for the Witness of Jesus.

“And I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus and for the Word of God And they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.”—Rev.20:4

REVELATION is a beautiful, symbolic Book picturing truth. The chapter from which this text is taken contains in itself several pictures in few words covering the entire Messianic Age. Satan’s binding at the beginning of the Age is first shown; then the judgment of those who are sitting upon the thrones of the earth; then the exaltation of the true Church to reign with Christ. The governments, of the world, while capable perhaps of giving some blessing, are not satisfactory, and must soon give place to the new Government under God’s dear Son, which will bring blessing to all the families of the earth.

A brief mention is made respecting what shall occur at the close of the thousand years of Christ’s Reign. After men have been made perfect, they must be tested, while Satan shall be “loosed for a little season,” prior to his destruction. Then the Revelator depicts the Great White Throne, before which all the world, the living and the dead, are to be brought for judgment, for trial, having received the wonderful opportunities of the glorious Kingdom of Christ.

How These Souls Are “Beheaded.”

But our subject relates to a part of verse 4. The word soul signifies person. Through erroneous doctrines this word has come to have attached to it a wrong meaning, as being something that people possess rather than something that they are. St. John the Revelator was given a vision of the persons who would be beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the Word of God. He was given a foreview of what would be their portion—first of suffering, then of glory and reward. Their reward would be to live and reign with Christ. These were a special class, who had been beheaded for a certain reason. The word “beheaded” here is symbolic. . All the true Church were to be beheaded. We know that Christ and the majority of the Apostles were not literally beheaded. And but few of Jesus’s followers have been beheaded literally.

The Bible shows that God has appointed that those who come into Christ shall renounce their own headship, their own will, and receive instead the Will of Him whom God has chosen to be their Head--Jesus. Christ. They are to be members of Christ’s Body. “God hath given Him (Jesus) to be the Head over the Church, which is His Body.” (Col. 1:18; Eph. 1:22, 23; 1 Cor. 12:27.) Jesus is the great Mediator for the world. During this Gospel Age, God has been preparing a Church class, who are to be the members of His Body, and to be associated with Him in His great future work for mankind. The first members of this Body were the Apostles. These freely gave up their lives in the cause of Christ. They gave up their wills, submitting themselves to the will of God — they were beheaded.

Down through this present Age, members have been added to Christ, first from the Jews, then from the Gentiles— from every nation, kindred, and tongue. The only way that anyone can become a member of this anointed Body of Christ is to present himself a sacrifice to God, first trusting in the sacrificial merit of Jesus. He is our great Substitute, who has redeemed us from the death penalty resting upon Adam's race. Accepting Him thus, and presenting ourselves to God through Christ, His merit is imputed to us, and we are accepted as joint sacrificers with Jesus, who then becomes our Head. We are thus beheaded. Our own will is dead. So during this Age there has been, a little company of people who have taken a course different from that of the remainder of the world, different from that of the apostate systems. These become sons of God. They are dead with Jesus as human beings, and are begotten to a new, a spiritual nature.—Col. 3:3.

What This Beheading Signifies.

It is important that all those who make a consecration of themselves to God, understand clearly that they are thus renouncing all the hopes and ambitions of the world for the far grander and heavenly hopes now held out to those who become disciples of Christ, who deny themselves to take up their cross and follow Him. The question for each one who has made this choice is: Am I faithfully following in the footsteps of Jesus? Jesus gave up His will wholly to the Father. He said, "I came not to do Mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me." We are to follow His example, to walk in His steps. We are to lay down our lives for the brethren, as He laid down His life.

The losing of our heads, our wills, does not mean that, we actually have no will; but that our wills are fully submitted to God's will. Whatever we see to be contrary to His will for us is to be wholly relinquished. We may be sure that our Saviour, when on earth, being a perfect man, had a will, a strong will; but that will was entirely submitted to the will of His Heavenly Father. "Not My will, but Thine, be done," was His expression. "The cup which My Father hath poured for Me, shall I not drink it?" He said.

Because our Lord Jesus fully gave up His will to God, and was obedient even unto the ignominious death of the cross, the Father highly exalted Him, giving Him a name "far above angels, principalities and powers, and every name that is named." (Eph. 1:20-23.) And we, His Church, if faithful to our heavenly calling, are to be exalted with Him and under Him as our Head. The Bible presents a beautiful picture: God, the Father of all; our Lord Jesus Christ next to the Father; the Church, the Body, or Bride of Christ next; then the lower spiritual orders of being; lastly, will be the restored world, when God's great Plan is complete. How wonderful it seems! How much more wonderful than anything we could possibly have conceived of ourselves! What a great and good God we have!

God's Character, Long Traduced, Now Understood.

How great has been the misconceptions of God's character which have for so many centuries beclouded men's minds. These nations calling themselves Christian have made God out as worse even than heathen nations represent their gods. While we declared, "God is Love," we pictured Him in our creeds as the veriest Demon—taking pleasure in carrying out a programme which would mean an eternity of torture to thousands of millions of our race. "But while we were long blinded by the Adversary to thus think of our gracious God, we have great cause for thankfulness that our eyes are now opening more and more widely, and we can something of the lengths, and breadths, and heights, and depths of God's love.

When we see how the Father has exalted our Saviour for His faithfulness, we who are following in Jesus' footsteps have sure grounds for faith that will also exalt us with Him. Otherwise we might be inclined to say, "Oh, it is too wonderful! The thought- that we have been invited to be sons of God and to share the Divine Nature with Jesus seems too marvellous for belief." But when we see how the Father fulfilled His promises to our Lord and Head, and realise that we have been called to share His glory and throne as His bride, surely we can believe. Jesus verifies the Father's promise to us, saying, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in My Throne, even as I also overcame and am, set down with My Father in His Throne."—Rev. 3: '21.

Door To High Calling Still Open.

There is still opportunity for some to gain this "High Calling." The "door" to this great favour is not yet closed, There is, a little time remaining. If any could gain the whole world and yet lose this great prize, they would be losing much—oh, so much! Nothing that earth can offer can compare with it. All the wealth of a multi-millionaire would be as nothing.

When we give up our wills to the Lord this is not all. We are then to take up our cross and follow Jesus. We are to carry out our consecration vows. Our time, our influence, our money, our property, our all, now belong to God. The Lord does not mislead us into thinking, that fulfilling our consecration is something easy. It does not mean merely going to church. It means living as Christ lived. It means walking the way of the cross even unto death. The world will consider such a course very foolish. They will say, "Don't do it! Have some pleasure in life. Don't give up you', will to anybody !" This would be sound advice if our will were to be given up to any other than God Himself. The Adversary would like to make us think that giving our will to God is a most foolish thing, and then he will endeavour to entrap us so that we are completely in bondage to his will, which is a wholly evil will.

Satan also seeks to ensnare and destroy the individual will through hypnotism, mesmerism, etc. These are dangerous things. Were it not that God has implanted a strong will in mankind, we cannot doubt that Satan and his evil angels would long ago have led the entire world into complete captivity to sin. He puts light for darkness and darkness for light. We are to be on guard against the machinations of these evil spirits through spiritism. All these are methods by which he Adversary seeks to seize and capture the will. When our will is given to the Lord, however, it means the turning of it in, a direction that bring our own highest blessing and welfare. Our will is not captured, but guided and strengthened in the right way. We have found by experience how unsatisfactory has been the result of trying to guide ourselves, of following our own will, without the leading of the Lord. Our very best endeavours, unaided by Divine Grace, are very defective, and the results disappointing. How glad we are, then, to have the Lord, take charge of us, and guide our wills and our efforts. We know that thus we are safe.

If anyone is afraid to trust the Lord for fear that He will require something that would be harmful, he must wait until he comes to see how fully we can trust the Almighty. If He were the God we once supposed Him to be we might well be afraid to place ourselves in His hands. But since we have learned of His love for us; of His wonderful provision for us notwithstanding our fallen condition; of His provision of Restitution for the world, and of the High Calling for the Church, we can well acclaim: "Oh this is the very personification of Justice and Love!" We rejoice in this great loving God, and are so glad to give ourselves to Him and call Him our Father.

That is a very beautiful hymn of consecration by Frances Ridley Havergal: "Take my life and let it be, Lord, acceptable to Thee." Yes, we are acceptable to God through Christ. Thus only can we come. We give Him our whole life. "Take. my hands and let them move at the impulse of Thy love." Yes, but our hands are imperfect, and it is only through Jesus that our work is acceptable to God, that our hands may glorify Him. "Take my feet, and let them be swift on errands, Lord, for Thee." Yes, we wish Him to use our feet in His dear service. Gladly will we hasten on errands of love for Him. "Take My voice, and let it bring honour always to my King." Yes, we wish Him to take our voice. But our words are very imperfect. Our brain and our tongue are faulty. But the Father says, "I will cover you with the merit of Jesus. He was perfect, and I will credit His perfection to you. Your voice may have sometimes been used to slander another; the tongue has great power for evil as well as good. But now you have submitted that voice, that tongue, to Me, I will make it a power for good."

"Take my lips, and let them be moved with messages from Thee." Yes, that is the thought. Let the blessed message of salvation and grace overflow our lips to God's praise, and to the blessing of others. "Take my silver and my gold; nothing, Lord, would I withhold." The Lord answers, "Yes dear child, I will take this which you give to Me. I do not need your gold and silver; for 'all the silver and gold are Mine, and the cattle upon a thousand hills.' But I will receive it as a mark of your love, as an indication of your devotion to Me."

"Take my moments and my days, let them flow in ceaseless praise." We often fear that our moments may not always praise the Lord as they ought, and our days are not always just what we would like them to be. But our Lord lovingly answers our troubled hearts and says, "I know even better than you do how imperfect you are in word and deed. But through Christ I receive you, and accept your imperfect works and endeavours. He will make up for your unavoidable deficiencies." So we take courage and strive that our days and hours and moments May indeed bring glory to our King who so loves us and whom we so love. His arrangement for us in Christ is so wonderful.

"Take my will and make it Thine." Ah, yes! That is the very first thing to be done. "It shall be no longer mine."

We wish our will to be the Lord's and His alone. If we have any self-will God cannot use us. "Take my heart, it is Thine own." Yes, we have consecrated our heart with all its impulses and affections to the Lord. "Thus in me Thyself enthrone." Our heart shall be His royal throne for evermore.

"Take my love, my God, I pour At Thy feet its treasure-store.

Take myself—I wish to be Ever only, all for Thee!"

This is indeed our sentiment. The doing of all this is a life-work. While our consecration was the work of a moment, yet the fulfilling of it is the work of our entire lives. "Be thou faithful unto' death, and I will give thee a crowd of life." So while in one sense Our beheading, mitt' decapitation, is an instantaneous matter, yet we must continue to keep ourselves beheaded even unto death. Then we shall live and reign with Christ a thousand years; and be His associates in all His glory and honour for evermore. Glory, honour, immortality! Wonderful, wonderful! If such a prize cities not appeal to our hearts, what would? When' we see the loyalty and courage manifested by the soldiers of the nations, how they are willing to go down to death for their nations, often not knowing even for what they are fighting, how loyal should we be to our heavenly King—we who have hopes so glorious held out to us, who have a King so infinitely worthy of our zeal and loyalty? Our King does not say, "Go," He says, "Come." Gladly will we be beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the Word of God.

Divine Guidance.

“In the mysteries of my life
Where the threads all twist and twine,
‘Mid the shadow and the strife,
Sadly missing His design,
With its gracious, loving pleading,
Breaks the tender Voice divine—

’Let Me take the threads in My hands,
Child, before they pass through Thine.’
“Lo, a beauteous pattern growing
On a deep’ning ground of love,
Tints all blending, shining glowing

Mirror fairer things above;
And the quiet hands rest sweetly
In that strong, sure clasp of Thine,
All the threads now pass through Thy hands, Dear Lord, e’er they come to mine.”

The World and the Gospel.

UNDER the above heading and bearing a picture of the world, with the words, “The whole world for Jesus Now,” also the quotation from Matt. 28:19, the following appears in a church paper, sent in by one of our brethren recently

Less than 150 years ago it was estimated that 481 Millions did not have an intelligent knowledge of Jesus Christ. Four years ago, it was estimated that the population of the world was 1958 millions, and that of these no less than 1370 millions were unreached by the Gospel. Thus in under 150 years the heathen world had increased almost threefold.

“Church of Christ, arise! Our Master’s command still holds; the need of the world is immense; we have the means of meeting the need.”

When it is realised that the increasing number of heathen quoted above has come about during practically the same time as that recorded in Daniel —”The time of the end; (when) many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased” (Dan. 12:4)—a time of enlightenment which from the natural standpoint should have been the most favourable for extending the Gospel message to every human being, does not the truth of this matter indicate that the time for winning “the whole world for Jesus” is not yet? Surely it does, and there is abundant Scriptural testimony to this effect for all ‘who in spirit and truth seek to “rightly divide the word of truth.”’ (2 Tim. 2:15.)

In John 18:36 we have the words of Jesus, “My kingdom is not of this world.” How strange, then, it would be if His words in Matt. 28:19 were intended to convey a contrary meaning, as though His disciples should, during this Gospel Age, teach all people of all nations and so bring about the conversion of the world. The margin reading of this verse states, “Make disciples, or Christians of all nations,” and this is in accord with Matt. 24:15, “... This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for witness unto all nations.” There is a great difference between the gospel being preached as a witness, to make disciples of, or from all nations, and striving to gain “the whole world for Jesus now.”

How important it is that all who have come to know of the salvation in Christ Jesus should also seek to understand how the Lord is pleased to work out the various features of His great plan for the redemption of mankind, that they may thus work in harmony with His designs and not be following ideas of their own.

As the Scriptures indicate, the Lord is “taking out a people for His name,” during this Gospel Age, prior to the work of the Millennial Age—of “building again the tabernacle of David . . . that the residue of men might seek after the Lord.” (Acts 15:14-18.) So, the great increase in the number of the heathen is only to be expected, inasmuch as the conversion of these multitudes is not yet intended of the Lord. Further, the Apostle indicates that the so-called Christian nations in these very days would be manifest as ungodly, largely, being “lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof,” (2 Tim. 3:1-5,) and this, after the gospel has been preached in their midst for hundreds of years. Even if every individual of the heathen could be reached with the Gospel at present, if the effect was no better than what has taken place in those countries claiming to be Christian, they would still need to be converted and brought to a knowledge of the truth, when “the times of restitution” are operating for the blessing of all, at our Lord’s second advent. (1 Tim. 2:4-6; Acts 3:20, 21.)

While, then, the need of the world may seem immense, and surely is, yet the Church, the Body of Christ must first be completed before any effective work takes place for the deliverance of the masses of mankind from sin and death.

In the new age, when the “new heavens” (Christ and His saints) are reigning over the world, all shall know the Lord from the least unto the greatest, and the blessings then flowing out will bring peace and everlasting life to all the willing and obedient, ‘upon the restored earth. (Eph. 4:11., 12; Rev. 21:1-5.)

QUESTION BOX.

Question.--"Tabemacle Shadows," page 97, last sentence. Is it right to refer to the broken body of the Christ as a ransom?

Answer.—Although all the ransom price for the sins of the world was provided by the Head, "The Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world," yet it has pleased God that those who "follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth" (Rev. 14:4) should be very closely associated with Christ. Paul uses language in Rom. 8:36 (quoted from Psa. 44:22) similar to that referring to Christ in Isaiah 53, "For thy sake we are killed all the (Gospel) day long, we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter."

The picture in the "Tabernacle Shadows" is a very beautiful one. The Head was first to suffer and to be laid on the altar, then member by member throughout this Gospel Age has "suffered with Him," been "baptised into His death," being partakers of the sufferings of Christ, "planted in the likeness of His death"--a sacrificial death--thus "filling up that which is behind (left over) of the afflictions of Christ for His Body's sake." "Till we all come . . . unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ"--a perfect man. Thus the afflictions of Christ will be complete when all the members have been laid on the altar with the Head.

Possibly this sentence referred to could be better stated, that when the world of mankind in the next age come to an understanding of the working out of the Divine Plan of the ages, they will recognise God's love and wisdom as manifested in the broken body of the Christ, by which means the ransom or redemption of all was accomplished, although "Jesus paid it all." "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing-." (Rev. 5:12.)

A Little at a Time

"As thy days, so shall thy strength be."—Dent. 33:25.

A mother once said to her little girl who was sewing: "If you look the whole length of your seam you will get disheartened, for it seems so long: look only on the little bit between your thumb and finger."

Our life is mercifully cut up into "littles." God knows that if its "whole" were presented at once, it would crush us down. Let us live to-day and ask for grace to set about doing cheerfully the "littles" of to-morrow.

The Divine Plan of the Ages.

THIS article is a reprint of the closing chapter of the book, "Divine Plan of the Ages," and is presented as a most profitable summary of this helpful work. Those who have studied this book can testify to its great value in assisting to a clear understanding of God's Word and it is highly recommended to all truth seekers. Various editions available will be noted at the close of this chapter.

Our Duty toward the Truth—Its Cost, Its Value, Its Profit.

IN the preceding chapters we have seen that both the light of nature and that of revelation clearly demonstrate the fact that an intelligent, wise, almighty and righteous God is the Creator of all things and that He is the supreme and rightful Lord of all; that all things animate and inanimate are subject to His control; and that the Bible is the revelation of His character and plans so far as He is pleased to disclose them to men. From it we have learned that though evil now predominates among some of His creatures, it exists for only a limited time and to a limited extent, and, by His permission, for wise ends which He has in view. We have also learned that though darkness now covers the earth, and gross darkness the people, yet God's light will in due time dispel all the darkness, and the whole earth will be filled with His glory.

We have seen that His great plan is one that has required ages for its accomplishment thus far, and that yet another age will be required to complete it; and that during all the dark ages of the past, when God seemed to have almost forgotten His creatures, His plan for their future blessing has been silently but grandly working out, though during all those ages the mysteries of His plan have been wisely hidden from men. We have also seen that the day or age which is now about to dawn upon the world is to be the day of the world's judgment or trial, and that all previous preparation has been for the purpose of giving mankind in general as favourable an opportunity as possible, when, as individuals, they will be placed on trial for eternal life. The long period of six thousand years has greatly multiplied the race, and their buffetings and sufferings under the dominion of evil have given them an experience which will be greatly to their advantage when they are brought to judgment. And though the race as a whole has been permitted thus to suffer for six thousand years, yet as individuals they have run their course in a few brief years.

We have seen that, while the race was undergoing this necessary discipline, in due time God sent His Son to redeem them; and that while the mass of mankind did not recognise the Redeemer in His humiliation, and would not believe that the Lord's Anointed would thus come to their rescue, yet from among those whose hearts were toward God, and who believed His promises, God has been, during these ages past, selecting two companies to receive the honours of His kingdom—the honours of sharing in the execution of the divine plan. These two select companies, we have seen, are to constitute the two phases of the Kingdom of God. And from the prophets we learn that this kingdom is soon to be established in the earth; that under its wise and just administration all the families of the earth will be blessed with a most favourable opportunity to prove themselves worthy of everlasting life; that, as the result of their redemption by the precious blood of Christ, a grand highway of holiness will be cast up; that the ransomed of the Lord (all mankind —Heb. 2:9) may walk in it; that it will be a public thoroughfare made comparatively easy for all who earnestly desire to become pure, holy; and that all the stumbling-stones will be gathered out, and all the snares, allurements and pitfalls removed, and blessed will all those be who go up thereon to perfection and everlasting life.

It is manifest that this judgment, or rulership, cannot begin until Christ, whom Jehovah hath appointed to be the Judge or Ruler of the world, has come again—not again in humiliation, but in power and great glory; not again to redeem the world, but to judge (rule) the world in righteousness. A trial can in no case proceed until the judge is on the bench and the court in session at the appointed time, though before that time there may be a great preparatory work. Then shall the King sit upon the throne of His glory, and before Him shall be gathered all nations, and He shall judge them during that age by their works, opening to them the books of the Scriptures and filling the earth with the knowledge of the Lord. And by their conduct under all that favour and assistance, He shall decide who of them are worthy of life everlasting in the ages of glory and joy to follow.--Matt. 25:31; Rev. 20:11-13.

Thus we have seen that the second advent of Messiah, to set up His kingdom in the earth, is an event in which all classes of men may have hope, an event which, when fully understood, will bring joy and gladness to all hearts. It is the day when the Lord's "little flock" of consecrated saints has the greatest cause for rejoicing. It is the glad day when the espoused virgin Church with joy becomes the Bride, the Lamb's wife; when she comes up out of the wilderness leaning upon the arm of her Beloved, and enters into His glorious inheritance. It is the day when the true Church glorified with its Head, will be endued with divine authority and power, and will begin the great work for the world, the result of which will be the complete restitution of all things. And it will be a glad day for the world when the great Adversary is bound, when the fetters that have held the race for six thousand years are broken, and when the knowledge of the Lord fills the whole earth as the waters cover the sea.

A knowledge of these things, and the evidences that they are nigh, even at the door, should have a powerful influence upon all, but especially upon the consecrated children of God, who are seeking the prize of the divine nature. We urge such, while they lift up their heads and rejoice, knowing that their redemption draweth nigh, to lay aside every weight and hindrance, and to run patiently the -race in which they have started. Look away from self and its unavoidable weaknesses and imperfections, knowing that all such weaknesses are covered fully by the merits of the ransom given by Christ Jesus our Lord, and that your sacrifices and self-denials are acceptable to God through our Redeemer and Lord—and thus only. Let us remember that the strength sufficient which God has promised us, and by use of which we can be "overcomers," is provided in His Word. It is a strength derived from a knowledge of His character and plans, and of the conditions upon which we may share in them. Thus Peter expresses it, saying, "Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus Christ our Lord, according as His divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of Him who hath called us to glory and virtue; whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature."—2 Pet. 1:2-4.

But to obtain this knowledge and this strength, which God thus proposes to supply to each runner for the heavenly prize, will surely test the sincerity of your consecration vows. You have consecrated all your time, all your talents, to the Lord; now the question is, How much of it are you giving? Are you still willing, according to your covenant of consecration, to give up all—to give up your own plans and methods, and the theories of yourselves and others, to accept of God's plan and way and time of doing His great work? Are you willing to do this at the cost of earthly friendships and social ties? And are you willing to give up time from other things for the investigation of these glorious themes so heart-cheering to the truly consecrated; with the certain knowledge that it will cost you this self-denial? If all is not consecrated, or if you only half meant it when you gave all to the Lord, then you will begrudge the time and effort needful to search His Word as for hid treasure, to obtain thus the strength needful for all the trials of faith incident to the present, above other times.

But think not that the giving will end with the giving of the needful time and energy to this study: it will not. The sincerity of your sacrifice of self will be tested in full, and will prove you either worthy or unworthy of membership in that "little flock," the overcoming Church, which will receive the honours of the kingdom— If you give diligence to the Word of God, and receive its truths into a good, honest, consecrated heart, it will beget in you such a love for God and His plan, and such a desire to tell the good tidings, to preach the gospel, that it will become the all-absorbing theme of life thereafter; and this will not only separate you from the world and from many nominal Christians, in spirit, but it will lead to separation from such entirely. They will think you peculiar and separate you from their company, and you will be despised and counted a fool for Christ's sake; because they know us not, even as they knew not the Lord.—2 Cor. 4:8-10; Luke 6:22; John 3:1; 1 Cor. 3:18.

Are you willing to follow on to know the Lord through evil and through good report? Are you willing to forsake all, to follow as He may lead you by His Word?—to ignore the wishes of friends, as well as your own desires? It is hoped that many of the consecrated who read this volume may by it be so quickened to fresh zeal and fervency of spirit, through a clearer apprehension of the divine plan, that they will be able to say, “By the grace of God, I will follow on to know and to serve the Lord, whatever may be the sacrifice involved.” Like the noble Bereans (Acts 17:11), let such studiously set themselves to prove what has been presented in the foregoing pages. Prove it, not by the conflicting traditions and creeds of men, but by the only correct and divinely authorised standard—God's own Word. It is to facilitate such investigation that we have cited so many scriptures.

It will be useless to attempt to harmonise the divine plan herein set forth with many of the ideas previously held and supposed to be Scriptural, yet not proved so. It will be observed that the divine plan is complete and harmonious with itself in every part, and that it is in perfect harmony with the character which the Scriptures ascribe to its great Author. It is a marvellous display of wisdom, justice, love and power. It carries with it its own evidence of superhuman design, being beyond the power of human invention, and almost beyond the power of human comprehension, Doubtless questions will arise on various points inquiring for solution according to the plan herein presented. Careful, thoughtful Bible study will settle many of these at once; and to all we can confidently say, “No question which you raise need go without a sufficient answer, fully in harmony with the views herein presented.” Succeeding volumes elaborate the various branches of this one plan, disclosing at every step that matchless harmony of which the truth alone can boast. And be it known that no other system of theology even claims, or has ever attempted, to harmonise in itself every statement of the Bible; yet—nothing short of this can we claim for these views. This harmony not only with the Bible, but with the divine character and with sanctified common sense, must have arrested the attention of the conscientious reader already, and filled him with awe, as well as with hope and confidence. It is marvellous indeed, yet just what we should expect of the TRUTH, and of God's infinitely wise and beneficent plan.

And while the Bible is thus opening up from this standpoint, and disclosing wondrous things (Psa. 119:1.8), the light of the present day upon the various creeds and traditions of men is affecting them in an opposite manner. They are being recognised even by their worshippers as imperfect and deformed, and hence they are being measurably ignored; and though still subscribed to, they are seldom elaborated, for very shame. And the shame attaching to these human creeds and traditions is spreading to the Bible, which is supposed to uphold these deformities of thought as of divine origin. Hence the freedom with which the various advanced thinkers, so-called, are beginning to deny various parts of the Bible not congenial to their views. How striking, then, the providence of God, which at this very time opens before His children this truly glorious and harmonious plan—a plan that reject: not one, but harmonises every part and item of His Word. Truth, when due, becomes meat for the household of faith, that they may grow thereby. Matt. 24:45.) Whoever comes in contact with truth, realising its character, has thereby a responsibility with reference to it. It must be either received and acted upon, or rejected and despised. To ignore it does not release from responsibility. If we accept it ourselves, we have a responsibility toward it also, because it is for all the household of faith; and each one receiving it becomes its debtor, and, if a faithful steward, must dispense it to the other members of the family of God. Let your light shine! if it again become darkness, how great will be the darkness. Lift up the light! Lift up a standard for the people!

Partaking of the Fruits and Laboring.

“The Husbandman that laboreth must first partaker of the fruits.” 2 Tim. 2:6.

It is a very significant fact to all who search the Scriptures that very rarely does the truth lie on the surface.

Because this is so, many give up Bible reading altogether. No beauty is found between the covers of the Sacred Book very often, just because the reader expects the unfolding as simply as reading a novel. We must read carefully and thoughtfully, and above everything else with prayer to God that He, through the Spirit, may shed light upon our searching.

If we were looking at the above text on the surface only we might say “Oh, well, it simply means that the man who does the work is entitled to the first share in the dividends, or to his wages; or that the farmer who ploughs, sows and reaps is entitled to the first portion of the crop.” There is a sense in which this may be so, but it does not appear to have been the Apostle’s thought here, as evidenced by the following verse:—
”Consider what I say, and the Lord give thee understanding in all things.”

There is a deeper meaning if we can but grasp it. While many have taken the words to infer that before we can expect to receive the fruits or to be partaker of the fruits we must be prepared to labor, the Apostle’s thought seems to have been somewhat contrary — that before we can labor effectively, we must be first partaker of the fruits.

We all know that in the varied experiences of our earthly course, if we find someone in trouble or distress of any kind, that we can help far more effectively, and are always more readily sympathetic, if we have passed through some similar experience ourselves. So it seems that the Apostle Paul is trying to show us that before we can become effective laborers in God’s vineyard we must be first partakers of the fruits.

What is the fruit of which we must be partakers? We have the answer surely in Gal. 5:22,23. “The fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance.” We are told that against all such there is no law. There can be no doubt that this is the fruit to which be our Lord Himself referred in John 15:8, “Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit, so shall ye be my disciples.”

We shall not make a detailed study of the ninefold fruit of the spirit, for at this time we are concerned only as to how we can be partakers of it. There is but one way of receiving this fruit of the spirit and that is by Him who said, “I am the way, the truth, and the life, no man cometh unto the Father but by me.” Some even dare to think they can partake of the fruits otherwise. They realize that to be patient, humble, unselfish, kind, pure, etc., are good and right but they trust in their own strength to obtain or partake of them.. As one writer has put it—”Some are ready to doff the cap to Christ but unwilling to bow the knee.” We find that the Apostle is warning against such in this same passage—in the preceding verse—”If a man strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned except he strive lawfully.”

In the realm of sport, etc., we see men striving for masteries, striving it is true for a corruptible crown, but even such a crown is not won unless the competitors strive lawfully. There are rules and regulations always to be observed. If these are not adhered to, the race or game ends not in a crown but disqualification. It behoves us each one to see then, that striving for the crown, “incorruptible and that fadeth not away,” we do not presume to stand before our God without the wedding garment of our Lord’s imputed righteousness, and without taking His yoke upon us and learning of His meekness and lowliness of heart. It is in this way that we become partakers of the fruits of the spirit, the fruits which we must partake of first. before we can hope to be used of the Lord in imparting them to others. The laboring husband-men need the testimony of the Samaritans (John 4:39.-42). We believe, not because of another’s saying, but we have heard Him ourselves. We are partakers of the fruit of His Gospel, and we know that this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the World.

The Tabernacle.

THAT the, Tabernacle of Israel, its construction and its ceremonies were Divinely intended to fore-shadow better sacrifices and heavenly or spiritual things is clearly stated in the New Testament. Many passages could be quoted in this respect but two or three will suffice. First, in Rev. 12:1, we see a woman used to symbolise the Church of Christ, being selected during this Gospel Age, from Pentecost until the end of this dispensation, when the marriage of the Lamb takes place. She is clothed with the Sun, and has the Moon under her feet. The Sun represents "the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ," and the promise to the members in Christ is, that they shall shine forth as the Sun in the Kingdom. As Isaiah sings, "He hath clothed me with the garments of salvation; He hath covered me with the robe of righteousness." (Isa. 61:10.) See also Psa. 132:9, 10. The Moon represents the Law which was but a reflection of the Sun--the good things to come. The Law was just and none could gain its righteousness, but Christ kept the Law and gained its reward which He passed on to the Church, so "The righteousness of the Law is fulfilled in us." (Rom. 8:4.). Thus the Church is seen with the Moon under her feet.

This is in harmony with Heb. 10:1,— "The Law having a shadow of good things to come . . . not the very image." Also Col. 2:16,17,— "Let no man judge you in meat or in drink or in respect of an holyday . . . or of the sabbath: which are a shadow of things to come, but the body (the substance, the reality) is of Christ."

Seeing then that those matters were really prophecies in figures and types fore-telling what was to take place, we can understand how necessary it was that the Divine instructions be accurately carried out respecting the building of the Tabernacle. See Heb. 8:5.— "Who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle: for, See, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern shown to thee in the mount."

There are many different pictures in God's dealing with Israel, which must be kept separate from each other and not confused together. Sometimes the whole nation refers to God's people. For instance, when the deliverance from Egypt occurred during the night of the Passover, the first-borns were saved from death, showing how, during this Gospel Age, prior to the deliverance of the whole world from bondage to Satan, sin and death, the Church of the Firstborn would be saved—selected—a "first-fruits unto God." Then will follow the deliverance of "the whole groaning creation." Rom. 8:19-22.

In the view we purpose taking at this time the Camp of Israel would represent the world of mankind under the curse of sin and needing atonement. The tribe of Levi represents those who are justified by faith and at peace with God. The high priest (Aaron) represents Christ, “the High Priest of our profession,” and the under-priests pictured the consecrated in Christ. 1 Pet. 2:9.

The Structure of the Tabernacle.

Let us imagine ourselves about 3500 years ago—in Moses’ day—crossing the wilderness and approaching the nation of Israel encamped there. We wind our way through numerous tents and come in view of the white linen wall

7 feet or more high, so one cannot see over it. It is just a blank wall. There is, however, a particular order of tribes encamped around the Tabernacle. On the eastern end or opposite the gate of the Court, the tents of Moses and of Aaron and his sons were pitched. On the northern side was the Levitical house of Merari. On the western end, the Gershonites also of the tribe of Levi and on the southern side we find the Kohathites, also Levites. Outside of this inner circle were the twelve tribes, three on each side, so that the Tabernacle was completely encircled by the Camp of Israel.

The white linen wall enclosed the Court, which is 100 cubits long by 50 cubits wide. There is only one entrance which is on the eastern end; it is called the Gate, while all around the walls are just white linen held up by wooden posts on the inside.

The Gate is decorated being white linen interwoven with blue, purple and scarlet. Inside the Gate stands the Brazen Altar and a little farther on there is the Brazen Laver, at which the priests washed before entering the Tabernacle. Then we come to the Tabernacle. It is 30 cubits long by 10 cubits wide. It is divided into two compartments.—20 cubits by 10 cubits, and 10 cubits by 10 cubits. The first or larger compartment is called “The Holy” and the second, the inner one, is called “The Most Holy.”

The sides and western end, of the building are composed of golden boards, i.e., wooden boards overlaid with gold. Each board was 10 cubits high and 14- cubits broad; that would be at least 15 feet by 2 feet 3 inches. These large, beautiful, golden boards stood on end, 20 boards on each side, (north and south) and for the west end there were six boards and two corner boards. Five bars overlaid with gold held these boards together, the middle bar passing right through the boards from end to end, so that the boards must have been a good thickness and quite heavy.

The two compartments were divided by a Veil of blue, purple and scarlet of fine twined linen and cherubim with cunning work, supported by four golden posts set in sockets of silver. The entrance or “door” of the Tabernacle was also by passing under a veil of blue, purple and scarlet of fine twined linen, but no cherubim. This veil was supported by five golden posts which were set in sockets of copper.

There were four coverings to the Tabernacle.

(1) Ten curtains of fine twined linen, worked in blue, purple and scarlet and cherubim. Five were coupled together and the other five coupled together sideways; then, when placed over the Tabernacle these two immense curtains were also coupled by loops of blue and taches of gold. Each separate curtain was 28 cubits by 4 cubits, so that the ten joined together, had a covering of 28 cubits by 40 cubits, thus allowing 10 cubits to hang over the front as a veil or “door” of the Tabernacle,

(2) Eleven curtains of goat’s hair each 30 cubits by 4 cubits. Six were coupled and then five were coupled and the two portions then joined together, forming a complete covering.

(3) There was a covering over this of rams skins dyed red.

(4) A covering of seal skins.

All outside the white wall would represent the world needing redemption. That white wall prevented any view of the things of God. It was like a wall of unbelief. The world lies in sin and condemnation; please note Rom. 5:12; Eph. 2:1-3; and Rom. 3:19-23.

To Approach God.

There was but one entrance into the Court and when once entry is made the white linen wall becomes a protection—a wall of faith. John 14:6,—“I am the way, the truth and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by me.” John 11:25,—“I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me though he were dead, yet shall he live.” See also John 10:7,9; 5:24,25; Rom. 3:24,25; and John 6:40,51,—“My flesh, which I will give for the life of the world.”

This is clearly shown at the Gate, for there stands the Brazen Altar that speaks of the great sacrifice for our sins. “Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures.” I Tim. 2:6,—“Who gave himself a ransom for all.” Mark 10:45,—“The Son of Man came . . . to give His life a ransom for many.” See also 1 Cor. 15:21,22. But we must go on, for we are invited to follow Christ into the antitypical Holy. Isa. 53:6,7,—“The Lord has laid on him the iniquity of us all .

He was led as a lamb to the slaughter.” 1 Pet. 2:21, —“Hereunto were ye called because Christ also suffered for us, and gave us an example that we should follow His steps.” Rev. 14:4, speaks of those who follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth—redeemed from among men, a first-fruits unto God and unto the Lamb. In Heb. 13:14, Paul reminds us that in this Court condition—justification—we have “no abiding city.” We must go forward; “follow the Lamb.”

Jesus was always perfect; He was never outside this Court condition, being holy, harmless, spotless, undefiled, separate from sinners, as “a lamb without out blemish.” He needed not to take the step of repentance or to be justified by faith, but when by grace we have been brought so far, it is then that we are invited to “follow His steps.” “Being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom also we have access into this grace and rejoice in the hope of the glory of God.” (Rom. 5:1,2.)

The white linen wall which surrounded the Court represented righteousness ;—“white linen which is the righteousness of the saints.” (Rev. 7:9:8.) We are justified, made right by the merit of the cross of Christ, which is represented by the Brazen Altar at the Gate of the Court. Those who have come thus far are invited to draw nearer and pass under the veil and enter the “Holy” of the Tabernacle.

However, we first come to the Laver of water, at which all must wash before entering the Holy. So it is that having a desire to please God—to love righteousness—we study His Word and realise its cleansing power. “Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his ways, by taking heed thereto according to thy Word.” (Psa. 119:9.) And this process of sanctification continues throughout our “Tabernacle,” or earthly sojourn. “Sanctify them through Thy truth, Thy Word is truth.”

It is here that God recognises us as His children, and invites us to draw nearer in consecration—to become “priests and kings,” as “joint-heirs with Christ,” as members in Him, the great High Priest in glory. “My son give me thine heart.” “That ye should walk worthy of God who hath called (invited) you unto His kingdom and glory.” “God who hath saved us and called us with a holy calling . . .” “No man take this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God as was Aaron.” “Blessed is the man whom thou chooseth and causest to approach unto thee, that he may dwell in thy courts.” (1 Thes. 2:12; 2 Tim. 1:9; Heb. 5:4; Psa. 65:4.).

What Does It Mean to Pass Under the Veil.

This veil under which all must pass to enter the Tabernacle represents death to the human will—human hopes, desires and aims. The Court is the condition of perfect humanity, and human mindedness is to be left behind as we pass into the Holy or spiritual condition and receive the spiritual mind. As we stand at this entrance veil, we come to take our first step in the footsteps of Jesus. It was there He stood when He was baptised in Jordan, when He said, “Lo, I come to do thy will, O my God.” “If any man will come after me let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me.”

When we came into the Court, (justification) “at peace with God,” we became alive towards God, so that we could learn something of the heavenly hope and understand something of the Divine will for us and the invitation to consecrate ourselves to Him. It is here that we are told by our Lord to count the cost, take full account of what is to be given up and also of the wonderful hope, the prize of the high-calling of God in Christ Jesus.

If we appreciate this wonderful grace of God and gladly yield ourselves, our purchased lives to Him, unreservedly, He will accept us as living sacrifices, and grant us His holy spirit, which is the begetting to the new nature, the spiritual life. We become “new creatures in Christ Jesus.” Our hopes are no longer earthly but heavenly, and we find our desires, aims, joys and ambitions no longer of the earth, earthly, but spiritual and heavenly. The changed aspect is indicated in this Holy of the Tabernacle, where all of earth is shut out.

If having come to be at peace with God as indicated in the Court, we count the cost of going further too great, we cannot just stay there. Justification is granted only during this age to provide the opportunity of consecration, and if this further step is not taken, we would be of those who “receive the grace of God in vain”; we would lose that standing —Luke 9:23,24, “If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me, for whosoever will save his life shall lose it, and whosoever will lose his life for my sake, the same shall save it.” (Also Rom. 12:1,2.)

Thus we come into the Tabernacle. There is only one entrance. We hear again “I am, the way and the life, no man cometh unto the Father but by me.” Having, therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way which He hath consecrated for us through the veil, that is to say his flesh . . .” (Heb.

10:19-23.) Having taken this step and entered the Holy (state of consecration) what a different aspect everything takes. Such privileges are ours—There is the golden Table of Shew-Bread on our right hand, the north side; and on our left is the golden Candlestick made out of a talent of gold, which would be about a hundredweight, all beaten out in one piece. Then right in front we see the golden Altar of Incense, which is just in front of the Mercy Seat and Ark of the Covenant which stands in the Most Holy, beyond the second veil.

There is no natural light in the Holy, there being no windows: the only light is from the Candlestick which represents Christ the Head, the real Candlestick and the Church is represented by the branches. The oil represents the holy spirit of which each member receives a measure, “but God gave not the spirit by measure unto him (Christ).” How beautifully the light shines on all the golden walls and golden furnishings. So our Lord let His light shine, reflecting the glory of the Father—“manifesting the Father.” we are also exhorted to let our light shine, that others may glorify our Father which is in heaven. Jesus said, "I am the light of the world," and also speaking to the Church said, "Ye are the light of the world." "Let your light so shine." It must have been beautiful in the Holy with the light shining on all the gold around and showing the fine white twined linen and blue and purple and scarlet, and cherubim of cunning work. It is indeed beautiful to dwell with the truly consecrated Christians who have the holy spirit in such measure and whose works glorify their Father in heaven.

It is the light of the holy spirit that reveals the exceeding great and precious promises (the shewbread on the golden Table) illuminating the Word of God and so gives grace and strength to run the narrow way. It is by this light from the Candlestick that we have the privilege of the golden Altar, there to present our prayers, thanksgiving and praises to our Father who bath called us to glory and virtue.

This compartment represents our condition as Christians, running for "the prize of the high calling of God." The prize is not gained until the race is finished. The prize is immortality. Some people think that they have this already—that they are born with immortal souls. If that were true, there would be no need to "so run as to obtain" it. If we run the race successfully, the promise is "an abundant entrance into the Kingdom," represented by the Most Holy, within the second veil.

In the first "Holy" are represented the condition and privileges of those "begotten to a lively hope through the Gospel; to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled and that fadeth not away reserved in heaven for you who are kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation." 1 Pet. 1:4,5. The birth on to the spirit plane will be when we pass beyond the second veil (death,—the consecration to death, of all that is human, being finished) and awake in the first resurrection in the likeness of our Lord. 1 John 3:1-3. This may be signified in the fact that figures of cherubim are worked on this second veil, while at the door of the Tabernacle and at the Gate of the Court there were blue and purple and scarlet, but no cherubim.

We, then, are at present in the school of Christ. Like the Captain of our salvation we must learn obedience (even unto death) by the things which we suffer—be perfected through sufferings. The priest (the new creature) must put the animal—the natural mind, the human nature—to death and "while the outward man perish, the inner (new) man is renewed day by day."

The Steps of Approach.

The steps of approach as Christians are indicated by the posts and their sockets, in the Court, in the Holy and in the Most Holy. The posts holding up the white linen around the Court were wooden, set in copper sockets. The wooden posts indicate imperfect humanity, but set in copper (which represents perfect humanity) shows that they have a standing of perfection, being "justified by faith."

In the Holy the five posts holding up the veil are wooden but overlaid with gold, showing that a change of nature has taken place—"begotten to the Divine nature." As copper represents perfect human nature, gold represents the Divine nature. Though now begotten as new creatures, we have this treasure in earthen vessels, so these posts are also standing in copper sockets.

In the Most Holy there are four posts of wood overlaid with gold and they stand in sockets of silver. Silver represents verity—reality—so this indicates the actual birth as spiritual beings in the Divine presence, heaven itself. (To be continued.)

Power Us-ward.

“That ye may know . . . what is the exceeding greatness of His power to us-ward who believe according to the working of His mighty power.” (Eph. 1:18, 19.)

There is no condition, or circumstance, or opposition, or experience in your life which cannot be rectified and brought into conformity with the will of God, and which may not be strengthened by His might. No habit, nor custom, nor besetting sin, can successfully challenge the mastery of the spirit.

We may despair of victory; we may have a past which is a record of failure following upon failure. Yet it is gloriously possible to learn the secret which will enable us to go forth in the power of God. The realisation of Divine power is the privilege of all the children of God, no matter what present or past history theirs may have been.

Christ's Spirit of Comfort and Second Presence.

THERE appears to be a difficulty with some to discern the difference between the Lord's being with His Church throughout the Gospel Age, and His presence as Lord of the Harvest at the end of the Age—His parousia—unseen by man and discerned only by the eye of faith, as signs of His presence are observable.

The Lord Jesus has certainly been with His suffering saints ever since Pentecost. He has so closely identified Himself with the members of His Body that He said to the man who went “breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples,” “Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me? I am Jesus whom, thou persecutest.” “For by one spirit we are all baptised into one Body. All made to drink into one spirit” (1 Cor. 12) so that Christ is represented in His Body-members on earth, in whom the holy spirit operates. “He who receiveth you receiveth Me, and he who receiveth Me receiveth Him that sent Me.” These have the privilege of suffering with Christ, of filling up the afflictions of Christ which are left over, so that we might be dead with Him and so might live with Him.

Our Lord is represented in Rev. 1:13, and 2:1, as “He that walketh amidst the candlesticks” and as being thoroughly acquainted with the varied conditions and circumstances of His Church—“I know thy works.” He is ever with His people in their trials, and renders ‘aid by His spirit, through the Word of God, and through His people, sending comfort and strength in time of need.

This was His promise when taking leave of the disciples—“I will not leave you comfortless. I will pray the Father and He shall give you another comforter that may abide with you for ever.” “He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you.” “But the comforter—the holy spirit which the Father will send in My name—he shall teach you all things and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.” “But when the comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, he shall testify of Me.”—John 14:16-18, 26; 15:26.

It is in this way that the Lord has been with His people, sustaining them in trial, adversity, persecution and distress, by bringing to their remembrance His love, His care, His interest in their progress, and the many exceeding great and precious promises of grace to help.

As the ‘young nobleman in the parable, our Lord went to a far country, to the heavenly courts, to receive the Kingdom, and then to return, to come again ‘and receive His Church unto Himself, that where He is there they may be also. Then He will take His great power and order righteousness and peace in the earth.

Before dealing with mankind generally, the Scriptures clearly show that the first work of Christ on His return is in connection with His Church, and for this purpose He must be present for a season, “as a thief in the night,” unknown to the world. Gradually His presence would be made known to the watching saints—those who, when they hear the “knock” indicating His presence, open their hearts to welcome their Lord and He enters and sups with them, and they with Him (Rev. 3:20). Those who do not hear the knock and. those who hear, but fail to open, are left in ignorance of the second presence of the Lord.

The discourse in Matt. 24 shows that there is the work of harvest to be first attended to-, a gathering of the elect.

The Lord of the Harvest will say to the reapers, “Tie the tares in bundles, but gather the wheat into the garner.” True Christians are to be separated from the false and gathered home into the antitypical ark, into Christ, beyond the veil, before the burning up of the bundles of tares takes place in the “time of trouble such as never has been since there was a nation, nor ever shall be.”

The world will be in ignorance of the fact that Christ has returned until this preparatory work in connection with the Church and the closing of the Gospel Age has been accomplished. "As the days of Noah were, so shall also the days of the Son of Man be. For as in the days that were before the flood, they were eating, drinking, marrying and giving in marriage until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away, so shall also the presence of the Son of Man be" (Matt. 24:37-39). It would seem to be difficult to make it plainer that there would be "days of the Son of Man"—a time during which the Lord would be present, dealing with His people and preparing for their deliverance, but unrecognised by the world. He would come "as a thief," unawares.

The parables in Matt. 25 illustrate the matters dealt with in, the 24th chapter. The parable of the virgins shows that only the watchers would know of the Lord's coming, and that even among them some should fail to be properly prepared. It shows a separating work, which is still in process. The varied experiences of the harvest period continue to separate the foolish virgins from the wise. When all the wise virgins are gathered the door Will be shut.

The second parable shows:the Lord dealing with His people respecting the use of opportunities and talents, and rewarding them'-accordingly. Not only are the living saints to be thus dealt with and rewarded on completing their course, but "the dead in Christ are to rise first." This all indicates that there will be quite a period similar to the "days that were before the Hood," in the "clays of the Son of Man," His parousia, prior to His commencing His work with the world, indicated in the next parable.

All this preparatory work could not be accomplished if the old thought that Christ's coming and going would be like a flash of lightning, if all living and dead saints were to be caught together at the moment of that coming. There is something more beautiful and reasonable, more harmonious and God-like, in the manner of our Lord's return as viewed in the light of 'God's Word.

We see then that there is quite a difference between Christ being with the Church during the Age by the holy spirit in His people to comfort and sustain, and His being present again in the earth in this day of His preparation. All the evidences of His "parousia" are with us to-day. He has surely conic, and has prepared the promised feast of Luke 12:37. It is the blessedness promised to come at the end of the 1335 days (about 1874) of Daniel 12. Those who have experienced the joys of this feast, since the unfoldment of truth at that time, know that He has come. They have heard the "knock" and have opened their hearts, and are feasting with their Lord (Rev. 3:20). The fact of seeing these things has refreshed the hearts of God's people. They are strengthened against the scepticism and human philosophies, theories, delusions and deceptions of this sad day, by the clearer knowledge of the Divine plan of the Ages. They are thus enabled to stand the severe tests of faith in these "days of the Son of Man," while those who fail to recognise the "knock" seem to prefer. the dim light of the dark ages, or when the Church was just emerging from the gloom of Papal errors, to the bright shining of truth radiating from the rising Sun of righteousness. Let us "hold fast that which we have received." "Continue in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them."-2 Tim. 3:14.

The Power to Overcome.

“I have set the Lord always before me; because He is at my right hand I shall not be moved.” Psa. 16:8.

IN these words of the Psalmist spoken prophetically of our Lord, we have at once a clear indication of the secret of His success in overcoming the world—His faithfulness in yielding up His perfect humanity a willing- sacrifice against all the opposing forces of the Adversary. And further in the fulfilment of these words in the life of our Lord is revealed the intimate relationship, the oneness of mind, that existed between Himself and the Heavenly Father.

At our Lord’s consecration and baptism at Jordan it is clearly shown that He was begotten of God’s holy spirit. He had the new mind—the disposition of God—implanted in His perfect human body to such an extent, that He could say, “I and my Father are one.” “For Jesus, when He was baptised, went up straightway out of the water, and the heavens were opened unto Him and the spirit of God, descending like a dove, lighted upon Him, and a voice from heaven said, “This is My beloved Son in whom I am well pleased.” (Matt. 3:16, 17).

Can we not realise the influence that had taken hold upon our Lord as He saw as never before the heavenly treasures of the Father’s plan concerning Himself, the redemption of the Church, the Body, and also of all the obedient of fallen humanity in due time—to be accomplished through Himself, and now revealed to His newly received spiritual mind?

Following His baptism and begetting of the spirit, He hastened into the wilderness, away from friends and acquaintances, and every distracting thing, that he might make use of the power of the holy spirit that had come upon Him—that He might use the new sight. The eyes of His understanding had been opened to comprehend the lengths and breadths and heights and depths of the Divine love and plan which He was to fulfil. He must not confer with flesh and blood respecting His future course, even if there had been anyone perfect like Himself with whom He might have conferred. He must confer with the Father. He must take the Father’s words through the prophecies, ‘and the lessons through the types and must hear and see in these the great work mapped out for Him. He must look at everything from the new standpoint of the spirit. No wonder He wished to be alone with God, and with the Word of God, which he had treasured up in His heart from infancy, and which, having a perfect mind, He no doubt had before Him as plainly as though He had the printed book.

The season was a precious one and undoubtedly the close of the forty day period saw the Lord well equipped in an understanding of the Divine arrangement respecting the necessity for His death. He understood that the payment of the ransom price for the world was pre-requisite to His coming reign of glory.

But just at that juncture came the Adversary’s chief besetments. Satan no doubt realised that the most favorable time for an attack upon Jesus would be when He was weak from. His long fast and vigilance, and hence it was at the close of the forty days that the temptations mentioned in Matt. 4:1-11, were set before the Lord. His replies to the three great trials can be summed up in the words of our text; “I have set the Lord always before me, because He is at my right hand I shall not be moved.” “Get thee hence, Satan.”

Jesus had covenanted to serve the Father only, “.Lo I come, to do Thy will, O my God,” and here His first great victory against the opposer had been accomplished through the power of God’s holy spirit, which had enabled Him to discern and keep in mind the Father’s will for Him. And Satan left Him, and angels came and ministered unto Him—a comforting assurance of the Father’s pleasure and He could therefore say in response, “My heart is glad and my glory rejoiceth: Thou hast shown me the path of life; in Thy presence is fulness of joy.” Throughout our Lord’s ministry He had this evidence of the Father’s pleasure as shown by His prayer.—”Father thank thee that thou hast heard me, and I know that thou hearest me always.” “For Thou wilt not leave my soul in the grave at Thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore.”

Also in the closing hours of our Lord’s earthly life, in His Gethsemane experiences, during the most trying hours, when of His disciples there were none with Him—none to be a comfort and assistance when it would have meant so much—He had set the Father before Him. When offering up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears unto Him who was able to save Him from death He was heard in that He feared. He feared not the hardness of His experiences—”The cup which the Father hath poured for Me shall I not drink it,” were His words. Yes, indeed; His delight was to do all the will of His heavenly Father, but He feared in that He may in some way have come short.

But no, “He was heard in that He feared,” and the assurance of the Father’s pleasure in Him was again manifested by a ministering angel — “Thou maintainest my lot,” — after which He set His face like a flint, His disciples being scattered every man to his own and our Lord was alone, yet not alone, because the Father was with Him. “Thou wilt show me the path of life.” “Thou preparest a table before me, in the presence of mine enemies.”

Herein we see the unity of spirit, the oneness of mind that existed between the Father and our Lord after His begetting at Jordan. He received the spirit from above in full measure continually, because He “had set the Lord always before Him.” We see the faithfulness of our great High Priest, who endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God; He who was the first and last of the creation of God, who was (dead and is alive, having set us an example that we should follow His steps. And the assurance is, that if the spirit of God that kept our Lord Jesus throughout His ministry and raised Him up from the dead, dwell in us, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken our mortal bodies by His spirit that dwelleth in us.

The Apostle Peter declares that Christ was put to death in the flesh’ but made alive by the spirit, and is gone into heaven, to the right hand of God. “Therefore,” he says, seeing this is so, “Arm yourselves likewise with the same mind,” (1 Peter 3:18, 22; 4:1.)—the mind that Jesus possessed, the power that the Father bestowed upon Him and which enabled Him to faithfully endure the cross. Can this be the Apostle’s thought? If so, how may we accomplish this?

In the Father’s gracious plan, in which He has purposed to “take out a people for His name,” to become the Bride of Christ, He has arranged a means whereby these, though imperfect, may also receive of His spirit, through exercising faith in the ransom sacrifice of Christ, their faith justifying them before God under the robe of Christ’s righteousness. “That he might be just and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus.” By the further step of consecration to God, a solemn covenant to be dead with Christ, baptised into His death, (Rom. 12:1), we come under the same anointing of the spirit as our Lord and Head. For it became Him (God) of whom are all things and by whom are all things, to bring many sons unto glory, through the Captain of our salvation; “For both He that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one.”

Herein is revealed the grace and love of God toward us,— that he that sanctifieth (Jesus) and they that are sanctified (the Bride, the “little flock”) may be one; one in mind, one in spirit; “for which cause He is not ashamed to call them brethren.” (Heb. 2:10,11.) Here is a unity between Christ and His followers, through the spirit, that the Father has provided which only the Lord’s true people can realise. “Of Him are ye in Christ Jesus.”

Continuing, the Apostle in 1 Cor. 1:30, seems to elaborate the means whereby we may become armed with the mind of Christ,—“Who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness (justification) and sanctification and deliverance.” Christ is our wisdom. Wisdom is here given the first and in that sense the most important place amongst the steps of salvation. The wise man’s testimony agrees with this, saying, “Wisdom is the principal thing ... with all thy getting get understanding.” However well disposed we may be, however weak or strong, wisdom is the prime essential to our taking the proper course. Our Heavenly Father, in calling us to the membership in the New Creation, foresaw all our needs: that our own wisdom would not be sufficient for us^ and that the wisdom of the Adversary and his deluded followers would be exercised to our injury; hence the provision that Christ should be our wisdom.

Before ever we come to God, before ever we receive the merit of the atonement or through it reach the relationship of sons, we need help, guidance, wisdom, the opening of the eyes of our understanding, that we may discern the supply which God has provided in Christ.

In order to have a hearing ear for the wisdom that cometh from above, an earnest condition of heart is necessary. We must possess a measure of humility, else we will think of ourselves more highly than we ought to think, and will fail to discern our weaknesses, blemishes, unworthiness, from the Divine standpoint. We need also to have a certain amount of honesty or candour—to be willing to admit, to acknowledge, the defects seen by the humble, mind. Looking from this standpoint, those who long for righteousness and harmony with God are pointed by the Lord’s providences to Jesus as the Saviour. However imperfectly at first any may understand -the philosophy of the atonement accomplished for us, they must at least grasp the fact that they “were by nature children of wrath even as others,” that Christ’s sacrifice was a righteous one, and that God provided and accepted it on our behalf; that through His stripes we may be healed; through His obedience we may be accepted of the Father, our sins being reckoned as laid upon Him and borne by Him, and His’ righteousness and merit as applicable to us for a robe of righteousness.

We must see this—Christ must thus be made unto us wisdom—before we can act upon the knowledge, and by hearty acceptance of His merit, be justified before the Father, and accepted in consecration become sanctified, more and more armed with the mind of Christ and by and by delivered and glorified. But Christ does not cease to be our wisdom when the next step is taken and He becomes our justification. No! we still need Him as our Wisdom, our wise Counsellor. Under His guidance we need to see the wisdom of making a full consecration and the wisdom of following up that consecration in a life of sanctification, to the doing of the Father’s will. In every step that we take, wisdom is the principal thing; and all through this new life, at every step of the journey to the heavenly city we need the wisdom that cometh from above, which the Apostle describes in James 3:17.

As the wisdom or knowledge of God came to us as a result of our Lord Jesus’ sacrifice on our behalf and as justification then came through His merit when we accepted atonement and turned from sin to righteousness so also is our sanctification through Him. No man can sanctify himself in the sense of causing himself to be accepted and adopted into God’s family of the _New Creation, begotten by His spirit. As the merit of Christ was necessary to our justification, so His acceptance of us as members of His body, the Royal Priesthood, and His continued aid are indispensable to the making of our calling and election sure.

The Apostle condemns some for “not holding the Head,” and we perceive that such a recognition of Christ, as not only the Redeemer from sin, but as the Head, Representative, Guide, Instructor and Preserver of the Body (the Church). is essential to each member of it. Our Lord points out this necessity of our, continuance under His care, saying repeatedly, “Abide in me ... as the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; ‘no- more can ye, except ye abide-in-me.”

And this is the thought of the Apostle in the words, “Arm yourselves with the mind’ of Christ,” -- receiving His spirit into good and honest hearts, setting the Lord always before us, in the mind, in the heart, in the affections. It is because we see it is a reasonable service, and one so small in comparison with what the Lord has done for us that we desire to give ourselves entirely to Him.— “When thou saidst, ‘Seek ye my face,’ my heart said unto thee, ‘Thy face, Lord, will I seek.’ “ The love of Christ constrains us, calls forth in response our heart’s affections. “If a man love me,” said Jesus, “he will keep my words, and my Father will love him and we will come unto him and make our abode with Him.”

The Carpenter’s Shop.

In carpenter’s shop the tools are overheard to discuss in a critical spirit the greater or less importance of the tasks for which they are respectively fitted. Dr. Gimlet a philosopher of a penetrative mind, had been speaking in terms of depreciation of the work of Brother Plane. He continued: I know he is very active, even fussy, and to look at the shavings flying about you really would think that he was doing great things, but I notice his work is all on the surface, whereupon the Rev. Heavy Hammer reminded Dr. Gimlet that although his powers of penetration were indisputably great his influence was confined to a very narrow circle. ‘This remark provoked- a quick retort from a sharp pointed nail, who said that Mr. Hammer’s preaching was far too controversial; he is never happy unless he is having a knock at somebody. Brother Chisel was roused by this criticism of his friend, and declared that only those who Were closely associated with Brother Hammer could duly appreciate his strength and perseverance. He and I have been colleagues more than once, and to his powerful influence I ascribe whatever good I have been able to do. Then a horseshoe that happened to be lying on the workshop floor said, I should have derived little benefit from all Mr. Hammer’s vigorous preaching had it not been for the zealous labours of another of his colleagues, I refer to Brother Bellows. It was, as I listened to hint. that the fire began to glow in my heart; it seems to Me that warmth is the great essential.

As the discussion proceeded, Professor Whetstone, who was busily engaged in sharpening young axes, had been observed to pause in his work. His voice was now heard, “Do not’ be offended when, in spite of all the confident statements first made, I maintain that neither energy nor fire, nor both together, are sufficient, the tool must have a fine polish and a keen edge if it is to do efficient service.” This was too much for Brother Screw who spoke with a strong provincial accent, which betrayed his want of culture. I know that I have precious little polish and I also know that I should object to any of old Whetstone’s grinding; my motto is: Lay hold whenever you have a chance, and when once you lay hold never let go. Two close friends are heard conversing in an undertone. Their names are Rule and Square. The latter now ventured to remark that in their estimation all who had previously spoken had the capacity for doing excellent service, if only they would submit to Method and Span. Brother Rule and I have observed with regret that harm is continually being done by those people who will not work within regular lines. Why, replied Brother Hammer, the only rule that I ever had is “Hit hard,” and I’ve driven many a nail home. But he forgot that even he was guided by a Higher hand.

At this moment the carpenter’s son entered the workshop. In his presence all sounds of strife are hushed. He is making the model of a Temple; skillfully he takes hold of now, Hammer, then Plane or Gimlet or Screw, the one giving place to the other as the progress of the work required and each finding his special reward as the building grew in beauty and in strength.

Parable adapted from the German by Professor Tasker.

Alone with Christ.

Alone with Christ! Alone with Him
In sweet communion blest,
O happiness beyond compare,
In which the soul finds rest.

Alone with Christ! How sweet the thought
To listen at His feet
And hear His tender, gracious words,
His loving smite to greet.

Alone with Christ! How blest to know
In all our griefs and fears
He hears the harsh reproachful words
That cause such bitter tears.

Alone with Christ, Who knows so well
The depth of human pain
In hearts that yearn for sympathy,
Alas, so oft in vain.

Alone with Christ! Alone with Him,
In dark Gethsemane's hour
When hearts lie crushed beneath their load
He lifts them by His power.

Alone with Christ! O portion sweet,
When earthly friends forsake
To share with Him the fellowship
Of which His saints partake.

Alone with Christ! Oh joy divine!
Alone with Him each day
To breathe out from our inmost heart
What tongue can never say.

Alone with Christ! O joy complete!
O richest, fullest store,
To be with Jesus here 'tis bliss,
And life for evermore.

The Power to Overcome.

LET us consider some of the good results that may be expected after receiving the Lord's spirit, so that we may mark any good progress in our lives and in the lives of others, and thus be encouraged to seek more and more to be armed with the mind of Christ.

In proportion, as the Lord's people are filled with His holy spirit or influence, and are expanded and enlarged by it, they have less of the spirit of fear which is at the present time filling the hearts of men. 'The spirit of fear in a Christian is a spirit of doubt, and marks a lack of faith, a lack of the holy spirit. The spirit of fear is a fruitful source of evil in spiritual matters, in every feature of the Christian growth, individually, and as a Church. The child of God who is filled with the holy spirit, is a giant in comparison with his own natural self; because his fears are quelled, his heart is established, his faith is rooted and grounded, and his soul is anchored sure and steadfast within the veil. Thus he is held from being driven on to the rocks of disaster, when the 'stormy winds of trouble prevail. The holy spirit is thus a power to those who possess it which has often caused amazement to their enemies.

This spirit of God in the Christian is not only a spirit of power, but a spirit of love, says the Apostle. The love' here mentioned is not that natural love possessed to some extent by all mankind and even by the brute creation — in large measure a spirit of selfishness. In those who receive the holy spirit of love, this natural love should become intensified, broadened, deepened, and should more and more' lose its selfish characteristics, and become a generous love, a self-sacrificing love, based not upon selfishness, but upon principles of righteousness, truth, goodness, and the possession in general of the spirit, disposition of God. And this spirit of love should continue, increasing and abounding until that which is perfect is come, that which is in part having passed away.-1 Cor. 13:10.

There is no more wonderful manifestation of the holy spirit in the Lord's people than that which the Apostle denominates, "The spirit of a sound mind." The Lord's people, by nature, are not more sound of mind than are the world's people; quite the contrary. The tendency of the Gospel is to attract the more imperfect who realise their own weakness, and their need of grace and strength from on high, rather than to influence those who are of stronger and sounder minds, who, comparing themselves with others, have a self-satisfied, self-righteous spirit or mind. But wherever the Truth is received into good and honest hearts and brings forth its legitimate fruitage, the Lord's people become partakers of His holy spirit; whether naturally strong or weak they thereby obtain "the spirit of a sound mind,"—their judgments are clearer, truer, more trustworthy than before. This is because they have before their minds, first of all, the explicit directions of the Lord's Word in respect of what they should do, and what they should not do—directions which cover almost every feature and aim of life. Those who have accepted the Lord as their Instructor and Teacher, who have His spirit in their hearts are thus preserved from the snares and' difficulties which befall those who have not the guidance and direction of superhuman wisdom.

The question arises, how or wherein does the impartation of the holy spirit to the Christian serve to repair his judgment and become to him the spirit of a sound mind? The Divine mind is perfect, "sound," and consequently to whatever extent Christians are able to set aside their own minds or judgments on any or all matters, and to accept instead the Divine mind, will, judgment, for the control of their lives, to that extent they will have the spirit or disposition of a sound mind—God's mind. It is not implied by this that the brains of Christians undergo a change or a reversal of the order of nature in their operation, but that under the guidance of the holy spirit such learn gradually to rectify the errors of their own judgments in respect of all the various questions and affairs of life.

When we measure our judgments with the perfect standard, we find that we are either too fast or too slow, too weak or too strong in our mental and physical emotions. And while we are quite unable to alter our methods of thought and action so as to have them perfect and in full accord with those of our Lord Jesus—being armed perfectly with His mind—nevertheless, we are enabled to regulate our thoughts, our judgment, according to the standard which is before our minds, in a way and to a degree which those who have not this perfect standard, or who are not seeking to be regulated by it, will neither appreciate nor be able to copy. To those who thus seek to place themselves completely under the control of the Lord, and have Him come in and sup with them, receiving richly of His power there is the feeling of being well armed to withstand the tests and difficulties of the narrow way.

There is no doubt much of satisfaction in, the joy and peace received under such conditions, under the smile of the Lord's countenance, when we have realised His blessing; but probably we have felt that our joys and rejoicings in the spirit of to-day, have often faded into a measure of disappointment on the morrow, and seeking to know the reason, we have no doubt found that something has come into our minds and hearts, and, these being not as fully submitted to the Lord as previously, He has not been able to fill us with the same measure of His spirit.

Why is it that this condition comes about, so that we lose some of the spiritual blessings we might have had and which we desire to have? The natural, earthly disposition is for the mind to be drawn to material things, for which the fleshy body appeals; and although the human will is reckoned dead when we gave ourselves to the Lord, it will not be actually dead until our earthly course is finished, when that which is in part shall merge into that which will be perfect. So, to keep the mind from wandering on those things beyond what is necessary, we need to feed it with good spiritual food and have it set in the right direction.

We want to get so fenced off from the world that we will no longer desire those things, but as the Apostle says, "Set your affections on things above, not on things of the earth." This word "set" is one that indicates continual setting.

We want to keep setting; set the mind to-day and to-morrow set it early, and if it slips off early set it back again, and if it slips off set it back again. By 'and by we will find that there, is less inclination for the mind to think on the unprofitable things and we will thus be gaining the victory over the Old nature. If we could always keep in mind that we 'are following Christ all our days and all our hours, desiring to have His mind dwell in us continually, what a help it would be in the moments of temptation.

Regarding our days and hours, our consecrated time, the following is quoted from the writings of one on this subject—"In things spiritual, the greater does not always include the less, but the less more often includes the greater. So, in this case, time is entrusted to us to be traded with, for our Lord. But we cannot grasp it as a whole. We instinctively break it up ere we can deal with it for any purpose. So, when a New Year comes round we commit it with special earnestness to the Lord. But as we do so, are we not conscious of a feeling that a year is too much for us to deal with?

“And does not this feeling that we are dealing with a larger thing than we can grasp take away from the sense of reality? Thus we are brought to a more manageable measure, and as the Sunday mornings or the Monday mornings come around, we thankfully commit the opening week to Him, and the sense of help and rest is renewed and strengthened. But not even the six or seven days are close enough to our hand; even to-morrow exceeds our tiny grasp, and even to-morrow’s grace is therefore not given to us. So we find the need of considering our lives as a matter of day by day, and that any more general committal and consecration of our time does not meet the case so truly. Here we have found much comfort and help, and if results have not been entirely satisfactory, they have been more so than before we reached this point of subdivision.

“But if we have found help and blessing by going a certain distance in one direction, is it not probable we shall find more if we go further in the same? And so, if we may commit the days to our Lord, why not the hours, and why not the moments? And may we not expect a fresh and special blessing in so doing?

“Are they not the tiny joints in the harness through which the darts of temptation pierce us? Only give us time, we think, and we shall not be overcome. Only give us time, and we could pray and resist, and the devil would flee from us! But he comes all in a moment, and if it is an unguarded, unkept one, we utter the hasty or exaggerated word, or think the un-Christ-like thought, or feel the unChrist-like impatience or resentment.”

How clearly, then, in moments like these we have demonstrated to us our own weakness, and that without the keeping, guarding and guiding of the Lord in the heart and mind there can be no overcoming at all. And since the Lord has called us by His divine power, adopted us as sons into His household and given us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, it then rests with us as to whether we are making full use of the privileges and opportunities thus provided for us through Christ.

How encouraging is the exhortation of the Apostle, “Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus,” As though he would say, “the Lord is just waiting to fill us with His spirit, if we are only in the fit condition to receive. it:”—the mind or disposition displayed as He willingly made Himself of no reputation, taking the form of a servant, being found in fashion as a man, humbling Himself and becoming obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Here we see in Christ, humility in perfection; one of the most beautiful and admirable characteristics that adorned His life and death. How truly were His own words exemplified throughout His ministry—”Take my yoke upon you and learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly in heart.”

How appealing were His actions and words, when His disciples were found disputing who would be the greatest in the Kingdom, by calling a little child and thus indicating the necessity of such humility, innocence and purity in the hearts of all who would hope to enter into His Kingdom. And could there be a more suggestive lesson than that which He gave as He and His disciples gathered to partake of the last Passover supper and the institution of the Memorial of His death — the washing of their feet, the meanest duty that had been overlooked. “Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus.”

The servant is not greater than his Lord, and as we seek to do the humblest service for our Lord, in our own upbuilding or assisting each other in the Christian way, we must realise that it is “not by might nor by power,” from which any good results may be obtained, but “by My spirit, saith the Lord.”

Realising, then, the rich provision that the Lord has made available to all His faithful people, who, like their Master, have set their faces Zionwards, going forth to Him without the camp, hearing His reproach, having no continuing city here, let us with the Psalmist of old declare—“One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord and to enquire in His temple. For in the time of trouble He shall hide me in His pavilion; in the secret of His tabernacle shall He hide me; He shall set me up upon a rock. Though his host should encamp against me, my heart shall not fear; though war should rise against me, in this will I be confident. When thou snidest, ‘Seek ye my face,’ my heart said unto Thee, ‘Thy face, Lord, will I seek.’ I had fainted, unless I had believed to see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living. Wait on the Lord: be of good courage and He shall strengthen thine heart: wait, I say on the Lord.” (Psa. 27:4, 5, 3, 8, 13, 14.)

Gathered as Christian citizens

SPEAKING at the Intercessory Services for World Peace, recently held in Melbourne Town Hall, the Archbishop is reported to have said:—

“Those present had gathered as Christian citizens realising that God had attempted to redeem the world,” and that “they realised that God was love and that He advocated peace on earth and with one another.”

The inference seemed to be that God was unable to deliver mankind from all the oppression of wicked men, unable to accomplish His purpose of peace and good will on earth.

How the words of the Lord through the prophet Isaiah contrast with such a conception of Divine power. Isa. 55:

8-11,—” . . . So shall my word be that goeth out of my mouth; it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please; it shall prosper in the thing whereunto I sent it.” Isa. 43:13,—”I will work and who shall hinder it,” and again Isa. 14:24,27,—”The Lord of Hosts hath sworn saying, Surely as I have thought so shall it come to pass and as I have purposed so shall it stand ... for the Lord of Hosts has purposed and who shall disannul it and His hand is stretched out and who shall turn back.”

It is very true that God has purposed that in due time righteousness, peace and good will shall abound on earth, but it would be quite untrue to say that He has attempted to establish such conditions among men. God does not “attempt” and fail as man so generally does; what God desires He simply does and none can hinder. The difficulty which presents itself in the present permission of evil arises from the lack of understanding of the Bible and the great Divine Plan of the Ages. (Eph. 3:9-11, Diaglott.)

The usual thought, that God has been trying to convert the world all down the ages, is quite unscriptural. Each age in the past has had its purpose which has been accomplished and step by step the Divine Plan progresses. In the meantime mankind generally is having experience of the consequences of disobedience to Divine arrangements, of learning how utterly hopeless is the prospect of even the best efforts of men ever being able to bring in the Golden Age and that there can be no happy lasting condition of peace and good will, health and life on earth until God shall establish His Kingdom and put judgment to the line and righteousness to the plummet. That is why we are taught to pray, “Thy Kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven.” “Give the King (Christ) Thy judgment O God, and Thy righteousness unto the King’s son. He shall judge Thy people with righteousness and Thy poor with judgment. The mountains shall bring peace to the people and the little hills by righteousness. He shall judge the poor of the people and shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor . . . In His days shall the righteous flourish; and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth etc.” (Psalm 72.)

The present distressing conditions so evident throughout the world, causing men to fear as to “what is coming on the earth” (Luke 21:26), are such as have been so abundantly prophesied concerning our day and will result in a general breaking down of the unrighteous elements of society and nations, thus preparing for Messiah’s reign—the new age so soon to dawn. “The morning promised long when truth and right and holy might shall overthrow the wrong.”

My Jewels

“Shall I hold them back—my jewels
Time has travelled many a day
Since I laid them by forever,
Safely locking them away;
And I thought them yielded wholly,
When I dared no longer wear
Gems contrasting, oh, so sadly!
With the adorning I would bear.

“Shall I keep them still—my jewels?
Shall I, can I, yet withhold
From that living, loving Saviour,
Aught of silver or of gold?
Gold so needed that His gospel
May resound from sea to sea;
Can I know Christ’s service lacketh
Yet forget His ‘Unto Me.’!

“No; I lay them down—my jewels,
Truly on the altar now.
Stay I see a vision passing
Of a gem-encircled brow
Heavenly treasure won by Jesus,
Souls won through
Thy gift outpoured;
Freely, gladly, I will offer
Jewels thus to crown my Lord!”—Selected.

Christmas Convention.

The brethren of the Melbourne Class extend a hearty invitation to all friends able to attend with them at the forthcoming Annual Convention, to be held over the Christmas season in Melbourne. It is expected to be a very profitable time with Bible Studies, Addresses and Fellowship before the Lord.

The gatherings will be held (D. V.) in the usual meeting room in Clyde House, 182 Collins Street, Melbourne, and it would assist with the program if all visitors expecting to attend would kindly so advise as soon as possible.

Further particulars will appear in next issue. A Baptism Service will be held should any friends desire to symbolise their consecration to the Lord.

The Tabernacle.

The Consecration of the Priesthood.

IN the previous article we considered the construction of the Tabernacle and some of the matters connected with Christian experiences, conditions and hopes so beautifully foreshadowed in symbol and type. How strengthening to faith in the inspiration of God's Word it is, to see these things foretold so definitely some fifteen centuries prior to the beginning of their fulfilment. There can be no reasonable solution of this fact other than that a supernatural mind was directing the writers, as Peter expresses it,—”Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the holy spirit.” We can understand too the Divine injunction to Moses referred to by Paul (Heb. 8:5,) “See thou make all things according to the pattern shown to thee in the mount.”

When all the structure and furnishings of the Tabernacle were complete as recorded in the last chapters of Exodus, the priest and underpriests had to be consecrated before the service for the people could be inaugurated.

In the first seven chapters of Leviticus we find general instructions respecting the ceremonies, the offerings etc., and in the eighth chapter comes the consecration of Aaron and his sons. As this foreshadowed the consecration of Jesus, “the High Priest of our profession,” and those whom, “He is not ashamed to call His brethren,” as underpriests —”Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood” (1 Pet. 2:9,)—the verses 14-36 of this chapter of Leviticus are of very special interest to us.

We will remember how the firstborns of Israel were saved on that dark night in Egypt when the Passover was kept prior to the deliverance of all Israel on the following day. These firstborns—the first fruits of the deliverance—were taken to be particularly the Lord's but later the Tribe of Levi was accepted by the Lord as instead of the firstborns in all the land. The Levites then were not given any portion in the land but were the Lord's people to serve in regard to the Tabernacle. They could serve in the Court and so represented those justified by faith in the cross of Christ. Aaron's house was chosen for the priesthood, out of the house of Levi, and just so the “Royal Priesthood,” members in the Body of Christ, are chosen from believers during this Gospel Age.

In this consecration ceremony of Aaron and his sons, typifying Jesus the High Priest and the members in Christ as the underpriests, we have a beautiful picture of how intimately the Lord has associated the Church with Christ. The bullock for the sin-offering was first brought and Aaron and his sons put their hands on it, thus indicating that the bullock represented themselves—their humanity—the perfect humanity of Jesus and the reckoned perfect humanity (justified) of the members in Christ, the Church. It was then slain, showing that if we are to be of the Royal Priesthood, made like our great High Priest, the human nature must be yielded up as a sin-offering. The Apostle exhorts, “I beseech you brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God.”

The blood (the life) of the bullock was put about the horns of the altar by the finger of Moses, and then poured at the foot of the altar in the Court, “to make reconciliation upon it.” The vitals and the fat were burned upon the altar as a sweet savour unto the Lord and the carcass. etc., was taken outside the Camp and burned. This all so clearly indicates how in the Divine purpose and working out of the great plan of redemption, the Lord has been pleased to associate the Church with Christ in the sin-offering. “If we suffer with Him we shall reign with Him” “If we be dead with Him, we shall also live with Him.” “Know ye not that as many as are baptised into Christ are baptised into His death.”

As the animal represents the humanity of the priests, so the priests entering under the first veil represent the new creatures in Christ. The animal must be slain. It is when this sacrifice of earthly good things, earthly hopes, prospects, desires and aims are surrendered in entire consecration to the will of God—"To tread and bruise beneath the feet • the world entire; its prides, ambitions, hopes desires, and having thus behind him thrown. what seemed so good and fair, must lowly kneeling this prayer pray, Thy will be done howe'er it cross my own"—that the holy spirit is given and the new creatures have their beginning and we are, as it were, in the Holy of the Tabernacle.

The fact that the vital parts of the bullock along with the fat were burned upon the altar "a sweet savour unto the Lord" indicates how as new creatures with much "fat" (love for the Lord), our best abilities, energies, will be used in joyful service. "He that raised up Christ from the dead shall quicken your mortal bodies by His spirit that dwelleth in you." Rom. 8:11.. The more "fat," the more flame, the more joyfulness in the sacrificial service while seeking to learn the necessary lessons in the school of Christ, in the study and application of the truth and by experiences and afflictions.

The Ram of Burnt Offering was then brought and again Aaron and his sons put their hands upon it, indicating that it represented Christ the Head and the Church, His Body. The ram was then cut into pieces, the head being placed first on the altar and then piece by piece (member by member of the Body) was laid to it and burned on the altar, showing the Divine acceptance of their sacrifice. So, in the fulfilment, Jesus, the Head was first laid on the altar, and the Church, member by member, has been following His steps. (1 Pet. 2:21.) "Planted in the likeness of His death,"—"suffering with Him." "Filling up that which is left over of the afflictions of Christ for His Body's sake," (to complete the Body). (Col. 1:24.) "As it is written, for thy sake we are killed all the day long (the Gospel Age), we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter." (Rom. 8:36.)

Then the Ram of Consecration was. brought and again Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon it, representing also both Christ, the Head, and the Church, His Body. It was -slain, thus indicating that the consecration of the Church is unto death, the human body and its abilities to be spent unto the Lord. The blood was put upon the right ear, the right thumb and the right toe of priest and underpriests. This seemed like vowing unto the lord, and signing the contract with one's own blood; that as new creatures in Christ we would be quick and diligent to hearken to and obey the Lord's Word, to learn of His Will, by the hearing of faith. "O speak and I will hear, command and I obey." Doing all things as unto the Lord,—to the glory of God. To do as nearly as we can like our Master who could say, "I do always those things that please Him." "Walking in the light as children of the light ;" "walking in newness of life, not as other Gentiles walk." "Walk by faith"; "walk in Him" (Christ).

If we are walking in the Tabernacle as priests in the Holy, in the light of the golden candlestick, feeding upon the shewbread, and sending up joyful praises and prayers upon the golden altar of incense, until the narrow way is run, we may pass under the second veil and join the great "High priest" of our profession."

For every joy of faith,
And every high design
For all of good my soul can know
The glory, Lord, be Thine.
O! speak, and I will hear;
Command and I obey;
My willing feet with joy shall haste
To run Thy righteous way."

The Wave Offering.

The wave offering placed on the hands of Aaron and his sons seems to mean that our consecration is unto the Lord for ever. We present ourselves a living sacrifice to spend all our lives now and always unto the Lord. This is also shown in that Aaron and his sons had to remain in the Tabernacle for seven days. The same thing is indicated in the Passover Feast after the lamb was slain. No leaven, which always typifies sin, corruption, confusion, adulteration, or impurity, was to be eaten nor found in their houses for seven days. It was the feast of unleavened bread and means that when we have been redeemed by the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world, our endeavour must be to live lives of holiness unto the Lord all our days—for ever.

The fat, rump and vitals of the Ram of Consecration were placed on the hands of Aaron and his sons together with three cakes:— (1) An unleavened cake which would seem to represent the actual purity of Jesus and the imputed purity of the members in Christ as men, as attested by the Law of Moses—justification. “The righteousness of the Law is fulfilled in us who walk not after the flesh but after the spirit.” (Rom. 8:4.) (2) An unleavened cake mingled with oil, which refers to the sanctification of the spirit. “If the spirit of Him that raiseth up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by His spirit that dwelleth in you.” (Rom. 8:11.) (3) The wafer (usually made with honey) would indicate our hope and faith in the exceeding great and precious promises.

The whole wave offering was then waved before the Lord; it was not laid down by Aaron nor his sons, but Moses took it and placing it for the Lord’s acceptance upon the altar it was burned by fire. “They were consecrations for a sweet savour; an offering- made by fire unto the Lord.” (Lev. 8:28.) Then Aaron and his sons were sprinkled with the blood and oil showing the contract complete; consecrations accepted, they were now constituted priests of God.

Thus is shown that our consecration to the Lord means the using of all our strength and best powers in His service, even unto death. It is only during this Gospel Age that the antitypical priesthood is being chosen. Jesus the great High Priest was anointed at Jordan and the underpriests have been in course of selection since Pentecost. No one prior to this, had the wonderful opportunity of so running as to gain this prize of the “high calling of God” and once the full number is complete, the Gospel Age will close—this door will be shut and no others can enter.

It is good to know, however, that this priesthood is being chosen so as to bring a blessing on all the remainder of mankind in the ‘Kingdom Age, which will soon open up. During this Age it has been a “narrow way” of salvation; few have found it, for it has meant trials and difficulties, going against the stream and a sacrificing of natural privileges and blessings. But in the coming Age another door will open, an easier way—a highway—on which the wayfaring man though simple need not err. The truth of God’s great plan revealed’ in His Word will be made so plain—there will be no stumbling through ignorance. Righteousness and goodness will be rewarded by health, joy and life, and wickedness will receive corrective punishments, but the incorrigible, wilful sinner will go into second death. “All the wicked will God destroy.” The willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land; and “Nothing shall hurt nor destroy in all My holy mountain (Kingdom).” (Isa. 11:9; 65:25.) “When thy judgments are abroad in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness.” (Isa. 26:9.)

The Harvest Time.

WHEN the Lord tells us that the “harvest” is the end of the world, He does not mean the destruction of the earth. Many Scriptures clearly show that the physical earth will never come to an end, and that, when rightly understood, our Lord was referring to the close of this age, resulting in a change of dispensation.—Eccl. 1:4; Matt. 24:3.

Nor is the thought of a “harvest” associated only with the Gospel Age: the end of the Jewish Age is also described by our Lord as a harvest time, while He Himself, with His disciples, were the active reapers in that harvest.—John 4:35-38. We have reason to believe too that the close of the next age --the Millennium--will be marked by an experience which will correspond in many respects with that of a “harvest.”—Rev. 20:7-10.

The fact, then, that our Lord has chosen the familiar figure of the natural harvest to illustrate the experiences and activities of His people in the close of this age and that none of God’s people can escape these experiences are ample reasons why we should give earnest heed to the consideration of this important subject.

Time of Harvest.

In considering this feature we must not only seek to harmonise all scriptural references bearing on the point, but also to have in mind the various aspects of the figure itself. The Lord undoubtedly intended us to look for their correspondencies in the harvest of this age. It has been suggested that the entire Gospel Age has been a harvest time, and that all the saints of God who lived and died since our Lord’s day have been active reapers in the Lord’s harvest. Now, while it is true that there have been faithful saints all down the age, doing the master’s will to the extent of their knowledge and ability yet nothing could be farther from His thought than that this was a harvest work. Besides, such a suggestion is quite out of harmony with the thought which our Lord intended us to gather from the figure of the natural harvest. Our Lord did not say that the harvest occupied the entire age, nor that the harvest was the beginning of the age, but He did most clearly state that the harvest was the end of the age. (Matt. 13:29.) Everyone knows, too, that in the natural order of things the harvest always comes at the end of the season.

As further emphasising the above thought our Lord points out that the beginning of this age was a sowing time, when He Himself and His followers scattered the good seed of the kingdom. (Matt. 13:37.) Again, He said: “Let both (wheat and tares) grow together till the harvest time”; clearly indicating that the work and activities of the harvest would be quite distinct from any previous part of the age. (Matt. 13:30.)

The time of harvest, then, we suggest, is a definite period at the end of this age during which all the saints (living and dead) will be gathered and receive their rewards in the kingdom. (Psa. 50:5.)

Work of Harvest.

The chief thought in harvesting is that of gathering in or bringing home to safety the fruitage of the age. From this it will be noted that the work of harvesting is altogether different from that of sowing. This thought is indicated in the parable of the wheat and tares. There was a time of sowing and developing during which both wheat and tares must be left to grow together, but when the harvest time arrives, a complete separation and clearing of the field would be accomplished. (Matt. 13:30-42.)

The parable of the “net” also illustrates the same thought. The net representing the message contained in the Gospel was cast into the sea (amongst humanity), gathering fish of every kind. When at the end of the age—harvest—the net is full, it is drawn to shore and the work of separating the good fish from the bad begins. Our Lord explains that this illustrates the harvest work in its relation to the previous work of the age. (Matt. 13:47-49.)

Harvesting in the natural order of things is a result of the direct intervention of the Husbandman. Were it not that he actively intervenes at the appropriate moment in order to secure the result of his season's efforts, all his labours would be lost; the winter's storms quickly follow, and very soon all the unreaped and exposed wheat would be lost.

Similarly, the harvest of this age is a result of the direct intervention of Jehovah at the appropriate time in the Divine plan. Our Lord as the Father's representative during His Parousia is the one who directs the work and sends forth His messengers to reap and gather the elect. (Matt. 13:30, Matt. 24:31; Rev. 14:14; Psa. 50:5.)

Reaping is only one aspect of harvesting. After reaping, the wheat requires much attention in order to be properly winnowed and made ready for the barn. It is so also in respect of the harvest of this age; not only is it necessary for the harvesters to cast in the sickle of truth in order to liberate the wheat class from bondage and error, etc., but after being thus liberated, further severe testings are necessary in order to prove their loyalty to the Lord and the principles of righteousness. The harvest work will thus continue so long as there are, any of the wheat class still this side the veil.

The Sickle.

Harvesting is impossible without a sickle. The sickle in this harvest is the truth—truth along certain lines. The sickle is not the general truths of salvation as proclaimed all down the age, but a dispensational truth.

This truth concerns the Lord's presence, the end of the age, and the immediate deliverance of the saints." (Rev. 11:15.) It is this message which separates the wheat from the tares—the mere professors from those who are earnestly looking for the kingdom of God.

Our Lord illustrates the effect of this sickle in Luke 17:34-37. "Two shall be in the field; the one shall be taken near (literal Greek), and the other left." And they answered, where Lord? "Where the body (food) is, thither will the eagles be gathered together."

"Though coming out of Babylon is one step and a, long one in the direction of complete overcoming, it is by no means the last one; and we should be careful to guard against a disposition to rest after every advance step of the way." (Vol. 3., 188, S.S.) "The true teacher's place and the true Bible student's place is outside of all human bondage, free to examine and feed upon all portions of the good word of God, and untrammelled to follow the Lamb whithersoever he leads." (Vol. 3., 145, S.S.)

Many view-points of the harvest message or "present truth" are given us in the Scriptures, as, for instance, Rev. 14:14; Rev. 10:1-10; Rev. 7:23; Rev. 11:1.5. -

Sowing or Harvesting.

It will be seen from the foregoing that the will of God for His people in this day is to co-operate with the Chief Reaper in gathering His saints—"I will say to the reapers . . . gather the wheat into My barn." (Matt. 13:30; Psa. 50:5.) The "barn" of safety into which our Lord is gathering them is not any sect or party or under any human leader; but first of all into full liberty and fellowship with the Lord through the truth, and, having thus the opportunity of putting on the "whole Armour of God," they will be fitted eventually to be gathered unto the Lord Himself beyond. the veil. 2 Thess. 2:1.

In view of this, then, a very important question suggests itself to every professing child of God; are we using the sickle of “present truth,” or are we ignoring the voice of the Chief Reaper when he says to us through His word “the net is drawn to shore”; the time for separation has begun. Matt. 13:48. If our consecration is wholly to the Lord, then we will delight to do the will of God and find inestimable joy in so doing, and we will let no other consideration hinder us from following the Lamb whithersoever He goeth. Rev. 14:4.

The harvest work is clearly on behalf of the wheat class—the Christian Church; but when the sickle of present truth is applied it makes manifest that the bulk of the professing Church of Christ are tares. The true wheat class rejoice in the knowledge of the Bridegroom’s presence, and prepare themselves for the marriage, now’ so -near at hand; but the same message has a .different effect upon the tare element; their indifference or opposition to it binds them closer in their sectarian bundles preparatory to being consumed by the great fire of trouble just at hand. Matt. 13:42

The Time of the End. Christ's Kingdom. The Days of the Son of Man.

THE following thoughts were called forth in response to a paper received from London "While agreeing that it is absurd to claim, as some do, that Christ's Kingdom was set up and the millennial reign begun over 60 years ago, we must dissent from some of the conclusions which the writer of the paper expresses.

"Because of the expectations based upon some supposed time features, which were not supported by Scriptures, not eventuating, we must not go to an extreme and throw aside Scriptural Time prophecies, which have undoubtedly had fulfilment in this Time of the end,' nor the very evident facts of our Lord's 'parousia,' of the Harvest period and of the end of the Age.

"Regarding what Bro. Russell said about if 1915 passed and the world's affairs continued serenely to go on that it would prove the Chronology wrong and work irreparable wreck to the Parallel Dispensations, Israel's Double and the Jubilee calculations and "the Gentile Times" ' ; this has been unreasonably made an excuse for throwing aside all his works and teachings and starting other publications and going into various theories. The fact is that, aside from the Parallelisms, Jubilee Calculations and Chronology, his writings are just as beautiful and helpful as ever to Bible study and the development of Christian character. It is still true, we believe, that no other works in the world have thrown so much light upon the Bible and led to an intelligent understanding of the Divine purpose respecting our poor sin-cursed race.

"There were always man worshippers and those who looked upon Bro. Russell as infallible and inspired like the prophets of old, and so when some of our expectations did not come about, they either jumped to other extremes or settled their faith on some other leader, and some seem to fall back to views of writers 150-200 years ago when the light was dim, and some lost faith entirely and fell back into the world, fulfilling the parable of the drag net in respect of the fish not desired being thrown back into the sea.

"The facts are that the world's affairs did not go serenely on after 1915. Bro. Russell lived to see some expectations fulfilled, but not all. His expectations as to all that should happen at the completion of the Gentile Times (to happen immediately) were based on human reasoning rather than any clear Scriptures. They appeared reasonable in anticipation in conjunction with the supposed parallelisms, etc.

"The 'Gentile Times' is a period not of any divine favour or covenant with the nations; it was simply the period of time during which God punished Israel, by not protecting them from the 'beastly' powers of Daniel's prophecy. There is nothing to say that immediately that time was fulfilled Christ's Kingdom would be in control of the world's concerns. There is no statement in the Bible to say that all the Church would be glorified by that time, nor that the image of Gentile powers would be smitten by the stone and scattered to the four winds right away. All this seemed possible as we looked forward (nearly fifty years ago), but it was not a correct view. We are learning more and more that our thoughts are not always God's thoughts, His ways are so much higher and greater than ours, and Peter (2 Pet. 3) seems to warn us against having too limited views, particularly in connection with dispensational truths and the ending of this Age. Our Lord said: 'Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the "Time of the Gentiles be fulfilled."' Jerusalem is now no longer trodden, but is being built up and protected by the nations and the land of Palestine is again flourishing under Israel. The fig tree is blossoming again. So the world did not go on serenely and all the expectations did not fail. In fact, all the time features of prophecy concerning the 'time of the end' of this Age have been fulfilled. The 1260 days ending in 1798-9, when the persecuting power of Rome was broken. The 1290 days ending 1828-9, when the Millerite movement announced the coming of Christ. The 2300 days ending 1846 with the cleansing of the sanctuary class, and the 1335 days brought us the promised blessing of the feast prepared by our present Lord, 1874. (Luke 12:36, 37; Rev. 3:20.) These time features are not dependent upon any system of Bible Chronology. The 'Gentile Times' would seem to be the only time feature requiring secular ancient history and its fulfilment confirms Ptolemy's Canon.

"As far as Chronology is concerned, we do not believe that we have yet reached the 6000 years since the creation of man. We think the period of the Kings is uncertain and accept 1 Kings 6:1 as correct along with Tischendorf's note from Sinaitic MSS. re Acts 13:20.

"We believe that Christ's reign will begin when the Seventh thousand year period begins and that the Church must be all glorified and begin the reign with Him and that Satan will be bound during the same time. We do not know when the 6000 years will be reached, but are assured that it will be in the lifetime of this generation, for all the signs of the presence of the Son of Man and of the end of the Age, which Christ gave to His disciples, are before us to-day, and He said, "This generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled." Matt. 24, etc.

"There can be no doubt but that Daniel's prophecy about the 'Time of the end' refers to quite a lengthy period of time and that the 'running to and fro' and the increase of knowledge had its beginning at the commencement of last century. Our Lord also clearly indicates a certain time of Harvest—'The Harvest is at the end of the Age.' He also spoke of the work of Harvest of the Jewish Age; in His own day. Then it was wheat being separated from chaff, the Harvest was followed by the burning up of the chaff; now it is separating the wheat from the bundles of tares and the tares are to be burned. He surely spoke of being present again to conduct this Harvest work, for He said that the Lord of the Harvest will first say to the reapers, 'Bind the tares in bundles,' etc. This work has been proceeding all our lives. Indeed, it had its commencement with the Millerite movement, since when there has always been a separated class. Bro. Russell, in Volume III, recognises that a separation work began in Miller's day. The trouble has been that we expected everything to culminate too quickly. it would seem to have been his thoughts about the Parallelisms and Jubilee calculations that misled Bro. Russell to conclude that the Harvest would be a period of forty years, and that the times of restitution and the setting up of the Kingdom would date from 1878. The Parallelisms are not intimated in the Bible nor the Jubilee cycle, and there is no mention of any seventy jubilees at all. It seems strange how we took the land Sabbath of 2 Chron. 34:21 to mean jubilees. These seventy Sabbaths are the same period as Daniel's seventy weeks, and had fulfilment in our Lord's day and three and a half years later.

"Instead of comparing, the ending of the present evil world with that of the Jewish Age, both our Lord and Peter refer to the ending of 'the world that was before the flood' and to Noah's day as being comparable to the second presence of the Son of Man. When we consider the matter, does it not seem to be reasonable that there should be as long a period of probation or warning or preparation or of separating of the godly from the wicked at the end of this present evil world, before its final destruction, as there was in the days of Noah prior to the flood? When the Lord announced the end of that Age to Noah, he said that it would not be for 120 years—'yet man's days shall be 120 years.' That Age was of comparative short duration and of meagre population compared with the present. It would seem that 'the days of the Son of Man,' the presence of Christ prior to the great time of trouble, searching out and dealing with His people and preparing for the establishment of His Kingdom, may correspond as in other respects to the time of probation. Also that the saints will be gathered home to be with Christ to commence the reign of blessing, just as Noah and his family entered the ark some days before the deluge came down.

"The question arises as to when 'the days of the Son of Man' began and there is the following suggestion:-

"In Daniel 12 we read of a period of 1290 days, but as the verses stand there is no mention as to what was to happen at the end of that time. When, however, the verses are placed in their proper sequence, it is seen that 'at that time Michael shall stand up.' Our Lord is represented as seated at the right hand of God, until the time comes to put down His enemies. This standing up seems to indicate a return and commencing a work of preparation for His Kingdom.

That may then be the time when the parousia' had its beginning. One hundred and twenty years is not a long time in God's sight with whom 'one thousand years are but as yesterday.' Nor is it long even from a human viewpoint as the 'Day of Preparation,' including the resurrection of the Church, first those who have fallen asleep in Christ and then those who remain alive are to be 'changed in a moment at death'—'caught away' to be together with the Lord at the same time, 'the time of the end,' the Harvest time. After the Lord's discourse in Matt. 24, respecting 'the signs of His presence and the end of the Age,' He gave three parables as illustrating the procedure at that time. The Ten Virgins indicated the condition of the Church at His coming and the separation work to follow. Some who had sufficient light to be awakened in expectation, failed through lack of oil in their vessels (hearts). It also emphasised what He had said in His discourse—the necessity of watching, for some say, 'The Lord delayeth His coming.' 2 Pet. 3:4 also indicates a class who would say, 'Where is the promise of His presence.' This parable has been in course of fulfilment since the Millerite movement, as also the next parable of the Talents. The sleeping saints were to be raised and receive rewards; according to the use of their talents they would be given responsibilities in the coming Kingdom. No doubt they are being instructed respecting their relative positions, etc., while at the same time those alive and remaining are being dealt with in the same way as they are 'caught away to be with the Lord in the air.' There is also another parable that speaks of the inspection of the guests by the King, and some may be found who have taken off the 'Wedding Garment.' These go out of the light of truth and it seems evident that this parable is also in operation. Then when the 'Harvest is ended and the summer is past,' when the Church is complete and with her Lord, the winter time of trouble will prepare poor humanity for the Age of blessing and the Parable of the Sheep and Goats will proceed and take 1000 years to accomplish.

"Though we have seen matters in this way for many years, it all seems to grow clearer as the days go by. They seem to be working out that way. There has been no attempt to force these views nor any thought that all must see alike on such outworkings of prophecy; at the same time one could not feel the free happy fellowship with those who once rejoiced in the 'parousia' truths and now deny them—the fellowship was broken between the wise and the foolish virgins, and it appears just like that.

"The blessedness at the end of the 1335 days (1874-5) was the feast of present truth then provided by our Lord who had then been present quite a time, engaged regarding the cleansing of the 'sanctuary, etc., but by this time He had girded Himself and prepared the promised blessing of truth, that gladdened all our hearts.

“It is clearly evident that a Harvest work has been proceeding—the sound of the trumpet called us from the four winds of Heaven (Matt. 24:31) from all sects and the bundles of tares have become more and more bound up in errors. Harvest ‘siftings have been frequent, many have fallen out, lost the light of present Truth. Some, like the Fish, returned to the Sea, some like the one talented man gone into outer darkness, some like the foolish virgins who failed to enter the Marriage Chamber, and some like the man that took off the wedding garment .denying the necessity and efficacy of the Cross, the Ransom for all, by adopting theories such as Universal Reconciliation, etc. The false prophets are many (Matt. 24:23,25). The testings such as might, if it were possible, deceive the elect, must be along the lines of teachings, and what we see about us confirms our faith that we are living ‘in the days of the Son of Man,’ (His parousia) and that ere long all the saints will have been glorified and the Kingdom will be inaugurated for which we have so long prayed and still do, ‘Thy Kingdom Come, Thy will’ be done on earth as in heaven.’

“It may just be added that the correct order of the verses in Daniel’s 12th chapter is to begin with what in our Bibles is verse 5 read on to verse 11, then read verse 1, then verse 12, then 4, 3, and 2, then verse 13. There are many instances of verses, also of chapters not being in proper sequence in the Scriptures. For instance Matt. 24:28 ought to come after verse 41, as can be seen by comparing Luke 17:34 to 37. Daniel’s prophecy had to be sealed unto the time of the end and may be this mixture of the verses was for that purpose.

“The message to the church of Philadelphia was Hold fast that which thou hast that no man take thy crown.’ The intimation appears to be that a time was approaching when the particular danger would be to let slip the things that had been received, which had stirred so much joy and zeal in the service of Christ. The prevailing spirit and temptation of the day would be lukewarmness—a compromising of truth and principle—doctrine as well as practice. This spirit is quite evident to-day among those who did rejoice in present truth and must be overcome by those who are to be granted the wonderful reward. Rev. 3:14-21.”

At the Feet of Christ.

One of the most helpful records given in the Scripture in connection with the birth of our Lord is that concerning the wise men of the East, who came seeking the new-born Jesus, the King of the Jews, with presents of myrrh, frankincense and gold, and we should be able to gather from this incident some valuable suggestions respecting our obligations to the great Messiah, and the propriety of renewing these and increasing them now as we approach the opening of another year.

The wise men—according to tradition, three in number—arrived in Jerusalem and began making inquiries respecting the newly-born Jewish King. The news soon spread, and the holy city was in commotion because, according to the prophets, Messiah, promised for centuries, was due to appear about that time;; and we read again,

“All men were in expectation of Him.” This expectancy naturally would be heightened by the coming of the wise men or magi from a far country—supposedly Persia—to show homage to Messiah. Furthermore, there were Jews scattered abroad throughout that country who still more or less kept alive the thought of Israel’s hope for the great Messiah so long promised of God, prophesied of as the bringer of blessings not only to Israel but through them to all the families of the earth.

God chose as messengers of His good tidings not only wise men but reverential men, men of faith; and His choice of these messengers from the east to arouse the people of Judea and Jerusalem and to be heralds of the great King was not an exception to the rule. Although heathen men, in the sense of not being of the nation with which God had thus far dealt and to whom He had thus far confined His gracious promises, they were, nevertheless, good men, reverential men, who delighted to know of the coming blessing of peace on earth and good will amongst men through whatever channel or nationality the Lord should be pleased to find His representative and messenger.

In one respect many of Christendom could learn numerous important lessons from these wise Gentiles. No false patriotism stood in their way to hinder their appreciation of any manifestation of divine favour to the children of men. And when they found the Saviour they were nothing daunted by the fact that His home surroundings were of the humbler sort. They worshipped Him in three senses of the word:—(1) They fell before Him, prostrated themselves, thus physically expressing their reverence. (2) They worshipped Him in their hearts and with the tongue gave expression to their rejoicing and confidence. (3) They opened their treasure-box and presented to Him three gifts appropriate to royalty: the myrrh representing submission, frankincense representing praise, gold representing obedience.

The reverent spirit of these noble heathen men who had so little light, so little knowledge respecting the great Messiah and His work, will bring to our cheeks the blush of shame as we reflect that, favoured with still brighter light to guide us to the Lamb of God, having seen His star in a still better and truer sense, having been guided to Him by the prophecies, having found Him not only a babe, but one that in prospect would bear our sorrows and carry our griefs and make His soul an offering for sin, that we by His stripes might be healed, what manner of oblation should we pour at the feet of Him who loved us and bought us with His precious blood? With what deep reverence have we bowed the knee, prostrated ourselves, given outward evidence through our bodies of full submission to our great King, of whom we not only know but of whose gracious provisions for us and for the world of mankind we have heard, not uncertainly, but with the voice of Him who speaketh from heaven? Have we offered our myrrh? Have we shown a willingness for service even to the extent of bitterness, a joy to honour the King to the extent of suffering with Him? Have we worshipped Him in heart, not with an outward form of godliness without the power—in other words, have we offered Him the frankincense of heart, adoration, appreciation and gratitude?

Have we laid at His feet our earthly substance —our gold ? Have we realised that all that we have and all that we are are offerings far too small to be worthy of acceptance by the great King Emmanuel? Is this our present attitude? And will it be our attitude through coming days even until the end of the present pilgrimage ?

The Apostle's words, "Present your bodies living sacrifices, holy and acceptable unto God, your reasonable service," apply not only to the primary consecration of our hearts to the Lord, but are, as the Scriptures express it, a covenant of sacrifice, an agreement to die daily to self and to be alive daily more and more in the Lord's service to glorify Him in our bodies and spirits which are His. If this has not been our attitude in the past, shall it not be our future course? Shall we not in any event continue to grow in knowledge, to grow in love, in service, in worship and in the privilege of having our little all at the feet of Him who is our gracious heavenly King, whose kingdom is so soon to be established, and who has invited us to sit with Him in His throne, to share His glory, to be participants as spiritual Israel in the great work of pouring out blessings upon the world of mankind, every kindred, people, nation and tongue?

When we give our hearts it includes all that we have and are in the highest and noblest and fullest sense—that which was illustrated by the three gifts of the wise men is all represented in the brief statement, "My son, give me thine heart." Whoever gives his heart to the Lord fully and unreservedly, gives his body, gives his worship and reverence and praise, and gives his earthly treasure, time, talents, influence, money—all—to be used in joyful service for the glory of the King.

To those who have never taken this step a prompt acceptance is urged upon them, irrespective of the gracious hope we have of a transcendent reward of glory, honour and immortality. As the Apostle declares, it is our reasonable service. Reasonable people ought to be glad of the knowledge that God is willing to accept our service, and of the opportunity to present themselves under the covering of the merit of the dear Redeemer's robe of righteousness.

To those who have already accepted the Lord's favour, who have already presented their bodies living sacrifices, who have already given the Lord their hearts, we urge a remembrance of the fact that the sacrifice once put upon the altar must remain there, and that the longer it remains the more joyful should be the service, the more appreciated every opportunity for sacrifice, the more thankful should be the heart and the more rich should be the experience in the peace of God which passeth all understanding, ruling in our hearts and preparing us more and more through the graces of the Spirit for the glorious things which God hath in reservation for them that so love Him and so reverence His Son. "What shall I render unto Thee What praise sufficient could there be For all Thy benefits toward me,

O Thou Most Holy?

“I’ll drink Salvation’s cup to-day
Which Thou hast poured.
Be Thou my stay!
Assist me as Thy saint to pay
My vows to Thee.

“Remembering Thy Heavenly call,
I’ll strive to be sincere to all.
O pray for grace lest I, should fall
From Thine own way.

“In thought, in word, in all my ways
Thy holy standard I would raise,
Nor please nor honor self, but praise
My Worthy King.

“Today in matters small or great,
I’ll serve with faithfulness and wait
For further joys. Oh, blessed state,
Thus serving Thee!

“I’ll strive to ‘choose things that excel ‘
All anxious cares I’ll seek to quell,
And all discouragements repel,
And be content.

“I’ll neither murmur nor repine!
I’ll trust my heart to care Divine
To make of it a sacred shrine
Where Thou canst dwell.”

The Miracle Book.

The following article on The Bible has been received from one of our brethren. The writer is unknown to us, but many of the thoughts will no doubt be appreciated by our readers.

I WANT to speak to you to-night on the Bible—a miracle of diversity in unity. The Bible is its own greatest evidence to its Divine origin and authority and we cannot consider these two great facts without being tremendously impressed with the fact of the diversity of Holy Scripture and the fact of its unity.

Thinking of the diversity of the Bible I would remind you that there is diversity of language. The Old Testament was written in Hebrew, and portion of it in Chaldean. The New Testament was written in Greek. There is a diversity of authorship. These Scriptures were not written by any one man, neither by a company of men collaborating with one another. Men with greatly diversified mental calibre and training and occupation were employed in writing the Bible. Moses was a shepherd, Joshua was a soldier, Samuel was a seer, David was a King, Solomon was a philosopher, Amos a herdsman, Daniel a statesman, Ezra a scribe, Matthew was a tax gatherer, Luke a doctor, John a fisherman, Paul was a scholar. Men of such diverse temperaments and training were employed in the writing of these sacred Books. But there is a further diversity of place in which these Scriptures were produced. They have come to us from the desert of Sinai, from the wilderness of Judea, from the banks of Chebar, from the city of Zion, from the public prison of Rome, from the Isle of Patmos. There is no literary phenomenon in the world to be compared with it; not only so, but there is diversity of form. In Genesis there are stories, in Leviticus there is ritual, in Deuteronomy there is oratory, in Ruth there is romance, in Samuel and Kings there is national history, in Job there is drama, the Psalms are sacred hymns, in Proverbs we have ethics, in Ecclesiastics we have philosophy, in the Canticles we have a love song, in Joel and Habakkuk we have rhapsody, in Isaiah and Jeremiah we have prophecy, in the Gospels we have biography, in Acts we have church history, in the Epistles we have doctrines, in Revelation we have the Apocalypse. These and other literature have place in this great spiritual classic. But not only here have we diversity of language, of authorship, of place, of forms, and of writing, but also of subject matter. Is there any other book in the world to be, compared with it from this standpoint? In the Bible we read of God, men, of angels and demons, of Jews and Gentiles, of Christians and pagans, of saints and sinners, of the church and the world, of peace and war, of friends and foes, of blessings and curses, of holiness and sin, of honour and shame, of faith and unbelief, of time and eternity, of life and death, of love and rage, of heaven and hades. These and countless other subjects are brought to our notice within the covers of this extraordinary volume.

But we are not impressed with any sense of incongruity. There is an eminent fitness in the revelation of these Tremendous Themes to one another. Nor were these writings produced at any one time; they do not belong to any one age; they have come to us as the growth of some 1,500 to 1,600 years. Is there any other book in the world that can be compared with this as to its diversity? Were the number of subjects treated or their equivalent brought together in any other book no publisher would take the risk of publishing it and no purchaser would ever buy it and yet the Bible is the most widely circulated book in all the world. Other books have a season, they have a run and then we hear of them no more. But this book lives on through the ages, and outlives all other literature and is the Queen of all literature. But I think our astonishment is infinitely greater when we come to realise that notwithstanding all this diversity the Bible is nevertheless A Sublime Unity. We take the fact of this unity, then its nature. There are laws that govern organic unity. There are two kinds of unity which we may speak of as mechanic and organic, Mechanic unity is the unity of a building and is lifeless. Organic unity is the unity of a body and is alive, Scripture in its unity is not mechanic, it is organic. 'What are these laws? I only know of three. First, each and every part is essential to the whole. A famous Hebrew scholar once heard a sermon and criticised it, and said that the sermon was twice too long, it should be cut in half, it does not matter which half. It is quite evident that sermon was not a unity. It cannot be said of the Bible that it is twice too long; that we could well do without one half and it does not matter which half. The Bible is a whole in order to the perfection of the body. Every member is necessary. It does not follow that every member is vital.

If you gave me the choice of having the top of my finger cut off or my heart taken out, I should not take long to decide, but when the top of my finger is cut off the body is no longer perfect. We are not going to claim that every part of Holy Scripture is of equal value, but we claim that every part is essential to the whole, and that it all originates in the will and revelation of God. The two Testaments are essential to one another. They brood over the mercy seat as the cherubim of gold did of old, each answering to the other. "The New is in the, Old contained, the Old is in the New Explained." Genesis and Revelation are essential to one another. Genesis is the book of commencement, Revelation the book of consummation. There can be nothing before the commencement, there can be nothing after the consummation and so Genesis anticipates Revelation and Revelation consummates Genesis. Each and every part is essential to the whole. The second law that governs organic unity is this, that each part is related to and corresponds with every other part, Genesis with Matthew, the two great beginnings. The books that introduce the two covenants, Leviticus and Hebrews—Leviticus giving all that is essential to Judaism and Hebrews all that is essential to Christianity. Exodus with Acts—Exodus telling of the nationalisation of the people of God and Acts of the beginning of the Christian Church and the first generation of her history. Joshua with Ephesians of the Inheritance of the heavenly people. Daniel the Old Testament Apocalypse with Revelation the New Testament Apocalypse, pointing beyond the rise and fall of the world's empires to the coming of Him who is King of kings and Lord of lords. Each other is related to every other part, corresponds with every other part.

There is an extraordinary illustration of such correspondence. You take the first three chapters of Genesis and the last three of Revelation and you will find that each of these three chapters of Genesis and last three of Revelation treats of the same subjects but in the reverse order. In Genesis we have the first Heaven and Earth, in Revelation 22 the last heaven and earth. in Genesis 2 we have husband and wife, in Revelation 21 the Lamb and the Bride. In Genesis 3 the sentence is pronounced upon Satan, and in Revelation 20, the sentence is executed. It is little wonder that the devil attempts to get us to believe that the one book is all myth and the other all mystery. We claim that where there is organic unity every part is pervaded with the spirit of life. Hebrews speaks of the Word of God being alive and Peter speaks of the Word of God which liveth and abideth for ever. The Word of God is not a dead letter. We can no more leave the Bible alone or leave it out of our reckoning than we can leave Christ alone. Christ does not derive His value from the Bible; the Bible derives its value from Christ. Only through the Bible can we get to Christ; our eternal knowledge of Christ comes through the Bible.

There can be no question as to the fact of organic unity in the Scripture. The nature of that unity—structural unity: The Bible is built up in an extraordinary way not to be accounted for by accident or chance and in both Testaments we find some sequence. For instance in the Old Testament from Genesis to Esther we have history and further back we cannot go. But begin that first verse of the first of Genesis and interest is aroused, we are led on through all these Books right to the sublime end in the Apocalypse of John. We are impressed as we read with the amazing diversity of which we have spoken. The thing unfolding presents-itself as a sublime story. All these stories are one story, all these revelations are one revelation and all these records are one record. Across the whole of the Old Testament you may write the word expectation and across the whole of the New you may write the word realisation. In Genesis there are Origins, in the Revelation there are issues and all the way between from Exodus to Jude there are processes leading from those origins to those issues. The revelation of God to man has been made in history and everywhere in Holy Scripture there is historical continuity and "sequence. There is historical unity everywhere in Scripture; there is further Prophetic Unity. Here there is opportunity for the wildest confusion and multiplied contradiction, as witness modern prophecies. But although there was not and could not have been any collusion among the writers of Holy Scripture there is no contradiction.

There are four great themes of prophecies—the Messiah, the Jews the Gentiles and the Church. Some treat of one and some of another and not a few touch upon them all. But there is an amazing harmony everywhere, there is no contradiction among the voices. In the Old Testament there are predictions, in the New there are fulfilments. In the Old we get types, in the New anti-types. The whole of the Old is leading up to the First Advent and the whole of the New is leading up to the Second Advent. There is prophetic unity as well as structural unity, and historical unity everywhere in Scripture. Let me remind you further that we have here doctrinal unity. Now, were men left to themselves how utterly impossible it would be to have synthesis of doctrine and harmony of teaching. But these many writers across the Ages were not left to themselves. It is a wonderful Book and if it is not inspired it is much more wonderful !

Everywhere in Scripture Jehovah is God. To take one doctrine, we are told in some quarters that Jehovah was the tribal Deity of the Hebrews placing Him much on a level with Ashtoreth of the Old Testament and in the New declared that Jehovah was the God of all the earth, the creator of the universe and its sustainer. The Jehovah of the Hebrews is no tribal Deity, He is the God of all men. God so loved—not the Hebrews, nor the Church—but the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life.

Everywhere in Scripture man is a sinner. The Old Testament does not present man as half a beast on his way up to morality and the New as a man made like God; both Testaments agree in saying that man has sinned and come short of the Glory of God. There is perfect harmony of doctrine. Both Testaments teach that Christ is the One and only Redeemer and His Cross our only hope. Redemption in the Old Testament anticipated, is in the New accomplished and it is from the Acts to the Apocalypse applied. It is the One Great Theme which runs through all the Scriptures. It is the note that dominates in this Orchestra from start to finish.

We also have spiritual unity. Think of the level of thought in the Bible. Think of its range, of its vision. Think of the sublimity of its themes. Think of the loftiness of its ideals. Think of the power of its appeals. The horizons of the Bible are infinitudes and immensities. The current coin of this realm is Faith, Love and Hope. Think what the Bible has done for the individual. Think of the countless millions who, were they with us still would say, “this and thing I know—that whereas I was blind now I see.” No man ever came to say that by studying philosophy or science, but many have through an acquaintance with the Word of God. Think of what the Bible has done for society. Think what it has done for the Church of God throughout the world and in all ages and for national life especially for our own and for the whole wide world and where the Word of God goes it is accepted and believed. There is emancipation, there is deliverance from the degradation and from cruelty. The Bible has brought release and relief to men and women and safe guarding of children. It has turned the demons out of cruel hearts and made men sober and kind. If the Bible is to be judged by what it has accomplished then verily it is the Book of Books and the Word of God: It could have no other origin than God Himself. And if of Divine origin then it is of Divine authority. It does not need our apology or our special pleading. Give it a chance, it will demonstrate its own character and its own Power.

This is the staff upon which multitudes of Pilgrims have found their way to the shining home far away up among the delectable mountains. This is the star that has guided mariners on the storm tossed oceans through the ages. This is the weapon with which Christian soldiers have fought their battles to glorious victory. This the compass that has guided men in darkness and distress. This is the Book on which your sainted: mother and father laid down their heads as upon a pillow in the last moments of life and passed away crooning some Old Testament Psalm such as “The Lord is my Shepherd I shall not want” etc. This is the Book of all ages and they who build upon it are as eternal as God.

That I May Know Him.

(Phil. 3: .8-10.)

“Lord, let me talk with Thee of all I do,
All that I care for, all I wish for, too.
Lord, let me prove Thy sympathy, Thy power,
Thy loving oversight from hour to hour!

When I need counsel, let me ask of Thee:
Whatever my perplexity may be,
It cannot be too trivial to bring
To One who marks the sparrow’s drooping wing,

Nor too terrestrial since Thou hast said
The very hairs are numbered on our head.
‘Tis through such loop-holes that the foe takes aim,
And sparks, unheeded, burst into flame.

Do money troubles press? Thou canst resolve
The doubts and dangers such concerns involve,
Are those I love the cause of anxious care?
Thou canst unbind the burdens they may bear.

Before the mysteries of Thy Word or will,
Thy voice can gently bid my heart be still,
Since all that now is hard to understand
Shall be unravelled in yon heavenly land.

Or do I mourn the oft-besetting sin,
The tempter’s wiles, that mar the peace within?
Present Thyself, Lord, as the absolving priest,
To whom confessing, I go forth released.

Do weakness, weariness, disease, invade
This earthly house, which Thou, Thyself, hast made?
Thou, only Lord, canst touch the hidden spring
Of mischief and attune the jarring string.

Would I be taught what Thou wouldst have me give,
The needs of those less favored to relieve?
Thou canst so guide my hand that it shall be
A liberal ‘cheerful giver,’ Lord, like Thee,
Of my life’s mission do I stand in doubt,
Thou knowst and canst clearly point it out.
Whither I go, do Thou Thyself decide

And choose the friends and servants at my side.
The books I read, I would submit to Thee,
Let them refresh, instruct and solace me.
I would converse with Thee from day to day

With heart intent on what Thou hast to say;
And through my pilgrim walk, whate’er befall,
Consult with Thee, O Lord, about it all.
Since Thou art willing thus to condescend

To be my intimate familiar friend,
Oh, let me to the great occasion rise,
And count Thy friendship
life’s most glorious prize.”

Halfpenny Glad Tidings of Great Joy.

“For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour which is Christ the Lord.”—Luke 2:1-20.

THE message of the angels to the shepherds on Bethlehem’s plains sounds more and more precious to each child of God in proportion as he grows in grace and knowledge. As his eyes and ears of understanding open more widely to the lengths and breadths of God’s great plan of the ages, that prophetic message is the more highly esteemed as an epitome of the entire Gospel. Nor can our attention be too frequently called to the great event which lies at the foundation of that message—our Saviour’s birth.

It matters not that December 25th is not the real anniversary of the Saviour’s birth, but probably the anniversary of the annunciation by the angel Gabriel, the anniversary of the Virgin Mary’s conception, our Lord being born nine months later on the calendar, or about October 1st. One so great, whose birth, death and resurrection_ from the dead means so much to the human family, may be remembered and celebrated any day, every day, by all who appreciate what he has done for our race. Since, then, the majority of Christian people have become habituated to the celebration of December 25th as our Lord’s birthday, we need make no protest, but join with all in celebrating that day with rejoicing of heart, giving gifts and remembrances one to another, thus copying divine favor, which gave to mankind the Son of God as a gift of mercy and love for our redemption.

For four thousand years and more the promises of God, clothed in more or less of obscurity, had been given to mankind, intimating that ultimately the great curse of sin and death which had come upon the world through father Adam’s disobedience in Eden would be rolled away, and instead of a curse, a blight, would come a blessing of the Lord with life-giving refreshment. In various types, figures and shadowy promises this lesson had come down through the ages to the time of our Lord’s birth, especially amongst the Jews, who were the divinely favored and covenanted people. And since the Jews were of a commercial spirit, many of them were to be found in all parts of the civilized world ;and thus amongst every people the faith in the one God and the hope of Israel through a Messiah were more or less made known, so that at the time of our Lord’s birth, we read, “All men were in expectation” of a soon-coming Messiah. Doubtless this expectation was built upon the interpretation of Daniel’s prophecy, which we now see clearly marked the year of our Lord’s majority, when he was thirty years of age and made His consecration to His work and received the begetting of the holy spirit, His anointing as the great antitypical High Priest and as the great antitypical King over Israel and the world.

From Bethlehem to Nazareth.

In olden times there were honorable cities and mean cities. Nazareth was generally recognised as one of the latter, while Bethlehem was distinctly one of the former—the City of David, Israel’s beloved king. The Scriptures explain to us that Mary, our Lord’s mother and Joseph, her husband, were both of the lineage of David, and that in a seemingly accidental manner the prophecy was fulfilled which foretold that Messiah would be born in Bethlehem.—Micah 5:2.

The Roman Empire at that time bore rule over the whole world, the Jews being subject to it, but waiting expectantly, restlessly, for the coming Messiah, who would deliver them from being subject people and make of them the ruling caste in His kingdom, the dominion of the world. Rome’s great Emperor, Caesar Augustus, was in power at this time, and had sent forth his decree for a polling or census of the whole world for the purposes of taxation, etc. Luke informs us that it was in response to this royal decree that Joseph and Mary went up to their native city to be enrolled, and that thus it was that Jesus was born in Bethlehem, and on account of the great concourse of people at the same time and for the same purpose, accommodations being scarce, the stable of the inn, or khan, was used by some as a lodging. Joseph and Mary, being of the latecomers, were forced to occupy these humble quarters, and thus it was that the King of glory, whose kingdom is by and by to rule the world, was in the time of His flesh born in a stable and cradled in a manger.

The Angels and the Shepherds.

Noble shepherds those must have been to whom the Almighty sent the angelic message respecting the birth of Jesus, the Messiah, which has rung down the ages and reached our ears—the message which thrills us the more in proportion as we are able to grasp its meaning. First a single angel appeared to the shepherds and allayed their fears, saying, “Fear not; behold I bring you good tidings.” It would appear that fear is one of the dominating impulses of the human mind, especially in conjunction with any revelations from the Lord. Men realize—even the best of the race—that they are imperfect and that the Almighty and His laws are perfect. Instinctively the world seems to realize that a curse or condemnation of the Almighty rests upon it, and instinctively it fears a further curse and further condemnation, realizing its’ continual and increasing sinfulness. The same is true to-day with all except the comparatively few who are well informed respecting the divine character and plan. Thus the subject of religion is generally obnoxious to the world in general—a subject which they prefer to avoid, because of a feeling of guilt and a dread of further knowledge and condemnation.

It is for the true children of God to-day, as it was for the angels at that time, to assure the world that God is better than all their fears—that God so loved the world as to redeem them from the just sentence of death, the curse that came upon all as inheritors of Adam’s imperfections and sentence.

“Good tidings” is another translation of our word “gospel.” How beautiful the thought that the Gospel is really and truly good tidings. Alas, for the misrepresentations of God’s plan, under which so many of His professed people misrepresent His character and His Word, and apply the term “Gospel” to their various messages from the dark ages, teaching purgatory and eternal torment as the portion of the race. Let us get away from this false thought and get the truth that the Gospel is good tidings. The angel elaborated, saying that his message was good tidings of great joy, which should be unto all people. Ah, thank God, His plan is wider and deeper and higher and grander than anything we had ever conceived. The Gospel is not merely to be good tidings to the comparatively few that now have ears to hear and eyes to see its beauties, but in God’s due time it is to be good tidings of great joy to all people.

As every member of Adam's race shared in his fall and in the curse of death which came upon him as a result, so every member of the race was included in the great redemptive sacrifice which our Lord Jesus offered and which was finished at Calvary. God's plan in Christ, as it is being worked out and shall ultimately be accomplished, will mean great joy for all people, and the tidings of this were given at the very moment of our Lord's birth, because He was the one through whom all the glorious things of the divine purpose and plan shall ultimately be accomplished.

The Cause, The Logic of the Message.

The message took cognisance of the fact that it was to reasonable people, who would want to know why the unchangeable God, who had once pronounced a curse, should at any time so amend and alter matters as to supplant the curse with a blessing. The messenger states the philosophy of the divine plan, "Unto you is born this day a Saviour, which is Christ (Messiah) the Lord." There we have the key to the entire Gospel statement of how God could be just and yet be the justifier of sinners who accept Jesus. The word "Saviour" here signifies life giver, and how beautiful is the thought that as death is the wage of sin, the curse upon the race, this Messiah who was born is to be the One who will rescue the race from the sentence by giving them life again. The explanation of how He would give life was not given, nor was it necessary at that time; but now, in the light of developments, and with the explanations furnished through the spirit in the New Testament we see how that our Lord's voluntary sacrifice of His life, dying the just for the unjust, settled the claims of divine justice against Adam and thus incidentally against all who shared his sentence.

Truly the more we see of the divine plan for our salvation, which began to take shape in the birth of Jesus, the more we feel like shouting with the angelic choir praises to the God of heaven, thankfulness for His mercy to the children of men. It mattered not that the babe born in Bethlehem was the Saviour only in prospect, that He could not even be anointed to do His work until He reached manhood's estate thirty years later; it mattered not that even then it would be necessary for Him to lay down His life gradually through three and a half years of His earthly ministry, to be finished at Calvary; it mattered not either that the resurrection was still three days after that, and His ascension forty days later, and that the blessing in general would be deferred for nearly nineteen centuries thereafter. As the angels could sing and rejoice at the first budding of the divine plan of salvation, so also can all who have faith in the ultimate outcome rejoice with joy unspeakable and give praise to God in the highest and to His Son our Lord.

Although nearly nineteen centuries have rolled away since that angelic message was delivered, it has not yet been fulfilled except in a limited measure by faith to those who have the eye of faith and, the ears of faith, in all a "little flock." But the tidings of great misery for nearly all people has been spread abroad in the name of Christ, much to the discredit of the divine plan and to the dishonor of the divine character. Instead of carrying joy the message has very generally carried grief and sorrow, especially to the kind-hearted and more generously disposed. Indeed we may say that no message of the Lord Jesus either true or false, has ever reached all people. Even to-day, after nineteen centuries of propaganda, only a comparatively small portion of the human family have ever heard of the only name given under heaven and amongst men whereby we must be saved—"nor is there salvation in any other."—Acts 4:12.

What, then, shall we say of the salvation which is come to those who have truly accepted Christ as their Saviour, and who are to-day rejoicing in Him as such, and who by faith are seeing the salvation of God begun in their own hearts and yet to be fully accomplished under the whole heavens? This the Apostle calls the salvation by hope. 14's words are, "We are saved by hope." (Romans 8:24.) We are not saved actually; we are still surrounded by sin, pain, sighing, crying and dying; the curse is not yet rolled away. All that the best of the Lord's people have received is salvation by hope, by faith. Yet this anticipation of the future salvation, of the resurrection from the dead, of a participation in the glory, honor and immortality of the divine nature promised to the faithful, is so strong, so clear, that those who possess it are enabled to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory, even in the midst of trials and difficulties and weaknesses and unfavorable conditions incident to the curse upon the race.

A Prophecy of Good Things.

Yes, the angelic message was a prophecy of good things to be accomplished for the Church and also for the world during the Millennial Age. The Church is to have the first blessing. The first resurrection is to be composed only of the blessed and holy who shall live and reign with Christ during the Millennium, the thousand years in which Satan shall be bound, and when the good influences of truth and righteousness shall enlighten the whole earth. The declaration of the Scripture is that the deliverance of the Church will come first, as the prophet declares, “God will help her early in the morning.”—Psa. 46:5.

But much as we rejoice in the glorious hopes of the Gospel set before us who now see, who now believe, who now rejoice with joy unspeakable, we are glad that the divine mercy and love are of such lengths and breadths and heights and depths as to encompass the whole world of mankind, and to provide a blessing for every member of Adam’s race through Him who loved us and bought us with His precious blood.

It will be during the Millennial Age that this prophecy of the angel will have its fulfilment, and the great Saviour who has already redeemed us by His sacrifice will stand forth as the King, the glorified Messiah, and establish His dominion of righteousness in the world for the blessing and uplifting of every member of the race. In harmony with the words of the Apostle, those will be times of restoration, “times of restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began.” (Acts 3. 20,21.) If the Lord had based the hope of the world upon some works of merit or righteousness of the world’s doing, then indeed we might have feared—indeed the more we know of the world, the less hope we would have. But, on the contrary, the Lord has based the entire proposition for the future blessing not upon our worthiness, but upon the worthiness and sacrifice of His Son—to you is born a life-giver, which is Messiah the Lord.

How it adds to our enjoyment of the coming age blessings to know that the trials and difficulties of this present Gospel Age are subject to the divine supervision in the interest of the little flock that is now being gathered in advance from amongst men—the “elect,” the Church. We see how the present trials and difficulties are the chiselings and polishing necessary to our development in the fruits and graces of the holy spirit in the character-likeness of God’s dear Son, our Lord, our Hope, our Bridegroom. How joyful the thought that soon the elect number called from the world to be the Bride, the Lamb’s wife, will be completed and enter into her glory. How precious the thought that then they shall be privileged with their Lord and Master to extend the divine favor of blessing and uplift to the world. -What higher honor or privilege or blessing could possibly come to any?

It was after the giving of the message of good tidings and great joy by the heavenly one that a host of angels appeared to the shepherds, saying, “Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men.” This, too is a prophecy. It is not yet true; but will be fulfilled in every particular in God’s due time, which we believe is now nigh, even at the door. Not yet does God receive glory in the highest, not yet is there peace amongst men. Quite to the contrary. God’s name is blasphemed, not only by those who vulgarly and in ribald jest take the divine name in vain, and not merely by the heathen who worship devils and think they are gods, but even by Christian people, God’s name is blasphemed every day. For be it known that blasphemy is any dishonorable misrepresentation of another. God be merciful to us, for at some time or other every one of us doubtless has blasphemed the holy name in this manner—by misrepresenting the divine character and divine plan, by picturing the God of love and mercy and justice and truth as the originator, the planner, the perpetuator of the eternal torment of the great mass of His creatures, born in sin and shapen in iniquity, born to sin as the sparks fly upwards.

But the Lord had mercy upon us because we did it ignorantly. And we also should have compassion upon others who still ignorantly misrepresent our God, and our energies should be continually bent to their assistance that the eyes of their understanding might open more widely to perceive the lengths and breadths and heights and depths and know the love of God which passeth understanding.

Noting that peace on earth and goodwill to men have not followed the Saviour's birth thus far, and discerning that this is a prophecy of what is to be accomplished during the Millennium, many have been inclined to change the translation of this verse so as to have it read, "On earth peace amongst men, in whom he is well pleased." However by thus changing it, the statement would not be true, for even the Lord's people have no peace on earth. Whatever peace they have is in their hearts, and based upon their faith in the Lord and in the glorious things which He was promised. Our Lord Himself and the apostles testified to this, assuring us that whosoever in this present time would live godly should suffer persecution, that a man's foes would be they of his own household, etc. (2 Tim. 3:12; Matt. 10:26).

Let us not confuse ourselves nor abridge the testimony of the Word, but with the eye of faith look forward to the day of Christ in which all these glorious things shall have their fulfilment, in which peace shall indeed fill the whole earth with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, bringing divine favor and rolling away the curse from the entire groaning creation, as pointed out by the Apostle.—Rom. 8:22.

Not even with the inauguration of the Millennium will this prophecy be fulfilled: not until its close, when the human family shall have been lifted by the kingdom regulations out of sin, sickness, pain, sorrow and death, up, up to all that was lost in Adam—not until then will there indeed be glory to God in the highest, not until then will there be peace amongst men. Nor are we to understand that the entire race will be appreciative of the divine love and favor even after they have fully seen the righteousness of God in Christ manifested. On the contrary the Scriptures seem to clearly teach that there will be a class who will then prove unfit for life eternal, unappreciative of the divine favor and it is with pleasure that we learn that all such shall be utterly destroyed from amongst the people in the second death. Thus eventually by the close of the Millennium, Satan and all wilful wrongdoers having been destroyed, the time will come as declared in the Scriptures when all voices in heaven and in earth and under the earth shall be heard praising God, Him that sitteth upon the throne, and the Lamb forever and ever. Hosanna! Glory to God in the highest ! Peace and goodwill to men, will be the final shout of a redeemed race when the great salvation shall have been fully outworked according to the divine plan set forth in the Scriptures.

PEOPLES PAPER AND HERALD OF CHRIST'S KINGDOM.

The New Year.

Stretching before us lies the coming year
As pure as snow,

Whereon no foot has seen fresh fallen from heaven
To earth below.

We tremble ere we tread on aught so fair
And so unknown!

And dare we, seeing not whereto it leads,
Set out alone.

Go thou before, great Guide and Counsellor “
’Saviour Divine;

So shall we make no footprints of our own
But tread in Thine.
—(F. M. N.)

THE opening of a new year is always an opportune time for the Christian to make a general survey of his position before the Lord; to take stock, so to speak, as to gains or losses incurred over the past year. Not that it is not advisable to make monthly, weekly or daily reckonings of one’s progress and shortcomings but the close of a year gives more scope for “calling to mind the former days,” so that the experiences both pleasant and difficult may be viewed more as a whole and in their true light as blessings and favours to assist us along the pilgrim way to the goal in view.

In considering one’s own progress; it must always be with a deep sense of unworthiness before the Lord; that our standing, however far advanced, is only such because of the mantle of righteousness provided for us by our dear Lord and Head—”To the praise of the glory of God’s grace, wherein He hath made us accepted in the beloved.”

From this standpoint of true humility, we may then check up the little steps of progress with praise and thanksgiving to our heavenly Father, with benefit, realising that “we are His workmanship created in Christ Jesus,” and that much love and patience has been extended to us, that we may be more and more “conformed to the image of His Son.”

How necessary it is to meditate on the words of our Lord, “Abide in Me, and I in you . . . for without Me ye can do nothing.” Ah yes, and how beautiful and sweet are the lessons we learn as we sit at His feet, to learn of Him, receiving with meekness the engrafted Word. The lines of the poem express so truly this blessed privilege “Christ never asks of us such heavy labour As leaves no time for resting at His feet,

The prayerful attitude of expectation
He oft-times counts a service most complete.

“He sometimes wants our ear—our wrapt attention
That He some heavenly wisdom may impart;

’Tis always in the time of deepest stillness
That heart finds sweetest fellowship with heart.”

No doubt we have found that this sweet fellowship and communion with our dear Lord has been at the very source of all spiritual gain; that to the extent of our dwelling with Him in His inner presence, so the degree of progress will be in evidence. And as we have been rightly actuated by the sweet moments rich in blessing, and have put into practice the desire for zealous service, such as exhibited by our Master on behalf of mankind, especially His faithful few, this has surely confirmed and increased our progress in becoming copies of God's dear Son. "It is more blessed to give than to receive"; "Freely ye have received, freely give," and so agree the lines from the poet:

"And yet he does love service—when 'tis given
By grateful love that clothes itself in deed,

But work that's done beneath the scourge of duty,
Be sure to such He gives but little heed."

On the other hand, in taking check of any evidence of loss in Christian growth, it may well be considered, from two viewpoints. First, from the standpoint of determining to bring about the corrections necessary, and secondly, with the object of guarding against discouragement.

Some of the Lord's people may need to give much attention to dealing more firmly with themselves, that the new mind may not be overruled to any degree by the human will or flesh, which are counted dead. The degree of faithfulness in keeping down the former aspirations, by the power from on high, given for this express purpose, will determine the worthiness or otherwise of those called ones to be of the chosen and faithful.

Then, respecting the other class who may be discouraged by their failures and be tempted to give up in the race, there is special need that they continually remember, "If we confess our sins, God is faithful and just to forgive us and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness," for "We have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." These must exercise more faith in the Lord—that what He has promised He will surely perform and bring them off more than conquerors if they trust fully and walk in His ways. The suggestion that the Christian way is too hard, too narrow, and that we might as well give up would emanate from the great Opposer, who is to be resisted steadfast in the faith. "Resist the devil and he will flee from you."

The following quotation seems so fitting in this connection:—"All wish frequently, no doubt, that the testings were all over and that we were accepted to a place amongst the overcomers. But patience and faith and trust are to do a refining work in our hearts, making us mellow, willing and obedient to the Lord. Let the good work go on. Let us rejoice if our trials have brought us lessons of any kind that are profitable to us; that have tended to make us stronger in character, more firm for truth and righteousness, more aware of our own weaknesses, and more; on guard against the same. Even those conflicts which have resulted in only partial victories have possibly been to our advantage.

Even on points in which there may have been absolute failure, the result may be a strengthening of character, a crystallisation of determination for greater zeal in that direction again, and a humility of heart before the Lord in prayer."

So, dear friends, as the new year is entered upon, let us all give earnest heed to the words of the Apostle—"Gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ." The wonderful inheritance is intended only for those who "count all things but loss and dross that they may win Christ and be, found in Him." Those who follow afar off, or who put other considerations, of home, or family, etc., however good, before the Lord and His people, cannot expect to receive the prize of the high-calling in the Kingdom. "He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me: and he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me. And he that taketh not his cross, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me. He that findeth his life shall lose it: and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." (Matt. 10:37-39)

Could we but approximate the condescending grace of God in thus granting the inestimable privilege of running so as to obtain the pearl of great price, then "neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come; nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." "I want that adorning divine.

Thou, only, my God, canst bestow!
I want in those beautiful garments to shine,
Which distinguish Thy household below.

"I want, oh, I want to attain
Some likeness, my Saviour, to Thee:
That longed-for resemblance once more to regain;

Thy comeliness put upon me.
"I want to be marked for Thine own,
Thy seal on my forehead to wear;

To receive that 'new name' on the mystic white stone,
Which only thyself canst declare.
"I want so in Thee to abide,

As to bring forth some fruit to Thy praise;
The branch that Thou prunest, though feeble and dried,
May languish, but never decays.

"I want Thine own hand to unbind
Each tie to terrestrial things,
Too tenderly cherished, too closely entwined,
Where' my heart too tenaciously clings.

"I want by mine aspect serene,
Mine actions and words, to declare
That my treasure is placed in a country unseen,
That my heart and affections are there.

"I want, as a traveller, to haste
Straight onward, nor pause on my way,
No forethought or anxious contrivance to waste
On my tent, only pitched for a day.

"I want—and this sums up my prayer
To glorify Thee till I die;
Then calmly to yield up my soul to Thy care,
And breathe out in prayer my last sigh."

Approved Unto God.

“Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth.”—2 Tim. 2:15.

THIS Text does not say, “Study the Scriptures,” but “Study to show thyself approved”—study to know what God would approve. And yet it means, first of all, to study the Revelation He has made. Then, after having come to some knowledge of the Scriptures, we must meditate upon them and consider how the Word is applicable to all of life’s affairs. Thus we would study the nature of everything that we come in contact with, as to whether it is good or evil.

The word “study” here is used with very much the same thought as when the Apostle says, “Study to be quiet.” Evidently the central thought of this expression is the approving of ourselves to God, not to men. It is proper enough that we should have the approval of all good men and good women. But our study, primarily, should not be along this line. First, we should study to please God—to be approved of God. We notice that there is a contemplative study, such as David speaks of when he says, “I meditate upon thy Law day and night”—to see how that Law would work out its height and depth, its length and breadth of influence upon himself. And so the Apostle’s thought here is that it should be our chief aim to please God.

“Rightly dividing the Word of Truth” would signify the proper application of the Word of Truth; the understanding of how and when and where it should be applied and what was the purpose and thought. and Plan of the Divine Mind in the giving of this Word of Truth, the Word of God’s Message. Up to the advent of our Lord, God’s Message had been given chiefly through the Old Testament Scriptures. Then God’s Message was attested by Him who came from heaven. Additionally, our Lord left twelve chosen Apostles to be His special mouthpieces, to increase the Word of Truth, to increase the Word of knowledge, to increase the Word of explanation of the Divine Plan. Everything, therefore, that Timothy could recognise as being the Lord’s Message he was to give heed to. For instance, one part of God’s Message applies to the past, a part applies only to the Jews, still another part applies to Christians in the present life, • and yet another part to their future hopes.

And so, as we get the matter rightly divided before our minds, we get the true understanding, the special enlightenment needed in our day, and we are enabled to rightly divide the Word better than did our fathers, so that today we can see, as our fathers did not see, the teaching of God’s Word respecting the “high calling” and “restitution”—the spiritual portion of blessing for the Church and the human portion of blessing for the world. We also see something about the times and seasons—which apply to the Church and which to the blessing of the world.

Thus, in our Day, to rightly divide the Word of Truth necessitates the taking cognisance of everything that seems to be of the Lord and that throws any light upon the Word, and thus we may be able to “rightly divide” it. We must always bear in mind that in the Scriptures of the Old Testament “holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit,” and that the Lord also said of the Apostles: “Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in, heaven.”

We are not to forget that the Lord promised that He would guide His people in the way of the Truth and show them things to come. We are to “study” to show ourselves approved—study the doctrine and endeavour to have our course of conduct harmonise with it—study to perform faithfully the duties of a loyal soldier of the cross of Christ.

The Christian soldier must study to perform even the smallest duty in a manner creditable to his calling;

he must not permit himself to become entangled with other things which do not relate to his duties as a soldier and thus be side-tracked, The Christian soldier who turns aside to seek some personal, temporal advantage to the detriment of his duties as a soldier is to that extent an unfaithful soldier and likely to be drawn out of the ranks entirely.

“Study to show thyself approved.” Study the Word; study yourself, that you may become well acquainted with yourself; that you may know your talents for service—in what direction they lie, and what are your weak points and how they may be guarded against—that you may know both your abilities and your shortcomings. Then study to avoid error and to shun all foolish questions and profane and vain babblings. Remember that only “the foundation of God standeth sure”; that all other foundations are worthless and that all other theories must come to naught. But “The foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, ‘The Lord knoweth them that are His.’ And let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity.”-2 Tim. 2:19.

There is much significance in the word “study” and it is important to note that this Divine injunction is given to the Church, to those who are believers in Christ and who have consecrated their lives to His service. Having been reckonedly cleansed from sin, we are to give all diligence to the work of studying to make this reckoned cleansing, this imputed righteousness, an actual thing, to the extent of our ability. It is purely of Divine grace that we are reckoned righteous before we are actually so. Looking at our hearts and seeing in them not only our good and honest intentions, but also our desire for righteousness and our efforts to become righteous in the way He would approve God accepts the will for the deed. Accordingly, He counts us as righteous now and treats us as His children, since we have been redeemed from the curse and have accepted His gracious provision for reconciliation.

Let us, then, study our hearts to see that we are striving daily to cast out all the old leaven of sin; to be sure that we are not content to allow it to remain in us and work in us; otherwise we prove by our course that our love for righteousness is growing weaker. Happy are those who find that they are not merely working down the leavened mass occasionally and allowing it again and again to ferment, but are casting it out, by constantly resisting sin, by cleansing their thoughts, words and deeds with the Truth and cultivating the blessed “fruits of the Spirit”—love, joy, peace, etc.

Only the studious find the way to Divine approval and acceptance. Let us study to see that our lives are an honor to the cause we have espoused; that we abstain from even the appearance of evil; that we are circumspect in all our conversation, in our conduct—watching our thoughts, our lips, our lives. Let us study to be diligent in every duty, performing it with a ready mind and with joy and gladness of heart. Let us never lose sight of the fact that we are soldiers, and that as true soldiers we are to learn to “endure hardness.”

A soldier has many trivial duties to perform and he is as really doing his duty as a soldier when he is polishing his armor, foraging, cooking his meals, cleaning camp or building bridges for the army to pass over, as when he is fighting the enemy. Such things are incidental work, but are necessary and entirely consistent with his commission as a soldier and should not be regarded as entanglements and hindrances. These duties cannot be disregarded nor carelessly done without a measure of unfaithfulness.

So with the Christian soldier. The routine of life—housework, shop work, daily toil, anything, everything, incidental to a proper and honest provision of “things needful” for ourselves and those dependent upon us for support as well as for provision for the prosecution and care of the Lord’s work—all this is a proper part of our engagement as soldiers of the Lord.

The Apostle Peter was as truly serving the Lord when catching the fish from whose mouth he got the coin with which to pay his Master’s taxes and his own, as when proclaiming, on the day of Pentecost, the “raising up” and ascension of the Lord. The Apostle Paul was as truly a soldier of the cross and doing his proper work as such when making tents (rather than be chargeable to any) as when at Mars Hill he preached Jesus and the resurrection. Whatever is done with a view to the glory and honor of our Lord, the Captain of our salvation, or for the benefit of any of our fellow-soldiers, or for our own preparation for this warfare, or in the discharge of obligations which our Captain has recognised and approved, is proper work for us as soldiers and is not entanglement in the affairs of this life.

Correspondence.

To the Brethren of The Berean Bible Institute,

Melbourne, Australia.

Beloved of the Lord,

Greetings of love and peace in the precious name of our Beloved Redeemer and King, the Lord Jesus, our Head.

A copy of "Berean Bible Student" published in San Francisco, Calif., has just been given to me, and in that paper,

I see the announcement that you brethren are going to publish a "Covenant Book" and are now taking orders for the same. I would like you to add my name to your list of orders, please.

I have been using this book, kindly loaned to me by a Sister of our Class; and it has been a great blessing to me, so would like a copy of my own. I have not been very long in the truth; just a little over two years, but the truth is very precious to me. You may understand what I mean when I tell you I was a minister in the nominal systems. But step by step I see the leading hand of a loving Father. First, I saw the error of eternal torment; this led me to the First Day Adventists, but when the truth was presented to me, as given us by that faithful servant, our Beloved Pastor Russell, I knew I had at last reached my heart's desire, to know my Lord in all His fulness. And as the beauty of the Divine Plan of God was revealed to me I found out how little I knew of God's love for mankind.

So to-day finds me in humble worship at the feet of my Blessed Redeemer, seeking to learn of Him who was meek and lowly of heart. Till, my lessons learnt in the School of Christ, I shall hear the call to come up higher, where I shall see my Saviour face to face.

May the Lord richly bless you brethren is my earnest prayer and with much Christian love, I am, by His divine favour.

Your Brother in Christ, M.E.P,

Dear Brother, Victoria

Will you please send me half a dozen cards of the best variety.

I have tread the two English friends views of Present Truth, and although very impressive, I agree with the presentation in the December "P.P." To some it does seem an unreasonable time and nothing done, since the Second Advent. But there has been a great harvest work done, and "the harvest is the end of the age." Surely we are now "in the day of His preparation." Nah. 2:3.

With brotherly love, I remain, yours in the one hope of our calling. P.K.D,

All interested friends will please note the addresses and times of meetings held in the various cities. These gatherings are unsectarian, and all able to attend will be very welcome.

The Great Salvation.

“How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?” Heb. 2:3.

THIS question is addressed to Christians, and not to the unconverted, as is often supposed. This the context proves. The writer of the epistle addressed it to the church. It seems particularly adapted to converted Jews, who were familiar with the writings of the Old Testament. We have in this epistle some of the most earnest exhortations to be faithful to the Lord, and the very best reasons and motives given for our encouragement. The text and context are of this character and if we are Christians we will find such applicable to us. It is important that we should, in order to get the benefit of the exhortation, remember that it means us. “How shall we escape, if we neglect?” On account of certain facts referred to in the first chapter, the second opens with: “Therefore, we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip.” This certainly must refer to Christians; and there is danger of losing what we have received, unless we do give heed.

The idea is suggested that neglect of the truths would cause them gradually to slip away from us. Backsliding is a gradual process, caused by neglect of truth and neglect of duty in obeying the truth. These are related to each other, and it seems that either may come as the cause of the other. The only safeguard against backsliding and consequent falling away, if persisted in, is to advance. Standing still seems to be impossible. In the sixth chapter the apostle seems to make falling away the alternative of going on to perfection. The Lord has arranged our life as a current against which we must row if we would go up, and He has placed the reward, the Great Salvation, at the head of the stream. If we would gain the prize, we must “run,” “strive,” “fight” or “overcome.” If we fold our arms, we shall glide downward. It is easy to go with the multitude, but is difficult to stem the flood, and we may be sure, “This vain world is not a friend to grace, to help us on to God.” What is worth having is worth striving for, and God has in both natural and spiritual things placed the valuable out of sight, or where it can be gained with difficulty. Our appreciation of the value of anything is shown by the earnestness with which we strive for it. We should be constantly seeking to know more of the truth of God for the purpose of obeying it. If we seek for truth merely as a theory to gratify our own curiosity, or for the purpose of showing our ability to cope with those who hold error, our intellect may be filled at the expense of our affections. Religion without love to both God and man, is as the body without the spirit—dead.

Charity or love is the crowning excellency of Christianity, and is necessary to fit for the Great Salvation. . “Add to your faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness; and charity.” 2 Peter 1:5-7. Love is last and greatest. These additions secure the abundant entrance into the Kingdom of God. (Ver. 11.) Without the last all is vain. Though I speak with the tongues of men and angels and have not love I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have (the gift of) prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge, and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not love, I am nothing. (Cor. 13:1-2.) There is a kind of knowledge that cannot be gained from books, but comes by experience as a fruit of the indwelling of the spirit of God. "He that loveth not knoweth not God, for God is love."

Love is an experience, and includes in it an earnest desire for the well-being of the object loved. Until we have sympathy and love for mankind, such as would prompt us to do all in our power for their salvation, we cannot know God. To know Him thus is to be in unison or fellowship with Him, and hence is eternal life.

Day by Day and Hour by Hour

God broke our years to hours and days
That hour by hour and day by day,
Just going on a little way,
We might be able all along
To keep quite strong.

Should all the weight of life
Be laid across our shoulders, and the future rife
With woe and struggle meet us face to face
At just one place We could not go,
Our feet would stop; and so
God lays a little on us every day,
And never, I believe, on all the way

Will burdens bear so deep,
Our pathway lie so threatening and so steep;
But we can go, if by God's power,
We only bear the burden of the hour.

Christian Experience.

(Convention Address)

“Be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God.”—(Rom'. 12:2)

IN this text we have a practical exhortation in connection with Christian experience. While the English word “experience” occurs only three or four times in the Bible, yet the equivalent Greek word occurs very often, and is more generally translated trials, i.e., testing, proving, to determine the value of a person or the quality of his principles. Approved or prove is another translation of it, but for a person or anything to be approved, necessarily means that such have first gone through a test or series of tests or trials; hence we often speak of experience gained through this process.

But what is experience? It is knowledge and wisdom gained by trials and practice. Applying it to Christians, we might add to this definition, that it is a spiritual exercise of mind. Our text in Rom. 12:2, suggests that. We say we are making an experiment with this or that or the other thing. It means that we are applying certain tests in order to ascertain the value or strength of a thing. We are often in doubt as to the issue or result—we experiment.

But in regard to God, He is never in doubt as to the issue; He knows the end from the beginning. He tested Adam, Noah, Abraham, Jesus, and others by giving them certain experiences, i.e., arranging and surrounding them with certain conditions and persons, which would demonstrate to others in future ages or generations their reliability and integrity, and thus make them worthy examples to follow and obey. He is also giving us experiences, not so much for His own benefit, (although He surely finds pleasure in the person who is faithful under His dealings and instructions), but for our lasting good and to His honor.

Experience is not gained by merely sitting quietly and letting the spirit of God work in our hearts, nor by mere meditation or imagination. Christian experience is not merely the exaltation of feeling or excessive joy that finds expression only when inspired by devotional songs, prayers, smooth meetings and studies or exhortations of Christian fellowship, and he who is dependent merely upon such means of grace for his vitality is but an infant in experience.

More than this is necessary, as we well know, for the Bible uses such figures as soldiers, warfare, running, fighting, pruning, building, sowing, reaping, etc., when describing Christian experience. All these and other figures plainly declare the different kinds of experiences in which we find ourselves at some time or other during our Christian pilgrimage. One who has read “Pilgrim’s Progress” cannot fail to notice the variety of experiences met with by “Christian” in his trials.

Experience, then, carries with it the thought of testings or trials, as Peter’s illustration of gold cast into the crucible for refining, so clearly indicates—1 Peter 1:7. The trying of our faith is Christian experience. We are told in Rev. 3:18, “to buy gold tried in the fire.” Truth and Christian experience must be purchased at the cost of faithful and constant submission to the disciplines of the Lord in fiery trials which are necessary to consume our dross and refine our gold. See 1 Peter 1:4-12; Heb. 12:5-8. According to these words, trials are inevitable. The nature of Christian principles account for oppositions from worldly and professing people. These are meant to renew our characters which call for corrective discipline; they increase our spirituality and give us good ground for comfortable assurance of divine love.

In Rom. 5:3, 4, it is truly written that “tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope.” Patience is necessary in experiences in order to get results. Tribulations are a necessary part in God’s dealings with us, to fit us for our future exalted position; they will develop us in patience. This again will lead to large and valuable experiences—experiences of God’s Love, wisdom and grace—and will brighten hope and strengthen our confidence in God.

Circumstances arise in which your principles are tested and call for patience. (James 1:3.) Afflictions make the beginning sad, patience will make the success glorious. Had the Israelites believed God’s promises of deliverance they would not have murmured at the Red Sea. God brought them to the Red Sea to deliver them from the Egyptians and made all their fears end in joy and triumph. In like manner, He brings us face to face with certain obstacles so that our attention may be directed to Him. The more we trust God, the more He is concerned for our welfare; the more we trust ourselves, the more He does to cross us.

God has always “an eye upon them that fear Him” --not to keep distress and afflictions from them, but to quicken them in it; and to give them, as it were, new life from the dead, new fruit from the rod. One has said, “He seems to be the unhappiest of mankind who has never been exercised with adversity, as he cannot have had an opportunity of trying the strength of his mind.”

James 1:12 says, “Happy the man who endures trials, (adversities) because having become an approved (i.e., character fixed, experienced with good and evil) person, he will receive the crown of life.” (Diag.) Merely to have trials is not enough; we must endure them. It is better that we endure •them than be lifted out of them.

You know there is a peculiar joy in working through a difficult problem—a joy in overcoming. It may be illustrated this way:—In our schooldays, perhaps we would have to work through a difficult problem in arithmetic, and would probably sit over it and scribble, frown, worry and fret—we could not get through successfully with the figures. The teacher would come and say, “What is the matter?” We would answer, “It will not come right.” Now the teacher does not scold you and say what a stupid thing you are, and then do the whole sum for you. That would discourage and crush any little hope. No, the teacher quietly points and says, “Is that figure right?” “Oh! I had overlooked that.” Now some more figuring. “That other figure should now be what?” A little more thought and now a happy expression steals over the troubled face; the problem has been solved. The teacher by a little assistance has given that joy and pleasure that come by getting through. So, brethren, there is a joy in getting through, in overcoming a trial and we are happy and also appreciate our Teacher more for the kindly assistance.

The farmer, too, by observation, study and experience knows just how and when and with what kind of implement to prepare and cultivate, sow and reap his land. One, going on the land, who has had no previous experience with farming will for the first -year or two make a failure of things. -Before he is able to do the right thing at the right time, using- the right implement for certain work, ‘,or sowing various grains at the correct time, he will find the experience has cost him dearly; nevertheless is wiser. But the experienced farmer knows just what kind of implement to use to produce the desired result, and what season and conditions are best for sowing and reaping.

In like manner our Great Husbandman knows exactly (by His inherent wisdom) what kind of experiences to give to each one of His tender plants; what situation and what kind of implements to use to produce a certain kind of result, when conditions are best to apply stimulants upon the land in order to produce luxuriant fruitage, and how and when to reap the harvest. It is good our experiences are in the hand of One who knows.

In James 5:7, we read, “Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain.” You will see that the beginning of this chapter shows the human race advancing to maturity in their experience, and a bitter experience it is, and will be yet. Their harvest will be “a day of slaughter.” The life of each individual Christian is also advancing under the same law of sowing and reaping. ‘ The Apostle tells us, therefore, to be patient under our experiences, as well as patient with others—verse 9. Farmers have learned a lesson which many Christians need yet to ‘learn, namely, that when seed is sown,, grain must be looked for at the latter end Of the harvest and not at the beginning. There is not a harvest all the year round.

Let us sow to the spirit. in order to do this (which is not natural to our human nature) there’ must needs be much experience of various kinds. Even though we may have spiritual knowledge, theoretical knowledge is not enough.

As for instance if one wants to learn bricklaying; the first thing we might do is to read a book about this trade, but a mere theory is not sufficient. The next best thing is to observe a bricklayer at work, day by day. The movement of the hand and trowel seems simple enough but how awkward it is when a trowel is put into your hand. So. the best thing is experience. You will find that to take up and spread mortar is quite an art; possibly the first three or four times you can hardly get it on the trowel, and then before you have lifted it very far, you find that it has slipped off on your boot, instead of going on the wall. You feel embarrassed and others are watching; it throws one on his own responsibility, but practice makes perfect. You need experience, you need practice. How much more so with spiritual things— spiritual building. We are always building,-you know; that is’ our vocation. So, to handle skilfully the Word of God takes much experience and practice.

“Every, one that partaketh of milk is without experience of the word of righteousness; for he is a babe.” (Heb. 5:13, R.V.) “Without experience of the word of righteousness,”—unskilled. A skilled or experienced-tradesman is always in demand. The fault lamented in this text is unskilfulness in the Word and therefore not very useful themselves as builders. We are all more or less unskilful in finding, quoting and defending the Word, as well as in its use, due sometimes to weakness of earthen vessels. It needs practice and experience to be able to apply the principles of the Word to our daily, common routines of life, but by so doing it would save us many a regret, many a disappointment, many a doubt and fear. It would turn many an anxiety into a joy, peace and spiritual satisfaction.

This need was impressed very definitely one time, when reading a religious book. A certain Christian man asked some workmen to come to his home to have a stud:, on the Scriptures. Well, they came One night, but the good lady of the house was rather distressed about the spoiling of her nice carpets in the parlour, because of the coarse and muddy boots of these rough workmen. In order to calm herself she wondered if there was anything in the Bible about carpets. Yes, sure enough she found something that fitted her case very well—"Take joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing in yourselves that ye have in heaven a more enduring substance."—(Heb, 10:34)

We need thought, practice and wisdom, which of course includes commonsense, to apply the principles of the Scriptures in a workable way to our daily experiences. Perhaps some are so situated that they have very little spare time, but conditions do alter which change our circumstances and some time or other we will find more time to put into study and thought, but what we now have let us use faithfully. We usually have enough independence and opportunity to continue to practise those things we do know. We need to learn by experience to use the Word harmoniously, impartially, to rightly divide—practically, doers—not only to others but for ourselves also. Our natural powers of discernment between right and wrong need the aid of instructions, education, exercise and habit—wisdom from above.

Christian experience is growth — "To grow in grace and in knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ ;" to be rooted and grounded in love and grow up into Him in all things, like unto Him who is our Head. Christian experience is to build up a character, as Peter says, "adding to faith, virtue," etc., (2 Peter 1:5-8) and to labour in the Lord's vineyards—workers together with God, being soldiers of the cross, waging a good warfare, armed with- "the whole armour of God." It is following our Captain, wielding the sword of the spirit, and "visiting the widows and fatherless in, their afflictions and keeping ourselves unspotted from the world."

Many experiences of the faithful in the past can be given; we think of our Lord's wonderful example and then Paul's experience expressed in 2 Cor. 11:23-33. It is in such schools as this that the Christian gains true experience that worketh hope and knows no discouragement; "that maketh not ashamed because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts." It is eminently practical, and it is impossible to separate experimental from practical Christianity.

Christian experience is bearing fruit. "Herein is my Father glorified that ye bear much fruit." What is this fruit which glorifies God? First, it is an inward growth of grace in our own hearts. Secondly, the fruitfulness of doing good to others. Both these growths come as a result of abiding in Christ—in the Vine. An ordinary vine is grown for the purpose of bearing fruit, not for the vine, but that others may pluck it for their use. So with the Christian, the growth in grace in the present life is in order that he may be qualified to be with Christ in the future Kingdom and with Him bless all nations.

Is not God calling 144,000 volunteers to pass through certain experiences in order to do away with sin in the future age? The Scriptures also speak of this as a sin-offering. One can see the need of experiences to exercise our faith and obedience. Perhaps the peace of God is not ruling our hearts fully, so experiences are permitted which not only call for greater exercise of faith, but more dependent leaning upon God's strength. We need His providential overruling continually in our lives, and we need to take notice of them for our spiritual advancement.

We seem best able to call to mind and are especially happy of God's providences and experiences that have come upon us suddenly — perhaps unawares we have been almost run over in the street. We don't know how we escaped, or some other happening had almost overtaken us, but we got through remarkably well. We say that that was providential—a real evidence of God's overruling and protection—as if it should be special cause for thankfulness and joy to God. Well, so it should be, but it seems that some Christians exalt such experiences far outside their proportion, and imagine that if others do not have such miraculous deliverances, they cannot be 'experiencing God's providence in a very great degree.

This brings to mind a little story that was read some years ago, regarding the experiences of a doctor and a traveller, who went continually over the same road on their errands. This road passed over a hill having a very sharp downward grade. On this day, the traveller passed down the side of the hill with his horse and vehicle as usual when suddenly the breeching strap broke, the vehicle lurched forward on the horse which soon became startled—neither horse nor vehicle could be controlled, but careered madly down the side of the hill. It seemed as though there must be a smash, but fortunately, somehow, it was guided towards an upward grade at the foot of the hill, which soon brought the vehicle to a standstill. In speaking of this to the doctor, the traveller said, “Now, that’s a wonderful providence on my part.” “Well,” said the doctor, “I too passed over and down that hill yesterday, and my breeching strap did not break, so Divine providence did more for me than for you.”

So, friends, let us count our many blessings, great and small, and experience the blessedness of Psalm 91—“He that abideth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty.” And again in Isa. 26:20, 21, “Come my people enter thou into thy chambers, etc,”

Let us all remember that all of the Lord’s special dealings with His people during this Gospel Age are with a view to developing them in character, not only good characters but fixed characters. It is not sufficient that we accept Christ, nor sufficient that we should preach Him to others. To be fit for the heavenly Kingdom, we must develop characters in harmony with our Lord—gentle, yet firm; sweet, yet strong. This is signified in the terms of our discipleship; we are to copy our Teacher, who is also our Redeemer. We are to let His light shine; it is important that we see this fact. The difficulty apparently with the majority of people is that they do not see and do not understand the purpose of life, hence valuable opportunities and precious lessons are wasted upon them.

One person has recently said, “I know a man whose accomplishments have been the marvel of all who knew him; who in his boyhood made the resolution, “Let every occasion be the great occasion, for you cannot tell when fate may be taking your measure for a larger place.” If he went to school, he kept thinking, “I must not skip the hard problems, for they may arise up in my manhood and testify against my faithfulness as a boy, and may defeat me. I must see an opportunity in every lesson and- cultivate a habit of overcoming, a habit of faithfulness and accuracy.”

This is merely an elaboration of what the Good Book says—“Do with thy might what thy hand findeth to do, for there is neither wisdom, nor knowledge, nor device in the grave whither thou goest.” And again—“He that is faithful in that which is least will be faithful also in much.” Difficulties in the way would not prove that it is not the right way. Bunyan’s “Pilgrim” in travelling toward the heavenly city found the hill of difficulty in his way. And our Lord forewarned all who would walk in His steps that their pathway must of necessity be full of tribulations—testings. The reward is to them that overcome. There could be no overcoming unless there were difficulties.

Convention News.

The Annual Convention held by the Melbourne Class over the four days of the Christmas season, at the close of last year, proved a most profitable time again.

Looking back on such an occasion our hearts are continually raised in praise and thankfulness to the Lord for making these gatherings possible, and for the helpful encouragement received from the assemblies as a whole. The experience of all who attended these meetings in Melbourne seemed to be that of gaining much spiritual refreshment, which it is hoped may long remain with each one.

The local brethren very gladly welcomed some visiting members from other states and country parts, and it was a great joy to see their faces again and to note the continued love and zeal for the Lord and His truth.

After opening each day of the Convention with praise and prayer, a Bible Study followed, and the portions of Scripture selected, one for each day, are as follows:-2 Cor. 5:1-10; Luke 17:20-27; Luke 17:28-37; and Rom. 11:25-33.

In 2 Cor. 5, the assurance of a spiritual house being prepared for all who so labor in the tabernacle condition as to be accepted of the Lord, was very comforting. The main lesson impressed was that of the necessity of being willing to be pilgrims and strangers—not being “at home in ‘the body’”—walking by faith and not by sight, that we may be present with the Lord in the spirit of our fellowship, and eventually enter the heavenly home, the immortal state. “He that bath wrought us for the selfsame thing is God, who also bath given unto us the earnest of the spirit.”

The passage in Luke 17:20-37, engaged the attention of the brethren for two afternoons and proved a most timely and instructive study from our Lord's own words. It was seen that the opening verses applied to the time of Christ's first advent, when He answered the Pharisees concerning the Kingdom He was proclaiming. Then followed the important message to His disciples respecting His second advent and the manner of His presence—unknown to all except His own people. The warning was particularly noted—”And they shall say to you, see here; or, see there; go not after them ;” thus definitely indicating that the Lord would not come in human form that He could be located in any one place or city, etc. The following verse, 24 explained so clearly the glorious appearing of “the Son of Man in His day” as “the bright shining cometh out of the east and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the presence of the Son of Man be.” (Matt. 24:27)

Then the days of Noah and the days of Lot had their special lesson. Just as the ark in Noah's day and the mountain in Lot's day were the only places of safety, so in these days of the Son of Man our only refuge is in Christ—fleeing to the mountain (kingdom) of the Lord. It was noted also that Noah and his family would represent the faithful in Christ, whereas Lot may possibly picture some who are fearful of obeying the Lord fully (the Great Company; see Gen. 19:17-22); and Lot's wife would symbolise those who look back wilfully, and suffer the second death.

The closing verses of this study impressed how the harvest work would progress — one here and there being taken from various walks of life to be gathered together as earnest and zealous Christians. “Wheresoever the body (food) is, thither will the eagles be gathered together”—feasting on the truths due throughout the time of harvest. “Blessed are those servants whom the Lord when He cometh shall find watching: verily, I say unto you, that He shall gird Himself and make them to sit down to meat and will come forth and serve them.”

On the last day of the Convention, the Bible Study in Rom. 11:25-33, brought out many beautiful thoughts on the wonderful plan of redemption. It was clearly seen that “the fulness of the Gentiles,” along with the remnant of faithful Christian Jews would constitute the elect, or Bride of Christ, the spiritual seed, and when united with Christ; “all Israel shall be saved.” The New Covenant would then be made with Israel and eventually “all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God.” “O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God.”

The addresses of the brethren added much to the helpfulness of the occasion, and the main thoughts from as many as possible will appear in this, and following issues of the “Peoples Paper.” The speakers' topics were:—“In the footsteps of Christ,” “Rebuilding,” “The Life of Abraham,” “The Life of Job,” “Christian Experience,” “The Life of Habakkuk,” “In the Last Days,” “Exhortation from Scripture,” “The Knowledge, Understanding and Wisdom of God,” “Faithful in Little,” and “The Witness of Jesus.”

The Fellowship Meetings—two on Praise and Testimony, the Question Meeting and the session, ‘A hymn I like and why,’ all provided further opportunities for the friends to converse respecting the Lord's loving kindness and their faith and confidence in all His rich promises through Christ. The messages of Christian love and Scripture texts received from the Classes and individual brethren, including one by telegram from Sydney, were very much appreciated and the Convention message chosen to be sent to all the friends, together with the warm Christian love from all assembled, is found in Phil. 1:2-6, 9, 10.

Then, with the parting Love Feast and Hymns, “Blest be the tie that binds,” and “God be with you till we meet again,” the Convention closed with a prayer of thankfulness and praise to the Giver of every good and perfect gift, and with the desire that the coming year may find all the Lord's people progressing in harmony with His will.

“The Lord be with you!” steals the benediction
With solemn splendor like a falling star;
In morns of joy and midnights of afflictions,
It breathes its echoed sweetness near and far.

“The Lord be with you!” when the shadows hold you;
And prove His loving power to soothe and bless;
When dangers darken and when fears enfold you,
“The Lord be with you in His tenderness!”

Passover Memorial, 1938.

The Memorial date for this year falls on Thursday evening, 14th April, this being the 14th of Nisan, according to the Jewish Calendar, and the anniversary of the institution of the Lord's Supper.

Swedish Brother Finished his Course.

WORD from Brother G. Sandblom, of Sweden, advises of the passing of Brother Wessman, with the request that this be made known to our brethren, some of whom have been corresponding with the departed Brother. The message states:—"Our dear Brother Charles E. Wessman died here at Goteborg, on 6th November. A dear Sister Pettersson took care of him the last days and nights with the most Christian love, and I gave him the help I could. The doctor said there was nothing to do, because the diabetes was so strong.

"Our dear Brother Wessman was a very good friend of mine for many years past, and he was a very good Christian, and followed in his Master's footsteps to the end, and I think he could say with Paul: 'I have, fought a good fight, I have finished my course,. I have kept the faith.'"

We have happy memories of very helpful correspondence with Brother Wessman for some years past. While it was evident that he suffered much at times, there was no complaint, but always that ready zeal and love that prompted to service at every opportunity. It is good to think of his faithfulness to the Lord and His truth, even unto death.

Re-Building.

(Convention Address).

“Except The Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it • except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain.”—Psa. 127:1.

ANYONE engaged in the building trade will have had varied experiences, and especially in the case of rebuilding will know all the awkward corners to be remedied. In some buildings that are pulled down we find some very superior workmanship, while others are quite the opposite in their construction, being out of date and must be rebuilt according to the advancing conditions prevailing. But before any rebuilding can be done, the old must be demolished, and what a work it is sometimes. One is apt to be nearly choked with the dust of years gone by. So with the advance of light in religion the old building must be first pulled down, and we realise how much dust and rubbish must be removed before we can make a clean start.

In these renovations we pick out that which is serviceable, and fit to be used again. So, in the Christian work of rebuilding, there are portions of the former building that we may retain, but much needs to be cast out. To begin with, we may find faulty places in the foundation. A sound concrete foundation will give good results for the future stability of the structure. To the Christian, his best foundation is a rock, as we sing in the good old hymn, “On Christ the solid rock I stand; All other ground is sinking sand.” We also read in Isa. 28:16, “Behold I lay in Zion for a foundation, a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation; he that believeth on Him shall not make haste..” And the Apostle Paul informs us that “other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ.”

Now we know in building, man can build with all sorts of foundations and on various kinds of ground: A wise and experienced person will take care that the ground chosen for a building site is solid, not too low lying, nor too slanting. Low lying land is apt to become inundated with heavy rains, and then a building erected upon slanting ground often cracks and must be bolted together to save it from falling, even though large stones may be used for a foundation.

Having good ground and a good foundation, the Apostle exhorts, “But let every man take heed how he buiideth thereon.” The materials a man uses to build on the proper foundation may be of inferior quality. Some stone is soft and will gradually fritter away with wet weather; some bricks are of a brittle disposition and will crush with a certain amount of weight. These materials are fire-resisting, but laying weight upon them does much damage. So, with some Christians, they may have a good foundation, yet by not being- careful with the material they use become so weighted that they may be crushed altogether.

The Apostle Paul enumerates various materials when he says: “If any man build upon this foundation, gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble; every man’s work shall be made manifest for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man’s work of what sort it is.” Here we notice some inflammable materials that would not last long in a fire; we know that wood, hay and stubble would soon be burned up—a good illustration of unstable characters and erroneous teachings which would not stand up in fiery trials but would soon be consumed. Then, on the other hand the metals of gold, silver and precious stones are good fire resistants, corresponding to the stability of divine things and those who build upon these.

The Christian’s faith is like a building, and must have foundation and superstructure. Every principle of truth or error that we adopt becomes a part of our faith building. A building of wood and its various by-products looks very nice and may be a good protection for a time, but will not endure like the more costly structure. The building of our faith is largely left with ourselves; God furnishes a mine of truth and places the tools within our reach that we may dig into the hidden treasures. The wise man says (Prov. 2:4): "If thou seekest her as silver, and searchest for her as for hid treasures, then shalt thou find." This wisdom is defined by Webster, as true religion, a true system of faith and worship. In our building we must add faith to faith, virtue to virtue, and knowledge to greater knowledge. Thus the Lord would have us grow and build ourselves up in grace and knowledge and love.

The importance of the statement that Jesus is the foundation of all faith toward God is confirmed by the words: "There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." No other basis of faith will do—"Other foundation can no man lay." As written by another—"Those, who are building on this foundation rock are Christians, though they build thereupon with a poor faith. Even though they build entirely with the wood, hay and stubble of men's traditions, yet as builders upon the Rock, they are Christians; though in this clay of the Lord, into which we have now entered their works shall suffer loss, yet they themselves shall be saved, so as by fire. That is, God has arranged that a fierce trial of faith is coming upon all who profess to be on the Rock, Christ Jesus, which will burn up and destroy every vestige of error; everything which is of man and not from God's Word. However, all who truly recognise the Rock and are built on it shall be saved."

Those who build on the Rock with gold, silver and precious stones of God's revelation, are enabled to overcome the world and carry out their consecration acceptably to God through Jesus Christ, by reason of this good and proper faith building. Whereas those who build with wood, hay and stubble of human traditions are those who do not overcome the world, but who are ensnared and bound by its spirit and hindered from carrying out their consecration.

If all Christians valued truth properly, they would buy it and sell it not, though it cost time, inconvenience and self-denial to get it, and reputation and sacrifice to hold it. Thus by symbols of building material, we see a distinction represented between the two classes—those who are saved by fire, and the overcomers, the royal Bride who shall reign with Christ in His throne. Therefore, may we all keep before our minds and seek the prize of our high calling, taking heed how and with what material we build our faith structure, even though on the sure foundation.

Some may build their hope on right doing as a basis that God will grant them eternal life. These do not build on the Rock, Christ Jesus, but upon their own works. Of this class were the Jews who sought to justify themselves, but the Apostle Paul assures us that they had not a good foundation, for "by the deeds of the Law shall no flesh be justified." Others build their hope of salvation on the love of God. Such feel sure that because God is very pitiful and of tender mercy, therefore He will ultimately save every one from death eternally. These would not be Christians if they build hope and faith on the love of God merely, and not on the only foundation, Christ Jesus. The love of God provided the foundation, but the love of God alone is not the foundation of Christian faith.

Others build on the justice of God and declare that He is bound by principles of justice to deliver all men out of Adamic death—that having placed man in his present condition of sin, misery and death, that in justice to His creatures God must restore them. Those who build their hopes of future life on this reasoning are building on a false foundation, because the Scriptures inform us that "by grace are ye saved." None of these theories are Scriptural, hence none of them is a proper foundation for faith, and any building raised thereon is sure to end in destruction. This is the foundation which God has laid in Zion, "a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation"—Christ Jesus.

Correspondence.

N. S. Wales.

Dear Brother,

As we reach the end of the year again, it is time to renew my subscription to the "P.P." and "Dawn"
Please find a postal note for and anything over will go to the Tract Fund.

I was very pleased to see the first article in the December "P.P.," as we have been having some extreme views on time prophecy drawn to our notice lately. One that the Millennium started long ago and our Lord has been reigning for about 60 years, and hinting that if we do not accept their teaching we would have no hope of being in the Kingdom. I don't know where they get their authority to judge and condemn their brethren.

Now we have others at the other extreme saying that our Lord's second advent has not taken place yet. I don't know from where we could get the harvest messages if the Lord of the harvest was not present. I have no doubt our heavenly Father is pleased to see us interested in any of His plans, but I do not believe that any one will be shut out of the Kingdom for a want of knowledge of time prophecy.

Wishing you and all the dear ones with you the compliments of the season, with Christian love,

Your Brother by the Lord's favor.

Victoria. Dear Brother and Sister,

It is with grateful hearts to the Giver of every good thing that we pen these few lines, remembering the many, many kindnesses we received. during our recent stay. . . . I have been going over the studies, and still hope to, to recall and impress the many helpful lessons of the passages, and in the main I expect we will get the addresses later on in the "P.P." After such a season of fellowship, everything in the way of study and daily experiences seem more meaningful and the little "Manna" readings seem deeper and richer than ever. Especially has each one from "Green Pastures" appealed to me; here is a sample: "God many times answers our prayers not by bringing down His will to ours, but by lifting us up to Himself. We grow strong, so as to need no longer to cry for relief. We can bear the heavy load without asking to have it lightened. We can keep the sorrow now and endure it. We can go on in quiet peace without the new blessing we thought so necessary. We have not been saved from the battle we shrank so from entering, but we have fought it through and have gained the victory. Is not victoriousness in conflict better than being freed from the conflict! Is not peace in the midst of the storm and the strife better than being lifted altogether over the strife." And so, as we were reminded, "goodness and mercy shall follow us all the days of our life," we enter the year before us knowing that it will have its joys and sorrows, failures and successes, just as other years have and will have. so long as we remain in this tabernacle, but with calm trust knowing all is well so long as daily, hourly and every moment our heart condition is, "Thy will, not mine, be done."

With our sincere Christian love,

Yours in Christian fellowship.

Question Box.

Question—There is one point in the article in December “P.P.,” that is not clear to me. It is the statement on page 90, second column—“These 70 sabbaths (2 Chron. 36:21) are the same period as Daniel’s. 70 weeks, etc.” Do not the three score and ten years mean the same thing as the 70 years desolation which began 606 B.C. and ended 536 B.C.? Then how can this be the same period as Daniel’s 70 weeks, which began B.C.454?

Answer—The 70 years desolation began with the dethronement of Zedekiah about 587 B.C., not with the captivity of Jehoiakim in 606 B.C. That however does not affect the fulfilment of the prophecy which was to begin its counting of 70 sabbaths or 70 weeks “from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem.”

Each of those years of the 70 years of desolation was to represent a land sabbath. Israel was even then being punished under “the time of the Gentiles,” and though Divine favor would not be entirely withdrawn from the nation until 490 years after the command to restore Jerusalem, the nation would not be able to properly observe the laws of the land sabbaths and jubilees. (Lev. 25:3, 4.) So, it seems these 70 sabbath years were taken in advance as a prophecy, which Daniel’s prophecy makes clearer and supplies the date when the 490 years would begin to count, which was the 20th year of Artaxerxes, (Neh. 2:1), or B.C. 454,

Prayer Brings Peace.

BEING in an agony, He prayed,” is the record of our Saviour’s Gethsemane experience. The lesson stands for all time. Like a bright lamp, the little sentence shines amid the olive trees of the garden. It shows us the path to comfort in our time of sorrow. Never before or since was there such grief as the Redeemer’s that night, but in His prayer He found comfort. As we watch Him the hour through, we see the agony changing as He prayed, until at last its bitterness was all gone, and sweet, blessed peace took its place. The gate of prayer is always the gate to comfort.

There is no other place to go. We may learn also from our Lord’s Gethsemane how to pray in our Gethsemanes. God will never blame us for asking to have the cup removed nor for the intensity of our supplication; but we must pray with submission. It is when we say in our deepest intensity. “Not my will, but Thine,” that comfort comes, that peace Comes.

Perfect loyalty to Christ brings perfect peace into the heart. The secret of Christ’s own peace was His absolute devotion to His Father’s will. We can find peace in no other way. Any resistance to God’s will, and disobedience of His law, any wrenching of our lives out of His hand must break the peace of our hearts. No lesson that He gives ever mars our peace, if we receive it with willing, teachable spirit, and strive to learn it just as He has written it out for us. If we take the lessons just as they are given to us, we shall make our life music and we shall find peace. —Selected Thoughts for the New Year.

If clouds of trouble gather near,
Sometime throughout this coming year,
And things we prize should disappear,
We'll find no change in Jesus.

If foes surprise and lay us low,
And swell our hearts with pain and woe,
And friends, unheeding, onward go,
We'll find no change in Jesus.

If fortune turns from us away,
And poverty should come to stay,
And friends their shallow hearts betray,
We'll find no change in Jesus.

And so 'twill be until the end,
We'll always have a precious Friend,
Upon whose love we may depend:
We'll find no change in Jesus.

No change in Him, no change in Him:
All glory to His precious Name!
For us His love remains the same:
We'll find no change in Jesus.

Beheaded for the Witness of Jesus and for the Word of God.

(Rev. 6:9-11; Rev. 20:4. Convention Address.)

IN the above texts we find two views of those who were slain for the witness of Jesus and for the Word of God. The first is that of the faithful witnesses who loved not their lives unto the death under the fifth seal (Rev. 12:11). Many had by that time been literally slain, some literally beheaded, some burned to death, others done to death by terrible torturous methods; some under Pagan Rome but many more under Papal Rome. The fifth seal would appear to reach clown to about the time when the severity of the days of persecution was about to be broken, for the sixth seal seems to indicate the • French Revolution as the great earthquake, which resulted in Napoleon gaining such power as to be able to take the Pope prisoner to France, and thus Rome's persecuting power was broken in 1799.

Up to that time the witnesses of Jesus and of the Word of God had suffered terribly. It required earnest, full assurance of faith and Christian courage to be a true Christian in those days, for it meant standing against the mighty power of Rome, the terrible "beast" spoken of by Daniel that would "wear out the saints of the Most High." .

The history of the Waldenses and Huguenots and of the wicked Inquisition reveals a noble army of martyrs and it seemed as though true Christianity was about to be stamped out. The saints of that period are represented as crying out, "How 'long, O Lord, holy and true, does Thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?" It seemed strange that the Lord should allow error to triumph over truth and wicked men to hold positions claiming to be Christ's representatives, and to carry out such diabolical schemes and methods to prevent the knowledge of the Word of God and the true spirit of Jesus Christ being manifested. These were comforted and assured that, as Christ had suffered, so they too must follow in His steps, and in due time the Lord would reward their faithfulness even as He had rewarded Christ. "If we suffer with Him we shall also be glorified together." "It was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow servants also and their brethren, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled." Then they would take part in the first resurrection as stated in the 20th chapter.

In this 20th chapter the picture is quite different. The sufferings are all over, the consecration to death--the baptism into Christ's death (Rom. 6:3) --is all completed, the full number of the elect are raised from the sleep of death to die no more, but to reign with Christ a thousand years.

This scene is at the end of the Gospel Age and is described by Paul in 1 Thes. 4:14-17. “For the Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout (i.e. a proclamation of truth), with the voice of the Archangel and with; the trump of God and the dead in Christ (those who had been beheaded and had died during the age and rested in the tomb) shall rise first: Then we which are alive and remain (until Christ’s presence) shall be caught up (to be) together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air (the heavens).” This is the first (chief) resurrection.

The book of Revelation is full of symbols, and while the slaying and beheading is literally true of so many Christians, yet the fact of being beheaded or slain because of professing Christ would not necessarily secure a part in the first resurrection, Or the reward to “sit with Christ in His throne.” (Rev. 3:21.) Unless there had been the real beheading of ourselves, the denying of ourselves, the yielding up of our own will to the Divine will—death to the human will, the human thoughts, aims and desires—and acceptance of Christ as our head, our director, through the word of His spirit; unless there has been the manifesting of the life of Jesus in our mortal bodies, this witnessing of Jesus, then there could be no part in the picture of Rev. 20:4 where the beheaded ones are seen as sitting upon thrones of judgment and “they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.”

Thus in these references (Rev. 6:9-11 and Rev. 20:4) we have first the picture of the Church of Christ in course of being selected, “filling up that which was left over of the afflictions of Christ”—the Church in her humiliation, slain for the witness of Jesus and for the Word of God. The later reference shows the reward, the exaltation, the Church in glory, reigning with Christ for the blessing of all the families of earth.

Many who claim to be Christians seem to think that the path of life becomes easier, that the Lord blesses with earthly blessings those who believe in Christ. There is nothing in the New Testament teachings, either of our Lord or the Apostles, to indicate anything of the kind. On the other hand the teachings show that “as many as will live godly in Christ Jesus shall stiffer persecution.” “In the world ye shall have tribulation.” But there are exceeding great and precious promises of spiritual things and heavenly rewards; promises of the Lord’s overruling of all circumstances, all things for good; promises of the Divine presence and guidance and of the holy spirit to guide us into all truth and teach us things to come. There are promises that though we must, like our Captain, be perfected through suffering, yet nothing shall be too heavy for us to bear, grace and strength are promised for each day and each time of need, and the wonderful hope set before us gives strength to endure the cross even with joy and a peace that the world can neither give nor take away, nor can understand.

The first picture indicates that the time seems long, and when we read the history of persecution and martyrdom one realises how the Church has longed for the great consummation of its hopes as the Bride of the Lamb.

“The spirit through the lonely night,
From earthly joy apart,
Hath sighed for one that’s far away,
The Bridegroom of thy heart.”

“‘A little while;’ with patience, Lord,
I fain would ask, ‘How long?’
For how can I, with such a hope
Of glory and of home,

With such a joy awaiting me,
Not wish the hour were come

How can I keep the longing back,
And how suppress the groan?"

Yet what advantages we have beyond such as Job and the prophets, who endured such terrible afflictions without understanding anything of God's purpose. In those days it was usual for God to protect the righteous and to reward them with earthly prosperity, family blessings, health and long life, and Job was, probably, the most God-fearing and just man then alive. He was quite unconscious of any reason why God should permit such afflictions and losses and the tauntings even of his friends. There was, however, a Divine purpose working out which Job would ultimately rejoice in. While utterly unable to understand God's dealings and while crying out, "How long," yet he had determined, "Yea, though He slay me, yet will I trust Him."

With the Church there has been the understanding of sufficient of the Divine Plan of the Ages and the mystery of God to know that the sufferings are necessary and that grievous and painful and distressing as they may be, they are but light afflictions, but for a moment, in comparison to the weight of glory that they are working out for us. So that Paul, so faithful in all that he suffered, could say, "We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed; always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our body." That is the true witness of Jesus by these self-beheaded ones—the manifesting in their lives the life of Jesus.

It is because we have presented our bodies a living sacrifice to God, holy and acceptable through the merit of our Head, Christ, that our bodies are then looked upon as members in Christ, and we have become members one of another, having been "baptised into Christ"—"into His death." We have been justified by faith in Him and His righteousness has been applied to us so that we may have something to present to God in sacrifice and follow His steps and be counted in with His all sufficient sacrifice, which will in due time be applied for the sins of the whole world. (1 John 2:2.) Peter says (1 Peter 4:13): "Rejoice inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings, that when His glory is revealed ye may be glad with exceeding joy."

It is our privilege to "fill up that which remains of the sufferings of Christ for His body's sake" (Col. 1:24). Christ the Head was first laid on the altar, then there remained the whole body to be sacrificed and laid upon the altar to the Head, as in the picture of Lev. 8. All down the Gospel Age, since the Apostles as the first members were placed on the altar, other members have also been witnessing Jesus—His death—and soon now the body will be complete. This is undoubtedly indicated in our text Rev. 6:11. The suffering Church cried out, "How long," and the answer came that they should rest a while until the remainder of the body had also finished their course, had been "slain for the witness of Jesus." Then all would be raised and receive the great reward.

Sometimes our personal trials, sorrows and afflictions seem so long and we no doubt feel like crying out, "O Lord, how long," but if we can attain faith like Paul and just trust, we shall find peace and rest, even in the stress and storm. We know that our faith must be proved and it can only be proved by trials—trials that we cannot understand. So Peter exhorts, "Think it not strange concerning the fiery trials that shall try you." We must trust God even though not able to trace His dealings with us. "We know that all things shall work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose." We must live up to the hymn we sing, "I'd rather walk in the dark with God than go alone in the light."

"Yet peace, my heart! and hush my tongue?
Be calm, my troubled breast!
Each passing hour prepares thee more
For everlasting rest.

Thou knowest well,, the time thy God
Appoints for thee is best.
The morning star already shines:
The glow is in the east.”

It would seem clear that the witness of Jesus, or as one MSS. has it, “The witness of the Lamb,” means much more than just preaching the Gospel, circulating the truth or evangelistic work, for we read that at the end of the way there will be some who will be disappointed when they find themselves excluded from being among the “beheaded” ones who sit with Christ in His throne. Jesus said, “Many will say in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy name ? and in Thy name have cast out devils? and in Thy name done many wonderful works ?” Yet the Lord will reply, “I never knew you: . . . ye that work iniquity.” “Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven.” (Matt. 7:21-23.)

The Witness of Jesus.

The witness of Jesus we would understand to include the telling of the glad message of redemption through the blood of His cross—the ransom price for human guilt, first for the Church and then in due time for all the world.

That is good news indeed, and it is witnessing to the mission of Jesus. It would be witnessing to Jesus to speak of His gracious words, His kind acts, the spending of His strength in healing the sick, giving sight to the blind, raising the dead, etc. Also of how “He bore our griefs and carried our sorrows, was wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities; how He was led as a lamb to the slaughter and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb so He opened not His mouth.”

And while it is our zeal in thus witnessing that brings the persecutions, yet it is possible to do all this witnessing of the Word of God and we might be killed or burned at the stake and yet not be “beheaded for the witness of Jesus and the Word of God.” There must be the true self-beheading the yielding up of our own heads, our own ideas, thoughts and fancies, “casting down imaginations (reasonings) and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ.” (2 Cor. 10:5.)

There must be the glad surrender of our wills and following of Christ who said, “I come to do Thy will, O my God.” “Not My will but Thine be done.” It is there that we begin to give the true witness of Jesus that is implied in our text.

It requires not only the act of consecration but the daily performance. Like our Lord we “have a baptism to be baptised with, and how am I straitened until it be accomplished.”

In one of the parables a father has two sons of whom he requests a service. One promised to do it, but failed to keep his word; the other at first refused but soon repented and did the work. Which did the will of the father ? It is better not to vow than to vow and not to pay; better never to have consecrated to follow the Lamb than to draw back and neglect the will of God. Those who are to share the throne with Christ will be those who have diligently endeavoured to witness the Word of God and whose lives have been living witnesses of the life of Christ—“Epistles of Christ known and read of all men”; those of whom it can be said, “They have been with Jesus and learned of Him”; have caught His spirit, have gained a likeness of his character and disposition.

The Christian way is not an easy way, for there is so much in our poor fallen human nature that is to be subdued and overcome. Some have difficulty in one way—certain inherited dispositions—others in other ways, for we all have some of the works of the flesh which may hinder us, trip us and discourage us. While we would try just to speak like Jesus and act like Him the old nature gets in the way, an impatient word, an angry look, or pride, or jealousy so often spoil the witness of Jesus in our lives. What is required is a more complete beheading, a thorough emptying of the depraved, selfish spirit and a fuller filling of the holy spirit, the spirit of Jesus.

The spirit of love and tender compassion will lead us to think of the good of others, and how our words and actions may wound or hinder our brother or sister in Christ, or some members of our homes, or those we meet in our daily goings. We should try to deal with others as we would they should treat us if our positions were reversed; that would be a witness of Jesus, for that was His golden rule.

As true witnesses of Jesus our lives must manifest Him to others, The life of Jesus was a life of self negation—a life of sacrifice for the good of others—and it has pleased the Father to select a “Bride,” a “little flock” to be joint-heirs with Christ in His kingdom. In order that these shall become copies of Christ in character, He had arranged that they shall have the privileges of following His steps and be perfected through similar experiences, “tempted in all points” as He was. As Jesus was led as a lamb to the slaughter, so these are to be killed all the (Gospel) day long and counted as sheep for the slaughter. (Rom. 8:36.)

It means diligent effort if we are to live as nearly as possible as Christ lived—laying down His life for others—and to die like Him in full confidence in the Heavenly Father’s love and power to raise us up to be with Him. What a wonderful hope it is that “where He is, we may be also”—to be associates with Him in His kingdom for the blessing of all the residue of mankind. “I saw the souls that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus and for the Word of God and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.”

Our Seventh Day friends take the book of Revelation so literally that one cannot but wonder what they think about souls without heads being crowned and reigning with Christ ! The usual thought about Jesus is that He still has “five bleeding wounds received on Calvary”—in His side, His hands and feet. If this were true we should have to think of the martyrs, some • beheaded, some burned, some with distorted bodies and lost limbs, as being forever so disfigured.

How foolish such thoughts are and how beautiful are the symbols of God’s Book when rightly understood.

It matters not what may be done with the poor human body. It is not that body which is sown (in the tomb) that shall be, “But God giveth it a body as it pleaseth Him.” We do not know what we shall be like, but we know that when we shall see Him (Christ) we shall be like Him (1 John 3:2); not as He was on earth, for He “was put to death flesh but quickened spirit,” but as a glorious spiritual being, in the “express image of the Father’s person.”

“This is the first (chief) resurrection.” “Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power. but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with Him a thousand years.” (Rev. 20:6.)

“It takes our hearts a long, long time to climb,
Just struggling up one day at a time.;
To find at last a faith, in which to rest,
Knowing His love sends only what is best.

It takes a long, long while to train our eyes,

Up to the hills, where His sure promise lies;
And then to walk His ways and with a smile,
To trust completely, for life's little while."

We Shall Not All Sleep.

THE manner in which the members in Christ are changed from the earthly to the heavenly condition is of much importance to those who desire to be fully informed respecting all that the Lord has been pleased to reveal to His children by His Word and spirit.

While many seem to see clearly that the Lord's people all down the Gospel Age, on finishing the earthly way in death, have fallen asleep, to await the time when "the dead in Christ shall rise first," some have difficulty in understanding how the last members—those "who are alive and remain unto the presence of the Lord"—are dealt with in fulfilment of the Apostle's words, "we shall not all sleep."

At the present time when the truth concerning the presence of Christ is being discredited by many, it is not surprising that the change of the last members of the Church should also be misunderstood and interpreted to support the incorrect view of the manner of our Lord's return.

It should be clearly noted that the Apostle in 1 Cor. 15:51, 52, does not imply that any of the "we" class—the Lord's people—shall not die. He had previously stated in this same chapter, verses 1-4; and 18, that some of the saints had already "fallen asleep" in death. But now, in regard to those of the same class who would be living on the earth "at the last trump," he would show them "a mystery." The procedure of their change to "the image of the heavenly," at the consummation of the human sacrifice, would be different in that they would not need to sleep in the unclothed condition, because at this time—the presence of Christ—the dead in Christ would have been raised already, so there would be no necessity for these last members to sleep, on their proving faithful unto death.

In thinking of the new creature, the new life, being transferred from the earthen vessel to the spiritual house (God giving to every seed its own body), that we may be like Christ, "for we shall see Him as He is," it may appear to some that the conscious existence would be unbroken, when the Apostle says it "will come about" "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye." This, however, is not the Apostle's thought. The new creature could have no conscious existence apart from a body, and as the death of the earthly body is real and true in the case of all the saints right down the Gospel Age, so the unconsciousness before the union with the spirit body is just as real and true in every case, but the mystery is, that now in "the days of the Son of Man"—the presence of Christ—the union of the new creature, the new life, with the spirit body will come so quickly following the release from the earthen vessel that there will be no sleeping period, no remaining in the unconscious state, the transition period being so short. Hence he uses the words, "In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye." "Blessed are the dead who (lie in the Lord from henceforth: (during the time of Christ's presence, the harvest time) Yea, saith the spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." (Rev. 14:13)

The Greek Word “Parousia”

SOME of our friends have taken the trouble to investigate the meaning of the Greek word “parousia” from some of the leading authorities, whose works are deposited in the Melbourne Public Library. - Together with the meaning from Prof. Young’s Concordance, the following list should prove very convincing and helpful to our readers.

It is clear that all these scholars recognise that the true meaning of this Greek word is “presence.”

Young’s Concordance.—Gk. Parousia: A being alongside, presence.

Woodhouse.—Presence = Gk. Parousia. ‘Coming’ in the sense of ‘journey’ is one Greek word, in sense of ‘arrival’ is another, and in sense of ‘presence’ = parousia.

Liddell and ,Scott.—Gk. Parousia = (1) Being present, presence of persons or of things. Example from the Greek Sophocles: “that we have no friends present to assist us.” (2) Arrival.

Edwards.—Presence = Parousia. Coming = a quite different word.

Arnold and Browne.—Presence = Parousia.

Kyriakides.—Parousia = presence; (in theology) the final judgment, the second coming or advent of Christ.

- Greek Lexicon of the New Testament, Grimm (Thayer).—Parousia = (1) Presence, 1 Cor. 16:17; 2 Cor. 10:10; opposed to Gk. for ‘absence,’ in Phil. 2:12. (2) The presence of one coming, hence coming, arrival, advent, 2 Cor. 7:6; 2 Thes. 2:9; Phil. 1:26. In the New Testament, especially of the advent, i.e. the future return from heaven of Jesus, the Messiah, to raise the dead, hold the last judgment and set up formally and gloriously the Kingdom of God, Matt. 24:3.

Convention Exhortation from Scripture

“How precious are Thy thoughts unto me, O God! How great is the sum of them.” (Psalm 139:17)

BRETHREN, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted.” (Gal. 6:1) “And above all things_ have fervent charity among yourselves: for charity shall cover the multitude of sins.” (1 Peter 4:8) “Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man, shall see the Lord. Looking diligently lest any fail of the grace of God; lest any root of bitterness springing up trouble you and thereby many be defiled.” (Heb. 12:14, 15.)

“Put on, therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, long-suffering; forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any have a quarrel against any: even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye. And above all these things put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness. And let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to which ye are called in one body; and be ye thankful. Let the Word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing One another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with melody in your hearts to the Lord.” (Col. 3:12-17.)

“Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt, that ye may know how ye ought to answer every man.” (Col. 4:6) “And, whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God the Father by him. Knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward: for ye serve the Lord Christ.” (Col. 3:17,24)

“For brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another.” (Gal. 5:13)

“Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently.” (1 Peter I:22) “Being kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honour preferring one another.” (Rom. 12:10) “For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this; Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one. of another.” (Gal. 5:14,15) Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and everyone who loveth is begotten of God and knoweth God.” (1 John 4:7) “Bear ye one another’s burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ.” (Gal. 6:2)

“For what glory is it if when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently ? But if, when ye do well and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God. For even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an’ example, that we should follow in his steps: who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth: who, when he was reviled, reviled not again: when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously.” (1 Peter 2:20-23) “Therefore, let them that suffer according to the will of God commit the keeping of their souls to him in well-doing, as unto a faithful Creator.” (1 Peter 4:19)

“And now little children, abide in him; that, when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be put to shame in his presence.” (1 John 2:28) Therefore, by love let us serve one another.

Re-Building.

THE Apostle Paul declares the foundation of all Christian faith, saying, "I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures." (1 Cor. 15:1.) He tells us that this is the Gospel which he preached, which they had received and by which alone they might be saved.

It is in vain that any say they are building on Christ just because they acknowledge Him as a leader and noble pattern. There is no doubt that men must acknowledge the perfectness of Jesus' life; all must admit that He is a noble example, but to acknowledge Him as the foundation of faith in a future life is to recognise the fact that all are sinners and need a Redeemer—"the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world." Herein lies all our safeguard, as He says, "Without me ye can do nothing," and we may add also, we can receive nothing, because we realise that in Him is all our hope.

We read in Eph. 4:8-16, of the Lord, "When He ascended up on high He . . . gave gifts unto men . . . for the perfecting of the saints, unto the work of the ministry, unto the building up of the body of Christ; till we all attain unto the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a full grown man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ: That we be no longer children." The teaching of this passage convinces us of two things. (1) That the service of those several gifts was for one main object—the perfecting of the saints unto the work of the ministry. (2) That the purpose of that ministry was the building up of the body of Christ. A mighty work was to be done and the spiritual gifts more speedily prepared them for that work, but this did not mean that their work was quickly done; it was a life-long labour and ever permitted the exercise of patience, forbearance and prudence.

The man who essays the building of a house for himself and his goods has not only to select good material, but should erect it after a definite plan, on correct architectural principles, otherwise, even though his house may not fall down, it would probably be a laughing-stock of those who look at it. How much more important is the building up of "the house of God," and though the foundation be laid ever so well, there is still great care and much wisdom needed in the superstructure.

In the building of the house of God, He is the great Architect and has supplied His own excellent plan which all who would be capable and competent tradesmen should seek to read correctly. Some inferior tradesmen have read into that plan many things that are not there, and consequently to be acceptable to the Lord their building must be altered to fit in with the Architect's plan and specification.

In raising up the superstructure of an earthly building some tradesmen make the outside look nice and passable, but the inner part may be carelessly done where it is not seen. A building of this kind would prove unsatisfactory in course of time. With the Christian, the building must be well built from within. Whether in natural or spiritual things we cannot reckon a man to be properly taught or trained unless he is built up within, that is in-structed; being informed, furnished unto every good work.

Viewing the building and rebuilding of the temple in the Holy Land as matters of history would be of little importance or interest to us were it not for its typical character. Understanding it thus, there is still in the history of that temple and its prophetic teachings that which should enkindle in our hearts greater enthusiasm and joy than was expressed by those who saw its material glory. We notice by the Apostles' teachings that the anti-type of that temple is the spiritual temple built up with living stones, of which Jesus Christ is the chief corner stone. He became the foundation of this spiritual house when He gave His life, and thus made possible the building up of other living -stones upon this foundation until the wonderful structure shall reach its glorious completeness.

When this foundation of the spiritual temple was laid, all who came to a realisation of the importance of the great work thereby accomplished, rejoiced; and this rejoicing in the strength and security of the foundation of our hopes never ceases. Upon this foundation the temple structure has been gradually and steadily progressing. The living stones are quarried out of the world and by the experience and discipline of the present life they are shaped and chiselled; fitted for their places in the temple.

While the Church glorified with Christ the Head will be the temple complete and glorious, it is in an incomplete sense regarded as the temple of God now, and its various members as builders, having something to do in building each other up in the most holy faith, are thus contributing to the structure of the temple as a whole. The Apostle says, "Ye are God's building." As a building is usually erected to be occupied by some one, more often as an habitation in which to permanently reside or dwell, thus God in His Word speaks of His dwelling in His people—"I will dwell in them and walk in them."

The Apostle prays for His brethren—"That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith," and this is brought out in Eph. 2, where the writer in referring to Christ, the chief corner stone, declares: "In whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord; in whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the spirit." The fitness of the Scriptural illustration here given is that God desires to really have in His Church a dwelling place for Himself.

In the temple which Solomon built not every kind of material was wrought into it, and this has a special significance when we realise that this building was intended to typify the great temple of God which has been in process of construction throughout this age of grace. The wise man did not accept all sorts of timber and stones for his gorgeous temple, but said, "Hew me cedar trees out of Lebanon." The very best material to be found in all the earth was gathered at Jerusalem to be built into the temple and which was to outshine in splendour anything hitherto known; yet that temple which is to be the habitation of God through the spirit will eventually far excel in glory but present powers of imagination.

Where then shall building material be found elegant enough to be reared on so precious a "corner stone," and on so sure a foundation as Jesus Christ? If it was so important to find suitable material for an earthly habitation of God, surely then, if we were permitted to ascend up into glory and see the Great Architect of this great temple seeking material for it, would we not find Him gathering the highest order of obedient angels and constructing them into his spiritual habitation? No, this habitation is constructed of humbler material than angels. Jesus Himself has issued the call, saying, "I came not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance," and, "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." Thus those who accept Him may find in Him this, "tried foundation stone," and though they be quarried from the depths of human sin, they may become in God's 'abounding grace builded together for an habitation of God through the spirit.

In most buildings there are many more small pieces of material than large ones. There are very few large heavy beams and pillars in contrast to the numberless thin boards and small pieces required; there are more small nails than large ones and more large nails than bolts used. So it is with this building of God. There are few of the "wise," "noble," or "great," of this world, who become part of this spiritual house, and while a few such are called, the "common people," poor in spirit but rich in faith, will compose the greater part of God's building.

Other comparisons between an ordinary building and God's greater building may be found in remembering that a large part of any building when going on to completion is out of sight. So many very important pieces of material are hidden from view, and yet their place and share in the building is quite essential to its completeness. So it is with this handiwork of God's. All in this structure are, according to fitness, placed by the Builder "as it pleaseth Him," and they are all necessary to the perfect design.

Though the material of which God's building is composed is at first very poor, and as we have seen so unworthy of the "tried stone" upon which it rests, there are two things which make it very precious, and these are its capacity and durability. Under the fashioning hand of the Builder that, material improves. It gradually becomes more like the foundation on which it is being built. Poor as the material may be when God, takes it to build into the walls of His habitation, it has capacity for great improvement and as God continues to dwell in this abode—in the hearts of His redeemed ones—and they continue to have this intimate fellowship with Him, beholding His face, then are they changed into the same image from glory to glory, even by The spirit of the Lord. ,

Accidents and time demolish the most durable building man can erect; buildings composed of the hardest stones and protected from decay by all the devices known to science, will still crumble away under the ravage of time. But, this spiritual house, made of such material as God is choosing will last forever. "The gates of hades shall not prevail against it." This building of God wrought from "sinners saved by grace," "bought by the blood of the Lamb," shall stand for eternity. So, then, may we fully submit, ourselves to be built into this marvellous building which neither guns nor bombs nor all the devices of Satan can ever destroy, of which Christ is the foundation and the coping stone.

B.C. Canada, January 11th, 1938. Berean Bible Institute,

Dear Brethren in Christ,

I have received "Tabernacle" booklet also the two "Covenant Books" and am very much pleased with them. Am enclosing a money order as final payment on Covenant books.

Thanking you for your kind favor, and praying the Lord's blessing upon you as you seek to serve His people. remain, Your Sister in Christ.

Victoria, February, 1938. Dear Brother,

Yours of a month ago gladly received. I have just finished reading "Christian Experience" in this month's "P.P.," received to-day and I so enjoyed it that I resolved to drop you a line immediately if only to say so.

It was indeed a word in season. It came to-night as refreshing to me; as a cool change can refresh after humid sultry weather. In the midst of tribulations and testings one often forgets their value. Perhaps I should not say forget, because I am hourly conscious that such in the past have in that remarkable way known only to those who put their trust in God "worked together for good." But this address by grace should give strength for future and to see and feel that many another can be alike helped as the message is passed on. I think I could make good use of another three copies. Well Bro., the hour is late; I remain, I trust.

Your Christian Friend.

Still Upward,

Still upward. . still upward . still upward. .from the owest to the highest—Ezek. 41:7.

“Still upward,” from the lowest to the highest;
By patient toil to climb each unknown height.

From strength to strength each mountain peak ascended
Unfolds to us new vistas of delight.

“Still upward,” as forgetting all past failings
We strive to reach beyond earth’s little while

By faith to apprehend Heav’ns vast forever,
To gain the goal and win the Master’s smile.

“Still upward,” though the way be steep and rugged,
Though feet may falter and our sight be dim,

Though mists en shroud, though evening shadows lengthen
We scale the heights that lead at last to Him.

“Still upward,” in the path of faith we’re wending,
“Still upward,” be our watchword all the way;

Till life’s beginnings end in God’s completeness
“Still upward,” till shall dawn Heaven’s perfect day.

“Still upward,” as God’s greater things beholding,
New mercies break upon our wond’ring gaze,

From grace to grace new glories still unfolding
To flow in ceaseless songs of love and praise.

“Still upward,” to the love which passeth knowledge
“Still upward,” to the heights of endless peace,

Till life immortal crowns our best endeavours,
“Still upward” to the joys which never cease.

“Still upward,” till enriched with all God’s fulness
We reach the culminating point of Grace,

One step of faith, and then love’s consummation
In Heaven’s full glory to behold His face.

“Still upward,” to the bliss which is preparing,
To the exceeding glories yet to be;

A galaxy of far surpassing brightness
Still, to flash on through all eternity.” —Ruth Thomas.

Regarding a Reprint of “Tabernacle Shadows”

AS the supply of the above well-known and helpful littlebook seems exhausted, it being now out of print, requests have been made that we undertake a reprinting of. it for the benefit of the brethren generally. The following was received recently from New York, U.S.A. “I wish to tell you that I know of quite a few friends who would like to get copies of ‘Tabernacle Shadows.’ So if you see your way clear to republish it, I feel it will fill a great want, especially right now when the teachings of the ‘Shadows’ are being denied by so many who accepted them in the past. I would suggest the reprinting of an edition prior to 1916.”

In regard to this matter we would be glad to hear as soon as possible from all interested friends as to how many copies they could use should this work be undertaken. This will assist in determining whether the requirements are sufficient to warrant another printing. It could be produced in the previous handy form, and the cost would be as low as possible.

“A Review of the Doctrines”

Those Classes or individual- brethren who may desire copies of this book during the year ahead are asked to communicate with us. At present a quantity is to be bound, and it would be helpful to know how many may be required.

Christ Our Passover.

“Christ our passover is sacrificed for us, therefore let us keep the feast.” (1 Cor. 5:7, 8.)

FOR centuries both Jews and Christians have, with more or less understanding, celebrated the Passover, but while many have recognised the form, few have perceived its real import. Those who see the real meaning of the Passover have great cause for joy, for gratitude towards God and for confidence in the Bible. To understand the Passover means to understand the entire plan of God in respect of humanity.

St. Paul reminds us that God’s intimation respecting His glorious purposes of mercy towards our race were given to Abraham. After God had tested his faithful obedience, He called Abraham His friend, and revealed to him, in part, things to come. The essence of the Divine message was, “I will bless all the families of the earth through thy seed.” (Gal. 3:8.) This sure promise of God was afterwards confirmed with an oath, because the time would be long, and it would be necessary that the heirs of salvation should exercise faith in the promise.

The First Passover in Egypt.

When the Israelites were in bondage in Egypt, God commanded Pharaoh to let them go, sending chastisement after chastisement upon the Egyptians to compel obedience. God’s mercy in lifting one plague after another merely hardened Pharaoh’s heart, until the tenth. By this plague ‘all the firstborn of Egypt died in one night, while the firstborn of the Israelites escaped because passed over. The Passover, therefore, memorialises the event.

Before the first-born of Israel could be passed over a certain sacrifice was necessary, according to the Divine arrangement. A lamb without blemish was sacrificially killed, and its blood sprinkled upon the door posts and lintels of all the dwellings of Israel. Each family or group repeated the picture, sprinkling the blood upon the door posts and lintels, roasting the lamb and eating it with bitter herbs and unleavened bread—ready for departure from Egypt. Later the host crossed the Red Sea, the waters of which engulfed the Egyptians who had started in pursuit of them.

The first-born of Israel were subsequently exchanged for the tribe of Levi, which therefore was counted especially the Lord’s—some of the Levites serving as priests, sacrificing at His altar, and some assisting the priests in the work of instructing the other tribes. Moses and Aaron were members of this priestly tribe, all of whom became leaders of God’s chosen people in their subsequent experience.

The Anti-Typical Passover.

God has promised deliverance from the power. of Satan and the slavery of sin to all who are truly His people. These were under bondage when God sent forth His Son, Jesus, to be their anti-typical Lamb—to die, “the just for the unjust,” to give His flesh for the life of the world. As a result of that redemptive work the Father highly exalted Him to the spirit plane. Indeed, His resurrection was to a still higher nature—the Divine, far above men or angels.

The blood represents the life, as the Bible tells. The blood of the Passover lamb thus typically represents the life which Jesus gave. The sprinkling of the blood upon the door posts and lintels represents the part which must be experienced by all the Household of Faith. All such. must trust, not in works of their .own for justification before God, but in the sacrifice of Christ, who died for us. Additionally they must partake of the Lamb-- appropriate the merit of Christ’s sacrifice by faith and. be baptised into His death. All such are counted members of the “Church-of the first-born who are enrolled in heaven.” (Heb. 12:23.) This Church is not yet completed. Thank God we may still sprinkle the blood of the Lamb upon the door posts of our hearts; may still have His precious merit imputed to us, and still have the privilege of becoming members of the Church of the first-born by sacrificing in His steps--being beheaded for the witness of Jesus.

The great work of deliverance for the world is pictured by the passing through the Red Sea. God’s mighty hand will be exercised on behalf of all who are truly His, during the thousand years of the Messiah’s reign. They will escape from the power of Satan and his hosts of sin, who will be restrained for a time. The destruction of Pharaoh and his hosts in the Red Sea is a pictorial prophecy of the destruction of Satan and all who are his—all who love sin and hate righteousness.

“Do This in Remembrance of Me.”

With His Apostles, our Lord, after partaking of the yearly Paschal Lamb 31- years after His consecration at Jordan, knowing that His hour had come, then took unleavened bread and wine and instituted this Memorial of His death, to be observed in future by His people, instead of the Jewish rite, which was a commemoration of what was but a type of the slaying of the real “Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world.” The Lord’s people will shortly have the privilege again of celebrating the Memorial in remembrance of “Christ our Passover, (Lamb), sacrificed for us.” Let the dear friends assemble with others of the consecrated members wherever possible, but, if this cannot be, then the observance can be kept in the presence of the Lord only, by each one so isolated.

Notice of some services which we have been asked to announce will be found on another page of this issue.

Faithful in Little.

(Matthew 25:14-30. Convention Address.)

LET us compare this parable with the words of Christ in Matt. 7:22, 23—”Many shall say to Me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy name? and in Thy name cast out devils? and in Thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them I never knew you: depart from Me, ye that work iniquity.” This will show us clearly that in order to be pleasing to God it is not necessary that we be men or women of great ability.

In the lesson of the parable we learn that it is very easy for one who is not richly endowed with natural ability to become discouraged, for did not the servant who received only one talent bury it in the ground.

It is easy for such an one to think that he could be of little or no use to one so great as our Heavenly Father. But this is a mistake, for although God is the Creator of such a vast universe, we know that He made man to be over all His works in the earth. Even the Psalmist thought on such lines when he said, "When I consider the heavens and the works of Thy fingers, the moon and the stars which Thou hast ordained; What is man that Thou art mindful of him or the son of man that Thou visitest him?" (Psa. 8:3, 4.) But no, we are not too insignificant for God to think about. If we are His, then all things are for our sakes. It is His very greatness that causes Him to know His creatures and everything about them.

We can learn a good lesson along this line from the wild flowers. Did you ever see wild flowers in the bush? In Western Australia they are beautiful. In August one can walk through the bush and see dozens of tiny plants and shrubs, some only a mere circle of leaves on the ground, but a month later every insignificant little shrub and every modest plant has a lovely flower of some shade or other. These flowers "toil not neither do they spin," yet God looks after them, and even "Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these."

We have some lovely flowers in our gardens, but it is from these wild bush flowers that we learn a valuable lesson. They have no human caretaker, no hot-house to encourage their growth; they are left to themselves and yet they cannot take care of themselves. Their dress is richer and finer than anything of man's handiwork, and it is God who takes care of the flowers. He sends the sun to shine on them and the rain to water them, and very often His is the only eye that sees them. Yes, God is not too great to take an interest in the tiniest flower. His own great and mighty hand made them, and, if He took an interest in such things, we can be sure He will be delighted to see a Christ-like character blossom forth in our lives. And if He loves to put in the flowers a sweet perfume He will rejoice to receive from us offerings of self-sacrifice, no matter how small. They are a sweet perfume unto Him. When St. Paul received a small offering from the Philippians (Phil. 4:15-18) he accepted it and told them, not that he desired a gift but because he desired that fruit should abound on their account. He then explained that it was an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable and well pleasing to God.

We cannot all offer gifts of the same nature as these Philippians, but there are many kinds of offerings which the Lord is glad to accept. Jesus showed how such gifts are measured when He drew attention to the poor widow who cast two mites into the treasury. It was all she had, and in the sight of God who looketh upon the heart she had given more than those who had given large amounts out of their abundance. But she had given her all, small though it was, and that is what God requires of us. So, then, it is not by the amount given that God judges us but by the spirit that is behind the gift. St. Paul said, "Though I bestow all my gifts to feed the poor and though I give my body to be burned and have not love, it profiteth me nothing." (1 Cor. 13:3.) The mite which we have to give may not be money—it may be time, it may be service, it may be the aptness of speaking a kind or helpful word, or even of giving a cheery smile. We may be one of those who only have one talent, but it is our all that God wants. He wants us to be wholehearted. He said to us: "My son, give Me thine heart."

And He does not want us to sacrifice these things because He cannot do without them; the silver and the gold are His and the cattle upon a thousand hills. He worketh all things after the counsel of His own will, but He wants our offerings so that we may receive a blessing by giving them.

Another illustration that may encourage us to make use of our talents, few and small though they may be, is sunlight. Scientists tell us that sunlight is made up of millions of particles of light and yet it lights up the whole world. Christ said, "Ye are the light of the world." It is a very dark world but we can all do our little bit of shining. We, like the sunbeams, all receive the light from the one source. It is the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, and we can all do our little to illuminate others with this light and show them the way. The world is not so dark that we cannot shine, as a certain writer has said:

“Here’s a helpful thought I read to-day,
To us who grope and stumble on our way,
There’s not enough of darkness round about,
To put the smallest waxen candle out,
So hold aloft your candle, shine or rain,
That those in darkness may take heart again.”

Yes! let us do good unto all men as we have opportunity. We cannot do more for them than give them the light of Truth. Someone may say, “But how can I; I’m not gifted that way; that is not one of my talents. God did not give me the gift of explaining the Truth to others.” Perhaps this is true, we may not have this talent; but let us remember that it is not merely keeping the talents that God requires of us. The servant who received one talent did that and the Master called him a wicked and slothful servant. No, it was an adding to, that was required. So, even if we are not gifted explainers of the Truth such a talent is a desirable one to add to what we already have, even though we possess but one. We may begin very feebly; but if we show that we are willing to give out the Truth, then what does Christ tell us? “To him that bath shall be given.”

Jesus said at another time, “The water that I will give him shall be in him a well of water springing up unto everlasting life.” This is a beautiful picture. If we draw water from a well it will make more; we can draw and draw, but still more flows in; but if we do not draw from it, it remains as it is. The water is the Truth—God’s Word’. If we make use of it, if we are refreshed, then we will return for more and receive more refreshment; but if we do not make use of it, if we are forgetful hearers—hearers only and not doers—then no more will be given.

Now, we will think on little word’s. Solomon truly said, “A word spoken in due season, how good it is.” The Apostle James, too, has much to say on this point. The tongue, he says, is a very little member but it does some very big works. He likens it to a bit in a horse’s mouth, by which the horse can be turned right round. And he gives another picture: “Behold also the ships, which though they may be great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet they are turned about with a very small helm whithersoever the governor listeth.” (James 3:1-4.) Yes, a little word can change our whole course. So let our words be faithful. We all know the words of the hymn:

“Yield not to temptation, for yielding is sin,
Each victory will help you some other to win.”

This is quite true, for the Apostle James (4:7) tells us that if we resist the devil he will flee from us. The tempter does not completely leave many of us—none, perhaps; but what the Apostle means here is that if we show him that we cannot be led astray on a certain point, then he will give up tempting us along that line. So we see that some victories may be very small ones.

Let us turn to Proverbs 6:10, 11, “A little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands in sleep, so shall thy poverty come.” This is very true in every direction. We need only to be off our guard for a moment and our adversary will come along, or it may not be Satan; it may be ourselves. “Take heed to yourselves lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness and cares of this life.” Drunkenness means to be overcome with the spirit of the world; yes, it is a very fitting word to use. Like ‘the little sleep in the Proverb this condition can have a very small beginning. Very little indulgence in the spirit of the world will give the adversary a start and he will do best, or perhaps we should say worst, to draw us away, whereas on the other hand a little “victory would help us some other to win.”

There are so many little ways in which a start can be made. A “little root of bitterness” may not remain a root; it is liable to spring up and trouble us and even defile us (Heb, 1.2:15); but on the other hand if such a feeling is overcome what great blessing will follow. “Love suffereth long and is kind, love envieth not, love never faileth.” (1 Cor. 13:4, 8.)

Then, St. Paul tells us “a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump,” (1 Cor. 5:6.) Also Christ spoke a parable and likened the kingdom of heaven to a woman putting a little leaven into three measures of meal and the whole became leavened. The three measures may very well represent faith, hope and love. In any case, the meal was pure and represents the purity of the Church. Leaven represents corruption-Terror which entered in—only a little at first, but gradually, very gradually, the whole became corrupt; a little leaven had leavened the whole lump. This should be a warning to us to “hold fast the faithful Word” (Titus:9), for, St. Paul said to Timothy, “Now the spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils.” (1 Tim. 4:1.)

We see many around us falling to these doctrines. Yes, ‘gradually Satan will try to lead us astray and blind us to the truth of God’s Word; very subtly he will start in a small way introducing seemingly unimportant matter. But in these little things we can be faithful. We need to bear in mind the words of the Apostle: “If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine receive him, not into your house, neither bid him God-speed,” and as Jude said, we need “to earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints.” “He that is faithful in little is faithful in much.”

So we will find that so often very little things will give us opportunities to prove our faithfulness; a kind word, a ray of light, a pleasant look, a cup of cold water or sometimes a short prayer will lead to opportunities for larger services. Then on the other hand there are so many small things to lead us astray. Instead of enumerating them we shall quote again from Solomon: “Take us the foxes, the little foxes that spoil the vines.”

As we look into the parable we can see that it is indeed a very reasonable service that was required. “Thou hast been faithful over few things I will make thee ruler over many things.” Surely an “abundant entrance” compared with the little we have to give.

We do well to notice that the one talented servant in the parable didn’t waste his talent or lose it; he didn’t even spend it, but he kept it safely and when his master returned he still had it. We may have expected the master to commend him for his honesty; but no, he called him a “wicked and slothful servant.” And we may find with ourselves a temptation to retain ability or any gift we may have; but, brethren, if we do not use it, it is very easy to mislay or lose it, which would place us in even a worse position of disfavour. The man in the parable was a servant; he had promised to serve his master but was not willing to exert himself, being satisfied with retaining what he had. Every consecrated child of God has covenanted to sacrifice, to spend and be spent in the Master’s service, to use his talents, opportunities, privileges zealously in the service of his Master’s household, and in the honour, of His name, and so we can see that the Master is quite reasonable in pronouncing any other course “wicked and slothful.”

On the one hand there was a joyful appreciation of being able to serve the Master ----a servant who was not slothful in business but fervent in spirit serving the Lord. On the other hand was (me to whom the words of the wise man would apply: “Go to the ant thou” sluggard, consider his ways and be wise.” Unlike the ant, which lays up in store for the future, this slothful servant had failed to lay up in store a good foundation against the time to come, that he may lay hold on eternal life.

The time is near when the Lord will reckon with His servants. How we long “to be able to rejoice in that day and hear His “well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.”

“Do thy little, God hath made
Million leaves for forest shade,
Smallest stars His glory bring;
God employeth everything.

“Then the little thou Mist done,
Little battles thou hast won,
Little masteries achieved,
Little wants with care relieved,

Little words in love expressed,
Little wrongs at once confessed.
“These shall crown thy dying head,
Holy light upon thee shed;
These are treasures, that shall rise
Far beyond the smiling skies.

“For oh! thy recompense shall be
To hear what Jesus says to thee,
Echoed through eternity
Thy titles were all done for Me.”

BEREAN BIBLE INSTITUTE,

19 Ermington Place, Kew, E4, Melbourne, Vic., Aug PEOPLES PAPER AND HERALD OF CHRIST’S KINGDOM.

Blessed are the Dead who die in the Lord.

MANY of the brethren will remember our dear Brother Badrock who finished his earthly course peacefully, on the evening of March the 16th, after a life of praise and devotion to the Lord which could not fail to impress all with whom he came in contact.

Our late Brother came to Australia from England about fifty years ago, and while of a religious mind in his early years, repeatedly confessed how little he knew of God's great love for mankind, until, from the book "Divine Plan of the Ages," he received a clear understanding of the wonderful redemption for humanity through Jesus Christ. He continued to progress in the spiritual truths of God's Word, storing them up in his heart and mind as well as passing them on to others at every opportunity, and which proved a source of much comfort to him when laid aside in weakness in recent months.

While first associated with the Melbourne Class for some years, about ten years ago our elderly Brother settled in Burnie, Tasmania, and was connected with that little Class until towards the close of last year, being held in very high esteem by the dear friends there, on account of his love, zeal and loyalty to the Lord, His truth and His people.

After some time in hospital last year and while in failing health Bro. Badrock undertook a visit to Melbourne, Sydney, Adelaide and scattered parts of Tasmania to see the brethren he loved so much, and will be remembered by those who met him as one of the Lord's sacrificing saints who count not their lives dear unto them. Returning to Melbourne last year he gradually became weaker, but was very pleased to be able to attend one day of the Christmas Convention with the members assembled.

It was always a pleasure as well as a privilege to visit the dear Brother, and his witness of faith and loving submission to the Lord's will, without complaint of any kind throughout the most trying circumstances is one that will no doubt remain with all who attended him. True to the words of his favourite hymn—"I Love Thy Will, O God"--he was continually witnessing a good confession, by the Lord's grace.

While the passing of the dear Brother is felt very much by all who knew him, the little band in Burnie will no doubt feel it most, but at the same time are rejoicing, as expressed by one: "Intimately acquainted with him, I know that he was looking forward with joy to the final earthly stage, the death of the old creature. - And now he is with the Lord he loved so well, how could I but rejoice, and the parting is for such a short duration."

Our sympathy is extended to the bereaved relatives who-, however, knowing of the sincere desire and expectancy of the departed one attaining the heavenly kingdom, would not wish it otherwise, and so "sorrow not as those without hope."

The Lord's people can surely rejoice as one by one the members pass on to be associated with their Lord, in preparation for the establishment of His Kingdom, which shall in due time bless all the families of the earth. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints."

“I love Thy will, O God!
It is my joy, my rest;
It glorifies my common task,
It makes each trial blest.

“I love Thy will, O God!
The sunshine or the rain.
Some days are bright with praise, and sonic
Sweet with accepted pain.

“I love Thy will, O God!
O hear my earliest plea,
That as Thy will is done in heaven
It may be done in me.”

Memorial Services.

The anniversary of the institution of the Memorial of our Lord's death falls this year on Thursday evening, 14th April; this being the 14th of Nisan.

While it would have been preferable to have this yearly service on the anniversary date, in sonic cases there are circumstances against the use of the usual meeting rooms on this evening, and the brethren concerned, realising that the Lord did not stipulate the one day only as being acceptable to celebrate the Memorial each year but recognises the spirit and intention, have chosen the dates given below as being most fitting for this special occasion.

Friends able to attend any of the following services are asked to note particularly the time. and meeting place in each case. All believers in the atoning sacrifice of Christ will be welcome at these Memorial Services.

Melbourne.—Sunday, 10th April, at 7 p.m., at Clyde House, 182 Collins Street (near Town Hall), First Floor, Room 7. Study on the Memorial at 3.30 p.m.

Adelaide.—Thursday, 14th April at 8 p.m.; at A.N.A. Buildings (next to Liverpool Buildings), Flinders Street, Second Floor, Board Room.

Perth.—Sunday, 17th April, at 7 p.m., at The Basement, Druids' Chambers 459 Hay Street East. Study on the Memorial at 3.45 pm.

Adelaide Easter Convention.

The Adelaide friends have the arrangements well in hand for their annual Convention to be held at Liverpool Buildings, Flinders Street, Adelaide, over the. three days, Good Friday to Easter Sunday, 15th to 17th April inclusive (D.V.). The fourth day of Convention, Easter Monday is to be held at Gawler.

A very hearty invitation is extended to friends able to attend any or all these gatherings, which commence at 3 p.m. each day (2.15 p.m. at Gawler on Easter Monday) and continue till the close of the evening sessions. The Knowledge, Understanding and Wisdom of God.

“We desire that ye might be filled with the knowledge of his will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding.”-- Col 1:9.

IN the Scriptures very frequent reference is made to knowledge, understanding and wisdom. They pertain to the intellectual faculties, being-closely related. Knowledge pertains to that which may be gained-and preserved in the mind by experience, observation, instruction and learning. Understanding is the ability to form correct ideas, to appreciate the meaning or intention, to comprehend. Wisdom is the quality of being wise; the capacity to make the best use of knowledge by the best means of discernment and judgment. Wisdom implies action wisely directed. So Paul, in our text, would desire the powers of the mind exercised upon spiritual things.

The Lord is a God of knowledge, as we learn from His dealings with man. His knowledge is manifest in many ways.

In that beautiful 19th Psalm, descriptive of the beauties and glories of the heavenly bodies and their harmonious movements, the Psalmist says, “Night unto night sheweth knowledge.” In the setting- out and arrangement, in the law and order of their movement, he saw evidence of intelligence and purpose, and passing on from the things that are visible he touches on the invisible, the spiritual things that to him were just as clear as the evidence of nature. “The law of the Lord is perfect . . . The statutes of the Lord are right . . . the commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes.” As material things are necessary for the material man--a world to live in and the means of supplying his many necessities--so these are bountifully supplied by a wise providence. Nor are his spiritual needs overlooked or neglected, for man has no need that has not been amply provided. “The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous.” Man may live in harmony with God and rejoice in righteousness.

Before his fall Adam communed with God. As God’s creature, made in His own image, given dominion over the earth, blessed with power of speech wherewith to express the thoughts of his mind, he is enabled if he will to- understand the goodness and mercy of his Creator and acknowledge the same. By walking in the paths of righteousness man’s wellbeing and happiness is assured. God’s purpose concerning man was that he should be just and righteous, that peace and harmony should prevail, and that he should praise and worship his Creator.

Man may not be in darkness concerning his Creator, for although Adam transgressed, causing estrangement, yet there were always some who had an intimate knowledge of God and walked with Him. In this we see that the estrangement was not altogether universal or to be everlasting; God had another intention to come into operation in His own good time. Through the men who revered His name and walked with Him, God made known to mankind His purposes. They were taught, instructed and enlightened, and passed the knowledge on to their fellow men. Their efforts were not always understood or appreciated, nevertheless they faithfully delivered their message. Can we not see in this, knowledge and purpose as clearly and distinctly as the Psalmist saw it in the marvellous arrangement of the heavenly bodies. Daily life provides us the experience; its varying conditions contrast with each other. Prosperity and adversity provide lessons for our learning; we observe the results of certain courses of action and the effects of certain conditions upon our outlook in life. Sometimes experience is a hard school in which we receive knocks and blows which might have been avoided if we had known better or had knowledge. Lessons so learned are usually more effective and lasting than if attained more easily; unpleasant though it may be, adversity has its uses. The accumulated knowledge of previous ages is passed on from one to the other from generation to generation; vast store from which the heart and mind may be enriched.

Of all subjects about which man should know, the most important is God and himself. God has revealed Himself to us in the Scriptures and manifested Himself in Jesus Christ. They that feel after the Lord and would seek Him may find Him, for He is not far from us. "For in Him we live and move, and have our being." As His creatures He gives us life and supplies our needs. But "man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." We may look around and see God in a general way and hear His voice in nature, and it is very nice to be able to do this, looking with pleasure upon His many beautiful works. Yet He speaks to us more intimately in the Scriptures. The recorded Word conveys to our hearts and minds thoughts of a finer feeling, a deeper regard and a closer relationship—that of Father and children—and a feeling of love and affection.

There in His Word God stands revealed, making Himself and His will known to us, and the provision He has made for the restoration of man to the state of perfection in which he was created. He says that the place of His feet shall be made glorious, for all shall know Him from the least unto the greatest, and righteousness shall cover the face of the earth as the waters cover the deep.

Then we learn how to approach Him; the right attitude of heart and mind and how to know Him, whom to know is life eternal. We read that "without faith it is impossible to please Him; for he that cometh to God must believe that He is, and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him." Faith comes by hearing the Word of God, and this awakens within the heart a desire to seek Him. There is an unseen influence drawing in that direction; there is an arousing of thoughts and feelings which, if yielded to, will certainly lead to God. This is the drawing of the spirit. Christ said, "No man can come to me, except the Father draw him." Following the spirit leads to further knowledge.

By faith comes justification and being justified we have access to the grace of God, but it is only by taking the further step of consecration that we become the sons of God, entering into full sanctification. "This is the will of God, even your sanctification."

It was this that the Apostle desired should be known—that it was a way of progress, a continual growth and development, a going on from grace to grace, adding to faith, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, kindness and charity; a task that requires continual care and watchfulness. We should know that our co-operation with God is necessary, a harmonious working together, a service of loyalty and fidelity, rendered in meekness and humility, readily and cheerfully. Our zeal for God should be according to knowledge, that our labour, time and energy may not be wasted, but be used to the best advantage for ourselves and others. We should seek to know how best to serve our Master, ever ready to learn and increase our knowledge of God and Jesus Christ that our service may be better and more acceptable.

It is indeed important that we have knowledge of those qualities to put on, to encourage and develop that the fruits of the spirit may be borne, and also of others to be restrained, brought under control, or put off altogether, seeing that we are temples of the holy spirit and have the privilege as well as the duty of keeping undefiled. For this purpose much good information is available. The Apostle says, "The word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." It stirs into life and action, giving encouragement, strength and power; it pierces and divides, dissecting the good from the evil. It deals with the thoughts, penetrating to the innermost recesses of the heart, opening up for inspection its intents and purposes. It is profitable for all purposes, for doctrine, reproof, correction and instruction in righteousness, thoroughly furnishing the man of God for all good works.

Knowledge is the material from which ideas are formed. It is worked upon by the mind and considered, the result being understanding. It was Paul's desire that the knowledge of God's will should be so treated; it was a matter of such. vast importance that it was not to be dealt with lightly. The deep things of God are spiritually discerned and if the right conception is to be gained, are to be considered and understood only from a spiritual point of view. •

The sons of God are led by His spirit, which will lead into all truth. We know God's nature, His justice, love and mercy, revealed to us in many ways. We know His promises and His purpose to select a class of individuals who by adoption through Jesus Christ will become His children and joint-heirs with His Son, to sit with Him upon His throne and take part with Him in the work of restoring mankind to that state of righteousness and perfection in which Adam was created. We understand that it is to be a selection in every sense of the word. The chosen ones are to be holy and without blame before Him in love. They accept Christ, are baptised into His death, walk with him and, separating themselves from the world, are prepared to suffer with Him. Their choice is not blindly made, but well considered, for they understand that separation from the world means not only from its joys and pleasures, honours and ambitions, but a giving up of rights and claims of restitution to earthly perfection in the resurrection, for the promise of joint heirship with Christ.

They know that this promise cannot be realised without some effort on their part. Opposing forces have to be met and obstacles overcome; the contention may be severe, for the way is a difficult one. The world has its influence with its spirit of gaiety and honours that may be readily attained. The flesh with its desires, many of which are quite natural and lawful, must be kept under control and only that which is expedient allowed. Then there is the adversary, Satan, who is wary and subtle, working silently but surely, raising difficulties and causing opposition in many ways. These are the opposing forces which must be met and overcome. The conflict develops the qualities and characteristics that make the chosen ones holy and without blame before God.

The Apostle's prayer and desire for the Ephesian church is shown in chapter 1:18-20. Here truly is something for the exercise of the understanding, something for the mind to work on, to grasp and appreciate. It is only as we meditate about it, consider and examine it thoroughly that its significance is grasped. Then it is realised that it is a call to leave this world and enter the spiritual kingdom, to become joint heirs with Christ, to sit with Him upon His throne; a call to the highest form of life- immortality.

Respecting the Lord's saints, the selected ones, how rich the glory of His inheritance in them, for they are His inheritance. How great the work that made it possible for them to be His inheritance --the ransom in which faith justified them; the gift of the holy spirit; the power that enables them to overcome the world, the flesh and the adversary, to faithfully and patiently endure trials and temptations for their perfection. And the greatness of His power in raising Christ from the dead and placing Him at His right hand in the place of power and authority, to become the Head of the Church which is His Body. This same power will be wrought in those who believe and are chosen; they will be raised to sit in heavenly places beside the Son, as His joint-heirs. It was this wonderful work and the greatness of its power that the Apostles wished to be understood. There may be enlightenment in having knowledge, but the understanding of its full significance would result in a deeper and fuller appreciation of the love of God and the worth and value of His high calling.

Paul's admonition to Timothy was to show himself approved unto God, "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." Timothy was engaged in preaching the Gospel and needed to be intimately acquainted with its various features. A workman that needeth not to be ashamed is thoroughly acquainted with his work and is skilful in the use of his tools. The Scriptures are the tools of the man of God; he must therefore know how to apply them, to distinguish between the literal and figurative, and to draw from the parables and illustrations, the comparisons and contrasts, the lessons they are intended to convey.

Knowledge supplies the material with which wisdom works in shaping and fashioning it to the best ends. The fear of God is the beginning of wisdom—in reverencing and hallowing, His name and keeping His precepts and laws. But being shortsighted the worldly man does not think so; in it He sees only a life of self-denial and sacrifice, a separating from all that he considers of any value—the joys and pleasures of life, the gratifying of its ambitions and glories—not understanding that the glory of man is as the grass and its flower that withereth and fadeth away. Behind this self-denial and sacrifice there is the sure promises of God and the hope based on those promises, and the spiritual pleasure and delight of being in harmony with God, in having communion with Him and the witness of His spirit that we are His. To them that believe, Christ is the power and wisdom of God. Through Him there is justification, sanctification and redemption access to- the grace and glory of God to become His sons and finally joint-heirs with Christ,

In the Patriarchal and Jewish Ages, following righteousness was regarded as a wise choice, the results being peace, happiness and prosperity—earthly blessings—as God ordained. In the present .Gospel Age the upright and righteous man has the honour and esteem of his fellowmen, even as in the previous dispensation. But in the development Of God’s plan a higher and nobler reward is offered to certain individuals who are prepared to accept the conditions and make the effort to obtain it. The conditions require something more than righteousness as a principle of character and are such that many who are just and upright, as well as the worldly-minded, will not accept. A man can be good, just and upright without separating himself from the world and the good things it has to give, but this would not be following Christ, sacrificing in the steps of Him who was despised and rejected of men.

In the service of God nothing is required for which there is not a good reason, although at the time it may not be apparent. Here lies the opportunity for the exercise of faith. Knowing that all things work together for good to them that love God with a clear knowledge and an understanding of His will we know definitely upon what our faith is based and are certain of our position and enabled to hold firmly and steadfastly without fear or doubt.

To heed instruction and seek knowledge and understanding of God’s will is indeed wise, and he who does so assuredly will meet with a rich reward in the strengthening of his spiritual powers, enabling him to overcome all things and so obtain an abundant entrance into the Heavenly Kingdom.

Regarding a Reprint of “Tabernacle Shadows”

Those friends interested in a reprint of the little book, -Tabernacle Shadows” are asked to communicate with us. stating if possible the numbers of copies required should the work be undertaken.

As mentioned last month, requests have been received asking that a new edition be produced put it is necessary to know what number may be required before deciding the matter. Should the demand be sufficient, a reasonably priced edition could be made available for the brethren.

Most of our readers are fully acquainted with this valuable little book on the types and shadows contained in the books of Moses and explained with the realities by the Apostle in the Epistle to the Hebrews, Tired Christians.

There are tired Christians who will work if coaxed to do so. But the tired Christian complains so much that there isn't much joy in it for anyone.

Second, there is the retired Christian. He believes that he has done his share and sits idly by, exercising his right to criticise.

Third, there is the rubber-tyred Christian., He may go along if the way is clear and the road is smooth. Finally,,, there is the flat-tyred Christian. He was once active and faithful in service,. but he suffered a puncture, and has never recovered, his wind.

What Shall I Render ?

“What shall I render unto the Lord for all His benefits towards me? I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord. I will pay my vows unto the Lord now in the presence of His people.”—Psa. 116:12-14.

THESE words have a much fuller meaning to spiritual Israel than they would have to the Psalmist. Nevertheless, we think that the prophet David had to a large extent grasped the proper thought as to the sentiment of the words. The Psalms of David show us that he had a very appreciative heart, grateful for the blessings that came to him from the Lord. Properly enough his heart cried out: “What shall I render unto the Lord? What return can I make for all His loving kindness ?”

David was aware of God’s promise to Abraham; he knew that God had made definite promises to bless all the families of the earth and that this blessing would come through the seed of Abraham. As a descendant of Abraham, David no doubt felt that he would be identified with the promise.

In proposing to “take the cup of salvation,” the Psalmist probably had in mind that whatever experiences the Lord might consider necessary for him he would accept, for he hoped for a share in the salvation provided by God. He would continue to call upon the Lord that he might have such a share; he would pay his vows unto the Lord “in the presence of all his people.” He had made solemn vows, and he would fulfil them—he would do this willingly, delighting to do the will of God.

To the Christian, however, all this has a much deeper significance. The Church of this Gospel Age has much more reason to be grateful to God than had the Psalmist. We have experienced so much more of the Lord’s favour than those of the Law dispensation. We have been given much clearer views of God’s wonderful plan of salvation than was possible to those in previous ages.

The most that could be claimed under the Law dispensation was the relationship of servants, but those with whom God is dealing during this present Gospel Age are called sons of God. Those favoured under the Law had only a typical cleansing from sin, but the Church of this age has its sins really cleansed, forgiven, washed away through the merit of the, cleansing blood of Christ—1 John 1:17; Heb. 9. 14. Yes, surely, we have received so much from the Lord that should, and we are sure it does, call out our gratitude to the Giver of every good and perfect gift.

In reference to this quality of gratitude, another has said: “In every truly noble heart gratitude is the responsive chord to kindness and love; and no harmony is sweeter or more inspiring to noble deeds and lofty purposes. God would have His children cultivate for their own sakes, as well as for the sake of others, all the graces of true nobility and moral excellence.” It is, therefore, most fitting that we should note every deed of love and kindness toward us, and be careful to return the gratitude and appreciation due. How often does love go unrequited, because selfishness or thoughtlessness crowds out the nobler instincts of the soul.

While human love and acts of kindness often draw largely upon us for the exercise of this grace of gratitude and appreciation, how much more does the constant loving-kindness and tender mercy of our heavenly Father thus fittingly draw upon our inmost being to respond in grateful acknowledgment and praise! To Him we are indebted for every good that we possess. What this implies only those can know who have been brought by His love into the secret place of the Most High, and made to feast upon the wealth of our Father’s storehouse. We are special objects of His grace, for who of us cannot trace a long line of special providences on our behalf? Who of us as we take a mental retrospect of our lives cannot exclaim with the poet “Looking back I praise the way God has led me day by day.”

How wonderfully the Lord has guided His people! His children have ever been His constant care. No good thing hath He withheld from them, and all things have, been made to work together for their good if they obeyed Him. Who that has trusted the Lord through many years, through sunshine and shadow, through smiles and tears, by still waters and through storm and tempest, has not proved the verity of His precious promises and His abiding faithfulness! Surely, “not one thing hath failed of all the good things which the Lord your God spake concerning you!” Joshua 23:14. In the smallest and in the greatest affairs of our lives He has ever watched for our interests. Every cloud has had a golden lining.

What, then shall we render unto thee Lord for all His benefits? Is it possible that we can render something to God? Yes, indeed, there is something each one of us can do to show our appreciation for all the Lord has done for, us. In Luke 17:11-19, we have recorded the incident of the cleansing of the ten lepers. There is something beautiful about the simplicity of these little stories of Jesus and the love He manifested. The Master is passing through Samaria and Galilee. At a certain village along the way there met Him ten men that were lepers. Perhaps there is no more loathsome and dreadful disease than leprosy—fitting type of sin and its corrupting, contagious and consuming character. The poor lepers had evidently heard of Jesus and His wonderful works of healing, and they had sufficient faith to cry to Him for mercy. When He saw them, Jesus was moved with compassion and said to them: “Go show yourselves unto the priests.” As the ten hastened to comply with the Lord’s injunction they found that they were restored to normal conditions again. They were healed of their leprosy. One of them finding he was healed, immediately turned back and gave thanks to God, prostrating himself before the Master, offering his heartfelt thanks to his deliverer. The other nine passed on to comply with the Lord’s words, and to show themselves to the priests, not having a sufficiency of love, appreciation and thankfulness to return in their cleansed condition to, first of all, acknowledge the giver of the blessing they had received. Our Lord. remarked on this, and called attention also to the fact that the one who did return was a Samaritan, and not one of the Jewish household of faith; saying, “There are not found that returned to give glory to God save this stranger.” “And He said unto him, arise. go thy way: thy faith hath made thee whole,”

This little incident serves to illustrate conditions around us. We may find those who have suffered from the leprosy of sin, and who have appealed to Jesus for mercy and help, and who have been justified by faith—cleansed from their iniquities, covered with the righteousness of Christ—and yet amongst all these who have experienced such blessings and favours at the Lord’s hands, how few there are, comparatively, who return to Him and prostrate themselves before Him, to offer thanks for release from the bondage of sin and condemnation, and lay themselves at His feet, living sacrifices—making a full consecration of themselves to the Lord, their reasonable service. (Rom. 12:1.)

This matter of rendering what we have to God is also illustrated in the parables of the Pounds and Talents. The parable of the Talents seems to represent the natural abilities of the Lord's people --"To every man according to his several ability" --some (me, some two, some five talents. The parable of the Pounds ignores the individual abilities of the servants and shows them each as receiving the same thing and for the same purpose. (See Matt. 25:14-30, and Luke 19:11-27.)

The Pound given to each servant seems very fittingly to represent the gift of justification by faith, available to each true believer. Then the Lord expects that we will put our pound to the banker, or in other words, to present our bodies a living sacrifice. Failure to use our pound in this way would result in our loss of it, because the justification by faith provided by our Lord is only a means to enable us to go on to consecration, following in the Master's steps.

When we make consecration, we are stewards of all we possess—time, health, means, the knowledge of the truth, and more or less of ability to present it to others. These things would be represented by the talents of the parable. We must use our talents if we would increase them. The Lord expected even the one talented man to make use of his talent.

It will not do to allow it to be hidden or lost sight of by the things of earth. The Lord's words are: "To him that hath (used) shall be given and he shall have abundance, but from him that hath not (used) shall be taken away even that which he hath."

What the Lord wants now is our full heart devotion to Him and to His Word. He is not asking for our service, however, unless we are willing first to give Him our hearts. To the justified believer He says "My son, give Me thine heart, and let thine eyes observe My ways." (Prov. 23:26). Like Cain, some of us may have been inclined to offer to God the fruits of our own doings. There are some Christians who seem to glory in their wonderful works. They say: "Have we not prophesied in Thy name . . . and in Thy name done many wonderful works? But the Lord says to them,

I never knew you (I did not recognise you as my servants); .depart from Me, ye that work iniquity." (Matt. 7:21-23.) We must stop and consider our course, and we will find that it is not so much what we can do for the Lord, but rather what are we willing that the Lord should do for us. We must come to the point of full surrender—"Not my will but thine, O Lord, be done"—before we can work, before we can render acceptable service to God. Love for God must be the motive power. "The love of Christ constraineth us," says the Apostle, "because we thus judge that if one died for all, then were all dead, and He died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him which died for them and rose again." (2 Cor. 5:14,15.) Truly, the Apostle says: "Ye are not your own, for ye are bought with a price." (1 Cor. 6:19, 20.) So, we come to that place where we are glad to "take the cup of salvation," rejoicing in Christ as our deliverer from sin and death, and also rejoicing to have a share in His sufferings now, that we may also share in the honour of His Kingdom in the future.

We will need also to "call upon the name of the Lord," for grace to help us to tread the narrow way. There are many lessons to be learned in the school of Christ, and we will each need the graces of the spirit in our hearts—meekness, gentleness, patience, faith, etc.—as well as the Lord's promised grace to help in every time of need, to enable us to overcome.

In considering what we are to render to the Lord we need to keep before us that our consecration to God includes all that we have and are. God, will not accept our offering unless it is a complete giving up of our all. We are to serve the Lord with all our heart, mind, soul and strength, and how we must watch against the encroachments of the world and the desires of the flesh. "The heart is deceitful above all things," says the prophet. (Jer. 17:9) The tendencies of the natural heart, the old man, are toward the human, earthly things, so we need the help of God's holy spirit to assist us to carry out our vow of consecration. (See

Along the Christian way we find that some experiences are joyful and happy, and again we have other experiences of pain and sorrow, so there is need to have a good strong faith in God and to remember that He has promised to make all things work together for good to us, to fit us for His future service. So the main work is the preparation of ourselves in order to be fitted for a place in the heavenly kingdom. "This is the will of God, even your sanctification." (1 Thes. 4:3.)

The Apostle says that we should "do good unto all men as we have opportunity, but especially unto the household of faith." (Gal. 6:10.) One way to do good to all men would be to try and get them to understand God's Word—the grand plan of salvation revealed therein. We are to let our light shine out, striving to be good examples of the believers in word, in conversation (manner of life), in faith and in purity. We are to let our light shine. One good method of witnessing to the truth is by means of the printed page; the tracts can be handed out here and there to those we meet daily, and often good is done in that way. Though results may appear small, we should not feel that there is nothing more to do in that direction. While pressing on in the narrow way and seeking to build each other up in our most holy faith, we want to do what we can to assist others around us to an understanding of the truths that have so refreshed our own hearts. Someone may say, "but I seem to have so little ability to serve the truth." Well, that may be so, but if we use our little talent, the Lord assures us that more will be given to us; whereas if we hide the talent and fail to make use of it, the opportunity of service which might have been ours will pass to someone else more zealous and appreciative. (See Matt. 25:24-29.)

The question, then, What shall I render? is one that each Christian must ask and decide for himself and herself. It is not a question of what have I rendered? but what shall I render? No matter whether we are young or old in years, or whether we have been serving the Lord a little time or a long time, there is always something that the child of God can do for others around him. He can help to bear others burdens. When the spirit of Christ is truly dwelling in the heart, it will prompt to words and deeds of kindness and helpfulness. But to have the fullness of God's spirit we must earnestly co-operate with Him, watching unto prayer and seeking to check, subdue and quench the spirit of self-will. Self must be yielded up, we must lose of selfish interest to be of that class who are "beheaded for the witness of Jesus." The battle with self-will seems to be the most difficult fight. Only by the assistance of the Lord's promised grace can we hope to overcome. Let us look earnestly to Him for the needed help.

To help us to render our all to God in loving, humble service we need to cultivate the spirit of thankfulness. The unthankful, grumbling spirit is the very opposite to the spirit of Christ. Thankfulness will make every trial and sacrifice on our part seem small, and proportionately easy to be offered, and it will make all of God's mercies and favors toward us proportionately grand and great and inspiring.

Let us render our little all to God thankfully, gladly. After all, the most that the very best Christians may render is a very small return for all we have received from the Lord, and, anyway, in every sacrifice and service for the Lord and His cause we are richly blessed even now. We find the Lord's words are true—it is more blessed to give than to receive.

“ My Morning Resolve.”

My earliest thought I desire shall be: “What shall I render unto the Lord for all His benefits toward me? I will take the cup of salvation and call upon the name of the Lord (for grace to help). I will pay my Vows unto the Most High.”—Psa. 116:12-14.

Remembering the Divine call: “Gather My saints together unto Me; those that have made a covenant with Me by sacrifice” (Psa. 50:5), I resolve that by the Lord’s assisting grace I will today as a saint of God fulfil my Vows, continuing the work of sacrificing the flesh and its interests, that I may attain unto the Heavenly inheritance in the joint-heirship with my Redeemer.

I will strive to be simple and sincere toward all.

I will seek not to please and’ honor self, but the Lord.

I Will be careful to honor the Lord with my lips, that my words may be unctuous and blessed to all.

I will seek to be faithful to the Lord, the Truth, the brethren, and all with whom I have to do, not only in great matters, but also in the little things of life.

Trusting myself to Divine care, and the Providential overruling of all my interests for my highest welfare, I will seek not only to be pure in heart, but to repel all anxiety, all discontent, all discouragement.

I will neither murmur nor repine at what the Lord’s providence may permit, because “Faith can firmly trust Him, come what may.”

Convention News from South Australia

THE Convention held at Easter by the Adelaide and Gawler Classes was once again a very profitable and spiritually helpful season of fellowship and refreshment from the Lord.

Our hearts go out in thankfulness to the Lord for the very many rich blessings granted to us as we met in His name, seeking to do His will and to be guided into clearer understanding of His Word.

The study on the parable of the Virgins (Matt. 25:1-13), claimed our attention on the Good Friday afternoon. It seems clear that this parable applies to the Lord's consecrated people living at the end of the age, during the time of His presence. In answer to the question of the disciples—"What shall be the sign of Thy presence and of the end of the age?" Our Lord gave them to understand that there would be certain signs', whereby those in the proper condition of heart would be enabled to discern His presence at the appropriate time. (See Matt. 24th chapter).

Our parable follows, saying, "Then" i.e., at that time—the time of His presence as Chief Reaper, at the harvest or end of the Gospel Age—"shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins." The number ten carries the thought of the whole or complete Church in the flesh at that time. It was about the year 1829—the end of the 1290 days of Daniel—that a movement took place among the Virgins, drawing attention to the second advent of Christ, and a general searching and trimming of the lamps—God's Word—and a preparation to meet the Bridegroom took place.

Those dear people of God expected to see the Lord come in a body of flesh, hence their disappointment. It seemed as if the Bridegroom had tarried, and so they all slumbered and slept. However, a loyal band of disciples still held to their faith and hope in Christ's second coming. It was not until the year 1874 that the truth concerning the Lord's presence was made known to the watching virgins. Then it was that the midnight cry—"Behold the Bridegroom" — went forth unmistakably. The Scriptures clearly show that there is to be a period during which Christ will be present though unknown and unseen by the world. (See Matt. 24, 37-39 etc.)

At the announcement of the presence of the Bridegroom the virgins arise and there is more trimming of the lamps.

It is here that the difference between the wise and foolish virgins is drawn to our attention. The foolish virgins find that they are lacking oil—their lamps are going out—the present harvest truths are somewhat hazy to them. "Give us of your oil," they say to the wise ones; but no, this cannot be; the holy spirit of truth, the spirit of consecration, can only be gained by individual application to the Lord. The knowledge of the truth will not profit us unless we have our vessels—our hearts—filled with the spirit of the truth. It costs something in the way of self-denial and earnest effort to do the will of the Lord daily. It takes time to develop the graces of a Christlike character, and while the foolish virgins are getting the needed oil, the wise and ready virgins enter in with the Bridegroom to the marriage feast. Too late to gain the chief prize the foolish virgins will get experiences that will eventually bring them to a lower position “before the throne.” (Rev. 7:1,4, 15; Psa. 45:14, latter part). Let us seek by diligent, earnest watchfulness to be like the wise virgins — alert, zealous, fully set apart to God. 2 Peter 1:5-11.

Eph. 1:17-23, engaged our attention for Easter Saturday afternoon- Bible Study. Paul’s recorded prayers are full of lovely thoughts. How we all need the spirit of wisdom (i.e., the spirit of a sound mind) and revelation (apokalupsis) that we may have a full knowledge of God. We do not get this all at once; gradually our eyes of understanding become opened that we may know, “what is the hope of His calling—the high calling—(Phil. 3:14; Heb. 3:1)—and what the riches of the glory of His (i.e., God’s) inheritance in the saints.” The saints of the New Creation are a special possession of Jehovah. He has chosen them from among mankind and designs to lift them to the Divine plane of life in association with their risen and highly exalted Lord and Head.

Many good thoughts were expressed in our study -in 1 Peter 1:1,7-25. The Apostle reminds those who address “Our Father” in prayer, that He is an impartial judge and we should in all sincerity seek to pass the time of our sojourning here in fear, i.e., in great carefulness, remembering that we have been redeemed—bought back from our vain and profitless manner of life—not by silver and gold, but with a price so much more valuable, even the precious blood of Christ. How great was the cost of our redemption. (Rom. 5:8; John 3:16.) The spotless Lamb of God ‘was provided in God’s plan before the foundation of the world, (Rev. 13:8) but now manifested in these last times for His chosen people. Faith in the truth of God’s Word has effected a purification of our lives, leading us to love the brethren with an ‘unfeigned love; even so, the Apostle urges us to love one another with a pure heart fervently.

The Easter Monday was spent at Gawler and again some good thoughts- were expressed in connection with the study in Heb. 10:19-25. Here the Apostle shows that since the way into the holiest has been opened up for us through the death of our Lord Jesus Christ, and now that we have an High Priest who has authority over God’s House, we should therefore draw near with a true heart (an undivided heart) in full assurance of faithful confidence in God—having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience (i.e., a consciousness of evil) and our bodies washed with pure water, the washing of water by the Word (Eph. 5:26), “we should firmly hold the confession of the hope,” (Diaglott) so that it may not waver, remembering that He is faithful that has promised. We should endeavour to be helpful one to another, encouraging each other to love and to good works, not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together and more so as we see the day drawing near.

Some helpful and encouraging talks were given by various brethren, the topics being as follows:— “The Smitten Rock,” “Growing,” “What Shall I Render,” “Anxiety,” “A new Dictator—The Only Hope for Humanity,” “Fishers of Men,” “Blessed is the man that, trusteth in the Lord.”

The Praise and Testimony Meetings, a Question Meeting, and a discussion, “Taking heed to ourselves and doctrine,” added to the helpfulness of the gatherings.

It was a pleasure to have with us a number of brethren and sisters from Victoria; Melbourne and Digby Classes being represented. Messages of Christian love and greetings were received from several Classes and individual brethren. These were much appreciated and in return the words of the Apostle found in 1 Peter 5:7-10, were sent as a greeting together with the assurance of our Christians’ love. The loving efforts of the friends of the Adelaide and Gawler Classes in attending to the comforts of the visiting friend's were much appreciated. The Lord alone knows how to recompense the services of His people rendered to each other in His name; and we are sure He does so. Heb. 6:10; Matt. 10:40-42.

We trust that all the dear friends who gathered in this Convention have realised a strengthening of faith and hope and of endeavour to press with vigor along the narrow way that leads to life. Our earnest prayer is for God's blessing and keeping power to be with each and all as day by day we seek to walk in His ways.

“O for a closer walk with God,
To glorify His name; .
To let my light shine on the road
That leads men to the lamb!

“Lord give me grace to walk with Thee,
Through pain, or loss or shame;
That every act may henceforth be An honour to Thy name.”

Memorial Observances.

Melbourne. and Merino, Victoria.

THE Memorial of our Lord's death was celebrated by the Melbourne Class on Sunday evening: the 10th of April. There was a good attendance of the brethren with some extra members for the special occasion and the Lord's blessing was realised by all throughout the simple yet solemn service

In the afternoon the study on Matt. 26:21-30, brought out many beautiful thoughts as the words of our Lord at the institution of this Supper so long ago were dwelt upon, and as the Master passed the emblems to His disciples it was realised He was inviting them to walk in His steps through justification and consecration, the deeper significance being brought more fully to their attention when the holy spirit was given, following His death.

After the singing of appropriate hymns and the readings from the Scriptures bearing on the sacrifice of Christ, as also the prayers in which all the Lord's people were remembered, the emblems were passed round as on the evening so long ago, and partaken of with grateful hearts by the brethren as they realised the wonderful privilege of being permitted to walk in the footsteps of Christ, if so be that they should reign with Him.

TO commemorate the Memorial of our Lord's death the Digby Ecclesia travelled to Merino and met at the home of our Brother and Sister in that town. There were eight present and the privilege of thus assembling was appreciated by all. The Scripture readings, Matt. 26 and 1 Cor. 11:23-32; the hymns from "Christian Hymns," 14, 2, 118, 135, and the address were equally helpful in reminding us of our Lord's great suffering and love on behalf of a poor sin-sick race and of His willing co-operation at such great cost in the Father's plan for their deliverance and of our own great privilege and responsibility in the covenant we have entered. This last privilege being in order that after first receiving the benefits secured by His sufferings and death, we might enter into fellowship in His sufferings, that later on we might share in his glory. Rom. 8:17, 18.

The address was specially helpful in that it brought right home to ourselves the many present joys and blessings that are associated with our obedience to the Master's invitation to "This do in remembrance of me." together with the sufferings and trials that continue with those who faithfully endeavour to follow in His steps as they eat of His flesh—appropriating to themselves the merit of His sacrificed life—and drink of His cup; for the sufferings.. of Christ continue until the last members of His body finish their course in death, and then the blessings . and benefits of His death will be made available for the world.

Burnie, Tasmania.

WE feel it will give you joy to know that our little Class at Burnie, celebrated the Memorial of our dear Redeemer's last supper, which was to supplant, henceforth, the typical Passover.

Seven assembled in memory of Him, at 7 p.m., 14th Nisan. The simple remark of a Brother after as we said goodnight was, "A very blessed service," and it aptly described it. Those partaking elsewhere were remembered.

Well must our dear Lord and Brother have known when He instituted it, that it would be a wonderful and encouraging help all down the age to His followers and especially to the "feet" members, helping them to go forward with greater zeal, casting aside every weight and besetting sin and running the final steps of the race, looking unto Jesus, our all in all.

The empty spaces reminded us of John's remark, "He must increase, but I decrease." When we parted, Christ was indeed to us that living, bright reality, to be copied with greater and more persistent zeal, and that we could ask no greater 'honour and privilege than (by God's grace) to follow in His dear footsteps along the path we have learnt to love.

Sydney, New South Wales.

HE Sydney Class held the Memorial on Sunday the 10th of April; the number present being twenty-four. The service was conducted in the usual manner, with hearts full of love and gratitude to our dear Lord who instituted it for us.

No command was made, -but with a heart full of compassion and love He said, "As often as ye keep it, ye do it in remembrance of me."

One feels it an occasion for heart searching to see if there remain any leaven therein, and one thinks of the sayings of our dear Lord, that we love each other as He has loved us.

We thank our Heavenly Father for the gift of His only begotten Son, who became our ransom sacrifice, and called us into sonship with Him and the privilege of becoming part of that broken loaf (1 Cor. 10:17), and the promise is if we suffer with Him we shall reign with Him. We recognise that all our hopes are centered in that ransom sacrifice. May our Lord keep our vision centred on the cross; may we by God's grace keep our consecration vow.

Adelaide and Gawler, South Australia.

ON Thursday evening, the 14th of April, the Class at Adelaide met to keep the Memorial of our Lord's death in obedience. to His request-- "This do in remembrance of Me." After reading the 53rd chapter of Isaiah, and certain chapters of the Gospels relating to the last hours of our Saviour's earthly life, a Brother reminded us again of the meaning of the service. With glad yet solemn hearts we partook of the emblems representing our Lord's broken body and shed blood, realising that it is only through Him, and our acceptance of His sacrifice that we can have any hope of life: realising also the great privilege given to us to share in Christ's sufferings now, and to be broken together with Him and with the fellow members of the Body.

Our prayer is that it may be given to us to appreciate. more fully the great privilege of sharing in His cup and being broken together with Him. Then we want to be found "keeping the feast, not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness; but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth." 1 Cor. 5:7, 8. This feast is to be kept throughout our entire lifetime as represented by the feast of unleavened bread, which in the type followed the eating of the Passover lamb and lasted seven days.

ON the 10th of April, a small company of brethren assembled at Gawler (S. Aust.) to celebrate our Lord's last wish— the Memorial of His Death.

On the Sunday afternoon we especially directed our thoughts to the significance of His death for us, and also our privilege to suffer with Him as found in the Apostle Paul's first Epistle to the Corinthians 11:23-34.

In the evening the thoughts were directed toward the purpose of our Lord taking the human nature, viz., to give His human life a ransom for all, and as a result all mankind, in due time, shall receive the benefits which our Lord purchased for them. The prayers were that the Lord would grant each consecrated one that strength, faith, humility and submission which is so essential to the carrying out of our vow—to be dead with Him now, so that we may continue to walk in newness of life even unto the end.

Perth, Western Australia.

We had a nice gathering with seventeen at the Memorial. On the Sunday afternoon we read Exod. 12, for the type, then studied Matt. 26:26-30. In the evening we read Isa. 53; Mark 14:12-50; John 18:29-40; 19:1-36.

The two thoughts before our minds are in 1 Cor. 11:24-29—the Lord's part and our part in the sacrifice. Each year this is more beautiful, more dear to us as we understand what our dear Lord did for us, and our privilege of being invited to partake of His sufferings, so that all the families of the earth may be blessed when these are finished and The Christ, Head and Body complete, comes out to bless. in the type God's people were in bondage but God gave Moses to deliver them, after their first-borns had been spared, because they were under the blood of the lamb—a shadow of the true "Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world."

"Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us," — the Church. "If we suffer with Him we shall also reign with Him."

These sufferings are not worthy to compare with the glory to follow. We can all feel glad of our Saviour's great love for us, for while we were sinners He died for us

"He bore, He bore it all for me, What have I borne for Thee?"

Let us therefore keep the feast; the seven days are our whole life in antitype. This may be our last feast this side the veil; then we will feast with our Lord in the victory of faith.

Extracts from Memorial Address at Merino, Vic,

O the sacred memories that gather round our Saviour's death at this anniversary, help us to appreciate more than ever before, His great, loving sacrifice and our own privilege to share therein? As it affords another opportunity for us to reaffirm our love, devotion and faith, we are reminded of the angelic song and with hearts full of thankfulness, we take up the strain—"Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power and riches and wisdom and strength and honor and glory and blessing." "In the cross of Christ 1-glory, towering o'er the wrecks of time." "This do in remembrance of me." Christ knew the influence for good the keeping of this simple Memorial would have upon us, sitting with Him around the table, sharing in spirit His sufferings of that night, how it would lead to a deeper appreciation of Himself and His people.

How simple is the arrangement given us by the Lord, no great ceremony, nothing great or ostentatious - from the worldly viewpoint, but how meaningful to His people; to others nothing-, to us the power and grace of God. The Father seeks only those who worship Him in spirit and truth. How great a position in God's plan the Saviour's death occupies; He was "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world."

All of God's dealings with man point forward to this great event; step by step to the Passover, on and on through centuries until the shadow merges into the reality and we have the true Lamb, "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world.” How our Lord’s love and devotion stands out through the whole of His ministry and faithful obedience to the Father’s will in all things, even to suffering death on the cross. No other has’ suffered to the same extent, nor could know how great His sufferings were; only the Father knows.

“Man of sorrows!” what a name
For the Son of God, who came,
Ruin’d sinners to reclaim!
Hallelujah! what a Saviour!”

And so, while nothing additional is necessary to our Lord’s suffering and death, yet the Father arranged for Him to have a Bride—those willing to lose their own identity and become part of the one loaf, sharers in the one cup. Our Lord did not refer to this directly but He said, “I have many things to say unto you but ye cannot bear them now,” and so the deeper significance He gave us through the Apostle Paul.

It is important that we see both views, the all sufficient sacrifice of Christ, and that Christ is a composite Body. What a beautiful reminder we have of this in accepting the cup. We have the same thought in the “Vine and branches” (John 15:1-5), our baptism into His death (Rom. 6:3), and “going forth unto Him without the camp.” (Heb. 13:13.)

Are we able? We are nothing of ourselves, but we have God’s love and grace, and Christ’s keeping power. “My strength is made perfect in weakness.” “Who shall separate us from the love of God.” (Rom. 8:31-39.) Such privileges being ours let us keep the feast with joy and thanksgiving, not the symbol only but the reality also, daily appropriating His merit and drinking of His cup, “filling up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ,” (Col. 1:24) gladly sharing in His sufferings that we might be partakers with Him of His, glory. “What shall I render unto the Lord for all His benefits towards me? I will take the cup of salvation and call upon the name of the Lord.” (Psa. 116:12.)

A Song of the Burden-Bearer.

Over the narrow footpath
That led from my lowly door,
I went with a thought of the, Master,
As oft I had walked before.

My heart was heavily laden,
And with tears my eyes were dim;
But I knew I, should lose the burden
Could I get a glimpse of Him.

Over the trodden pathway
To the fields all shorn and bare,
I went with a step that faltered,
And a face that told of care.

I had lost the light of the morning
With its shimmer of sun and dew;
But a gracious look of the Master
Would the strength of the morn renew.

While yet my courage wavered,
And the sky before me blurred,
I heard a voice behind me
Saying a tender word.

And I turned to see the brightness
Of heaven upon the road,
And suddenly lost the pressure
Of the weary crushing load.

Nothing that hour has altered;
I had still the weight of care;
But I bore it now with the freshness
Which comes of answered prayer.

Not a grief the soul can fetter,
Nor cloud its vision, when
The clear Lord gives the spirit
To breathe to His will, Amen.

O friends! if the greater burdens,
His love can make so light,
Why should His wonderful goodness
Our halting credence slight?

The little sharp vexations,
And the briars that catch and fret,
Shall we not take them to the Helper
Who has never failed us yet?

Tell Him about the heartache,
And tell Him the longings too;
Tell Him the baffled purpose
When we scarce know what to do.

Then, leaving all our weakness
With the One divinely strong,
Forget that we bore the, burden,
And carry away the song.

The Swallow.

This pretty bird, oh, how she flies and sings!

But could she do so if she had not wings?

Her wings bespeak my faith, her songs my peace;

When I believe and sing, my doubtings cease.

“Strengthened with might by His Spirit in the inner man.”—Eph. 3:16. If we are just as overdone as the children of the world, just as full of labour in hard rowing, just as easily exhausted we offer no recommendation for our faith. Our witness is to be found in the reality of a mystic current, in the breath of God; in the power of the holy spirit. We must make it plain to the world that there is more wind in our sails, more engine-power in our machinery. Our witness must be in “the demonstration of the power of the spirit.”—Dr. J. H. Jowett.

Growing.

“That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine. . . . But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into Him in all things, which is the Head, even Christ.” (Eph. 4:14, 15.)

FOR anything to grow there must of necessity have been something from which to start. With vegetables, flowers and trees a seed is put into the ground or it may be blown by the wind into various places, but if the ground is dry, without any moisture, the growing will not take place. It will not grow without that life-giving fluid, water.

Then notice how much care is bestowed upon these small things; how much we water and nurse them when they are small so that they may become hardy enough to grow with a little less care, and as they grow stronger they can survive longer without water. In their young and tender beginning they put forth leaves, showing some results for the care bestowed. So, with early stages of believers, it is usually very small. Where such have been brought up from infancy in the nurture of the Lord, they will show pleasing results in their growth to those who have nursed them; this will be more noticeable than with those not brought up in the same way.

Taking notice of a tree, it will be found putting forth leaves until a certain age, then it will begin to blossom--a further stage of growth. With the breaking out in blossom it is pleasing to the eye, gives off in general a pleasant smell, and we see that a future result will be to bring forth some fruit. So with the Christian, when he begins to blossom out, we note the progress; it is also pleasing to behold and is a sweet smelling savour to the husbandman who anticipates some fruitage.

If the tree is well watered it will be manifest in healthy looking growth, as well as rapid growth, and it will become sturdy and able to produce more. But let it lack this life-giving fluid and it is shown in a sickly, shrivelling foliage and will gradually wither away or put on a stunted growth. How similar is the Christian. He needs to be irrigated with the water of life--the truth--but like trees, much of the irrigation may be lost if the roots do not come in proper contact and absorb it. If the truth is not absorbed by the Christian all irrigation may be lost, but where it is taken in we notice the refreshing results. The prophet says: “Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord and whose hope the Lord is. For he shall be as a tree planted by the waters, etc.” (See Ter. 17:7, 8.)

All who have taken notice see how beautifully green and fresh the trees and vegetation in general look along the course of a river of water. You can trace it winding along through what looks like a desert in the summer time—dry and barren, sand slopes with the trees suffering from the dryness and the heat; but how different with the trees near the river, that “shall not see when heat cometh,” because their roots are spread out Where the water of life flows and therefore keep growing --”her leaf shall be green.”

The Psalmist expresses the same thought in Psa. 1:1-3; and while one grows near the water of life and his roots are spread out in the right direction, his hopes will not wither or fade but keep growing stronger in the faith and the promises, and by absorbing the truth will bring forth his fruitage in his season, his due time. As the prophet intimates, his hopes will be kept fresh in the time of drought, in the time of restraint or dearth. While drought may be upon the surrounding country his rootings extend unto the river, from whence comes the strengthening food, therefore there will be no anxiety, neither will there be any cessation from bearing fruit, because “Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord and whose hope the Lord is.”

With the Christian it is necessary that he plant himself down near the stream of life, where the food is so satisfying—near that river where the fruits of the spirit grow. He must, therefore, grow from the leaf and blossom condition, which is more the outward appearance, to the fruit-bearing stage—to progress in the development of growing in the image and likeness of the great Founder. Time and the processes of growth are most important factors in the production of Christian character.

While every child of God is engaged to a greater or less extent in the work of character building, some grow steadily stronger, whereas others are weak through lack of consecrated effort, being measurably swayed by the influence of the world, the flesh or the devil, yet not entirely so, but still making some effort towards righteousness. Such characters are not willing to be closely identified with the Body of Christ but would follow afar off. They are not quite willing to share the reproaches of Christ and so keep at a convenient distance. Such have not learned to view character from God’s standpoint and to appreciate it and the Truth which develops it, and are thus weak and generally unworthy of their privileges.

If we have taken the Lord’s standpoint, which is the only one of actual merit, we should learn to value the truth and those who have been, and are being moulded and fashioned by it, above all other considerations and not be ashamed to be identified with it or them. Such strong characters God loves and honours, while He is not well pleased with those weak ones who follow Him afar off.

There are many ways of showing ourselves ashamed of Christ. We are ashamed of Him if we are ashamed of any member of His Body--to be identified as their friend and companion—however humble or poor or unlearned. We are ashamed of Christ if we are ashamed of His doctrine, either as a whole or in part.

We are told to be “transformed by the renewing of our minds,” and the Apostle writes further, “If any man be in Christ Jesus he is a new creature and with painstaking care he unfolds to us in his various epistles the progressive steps comprehended in the development of this new creation. The term, new creation, is in itself a suggestive one. We have in it a clear distinction made between all previous creative acts and the operation of Divine power which now calls forth this new order of beings. The Apostle says, “Ye are God’s workmanship created in Christ Jesus,” and “It is God that worketh in you both to will and to do His good pleasure.” If we be co-workers together with Him, we are therefore to have revealed in us the power of Him by whom all creative work has been accomplished. Surely, then, we cannot fail to be appreciative of the great privilege of being thus transformed by the renewing of our minds in harmony with the Divine will, until we shall prove or experience in full that good and acceptable and perfect will of God, which the final intention is our complete conformity in character and nature to our Lord Jesus Christ.

As a definite witness of the spirit whereby we may know of our standing in Divine favour, nothing can be more desired than the confidence that this transformation is being verified in our experience. Anyone who understands the character-forming influence of thought, may grasp just how we are transformed by the constant renewing of our minds towards the things of God. In harmony with all Scripture bearing on this, it teaches that this goal of God's purpose respecting us is reached by a gradual process of development, a growth made possible by Divine love, to those who delight themselves in the perfect will of God.

Our first acts of faith are to be followed by a perpetual upturning of our minds toward the things of God, laying hold of that for which God has separated us from the things of earth. Then will come the assurance that if our minds are thus fixed and our ideals thus centred in God's working in us, and the spirit given unhindered sway in our lives to make these things more and more real to us, we shall eventually realise that He who is the Author of our faith will also be its Finisher.

In His first definite statement regarding the special work of the holy spirit, our Lord declared it would be a work of convincing of sin, judgment and righteousness. This is specially worthy of note, for it clearly teaches that these are fundamental facts upon which all our progress will subsequently depend. How important that we give much thought to the great need of clean hands and a pure heart. Since so much depends on our appreciation of holiness and the eagerness with which we seek it, it becomes a matter of special importance that we analyse our reactions toward this requirement. It will not be a sufficient assurance or a correct vision to find ourselves out of tune with the more conspicuous forms of sin, and exercised in mind to be free from such transgressions. If we would secure a real anchorage for our faith and hope, it must be found in the most positive demonstration that we love righteousness and hate iniquity with the intense desire to be wholly filled with the former and completely separated from the latter.

As a test, then, of our real condition of mind, what are the reactions we experience when brought face to face with such statements as, "Be ye perfect even as your Father in heaven is perfect"; "Follow after holiness without which no man shall see the Lord"; and "Cleanse yourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the reverence of the Lord"? To the pure in heart these Scriptures are like jewels set in the Word of God, the influence of which is most encouraging to their hearts.

On the other hand our reactions may be such as to make manifest our lack of development. Some who, instead of thus renewing their minds in this upward progressive way, seem to form the habit of attempting to live in the reverse order. They are familiar with these Scriptures but are disposed to view them from a different angle; perhaps like the servant who had the one talent. If their innermost thoughts were expressed they would say, "I know that thou wert a hard man," therefore I have made no real effort to meet your requirements. Would we not be taking this attitude when we look at the possibilities of the Christian life and say, "I have too many weaknesses, too many influences within and without to overcome, therefore I can never be such as these Scriptures demand." We need to be very careful here, for quite unconsciously we may be exhibiting not only a deficient faith, but more serious still a failure to manifest a supreme love for righteousness and thus raise an effectual barrier to the very thing God wants to will and to do in us. The stream cannot rise higher than its source, and if we are thinking in such terms of defeat and hopelessness how can we enter into the possibilities of being acceptable. To such the words of the Apostle are a forceful reminder that in viewing it that way there would be no progress. He says, "Ye are God's workmanship"; "It is God that worketh in you."

In developing His new creation God's special purpose is not chiefly the exercise of His forgiving grace, but it is rather the accomplishment of the great end to which He has thus opened the door—our sanctification and complete holiness. To those, then, who see themselves largely in the condition of defeat before a standard so high we would repeat, “Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind.” Turn the mind upward in a daily renewal toward the things that are possible in the hands of God and then greater things ye shall yet see. We are urged, therefore, by the Apostle’s admonition to “grow up into Christ.”

The operations of growth in all animal and vegetable life are too deep to be fully comprehended by the human mind, but we can understand its laws sufficiently to gather valuable lessons therefrom. This is illustrated in the statement of Jesus: “Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin: And yet I say unto you, that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.” The glory of Solomon was the product of human agencies, but the beauty of the lily was due to the fact that it was God’s handiwork. This lesson is not intended to teach easygoing unconcern, but to show the fundamental secret of growth, to reinforce the fact that no man by taking thought, by self effort, can add one cubit to his stature. Growth is from within, and as with the lily, so with us; it is a matter of extracting from the soil and sunshine the elements of growth. “Work out your own salvation,” relying upon the promises and power of God’s Word. Here is soil in which our characters are to take root.

The Apostle tells us to concentrate our minds on the things that are pure, just, good and lovely; things worthy of praise and of good report, and by so doing a work is being accomplished in us day by day. And so by feeding upon and assimilating that which produces spiritual life, by taking hold of these holy aspirations, these fervent desires and longings after holiness will be woven into our characters by the holy spirit.

If in our dividing of the Word of truth we have not been recognising the special importance of our own growth in true holiness and deep spiritual life, we have failed to act consistent with the advice given by the Apostle and we have been hindering the work of God in our own hearts. Would we then experience a deepening of our joy and peace, and realise a stronger faith in the power of God’s Word to transform us? Let us study the subject of prayer, earnestly entreating God to reveal its possibilities to us, to deepen our love for the secret place and increase our faith to receive, and then there will be growth. This renewing of our mind, producing that atmosphere in which the holy spirit now moves, will assure the growth we seek, God’s workmanship progressing to its completeness.

When we think of the deep spirituality of Paul or some of the faithful characters of the past, and feel: ourselves drawn toward that same attainment, it behooves us to let God do the work for us. Let our minds be filled with the things that are spiritual, devotional and elevating. May we throw our minds open to the influence of that leading of the spirit which will enable us to comprehend with all saints the lengths and breadths, heights and depths of Divine love, and then we shall experience a definite growth upwards into the fuller life. If we do these things we will not be troubled about the growing, but just grow.

If we visualise a more fruitful life, either through the Word or by observing the manner of life of some other saint of God, and our hearts thrill with desire to experience these things ourselves, let it be remembered that such desires repeated, meditated upon, taken to God in supplications, will eventually shed abroad in our hearts their blessed fruitage. God’s work will have been going quietly on.

Our upturned minds assimilating His Word, picturing His completed purposes in our lives, will bring this transformation, if we only let God do what we have long since learned we can never do for ourselves, and how great will be the realisation that He is working in us to will His good pleasure, even our sanctification. It would seem that St. James was speaking from this standpoint when he tells us that the one who looks into the perfect law of liberty and continues therein as a doer of the work, obediently performing what he sees to be God’s will, shall be blessed in his deed. How manifest it is that we are to think of God continually and earnestly contemplate His messages in order that we may understand what

He would' have us do, and how He would have us live.

ANOTHER year for the Berean Bible

ANOTHER year for the Berean Bible Institute was completed with the month of April - and a short review of the work is presented believing that the majority of our readers are interested in that in which we are privileged to engage, as unto the Lord. While praise and thanksgiving to God are comely for all intelligent creatures, especially is this so on the part, Of the Lord's people who are favoured to serve Him and His cause. We would, then, at this time, once again express due thankfulness to our Heavenly Father for all His benefits and blessings. bestowed in connection with the work of the Institute. Also much gratitude is extended to the dear brethren generally, in the Classes and as individuals,- who have assisted and encouraged the work by various means, in the Lord's providence.

While the efforts each year are directed on well established lines, there are some differences that should prove of interest to all. An increase in correspondence with brethren in other lands has been in evidence over the past year and that with the friends throughout Australasia has been well maintained. All these communications are gladly received, and as the Institute exists wholly for the purpose of serving the friends in any possible way for good, none should feel they are imposing in any way through their correspondence.

The visits of our monthly "People's Paper" have continued to all desiring it, irrespective of whether the subscription could be forwarded or not, and this provision will be gladly continued to all on the free list so long as our funds permit. All that is necessary is to state the request each year. The continued support by the regular subscribers is greatly appreciated and as the "Paper" is not self-supporting any new subscribers added to the list by the efforts of the brethren is of much assistance, thereby lessening the balance to be made up from the Tract Fund. Extra copies are available free to all who can use samples to pass on to the interested. Many of our friends have expressed appreciation of the contents of the "People's Paper," and we are indebted to a number of brethren for contributing articles on various topics. It is desired that the message of "present truth" always be prominent in the columns of our journal, realising that the harvest truths are all important for the up-building of the members of the Body of Christ. Over the past year the production of the book, "The Bible Teachings on the Covenants, Mediator, Ransom, Sin-Offering and Atonement," has added to the general literature and a quantity has been placed with the brethren overseas and throughout this land, in addition to other study aids. This book on the above subjects is recommended to all desiring to be acquainted with a clear explanation of these important matters.

The use of coupons in suitable newspapers, making free literature available to all interested enough to send for it, has not been neglected; some Classes have again co-operated in this feature of the work, though the means available has not permitted as much to be done as formerly from this Office. However, some good enquiries have been received, indicating definite good being done, and it is hoped that more may be possible in this branch of the work in the year ahead. There are still good opportunities for Classes or individual brethren able to co-operate with the insertion of free literature coupons in suitable publications.

Quantities of tracts have also been distributed over a wide area by the brethren throughout the year. This literature is provided by the Tract Fund and while the visible results are not great, the efforts in this direction have undoubtedly brought blessings to some, as shown by continued interest in asking for further reading matter. All the friends should feel a desire to have a supply of tracts to use wisely on behalf of those who will promise to read. Quantities of various topics are on hand to meet all requirements.

Another means of finding those who may be feeling after the truths of God's Word is by the distribution of what is termed Kingdom Cards.; These cards have been used successfully by the brethren in England and also more recently in U.S.A., and are similar to the Query Cards sent out from this Office some years ago. 'The advantage of the Kingdom Cards is that they can be produced at much less cost than the tract; and the little effort required on the part of the interested (writing their name and mailing the card for free literature) would give some guarantee of the papers being definitely desired and also carefully read. The brethren of the Bible Students Committee, England, have kindly sent samples, and a supply, of these cards is being provided and will be available shortly for use by the brethren as they see fit. An announcement to this effect is made on another page of this issue.

The inclusion of the Tract Fund Account as shown below reveals the financial assistance received from the brethren, and the use to which it has been applied throughout the past year. The loving help from the friends generally is most encouraging, and while the credit balance has been greatly reduced no doubt the amount contributed comprises much self-denial and sacrifice of the good things of the present life. Realising that all has been rendered as unto the Lord, the dear friends may have confidence that He is not unrighteous to forget any sacrifice or labour of love done in His name. The expenses are those that we feel would have the Lord's approval.

The assurance of the prayers of the brethren on our account has been a source of much strength and comfort, in addition to the many cheering messages received from far and near. While some difficulties have been experienced, the blessings have much more than compensated, and we continue to look to the Lord with confidence and trust for His continued guidance and blessing in the days ahead, and would desire continued remembrance in the prayers of the brethren to that end, assuring all, known and unknown, of our warm Christian love and prayers on their account. While viewing the momentous days ahead, let us also realise that every day is most important to us, as we seek to "redeem the time," and "show forth the praises of Him who has called us out of darkness into His marvellous light." "Therefore, beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord." (1 Cor. 15:58.)

The Smitten Rock.

(Convention Address. Read Exod. 17:1-7.)

Let us notice, in passing, the great number of this company. Two years after their deliverance from Egypt we find a total of 603,550 people above the age of twenty years; then there were the women and children and the tribe of Levi. Does it need a great amount of imagination to visualise the organisation and the huge amount of provision needed to satisfy the wants of such a company, and all the while travelling or sojourning in desolate lands? Surely apart from the miraculous deliverance, the sustenance and needs of this company being supplied are no less wonderful. The animals, too, needed food and water. Anyone who has ever been in want of this precious fluid will sympathetically understand their lack, and what suffering would be experienced because of no water. The water gushes forth, though, from the smitten rock, and we can imagine the blessed relief.

A similar miracle to satisfy a similar need was ahead of them and for this account let us note Numbers 20:1-13 (which please read).

Let us briefly trace the journey of the children of Israel. In Exod. 14 is the account of the deliverance from Egypt and the miraculous escape from Pharaoh in the Red Sea, the waters of which brought about the destruction of their enemies. "Thou in Thy mercy hast led forth the people which Thou hast redeemed, Thou has guided them in strength unto Thy holy habitation." (Exod. 15:12.)

They soon came to Marah, and the water there was bitter, but their thirst was assuaged with waters of sweetness and they passed on to Elim, where there were twelve wells of water and seventy palm trees, and they camped there by the waters. But they took their journey from Elim, and came to the Wilderness of Sin, which was between Elim and Sinai, on the fifteenth day of the second month after leaving Egypt. Whilst here there was considerable murmuring: "Would to God we had died by the hand of the Lord in the land of Egypt, when we sat by the flesh pots, and when we did eat bread to the full." But the Lord sustained them; flesh in the evening and bread in the morning being provided abundantly. (Exod. 16:8.)

Then they came to Rephidim from the Wilderness of Sin where we are particularly concerned with their doings, and note that a little later they came to Sinai where they camped against the Mount, where the Law Covenant was given that was to conditionally guarantee them for obedience, "A kingdom of priests and an holy nation." This was in the third month after leaving Egypt. How much could be said in regard to the subsequent journeyings, the hardships endured, but against this the care of the Lord over them. Many lessons had to be learned, and many had to be unlearned; the constant murmurings, sometimes overlooked by the Lord and sometimes meriting punishment.

Kadesh, the place where we find the Miracle of Waters from the rock again performed for them, was reached during the fortieth year after Egypt, and it is interesting to note the similarity of the places, and the incidents connected with it. Such significant matters as the miracles that are now presented in the account of the Water from the Rock, and the method of obtaining, could easily embody deeper and more important issues than those of which we read having happened in the material world. Can we trace in these two occurrences, two important features of Christ's actual redeeming work?

Not merely the Law Covenant and its rites and ceremonies were typical, for our Lord said that "as Moses lifted up the serpent in the Wilderness, so also would the Son of Man be lifted up." (John 3:14.) Paul declares that the fathers of Israel "were baptised into Moses in the cloud and in the sea, and did all eat the same spiritual meat, and did all drink the same spiritual drink, for they drank of that Spiritual Rock that followed them, and that Rock was Christ." .

.. “Now these things were for our examples,” (figs. mar.). “Now all these things happened unto them for ensamples (types, mar.), and they are written for our admonition upon whom the ends of the world are come.” (1 Cor. 10:2-11.)

If so, they particularly interest the Church at this time, for surely we are now in the period of “the ends of the ages.” All previous ages presaged this period before the commencement of the “age without end.”

The dominant features before us are the Waters of Life flowing twice from the Rock of life.

Can we claim having come to Rephidim, standing before that Rock, and smiting it? “I will stand before thee upon the rock of Horeb.” The rock had to be smitten lawfully and we can imagine the disappointment that would have been experienced had not the Lord been there upon the rock. “He is the Rock, His work is perfect,” sang Moses.

And so, Jehovah could not avail us of any life waters until the Rock He had put before us was smitten lawfully—sin atoned for—and the new life begun with the draught of water of life. “He that believeth on me shall never thirst.” “Whosoever drinketh of this water,” the Lord told the woman of Samaria, “shall thirst again, but whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst, but the water that I shall give him shall be a well of water springing up into everlasting life.” (John 4:10-14.) So, our deepest and most vital necessity—water (of life)—was unsatisfied until our Rock was smitten.

That Rock was Christ.

“Yet we did esteem Him stricken, smitten of God.” “Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many.” When He stood on the Rock, it was to be smitten for us, a sacrifice that later presented before the Mercy Seat of the Greater and more perfect Tabernacle (not made with hands) enabled the windows from on High to be opened, and supplies of water, living streams of life, which still make glad the City of God, gushed forth. Can you imagine how the water was appreciated at Rephidim? Did the “water of life” satisfy us just the same? Yes, but there was a journey before them to the Promised Land; and so with the Church, there is a journey before her, but she need never thirst again because the Rock that followed those in the Wilderness follows us, and as they all drank of that Rock so may we. Their journey— did it evidence God’s care over and for them? Does ours? Or do we need to have the same bitter experiences because of “murmurings”?

Would any be bold enough to declare that the antitypical Israel have not languished for the water of Life? The evidences are only too glaring that she has been in a “wilderness condition” for a greater period than forty years.

Why? Because she, too, has had her murmurers; she, too, has had those among her who worship “the golden calf,”

(this caused confusion and sorrow in Israel). She also has had to endure the pain of carrying undeveloped brethren.

It was undeveloped and under-age Israel that called for the meat. The manna of God’s provision did not suffice (the sincere milk of the Word is too simple). Remembrance of all the delicacies of Egypt brought whole-sale complainings. Strong meat brought in its wake untold trouble and suffering, because they were not able to withstand God’s anger. If our senses, with so much in our favour for development, are unable to “discern both good and evil,” will we, like they, suffer accordingly? How much more? Have there been among the Church any with the failings of Aaron and Miriam? “Of your own selves,” says the Apostle, “men shall arise, speaking perverse things, seeking to draw away disciples after them.” And so we could trace the history of the Church along with that of Israel, and see the experiences of typical and antitypical identical in many respects.

Let us not forget, though, that with all the unworthiness, the Rock still followed them; still had their interests at heart; still ready to supply the water of life. Israel nears the end of its journey of forty years. It draws near to Kadesh in the Wilderness of Zin, which is entered for the second time, back to where they started forty years previously, but a little farther on than Rephidim, in the Wilderness of Sin. There surely must be some significance in the condition of the people by the use of the names of the deserts. First Sin, next Zin; different, yes, but so alike. Delivered from Sin by the Water from the smitten Rock; delivered from Kadesh by the water from the (should have been) spoken Rock.

The Scriptures declare that there will be two outpourings of this Water of Life. The prophet Zechariah, speaking of the day when Christ would be on the Mount of Olives, which we understand to be when He would once again have in mind the “building of the tabernacle of David which is fallen down, and building again the ruins thereof . . . that the residue of men might seek after the Lord and all the Gentiles upon whom My Name is called saith the Lord,” (Acts 15:16, 17), declares that it shall be “in that day that living waters shall go out from Jerusalem.” (Zech. 14:8.) Joel, speaking of the same time, says, “The mountains shall drop down new wine, and the hills shall flow with milk, and the rivers of Judah shall flow with waters, and a fountain shall come forth of the house of the Lord.” (Joel 3:18.) Ezek.

47:1-12 portrays vividly the strength and amount of the water of life that is yet to flow; yet to heal, and to restore life to the waste places; and Rev. 22:1 shows a “pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb.” Still from the Rock of Ages flows water of life.

At Kadesh.

Is there any significant feature for us in the events that transpired there? “Take the Rod,” (which Rod?) the rod of Aaron, not this time the rod of Moses, but that which had budded before the Testimony, as an emblem for all time of his priestly authority. It was the Rod that “was before the Lord” that they were commanded to take, and holding it were to speak to the Rock before the eyes of the whole congregation of Israel. “Taking the Rod” should have conveyed some lesson to these leaders. If they spoke with any authority it should have been noted that they, however true their declaration, spoke by the authority of the Lord, and not by their own authority. Instead, we find them declaring, “Hear now, ye rebels, are we to bring you water from out this rock ?” They failed to note that though they may have been chosen leaders the authority of the declarations should have been devoid of their own personal feelings or expressions.

The lesson for us is, that whatever we teach as truth it must be according to the “law and testimony,” and being so, we have no voice or expression that we should speak of our own authority, as if we were someone above our fellows. Our Lord, Himself, with great care taught of the “oneness”; and, irrespective of what position any may hold, “all ye are brethren.” Little errors lead to bigger ones, and so it is no wonder we find Moses and Aaron making another greater mistake. Full of themselves, and possibly irritated with the ever-learning and never coming to a knowledge of the truth of their brethren, they are blinded to the direct will of God for themselves. Forgetting by what authority they were to perform the duty of speaking to the Rock, they smote the Rock, and so emphatic that they smote it twice.

But the Water of Life cannot be withheld from the Rock because of the failure of those in responsible positions; no, it gushes forth to satisfy the thirst of the troubled community, and the leaders are reproved with severity, and the truth is brought home to them, “Because ye believed not in Me in the eyes of the children of Israel, therefore ye shall not bring this assembly into the land which I have given them.”

If the foregoing incidents are at all significant to us, this Smiting instead of Speaking is important also. What can it mean? We are all agreed what the “smiting of the Rock” at Rephidim means. We know that the Water of Life could not flow until the Rock of Christ was smitten, and surely the first outpouring was at Pentecost. The vital point before us, then, is the Ransom sacrifice of Christ; that was typically before Moses at Rephidim in the Smitten Rock. “I will stand before thee on the rock in Horeb.”

The Water of Life flows twice, though—for the Church and for the world—“after those days I will pour out My spirit on all flesh.” Before the second outpouring, the Church of the Firstborns are assembled, just as the general assembly in Israel, and we then are invited to speak to the Rock—no need to Smite it, that has already been accomplished—and the Ransom sacrifice of Christ is sufficient not only for the Church’s sins but for all the world’s, even though it be testified to in due time. “Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many, and to those who look for Him shall He appear a second time without sin unto salvation.” “By one offering He hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified.” “It is finished”—the smiting needs no repetition. The Rock once smitten, the sacrifice once appropriated needs no duplication, for to think so will lead us to believing that acceptance with God is not a present blessing to be enjoyed by the believer now, but rather a result to be attained after a long series of painful efforts and self-imposed sufferings (as happened to typical Israel). Once smitten, the Rock needs only to be spoken to to continue to draw water from the Well of Salvation. “If any man thirst let him come to Me and drink.” “Whoso drinketh . . . shall never thirst, but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life.”

Someone may say, “But what about the sin-offering, or rather the Church’s part in the sin-offering?” Many texts refer to suffering with Christ to share His glory and we would not dissent that all have their place in the Plan of God. Moses truly suffered much on the way to the Promised Land, and so will all “who live godly in Christ Jesus.” However, the Church may learn from the lesson before us, of the necessity for keeping the Ransom distinct from the Sin-offering, for to confuse the issue may result in declaring that because of rebellion, sin, (“Hear now ye rebels,” said Moses), the Rock needs to be smitten twice more, suggesting the sacrifice of the Lord’s goat and the Scapegoat. Not so, but let us remember that although we may have to bear with many failings, we too have enjoyed all the while the blessing of the Lord (which maketh rich), and we drank from the stream of life because of the favour of the Rock of our Salvation, and not because we had in ourselves any virtue or quality to recommend us as vessels of honour. Keep this always before us and it cannot but assist to help us to remain humble and not self-satisfied. It is folly to think the Plan of God would not progress without our assistance.

What a contrast with the “must we fetch you water from out this rock,” with the willingness of Christ to go before and be smitten. It is the latter disposition we want to cultivate, and when the time is ripe for the Water of Life to flow again, we trust that our doctrine will be pure. The Ransom needs no repetition, and when mankind come before this Rock, should we make the same mistake as Moses and Aaron we cannot stop the flow, but we ourselves will be losers.

If we are ever privileged to lead any to this Rock, let us not forget it is, as the Psalmist declares, “Higher than I.” Whatever we teach as truth, we will not be able to elevate this Rock higher than what God has already done, for He has given Him “a name above every other name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, and every tongue confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.” It is in our category to elevate ourselves rather higher than we should, and to do so we will suffer loss, and our brethren also, just as with Israel of old. The Memorial which is so fresh in our minds was surely a symbol of God’s greatest gift, and Christ’s mightiest work for all; a symbol that the Water of Life is available for all because of the Smitten Rock. (1. Tim. 2:5, 6.)

Blessed is the man who trusteth in the Lord

(Convention Address—Jer. 17:7, 8.)

JEREMIAH was one of the noble prophets who lived in the troublous times during the reigns of Judah's kings— from Josiah to- the dethronement of Zedekiah. Only by strong faith, implicit trust in God, could his mission be carried out, for the messages he had to convey were very unpopular.

The Lord had decreed the seven times punishment upon the nation because of sins—particularly the wickedness of King Manasseh. Manasseh was succeeded by his son Amon who followed his father in wickedness; he was slain after a reign of two years.

Then came Josiah, only eight years old, who proved to be one of Israel's best kings, and the trouble upon the nation was not allowed until he had been "gathered to his fathers." He was followed by his son Jehoahaz who reigned only three months and was dethroned by the King of Egypt who appointed Jehoiakim in his stead. Jehoiakim reigned eleven years and "did evil in the sight of the Lord" and Nebuchadnezzar took him captive to Babylon and set up Jehoiachin as king, who after only a few months was also taken to Babylon and Zedekiah was made vassal king under Nebuchadnezzar.

It was during good King Josiah's reign that Jeremiah began to prophesy but it was in the succeeding reigns that he suffered so much for his loyalty to God in giving forth his prophecies. Supposing him to have been thirty years of age when he began to prophesy in the 13th year of Josiah, he would have been over 70 years of age when Zedekiah was taken captive and Jerusalem destroyed in 587 B.C. After that there was the sad experience of Gedaliah being slain by Ishmael (Jer. 41) and Jeremiah was forced to go into Egypt. That is the last authentic information we have of him. The tradition advocated by British Israel Theorists that he went to Ireland is most improbable at such an advanced age, the journey in those days being so long and perilous.

It was during the eleven years of Zedekiah's reign that he suffered mostly. His message was that God had decreed that Israel must serve the King of Babylon and therefore Zedekiah should not rebel but submit to Nebuchadnezzar. This was incompatible to the king and his counsellors and they sought help from Egypt, but Jeremiah's words came true and disaster fell upon Jerusalem. Jeremiah had been imprisoned and also been put in a miry pit to die, yet he trusted in the Lord' and was delivered.

One thing is very noticeable regarding Jeremiah's. messages—while the truth was fearlessly declared,. it was with deep regret that such punishments must. come; punishments which might have been avoided had his messages been received and complied with. The Gentile Times had already begun, but even that was not sufficient to correct the wicked king and his counsellors and so this further punishment of being-carried away captives and Jerusalem and' the temple destroyed, was inflicted.

How Jeremiah lamented over these calamities; his book of Lamentations is the expression of his sorrow. How he ever looked forward to the time when the punishments would be over, when the lessons would have been learned and the nation would be pardoned and once more come into Divine favor and come again into their land "with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads." All his prophecies of impending disaster are followed by expressions of such good hopes built upon the sure promises of God.

The lesson of these few verses chosen for our subject must first be learned. There is only one source of life, of real comfort and hope, of sure strength, and indeed of every good and perfect gift. That source is the Lord of heaven and earth. "Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord and whose hope the Lord is. For he shall be as a tree planted by the waters and that spreadeth out her roots by the rivers, and shall not see when heat cometh, but her leaf shall be green, and shall not be careful in the year of drought, neither shall cease from yielding fruit."

Such a tree is a beautiful symbol of those who entirely trust in the Lord. The tree planted by the waters with its roots spreading by the rivers, is just in the right position to flourish, for it can draw nourishment even in times of drought, while those on dry lands perish. So, he who has faith in God and trusts in His Word will be continually sustained even in the hard times and fiery trials. The water of life which our Lord offered at the well in Samaria,, springs up- unto life eternal and those who drink of that water never go thirsty, but find support and comfort in difficulties, persecutions, afflictions and sorrows, even when it is a case of "walking in the dark with God." They learn to say like Job, "Yea though He slay me yet will I trust and so, they continue to produce fruits unto holiness.

Our Lord', then, has promised to plant all who come to Him, fully trusting, beside such waters. "O, everyone that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath, no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price . . Incline your ear and come unto me: hear and your soul shall live; and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David." (Isa. 55:1-3). This water shall be in him a well of water springing up unto everlasting life; his leaf also shall not wither. "His delight shall be in the law of the Lord; and in his law cloth he meditate day and night. And he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season." (Psa. 1).

How important that is; there is a season during which fruit must be ripened and the Lord has a right to expect it. He has planted the seed and nourished and watered it. How beautifully Isa. 5 speaks of the vineyard of the Lord and of his tender plant. Everything was done for it so that good grapes should be produced, yet it brought forth- wild grapes. Jesus gives us the picture of the vine and the branches. The vine is good and there can be no excuse for branches that are wastrels. The great Husbandman will prune and tend it, but if(the branch does not accept the pruning, the trials, in the right spirit and learn the necessary lessons, there- will' be no fruitage and the branch will be cut off.

How important it is that we should perfectly trust the great Husbandman. and so be properly exercised and produce fruit "in his season." The fruit must be ripened so as to be gathered in its right season. It would seem that some will fail to be ripened in, time and be too late and finally realise, that-, "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and, we are not saved." How often is this illustrated as we walk through our gardens and orchards and see some undeveloped green tomatoes, some. dwarf, sour apples or tiny grapes of no value. (Ter. 8:20-22). How Jeremiah mourned that Israel was like that because they had failed to put their trust in,, the Lord. They had trusted in their own strength and then sought help from Egypt. "For the hurt of the daughter of my people am I hurt, I am black, astonishment has taken hold upon me. Oh that I had a place in the wilderness, a lodging place of wayfaring men, that I might leave my people and go from them for they be all adulterers, an assembly of treacherous men.”

Then is presented the consequence of such unfaithfulness—”Cursed is the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord. He shall be like a lonesome tree in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh; but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land and not inhabited.” Such is the case of the ungodly; just the reverse of those that put their trust in the Lord, “The secrets of the Lord are with them that fear him.” These are planted by the rivers of truth and are enlightened respecting the good things which the Lord has in store and sends in due season for the encouragement and refreshment of His people. “There is a river the streams whereof make glad the city of God,” so that those therein dwelling can say—”God is our refuge and strength, a very pleasant help in trouble, therefore we will not fear though the earth be removed and the mountains be carried into the sea,” (Psa. 46) and as our text puts it, “shall not feel (be affected by) the heat, nor be anxious in the year of drought, neither cease from yielding fruit.”

How true are these two pictures. Some seem as though they must have some human organisation, some religious institution to lean upon. They must have some man as leader to trust in, but when the troubles come perhaps the arm of flesh fails or is removed. Then they are, as it were, stranded like a lonesome tree in the desert and what fruit can they have, for the fruit the Lord is looking for is produced from the provisions the Lord has made for them who put their trust not in man, nor self, but in Him who never fails, being the same yesterday, to-day and forever, always ready to answer the call of His tried ones who call on Him in their hour of need.

In times of calamities, of shipwreck or fearsome storms, of earthquakes or in face of death, generally those who have ignored God and His Word may be found in terror and crying out for God’s mercy; while those who have come to know God and have learned to trust Him and to rely upon His promises, are able to remain calm and restful, knowing that nothing can happen to them but what He permits and what He is willing and able to overrule for good. Even though the outer man may perish, there is the “tabernacle not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.”

The important thing is for each of us to see just how it is with ourselves. Have we learned so assuredly that the Lord does care for us that He will provide, ‘guide and protect us from everything that could do us harm as new creatures? Have we so believed in and confided our every interest to God, as to have entered into that rest—the rest of the people of God? Are we nestling “under the shadow of His wings?”

Now is the time to make sure of our position. Have we taken the necessary steps of faith and consecration? Have we received the spirit of sonship whereby we know that He has accepted us in the Beloved, as His children, and are we seeking so to walk in the light as members in Christ? ‘Then we can claim the promises—”All things are yours, for ye are Christ’s and Christ is God’s.” “If God be for us who can be against us.”

We know we shall not be free from trials and temptations—”In the world ye shall have tribulation.” We may have to suffer sickness, pain, cruelty and death, but our Lord has said, “Fear not them that kill the body;” that would only end our sacrifice. It is the way our Captain has gone before; should we who walk in His steps be spared such experiences in travelling the same narrow way that leads to the throne as joint-heirs with Him? Frail human nature shrinks from suffering, but He who has called us in Christ is able to supply all needed grace and strength for each trial—in every time of need. The manna comes day by day just as required —”As thy days so shall thy strength be.”

Trustful faith is what is needed in this day of perplexity, doubt, whirl of pleasure seeking and rush of life; faith in God and His good promises. It does one good to look back over Bible history and note the lives of faithful ones of old, of whom Paul (Heb. 12:1) speaks of as “a cloud of witnesses.” Joshua, at the end of his long, faithful service said— “Ye know in all your hearts and in all your souls that not one thing hath failed of all the good things which the Lord your God spake concerning you; all are come to pass unto you, not one thing hath failed thereof.” (Jos. 23:14). Then over 400 years later at the dedication of the temple Solomon bore the same witness—”There bath not failed one word of all his good promise, which he promised by the hand of Moses.” (1 Kings 8:56).

What an example we have in Joseph; even when put in the pit to perish, like Jeremiah, and then when, sold as a slave into Egypt and unjustly sentenced and imprisoned. In all those long years of adversity, he still held firmly his faith in God. The stream of God’s promises to Abraham never dried up, even though from a human viewpoint his life was quite hopeless, cut off from all loved ones and in prison in a strange land. He was like the tree whose leaf did not fail, and ultimately he realised that God’s kind hand had been directing matters all the time; what a rich fruitage there was; what a happy result was attained.

While Israel trusted in the Lord how happy was their condition, but how often they lost faith and suffered accordingly. Time and again the Lord’s grace was renewed unto them and time and again they lapsed and forgot their God and went the way of the nations around them until in Jeremiah’s day, the Lord’s decree had gone forth that they must be punished ‘by the “seven times” prescribed •by the Law. (Lev. 25).

How pitiful has been Israel’s condition ever since that time. ‘Because of unbelief they crucified the Lord of glory— their promised Messiah—and a further decree of punishment came upon them. “I will recompense their iniquity and their sin double.” (Jer. 16:18). See also Zech. 9:12; and Isa. 40:2; 61:7.

Israel has since that time been like the “lonely tree in a desert land—in a salty land that cannot be inhabited.” Now the time of their punishment has ended, yet Israel does not fully understand the good that is in store for them, though blindness seems to be beginning to pass away. Shortly they that on account of their rejection of the Messiah will understand their errors of the past and realise their nation has been receiving “double for all their sins” according to the Lord’s Word.

Trust in the Lord.

In order to trust fully, there must be some tangible reason for faith, some good basis, some knowledge of God, some, experience of His goodness. If we come to know God we will certainly trust him. That is what is necessary—to know God which is life eternal. The religion of many is based upon feelings, emotions. Such people can, while association with others, join in happy songs, give expressions of experiences and heavenly hopes and of their joy in the Lord; and yet their conception of God is that He is terrible, that He is cruel enough to bring into existence the vast millions of mankind, the majority of whom have never heard of “the only name . . . whereby they may be saved,” yet they think that God has consigned all excepting the few who find the narrow way to life (“few .there be that find it”) to an eternity of life in torture. How can such folks, with such thoughts, have a perfect trust or a real joy in the Lord whom they think to be so unjust, so cruel, so vindictive. No if we are to have a full assurance of faith, a confidence that brings peace, rest and joy, we %must know God to be as stated in Rev. 15:3—”Just and true are Thy ways O thou King of Saints, wlaio shall not fear Thee, O Lord, and glorify Thy name.”

By learning more and more of God’s great plan, of His purposes in regard to the Church—how the saints of this age are invited to, be joint-heirs with Christ, so as to be the means of ,blessing all the families of the earth during the next age--thus realising that all the Divine arrangements are in accord with wisdom, justice, love and power and that nothing can hinder His grand designs, then we •can rest in His love and trust in His goodness.

As we realise our own unworthiness—that all our righteousness is as filthy rags, and that while we were yet sinners God commended to us His love, and provided through His only Son for our redemption and clothed us in His righteousness—how glad we are to come as little children, and accept His mercies and submit to His will and thus find the peace and joy of salvation. Then, when we view what we have tried to do in walking the Christian life and feel how short we have come, and what we have tried to do in His service of truth and for His - people and realise that after all one is but an unprofitable servant and how graciously God has provided us an Advocate with Himself, even Jesus Christ the righteous who imputes His perfection to us so that we may enjoy the sunshine of the Divine countenance all along the way; with such manifestation of God's goodness and loving care, how could we doubt, for if God be for us who then can be against us. So our trusting faith grows stronger as from one experience and another, day by day we find His love is renewed and never fails. (Lam. 3:22-25).

The world knows not God. Men see the depravity, wickedness, calamities and terrible sufferings of war and carnage; men being forced to go out to fight others by powers that be, forced to gas and explode bombs upon innocent women and children; they see the wicked prospering and the righteous suffering and they cannot understand God nor trust in Him. As the prophet has said, "My people perish through lack of knowledge." But those who are like the trees planted by the rivers of waters (truths); those who have come in reverence to learn of God's great purpose which is being developed and increasingly revealed, can see the wisdom, the justice and love in the present permission of evil—that the lesson of disobedience shall be learned and then in the next age the benefit will be reaped. As a consequence of Christ's death all are to have an opportunity of life under favourable conditions. Then "all shall know the Lord, from the least to the greatest,"—"for the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the great deep."

We learn also- to understand why the Christian has great trials, sorrows and afflictions, and therefore "think it not strange concerning the fiery trials that shall try you." Paul was able to glory in his tribulations. 'Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall persecution, tribulations, distress, famine, nakedness, peril or sword?' "It God be for us who can be against us? He that spared not His own Son, but freely delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him freely give us all things."

It is in this trial time, while journeying towards our heavenly home that our faith is tried and trustfulness is so necessary if we are to be victors-'if we are to win the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. As trees planted by the rivers of waters, the fruit must be produced. We are not just planted there to assuage our own thirst and listlessly to enjoy the happy conditions. No, we are to be like trees of righteousness of the Lord's planting that He may be glorified. "Herein is my Father glorified that ye bear much fruit." Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away—every branch that beareth fruit he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit."

So God works in us and if we gladly seek to co-operate by humbly accepting His pruning, purging experiences and are properly exercised thereby we shall find our characters being developed and the fruits of righteousness growing in our hearts and minds. The great transformation work will go on until we attain likeness to our Lord and are fitted to "awake in His likeness." Everything depends upon our heart condition, a strong faith based upon reason and God's Word. "Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord—whose hope is in the Lord." "And the Lord shall guide thee continually and satisfy thy soul in drought and make fat thy bones; and thou shalt be like a watered garden, and like a spring of water, whose waters fail not." (Isa. 58:11).

"Oh blessed life!—the heart at rest
When all without tumultuous seems,
That trusts a higher will, and deems
That higher will, not mine, the best.

Oh blessed life!—heart, mind and soul,
From self-born aims and wishes free,
In all at one with Deity,
And loyal to the Lord's control.”

My Little House.

My house is little, but warm enough,
When the skies of sorrow are snowing;
It holds me safe from the tempest rough,
When the winds of Despair are blowing.

Its rafters come from the woods of Praise,
Its walls from the quarry of Prayer,
And not one echo, on stormy days,
Can trouble the stillness there.

The floor is bare, but the joists are strong
With Faith from the heavenly hill;
My lamp is Love, and the whole year long
It burns unquenchable still.

With sweet Content is my hearth well lit,
And there in the darkest weather,
Hope and I by the fire can sit,
And sing, and keep house together.”

”What hath God wrought.”

Dr. R. Henry Bett speaking of the great event in the life of John Wesley just two hundred years ago, enumerates some of the great results of the Methodist movement. Apart from the hundreds of thousands that were won from mere brutality and vice and led to a purer, nobler life there were other consequences such as great missionary movements. The reform of prisons, abolition of slavery, extension of education and other humanitarian causes owed much of their first inspiration and of their driving power to early Methodism. Dr. Bett suggests that if Wesley could be brought back and be shown all the result of his works, he would say again what he did say at the end of his life—”What hath God wrought.”

Certainly God did greatly use John Wesley after he had come to realise true consecration, the full surrender of self and the entrance upon the spiritual life. His zeal and earnest labours knew no bounds, the world was his parish and he lived to see such happy results, and after his decease his influence continued and one could not limit the power for good from his life. Yet if John Wesley came back, what would he say of the church that claims to be following him. In his day no member of the society would attend a theatre, nor play cards, nor dance, nor wear jewellery or fancy dress. Ministers or local preachers did not smoke nor have the comfortable homes and good salaries of to-day—they went into the ministry because they must preach, not because it was a nice profession. They were true to the fundamentals of Christianity, original sin and salvation through the precious blood of Christ.

How different it is to-day. Methodism has become rich and increased in goods, thinks she lacks nothing and has lost her first love—has erred in doctrine. Her ministers preach the theories of men, evolution etc., instead of the Word of God; many no longer think of the Bible as the inspired Word of God. One is inclined to think that if John Wesley came back to-day and viewed the people, supposed to be his followers, he would be apt to say, “what hath Satan wrought”; and seeing the worldliness prevailing in the church he would point to Revelation 3:15-18.

Of course the Methodist Church is not alone in this respect; it is the general condition in the religious world to-day and was foretold as a sign of the end of the age. 1 Tim. 4:1; 2 Tim. 3:1-5 ;3, 4, etc.

A LEAFLET entitled “The Love of God,” has recently been sent to us upon which to cony tent. It opens with the heading, “Love . . God . . I am,” and states: “These three terms denote One Being—the Ruler and Creator of all known and unknown Universes. A blade of grass is said to contain the whole of God. Can it be otherwise for God is not divisible into parts; and Love is one.” After quoting the text—”And I, if I be lifted up will draw all men unto me,” the remark is made:— “None can remain forever lost; the love of God in His Creation prohibits this. His will: must be done.”

Further it is stated:—

“The Great Father, seeing His children falling into a deep abyss, being Love, could not do otherwise than think upon a plan whereby He might save us from ourselves. He.,therefore thought Himself into Flesh. He thought Himself into the “Man Christ”: He thought Himself into the “Word”. made flesh. Thus we may view the Godhead as representing “Qualities” or “Characters,”—the Father differentiated, but not separated from the Son.”

In the above statements we have the heathen idea of the indestructibility of all things animate and inanimate, as well as that of the doctrine of the Trinity, definitely expressed, both of which are unscriptural.

It is an erroneous teaching that claims because God is love, and supposedly because He exists in all creatures’ and things that He will not and cannot destroy any of them. The theory of the immortality of the soul, as also that of Universalism are based on one or other of these assumptions, but the Scriptures very clearly state that,

“All the wicked will God destroy.” (Psa. 145:20). “The soul that sinneth, it shall die.” (Ezek. 18:4, 20). See also Rom. 6:23—“The wages of sin is death”—and Acts 3: ‘2’3; Rev. 20:7-9, etc. The words of our Lord are—“Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and- body in gehenna”—the second death. (Matt. 10:28).

The attributes of God all work harmoniously; His love, justice, wisdom and power are operating in fulfilment of the plan of the ages without violation of any--“That He might be just and the justifier (only) of him which believeth in Jesus.” See Rom. 3:23-26; Acts 4:12.

As with the theory of the immortality of the soul, so also the doctrine of the Trinity comes down from the mythologies of the remote past, and both have been incorporated in church teachings without any Scriptural support. Not once is the term “Trinity” found in the Bible, and the thought of one God, yet three in one, is obtained only by twisting the meaning of certain texts. “To us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in Him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by Him” (I Cor. 8: (3). For a full explanation of this matter the reader is referred to ‘the book’ “Atonement between God and Man,” study 2, and which will be gladly loaned to anyone desiring.

Anxiety.

(Convention Address. Matt. 6:25-34)

“Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought for your life. Take no thought for ‘the morrow: for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.” Matt.:25, 34.

NOTES have been taken for this address from the writings of two noted scholars, namely Dr. Dowd and Mr. Oswald Dykes, who tell us that the correct rendering of the words of our Lord, here, is “Be not anxious about your life; be not anxious about to-morrow.”

The opinion of the meaning of this word “anxiety” as expressed by others is “trouble of mind”—not merely to take serious thought, for such calm, judicious thought in the providing of things needful was not the condition of mind that our Lord condemned, but it was that anxiety which needlessly distresses, divides and distracts the mind, thus destroying its peace. Anxiety can be so strained and excessive as to become painful; it disturbs the judgments and makes our own efforts inconstant and ineffectual. It is a consuming force and if persisted in, leads to fretfulness and eventually burns away all the powers of self control.

Another opinion of a medical authority is as follows:—“There is scarcely anything in life that wilt wear one down physically as much as anxiety.” All the eminent physicians in the world can do little for a patient if he persists in fretting over his troubles, real and imaginary. It is exceedingly difficult to make the body well when the mind is sick, and anxiety is a form of mental disease. On the other hand, many a person with a weak body has gone through life comparatively happily, because his mental attitudes were right, his determination strong, his faith intact, his love for God and mankind buoying him up .

We will all have our anxieties and we will all have our burdens to bear, more or less, for does the Bible not tell us that we shall “enter the kingdom through much tribulation?” and our Master’s loving words are—“Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden and I will give you rest. Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly of heart and ye shall find rest for your souls, for my yoke is easy and my burden is light.”

It thus shows us that we will have our tribulations and what will we do with them? What is the opposite to these anxieties? There is a verse in the 55th Psalm which reads—“Cast thy burden upon the Lord and He shall sustain thee: He shall never suffer the righteous to be moved.” This is a very stormy Psalm in the Psalmist experiences. You will notice in it such indignation and force, such violence of thought and feeling—experiences that may come to us in the bearing of our burdens. But the Psalmist seemed to have been lulled into a momentary peace as the spirit of sweet assurance returned to him, when he came to the words of our text.—“He shall never suffer the righteous to be moved.” Now, what a blessing we have here, as the Master said—“My yoke is easy and my burden is light.”—because He would help us to bear our burdens.

The Psalmist says in another place, “When I sought to know this, it was too painful for me until I went into the sanctuary.” So he took his, perplexities into the presence of God and considered them in the atmosphere of the sanctuary, and lo, the pain and perplexity were gone. It is a pleasing experience of the sons that they too can bring, their perplexities into the sanctuary. Now, what is our own experience in that regard? When we have taken our troubles and trials to the Lord, have we not experienced the sweet assurances? When our love weakened our faith weakened, but “perfect love casteth out fear.” We will always be relieved when we take our troubles to the Lord.

Now, what does a sanctuary mean to us? Is it a haven? David said in another Psalm—“All my springs are in them.” Is it a place where the spring of our refreshment runs deep—a thankful hiding place of our inner experiences where the love of the Lord reigns supreme? If it is, we shall always find a place of the utmost assurance and rest. There is a little poem entitled “The Innermost,” which shows the blessings of the sanctuary.

“Keep a little place of silence,
A quiet realm of your own,
A sanctuary in your heart
Where you may be alone;

Freed from the outward turmoil,
An inward house of prayer,
You will always find God waiting
To meet and bless you there.”

Then there was a little poem published not long ago in our “Peoples Paper” which reads:—

“His presence sweetens all our care,
And makes our burdens light;
A Word from Him ‘dispels our fears,
And gilds the gloom of night,”

Yet, there are some burdens that do not pass away when we take them to the Lord. Is there some other gracious ministry of the loving ‘Lord? Yes there is. “There was given unto me a thorn in the flesh. Thrice I asked the Lord that it be removed and He said unto me, ‘my grace is sufficient for thee.’” The Apostle cast his burden upon the Lord; he asked that it be removed; the burden remained, but the Apostle was strengthened. “Most gladly therefore will I bear my weakness.” This is sometimes the way of the Lord. He sometimes melts and mellows His children in the furnace of affliction. Some of the very finest characters are mellowed in the crucible of trouble. Out of tears comes the smile, out of reverse comes charity and out of suffering comes compassion. So, if the burden be permitted, to remain, what will the Lord do for us? He will sustain us. That is, the bearers will be strengthened; He will strengthen them and help them bear their burdens, and so diminish their load.

The following incident, read recently, might be an illustration. A doctor in a London hospital was watching the weakening of a little child after a severe head operation. Its eyes were heavily bandaged, so that no light could penetrate, The child was too weak to cry, and it just moved its little hand, as a gesture towards its mother—but its mother was not there. And: so our trials may come to us when no human hand can aid us. But it cannot be so with the Lord in dealing with His children, for He has said, “I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee.” “A mother may forget her child, yet will I never forget thee.”

In all our burdens and trials that we must bear, and which are allotted or permitted to us, we must always have that implicit trust, and know that there will be a constant, never failing direction of our paths by a love that, can never fail—a love for His children.

In the word “sustain?” which is a very rich word in conveying content there is the thought of a nursing ministry—He will deal with us as infants. There is also the thought of support. He will give us the bread of life. He will increase our vitality; . make our powers more wakeful, more alive. There is also in this word the thought that He will hold us up. “Hold Thou me up,” says one of the Psalmists. Sometimes we have seen the elder son bearing his elderly mother, which is a small illustration of the loving kindness of the Lord. “He is at thy right hand.”

Perhaps there were never words spoken on this earth more brimful of such really wise, effectual and sustaining strength as these blessed words of Jesus —”Be not anxious about your life. Be not anxious about to-morrow.” Oh, how many, many have received comfort and solace since those words were uttered to the groaning creation, and how much more so should His children, the sons that are in the earth, be comforted. Is it not His will that we too should have the strength of those words of His? David in various Psalms says, “When my soul is overwhelmed within me, then Thou knowest my path. In the day I cried unto Thee, Thou heardest and, answered me with strength in my soul.” In another place he says—”The Lord God will give strength to His people. He will bless His people with peace.”

There was a lovely little article in the “Herald,” read recently, on “Christ before Pilot.” How wonderfully our Master bore His trials. How they marvelled at the secret, silent, powerful strength of His personality. Where did our Master get His strength? It was imbibed from His communion with, and through the revelations of the Heavenly Father. So we too, in a measure, can go into the sanctuary and get that strength that we need to make our burdens light, which the Master meant us to have.

In reading a proverb recently the following was stated—”If I had only two coins in the wide world; I would buy a loaf with one and a lily with the other.” The counsel is not so unwise after all. The proverb goes on to say, “For I know what the feeling is to be hard up and to make ends meet, so that I shall, not spend a penny unnecessarily, but I know also the feeling that a bouquet. of flowers can have on one’s mental depression.”

So, in’ thinking of our Master’s illustration, He would have us remember His words—”The life is more than meat.” We should always have an advantage, at least we should always be on higher ground, above the people of the land, because He has drawn such nice lessons for us, in God’s providence, towards the flowers and birds. He who robes the lily and feeds the raven, will most assuredly provide for us.

Another thought as a little point brought out in another address regarding full surrender—we need not be anxious about food or clothing. We all have to make ends meet, and provide things decently and honestly, but, ah ! do we just remember our Master’s words? Also, can we look up? We remember that picture of Bunyan’s of the man with the muck rake, who was so intent on gathering the straws that he could not see the crown in the angel’s hand just above him. So we can lift ourselves above our surroundings and remember that even now the Master can see us. He is still supervising the affairs of His church; knows each one of us and marks our lives day by day. Have’ we just got that faith—that true faith? Really, as the Apostle says—”The evidence of things unseen.” Can we just picture now our Master nearer than ever’ He was, perhaps, to His little ones, and have we that strong faith that marks every true life— faith that is at the back of all our lives—that unreserved, unrestricted conviction of the goodness, justice and loving kindness of the Lord? Ah ! if we can just remember that we need not, as our Master said; take any anxious thought, for He will provide for us.

Above all, Jesus travelled light, not having where to lay His head for an earthly possession. He carried no titles, no extra clothes and no worldly wealth. Born in a lowly place and meek and lowly of heart, He said—"To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness to the truth." Furthermore He cautioned His disciples to travel light, telling them not to be over anxious for the future as to matters of food and clothing—that the God who cared for the birds would assuredly care for them. Oh! what power and peace there are in His words—"Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you." So, there it is—to seek the kingdom of God and His righteousness and to bear witness to the truth..

While there are many little ways that we can help, we will not all have very important ways of witnessing for the truth, but the Master would have us in that patient continuance of well doing—just to go about our daily lives, "In quietness and confidence shall be your strength." So we are to do justly, love mercy and work harmoniously with our God. Paul said, "How unblameworthy and justly we behave ourselves among you." So, it is just in the daily round and common task, as we' were reminded at a previous Convention in Melbourne—just a cup of cold water in the common task of life, just the little simple things we may offer our Master, who has done so much for us.

Question Box.

Question.:—What is the meaning of Jer. 4:23-26? Have these verses been fulfilled or do they apply still future? Some are very sure that these verses and others similar refer to the Millennial reign; that the 'earth will be desolate or void during that time.

Answer:—It would seem clear from these and connecting verses that this prophesy has already had fulfilment on Judah; the trend of the prophet's expression is all that way. Then it may be also. taken as illustrating the desolation of Christendom, but there is nothing to suggest that the passage has anything to do with the world at large.

Other passages from the same prophet, such as Jer. 31:27-34, as well as from "all the holy prophets since the world began," and our Lord and the Apostles, clearly indicate that the Millennial reign of Christ and His saints of this Gospel Age is for "the restitution of all things." This would include all the willing and obedient of mankind who come forth in the general resurrection, for "every soul which will, not hear (obey) that prophet (Christ, the greater than Moses) shall be cut off from amongst the people. (Acts 3:20-23). The earth also is to be brought to perfection during the same period of time. (Isa. 35; Mic. 4:1-4; Amos. 9:11- 15). "Thus saith the Lord, the heaven is my throne, and the earth is my footstool," and the promise is—"I will make the place of my feet glorious." (Isa. 66:1; 60:13).

The Best Wine.

“Thou hast kept the good wine until now.”—John 2:10.

“When from life’s feast the glory has departed,
And weariness creeps on,
When on thy lips the bread has turned to ashes
And all the wine is gone.

“Then fill the jars once more though but with water,
And fill them to the brim;
And to the waiting guests about thy table
Pour out thy best—for Him.

“His power only waits for thy small effort,
To add His mighty touch,
Transmuting thy poor gift to His rich vintage,
Making thy little—much.

“So shalt thou know again the joy of service
That thou hadst thought was past,
And find the Master of the Feast has given
The best wine at the last.”

New Dictator (A Booklet replacing August Issue)

THE ONLY HOPE FOR HUMANITY

“For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. . . . For He must reign, till He hath put all enemies under His feet.” (1 Cor. 15:22-25.)

IN the Scriptures we find a most wonderful plan respecting the destiny of the human family, which no one of intelligence should fail to investigate. By searching the Bible records it will be found that the only hope for humanity is dependent on the coming of “A New Dictator.” In other words, our subject refers to the immense work of the risen Lord Jesus Christ, who, over 1900 years ago, was raised from the dead by the power of God, in harmony with His own words recorded in Rev. 1:18—“I am He that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore, and have the keys of the grave and of death.”

The Apostle Paul, in 1 Cor. 15, explains this matter so beautifully. Read to verse 26. The words of verse 25 are especially applicable to our subject and agree with a statement from the same Apostle in Phil. 2:10, 11—“That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.”

Past, Present and Future Rulers of the World.

The questions may arise in our minds as to why the past and present rulers of the world—kings, emperors and dictators—have not been successful in bringing peace and happiness to their subjects, that it is found necessary for a new ruler to establish a reign of righteousness throughout the whole earth; and also in what way the reign of this new king will differ from others, so that it can be termed, in the words of the prophet Haggai, “the desire of all nations.” Just think of these words, “the desire of all nations shall come,” and we must at once realise that the administration of the new kingdom will be vastly different from that of the kingdoms of this world. The contrast is shown again by the Psalmist when he says, “Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning.”

With reference to these questions, it is well to review the history of the human family at least briefly; and while we shall see that the whole period of about 6000 years since the creation of man has been largely “a night of weeping,” when “darkness covers the earth and gross darkness the people,” it is necessary that we understand the reason for this, and also how the great remedy is to be brought about by the great Deliverer, who, it is promised, shall bring “joy in the morning” to all the families of the earth.

The reason for darkness being on such a large scale throughout the world is explained by the fact that the prince of darkness, Satan, has held sway over the majority since the first act of disobedience on the part of our first parents..

The Apostle tells us in the fifth chapter of Romans, “Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned.” This statement is in agreement with the account in Genesis, where we read of the, sentence of death being pronounced upon Adam—”Dying thou shalt die”—as well as the words of our chapter, verse 22, “As in Adam all die.” So, from that time on, man has had a dying existence—”Born in sin and shapen in iniquity.”

A Groaning Creation: Yet Not Hopeless.

The perfection of our first parent has been more and more obliterated; weaknesses in one direction or another are inherited from generation to generation, and whereas in the beginning man lived over 900 years, yet “the days of our years are threescore years and ten, and if by reason-of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labour and sorrow, for it is soon cut off, and we fly away.” ‘ The Apostle^ undoubtedly very truly sums up the position. of mankind as a whole in the words of Rom. 8:22—”For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now.”

There is no need to add more along this line; truly it is a groaning creation, and yet, as we have already seen, it is not hopeless. But can we wonder, that from the ranks of the best of the fallen race, no king, emperor or dictator can give any hope of delivering his subjects from the curse of sin and death? Have we not then the answer to our first question, as to why past and present rulers have failed to bring in a reign of righteousness and peace for the blessing of mankind?

We are not disparaging the brave efforts of many noble men and women to lift their fellow creatures to higher levels of life; this is to be admired. But as these leaders are imperfect and living a dying existence, as well as the mass of mankind, no lasting results can be achieved from their best efforts. On the other hand many of the world’s great men seek power and authority for selfish reasons and the results from their rule over their fellow men only adds to the groaning of the masses. This is particularly in evidence to-day on the continent of Europe and in the Far East.

In support of the transitory condition of present-day kingdoms and rulers we would refer to a newspaper article of some time ago in which a list of sovereigns was given showing those, about twenty in number, who had been deposed, or who had abdicated in the past thirty years. Certainly this century has been most convincing that it is God’s design to permit mankind to try every form of government, to see if they can bring in happiness and good will upon the earth. After all man’s efforts have failed in great distress, God’s Word assures us that Christ’s Kingdom will bring order and blessing out of chaos and ruin for all the children of men.

Glad Tidings of Great Joy.

Recognising then the necessity of a new ruler, if a reign of righteousness and peace is ever to be established in the earth, let us examine the claims made in the Scriptures concerning our Lord Jesus Christ as being the only hope for humanity. In the first place we have the wonderful proclamation given by the angel at the time of His birth—”Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord . . . and suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth, peace, good will toward men.”

How many people are puzzled in regard to this message, proclaiming “good tidings of great joy” and “on earth peace, good will toward men,” when, on viewing the world 1900 years later, they find, amongst most people, distress and perplexity instead of great joy, and wars and rumours of wars instead of peace. Can it be that this message has failed; that there has been a great mistake in this matter? Surely not! Let us note that the angel did not indicate that all people at that time and since would immediately hear the good news respecting the birth of the Saviour, the Deliverer, but the assurance is that this blessed truth, that Christ the Lord was the Saviour of mankind, by whom peace will be established on earth in due time, shall yet be good tidings of great joy to all people.

Isaiah, in the ninth chapter, also prophesied concerning this same great event—"For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon His shoulder: and His name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of His government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon His kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever."

Some have wondered why this prophecy, which harmonises with the angel's message, was not fulfilled by our Lord when He was on earth; but from other Scriptures we learn that our Lord's mission at His first advent was in preparation for the work He is to carry out at His second advent. The Apostle, in Hebrews 2, explains this matter very clearly when, in referring to the ultimate object of God to place man over the things of earth, when he is raised up to perfection, says—"But now we see not yet all things put under him, (no, God's plan has not yet advanced that far; however, what we do discern and rejoice in is), We see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death (He became a man) crowned with glory and honour (of perfect humanity) that He by the grace of God should taste death for every man."

The Ransom Sacrifice.

Herein we have revealed the great foundation doctrine of the ransom, upon which all hope for future life and blessing alone can be based. Again and again in the Scriptures this truth shines out in manifestation of the goodness and mercy of the Lord—"God commendeth His love toward us in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us," and again, "Christ Jesus gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time." (Rom. 5:8; 1 Tim. 2:6.)

These words, "to be testified in due time," confirm the previous thought, that the good tidings of great joy concerning the Saviour would yet be to all people. And in regard to the ransom or corresponding price for all, we have the condescending love of Christ exhibited, in that He was willing in accordance with the will of God to leave the glory of His heavenly station and become a perfect man, that He might by obedience even unto death redeem the first man, Adam, and all mankind condemned in him. Let us note this truth again in our chapter, 1 Car. 15, verses 21 and 22—"For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." Could anything be more wonderful and beautifully expressed. The benefits of the redemption through Christ Jesus are just as extensive as the condemnation through Adam.

So the Apostle in this beautiful resurrection chapter before us, explains very clearly the Gospel which he had received—"How that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that He was buried and that He rose again the third day according to the Scriptures," and that this was not only witnessed by the twelve disciples, but He was seen by as many as 500 brethren at once, after His resurrection from the dead, and finally by the Apostle Paul himself in a most remarkable way.

Redemption Only by Death and Resurrection of Christ.

Do we not see, then, that even if the Lord Jesus at His first advent had established His reign of peace on earth, all the blessing that He could have bestowed would have been upon a dying race. The death sentence could not have been lifted, except as the Apostle says, "Christ died for our sins." Our Lord also fully understood His mission at that time, when He said, "The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give His life a ransom for many." And further, can we not see that not only Christ's death but also His resurrection was necessary to the salvation of the human family condemned in Adam, for, says the Apostle, "If Christ be not risen then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain; ye are yet in your sins, and they which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." How sad the picture would be, to think that all those who had believed in Christ and fallen asleep in death, to say nothing of the millions who had not even heard the name of Jesus would thus have perished, except Christ be risen from the dead. Can we wonder, then, that the Apostle exclaims so positively, "But now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first-fruits of them that slept."

He had just previously also said, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable," and how this would apply also in our own cases. But we thank God that the resurrection of Christ guarantees that, "as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive," which is in harmony with our Lord's own words—"Because I live, ye shall live also." (John 14:19).

Two Resurrections—Firstfruits and Afterfruits.

Being assured, then, that our Lord died, "the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God," being "delivered for our offences and raised again for our justification," let us note further that the Apostle's words with respect to Christ being "the firstfruits of them that slept," implies an afterfruits. This is borne out in verse 23 of our chapter, where the Apostle in speaking of the order of the resurrection says, "But every man in his own order: Christ the firstfruits, afterwards they that are Christ's at His presence." We see, then, that there is what is termed in other Scriptures a first or chief resurrection, and also a general resurrection. It will not be until both of these are accomplished in the fullest sense, as we shall see later, that the words of the prophet Isaiah shall be fulfilled—"He shall see of the travail of His soul and shall be satisfied."

These two resurrections embrace a theme most heart-cheering and encouraging to all thoughtful people, and it was with the thought of both in mind that our Lord taught His disciples to pray, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven"; for it will be at the beginning of the Kingdom Age that the first or chief resurrection will be completed, and at the close of that same age that the general resurrection will be fulfilled with the re-standing of all the willing and obedient of mankind in that perfection which was lost in Adam.

It is mainly to the general resurrection, concerning all mankind that our topic applies, but in passing let us briefly refer to those having part in the first resurrection, as it will assist in distinguishing the "little flock," of which Jesus spoke, and the "all people" to whom the angel's message of the Saviour is yet to be glad tidings, as previously noted.

The Scriptures teach that those who shall have part in the first resurrection with Christ are selected from every nation, kindred and tongue during this Gospel Age--between the first and second advents of the Lord—and that they are chosen according to fitness. The Apostle James says, "Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which He hath promised to them that love Him." In other words, those who will live and reign with Christ must, during the present life, suffer with Him, and in this respect St. Paul says, "The sufferings of the present time are not to be compared with the glory to be revealed in us." Again the same Apostle intimates how reasonable it is to present our bodies a living sacrifice, when once we realise all that the Lord has done for us, in making us acceptable to God through faith in His sacrifice. "The love of Christ constraineth us," says the Apostle, when once the invitation is seen in its true light—"If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow Me." Those, then, who are faithful in sacrificing their earthly lives in the footsteps of Jesus shall have part in the first resurrection, and receive the spiritual life as joint-heirs with Christ, being kings and priests unto God. Of these our Master said, "Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure, to give you the Kingdom."

Now, let us consider the "afterfruits," those to whom the 'Apostle referred when he said, "afterwards they that are Christ's at His presence." The picture of this general resurrection is shown very clearly in Matt. 25, verses 31 and 32—"When the Son of Man shall come in His glory and all the holy angels with Him, then shall He sit upon the throne of His glory and before Him shall be gathered all nations"; and again in John 5:28, "Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear His voice and come forth." . And further, the Apostle in I Thes. 4:14 says, "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him."

Learning Righteousness by Judgments.

And now what does the gathering of all nations really mean. Does it imply, as we once thought, and which so many believe to-day, that it is just a matter of repeating the condemnation upon the majority and their being returned to the same place and condition from which they were called in the resurrection? Let us see what the Scriptures state. In Isaiah 26:9 we read, "When Thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness."

The inhabitants of the world we saw, would mean all nations, "all in their graves shall hear His voice;" "there shall be a resurrection of the just and the unjust." The just, we realise, would have part in the first resurrection and be associated with Christ in His Kingdom, inasmuch as they are promised to reign with Him; so the unjust would be "all nations," "the residue of men," as stated in Acts 1:17, and we now see they are "to learn righteousness." Does this surprise us? If it does it is surely a pleasant surprise, but let us look further for confirmation on this point. In Acts 17:31 we read, "God hath appointed a day in the which He will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom He hath ordained, whereof He hath given assurance unto all men, in that He hath raised him from the dead." The Apostle Peter tells us that "a day with the Lord is as a thousand years," and so we believe the day of which the Apostle spoke in Acts will be the thousand year reign of Christ, the Millennial Age.

He will "judge the world in righteousness," and does not this agree so fully with Isaiah's statement—"When Thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness." And what do mankind need in order to learn righteousness? They need education, they need enlightenment, they need good government, they need peace, they need uplifting, they need many things that they are now seeking, but are unable to obtain, because of the present unfavourable conditions, but all these necessary things the Lord has promised to supply, and we are assured He has the power and authority to fulfil. Let us hear the Psalmist in regard to this matter, "Give the king Thy judgments, O God, and Thy righteousness unto the king's son. He shall judge Thy people with righteousness, and Thy poor with judgment. The mountains shall bring peace to the people, and the little hills, by righteousness. He shall judge the poor of the people, He shall save the children of the needy and break in pieces the oppressor. They shall fear Thee as long as the sun and moon endure, throughout all generations. He shall come down like rain upon the mown grass: as showers that water the earth. In His days shall the righteous flourish; and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth. He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth. His name shall endure for ever: His name shall be continued as long as the sun: and men shall be blessed in Him: all nations shall call Him blessed." (Psalm 72.)

The Desire of All Nations.

Do we not see the great change that will come when the New Ruler, the New Dictator takes unto Himself His power and reigns? Do we not see that mankind cannot bring in the glad day? Now "the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together,” says the Apostle, and then continues, “waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God.” Waiting, unknowingly at present, for the time when Christ and His saints are revealed in power and great glory that they might execute the judgments written. So the Apostle continues in the eighth chapter of Romans, “For the creature itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God.” What a glorious promise! What a blessing this will be to all the human race! God knew the end from the beginning, and all along He has been working out His original purpose, meantime permitting various governments to be tried, to let man see that his own efforts to bring about righteousness cannot succeed. And when men have seen all their plans and experiments end in failure, they will be willing to look to God, and will say, “Come, let us go up to the Mountain (Kingdom) of the Lord; He will teach us of His ways, and we will walk in His paths.” And so it is written: “The desire of all nations shall come.”

The Passing of the Present Order.

But the desire of all nations is not yet: first must come the failure of their own institutions. In this connection let us note the Prophet Haggai. “Thus saith the Lord of hosts; Yet once, it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land; And I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come.” The Apostle Paul quoting from this says, “And this word, Yet once more signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made that those things which cannot be shaken may remain.” (Heb. 12:27.)

St. Peter speaks of this same shaking time in his second Epistle, third chapter. He says, “The day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein, shall be burned up.” It is clear that the Apostle is speaking in figurative language, for if the earth and the heavens were literally to be so destroyed, there would be no people left to enjoy the “new heavens and new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness,” which he assures us is to follow the burning-up time, just as the prophet declares that after the great shaking “the desire of all nations shall come.”

The Apostle simply refers to the destruction of the present order of things in a fiery time of trouble, just as the first heavens and earth, which were before the flood, have passed away. The “earth” refers to the social arrangements or order among men. The “heavens” refers to the spiritual or religious portion of humanity. These elements have both got out of accord with God and righteousness. The whole earth is ungodly and selfish and the religious elements are confused in teachings and have lost the spirit of Christ—becoming worldly institutions. So, with the passing away of everything that can be shaken, there will be a new, clean basis for the establishment of Christ’s kingdom, which will bring in peace and righteousness for the blessing of all mankind.

Christ’s Righteous Reign.

The prophet Isaiah speaking for the Lord respecting His kingdom on earth says, “Judgments also will I lay to the line and righteousness to the plummet; and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding places.” We learn from these words that the Lord will not countenance wrong doing at that time; no one shall be permitted to hinder others as they seek to progress on to perfection. The Lord will rule with a rod of iron where required, we read, and further, “It shall come to pass that every soul which will not hear that prophet (the New King, the New Dictator) shall be destroyed from amongst the people.” (Acts 3:23.) So we see that the Millennial reign of Christ is to be one of righteousness in the strictest sense, but mercy will be extended to all who appreciate the Lord’s goodness and are seeking to progress in harmony with His will. .

“They shall not hurt nor destroy in all My holy kingdom: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea.” (Isa. 11:9.)

And so we have presented before us in the Scriptures a great highway of holiness, “for a highway shall be there, and a way; it shall be called the way of holiness. The unclean shall not pass over it, but it shall be for those, the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein.” (The way shall be made so plain that all will understand what is right, what is true, and what is God’s will.) “No lion shall be there (Satan is to be hound that he shall deceive the nations no more), nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon. (No selfish, cruel, greedy men or nations or corporations will be allowed to afflict or oppress mankind.) It shall not be found there. But the redeemed shall walk there, and the ransomed of the Lord (“He gave Himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time”) shall return (from the land of the enemy, the grave) and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness (in that resurrection day), and sorrow and sighing shall flee away.” (Isa. 35:8-10.) “And there shall be no more curse, for God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away.” (Rev. 21:4.)

The Goodness and the Mercy of God.

Does not the knowledge and understanding of such a time of blessing fill us with joy and rejoicing of heart? Some who have heard of such glad tidings have thought it too good to be true; but is it? Let us think for a moment; is not such a plan of salvation just like God, who so loved the world as to give His only begotten Son? As expressed by the Apostle—“He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?” Yes, let us fully realise it is God’s Word that declares the grand time ahead; all can read it there for themselves, ‘as recorded again by Isaiah, chapter 25, from verse 6—’And in this mountain (kingdom) shall the Lord of hosts make unto all people a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees well refined. And He will destroy in this mountain (kingdom) the face of the covering cast over all people, and the vail that is spread over all nations.

He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God shall wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of His people shall He take away from off all the earth: for the Lord hath spoken it. And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; we have waited for Him, and He will save us: this is the Lord; we have waited for Him, we will be glad and rejoice in His salvation.”

“He will destroy in this mountain (kingdom) the vail that is spread over all people.” What a wonderful promise is contained in these words. The vail over all people, from which none escape at the present time, is the vail of death.

The human race goes down into the grave at the rate of thousands every day, and all this is to be done away with forever in the Kingdom of Christ. Let us quote a selection from the writings of one on this matter. “Close your eyes for a moment to the scenes of misery and woe, degradation and sorrow, that yet prevail on account of sin, and picture before your mental vision the glory of the perfect earth! Not a stain of sin mars the harmony and peace of a perfect society: not a bitter thought, not an unkind look or word; love welling up from every heart meets a kindred response in every other heart, and benevolence marks every act. There sickness shall be no more;^ not an ache, nor a pain, nor any evidence of decay—not even the fear of such things. Think of all the pictures of comparative health and beauty of human form and feature that you have ever seen, and know that perfect humanity will be of still surpassing loveliness. The inward purity and mental and moral perfection will stamp and glorify every radiant countenance. Such will earth’s society be: and weeping bereaved ones will have their tears all wiped away, when thus they realise the resurrection work complete.”

Completion of the Two Resurrections.

The completion of the resurrection work will be at the close of the Millennial reign of Christ, as it will take the thousand years to lift up all the willing and obedient to perfection upon the restored earth. This is implied in the verse quoted previously, where the Lord declared that He had the keys of the grave and of death. It is one thing to raise up mankind out of the grave, but a further important work to lift them out of the power of death. But the Lord has the authority to do both, for all except the wilfully wicked, who, after spurning the opportunity of obeying the laws of the Kingdom will then be destroyed in the second death, from which there is no resurrection. So, with the resurrection work complete, we read in our chapter, "Then cometh the end, when He shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when He shall have put down all rule and authority and power." That is, that mankind in their perfection would then be able to stand before God and be dealt with just as Adam was in the beginning. Thus, reconciliation between God and all humanity worthy of life will have been attained, through the redemptive sacrifice of Christ. Can we wonder that there is a mighty chorus of praise and adoration to God from the created beings of the whole universe, as we read in Rev. 5—"Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power and riches, and wisdom and strength, and honour and glory and blessing. And every creature which is in heaven, and on earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honour and glory and power, be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever."

Do we see in these two resurrections two distinct salvations clearly indicated—the first salvation being those of the firstfruits unto God, and the second or general salvation embracing the Jewish nation and the residue of men? It will be by both these that the redemption through Christ Jesus shall reach every human being who has ever lived, and will depend upon the individual acceptance of such as to whether there will be lasting life or lasting death. We think of the Lord's words through the prophet Isaiah in this respect—"Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; Learn to do well; seek judgment. Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool. If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land: But if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured with the sword!" "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

So Great Salvation—the High Calling.

Do we see further that those having part in the first resurrection are selected from mankind during the Gospel Age—between our Lord's first and second advents—and comprise those only who are willing to sacrifice all earthly interests and life itself in the footsteps of Christ, and who receive in return a glorious heavenly inheritance much more than compensating for the sacrifice involved. Respecting these, our Lord said, "No man can come to Me except the Father which hath sent Me draw him." (John 6:44)

Here we have the secret of the selection of the Bride, the "little flock." The Father draws those in the right heart condition to recognise Christ as "the way, the truth and the life." He draws those who feel their undone condition; those who realise that of themselves they can do nothing, to the only means of salvation—"the only name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." They are drawn to hear the words of Jesus Himself; saying, "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." We note He does not say to come to any particular church or denomination, but "Come unto Me," and having faith in His sacrifice, we then have that rest in Him—"We which have believed do enter into rest." All the burdens and labours of life take on a different aspect, even at this the first step of the Christian life, but we are exhorted by our Lord to go further—"Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For My yoke is easy and My burden is light."

We rejoice that the opportunity is still available to respond to this most wonderful invitation; nothing in the wide world can in the least compare with it, and the reason so few accept who have been drawn of God and shown the way, is because the majority are not able to approximate the love and goodness of the Lord behind it all, nor rightly balance a few short years of the pleasures of this life with an eternity of glory and favour at the Lord's right hand. In the Revelation we read the words of Christ: "Behold I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear My voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with Me." The opening of the door to His voice is the opening of our hearts. Yes, and when we open our hearts to Him, what joy, what peace, what rest—for the Lord comes in to sup with us and we with Him.

The little hymn so beautifully expresses the thought

"Fling wide the portals of your heart;
Make it a temple set apart
From earthly use for heaven's employ,
Adorned with prayer, and love, and joy."

And can we respond with the words "Redeemer, come! I open wide My heart to Thee: here, Lord, abide."

Does not the love of God and of Christ constrain us so to do; that great love which has not only made this invitation possible that we might have part in the first resurrection, but also provided a general resurrection by which all humanity may be saved from the power of sin and death, and be raised up to perfection upon the restored earth.'

When thus viewing the great plan of salvation complete, do we wonder that the Apostle exclaims, "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God!" Can we not also praise God from whom all blessings flow? And in what better way can we praise Him, than by opening our hearts to Him; by so doing we may then experience the promise of our dear Redeemer—"If a man love Me, he will keep my words: And My Father will love him and we will come unto him and make our abode with Him."

"O! come, my Sovereign, enter in; Yet more Thy nobler life begin; Thy Word and Spirit guide us on, Until the glorious crown be won"

The Jewish Law and Early Christianity

MANY Christians do not realise the conditions which existed in the Church in the beginning of the Gospel Age.

The Jews as a nation had been typically justified by typical sacrifices, from the Adamic curse, or condemnation, and put under the Law given at Sinai, as a Covenant under which, if obedient, they were to have life. But the Law proved valueless to them so far as giving them the hoped-for life was concerned, though it taught them some good lessons.

All the other nations, known as Gentiles (heathen), were still under the original condemnation of Eden. Consequently when our Lord came, both Jews and Gentiles were under condemnation to death, the Jew by the Law from which he had expected so much, but with which he was unable to comply, because of depravity, and the Gentile by the original sentence upon father Adam, from which he had in no sense escaped, not even typically as the Jew had. But the Redeemer whom God provided was sufficient for both; for in the one sacrifice of himself he accomplished the redemption of both, and reconciled both unto God in one body by the cross.— Eph. 2:16.

The Jewish converts (and they composed the majority of the early Church) could scarcely realise the greatness of the change from the Law Covenant to the new arrangement in Christ, and were continually adding Christ's teachings and His law of love to their Mosaic Law, thus adding to their already heavy burden, instead of accepting the sacrificial death of Christ as the atonement for their sins under the Law, and as the end of the condemnation of that Law Covenant. (Rom. 10:4; 3:20, 28.) It is not surprising when we remember their early prejudices in favour of the Law, that the spirit of truth was able to guide them but slowly into the full truth on the subject. Even the Apostles were slow to learn, and we find St. Peter so slow to follow the lead of the spirit, that he had to be taught by a special vision that Gentiles needed no longer to become Jews, and to conform to the Law of Moses before they could share divine favour, but that they had access to God through Christ regardless of the Law Covenant.

The Jewish Law Covenant not Ours.

Some complained to the other apostles and brethren about St. Paul's recognition of Gentiles, and this brought the question before them all, and led to an investigation of God's dealings in the matter. "When they heard these things they held their peace and glorified God, saying, then bath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life.” -Acts 11:18.

St. Paul, most easily led of the spirit, got clear views on the subject earliest, and had to oppose others among the apostles less strong and less spiritually clear-sighted. (Gal. 2:11.) Jerusalem was long considered the centre of the Christian religion, the largest number and oldest believers and apostles living there; and as St. Paul’s views of the changed condition of things became clearer and clearer, and he did not hesitate to preach boldly what he saw to be dispensational truth, some prejudiced ones desired to know whether the brethren at Jerusalem would concur in the advanced views, and St. Paul and Barnabas and others went up to Jerusalem to lay the matter before them and to bring back a report.

A great debate and examination of the question on all sides followed. St. Peter and St. James, finally agreeing with St. Paul, influenced the entire council. St. Peter reminded them of God’s wonderful dealing with Cornelius, who was justified and made acceptable to God through faith in Christ, and not through keeping the Law, and urged: “Now, therefore, why tempt ye God, to put a yoke (Moses’s Law) upon the neck of the disciples which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear?” St. James said: “ My sentence is that. we trouble not them which from among the Gentiles are turned to God. Then the Council so decided, and sent a written message to the confused Gentile believers, saying: “We have heard that certain ones who went out from us (here) have troubled you with words subverting your souls (destroying your faith), saying: Be circumcised and keep the Law’—to whom we gave no such commandment . .

It seemed good to the Holy Spirit, and to us to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things: that ye abstain from ‘meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication.” (Acts 15:29). And even these suggestions were given as advice, and not as so much of the Mosaic Law, with penalties attached.

The Law Covenant a Ministration of Death.

The Apostle Paul’s epistle to the Galatians (who had been Gentiles) was written expressly to counteract the influence of the Judaizing teachers who mingled with the believers of Galatia, and endeavoured to subvert the true faith in Christ by pointing them away from the cross of Christ to a hope of acceptance with God by keeping the Law of Moses in connection with faith in Christ: thus making Christianity merely an addition to the Law Covenant and not instead of it. This He calls “another gospel,” yet really not another, for there can be but one; hence it was a perversion of the real Gospel. (Gal. 1:7-9). And here St. Paul indicates that he knew that the Apostles at Jerusalem had at first only a mixed Gospel, and that he went up to see them on the occasion mentioned in Acts 15:4, by revelation, to communicate to them that fuller, purer, unmixed Gospel which he already had been able to receive, and which he had been teaching; and, he says, he communicated it to them privately, lest their reputation should hinder them from receiving the truth— and even then some false brethren spies, sought to compel Titus (a Greek) to be circumcised.—Gal. 2:2-5.

It is further along in this same epistle that St. Paul tells of St. Peter’s vacillation on the question of the Law (chap. 2:11-16) and his words of reproof to Peter—We who are Jews by nature, knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the Law, but on account of faith in Christ, even we have believed in Christ that we might be justified by faith in Christ, and not by obedience to the Law. Why, then, should we attempt to fetter others, or longer bind ourselves, by that which has served its purpose, in bringing us to Christ.

O foolish Galatians! who has deluded you? As many as are trusting to obedience to the Law are under its condemnation or curse. “Christ hath redeemed us (Israelites) from the curse of the Law, that the blessing of Abraham might come to the Gentiles through Christ Jesus, and that we (Israelites) might receive the promise of the spirit through faith.” And surely God’s Covenant with Abraham, made four hundred and thirty years before the Law was given, cannot be annulled by that Law.—Gal. 3:1, 10, 13, 17.

Next, the apostle answers a supposed inquiry as to what was the object of the Law, and why it was given, if not necessary to the attainment of the Abrahamic promises. He says the Law was added because of sin, to manifest sin in its true light—that sin might be seen to be a great and deep-seated malady. The Law was a pedagogue, or servant, to bring to Christ all Israelites who desired to learn the true way of life.—Gal. 3:24. Matt. 11:28-30.

As children are under nursery laws and subject to teachers until an appointed time, so were we (Israelites) under the Law, and treated as servants rather than as sons. We were kept under restraints, though we were the heirs through whom, according to the promise, others were to be blessed. But in the fullness of time God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, made under the Law, to redeem that were under the Law that we (Israelites), being liberated, might receive the adoption of sons. And also “because ye (who were not under the Law, but were Gentiles or heathen) are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of His Son into your hearts.” We were under tutelage, and you were aliens, foreigners and strangers, but now you and we, who are accepted of God in Christ, are fully received into sonship and heirship, and neither of us is subject to the Law.—Gal 4:1-7.

Tell me, you that desire to be under the Law Covenant, do you not understand what it is? It is a bondage, as allegorically shown in Abraham’s two sons. Abraham, here, is a figure of God; and Sarah, the real wife, is a figure of the real Covenant of Blessing, out of which the Christ should come as heir of all, to bless the world. For a long time Sarah was barren; so, too, for a long time the original Covenant of God, made with Abraham—”in thy Seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed”—brought forth no fruit, until Christ Jesus. Hagar, the servant of Sarah, in the meantime was treated as Sarah’s representative, and her son as the representative of Sarah’s son. Hagar represented the Law Covenant, and fleshly Israel was represented by her child, Ishmael. For the time they represented the true Covenant and the true seed of blessing, though they were always really servants—child, as well as mother. When the true son of the real wife, the heir, was born, it was manifest that the son of the bondwoman was not the heir of promise. And to show typically that the Law Covenant was not to have any rule over the spiritual sons of God, Hagar was not allowed to become the governess of Isaac, but in his interest was dismissed entirely.—Gal. 4:21-31; Gen. 21:10.

The Apostle’s argument, based on this allegory, is that we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the Seed to whom the promise was made; we are not children of the bondwoman, the Law Covenant, but children of the original Abrahamic Covenant (the Sarah Covenant) born free from the slavery and conditions of the Law Covenant. And not only so born, but the Law is entirely put away from us, and has nothing whatever to do with us—”Stand fast, therefore, in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage”—the Law Covenant. “If ye be led of the spirits ye are not under the Law (Covenant).”—Gal. 5:1, 18.

But Paul asks—”Shall we continue in sin (wilfully), because we are not under the Law (Covenant)?” (Rom. 6:15.) Shall we take advantage of our liberty to break away into more sin—because we are sons and heirs, and no longer commanded as servants—Thou shalt and thou shalt not? No, no; as sons, begotten of the spirit, partakers of the spirit of holiness, the spirit of the truth, we delight to do our Father’s will; and the law of obedience to his will is deeply engraven upon our hearts. (Heb. 8:10; 10:15, 16.) We gladly sacrifice our all, even our lives, in opposing sin and error, and in forwarding righteousness and truth; hence we answer emphatically, “God forbid.” We will not take advantage of our liberty from the Jewish Law Covenant, to commit sin. But if any man should think to do so, let him remember that only those led by the spirit of God are the sons of God.—Rom. 8:14,

We are not under the Law Covenant, but under divine favour, and not only, so, but being justified and reconciled to God in Christ, we have gone further and accepted the “high calling,” the “heavenly ‘calling,’” and consecrated our justified lives—’even unto death”—and been accepted as members of the Body of Christ, and are thus heirs of the Abrahamic (Sarah) Covenant. (Gal. 3:29.) Hence, so far from desiring to use our liberty to indulge in sin, we, having God’s spirit, detest sin and love righteousness and delight ourselves in the “Law of Christ”—Love. Christ’s Word is our Law—not a law of bondage, but of Liberty. Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty and continueth therein (free), being not a forgetful hearer, but one who exercises his liberty, this man shall be truly blessed thereby. Such fulfil the royal law, the law of love.—Jas. 1:25.

The Law of Love.

If we have proved that the Ten Commandments were given to Israel, and to Israel only, and that as the basis of a Covenant made only with that nation, and if we have hewn that the other nations of the world have been left by God without any Law except such traces as yet remain of the original Law, written in the nature of the first perfect man, who was created in God’s image, and that to the Church our Lord gave the Law of Love, then we have proved that the Ten Commandments should not be recognised by the Gospel Church, except as they are in harmony with the law of Love.

Our Lord has a standard for all who accept Him, as Moses, the Mediator of the Law Covenant, had ten commands for a standard. The Master said: “A New Commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another, as have loved you.” (John 13:34.) It is the same law that was expressed in the Ten Commandments, but a more refined and more comprehensive statement of that Law, designed for a more advanced class. The people put under the Law Covenant and baptised into Moses were a household of Servants, while the people of the Law of Love are a household of God’s sons. Thus we read “Moses verily was faithful as a servant over all his House (of Servants). but Christ was faithful as a son over His own House (of sons), whose house are we, if”—Heb. 3:6.

The expression of the Divine Law given at Sinai was exactly suited to the House of Servants to whom it was given; it was a series of instructions—Thou shalt, and Thou shalt not. The expression of the Law of Love is very different, and implies much more liberty. It simply tells those who are God’s sons, and who therefore are begotten of his spirit, You may do or say anything in harmony with love. Pure love for God will lead not only to obedience to His will, but to the study of His Will, in His Word. Pure love governing our conduct towards our fellow-men, and the lower animals will seldom work to their injury. It will come more and more under the guidance of the Lord’s Word, and thus we shall be perfected in love. But from the first it is a safe Law; it is a “Law of Liberty,” in that it requires us merely to act out, according to our own judgments, that which we voluntarily consecrate ourselves to do, our own wishes as New Creatures

Since this Royal Law of Love is made only with those whose desires are changed, who no longer love sin but are seeking escape from it as well as from its penalty, who now love God and His righteousness, it would be manifestly improper to give these “sons of God” the statement of God’s Law or will in the same form that it was expressed to the House of “Servants.” The sons are granted a Law of Liberty, the servants a Law of Bondage. The servants were told what they might and might not do; because they were servants, not sons, not begotten of the Father’s spirit; hence they needed positive commands, restraints and penalties. This is forcibly expressed by the Apostle in his exposition of this very subject in Galatians 3.

But the Law of Love, while it is a Law of Liberty and an “easy yoke” to such as have the Lord’s spirit, is nevertheless a most searching Law — discerning, scrutinising, judging the very thoughts and intents of our hearts, as well as our actions and words. In that one word Love is expressed the very essence of the Divine Law. Love to God implies full obedience, full recognition of divine character—wisdom, love, justice, and power— full harmony with God in His service, and the exercise of those qualities of character in all our thoughts, words, and deeds.

The “Law of the Spirit of Life in Christ Jesus.”

This Law of Love to God and our fellow-men, which we delight to obey to the extent of our ability, not of compulsion, but of a willing mind, as partakers of the spirit of Christ, is the only Law with which we have to do. While it entirely ignores the Mosaic Law, its “thou shalt,” and “thou shalt not,” it really accomplishes far more than the Mosaic Law; for, with his heart ruled by love, for God, and man, who would desire to dishonour God or to injure his fellow- man?

But as of the Mosaic Law it was true that its utterances were only to those under it—Israelites—for “whatsoever the Law saith it saith to them who are under the Law” (Rom. 3:19), so it is true of the Law of Love; it speaks only to those who are under it, and these are only the consecrated believers in Christ. It is a law of liberty, in that all who are under it are under it from choice. They came under it voluntarily, and may leave it when they please. In this it differs greatly from the Law put upon fleshly Israel as a nation, in which they had no individual liberty or choice, being born under bondage to that Law Covenant. Our Law is the Royal Law; because the “little flock,” developed under this Law of Liberty and Love, is the Royal family—the divine family, selected under their Lord and Head to be heirs of God, joint-heirs with Jesus Christ, partakers of the divine nature.—Rom. 8:17; 2 Pet. 1:4.

Those now being selected as members for the Body of Christ, are only such as delight to do God’s will, sons of God and “brethren of Christ,” having this likeness to Christ. And at the close of the Millennial Age, when the rod of iron shall have broken the proud hearts, and shall have caused the stiff knees to bend in obedience, and when the obstinate are cut off as incorrigible, wilful sinners, then the Law of Love and Liberty will again be virtually in force over all God’s creatures. All who shall be permitted to enter upon that grand age of human perfection, following the Millennial reign of Christ will first have been tested, and will have given abundant proof that they delight to do God’s will, and that His righteous law is continually their heart’s desire.

Alive Without the Law Once.

In his letter to the Romans (chapter 7), the Apostle reasons with Jewish converts to Christianity: “For,” he says, “I speak to them that know the Law.”

He then represents the Law Covenant as a husband, and Israelites bound by it as a wife, to a husband. He shows that as it would be a sin for the woman to unite with another man while her husband lives, so it would be wrong for Israel to leave Moses and His Covenant of the Law, and to unite with Christ unless released by death--either the death of the Law Covenant or their death to the Law Covenant.

It is a common mistake to suppose the Scriptures to teach that the Law Covenant died, or was destroyed by our Lord. It still lives; and all the children of Jacob are still bound by it, unless they have died to it. Only those who realise that they could not gain everlasting life through their union with Moses (the Law Covenant) are ready to abandon all hope of saving their life by that union with Moses, to become dead to all such expectations, and to accept the death of Christ, the ransom for Adam and all his race, as the basis of a new hope of a new life. Hence, only such Israelites as by faith reckoned themselves hopelessly dead under the Law Covenant, and as risen with Christ to a new life secured by His sacrifice, and who in will are dead to sin—only such could be united to Christ as the New Husband. Thus, according to the Apostle’s reasoning, the thought of blending the two Covenants and being united to both Moses and Christ, was wholly out of the question.—Compare Rom. 6:2.

The text, “Christ is the end (or fulfilment) of the Law (Covenant) for righteousness to everyone (under it) that believeth” (Rom. 10:4), does not conflict with the above. because only believers are specified. (Compare Rom. 3: 31; Gal. 2:19.) Eph. 2:15 should be read: “Having abolished in His flesh the enmity of the law of commandments contained in ordinances,” . Col. 2:13, 14 refers to “quickened” Jewish believers for whom the handwriting of ordinances is blotted out. Verse 20 refers to the Gentile converts who had to become dead to the “rudiments of the world,” before becoming members of Christ, the heir of the original Abrahamic Covenant typified by Sarah. even as the Jews must become dead to the rudiments of their Law Covenant, typified by Hagar.

The Law Covenant Not Dead.

That the Law Covenant with Israel is still binding upon that nation is further evident from the fact that upon their national rejection of Christ they were nationally blinded until the end of the Gospel Age (Rom. 11:7, 25), and that God declares that He has “not cast away His people,” but that under the New Covenant He will yet open their eyes to see Christ as the only door of hope, and that of a new life purchased with His own. (Rom. 11:2, 27, 29; Jer. 31:31.) Meanwhile, we have the evidence that their Covenant continues in force in the fact that, as a nation, they have for centuries been receiving the very “curses” specified under their Covenant. —See Deut. 28:15-57. Verses 49-53 describe the Roman siege, &c.; verses 64-67 describe the condition of Israel since, (Isa. 59:21). The Lord in Leviticus (26:18, 34-45) declared the symbolical “seven times,” 2,520 years, of Israel’s subjection ‘to the Gentiles. Thus their experience that Covenant we learned so much about sin?

What was defective in the old or Law Covenant? Was it sinful or bad? No. How came it then that under that Covenant we learned so much about sin?

Because, previous to receiving the Law, Israelites were like the remainder of the world—dead in trespasses and sins; and, being already under sentence of death, we were like the remainder, unrecognised of God, and without any special commands; and hence we could not disobey or increase our sin by disobedience, until the Law Covenant began to command us.

But, notwithstanding that death sentence under which we and all the world rested, we Israelites were “alive” before the Law Covenant came, because God had promised our father Abraham that somehow and at some time He would bless His Seed, and through it all the families of the earth. Thus, in God’s promise to Abraham, a future life was assured to us all, before the Mosaic Covenant was made; but just as soon as that Law Covenant went into force, and required that we must obey its every command, in order to secure life, that soon we found that we could not absolutely control our poor, fallen bodies, however much we willed to do so with our minds. And, as sin developed, we died— our hopes of life expired, because we could not keep that Law Covenant. I speak for, or as representing, our whole nation. Thus we found that the Law Covenant, promising life to the obedient, really sentenced us to death, because we could not obey its requirements.

Thus we acknowledge that the Law and the Covenant were good in themselves, but not helpful to us, because we were fallen beings. But God intended that it should show us how imperfect we really are. (Verse 13.) For the Law is adapted to all who are in full harmony with God’s Spirit—perfect beings—and this we Israelites were not; we were and are by nature, carnal, depraved, even as others. And if our hearts be right, we can and will admit that we are unable to obey God’s perfect law, and that perfection is not to be found in our fallen flesh, even though in our mind we approve God’s Law and would gladly obey it.

This is the wretched condition in which we find ourselves (verse 24), wanting to obey God’s Law, and to have His favour and the everlasting life promised to them that love and obey Him, and yet unable to do so because of our dead bodies—fallen and sentenced through Adam’s transgression. Oh! How can we get release from this, our difficulty? We cannot obey God’s Law, and God cannot give us an imperfect Law to suit our fallen condition. Oh, wretched, hopeless condition.

But no, brethren, there is hope in Christ! Not a hope of our fulfilling the Law Covenant—no hope of doing those things commanded, and living as a result; nor any hope of saving anything out of the wreck of Adam’s fall and sentence. That must all be abandoned. We! Israelites must die under the Law Covenant, as unsaved by it as we were before it was made, as unsaved as the Gentiles who never had a share in it. But as we realise ourselves dead under the terms of the Law Covenant, we see that Christ has died for Adam’s sin, paid his penalty and thus redeemed him and all—lost through his disobedience—Jew and Gentile, bond and free, male and female. And this relieves us Jews, because Christ was a Jew, “born under the Law” Covenant, that He might redeem those who were under it. (Gal. 4:4, 5.) In consequence, therefore, God can be just and accept all who serve His Law in their minds and wills, and whose only hindrance from perfect obedience is the weakness of the fallen flesh.

Thanks be unto God for His unspeakable gift—Christ through whom we become heirs of the chiefest of God’s blessings on the divine plane and members of the Mediator of the New Covenant (typified in Keturah, Abraham’s third wife), by which many will be blessed with, Restitution during the Messianic Age.—Acts 3:20, 21.

Taking Heed to God’s Will.

THE Press report of the Tenth \\\Todd’s Christian Endeavour Convention, held recently in Melbourne, quotes one of the principal speakers as follows

“Rev. Dr. Stanley Jones, India, urged the 20,000 people present at the evening convention to accomplish three things —blot out the stigma in regard to aborigines; to help China, not by hating Japan, but by non-violent economic boycotting Japan as long as China was invaded, and to send men and women to help India, particularly as 60,000,000 untouchables’ were on the verge of turning to Christianity. He appealed for a united Church in Australia, as a divided world would not turn to a divided Church for guidance.”

How disappointing the above statement -must have been to those longing to hear of the Gospel message of hope, both for the Church and the world. While expressive of a desire for social reform, etc., which is also advocated by many who do not claim to be Christians, it is nevertheless devoid of the Lord’s plan of salvation and His will concerning the activities of His followers throughout this Gospel Age, as revealed in His Word, and shows how little the Bible is understood by present day ministers and missionaries the world over.

The Scriptures clearly indicate that the present is not the time for the conversion of the world to Christianity, nor of 60,000,000 in any country, but rather that God is “taking out a people for His name” (Acts 15:14), in all “a little flock,” to be His Church, the Bride of Christ; and that the present mission of the Church is the perfecting of the saints for the future work of service; to develop in herself every grace; to be God’s witness to the world; and to prepare to be the kings and priests of the next age—Eph. 4:12; Matt. 24:14; Rev. 1:6, 20:6. The hope for the world lies in the blessings of knowledge and opportunity to be brought to all by Christ’s Millennial Kingdom—the restitution of all that was lost in Adam, to all the willing and obedient, at the hands of their Redeemer and His glorified Church—when all the wilfully wicked will be destroyed. Acts. 3:20-23; Isa. 35.

How sad is the position of those claiming to be Christian leaders who would seek to “reform” the present order of things when this is definitely not the Lord’s will. At our Lord’s first advent He showed that the “old bottles” (the religious systems of that time) could not be entrusted with the new wine, the Gospel message (Matt. 9:17). So, at the close of this Gospel Age, there is a corresponding casting off of present day systems of religion (Rev. 3:14-17), because they are out of harmony with God’s will and plan of salvation through Christ, accepting instead the worldly spirit and desire to perpetuate that which the Lord sees good to destroy. (See 2 Pet. 3:10; Heb. 12:26, 27.)

Instead of endeavouring to combine the churches of to-day to present a united front, the Lord’s people are exhorted to leave these systems of Babylon—“Come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins.” “And the light of a candle shall shine no more at all in thee; and the voice of the bridegroom and of the bride shall be heard no more at all in thee.” (Rev. 18:4, 23.) Jeremiah also prophesied concerning the present time--“Babylon hath been a golden cup in the Lord’s hand, that made all the earth drunken; the nations have drunken of her wine; therefore the nations are mad. Babylon is suddenly fallen and destroyed; howl for her; take balm for her pain, if so be she may be healed. We would have healed Babylon, but she is not healed: forsake her . . . The Lord hath brought forth our righteousness: come, and let us declare in Zion the work of the Lord our God.” (Jer. 51:7-10.)

In His Presence.

“My Presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest.”—Ex. 33:14.

“My Presence shall go with thee;” Even so,
I know, dear Lord, that Thou with me wilt go:
The way lies dark before, unseen, unknown,
Perchance it leads through deserts drear and lone,
Or valleys dim, but whatsoe’er it be
It will be well if Thou dost go with me.

“My Presence shall go with thee.”
All the way Thou wilt be near to keep me day by day;
Thou wilt perform for me Thy perfect will
And in Thy care I shall be safe from ill:
Thus Lord, I onward go without a fear
For Thou art all I need, and Thou, art near.”

The Christian Pathway.

(Contributed)

“Wherefore let them that suffer according to the will of God, commit the keeping of their souls to him in well doing, as unto a faithful Creator” (1 Pet. 4:19).

GENERAL teachings of our day largely omit mention of suffering as regards Christian faith and practice. But because the Bible in a number of places tells us to “rejoice in the Lord,” and “sing praise unto His name,” etc., it does not follow that no suffering is entailed. On the contrary we read that “All who will live Godly in Christ Jesus will suffer persecution.” This has been fulfilled in the past, and so it must continue until the great millennial dawning, when Christ shall take unto Himself His great power to reign.

It would seem that the reason why so little is heard now of suffering and persecution, is because there are so few who are living “Godly lives in Christ Jesus.” There appears to be rather large numbers of professing Christians who have not to contend with any persecution or suffering, in their so-called Christian walk. All such, if they are honest, would be compelled to admit that the reason is because their godly life is only profession, and that their real attitude is “Be at one with the world,” instead of “Coming out and being separate.” Probably they realise quite well that it is the coming out and being separate, that brings the persecution.

Therefore, when we seek for truth of Scriptural teaching, it is most important that we distinguish sharply between nominal Christianity (Christians in name only) and truly consecrated Christians; because those who are nominal only, often teach doctrines and live lives that give an altogether wrong impression of Christianity and real discipleship. One longs to expose these errors, not fit-the sake of sitting in judgment upon any, but in order to warn and help those who desire to be true, and who are in danger of being led into the confusion which falsity produces.

The first happening in a Christian’s life is conviction of Sin. When one becomes convicted of sin, that is, realises and is ready to admit that the life he or she has been living estranges them from God, then the Gospel message to such is “Repent and believe on the name of the Lord Jesus Christ that ye might be saved that your sins might be blotted out.” Christ died upon the Cross for all men. ALL men have at one time been unsaved sinners, for all have sinned and come short of the glory of God. There has not been one exception, except of course our Lord, Christ Jesus. And He, the one exception, the sinless, perfect man, died upon the cross, “The just for the unjust,” that He might reconcile us again to God. His life offered up at Calvary blots out the sin, and all who gain such understanding and gladly accept the salvation offered, find peace with God.

Now, all who have gone that far, find cause for true rejoicing. It is a happy day for the one/ who can be brought, to see that Christ was the propitiation for his or her sin, as it was indeed for the sins of the whole world. The dictionary rendering of propitiation is “act of appeasing,” or “atonement.” Sin produces enmity with God, but the Christian’s sins are appeased or atoned for by the shed blood of Jesus at Calvary. They are blotted out; the enmity is thus destroyed and we are at peace with God. Having come to that point we are justified by faith in the blood of Jesus Christ.

Too often the preaching of God's Word stops at this point. Most certainly we must have a good understanding of all this first; but it is far from all; indeed, it is only the beginning. Now begins the real Christian life and the test as to just how much we appreciate God's love for us. Now is presented unto us the opportunity of presenting our bodies living sacrifices, holy, acceptable unto God, which the Apostle Paul says is our reasonable or proper service. Our life is' no longer our own; it has been bought with a price. It must be laid down now, consecrated to the Master's service and the call is to infinitely higher things than we have been concerned with hitherto. Old things pass away: all becomes new. As we hear the call of God to seek' "the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus," our chief hopes and ambitions become spiritual, heavenly, instead of carnal—worldly.

We are specially exhorted to make our calling and election sure, being reminded that not all the called are finally elected or chosen, but only those who are diligent in obeying, and remain faithful unto death. Many are called but few are chosen and given the prize of the high calling. We cannot say that there is not a lesser prize to be given to many, but now the way of the high calling is the special call and we stand as it were at the crossroads.' Now assuredly is the time to stop and count the cost of setting our hand to the plough without looking back.

Many esteem the cost too great even to heed the call. They may hear it, but instantly suppress it, giving it little consideration. Others hear and heed and begin to tread the narrow way,, 'but when persecution arises because of the Word, they halt. Some turn quickly back: others halt so long, that often the call loses its clearness and almost without realising it, their steps are retraced back to the broad way of the world. But for those who go on in the face of all, having set their hand to the plough, determined by the grace of God never to look back, to these are the comforting- words of our text applied.

History shows us what dreadful, torture and persecution many of Christ's disciples have had to endure for a witness to the truth, especially in the days of the power of Rome. Countless numbers were burned at the stake, others were thrown into a playground to be mauled by wild beasts, their dying agonies making entertainment for thousands, who gathered to watch and gloat over the victims because they would not bow the knee to the regime of a church which professed to be "The Church of God," but which we now recognise as a part of the great system of Anti-Christ.

We can be thankful to God that we have not in our day to face the same physical torture in adherence to our faith.

But persecution has not ceased. He who will be true to the Word of God will still face persecution in some measure. The true Christian, as of yore, must be still a stranger and pilgrim upon earth. Here below he has no abiding city (the treasures of his heart are not earthly things) but he seeks one to come. The so-called joys and pleasures of this world find nothing in him (though prior to the call he may have been interested in them to 'some extent) and as his spiritual sight increases he is able so to visualise heavenly things that those of the world begin to term him peculiar, just as they did with Paul when they cried, "Thou art mad, much learning hath made thee mad," or as we have it in the 4th verse of our chapter, "Wherein they, think it strange that ye run not with them to the same excess of riot speaking evil of you." As the worldly find the truly consecrated running not to the same excess of riot as themselves, they begin to separate him from their company, speaking evil of him; taunting him as being old-fashioned, or narrow-minded, or a selfrighteous hypocrite or something similar. But what say the scriptures, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake, for great is your reward in Heaven" (Matt. 5:11).

Of the multitudes who have come to some understanding of justification by faith in the shed blood of Jesus, quite a few appear to make the mistake of seeking to find all the blessing of such salvation in this life. They enter very largely into all the world's pursuits, interpreting the message of salvation in the nature of a licence to better enjoy the worldling's pleasure. To know Christ means much to us here below but "If in this life only we have hope in Christ we are of all men most pitiable." Thank God our chief hope is centred in that "to come." To follow Christ truly now, will probably bring many more persecutions, heartaches and sufferings than warm hand claps and expressions of good cheer. But our trust is not to be in men but "hope thou in God." Just as Peter, one of our Lord's closest followers would have hindered our Lord from the path of duty (Matthew 16:21-23), so often our well-meaning friends would hinder us from the full consecration and we must be ever on guard against the easy world conformity, the seeking to serve both God and Mammon, the impossible.

We are not, however, to suffer as evil doers and count it Christian suffering. Many times impulsively we do or say things which we ought not, and afterwards besides feeling sorry or repentant, we may have to suffer as a consequence of our action. Under such circumstances we can but admit our fault and seek to make the best of it, praying God so to guide and counsel that we might be more thoughtful again. On such occasions we should guard against hardening our hearts, and refrain from attaching any blame to God for allowing something that was entirely our own fault. We can learn along this line from the 20th verse of the 2nd Chapter of this Epistle "For what glory is it, if when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye take it patiently, but if when ye do well and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God."

So, we learn from this Epistle of Peter, that to follow our Lord fully, as He commanded when he said, "He that would come after me let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me," presents no easy road whilst we dwell or tabernacle in the flesh. It is a way in which, without doubt, we will encounter the opposition of the world, the flesh, and the devil and to such an extent that it will entail suffering for righteousness sake. It is impossible to enumerate all the ways in which that suffering might come, for the various circumstances of Christ's followers give rise to differing experiences; but when we humble ourselves beneath the mighty hand of God, casting all our care upon Him, through Jesus, remembering that He will not suffer us to be tempted above that which we are able to bear, we can rest assured that He will work all things together for our ultimate good.—'Wherefore, let them that suffer according to the will of God commit their lives unto him in doing good, as unto a faithful Creator.'

Kingdom Cards.

It is pleasing to report some good results from the distribution of Kingdom Cards. Enquiries have been received from all the Australian States, and it is hoped that the message contained in the free literature may be helpful to many.

It is by faith that such witness work is undertaken, knowing that the Lord will grant the increase as He sees good and also add a blessing to those engaged in the work. Possibly others of our readers would desire some of these cards for passing out where good may be done; a postal request will bring a supply to all willing workers.

"A New Dictator" in tract Form.

Requests having been received that the booklet, "A New Dictator" be printed as a tract, a quantity is now available in this form, as well as the booklets, for the use of the brethren. When ordering please state the number that can be wisely used.

Other tracts also on hand—"Upon the Earth Distress with Perplexity," "When Christ is King," etc.

Deliverance—Type and Anti-Type.

“And it shall come to pass that every soul shall be utterly destroyed from among the people, which shall not harken to that Prophet.” Acts 3:22, 23.

IN the words of this text the apostle calls a attention to the fact that all these coming blessings were intimated in the words of the Prophet Moses, and that. Moses himself typified the coming great deliverer. We call to mind how great was the deliverance which God effected for the people of Israel at the hand of Moses, bringing them out of Egypt and through the Red Sea, making them his covenant people. Great and wonderful as all that was, it was merely the shadow of the much greater and much better blessings God intends to bestow. Moses was a type — a greater than Moses is the antitype; a typical servitude to a Pharaoh under hard conditions and a deliverance therefrom, was a type — a severer bondage under Satan and a grander deliverance for the world of mankind, is the anti-type.

A grand man, the meekest man in all the earth, Moses was the typical leader at whose hands as mediator the Law Covenant was instituted, offering blessings and curses to the people according as they would obey or disobey it. This was the type; the antitype must be much larger, much greater than Moses; and the New Covenant which He as Mediator will establish will be a much grander covenant, offering not temporal blessings but eternal ones, and not temporal punishments but everlasting ones. We pause here to remark that none of the punishments under the Mosaic law were torturous—death was the extreme penalty.

But death inflicted for violation of Moses' law did not effect the opportunities for an everlasting life secured not only for the world but also for Israel through the great sacrifice at Calvary; hence all those cut off from life for disobedience to Moses' law will nevertheless have a blessing, an opportunity for life eternal under the antitypical Moses. But the death sentence which will come upon the disobedient of mankind under the ministrations of the antitypical Prophet, the Christ, will not be a never-ending torture, but a never-ending death; not a never-ending dying, but a death condition from which there will be no awakening, no resuscitation, no resurrection—the annihilation of being as described by the Apostle Paul, saying, “They shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of His power.”

“Well, God loves patience!
Souls that dwell in stillness,
Doing the little things, or resting quite,
May just as perfectly fulfil their mission,
Be just as useful in the Father's sight.”

Putting Away All Bitterness, -- Be Kind

(Ephesians 4:32-32)

THAT word "bitterness," as we look upon it in a general way would seem to describe a very bad trait of character; but in this case, it is defined from the original Greek as "sharpness"—a more refined meaning, something to which Christian people in general would be more subject; a sharp and touchy disposition, or hurt feelings, which develop much from imaginations of the mind. Some people have flesh failings that way, and have what is sometimes called a "crabby" disposition, which the Apostle says should be put away, and as he advances in this verse the items seem to be more severe.

Wrath here seems to be in the mind, while anger and clamour would refer to noisy demonstration of angry feelings, because clamour means "to make an outcry"—"to give vent to the feelings." Then he mentions evil speaking or railing as something where the tongue gets busy and may develop into busy-bodging which may cultivate malice, a most undesirable and unchristian disposition.

Now it is profitable at times to stop and think if some of these things show any sign of working in us, even in the smallest measure, so that we may nip it in the bud. It is much easier to pull out these small weeds while they are yet tender, but much more difficult to remove when they take a deeper root. Observation and experience show how little roots of bitterness have sprung up and grown stronger against an individual and it does not take long to bring others under the influence which grows, so that many are defiled. The Apostle's injunction to put away evil speaking is very positive; we are to speak evil of no one.

The question arises, What is evil speaking? What does the Apostle mean when he says, "speak evil of no man?"

Does he mean that we should say nothing of any man with an evil intention toward him? Or does he mean speak no evil whatever the intention? We surely know that to speak evil with a wrong motive, a wrong intention would be a serious crime, especially in a child of God: But we would think the Apostle meant, no matter what your motive, speak evil about nobody. If that be his thought it places a very stringent requirement upon all of the Lord's people. If the motive for speaking evil were bad, all the worse. This subject has various sides. To speak evil is to speak that which is injurious: therefore one should say nothing that would injure any man.

It is very easy to see the justice and the reasonableness of this requirement if we apply the golden rule. Would we wish anyone to speak slightly of us? Would we wish anyone to do us evil, to comment on our faults, or on what the speaker considered faults, and thus lower us in the eyes of others? If the Lord's people would apply the golden rule to every affair of life, it would surely be very helpful. Some of the most conscientious Christians have difficulty along this line.

In considering this matter of evil speaking, some think, Is my motive right? They forget that their motive in speaking depreciatively of others has nothing to do with the Apostle's injunction. No matter what the motive, we should not speak evil. The question is not, did I have a good intention or a bad one? but am I speaking evil, am I saying anything contrary to the golden rule, something that I would not wish to have said of me? It would be good if this thought could be instilled into the hearts and minds, of everyone.

Now in propelling our boat along this stream we may run up against what is termed snags, something that jars against the smooth running of our craft. How could we apply the injunction of our text in the case of the home for instance, or the office, or an establishment where many are employed? Suppose one is connected with such a place where rules and regulations are set down for the governing of the same. Would it be evil speaking in such a case on one's part to report any violations of these rules. This is not considered to be evil speaking; because it is considered that if we ourselves were violating those rules, the person who would report us would be doing right, not doing us evil or wrong or injury. By not reporting the misdemeanor or violation of rules the person would be encouraging in us a continuation of the wrong course. One would feel it a very distasteful business to report anyone not carrying out rules very strictly, because it stirs up much ill-feeling and strife and one can soon bring upon oneself the hatred of those concerned. One case is where an employer in one department had three employees; he set down rules that none of them were to serve themselves individually; if they wanted anything they should ask the other to serve them. Two of the employees were rather careless in regard to the rules and had a certain dislike to the more exacting one who studied her employer's interest, and perhaps also her desire that the rules should be properly applied. And of course in laying a complaint to the right authority, brought down ill-feeling upon her head, and unkind remarks that she was seeking favour from the management, when it was just a principle of being exact. So we see there are many perils with which to contend.

We find in the Christian walk, trials from one quarter or another. God's people are supposed always to have no other motive than good ones for any course pursued. A person who accepts a position in any establishment, accepts also the conditions and rules connected with such position. No doubt all rules and regulations are made, not with a view to injuring anyone, but for the general welfare of the concern; hence the observance of all these obligations should be considered a serious responsibility. One should not report an infraction of rules in an evil way, but merely as a fact. It is not necessary, for the one who informs, to judge the heart of the one reported. It is not to be concluded that the heart is bad; even though the person may have a foolish brain, or be forgetful or inattentive to the observance of important rules. We find some people willing in their bodywork, but lazy in their mind.

Applying the question to our proper course in the Church, in matters relating to ourselves personally, we see where our individual responsibility lies. "If thy brother trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone." Our Lord does not refer to what he does against someone else, but against "thee." Our business is to look after our own affairs, to practise on ourselves.

Now suppose we saw something radically wrong, suppose we saw someone ill-treating an animal: should we say nothing? No doubt the spirit would rise up in us against injustice, and we would remonstrate against those evils; or it might be proper to report such things to the right authority; but it is not the business of everyone to go about attempting to straighten out matters in general. The world is full of evil, and we realise there will be evil until the kingdom shall take control. We think that as far as the Church is concerned the many difficulties we see in the world would better be left alone as a rule, for if we start out to right the things that are wrong we would not have any time left. Those who sincerely try to do what is right' are already misjudged; therefore we do well not to add to this opposition by becoming too busy in things that are not directly pertaining to the kingdom. But regarding evil speaking in the Church; anything injurious to the real interests of another should never be spoken. None can be too careful of their words concerning others. The disposition that would expose the imperfections of the brethren is surely not the love that covers. Every follower of Christ will surely see that evil speaking is slander, that it is besmirching the good name of a brother or sisters that it is a direct violation of the Word of God, and that defamation is theft of another's reputation. Once seeing the matter from the Divine standpoint, the only true standpoint, the child of God must surely awaken to the greatest possible energy in overcoming such works of the flesh and of the devil.

Let each one search his or her own heart, and think over his or her own conduct and then ask the question, "Is it I?" And let everyone who hopes to be accounted worthy of a place in the kingdom, purge out the old leaven of malice, envy, back-biting and strife, if any yet remain, that he or she may become a copy of God's dear Son. The flesh is very seductive and is inclined to make all manner of excuses for itself. Let each one make this a matter of personal heart searching. There is a solemn need to develop and perfect our characters. Let us pray more earnestly in the words of the Psalmist, "Set a watch, O Lord before my mouth; keep the door of my lips." No one is without temptations.

The mind of the flesh may be so agreeable to suggestions of evil as to be unconscious of their nature, but he who loves righteousness can never fail to be painfully aware that evil is present with him. Even the one who has made the greatest advancement in the Christian -course is not exempt, for the attributes of the fallen human nature are still present in his flesh, though brought into subjection to the Divine will and thus deprived of the privilege of exercise. The person in whom faith and love exist in the highest degree attainable in the present life, hungers and thirsts like any other person; he is the subject of the propensities and affections which lay the foundation, and which furnish the support, of the various family relations; he loves his children; or parents and other relatives, and is the subject of other natural ties and sympathies; he suffers from fatigue and sickness; he is grieved, troubled and perplexed in various ways. While, therefore, it is our privilege, even in the present life, to be exempt from the commission of voluntary sin, it does not appear, retaining as we do our constitutional tendencies, and remaining subject to constitutional infirmities, that we either have or can reasonably expect any such exemption from temptations.

Success in meeting , and resisting , temptations should give no feeling of security that would result in a tendency to trifle with them. To linger one moment under the influence of any temptation which could be escaped, shows not only a great lack of wisdom, but is also a sin of presumption. All have been promised grace sufficient for every time of need, but this assures no measure of grace for temptations to which we are being subjected merely because of our careless lingering under the influence of their seduction. Instead, the exhortation is "Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation." The wise man says "Can a man take fire in his bosom and his clothes not be burned? Can one go upon hot coals and his feet not be burned?" It would be foolishness to place ourselves where evil is; or to linger even in our thoughts in its vicinity. Since we are not ignorant of the devices of the wily foe who is opposed to every step of progress toward righteousness, there is no occasion for surprise as each resistance to sinful suggestions is countered by correspondingly violent attacks of the Adversary.

This no doubt explains in part how it is that some have attained a very high degree of Christian development, only through subtle temptations to later be degraded to a plane lower than ever before experienced. The result is equally lamentable for those, who, because of their very attainment have developed a false feeling of safety and have grown careless—a condition of which Satan is quick to take advantage. The one who makes little or no resistance to temptation, knows little or nothing of its power. There is little inducement for Satan to exert his strength toward one who yields easily. But once he becomes fixed in God's will, Satan will exert violent attacks to try and break down all resistance.

In an endeavour to understand temptations it is necessary to know their specific nature. We should, as far as possible, know the various weak points in our character, and the forms of temptation by which these weak points may be most successfully attacked. At these points, and against these temptations our strongest Scriptural defences should be raised. When we are doubtful as to whether or not it would be wrong to follow a suggestion that has come to us, or doubtful as to how far we may follow it in righteousness, the difficulty should be laid in faith before the Lord, nothing doubting, that He will guide to a clear understanding of the issue in due time. Then we must wait upon the Lord until He shall make the way plain. Rather than run the risk of displeasing Him we should take no step until it becomes clear that it is in harmony with His will.

True safety under temptation lies in having formed the habit of unfailingly looking heavenward for guidance under every circumstance, and of having accustomed ourselves to waiting upon the Lord always for the revelation of His Will, all the while maintaining the calmness of one who knows by experience that not one of all His good promises can fail. By some means this heaven-born peace must be disturbed if Satan is to find any means of influencing us to sin.

Once introduced, it depends upon our reaction as to whether the temptation shall become an emissary of Satan to draw us from the narrow-way, or prove to be the fire of the Great Refiner for the perfecting of the gold that shall eventually be to the praise of His eternal glory. The Lord permits the temptations that they may both prove and develop this chosen class at the same time burning all the dross away. Knowing that God supervises the refining, is our assurance that not gold but dross will be burned away. We may be confident that He who is supervising the great work of preparing His people to shine as the brightness of the firmament in His kingdom, will not suffer them to be tempted above that they are able; but will with the temptation make a way of escape, that they may be able to bear it.

It should not be overlooked, however, that there is no assurance in this statement that some will not find themselves in temptations greater than they are willing to bear to the praise of His glory. The thought is that those who are willing to bear the temptations, the testings, will be able to bear them, for they, like the three Hebrews in the fiery furnace, will find One like the Son of God in the furnace of affliction with them. It is not His desire that any should perish in their testings, but that by them they should be induced to flee to His protecting arms. This assurance should exclude all possibility of any disquieting thoughts.

The habit of prayer should be so fixed that there need be no time lost when temptation threatens. While the danger is still on, the horizon, ere it has time to reach us, if we would have safety, the prayer of faith should ascend to enable us to meet and vanquish the Tempter; the prayer that our feebleness be rounded out to perfectness in His strength, for He has said, "My strength is made perfect in weakness." There may be, and no doubt certainly will be, trials greater than we are able to bear if we depend on the faith of yesterday for the trials of to-day. The promise is strength sufficient for every time of need, not strength, for a lifetime, but for each and every time of need, just the strength that is needed at the time. God does not open paths for us in advance of our coming. He does not promise help before help is needed.

He does not remove obstacles out of our way before we reach them. Yet when we are on the edge of our need God's hand is stretched out. Many people forget this, and are forever worrying about difficulties which they think they see in the future. Every day and every moment brings its duties and trials, and needs its appropriate grace. There must therefore, be constantly repeated acts of faith, and by means of faith a constant application of the atoning blood, both to preserve against the power of existing temptation and also to wash the mind from the impurity of its stains if we have even in a measure yielded to it.

Since trials are truly grievous for a time, they can be an occasion of rejoicing only because they work out the peaceable fruits of righteousness, purifying our hearts and strengthening our faith. We need to be continually teachable, and learning to attentively hearken for the voice of God in our daily path. Each one of the Lord's footstep followers must some day ascend the mount to his final test, and the record will be glorious only for those who have learned submission by the things they have suffered, whose ears have attentively hearkened.

In connection with our subject the R.V. gives this particular occasion of evil-speaking, as railing, but, whichever way we take it, there are many occasions when it would be much wiser to refrain from speaking.

The Psalmist says, "I will keep my mouth with a bridle while the wicked is before me; I was dumb with silence, I held my peace." Many times we realise that "silence is golden." The wise man says in Prov. 10:19. "In a multitude of words transgression cannot be avoided; but he that refraineth his lips is intelligent" (Leeser). Early in the life of every Christian it is realised that one's expression in his outward conduct and in his words has an important bearing on his progress in the development of Christ-likeness and true piety. The tongue, we know, is represented in the Lord's Word as a vast power for good or evil. In Eccles. 5:2 the wise man advises "Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter anything before God; for God is in heaven and thou upon earth, therefore let thy words be few." Careful meditation on this passage will confirm the wisdom that it sets forth. We could say it is almost impossible for such that talk a lot, to speak without saying something that is likely to be injurious or unprofitable. It would be unreasonable to expect to indulge freely in conversation with others, in the manner to which some commonly do, without conforming, in part at least, to their own views and terms of social intercourse. In a sense we seem to be under the necessity of sympathising to some extent with their lines of thought and experience, and may not be at liberty wholly to reject subjects which are pleasing to them. And who does not know that, acting on this view we are often introduced to various topics which, both in their nature and tendency are remote from a religious and edifying character.

How large a portion of the conversation of the great mass of mankind is taken up with unfavourable comments on the conduct of their neighbours. How much there is of hinted suspicion. How much of backbiting and the like. Now, if we would not be accessory to sins of this kind, we must learn the difficult art of controlling the tongue, and of forming habits of conscientious silence. And then again, too much conversation has an injurious effect upon the religious instincts of the mind by filling the soul with many vain and useless thoughts. All such thoughts take up more or less of the attention of the mind, and just so far as it is so occupied it is necessarily deprived of the consciousness of God's purifying presence. Such are the laws of the mind, that it cannot be occupied with the things of God and a multitude of worldly vanities at the 'same time.

And in addition it should be remembered that words are one of the outward signs and natural expressions of the inward passions; and whatever may be true of those of a different character, it is well understood that the resentful passions which often interpose, are an obstacle to holiness and may acquire great vigor by outward exhibition.

On the contrary it is equally well understood that they generally wither and die under a system of silence. So that by upholding a practice of silence generally, we shall not 'Only find our thoughts less liable to wander, and more collected in God than they would otherwise be, but shall also find the passions pertaining to anger, and the exciting passions generally, when thus deprived of the powerful stimulation of words, more submissive and more perfectly under control.

The Apostle, after exhorting to put away these things, then informs us of the ones to put on in their place, because the mind cannot remain empty, otherwise the evils 'may return. He says, "be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted"; this latter word has the thought of being compassionate, 'sympathetic. This is a lovely and necessary 'condition of mind; to be sympathetic under the guidance 'of the spirit of a sound mind. It is one of the principles 'of 'God. We sing it in that good old hymn, "His loving-kindness, O how great." In this respect David was a man after God's own heart—he had the forgiving disposition.

While the Scriptures inculcate the thought that God's people are to be generous toward all, they make common 'the thought that they should have a special interest in one another. Kindness is certainly one of the elements of love, as the Apostle says, and tender-heartedness must characterise those who would have a participation with our Lord in 'His kingdom. Hardness of heart and callousness, are evidences of degradation, and many inherit these things 'from their ancestors, while many can be thankful that they have inherited from their ancestors the loving disposition which gives them a good start off in the race. When we know how much God has forgiven us, and how much we need forgiveness, it should make us more and more of the forgiving disposition which is well pleasing in:the sight of God.

There are 'times in our lives when we might brighten some amongst whom we move, with a few kind words; kind thoughts cannot be read without being put into practice. In this way generous impulses may leave footprints on the sands of time. The words of a hymn again remind us—"Thus do we pass from this earth and its toiling, only remembered by what we have done."

Our Lord said—"Blessed are the merciful." They are the kind to whom the heavenly Father will be pleased to extend His mercy and favour. They are the only ones who will be in a proper attitude to receive the great blessing of the kingdom. May we always apply this lesson to ourselves in regard to our dealings with 'the brethren and with our neighbours. What matters it to us whether they mean evil or good, have we not God's assurance that all things are working together for good to them that love Him? And this being the case why should we have the slightest resentment against the persons or instrumentalities in any way used of the Lord in connection with our affairs. Those who thus trust in the Lord and those only, are able to properly view and meet the affairs of life. The climax of the situation here is to cast off those things that drag one down, and hold fast and cultivate that disposition that lifts one up, as another has written—"all do not know it, but it is a fact that the grandest quality that man can exercise, and the one which brings the largest amount of blessing itself is the exercise of the Godlike quality of mercy, compassion, benevolence."

“Think It Not Strange”

Why should we think it strange when trials come?
How can we ever murmur, or be dumb
When we should peaceful be and ever say,
Let God be magnified in life alway?

Where is our faith, if we in trial fret?
God never fails, He will not once forget,
Nor will: He ever leave the weakest saint,;—
Then why should we despond, or fear, or faint?

We should look up, and trust our gracious God,
Since we are saved and bought by poured out blood;
How can we e’er forget that Glorious One,
Who died to save—God’s well-beloved Son?

A life ‘of praise, since saved by Sovereign grace,
Should be our aim,—saved out from Adam’s race;
Our daily life for Him who freely died
Should be a song, however we are tried.

God is, and God is love, He will not fail,
But in, and over all He must prevail;
Then let us look on high, and trust in Him,
With all: our soul, with faith that ne’er grows dim.

God is our Refuge, and our strength as well,
And we are saved, and blessed in Him as well;
How can we fail to praise Him and adore,
Our. Glorious Lord, whose Presence is so sure?

Come then ye saints, and sing with heart and voice,
Lift up your heads, the Lord is here, rejoice;
Trials, troubles, sorrows, only draw us nearer
To Him, our blessed Lord and Head, and Heaven seems dearer.

The Resurrection Body of the Lord and His Saints

SOME still think that the Lord now wears the the body of humiliation with its five bleeding wounds received on Calvary. If such were true, then all the martyred saints, “planted together in the likeness of His death,” and to share “in the likeness of His resurrection,” (Rom. 6:5) would also have their poor rack-mangled bodies and broken limbs, and some like St. Paul, having been beheaded, would he either heads without bodies, or bodies without heads; and what of those ‘whose poor bodies were burned to ashes! .

A proper understanding of the resurrection saves all such confusion. “And that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be . . . But God giveth it (the individual or new creature, the being) a body as it bath pleased him” (1 Cor. 15:37, 38). “It is sown a natural, body, it is raised a spiritual body” (see verse 44). “If the earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens” (2 Cor. 5:1). So, St. Peter says Christ was “put to death in the flesh but quickened (raised) in the spirit” (see literal Greek Diaglott translation, 1 Pet. 3:18).

The body of Jesus was no doubt taken care of and during the six weeks prior to His ascension, He did on one occasion appear in that form in order to convince Thomas of His resurrection, but He did not always appear in that body. As a spirit being, He had power to materialise, miraculously assuming a human body as did the angels appearing to Abraham and others of old time. Once He appeared as a gardener to Mary and again as a stranger to the disciples on the way to Emmaus. Then again in another form as a stranger on the sea shore. On no occasion (excepting to convince Thomas) was He recognised by His bodily appearance; it was always by His tone of voice or His words and the way He had of “breaking bread and giving thanks.”

After His ascension and glorification, He was never again seen in human form, for He is now in the “express image of the Father’s person” (Heb. 1:3); highly exalted above all principalities, and powers in the heavens (Col. 1:16, 17). The Apostle assures us that on coming again, it will not be in any body of humiliation, but in great power and glory, and our Lord says the same thing in the parable in Matt. 25:31. “In His glory and all the holy angels with Him.” The Apostle John (1 Johri 3:2), says we do not know what our Lord is like, so we do not know what we shall be like, but we do know that when we shall see Him we shall be like Him.

Some seem to think that the angel said as Jesus ascended in the cloud, that He would come again in the same bodily form as they saw Him, go, but the angel did not say anything of the kind. What was said was, “This same Jesus which ye have seen taken up into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go.” There was no mention that anyone would see Him come back, but simply that He would come back and in the clouds. It was like the parables, a picture with a large meaning. The clouds picture the clouds of trouble by which His presence will be made known, and these clouds we see hovering over the world to-day.

Jesus was no longer a human being; He gave His flesh, His humanity, for the life of the world. “He was put to death flesh, raised spirit,” and highly exalted “to the express image of the Father’s person,” “whom no man can see.” So Jesus never again appeared in human form. When Paul got a glimpse of His glory on the way to Damascus, he was blinded; he could not see. His form but just saw the brightness and heard the voice.

Jesus truly said, “The world seeth me no more, but ye (the church) shall see me,” because “I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am, ye may be also” (John 14). Paul also states, “Though we have known Christ after the flesh henceforth know we Him (.4:)) no more” (2 Cor. 5:16).

No, He does not come again to suffer death for the world, in a body of humiliation, but He comes in power and great glory to dethrone Satan, the wicked “prince of this world” and to take the control of earth and bring in righteousness and peace and goodwill and to make the whole earth as the garden of Eden.

Satan is a powerful spirit being, invisible to human eyes, having much more power than if visible and confined to the limitations of human nature, in a human body. Christ is a much more powerful spirit being; He is the “stronger man” that is going to bind the “strong man” (Satan) and reign in his stead. He, too, will have much more power to assist mankind by His influences, His spirit of love, mercy, goodness, justice, truth, righteousness and wisdom, than if He were again in human form with its limitations. He was made flesh, “a little lower than angels, for the suffering of death.” He paid the price of sin and purchased the world—“He died, rose and revived that He might be the Lord (owner) of the dead and the living.” Having chosen His Church as joint-heirs in the Kingdom, during the Gospel Age; (Rev. 3:21), He now comes to lift up the poor, groaning creation out of its depravity and restore mankind to the image of God. “To bless all the families of the earth.” (Rom. 8:19-22: Gal. 3:16, 29).

Ransom Points to be Remembered.

Ransom used in Scriptures.

WHEN EVER the word Ransom is used in the Scriptures it has the sense of ransom-price according to the Greek—a corresponding price, a sufficient price.

Meaning of Ransoming.

Ransoming signifies the application of the ransom-price. Thus when we read that our Lord Jesus gave himself a ransom-price for all, the meaning is that His sacrifice, finished at Calvary, is a sufficient price to effect the ransoming of all mankind, if so applied or when so applied.

Providing and Applying Ransom-price.

Our Lord laid down His life; He died on our behalf; He gave our ransom-price into the Father’s hands when he offered Himself without spot to God. But the putting of that vicarious sacrifice into God’s hands and the application of that merit to mankind are two different matters.

Laying down the Ransom-price.

The laying down of the ransom-price was finished at Calvary; but the application of it was not even begun for fifty days. Three days our Redeemer was dead—arising on the third day. Then for forty days He was with the Disciples, appearing occasionally for their instruction. Then He ascended upon high, there “to appear in the presence of God for us,” and promptly on the fiftieth day, Pentecost, the outpouring of the holy spirit upon God’s believing and consecrated servants and handmaidens began.

Proof that the Church had been Ransomed.

Pentecost was the proof that our glorified Lord had applied the merit of His sacrifice, had applied His blood as our ransom-price. Pentecost was therefore a proof that the Church had been ransomed—that the antitypical sprinkling of His blood by our great High Priest on the mercy-seat, or propitiatory, “for us” had been accomplished, and that it was satisfactory to justice, and that our sins were cancelled. Thereupon the High Priest began at once his secondary offering of His “members”— “living sacrifices, holy and acceptable unto God.” (Rom. 12:1.). This in the type was represented by the killing of “The Lord’s Goat”—”The goat of the sin-offering that is for the people.”—Lev. 16:15.

Ransom-price all necessary for the Church.

The ransom-price all went for the atonement of our sins when the great High Priest appeared “for us.” That ransom- price bought us (1 Cor. 6:20); but was applied for no others and blessings came upon no others. It is “for all” (1 Tim. 2:6), but has not yet been so applied. .

Philosophy of applying Ransom-price.

It took all of that merit or ransom-price to make atonement for our sins—because it was so applied. It would have required all of it for even one man’s release. It is because the penalty or sentence of death passed, “upon all men to condemnation,” through one man’s offence or sin, that the one man’s death can be applied for more than one man’s release from condemnation. But whatever the number it is applied for, it takes it all to effect the release from condemnation.

High Priest now has no merit to apply.

So, then, the High Priest, having applied the entire ransom-price “for us,” “on our behalf” (Heb. 9:24), for the blemishes or condemnation of those now accepted as His members and His house—the household of faith—it follows that he has no merit now remaining to apply for the world. The ransom-price which was sufficient for one man or for all men was applied only “for us,” “for our sins.”

The Hope of the World.

Ah, it has not been forgotten in the divine purpose, and in due time it will be ransomed—”the precious blood,” the ransom-price, will be applied on the mercy-seat for the sins of all the people. Then the holy spirit will be poured out upon all flesh.

Re Church paying World’s Ransom-price.

What ! will the Church pay the world’s ransom-price ? Not so. It is the divine arrangement that in all things He (Jesus) should have the preeminence. Jesus’ merit, as we have seen, is now fully in use— accredited to us who are of the household of faith, for our justification by faith. We are counted, or reckoned, as possessing the earthly rights and life forfeited by Adam and redeemed by Jesus. But this reckoning or justification is confirmed to us of God by the holy spirit’s begetting to a new nature only because of our consecration vow to the Lord that we would lay down our lives, sacrificing all earthly interests and rights as He did—walking fully in His steps, being baptised into His death, drinking of His cup of ignominy—partaking with our Head of “the blood of the New Covenant,” by which as a legacy or testament the ransom-price blessing shall in due. time be bequeathed to natural Israel—with the proviso that all mankind may be blessed by becoming Israelites indeed on the human plane of restitution— Abraham’s earthly seed— as the sands of the sea for multitude.

Re returning Ransom-price to High Priest.

Note, then, that the one ransom-price, laid down by our Lord at Calvary, was all paid over to Justice “on our behalf,” “for us,” as was acknowledged at Pentecost and since, by the holy spirit upon the Lord’s servants and handmaidens. Note also that the restitution rights which we are now using as sharers in our Lord’s sacrifice must all be surrendered back to justice before the great High Priest can present that same ransom-price again on behalf of the world, under the New Covenant conditions.

Classes developed under original Abrahamic Covenant.

“Ye shall all die like men,” or as men, writes the Lord through the prophet. (Psa. 82:7.). There are three classes developed under God’s original Covenant with Abraham—The Grace or Sarah Covenant. (1) The “little flock” of under-priests —members of the Body of the High Priest. These suffer with Him, sharing “His death,” “His cup,” “baptised into His death.” (2) The “great company,” who consecrated unto death and were begotten of the spirit, but who “through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage.” These must die, but not as parts of Christ’s body, not as parts of His sacrifice. They must suffer “the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit (new nature) may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.” (3) Those who wilfully turn from and repudiate their consecration to sacrifice must die the Second Death. These are described by St. Paul as treating despitefully the One who paid their ransom- price and accepted them as His members, sanctifying them apart as His joint-sacrificers and joint-sharers of His glory in connection with the great work of mediating the New Covenant, under which Israel and the world will be blessed.—Heb. 10:29.

Death of All Sanctified.

All of these three classes, all whose justification and sacrifice of sanctification were accepted by the Lord—as evidenced by their receiving the holy spirit as His servants and handmaidens—all these must die before the New Covenant with Israel and mankind will be sealed. They must lay down all earthly justification and earthly rights, , forever, before the one ransom-price can be back into the hands of justice to the credit of the High Priest, that He may therewith appear in the presence of God to make an atonement with His ransom-price for the sins of all the people. Then, at the close of this age and the opening of the Millennium, our Lord, who as the man Christ Jesus gave Himself a ransom-price for all, will have presented that price “for all.” Thus “He is the propitiation (expiator—Strong’s Lexicon) for our sins (the Church’s sins), and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world.” (1 John 2:2). The expiations are separate and distinct, but the one sacrifice, finished at Calvary, is the ransom-price by which both expiations are to be effected. (Z. 1909-349.).

Correspondence.

Victoria,

11th Sept., 1938. Dear Brother,

Time passes quickly since my last letter to you. The common round, the little trials and testings are ever with one, making it ever necessary to wait upon the Lord that He might strengthen the heart.

I would mention that I have tendered my resignation as a member of the Methodist Church, feeling it the right thing to do. My feelings and emotions regarding it all are such that seems best not to write. The Lord understands and I would leave it in His hands, trusting Him to keep and guide me in coming days. I have stated my readiness to conduct services if required to do so, preaching according to the Word alone, as led of the spirit to understand it.

It appears, Brother, that world events are moving rapidly and especially lately have I noticed how men's hearts are failing them for fear. I seek ever as I can to point beyond the trouble time, but realise, too, how great the need of patience just now.

Last time I wrote I enquired about a Revised Version N.T., and would now like one for about 2/6, the price quoted for secondhand ones; and would like also two more of the pocket "Divine Plan of the Ages." Deduct this amount from the money at credit with you; also place a further 5/- to the Tract Fund Account. I would like also another copy of September "People's Paper."

I am enclosing some thoughts on Heb. 10:38. If of any use I am glad. They contain nothing but what is known to most readers I know but if of any use at all just use them accordingly.

Things are very dry up here feed for stock having been a problem all this season; crops are for the greater part very backward. Falling prices, too, all conspire together, as it were, to capture our minds to the cares of this world, but grace will be sufficient I know.

With much Christian love to yourself and to all "led of His spirit."

Victoria,

10th Sept., 1938. Dear Brother,

I was very pleased to hear from you, the letter having reached me on time. Thank you for writing. Almost daily I had planned to write you; I have worked hard, late and early, needless to say often over tired, very thankful for good health and strength, with constantly renewed faith in God; under His guidance I cheerfully press on, spiritually and temporally also.

Yes, I would be delighted to come down occasionally for the Sunday meetings, but finance is a drawback. Happily the Lord's children are always meeting new and very welcome surprises in the Lord's blessings, so that if circumstances do not permit our much desired personal contact and fellowship, we are one, just the same; never separated, one in spirit, heart and loving unity, and so it is natural to remember one another and pray for one another and so fulfil the law of Christ.

I note your progress in the studies Luke and Hebrews; I would have enjoyed it had I been there. I will read Vol. 2, "The Manner of Our Lord's Return." I think that is so vitally important; without a clear understanding we are totally in the dark. I am pleased to say that to me it seems clear—so much so, that one almost marvels at the blindness tradition has inflicted on the nominal church. I will read up Vol. 2 on it again.

I realise the hearty welcome awaiting the Brother from W.A., also Bro N. I'll be with you, though out here, in those welcomes. I am glad to hear of the good prospects for the Kingdom Cards; perhaps later I may see some scope for their circulation, also other literature in this part.

As I suppose, and it was only reasonable too, most of our Class wondered if I would continue on, or do as most others, disagree on some point of Scripture and leave. If that was so, well just for once how glad you are that you were mistaken, and now rejoice with me, for I did not know if I would remain, but I had an open mind. I heard a few explanations that astonished me; it wrecked some of my own ideas, but I decided to look further into them, really desiring to know only the Truth. And new as it was to me I saw it clearly and gladly, and thankfully embraced it. I cannot just now tell you all the knowledge and blessing I received through those fellowship meetings; every day I am rejoicing over them.

Kindly convey my Christian love to all the brethren and assure them of my loyalty, love and prayers on their behalf.

Your fellow traveller to the Heavenly Kingdom.

South Australia, September, 1938.

Berean Bible Institute,

Melbourne, Vic.

I must thank you for sending along so many interesting papers concerning God's great plan of salvation and restoration. It is such welcome news after holding other beliefs for so long. Although, after having a great grief in my life, I began to think for myself there must be some other interpretation of the Scriptures.

I am so glad, to be in touch with someone who has confirmed what is more consistent with a God of love.

Yours in the blessed hope of our Redeemer,

South Australia.

To the Brethren,

Berean Bible Institute.

I had one of your papers called "The Voice" sent to me; subject, "The Troubled Word's Hope."

For the last three years I have been blessed with the knowledge that the Kingdom of our blessed Lord is the only hope for the world of mankind, and that the present age is for calling and disciplining those for that great honour of reigning with Christ for the purpose of blessing those who have not been enlightened as yet; that Christ died for them and is to give them that knowledge that they may have opportunity of believing into Him, that He may give them life free from the Adamic penalty with all its sorrow, pain and death.

As you are giving a special' offer of one of your publications, "Foregleams of the Golden Age," I would be glad if you would send one to me, as I am very interested in the good tidings that we are so privileged to know, when most people cannot see those things are taught in God's Word.

I will enclose the 2/- for the special price of the book which I. will look forward to receiving, and remain

Yours in the one hope,

South Australia.

Berean Bible Institute,
Melbourne.

Dear Sirs,

Please send per post the book "Foregleams of the Golden Age" that is quoted in your paper, "The Voice."

I have at different times received your paper from an unknown friend from Murray Bridge, S.A. The papers are very nice reading indeed. (Later.) In reply to your letter I am pleased to say I received the book "Foregleams of the Golden Age." I am progressing slowly with the reading and have read the booklet "A New Dictator," also the July and September issues of the "People's Paper" which I like very much, and will you please send me a copy each month. Postal note for 2/6 enclosed.

I will now close with Christian regards and best wishes. Yours truly,

"A Review of The Doctrines."

This book of 92 pages by Brother H. J. Shearn, of England, previously sold with a cloth cover at 1/6, is now available in paper binding at 6d. per copy, post paid.

While not agreeing with all the thoughts expressed, It will be found a useful book, especially as a Class study. The brief statements on the various doctrines leaves scope for additional expressions by individual members, and Classes interested are invited to send for samples.

"Poems of Dawn."

Friends interested in a reproduction of the book of selected poems, "Poems of Dawn," are asked to communicate with us.

Containing over 230 very helpful poems expressive of the Christian life and hopes to come, as well as numerous page fillers this little hook has been sought after quite often by the brethren since it has been out of print. While it would seem that the demand would not warrant a printing in the usual way, it is thought that it could be produced in handy size, with clear type suitable to all (not capital letters), at reasonable price, by duplicator, should sufficient be required.

All desiring copies are asked to state if possible the number they could use should the work be undertaken.

A limited number of the "Scenario of the Photo-Drama of Creation" is now available. This book, well known to many of our readers, contains a very helpful description of God's Plan of the Ages, in short, complete articles, each of which is accompanied by fitting illustrations. This makes the book very interesting for children as well as grown-ups. The plan of God is traced from beginning to end by the 96 concise articles and nearly 400 illustrations.

Friends desiring copies of these books are advised to make early application. In two bindings—with strong paper covers, at 3/6; in de luxe, beautifully bound, with gold edges, at 4/9, post paid.

Hymn Books.

The brethren of the Bible Students Committee, England, are now preparing a new hymn book of words, as all previous editions are out of print.

As the new books are to contain all the “Dawn Hymns” the additional ones found in the “Christian Hymns,” and further selections making in all about 450 hymns, they will no doubt be very good and useful for those Classes or individual brethren in need of new books.

A supply is expected to reach us in the course of some weeks, and orders may be placed for delivery on arrival. The price is expected to be in the vicinity of 1/- for single copies.

The World's Perplexities and Bible Prophecy.

IN our Lord's great prophecy recorded in His discourse in Matthew, chapters 24 and 25, we have in such concise, yet wonderfully comprehensive and highly figurative language, the prediction of the fall of Jerusalem and the scattering of Israel among the nations; also a forecast of the history of the Gospel Age as respecting the Church.

Certain signs are provided by which the faithful in Christ might know of His second presence and Of the end of the age, which would be similar to Noah's day. While the world of that day was ended by the Flood, the "present evil world" (age) would end in a similar world-wide catastrophe—"a time of trouble, such as has not been since the world began, nor ever shall be again." (See Matt. 24:21; Dan. 12:1). Luke's account (Luke 21) says—"Upon the earth, distress of nations with perplexity, men's hearts failing them for fear of what is coming on the earth."

Turning to Daniel 12:1-4, there can be no doubt that he refers to the present time, for his words are so entirely fulfilled in this day. "Many shall run to and fro and knowledge shall be increased, at the time of the end." We might think it strange that all these wonderful inventions have come about during the past hundred years, It is not that men have better brains than our forefathers; rather the race has degenerated. It is simply that the time of fulfilment of prophecy has come, for we are living in "the time of the end." That does not mean the destruction of the literal earth or literal heavens, but simply that the present order of society and of the spiritual control will be overthrown and pass away, and a new world, a new age under a better ruler will come in-2 Peter 3.

Sir Isaac Newton speaking of Daniel's prophecy said that he would not be surprised if men would be able to travel at the rate of 25 miles an hour. The noted French infidel, Voltaire, ridiculed Newton as being so foolish to make so rash a statement, but to-day men are travelling more than two hundred miles an hour.

Before the great war, we were taken to task when it was pointed out that the Scriptures clearly foretold the collapse of society as it existed. One minister, who but voiced the thoughts of most, said that Christianity was so changing men's hearts that no wars of aggression and conquest could ever again take place. Christianity was making it impossible for one nation to fear or distrust another--the world was being converted. But what happened? The Bible was proved true—"In the last days; perilous times shall come . . . men would be truce-breakers, fierce, traitors, despisers of them that are good, etc.-2 Tim. 3:1-5.

The Permission of Evil.

Without the inspired Word of God, we might well be puzzled as to why a wise and loving God should permit all the wickedness, sorrows and horrors of the past and present; why the wicked prosper instead of the righteous, and the innocent suffer for the guilty. The fact, however, that God foreknew it all and foretold these evil conditions, and has permitted them to develop, indicates that there is some wise and good purpose in it, and we will endeavour to show something of that purpose.

The Bible speaks of a “Divine Plan of the Ages,” It was man’s choice, represented in our first parent, to disobey God. He chose to obey Satan and has been allowed to reap the consequences, but God at the same time provided a way of meeting the justice of His own throne. Christ volunteered to pay the price of that man’s sin, so that “as all die in Adam, so all may be made alive again in Christ.” (1 Cor. 15:3, 21, 22; Rom. 5:12-18).

It is indeed a sad, hard lesson, but ultimately it will be turned to good account, for all will have an opportunity of doing righteously and gaining life. Some have that opportunity now and may if faithful be associated with Christ in the Messianic Kingdom Age, which we are assured is very near, when all the residue of mankind may seek the Lord and be rewarded with perfect human life.

The Bible speaks of Satan as the prince of this age. In due time Christ takes control instead, and Satan and all evil influences will be bound. Instead of the fallen angels co-operating with Satan in all deceptions, spiritualistic seances, etc., the Church glorified will co-operate with Christ in leading all the willing and obedient up the highway of holiness to life eternal. That is for what we were taught to pray—”Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as in heaven”; “Peace on earth, goodwill towards men.”

Perplexities of Our Day.

All thinkers to-day realise that the world is heading for a collapse of civilisation—a great upheaval. Never has there been such an abundance of good things, not only necessities and comforts, but luxuries. The common people have lovely homes; electricity, motor cars, and many good and bad things that even the rich could not have years ago. Think of the advantages of education—knowledge increased and the comforts in travelling, etc. Instead of this making the people content and happier, it would seem the reverse; there is more restlessness, more discontent, more grasping greed, jealousy, envy, strife and murder.

There is less reverence for the things of God, more callousness and disregard for law and order, and less rectitude in business; less trust between nations and consequently there is this “Distress of Nations and men’s hearts are failing for fear and for looking after these things coming on the earth,” with all the diabolical preparations for the wholesale murdering of our fellow creatures.

As we realise this condition of things and see the wonderful fulfilment of prophecy before us, it is but reasonable that we should expect to find in the Bible some indication of what the outcome of it will be and a solution of the problem that has so long perplexed thinkers, as to why God permits all these evils and calamities.

The Divine Plan of the Ages—Ephes. 3:9-11 (Diaglott).

It would seem that a period, of 7000 years was arranged, during which time mankind would be created and increase sufficiently to fill the earth with a perfect race mentally and morally in the likeness of God—able to appreciate the Divine principles of Wisdom, Justice and Love, with a free will to choose good or evil—and ultimately all who receive eternal life will so love righteousness and hate evil that that free will shall always be exercised along right lines.

In order that this be attained, it was necessary that man should have a knowledge of evil as well as of good and so Divine Wisdom arranged that man being placed in Eden with every good thing needful for happy enjoyment of life should be allowed his own choice of obedience or disobedience, in full knowledge of the fact that disobedience would mean death. We all know the result of that trial; we see it all around us in the sin, sorrow, pain and death every day. Every funeral procession reminds us that “the wages of sin is death.” (Rom. 6:23).

It appears that 6000 years is the time allotted wherein this experience shall be gained and then during the 7th Thousand year period, God would exercise His power, control the forces of evil and by punishment for evil doing and rewards for right living, man would be assisted out of his depravity, lifted out of sin and death, and brought again into the image of God. Thus we read, “The whole creation groaneth and travaileth together in pain, waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God.” (Rom. 8:19, 22).

Ages or Dispensations.

The Bible divides the 7000 years into three great days or epochs. Peter, in the 3rd chapter of his 2nd Epistle, mentions all three worlds or ages, (1) The world that was before the Flood. (2) The present evil world. (3) The world to come wherein dwelleth righteousness. The first dates from the creation of Man to the Flood. The second from the Flood to the setting up of Christ’s Kingdom at the end of this Gospel Age, and the third is from thence “World without end.”

In the world before the Flood, God was allowing man to experience the consequences of his choice, in obeying Satan, and Angels were permitted contact with mankind, evidently to instruct man in respect of production of necessities and respecting astronomy, etc., and at the same time the angels could learn the bitter experiences of sin by observation while the human family was to learn by actual experiences. These angelic beings had been created before man and had been used in preparation of the earth for human habitation—Job. 38:47, speaks of them, as shouting for joy when the time had arrived for man to be created.

Some people think that men were intended to die and then become angels in heaven. That is quite a wrong thought; man was “of the earth earthy” and intended to enjoy eternal life on the earth. Death came as the penalty for sin. It is a false thought that the poet gives in the words “call it not death, ‘tis but transition.” The trees of life ‘were such as would have sustained life everlastingly, therefore when sin entered, man was driven from the garden and prevented from eating of these trees. Thus the sentence would be enforced.

It is claimed that man is an immortal soul, but if that were so it would not have mattered whether he had access to these trees of life or not, for immortal life is not dependent on food; it is self contained. Besides, God only had immortality, as Paul says.

Instead of assisting man in ways of righteousness during that age, the angels became sinful themselves and contributed to the further degeneration of mankind. They materialised, took the forms of men, married the daughters of men and produced a hybrid race—giants. “And God looked upon the earth and it was corrupt, all flesh had corrupted his way ;” only Noah’s family were found “perfect in his generations”—still of pure Adamic descent. For this reason God .permitted the great Flood that all might be destroyed and a fresh start. be made of pure Adamic stock. Thus as in 2 Peter 3, 5, 6, “The world that then was perished.” See also Gen. 6. 2, 4; job 4:18; Jude 6; 2 Peter 2:4. It was necessary to preserve .the race in the pureness of Adamic descent, for only as all die in Adam will all be redeemed in Christ. 1 Cor. 15:21, 22; Rom. 5:12, 18.

Probably not 50 years from the fall into sin the first murder was committed, but how quickly the broad road of sin widens, in jealousy, envy, bitterness and strife. How many millions of murders and more broken hearts have followed until to-day men are murdered by the thousands by the diabolical devices of war. Such is the consequence of man stepping out of the good providence of his Creator.

So God was dealing not only with the earth—human society—but with the “heavens”—the spiritual beings, angels. Human arrangements were destroyed, the spiritual control by angels ceased, the disobedient spirits were degraded and restrained as Jude and Peter inform us. . So the “heavens” and the “earth” passed away.

The Present Evil World.

Peter tells us that the present “heavens” (spiritual, religious elements) and earth (social, national order of things) are also to be destroyed in a fiery time of trouble. Satan is called. “the God of this world” which began after the Flood, also “the prince of the power of the air,” or heavens. He still rules in the minds of the great majority and has instituted all kinds of false religions. During this present evil world, God has allowed mankind to try all their own ways of governing in trying to bring about a happy condition. All sorts of governments have been tried; all have failed, for selfishness is so engraven in the human heart that many politicians evidently think much more of their own interests than of their responsibilities to the nations. During this long period of over 4000 years, “God has suffered all nations to walk in their own ways winking at their ignorance.”

Very shortly after the deluge, we find that idolatry existed: Men made images representing the angels—gods—and Nimrod, the great-grandson of Noah, founded the great pagan system of mythology at Babylon. This became the religion of Egypt and it still holds with the majority of mankind in one form or another. Every form of false religion seems traceable to Nimrod and Isis of Babylon. It was from here that Abraham was called of God and, told to depart that he might serve God apart from all that depravity. The church of early days compromised with Paganism and adopted some of its doctrines and festivals. Indeed the Pope’s title, “Pontifex Maximus” is of pagan origin. The doctrines of “eternal torture,” “inherent immortality,” “purgatory,” and “Trinity” are all pagan and contrary to Bible teachings. These are some of the things Peter prophesied would come in; “damnable heresies,” he calls, them.

Satan has thus influenced the whole systems of religion, (the present heavens) based upon the first great lie in Eden—“Thou shalt not surely die.” In this way, “The God of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not” and leads many into Spiritism, Christian Science and Theosophy, and has hidden and confused the pure, teachings of Christ and the Apostles. The religious teachings of to-day are so confused that the whole system is an antitype of the Tower of Babel, and is to be destroyed in the great time of trouble preceding the establishment of Christ’s Kingdom. Paul speaks of this wickedness in high places (heavens)—Ephes. 6:11, 12; ‘2 Peter 3:10.

With such darkness, superstition and error in the “heavens”—the religious element—poor humanity has been left to govern itself as best it may. Many noble efforts have been made in the past, but before long the spirit of the “prince of this world”—selfishness, envy, jealousy and malice — has asserted itself and destroyed such efforts for good. What a history of cruelty, horrible experiences, wars, calamities, persecutions and suffering has been earth’s experience. “The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain waiting for the manifestation of the Sons of God ;” the better day so long prayed for—so long promised—so long deferred—yet sure to come and that shortly.

This present civilisation which is called Christendom, Peter says, “is reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition The heavens (religious part) shall pass away with a great noise, the elements shall melt with fervent heat and the earth (social part) also and works therein shall be destroyed.”

When the first “heavens and earth” were destroyed at the Flood, God promised that He would “never more destroy from off the earth all living.” (Gen. 8:21, 22). Those who teach that the literal earth and literal heavens are to be burnt to ashes, seem to forget that promise and that it is also said, “The earth abideth forever.” The promises to Abraham, to David and to Israel could not be fulfilled if the earth were literally destroyed. (Acts 7:4, 5). The destruction of the present unrighteous systems however will involve “a time of trouble as was not since there was a nation nor ever will be again.” Matt. 24:21; Luke 17:26-30.

New Heavens and New Earth.

Then 2 Peter 3:13 says that this new world wherein dwelleth righteousness is that for which we ‘are • looking. It will bring in the “desire of all nations”—the new Prince of Peace will dethrone Satan and take control of earth’s affairs and lead the people to appreciate principles of righteousness and good-will. Zephaniah 3:8, 9 clearly speaks of this time, when he says that after that fiery time of trouble God will turn to the people a pure language—true Gospel—and “they will call upon him with one consent.”

What a different world it will be when the great Adversary is taken out of the way and instead of his influences, his spirit of selfishness—pride, envy, strife and lust—the spirit of Christ will pervade all hearts with its influences of love, brotherly kindness, helpfulness and good-will, every man seeking others good.

The Apostle says, “Unto the angels he hath not put in subjection the world to come.” No, instead of Satan and his evil spirits operating to deceive and entice into evil, Christ and the Church (joint-heirs with Christ) will be there to encourage all towards right and kind ways. The Church has been especially chosen during this Gospel Age for this purpose—to bless all the families of the earth, with Christ (See Gal. 3:16, 29). The curse of sin and death will be gradually rolled away and mankind led up the Highway of Holiness -(Isaiah 35), up to perfect, human life into the image of God.

Instead of the wicked prospering as now, “then shall the righteous flourish,” (Psa. 37:35; 73:12; 72:7; 92:12).

Instead of oppression by the wicked, the rich, the strong rulers and landlords, etc., “They shall sit every man under his own vine and fig tree and none shall make them afraid.” Micah 4:17; Isa. 65:22. Instead of having bolts and bars to keep out burglars, “Nothing shall hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain (kingdom).” Isa. 11:9; 65:25. Instead of sickness, pain and death, the great physician shall arise as “the sun of righteousness with healing in his wings,” Malachi 4:2; and “there shall be no more curse, no more death and no more pain.” Rev. 22:3; Rev. 21:4. Judgment will he lay to the line and righteousness to the plummet.—Isa. 28:17. Read also Isa. 26:6-8; and (Isa. 15:17-25, “Behold I create a new heavens and a new earth, “etc., also Psalm 72.

Holding Back the Winds.

EUROPEAN events, particularly at the close of September last, have again vividly impressed all thinking people, with the fact that present day civilisation is a very frail structure indeed, for, had the war which seemed eminent broken out, leading statesmen agree that it might well have meant the destruction of the present order of society.

The Lord's people alone know how truly those things which men fear (Luke 21:26) are foretold in God's Word, for the desire and hope of mankind as a whole is that by sortie means the great catastrophe may be averted and "all things continue as they were from the beginning of creation."

What a gloomy outlook it would be if the present "night of weeping" was to continue indefinitely; how thankful we should be that the promise is, "Joy cometh in the morning,"—the Millennial morning—and that eventually "God shall wipe all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain." To bring about this happy condition—"to make all things new"—will of necessity require a clearing away of everything old and useless, and this process will involve a great "plowing" time, "great tribulation such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be." (Matt. 24:21.)

The particular point to note is that while the Lord in His wisdom sees well to permit the great tribulation throughout the earth at the close of this dispensation, He is graciously restricting the period of its duration mainly "for the elect's sake," and also that only what is absolutely necessary may come upon Mankind in general. (Matt. 24:22). This, no doubt, is the reason why the great conflagration is still held in check, in harmony with Rev. 7: 1-3—"Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads."

How the love and mercy of God shines out in every feature of His plan for the salvation of mankind through the sacrifice of His dear Son. Especially is this so at the present time on behalf of His servants who are being "sealed in their foreheads," and what incentive and encouragement this should be to all "Looking for and", hasting ('giving all diligence to make their calling and election sure') unto the coming of the clay of God." (See 2 Peter 3:10-14.)

Witnessing for Jesus.

"Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."—John 1:18-34.

JOAN the Baptist had the great honor and distinction of being the first of God's witnesses amongst men respecting God's only begotten Son. John was a grand character, from whatever standpoint we view him, and all of the Lord's people now seeking to witness faithfully may draw some valuable lessons from his course, in addition to which we shall show that he was a type of all the faithful witnesses of the Lord throughout this Gospel age. He was not an example to us in respect of his manner of speech or dress or general methods; nevertheless his peculiarities in these respects especially adapted him to the witnessing which the Lord designed him to do. Living in a time of increase of wealth and luxury, John was all the more attractive as the prophet of the Lord by reason of his peculiar disregard of the conventionalities of the time, and the evidences these gave of his complete separation from the world, his complete devotion to his special ministry. The people of Israel, as our Lord pointed out, carefully cherished the memories of their great prophets and garnished their sepulchers, although they were not sufficiently careful to heed their teachings. Amongst the ancient prophets Elijah was one of the most revered, and the fact that John the Baptist simulated him in his apparel and general demeanor and forceful teaching attracted the people much more than otherwise would have been the case.

Little is told us respecting John except that he was a cousin of Jesus and six months older, beginning his ministry at thirty years of age. Therefore he had been teaching and baptising just six months before the Lord came to him for baptism. His ministry continued for a year after Jesus' baptism; then he was shut up in prison for about a year before he was beheaded. Our lesson opens with a reference to John's witnessing—calling upon the people to repent because God's Kingdom was about ready to be proclaimed, urging them that they would not be fit for a share in it unless their hearts were fully turned to the Lord and away from sin.

Other Scriptures show us that for some time the nation of Israel had been looking for Messiah and that false Messiahs had arisen from time to time, and one record is that "all 'men were in expectation of him.'" Under these circumstances it is not surprising that the Jews urged the leaders of their nation, priests and Levites, to go to John and interview him and advise them respecting his message. Our lesson recounts the visit and the testimony John gave. Apparently it was the expectation of the questioners that John would claim to be the Messiah himself, and it was probably with surprise that they learned from his own lips that he made no such boast — "he confessed and denied not." Their next question was, "Art thou Elias?" (the Greek form of the word Elijah), and he replied, "I am not." Remembering the prophecy of Deuteronomy, "A prophet shall the Lord raise up unto you like unto me (Moses)," they next inquired whether or not John were that prophet, and he answered, "No."

Surprised they then asked, "Who art thou, then? We must make some report respecting you." Humbly and faithfully John declared that he was merely a nameless voice calling attention to the great Messiah, heralding his coming: he was like a voice in the wilderness declaring that a way must be prepared for the coming of the Kingdom, for which Israel had been hoping and longing and praying for centuries.

John not the Elijah.

It will be noticed that John distinctly declared that he was not the Elijah, and some have felt perplexed over the matter because our Lord, on referring to John and in answer to the query of the disciples about Malachi's testimony that Elijah must first come, declared of John, "This is the Elijah if ye will receive it." The explanation is as follows:

As Jesus in the flesh was the forerunner of the Messiah in glory and power, who will take his great power and reign in the opening of the Millennial age, and as the Apostle shows the Christ will be of many members, Jesus the Head and the Church his body, in the Kingdom) glory, so, similarly, John the Baptist was a forerunner to a greater one than himself, a more important witness composed of many members, witnessing over; a period of nearly nineteen centuries, prepaying the way for Messiah's Kingdom and announcing it. John in the flesh introduced Jesus in the flesh; but the greater than John, the Elijah of many members, will introduce, the greater, the glorious Christ of many members.

The real Elijah, who for nineteen centuries has been fulfilling the predictions of Malachi, the prophet, has been composed of the many faithful witnesses for Christ throughout this Gospel age. Jesus himself in the flesh was the first of those who witnessed a good confession before Pilate and before the Jewish nation; the apostles witnessed similarly and all down through the Gospel age the Lord's people in the flesh have witnessed—have witnessed against sin and in favor of righteousness, have witnessed the necessity for turning from sin to righteousness in order to be prepared for a share in the Kingdom, have witnessed that the Kingdom of the Lord is to be established in the hands of the glorified, and that it will bring in everlasting righteousness and fulfil the Lord's prayer, "Thy Kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven."

Hence we see that the words of Jesus and the words of John the Baptist are in full accord; John was not the Elijah mentioned by the Prophet, and yet he did a work of Elijah to those amongst the Jews who received his message. As it is the work of the greater Elijah to draw attention to the great Christ and the great work to be accomplished by him, so it was the mission of John in the Jewish nation to call attention to Jesus in the flesh, and in this sense of the word he was the Elijah to those who received it because to them he did the work of Elijah. From this standpoint we see a grand anti-typical Elijah, the Church in the flesh, doing a great work of witnessing throughout this Gospel age, and preparing for the establishment of the Kingdom in the end of the age; and we see the great work of Messiah, Head and body, Bridegroom and Bride, which will immediately follow this testimony.

The Prophet Malachi declared that one of two things would follow the work of the true Elijah, either it would turn the hearts of the fathers to the children and of the children to the fathers—that is, bring into full accord and loving harmony the people—or else it would result in the bringing of a great curse upon the people and great tribulation.

The world must be made ready for Messiah's Kingdom either by repentance and true conversion to the Lord or by judgments of the Lord. Malachi does not state which way the results will be accomplished, but other Scriptures clearly indicate that the work of the antitypical Elijah would not succeed, would not convert the world, and that as a result the establishment of Messiah's Kingdom would come in connection with a time of trouble such as was not since there was a nation—the curse mentioned by Malachi, the great tribulation mentioned by our Lord.

From this standpoint, recognising John the Baptist as a part of the typical Elijah and the Church in the flesh as the antitypical, we must draw lessons of humility as well as of zeal and faithfulness from John's course: not only did he make the preaching of the Gospel the chief object of life, to the extent of carelessness respecting all interests of this life, but additionally he boasted nothing of himself. His main mission in life was to prepare the people for the Messiah and to point them to him, and our Success as members of the antitypical Elijah will be in proportion as self is ignored and Christ is made the theme of our discourses, the centre of our teachings.

"Why Baptisest Thou., Then?"

It is the worldly idea and the nominal Church idea that all associated with religious teaching should make some great boast or claim respecting themselves—that they are wonderful prophets, or reverend, or doctors of divinity, or something else above the ordinary: no wonder then that the Priests and Levites, accustomed to this sort of thing, were surprised to find John making no such boasts and basing his preaching upon no such claims. They inquired what right, then, he had to be baptising at all, if he were merely a servant, not a lord over God's heritage. The same thought prevails to-day; and unless some boastful title or position or authority is claimed, the right to preach, the right to witness for the Lord in public, is called in question by many. Let us who have followed carefully the Scriptural proprieties in such matters boast nothing, but rather as John and, later, Jesus did, let our boasts be that we are merely servants, not lords, merely witnesses, not great or honorable or reverend, not priests. By and by, when the Master's views of matters shall be expressed, he will show that those who sought to exalt themselves failed of his approval, while those who humbled themselves, seeking only the privilege of service, have his approval. Directing their minds away from himself to Jesus, John declared, "There standeth one in your midst whom you do not recognise: him I declare, him I introduce as so great, so honorable, that I am not worthy even to be his servant, to loose the strings of his shoes." Similarly humble feelings should pervade the hearts and testimonies of all who are true members of the antitypical Elijah, witnessing to the Lord of glory, who is about to establish His Kingdom:

Alas,
that self-love

and self-pride should at times hinder testimony. Alas, that some seem to draw attention to themselves rather than to the King. Let us, dear brethren and sisters, in proportion as we have opportunity for witnessing, be careful, be faithful. Our faithfulness in witnessing to the Lord shall be the test of our worthiness to be members of his glorified Body.

Water Baptism v. Holy Spirit Baptism.

In bearing witness John called attention to the fact that what he did in the way of water baptism was insignificant, unimportant in comparison to the work of Messiah and his baptism of the holy spirit. Jesus baptised none with the holy spirit during His ministry. That baptism took place at Pentecost, after He had died for our sins and ascending up on high had appropriated the merit of His sacrifice to the credit of believers—then the latter received the baptism of the holy spirit. There is a similarity between the work of John and that of the Church. in the flesh in respect of this feature also. We can witness to the Lord and perform the symbol of baptism. into his death, but further than this we cannot go. Our glorified Head must give the great blessing by bringing the consecrated under the blessing and favor of the holy spirit, and later on, when all the present witnessing has been finished and when the Atonement Day sacrificing shall all have been accomplished, the glorified Christ shall pour out his spirit upon all flesh, as during this Gospel age he pours it out upon his special servants and handmaidens.

"Behold the Lamb of God!"

This was the first formal proclamation of Jesus by John to his disciples and to the public. It occurred at least forty- two days after our Lord's baptism, for immediately following that He was forty days in the wilderness and was tested. After the wilderness temptation, probably very soon; He returned to John's company at Jordan. Shortly after this proclamation by John,, our Lord departed from his vicinity, so that a simultaneous work by .John .' and by Jesus was for a time in progress in different localities, for we read that Jesus and His disciples baptised more than did John and his disciples —though Jesus himself baptised not.

Our Lord was variously represented in the sacrifices of the Jews at their festivals; for instance He was typified by •the peaceful lamb at their spring festival, and He was the antitype of the bullock of their Atonement Day sacrifices. It was with full propriety, therefore, that John announced Jesus as the "Lamb of God"—meek, gentle, patient, unassuming, the passover sacrifice for Israel and for the whole world. In the ears of the unregenerate such a title as lamb would not sound very dignified: amongst the coats of arms of chivalry, wolves' heads, bullocks' heads, lions' heads, serpents' heads, etc., are freely used to represent the strength and the prowess of the families, but where will we find anyone taking a lamb as a symbol of dignity? • To the Lord's consecrated people, however, the lamblike quality of our dear Redeemer and his patient and willing sacrifice on our behalf are beautifully represented in this symbol of a lamb-- the Lamb of God, God's Lamb, provided by Him as the sacrifice for our sins, as the price of our redemption from the curse or sentence of death. This must be our witness, too, "Behold the Lamb of God." The world must be pointed to the great sacrifice for sins, and not to Christ as the great Teacher. After they have received Him as the Lamb, acknowledging their sins and need of His precious blood, then they will be ready to hear His words, to be taught of him; but no instruction can be rightly received until first our Lord is accepted as the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world.

It is worthy of note that although our Lord's sacrifice had begun at this time, John did not say the Lamb of God which took away the sin of the world. The entire sacrifice of Christ was necessary as the offset price to justice for the sin of Adam and his race. That price must be laid down before any of the sins of the world could be cancelled. And we remember, too: that it was necessary that our Lord should be raised from the dead and should ascend up on high, there to appear in the presence of God on our behalf. After His resurrection as the great High Priest, He appropriated of the merit of his sacrifice "on our behalf," but not yet on behalf of the world. Only believers are included in the appropriation •of the precious blood already made.

Our Lord is the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world and not merely the sin of the Church, but His work is not yet finished. It begins with the appropriation which clears believers; it will reach its full accomplishment after the glorification of the Church, when the sins of the whole world will be cancelled. The merit or value of the entire transaction was in the sacrifice of our dear Redeemer, but in the divine plan the arrangement was made as it is, so that we who are now justified in advance of the world might have fellowship with our Lord and share in His sufferings, share in His sacrifice and share also in His glory by and by, and in the dispensing of the blessings incidental to the taking away of the sins of the world. None should overlook the fact that it is the divine intention not to stop in taking away the sins of the Church and the household of faith, typified by the Priests and Levites, but that ultimately our Lord's sacrifice shall be appropriated to bringing blessings unto all the families of the earth.

"This is the Son of God."

Proceeding, John explained that Jesus was the one to whom he had previously referred in his preaching—the one who would come later and take the more honorable place because of his being so much the greater. John's statement that he knew Him not should not be understood to signify that he did not know that Jesus was his own cousin nor that he was unacquainted with him previously, but that He knew Him not as the Messiah previously. John then explains that when he was himself commissioned to preach and to baptise, the Lord informed him that he would see a better witness to the Son of God, the Messiah, and that he would know him by a certain sign—by seeing the holy spirit descend upon him like a dove, remaining upon him. John says that he did see this sign in Jesus' case just following his baptism, and that he was, therefore, fully qualified to give this witness that He was the Son of God.

So it must be with us, dear fellow-witnesses: We must see for ourselves that Jesus is the Son of God, the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world, before we can be God's witnesses respecting him. Alas, that it must be said that many of those who to-day in prominent pulpits are claiming to be God's witnesses are thoroughly unqualified to give the witness, since, according to their own confession, they know not Jesus as the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world. The higher criticism and evolution doctrines have so undermined the faith of the majority of those who claim to be ministers and ambassadors and witnesses for God and for Christ, that they cannot give the forceful witness such as alone will carry weight on this subject. We who have seen, we who have tasted, we who have to some extent appreciated the merit that is in the Lamb of God, may well rejoice in our privilege of being his witnesses; and it is to these faithful witnesses in the flesh, begotten of the holy spirit, that the blessed privilege shall shortly be granted of being sharers with the Lord in His Kingdom and glory and work.

“Could we with ink the ocean fill:

Were every blade of grass a quill:

Were the whole world of parchment made,

And every man a scribe by trade—

To write the Love of God above Would drain the ocean dry;

Nor could the scroll .. Contain the whole,

Though stretched from sky to sky.”

Correspondence.

N.Y., U.S.A.,

11 th September, 1938.

Berean Bible Institute, Dear Brethren,

Please note my change of address. The little paper has been coming regularly and is much appreciated. I enjoy reading that our dear Lord and Master is as close and precious to the saints on the opposite side of the globe as he is to those on this side. And when we all meet at His feet what stories we will have to tell of His Love and mercy and redeeming grace.

We had a small two-day convention here on the 4th and 5th September, over our Labor Day holiday. Brother Hoskins was here and a brother from Canada. A rich season of fellowship was enjoyed by all. The clays are growing very few now and every opportunity for fellowship and the mutual building-up of each other in the most holy faith should be grasped.

The book on the Sin-offering, Covenants, etc., is much enjoyed by the brethren here. I am glad you did the work and feel the Lord's blessing richly compensated you for your labor. Have ordered the "Tabernacle Shadows" direct from the "Dawn"; it is well they put the book on the market before you had gone to the expense.

May you be richly blessed as you seek to edify and strengthen the faith of the saints in your territory. Our prayers here unite with yours at the throne of grace.

—Your Sister in the One Hope.

India,

9th September, 1938.

Dear Brother in Christ,

Greetings from India, in the name of our Lord Jesus.

I have seen your paper, the "Peoples Paper" and appreciate all the good papers that are genuine and sound in their doctrines. May all your papers bring many to Jesus. Only I am not able to support your "Paper" for which I feel sorry; trust you will be sending a copy of the same to me regularly and some other useful tracts for free distribution among the educated of India.

You know it is a thickly populated country . . . I have gone through many villages and main cities preaching the glorious gospel of Christ to those that are sitting in darkness, yet there are thousands of big and small villages and places where people have scarcely heard the gospel; so many millions have not yet heard the name of Jesus and others although heard His name are quite ignorant of His salvation . . . Truly "the crop is plenteous, but workers are few; pray the Lord of the harvest for more workers." My poor country, India, like many others in the world, needs workers no doubt, but they should be honest, faithful, humble and God-sent workers; as Gospel workers, called and appointed and ordained by Himself; uncovetous and sanctified ones, hard laborers, unselfish, caring for the lost sheep that are gone astray. Workers not asking salary, but those that are coveting the best gifts from Him—the gift of His holy spirit.

The salvation papers and tracts can be used among the few educated ones, but what about the millions, illiterate people in far off villages? We can walk a few miles to meet a few of them; by other conveyance we can reach thousands every now and then. India requires such faithful hard workers. Who will come and help us? “Whosoever shalt call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How shall they call on Him in whom they have not believed?

And how shall they believe on Him ‘of whom they have not heard? How shall they hear without a preacher? . . . How beautiful are the feet, of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things.” People from foreign countries can help our poor India’s millions if they zealously belong to Christ; their hearts God shall surely touch . . . God repays abundantly.

With our warmest Christian love to self and all the beloved of the Lord there.

Your truly in the “Blessed Hope,” P. S. T.

[The “Peoples Paper” is gladly forwarded free to all desiring who are not able to provide the subscription; a request as above is all that is necessary. A good supply of tracts is also being forwarded to our earnest Brother in India; it is good to see such zeal and love that is active in passing the message to all who have ears to hear. At the same time the Lord’s people do well to remember that the Gospel during the present, Gospel Age, is preached as a witness to all nations, to take out “the people for God’s name.” However, we rejoice that in the age to come all the millions of mankind who have ever lived shall know the Lord “from the least unto the greatest.” In the meantime it is the privilege of the Lord’s people “to do good to all as they have opportunity, but especially to the household of faith.”—B.B. Institute.]

Divine Plan and Tabernacle Charts.

Both the above charts will be available soon. These are well printed on linen and appropriate for meetings or home use. Having either of the charts in the home is a good witness to the plan of salvation and often leads to others becoming interested.

Plan charts, 60in., x 30in., are supplied at 8/6. Tabernacle charts, 30in. x 20in., at 5/- each.

Kingdom and Consolation Cards.

The circulation of Kingdom Cards continues to be a good witness work. Forty have now been returned over recent months with request for free literature. These are apart from those sent in by our brethren with additional names.

During the same period about forty enquiries have also been received from the newspaper coupons and tract distribution, so the response to the Cards has been equally as good as the other means of witnessing. All who are engaged in any form of service, for the truth should feel encouraged by the response, especially as twenty from the enquirers from all sources have sent in the second card which offers further booklets and papers. Some of these friends are now regular readers and greatly appreciate the truths of God's Word.

At this time another card is being prepared for use especially amongst the bereaved. It will be known as the 'Consolation Card' and can be posted or delivered to those in bereavement and offers appropriate literature free to all who will make the request.

The brethren are invited to have a supply of both Kingdom and Consolation Cards on hand for use as they have opportunity.

The People that know the Joyful Sound

Blessed are the people that know the joyful sound, they shall walk, O Lord, in the light of thy countenance.
Psalm 89:15

SALVATION is the joyful sound as the poet a has well expressed it, saying:.

“Salvation! O the joyful sound,
What tidings for our race;

Deliverance for the world is found Through God’s abounding grace.”

This is the Gospel as delivered by the angelic messengers—Good tidings of great joy unto all people. But also how few have heard the joyful sound. As mentally we glance over the sixteen hundred millions of the world’s population, we find that even the most extravagant claims would show that not one-fifth of the whole have ever heard these blessed tidings—the four-fifths are blinded by the god of this world, and see nothing and hear nothing of God’s grace. How we should rejoice that under divine providence we were born in lands where the light of truth sends forth at least a feeble ray, and where many are not totally deaf to “the joyful sound.”

Yet coming to civilised lands, we are surprised, almost appalled, at the gross darkness which beclouds the minds Of the people of so-called Christendom, and by the dimness of vision and dullness of hearing of the vast majority of those whose lives have fallen unto them in pleasant places. Mentally, we see nearly two-thirds of the so-called enlightened fifth of humanity bowing to the Virgin Mary.

Addressing her in prayer, and crossing themselves with reverence at the mention of her name, and generally grossly ignorant of the divine character and plan, believers in an eternity of torment for all except those of their own communions, and in long periods of purgatorial agony for the great majority of their members. Heart sick with the picture, we exclaim: “Oh that these people could hear the joyful sound!” for evidently they have at very most merely heard an indistinct strain of it, conglomerated with the jargon of Babel’s confusion and Satanic discord.

Looking expectantly to the rest of the so-called enlightened fifth of humanity known as “Protestants,” we enquire: Are these the blessed people who know the joyful sound? A hundred discordant voices answer: Yes ! But we enquire: If you have heard it, why such discord, such clashing of doctrines, such separation from each other by creed-fences ? Are not all the people who know the joyful sound one people—the one Church of the living God, whose names are written in heaven. This at once arouses doubt respecting Protestantism, and we hearken for evidences to the contrary that many, if not at least all, know “the joyful sound.” Amongst these there are found many who know more respecting the divine character than do the outside fifteen hundred millions, and yet here also we find great blindness, obscure mental vision, great deafness to the voice from heaven. Truly amongst these also the great Adversary has done a work, so that although in their midst more may be heard of “the joyful sound” than amongst other classes of the world, yet Satan has here introduced the discords so as to almost drown the heavenly music. For while to some extent Protestantism discerns God’s love and justice, the Adversary has beclouded its vision and dulled its hearing for the truth by whispering theories that are at variance with divine justice and love, and make void and meaningless the joyful sound; to some whispering that God never had either sympathy or provision for any except “the elect,” to others that God has the sympathy for all, but lacks the power and wisdom to give practical assistance to any but the few; and thus in the minds of nearly all, “the joyful sound” is reduced to a song of praise and joy from a little flock with which will mingle to all eternity the anguishing wails of the vast majority of thousands of millions.

There are a few who discern that these discords are of the Adversary, and that the joyful sound, if separated from Satanic in harmonies, is beautifully harmonious beyond any other sound or song. Full of the spirit of the song themselves, they hasten to make its beauty known to others, and to point out the origin of the discord. They feel that it will merely be necessary only to indicate this, and that others will, like themselves, be able instantly to discern and reject the discord and rejoice more fully than ever in the true Gospel. But alas! they find that even amongst the Protestant fifteenth of humanity not only is the darkness great, but the depravity of heart and mind are so dense that the discord is preferred to the joyful sound, the good tidings of great joy for all people is spurned, and considered to be the discord that is of the Adversary. Only here and there can be found any who can distinguish the joyful sound of the heavenly message from those by which Satan has “deceived all that dwell upon the earth.”—Rev. 18:23; 19:20; 20:3.

Sounding The Jubilee Trumpets.

The question may arise: Why did God permit Satan, through human agencies, to bring false doctrine amongst His people during the dark ages, to blind them to the true light and the heavenly harmonies of the divine plan?

We answer that God’s purpose during this age has been the selection of merely a little flock of overcomers to be joint heirs with His Son in the coming Millennial Kingdom, which is to bless all the families of the earth, and by permitting darkness to come upon this nominal church class He has—(1) Taught a great lesson both to angels and men concerning the necessity of not only starting right, but remaining loyal to the Lord and His Word, and maintaining a teachable attitude of heart; (2) doubtless the majority of the little flock has been selected from the two ends of this gospel age—its beginning and its closing years; (3) there may have been much more knowledge of the joyful message amongst God’s people during the dark ages than we now have means of knowing, since the history of that time had few recorders, and these dealt chiefly with the error-blinded systems and ignored or misrepresented the unpopular instrumentalities used by God in making the “joyful sound,” some of whom quite probably were denominated heretics because they knew the joyful sound of the true Gospel, and proportionately denounced the popular doctrines of devils.

At all events, under divine providence, the “joyful sound” is now heard above the din of Babel, by those who have “ears to hear,” and it is found to be the very same Gospel which was preached by our Lord and the Apostles, and announced on the plains of Bethlehem; “a joyful sound,” good tidings of joy, which shall be to all people. Moreover we are now near the early dawn of the Millennial Day, which, in the Scriptures, was typically represented to Israel by their jubilee year of release from bondage and the return to original possessions, etc. And as the priests were to announce the jubilee year in the Day of Atonement by the blowing of silver trumpets, so here we have the antitype: the royal priests in this, the close of the antitypical (the Gospel Age) are to blow the silver trumpets of truth (silver being a symbol of truth), announcing to the people that the grace of God is come nigh unto them, and that during the Millennial Day (of one thousand years) now at hand the great High Priest, also Prophet and King, shall stand forth as God’s representative,- and by virtue of His own sacrifice shall give the needed blessing of knowledge to all mankind, and shall lift up out of degradation and sin and death by His providence and grace all who seek to come back to righteousness and fellowship with the Father through Him.

So then, as it was appropriate in this type that this announcement should be made at the close of the Day of Atonement, so that indicated that it is the part of the Divine Plan that the sounding forth of the joyful sound, the message of the jubilee of divine love and favour and blessing should be given at the present time in the closing days of the Gospel Age, the closing hours of the great Atonement, and near the dawning of the Millennial Day.,

Now, another matter, little in itself, and easily overlooked in our translation of the Bible, is the fact that the very word (turnah) used in our text, rendered. “a joyful sound,” is the same Hebrew word that is used in Lev. 25:9, where the sounding of the jubilee trumpet is commanded. How strikingly the Lord has arranged His word to make it a basis for faith and joy to His people. How clear it is to those who know “the joyful sound,” and yet how obscure to all others! Well does our text say “Blessed are the people who know the joyful sound.” The blessing on them is certainly not of their own merit, for we are all conscious of the fact that in our flesh dwelleth no perfection, and that none of us could be commended to God by our own righteousness — all of these blessed people who know the joyful sound have reason to give thanks unto Him who loved them, and who bought them with His own precious blood; in whose merit alone they have standing with the Heavenly Father. And yet they have something to do with the matter of their blessing, something to do with the fact that they have heard, and hearing have discerned the joyful sound; while others hearing, have not discerned it. They have the hearing of faith; from the little they first heard, they must have cultivated honesty with themselves, a love for righteousness, a hatred of iniquity, honesty with the Lord, honesty in handling His Word, “not handling the Word deceitfully” (2 Cor. 4:2). They must have consecrated their hearts fully to the Lord, and thus come fully under the guidance of “the spirit of truth,” else they would not be able to discern better than others between the joyful sound of the truth and discordant error. Evidently in these we see fulfilled the Scripture. “He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him (to know Him, to know His will).”--Heb. 11:6.

The New Song of Moses and the Lamb.

Our Lord in symbol pointed out to us the fact that the message of His grace in the closing days of this Gospel Age would be so different from the commonly accepted message misnamed the Gospel, that it would be properly called a new song, although it would be the old song of Moses—the message of blessing typified by the writings of Moses and by all the ceremonies of the law, and the message of the Lamb, the good tidings of the birth of our Lord and throughout His own ministry, when all the people “bare him record and wondered at the gracious words that proceeded from his mouth” (not threats of eternal torture to nine-tenths of the human family), and the testimony of all the Apostles respecting the Lamb of God and the great work to be done by Him in “taking away the sin of the world.” It is merely this same song that is now being sung by those whom God has blessed with a knowledge of the truth.

It is a worldly proverb that truth is stranger than fiction,,yet this proverb is shown throughout Christendom,. today; the vast majority of professed followers of Christ are strangers to the truth, but quite familiar with the fictions of human invention, “traditions of the elders,” which make void the Word of Gad. It is in full accord with this that the angel declares to the Revelator that no man can learn to sing this song except the “elect,” the 144,000, the little flock (Rev. 14:3). It is necessary indeed to be somewhat of an overcomer before anyone could venture to sing this song, to declare before men the lengths and breadths and heights !,and depths of the goodness and graciousness of the - Divine Plan of which Jesus and His sacrifice are the centre. To all others the fear of man bringeth a snare, and stops their mouth from “speaking forth the praise of Him who calleth us out of darkness into His marvellous light.” But the people that do know their God (His character and plan) shall be valiant, and do exploits, and like the Apostles of old, will feel and say “whether it be right to obey God or man, judge ye; but we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard.” (Dan. 11:32; Act 4:19,20.

Nor need we suppose that the fact that only 144,000 can sing this song, implies that those able to sing the song could not fall from their steadfastness and become castaways, and lose the privilege of singing it. The Scriptures assure us that only by unceasing faithfulness will any be permitted to continue to be reckoned as members of that elect company foreknown and pre-arranged by God. Our Lord says that He will blot out the names of those who are unfaithful, that other names may be written in their stead. He clearly intimates that unfaithfulness will cause that the crown set apart for the faithful will, if he prove unfaithful, be given to another.

The Walk of the Blessed People.

In harmony with the foregoing is the intimation of our text, which implies that in order to be of the people who will know the joyful sound, it will be necessary to walk in the light of God’s countenance, or reversing the statement is the thought that all who walk in the light of God’s countenance shall be His blessed people, and shall know the joyful sound.

What a lesson of holiness is here, not a lesson of human perfection and self-commendation to God, but a lesson of abiding in Christ under the robe of His righteousness and of walking continuously with Him in the path of the just, which shineth more and more unto the perfect day. And whoever would walk with Jesus in the light of divine favour must needs tread the narrow way of self-control and self-sacrifice—even unto death. Whoever delights in, sin and sinful practices cannot walk in the company of Jesus, cannot be recognised as a member of His body, or under His robe. As the Apostle says, those accepted of Christ and who would maintain affiliation with Him, must remember that all of the royal priesthood are given the truth, not to make them vain and boastful or high-minded, but to purify them and to sanctify them. “He that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as he is pure.”

Clearness of Vision Necessary.

We believe that these inspired words will help all who understand them to measure up to the divine ideal which they present to our minds. “Blessed are the people who know the joyful sound, they shall walk O Lord, in the light of thy countenance.” Another line in full harmony with this from the succeeding Psalm might be added: “Let the beauty of the great King be upon us.” Only those who see this beauty can discern somewhat of His justice, mercy and love. His wisdom and power can clothe their new minds with these glorious graces which more and more shine before our anointed vision as the beauty of the Lord. And the more clearly seen the more faithfully we can copy them, and the better do we love the joyful sound, and the better can we sing the Song of Moses and the Lamb.

The Birth of Christ.

Luke 2:8-20.

“Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy ” (Luke 2:10.)

THE . HE story of our Lord's birth is one so familiar as to require no special comment, and yet in its simple details lies the hope of the whole world. Four thousand years previous the birth of this child was promised, and all the way along during those forty centuries some faithful souls continued to trust in the promises and to look for the salvation to be brought about through Him. We may surely take for granted that the humble shepherds to whom the message of the Lord's advent first came were men who thus hoped in the promise of God; for to such, and to such only, the Lord discloses His purposes.

These men were quietly tending their flocks by night when suddenly the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone around them, and they were sore afraid (verse 9). But their fear was soon overcome by the message of the angel, contained in our text, but which, strange to say, so many only partially quote, leaving out one of the grandest features of the message—viz., that it was to be to all people.

The message reads, “Fear not; for, behold I bring you good tidings of GREAT JOY, which shall be to ALL PEOPLE.” It will be observed that the blessedness of these tidings is cumulative; first, it is “good tidings,” then it is “great joy,” and then the crowning feature of it is that it is “to all people”—not only to those shepherds who were that night looking for the hope of Israel, but for all their friends and relations and all mankind far and near, both to those who now live and to those who shall live; as well as to those now in death.

Blessed tidings! Harken to the gladsome sound: “For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.” (verse 11.) Then He was to be a saviour to all people: so the Scriptures clearly affirm, saying that, by the grace of God, He tasted death for every man, and that He gave Himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time—to all. (Heb. 2:9; 1 Tim. 2:6.) The testimony, however, is quite as necessary to the salvation of the sinner as the fact that Christ gave Himself a ransom for all. The favour of salvation will not be forced upon any; but the testimony that it has been provided for every man, on condition of his acceptance of the favour upon God's terms, is to be given to every man, for his acceptance or rejection. And though millions of the race for whom Christ died have gone down to the grave without such testimony, still the fact remains that the testimony shall be given in due time—which due time, to all such, must be after their awakening from death.

And to this agree the words of the Lord: “The hour is coming in which all that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the SOD of man and shall come forth; they that have done good (who during the present life have come into judgment and who have passed their trial successfully), unto the resurrection of life, the full reward of the faithful; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of judgment.” (John 5:25-29.) That is, the latter class will come forth from the grave to have the truth testified to them then, for their acceptance or rejection; and their final judgment of worthiness or unworthiness of life will be based upon their course under trial after the truth has been testified to them—in the Millennial Age. Thus the angel of the Lord preached the good tidings of the restitution of all things to the shepherds on the plain of Bethlehem.

Verse 12. Then they were told where and how they should find this bud of promise, so that when they would see Him they might feel doubly assured that this was He.

Verses 13, 14. “Then suddenly there was with the angels a multitude of, the heavenly host praising God, saying, ‘Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.’ “ This shows how the angels of God are interested in the affairs of men, and how they sympathise with us and rejoice over our prosperity. And this reminds us of other statements, to the effect that there is joy in heaven among the angels over one sinner that repenteth (Luke 15:7); and again, that they are earnest students of the plan for human salvation; and that they are all ministering spirits sent forth to minister to them who shall be heirs of salvation. (1 Peter 1:12; Heb. 1:14). Thus we see them to be creatures of God full of loving benevolence even toward a fallen race, and esteeming it a privilege to serve the heirs of this salvation, although they know, as they studiously look into God’s plan, that some of this fallen race are by and by to be highly exalted, even above the angels who never sinned.

Thus we see their humble recognition of the right of the Creator to do what He will with His own, and their cheerful and joyful acquiescence in His perfect will, which they know to be determined by His unerring wisdom and His fathomless love.

Oh, what universal joy will prevail when the whole family of God in heaven and in earth is brought into fullest harmony under Jehovah’s Anointed !

Verses 15-18, show the teachable attitude of the shepherds: they recognised the angels and their message as from the Lord, and, their fears being allayed, their hopes revived and their faith increased, they felt that they must go at once and see this which had come to pass. And when they saw Him, they worshipped Him, recognising in Him the long-promised Messiah. And as they left they published abroad the good tidings which the angels had brought to them, and how they had actually seen Him of whom the prophets testified.

Verso 19. “But Mary (motherlike) kept all these things and pondered them in her heart,” doubtless calling to mind also the message of the angel to her. (Luke 1:28-35). Again and again we seem to hear her say, “My soul doth magnify the Lord . . . for He hath regarded the low estate of His handmaiden . . . He that is mighty, hath done to me great things and holy is His name.” (Luke 1:46-49).

Verse 20. The shepherds returned to their flocks, fully assured of the wonderful truth that the promised seed of the woman who was to bruise the serpent’s head had come. And they rejoiced and glorified God for all the things that they had heard and seen, as they were told unto them.

The Just Shall Live by Faith.

(Contributed) (Psalm 37.1-10; Hebrews 10:35-39; 11; 12:1, 2.)

NOW the just shall live by faith.” A few simple words, but they form a statement of great truth. Nothing can be drawn from the Scripture to be of any great profit, without faith. The first tottering footsteps of a Christian are taken in faith, and then with growth of knowledge and understanding there should be a corresponding growth of faith. It seems a truth worth impressing, however, that faith does not grow unless there is growth of knowledge or understanding. If one is content with the first simple faith of a Christian, and evinces no desire to go further, surely he cannot expect to understand “the deep things of God.” This seems to be the reason why many are losing faith in God: they don’t understand His Word.

To-day when making reference to “The Christian Faith,” it is generally recognised as that faith which a person shows in the shed blood of Jesus as atonement for his or her sin. Now all other faith is entirely worthless without this and yet it is not, as many seem to suppose, the only faith with which God is concerned. If time is not spent just now telling of this primary faith, that is, faith in the atoning blood of Jesus our Redeemer, it is not because there is no realisation of its vital importance, but it is assumed that the reader has already a proper knowledge of such. Let us look then at further steps in God’s loving plan that our faith may be increased.

This further faith is well defined by the writer of Hebrews in Ch. 11: verse 1. “Now faith is the substance (or basis) of things hoped for, the evidence (or conviction) of things not seen.” How well this depicts the faith of those noble characters of Old Testament days (Heb. 11), and as we read of this great cloud of witnesses and also remember how Scripture prophecy concerning Christ’s first Advent was fulfilled in such detail, should not our faith in the Scriptures as a whole be greatly increased? Should it not properly be the basis of our hope that all things written by inspiration of God will at last be fulfilled: yea indeed it becomes more, it becomes a conviction; we are convinced that all shall be fulfilled even though we could see no sign of such fulfilment.

Faith is the basis of our hope, it is our conviction. But as of old, so even to-day Heb. 4:2 is applicable; the word preached does not profit some, not being mixed with faith in them that hear it. And “without faith it is impossible to please God.”

A very puzzling fact to many is, why God should in His Word set forth righteousness in such a strict note and show that He cannot at all countenance evil and yet when they look around them they see evil flourishing and the good suffering adversity. But it is not always to be so. The problem, if we can call it such, is not new. The Psalmist of our Psalm saw it so in his day. “I have seen the wicked in great power and. spreading himself like a green bay tree.” “The wicked plotteth against the just and gnasheth upon him with his teeth.” The wicked in great power oppressing the righteous. And this same Psalmist in the next Psalm wrote of himself “Mine iniquities are gone over my head: as an heavy burden they are too heavy for me etc.” “I am troubled, I am bowed down greatly: I go mourning all the day long.” Note the contrast. The wicked in great power spreading himself like a green bay tree. The Psalmist burdened in trouble and sorrow. But the Psalmist was not covetous of the wicked one’s power or prosperity. He would not have changed places. Why? Because of this bulwark; He had faith. He had faith in what God taught him; viz., that ultimately it will be well with them that fear, or in other words, reverence the Lord, and that the day is coming when wickedness of every kind will be overthrown. And in such knowledge through faith, he says “Fret not thyself because of evil doers.” Be not envious of the workers of iniquity who bring evil devices to pass and prospereth in his way now: but rather says he “Rest in the Lord and wait patiently for him; for the Lord shall laugh at him (the evil doer) for he seeth that his day is coming.”

And should not we have even a stronger faith than the Psalmist, for we to-day are much more privileged than he. We are able to trace quite a deal of God's plan fulfilled in the first Advent of our Lord. We have the teachings of Jesus to instruct us, also the work and writings of His disciples and apostles, and all enlighten us as to the Way or manner in which all things will at last be accomplished. Truly the Word of God is a wonderful book and the deeper the study the more we are constrained to exclaim, "Who bath known the mind of the Lord or who has been His counsellor."

Some points of Scripture which are necessary to be known and understood for the perfecting of our faith, are unfortunately shunned by some professing teachers of our day; therefore, it becomes necessary to reiterate, from time to time, teachings which should long ago have been quite established. Many were hindered from recognition of the Messiah at His first Advent because they looked for a fulfilment of His coming in glory and great power, to establish his reign over the earth. True the Old Testament prophecies have much to say about this, but what was not understood, was that which was to precede His reign in Glory and power —His suffering and death, the giving of His life a ransom for many. This was foretold also but not being understood it appears that it went unheeded. So it is ever wise to, seek all the counsel of God and not a part only.

The Jews were always God's favoured people, having played a large part in fulfilment of Scripture prophecy, and they are still to play an important part. God's favour continued with them right down to the first Advent of our Lord. We note that He was concerned almost entirely with the Jews. (See Matt. 15:22-28.) This incident in Matt, 15, is also a good example of how faith was rewarded. (See also John 4:9; Matt. 10:5, 6.)

Although the fullest blessing was offered to the Jews they refused Jesus—"He came unto his own and his own received him not." When Jesus was before Pilate the Jews called out "His blood be on us and on our children," and they as a nation have surely suffered as a result. We remember also the lament of Jesus a few days prior to His crucifixion,—Matt. 23:37-39.

After the death, resurrection and ascension of our Lord, Paul and Barnabas are found preaching Jesus (Acts 13) and when, the Jews beheld the crowd they were envious, speaking against Paul contradicting and blaspheming. Then said the Apostle, "It was necessary that the Word of God should first be spoken to you (the Jews) but since you put it from you, lo, we turn to the Gentiles." Thus were the Jews rejected nationally because of unbelief. From that time God is taking out a people for His name from the Gentiles. Unto us who were considered not a people, has the message of such great salvation come; we who were aliens (strangers, foreigners) from the commonwealth of Israel.

Romans 11:25, bears out this theme further. Paul says, "Blindness in part is happened to 'Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in." So, as a nation, the Jews are in blindness but not necessarily as individuals; an individual Jew may still be accepted if he comes through Christ as Saviour.

After this is completed (the fulness of the Gentiles comes in to make up the Bride of Christ), the Scriptures teach that the Jews will again be restored to a special place in God's favour on the earth. This will be after Christ's return.

We gather this from Acts 15:14-18. "After this (after the church has been taken out), I will return and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down, and I will build again the ruins thereof and I will set it up, that the residue of men might seek after the Lord."

Then, as it were a seal upon the statement of these things the Apostle says, "Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world." Yes, indeed, His ways are past finding out. Should not our hearts overflow with thankfulness for every part made clearer? Lack of understanding only, could turn any from the Word of God. Let us daily seek grace to get understanding, that thus our faith may grow; "Let us lay, aside every weight and- the sin which doth so easily beset us and let us run with patience the race that is set. before us; looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith.” In Jesus our faith has its beginning and if we keep close to Him, seeking to know His way and the Word of God better, He will carry our faith on step by step unto perfection.

“The just shall live by (his) faith.”

Christmas Convention.

The Melbourne friends have their arrangements well advanced for the forthcoming Convention, though they would be pleased to hear from any other -friends able to be present; so that the programme can be completed without delay.

Uses of Adversity,

Selected.

“O BLESS our God, ye people, and make the voice of His praise to be heard; which holdeth our soul in life and suffereth not our feet to be moved, For Thou O God, hast proved us; Thou hast tried us as silver is tried. Thou broughtest us into the net; thou laidest affliction upon our loins. Thou hast caused men to ride over our heads; we went through fire and through water; but Thou broughtest us out into a wealthy place.”

Only the experienced child of God can say: “I know, O Lord, that Thy judgments are right, and that Thou in faithfulness hast afflicted me.” (Psa. 119:75.).

The’ Scriptures tell us of a time when there shall be no more pain. Pain shall have done its work; the permission of evil shall have taught its lesson. Even for us the suffering is not long. “The God of all grace, who hath called you unto His eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered a while, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you.” (1 Peter 5:10.) But if this light affliction, which endureth but a moment, be only instrumental in preparing us to heal poor humanity of its head-aches and body-aches of every kind, is it not worth while?

Now, though it is not within our power to make affliction no affliction, yet it is in our power to take off the edge of it by a steady view of those joys prepared for us in another state.

All the philosophising imaginable will not make hard things easy, will not make adversity pleasurable in itself.

But a proper philosophy on the subject, guided by and based upon God’s Word, will enable us to avoid despair and enables us in suffering to be calm during the trouble, and thus minimise as much as possible, and sometimes entirely counteract the deleterious effects thereof.

Trouble, without the aid of the holy spirit, means anything but benefit. “Trouble and anguish shall make him (the wicked) afraid; they shall prevail against him as a king ready to the battle.”

“Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of ?” Yes, Lord, though it be through fire and blood; by Thy grace we will. But the natural man is not able to drink the cup, and it would be futile to try. The natural man wants his rights, and cries loudly at every infringement thereof. If the trial seems of a peculiar nature or seems more intense than we can bear, let us consider whether or not we are trying to meet it in our own strength.

Yes, it is good to be afflicted, for the winds of adversity fan to greater heat and brighter flame the fire of love already kindled there. Affliction proves and tests our earnestness and burns away hypocrisy and shallow-heartedness. What a terrible mass of hypocrisy and self-seeking would have been attracted to the message of the Gospel, did not that message at the very start promise self abnegation. Therefore, “count it all joy” and “think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you.”

Wealth Untold.

Thank God, on this and every day,
We have some wealth to give away,
Not wealth of gold, or food and wine,
But wealth of sympathy divine.

Thank God for wealth of eyes and heart,
Enough to have and share a part,
The wealth of all the world is ours
If we but choose to cull the flowers!

Thank God that we have food for thought.
The food that gold has never bought!
“By bread alone man cannot live,”
Thank God that we have such to give.

Thank God our wealth is without end,
For none are poor who have a friend,
And all are rich who draw on Him,
Who fills up blessings to the brim.

Thank God that when our wealth we share,
God gives the increase everywhere,
It flows unceasing for our need.
For God is “Lord of all.” indeed!

Thank God we've wealth enough to last Until our pilgrimage is past
Enough of wealth for earth and heaven,
If only love to us is given!

A Recipe for Harmony.

When the spirit of discord or dissension, or the desire to busybody afflicts us with its soul-destroying presence, let us make a mixture after the following formula and Partake of it freely:—

Patience	.. 4 parts
Consideration 2 parts
Universal Love ..	4 parts
Silence 12 parts

Take a tablespoonful in a glass of milk of human kindness every time you feel that dissatisfied feeling coming on. More if necessary. Even excessive use can produce no injurious effects. On the contrary, large doses are exceedingly exhilarating and beneficial.

The Sufferings of the Body of Christ.

Read John 15:16-27; 16:1-4, 20, 22, 23; Phil. 1:29; Acts 9:15, 16.

IT is such Scriptures as the above, as well as many others throughout the Bible, that establish beyond doubt the fact that the members of Christ's Body, in being prepared to be joint-heirs in the glory of His heavenly Kingdom, are made partakers in the sufferings of their Head during the earthly course.

As we are all aware, the term "Christ" signifies "anointed," and as there is much said in the Scriptures about the sufferings of the anointed Head, and the anointed members of His body, is it not reasonable to conclude that these particular sufferings come as a result of receiving the greatest privilege of all times, granted only during this Gospel Age to God's selected people—the anointing of His holy spirit?

The questions may be asked, Has not God's people of previous ages suffered for their loyalty and obedience to Him, and if that is so what difference is there with those of the Church of this Gospel Age? Surely there has been much suffering and sacrifice on the part of the faithful, prior to our Lord's first advent, as well as since. This is particularly revealed by the Apostle in Hebrews, chapter 11; so much so that he holds them up as living examples to the Gospel Church—as a cloud of witnesses whom we may well copy in faithfulness and devotion even unto death.

The difference between these and Christ's members, however, is clearly defined in the Scriptures. The faithful of the ages previous to Christ's sacrifice could not participate in the sufferings of the anointed; the begetting of the holy spirit had not then begun, as our Lord was the first of the new order, the Head of the New Creation. This is a matter that we need particularly to keep in mind. By so doing it not only enables us to rightly divide the Word of God by discerning the important change of dispensations and the opening up of the high calling, but further it reveals to us the great favour of God upon those who comprise the anointed Class, beginning with the day of Pentecost and ending with the close of this Gospel Age.

There is no need to enlarge upon the difference of the rewards for faithfulness to be granted the anointed followers of Christ and the faithful of previous ages. Most of our readers are well acquainted with the truth on this matter—that all prior to the first advent of Christ had earthly promises only, whereas the Body of Christ have the exceeding great and precious promises of the heavenly inheritance.

But does not this difference in rewards promised, help us to understand a most important feature in connection with all God's created beings of all times and on all planes of existence? We believe it does. We see in the case of the Ancient Worthies, it was not the promise of high exaltation to a heavenly sphere that kept them faithful. No, there was no such promise, and yet they remained true through the most trying experiences possible. What was it, then, that enabled these martyrs to remain faithful unto death, to whom the Apostle James adds testimony: "Take, my brethren, the prophets, who have spoken in the name of the Lord, for an example of suffering affliction and of patience"? It was the very same thing that alone will enable those of the present age, who partake of the sufferings of the anointed, also to endure to the end, and that is, the love of God.

Yes, it was the love for God that enabled Job to say: "Though He slay me, yet will I trust Him." Love for Him who had given and who in His good pleasure had taken away. No thought of reward entered into the minds of those early martyrs, when it came to enduring for the Lord's sake, and this, dear friends, is the secret of success in our cases, just as much as in theirs.

The Apostle says, "The love of Christ constraineth us." Yes, right from the beginning to the close of our Christian way, it is the love of God and of Christ that constraineth us, and will enable us to finish our course successfully; so let us guard well and cherish that which the Lord has granted, has blessed to us—that love for Him, our first love, which prompted us to enter the narrow way, willingly and joyfully entering into the sufferings of our Head. Let this gracious quality of love and supreme reverence for God be forgotten, become dim or obscured from our hearts and minds to any extent, then to that degree our participation in the sufferings of Christ will take on a different aspect altogether. There cannot be a willing, loving acquiescence to the will of God with those whose hearts have lost even a measure of that love due from all who have been begotten by a gracious Father into His house of sons.

Now, how is it that particular sufferings come upon those begotten of God's holy spirit which do not come upon the household of faith generally, nor upon the world at large? Would we not expect that God's special people should be protected more than others, instead of being required to suffer in ways additional to the remainder of mankind? There is certainly a protecting care over the members in Christ not granted to others, but this does not shield them miraculously from the sufferings incidental to the fall on account of disobedience, and the Lord additionally wisely permits trials and testings upon these called out people, to test, prove and develop their loyalty to Him —determining as to whether their love for Him is of the quality that it will endure all things for His sake, and not only so, but count it a privilege so to do.

There are various kinds of sufferings in the world, if we may express it that way, all of which are permitted for some good purpose, and in considering those that come upon the anointed Body of Christ, it will not be out of place to briefly review the sufferings of others as well, as this will help us to appreciate our standing in the favour of God not enjoyed by others.

Sufferings as a whole may perhaps be grouped under four main headings—two of these relating to the world, the third applying to the household of faith, and the fourth only to the anointed in Christ Jesus.

In the first place, there are sufferings that come to every human being because of the death sentence pronounced upon our first parent. No one escapes these, though all do not share in them in exactly the same way. Some have more bodily weaknesses than others, and so have many aches and pains, while some with other inherited weaknesses suffer in different ways just as severely. The sufferings connected with the loss of near and dear ones on account of the death sentence would also come under this heading.

Now, what is the position of the Body members in Christ, in regard to sufferings of this kind? As we saw previously, they are not shielded from; these in any miraculous way; they are permitted to experience aches and pains and other inherited weaknesses incidental to the dying process, just as others, but there is this difference. Inasmuch as they have presented their bodies to God a living sacrifice, being previously justified by faith in the blood of Christ, all experiences connected with the consummation of their offering on God's altar may be viewed in a sacrificial sense; not in a direct way as the sufferings of the anointed, but in an indirect way which does not fail to bring a blessing when these sufferings are accepted from this viewpoint and taken in the spirit of patience and submission. Thus the Lord's people suffer not as those without hope, just as they sorrow not as those without hope with the passing of their brethren, earthly relatives or others of the human family from the present life. So, from this, the first aspect of sufferings, we find the Lord's people highly favoured above the world at large, realising that these general sufferings help greatly in the development of their new minds, the new character that is being formed like unto that of our Head. What the world, then, may take oft times in a grumbling manner, the members in Christ should take in a spirit of cheerful endurance, praising God for His grace and strength, which alone assists, them to endure all things, for their highest welfare.

Coming then to a second form of sufferings which also come upon all in common, we would refer to those which are the result of a measure of wilfulness—more or less as the case may be. Where the degree of wilfulness is very small there would be a close connection with the sufferings referred to in the first place as being inherited sufferings, but where the wilfulness increases, sufferings that then result are in a definite class of their own. The Apostle seemed to have such as these in mind when he said, "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap"; the result being particularly an individual matter, and in the case of wrong-doing, the reaping is of course intended to correct and show the wrong-doer that such a course of wilful transgression will not profit him or her lastingly. How often sufferings of this kind turn those in the world to bitterness—quite the reverse result as should be, and so something more severe will be needed to correct in due time. However, many others in the world learn their lessons, and so profit by the sufferings and are building up a right foundation for the times ahead.

Respecting the Lord's people we find they also are not exempt from sufferings of this kind, though with their progress in the Christian way the Lord would expect, and they should expect also, to have less and less of wilfulness in any thoughts, words or actions. The Apostle Peter exhorts: "Let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil-doer, or as a busybody in other men's matters." Any sufferings as a result of any of these things should at once prompt to repentance and seeking forgiveness at the throne of grace. As the Apostle John declares: "My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

How favorable again is our position in comparison with that of mankind as a whole—they have no advocate, but we have an Advocate with the Father; they have no throne of grace, but if we confess our sins God is faithful and just to forgive us, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. Realising, then, the gracious provision whereby we may keep our garments white, does not this provoke in us a most fervent desire that our use of the throne of grace for forgiveness of anything of a wilful nature would diminish more and more as the days go by, ever remembering that any sufferings under this heading are really blots upon our garments. Not that we should neglect to have our account cleared, so to speak, but striving that nothing should enter on the adverse side of the ledger; having the mercy seat as free as possible for praise and thanksgiving to God, and petitions for increasing blessing and filling of His spirit upon all the members in the anointed, as well as ourselves.

A third form of suffering which is not experienced by the world at all is that which comes upon the household of faith. All who by faith in the blood of Christ have reached the position of justification would participate in these sufferings for righteousness sake, and for the Word of God, if faithfully living up to their privileges. This would seem to be the form of sufferings endured also by the faithful ancients of the ages prior to this Gospel Age referred to previously, and while the members who will make up the anointed Body of Christ endure all these experiences also, it will be realised that there are some sufferings which the Church, the antitypical goat class, experience which no others do, inasmuch as it is from the household of faith that the Church is selected.

It was this fourth and highest form of sufferings that our Lord urged His disciples to endure in, just as He had set an example, and which all the Apostles so faithfully emulated in their lives of sacrifice as the foundation members of the anointed Body of Christ.

Let us note again the words of our Lord to that effect in John 15. Verse 20 reads: "Remember the word that I said unto you, The servant is not greater than his lord. If they have persecuted Me, they will also persecute you. But all these things will they do unto you for My name's sake, because they know not Him that sent Me." How clear it is that the sufferings that came upon the anointed Head, must come also upon the members of His Body, and in a very special sense upon no others.

Turning again to Phil. 1:29, we see too how the Apostle so definitely expressed the matter—"For unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ not only to believe on Him, but also to suffer for His sake." Some may be content to merely believe in Christ and may suffer to a marked extent for such belief, as members of the household of faith, but for the members of His Body, His anointed, there is a deeper and feller affiliation altogether,—they suffer for His sake in that they have fellowship in His sufferings, being made conformable unto His death—the sacrificial death. They are beheaded for the witness of Jesus; being planted together in the likeness of His death that they may also be in the likeness of His resurrection.

St. Paul expounds this matter so clearly again in Col. 1:24—"Who now rejoice in my sufferings for you and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for His body's sake, which is the church." He rejoiced in suffering for those brethren, because, they being Christ's members, he was in that way suffering for Christ, and so was participating in that which was left over of the sufferings of the Head for the anointed Body to fill up, or complete, during this Gospel Age, the antitypical Day of Atonement. It is in this way that we can understand the matter of the sin-offering. There is nothing to imply that the sufferings of Christ the Head were not completed at the time of His death; nothing more is necessary to add to that which He finished at Calvary, but God has graciously arranged that those who will constitute the members of His Body shall walk in His steps of suffering, if they are to be worthy of a place with Him in His throne. This implies participation in the most absolute sense, and which can be understood and experienced only by the fully consecrated and anointed members of His Body.

How true it is that throughout this Gospel Age great numbers of earnest men and women have suffered for their beliefs in the Word of God, who have not participated at all in the sufferings of the anointed. Many to-day are likewise giving their lives in what they believe to be a true witness for Christ, and yet the teachings given out so often do not honour the One they seek to serve, and while we are glad that all who are sincere shall have their reward in due time, yet it will be only those who enter completely into the sufferings of Christ who shall be granted a part in the first resurrection.

The question may be asked as to how we may know that we are participating in the sufferings of Christ? Surely this is an important matter, and the words of our other text in Acts 9:15, 16, concerning the Apostle Paul, may help in this respect—"The Lord said unto him, Go thy way: for he is a chosen vessel unto Me to bear My name before the Gentiles and kings and the children of Israel: For I will show him how great things he must suffer for My name's sake." While we cannot expect to be used in anything approaching the degree in which God used the faithful Apostle, yet His words, there—"I will show him how great things he must suffer for My name's sake," would seem a very definite guide to all the members who belong to the same Body as Paul. Has not the Lord shown us in the past many great things concerning His wonderful plan of salvation, and amongst these has He not clearly revealed the necessity for us to walk in the sacrificial course as set by Christ and those who formed the early Church? Surely He has; and do we not find as individual members in Christ that the Lord "shows" us, from time to time, various ways of serving Him, and amongst these may come some suffering for His name's sake. The main point is: do we act on all that the Lord "shows" us as being opportunities of service? If so, no doubt we receive much blessing at His hands, even in the hard places, but if not we cannot expect the Lord to keep on "showing" us; we must follow out the opportunities that are already ours, if we are to merit His guiding and leading in the way of sacrifice for His name's sake. No doubt Paul was a very ready pupil in the school of Christ, but he was not "shown" everything at once respecting the sufferings required of him; so with us the Lord graciously "shows" us step by step that which He would have us do and suffer as members of His Body. This of course applies to those who do not only believe on Him, but who esteem it a privilege to suffer for His sake.

And what do we mean by esteeming it a privilege to suffer for Christ? Is it a privilege? It surely is, whether we understand and appreciate it that way or not. If God had not predestinated the selection of the Body of Christ, there would of course have been no opportunity of entering into the sufferings of our Head. The faithful of the present time would have been in the same position as the Ancient Worthies, who were glad to endure all things permitted, because of their love for God and His righteousness, with no promise of high exaltation at all. Even under such terms it would have been a reasonable service for us also to suffer as they, but how reasonable or gracious is the invitation of the present time, during this Gospel Age only, when we find that the sufferings of the anointed Body are for the purpose of preparing us for heavenly glory. Who cannot see that there never has been such a privilege available, and never will be again, and that the Apostle truly had the right viewpoint when he declared that "the sufferings of the present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory to be revealed in us."

Dwelling again on the thought of the Lord "showing" us what things we are to suffer for His sake, even as with the faithful Apostle, does this not give us a sense of security, so to speak, that nothing apart from what God designs can come to us as part of the highest of all sufferings, because we are members of the anointed. Even with the experiences that may be classed in the first three forms already discussed, there is nothing that can come but what passes under the complete supervision of the Lord; so, surely, there is full protection in every way that nothing can touch us at all, but what can be turned to good account, for our own blessing and to the praise and glory of God.

This should guard us against thinking or feeling that if only the Lord would "show" us in some other way, by some different sufferings to those we may have, then we would be sure to overcome easier. Even as we covenanted to be beheaded for the Lord's sake, how we need to keep very fully in this beheaded condition, appreciating and rejoicing in the fact that the Lord condescends to "Show us what things we are to suffer for His sake." If we are not able to accept and enter into those experiences which He "shows" us with full desire and delight to do His will, then we cannot expect to be granted the great prize which will be gained by all those who do, even as our dear Lord set us an example.

Let us then endeavour to walk in the steps of our dear Master, counting not our lives dear unto us, but sacrificing in every opportunity, "about our Father's business," and then, because of our loyalty to the truth and witnessing for His cause, being counted worthy to suffer for His sake, let us take in the true spirit those things "shown" to us as being the very best for our individual cases, because supervised by our all-wise and loving Lord who knows us better than we know ourselves.

It is good, too, that we meditate upon the long-suffering of God toward us, and realise that it is not on account of our worthiness and suitability for the heavenly inheritance that He has arranged the high-calling especially for us of this Gospel Age. Truly, we might think it would have been easier for God to elevate some of the heavenly hosts to be joint-heirs with His Son. Then, coming to earthly beings, surely those old patriarchs referred to previously were as good as any called during this Gospel Age, and possibly better in many ways, and yet God passed them by and condescended to raise up from amongst the poorest and weakest of the fallen race a company who, by this very transformation, would thus manifest forth the glory of God's power to all eternity. It all depends, then, how we co-operate with God in His desire to work in us, by His holy spirit, to will and do His good pleasure of transforming us vessels unto honour, and meet for His use both now and in the ages to come—to the praise and glory of His name. Let us rejoice in the fact that to this end He "shall show us what things we must suffer for His sake."

The World is Old with Centuries.

“The world is old with centuries,
But not for these she bows her head;
Close to her heart the sorrow lies:
She holds so many dead!

Sad discords mingle in her song,
Tears fall upon her with the dew,
The whole creation groans—
How long Ere all shall be made new?

“Yet brightly on her smiles the sun,
A bounteous heaven delights to bless;
O! what shall be that fairer one,
Wherein dwells righteousness?

O happy world! O holy time!
When wrong shall die, and strife shall cease,
And all the bells of heaven chime
With melodies of peace.

“No place shall be in that new earth
For all that blights this universe;
No evil taint the, second birth
There shall be no more curse.

Ye brokenhearted, cease your moan;
The day of promise dawns for you;
For He who sits upon the throne
Says, ‘I make all things new.’

“We mourn the dead, but they shalt wake!
The lost, but they shall be restored!
O! well our human hearts might break
Without that sacred word!

Dim eyes, look up! sad hearts, rejoice!
Seeing God’s bow of promise through,
At sound of that prophetic voice:
‘I will make all things new.’”

A New Year Exhortation.

The following article, written over thirty years ago on 1 Peter 1:13-16, is commended as a very fitting exhortation for the opening of another year.

To appreciate the exhortations of the apostles, we need to become acquainted with their several characters; to note their circumstances; to mark their zeal and faithfulness; and_ to remember that every word of exhortation addressed to the church has the substantial backing of their worthy examples. They endured hardness as good soldiers, and suffered much for the privilege of declaring the truth. In their writings are blended a high degree of the power of logic, eloquence and pathos, combined with an inspiring enthusiasm which must awaken in every student of their teachings a measure, at least, of the same sacred flame.

Though written so long ago, these words of exhortation lose none of their force to us. They were penned for the instruction of the whole church, down to the end of the age. The introductory, "Wherefore," refers us to the glorious hope of our high calling, and of the necessarily severe measures required to 'fit us for our exalted inheritance, as mentioned in the preceding verse. Peter would have us appreciate what it is to be called with such a high calling—to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for those who are kept by the power of God through faith. (Verse 4.) He would have us know that, if faithful, we are to be 'made even "partakers of the divine nature," and that we are to be joint-heirs with Jesus Christ, of all things.—2 Pet. 1:4.

As the spirit of God draws our hearts into closer fellowship and sympathy with the divine mind, the value of these "exceeding great and precious promises" is more and more fully realized, until there glows in our hearts the same holy enthusiasm that so filled the hearts of the apostles. And only when our hearts are thus warmed and our minds thus awakened, are we prepared to understand the Apostle's "Wherefore," upon the inspiring comprehension of which depends our ability to heed the earnest exhortation which follows.

If our hearts are not duly inspired with this hope we have begun to esteem it lightly, or to forget it, or to think of it as an idle tale—to heed the counsel of Peter, here given, will be impossible. If, therefore, we realize that a spiritual lethargy has to any extent been creeping over us, imperceptibly benumbing our spiritual senses, so that the truth is losing its inspiring power upon us, our first duty is to betake ourselves to prayer and to communion with God and His Word, that its sanctifying power may be realized.

"Wherefore," then, you that discern the prize of your high calling, and who are endeavouring to press along the line toward the mark, "gird up the loins of your mind."—as in illustration; strengthen and fortify your purposes and efforts; renew your determinations, redouble your diligence; cast aside the weights of unnecessary worldly cares; increase your zeal; and, as the Apostle Paul also urges, run with patience the race set before you. Run, not like one who is merely beating the air, but like one who has a purpose in view, and who, in desperate earnest, is determined to make his calling and election sure.—Heb. 12:1; 1 Cor. 9:26.

Having thus "girded up the loins of your mind" for a long, steady and determined effort, he further counsels,— "Be sober:" do not allow yourself- to become excited and, under the spur of excitement, to exhaust all your spiritual vitality in a very short time, and then to suffer a relapse into coldness or discouragement; but thoughtfully to consider and prepare for a long and patient endurance of all the discipline and trial of faith and patience necessary to prove an overcomer and worthy of the blessed reward promised "to him that overcometh." The race before us is not one to be run by fits and starts, but by "patient continuance in well doing." Soberly, thoughtfully, we are to weigh and endeavour to realize the import of the exceeding great and precious promises and to gather from them their invigorating inspiration; earnestly we must apply our minds and hearts to the instruction of the inspired Word of God, availing ourselves also of such helps --of "pastors and teachers" and their literary productions—which prove harmonious with, and helpful to, the study of the Scriptures; diligently and patiently we must submit ourselves to all the transforming influence of divine grace and truth; and then, loyally and faithfully, we must devote our consecrated talents, however few or many, to the great work of preaching this gospel of the kingdom to all who will hear.

Such a sober view of the situation fortifies the mind against discouragement, and enables us, as the Apostle suggests, to "hope to the end for the grace to be brought unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ." Such a sober view keeps Reason on the throne of our minds. And Reason says, The divine call to joint-heirship with Christ clearly implies eligibility to the exalted office; the divine promise clearly insures divine grace to enable us to fulfil the conditions; the divine provision for my justification, by faith in the precious blood of Christ, releases me from the condemnation to death; and the righteousness of Christ, imputed to me by faith, fully supplements all my weaknesses, so that before God I stand approved in Him. Sober Reason also says: The directions given in the Scriptures to those who would run the race are clear and explicit, and make plain every step of the way to those who are truly and fully consecrated to the Lord. The examples of the Lord and the apostles shine on the pathway with a moral lustre and glory that cannot lead us astray. If we walk in their footprints we will assuredly reach the same goal.

Therefore in this sober view of our high calling and its privileges, and the abundant resources of divine grace, let us not be discouraged or overcome in any way, but let us hope to the end for the grace (favour) that is to be brought unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ—at His second advent. The church has enjoyed much of the divine favour all through the age of her probation and trial; but the grace to be revealed at the revelation of Jesus Christ—when He comes to reign in power and great glory—is her exaltation with Him to sit with Him in His throne. This glorious consummation, the church all through the age must steadily keep in view: but how glorious is the privilege of those of its members living in this. end of the age, when already, even before our change into His glorious likeness—in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye —we begin to enter the joys of our Lord.

Those who are still sober and faithful, and who have not cast away their confidence, have been led into the secret of the Master's presence; and they have been made to sit down to meat, and the Master Himself has come forth and served them. Yes, our hearts have been made to burn within us while He has opened up the Scriptures and made us understand, from the testimony of the law and the prophets and the apostles, that the time is fulfilled—that the end of the age is now here, and that the Lord of the harvest is present to direct and supervise the great work of reaping the fruit of precious seed long ago sown in tears, and now to be gathered with joy and singing; while He has opened up to us the treasures of divine wisdom and grace displayed in the plan of the ages, which God purposed before the foundation of the world, Which He has been gradually working out in the ages past, and which is now nearing its glorious consummation.

Oh, what feasting, what rejoicing there has been around the table of the Lord, as one after another the treasures of divine grace have been opened to us, revealing the glories of the new heavens and the new earth, and the blessedness of all the obedient- subjects of Him who sitteth on the throne to reign in righteousness; how all tears shall be wiped from off all faces, and how the-reproach of God's people is to be taken away ! Well indeed dirt Daniel prophesy, saying, "Oh, the blessedness of him that waiteth and cometh to the thousand, three hundred, thirty and five days!" the days of the Lord's second presence, when all that is written to be accomplished by His glorious reign shall begin to come to pass.

Seeing, then, that such are our privileges and hopes, "what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and god-likeness?" (2 Pet. 3:11.) Being purified by this hope, ought we not, as the Apostle exhorts, to fashion ourselves, not according to the former lusts (desires and ambitions, which we had) in our ignorance, but as He who has called us is holy, should not we also be holy in all manner of conversation—in all our words and ways? Since it is written, "Be ye holy; for I (the Lord) am holy" (1 Pet. 1:15, 16), should not we who are called to be partakers of His own nature and glory be holy also?

Some Christians have the erroneous idea that God does all the fashioning and that His children are to be merely passive in His hand; but Peter does not so express it. He exhorts us to fashion ourselves according to the divine instructions. There is a work to be done in us and about us, and those who are not up and doing, but who passively sit and wait for the Lord to work miracles on their behalf, are greatly deceived and are giving the enemy great advantage over them, which he will certainly use to bind them hand and foot and cast them into outer darkness, unless they bestir themselves to work out their salvation with fear and trembling, while God, co-operating with their earnest efforts, works in them, to will and to do His good pleasure. (Phil. 2:12, 13.) "Watch and pray," beloved, lest any of these snares of the enemy entrap you and beguile you of your reward.

How Readest Thou.

“‘Tis one thing, friend, to read the Scriptures through,
Another thing to read to learn to do;

‘Tis one thing, too, to read it with delight
And quite another thing to read aright.

“Some read it with design to learn to read,
But to the subject pay but little heed;

Some read it as their duty once a week,
But no instruction from the Scriptures seek

“Some read to bring themselves into repute,
By showing others how they can dispute;

Whilst others read because their neighbours do,
To see how long ‘twill take to read it through.

“Some read the blessed Book, they don’t know why,
It somehow happens in the way to lie;

Whilst others read it with uncommon care.
But, all to find some contradictions there.

“One reads with father’s specs upon his head,
And sees the thing just as his father did;

Another reads through Campbell or through Scott,
And think it means exactly what they thought.

“Some read to prove a preadopted creed,
Thus understand but little what they read;

And every passage of the book they bend
To make it suit that all ‘important end.

So people read, as I have often thought,
To teach the Book instead of being taught.”

For this He did once.

“Who needeth not daily, as those high priests, to offer up sacrifice, first for his own sins, and then for the people’s; for this He did once, when He offered up Himself.”--Heb. 7:27.

IN studying the Book of Hebrews it is well to keep in memory that the Apostle’s thought was not to give a detailed explanation of the types Of the Law, but merely to prove to the Jews that they should look beyond the high priests and the under-priests of the Aaronic order for a greater higher Priest of our profession (order) and a superior under-priesthood, “a royal priesthood.” In the text above quoted St. Paul is drawing attention to the fact that a repetition daily and yearly of the sacrifices of the Law on a higher plane is not to be expected, but rather that the One Priest (Christ, Head and Body) in the antitypical Atonement Day accomplishes the entire work which will usher in full forgiveness and reconciliation to all the people. This in type was done in the one Atonement Day and the antitype of that Atonement Day is not yet ended. It will close with the end of this Gospel Age. It will close when the last member of the Body of Christ shall have suffered with the Lord, “Filling up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ.” -- Col. 1:24.

The Anointed One.

The first offering of the Day of Atonement was the bullock, which typified the man Jesus. It was because of this offering and by the act of consecration that our Lord became the Anointed One—“The High Priest of our profession.” As the spirit-begotten High Priest our Lord for three and a half years offered up Himself, His manhood, in sacrifice.

He finished that offering, typified by the bullock, at His death. Then, as shown in the type, He took the blood of the bullock and proceeded into the Most Holy, “there to appear in the presence of God for us”—the “household of faith.”

Goat Follows Bullock.

In the type the typical high priest, after offering the first sacrifice and after applying its blood on behalf of the body (the under-priests) and his house (the tribe of Levi), laid his hands on the Lord’s goat and slew it and did with it as with the bullock, • except that its blood when taken into the Most Holy was differently applied—on behalf of the other eleven tribes, who represented all nations, peoples, kindreds and tongues of humanity.

Two Parts of One Sacrifice.

These two offerings and their distinctly separate sprinklings of blood were both parts of the one Atonement Day service--“This he did once.” Two . deaths are clearly shown and two blood sprinklings; and on behalf of two different classes; but they were parts of the one sin atonement. Just so our Lord, during His earthly ministry, was dying daily, yet it was one sacrifice; so also when we fill up a share of His sufferings, dying daily, it is a part of His sufferings and sacrifice, which He is still accomplishing in us once for all—this He does once and will never repeat. All sacrificing of this sort will end with this age—He will accept no further members of the Body of Christ, no additional members to “the royal priesthood.”

Fellowship of Mystery.

As we have repeatedly shown, the first Atonement Day sacrifice was our Lord’s sacrifice of His own flesh, the man Jesus, and the second sacrifice was that of His adopted members—those justified by His blood and consecrated to his service even unto death. These accepted by the Lord are sacrificed by Him as parts or members of Himself; and their blood (death) is counted in as a part of the blood of Christ—“Dead with Him.” This is the “Mystery” hidden from previous ages and generations. The “fellowship of this Mystery” was granted to the Jews and Gentiles of the “little flock” of the called and chosen and faithful.

Lord’s Hand on Antitypical Goat ‘at Pentecost.

Our Lord as the High Priest laid His hands upon the “Lord’s goat” at Pentecost. His power (hand) there came upon His followers accepting their consecration and bringing to them the trying experiences as His members which faithfully endured will, according to the Divine plan, grant them a share with Him in His Divine nature and Kingdom. It is not the suffering of the Church that counts, but the sufferings of Christ. It is because we are counted in as members of Christ, “Members in particular of the Body of Christ,” that we are permitted to be His members on the spirit plane and to share the glories and honours of our Head. “If we suffer with Him, we shall reign with Him.” “If we be dead with Him we shall live with Him.”

Sufferings of Christ Continue in His Members.

Thus the sufferings of Christ, while in the one sense of the word ended at Calvary, in another sense of the word continue in His members; this is a “mystery” to many. The sufferings of Christ are still in process and His faithful ones are still filling them up. St. Peter tells us that the prophets of old spake of the sufferings of Christ and of the glories that should follow. The sufferings of Christ Jesus were followed by His personal glorification, demonstration of which was given at Pentecost; but the glory mentioned in this text has not yet been accomplished. It awaits the completion of the sufferings, of Christ—the sufferings of the members. “For if one member suffer, all the members suffer with it.” (1 Cor. 12:26.) “When he shall appear in glory, we shall appear with Him.” We shall be glorified together, if we suffer with Him as His members.

When Millennial Kingdom Will Be Ushered In.

With the Jews there was a Day of Atonement every year, with its sacrifices repeated year by year continually.

But with Christ there is but one anti-typical Atonement Day and when its “better sacrifices” shall have been accomplished—when the great antitypical High Priest shall have finished the work of offering up Himself, including His members, thereafter there will be no more sufferings of Christ for anybody to fill up. The glory of the Millennial Kingdom will then be ushered in. The sins of the whole world will be blotted out so far as God is concerned and the High Priest of our profession will be a Priest upon His throne (Head and members) after the order of Melchisedec.

Lessons in the School of Christ.

(Convention Address.)

“Strong meat belongeth to them that are offull age even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil. Therefore leaving the first principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection.”— Heb. 5:4; 6:1.

LET us call to mind the first principles of the doctrine of Christ, which are repentance from dead works and faith toward God—that is, faith in God’s provision for our redemption from dead works and faith in the cleansing power of the blood of Christ, releasing us from the condemnation that is on the world, thus bringing us to the condition of heart whereby God can accept us as sons in His great family, being no longer castaways, but redeemed by the precious blood of Christ.

Having attained this standing before God and presented ourselves unreservedly to Him, we have been baptised into Christ, and as we progress in His school and seek to cast off all the works of sin, we have much assistance from the Word of God. That Blessed Word, it is our meditation, as the Psalmist says: “O how I love Thy law it is my meditation all the day. Thou through Thy commandments hast made me wiser than mine enemies. . . . I understand more than the ancients because I keep Thy precepts. . . . I have not departed from Thy judgments: for Thou hast taught me. How sweet are Thy Words unto my taste! . . . Through Thy precepts I get understanding: therefore I hate every false way.” (Psa. 119:97-104.)

Let us think upon the precepts of the Lord. In Matt. 22:36-40 we read that one of the Pharisees asked the Master, “Which is the great commandment in the law? Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all Thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it; Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.”

These commandments are very comprehensive; they embrace the very thoughts and intents of the heart and represent the very essence of justice to the Lord God and to our fellow man. They are elaborated also by the other commandments given at Mount Sinai. Let us consider them and the extent to which they apply to us, for they are guides to our conduct while in the school of Christ.

Exodus 20:1-17. We read verses 2 and 3, “I am the Lord thy God which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt Thou shalt have no other gods before me.” Egypt to us would represent the world in its present condition of bondage to sin under the leadership of the great adversary, Satan. We are called out of this condition to serve the Lord our God in much the same way that Israel was called out of Egypt. Thus we read in 2 Cor. 6:15-18, “And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? . . . For ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them and walk in them. . . . Wherefore come ye out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing and I will receive you. And will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty.”

Yes! As St. Paul says in Rom. 6:17, 18, “God be thanked that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine that was delivered to you. Being then made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness.” And so we are brought out of Egypt to serve the Lord our God and it is only reasonable that He should require our obedience from the heart, or that we should have no other idols in our hearts, as our Lord says in Luke 14:26, 27, 33, “If any man come to me and hate (love not less) his father and mother and wife and children and brethren and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple, and whosoever doth not bear his cross and come after Me cannot be My disciple.”

So we see there is absolutely no room in our hearts and mind for any idol, for any other service, but to serve the Lord our God as a disciple of our beloved Master.

The second commandment says we should not make for ourselves any graven image. Such things may be intended in the first place to lift our thoughts to higher things but the effect of them is to gradually deaden our spiritual senses and so we lose sight of the grandeur of our Heavenly Father’s character, and the beauty of His Word. In Col. 3:1-3 we read: “If ye then be risen with Christ seek those things which are above where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affection on things above and not on things on the earth. For ye are dead and your life is hid with Christ in God.”

The third commandment says, “Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain. . .” There is much blasphemy in the world to-day, in which the name of God and of Christ Jesus is taken in vain. We could not reverence our God and at the same time indulge in this loose conversation. James 3:10, 11, 13 says, “Out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing. My brethren these things ought not to be. Doth a fountain send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter? Who. is a wise man and endured with knowledge among you? let him show out of a good conversation his works with meekness of wisdom.” But there is also another sense in which we should not take the name of the Lord our God in vain. We are espoused to His dear Son, as St. Paul says, in 2 Cor. 11:2, “I am jealous over you with godly jealousy: for I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ.” And so while in this school of Christ let us learn to reverence His name and thus honour the Father as well as the Son.

In the fourth commandment God says, “Remember the sabbath day to keep it holy.” Many people take this to mean that we should respect the Jewish Sabbath, but to the Christian it is a rest of seven days a week from serving self; he rests from his own works as God did from His. We read in Heb. 4:1, 3, 10, 11: “Let us fear, lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it. For we which have believed do enter into rest. For he that is entered into his rest, he also hath ceased from his own works as God did from His. Let us labour therefore to enter into that rest.” The marginal reading of the ninth verse of this chapter states: “There remaineth therefore a keeping of a sabbath to the people of God”; which we see is a complete rest from our own works.

The fifth commandment is to honour thy father and mother. In Matt. 12:48-50 our Lord said, “Who is my mother? and who are my brethren?

And He stretched forth His hand toward His disciples, and said, Behold my mother and my brethren! For whosoever shall do the will of My Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother.” So we should not only respect or honour our earthly parents but those who supply life and sustenance for us in the spiritual realm.

The sixth commandment is not to kill. To kill is to cut off from life and there are many ways in which this can be done. Speaking to the elders, Peter says, 1 Peter:2, 3, “Feed the flock of God which is among you, not by constraint but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind. Neither as being lords over God’s heritage but being ensamples to the flock.” Should the flock not be fed they would starve and this would be one way of killing them. Then Jesus had some very explicit words to say about this command in Matt. 5:21, 22.

Jesus also expounds the seventh commandment in Matt. 5:27, 28. “Ye have heard it said by them of old time, Thou shalt not commit adultery: But I say unto you that whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart.” So we see the necessity of keeping our hearts and minds pure and free from sin’s alloy.

The eighth commandment is “Thou shalt not steal.” Stealing is an outcrop of selfishness and desire to appropriate to ourselves what belongs to another. Thus we see that we might be tempted to steal spiritual favours and blessings and not to pass them along to others, and this attitude would soon debar us from receiving favours from the Lord.

The ninth commandment forbids bearing false witness. It is taking a person’s good name and dragging it in the mire of gossip, thus leaving him poor indeed, while not enriching the one who does the damage. How much better is the advice of St. Paul in Eph. 4:31, 32, “Let all bitterness and wrath and anger and clamour and evil speaking be put away from you with all malice. And be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ’s sake hath forgiven you.”

The tenth commandment tells us not to covet. Jesus gives us a parable on this subject in Luke 12:15-21. “And He said unto them, Take heed, and beware of covetousness: for a man’s life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth.” Read to verse 21.

So, there are rich lessons for the New Creation to draw from the Commandments that were given to Israel. These all deal with justice in our relation to God and man. That being a very necessary element in our characters, it is the very foundation of all our dealings with one and all. Love itself can never displace justice but must be built upon it as a superstructure.

This brings us to the New Commandment that Jesus gave unto us in John 13:34, 35. "A new commandment I give unto you that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all know that ye are My disciples." This commandment goes much further than any of the ten, because if we love one another as Christ loved us we will willingly lay down our lives on their behalf; we will be used up in the service of the brethren. Whatever talents we possess they are at the disposal of the followers of the Lamb, to help them in their journey along the narrow way. Read 1 John 3.

It is most important that we learn well this lesson in the school of Christ. Therefore let us take greater heed to the directions of the Word of God that we may receive His well done at the end of our course.

He Goes Before the Sheep.

Dark is the sky! and veiled the unknown morrow!
Dark is life's way, for night is not yet o'er;
The longed-for glimpse I may not meanwhile borrow;
But this I know
He goeth on before.

Dangers are nigh! and fears my mind are shaking;
Hearts seem to dread what life may hold in store;
But I am His—He knows the way I'm taking,
More blessed still
He goeth on before.

Doubts cast their weird, unwelcome shadows o'er me,
Doubts that life's best—life's choicest things are o'er;
What but His Word can strengthen, can restore me
And this blest fact: that still,
He goeth on before.

He goes before! Be this my consolation!
He goes before! On this my heart would dwell!
He goes before! This guarantees salvation!
He goes before! And therefore all is well
He goeth on before.

"The Oriental shepherd was always ahead of his sheep. He was down in front. Any attack upon them had to take him into account. Now God is down in front. He is in the to-morrow. It is the to-morrows that fills men with dread. God is already there. All the to-morrows of our life have to pass Him—before they can get to us. Be of good cheer."

Poems of Dawn.

As mentioned in last month's issue, an edition of the above book of poems is being prepared. A start has been made with the work, and a sample of the type and setting was forwarded to all readers with January number.

The book will comprise about 200 pages, containing all the poems of the original book, and is to be well bound in stiff cloth covers of good quality with title embossed in gold. It is thought it will be appreciated in this binding, and the price for single copies, post, paid, will be 2/9 (65 cents), with reduction for three or more.

Convention News.

IT is with much gratitude and praise to the Lord that another annual Convention arranged by the Melbourne Class over the Christmas holiday period is reported at this time.

These gatherings have been appreciated for many years by the brethren able to attend, and it was freely heard amongst the recent assembly that this last Convention of four days was one of the best ever experienced. The Lord truly blessed the assemblies collectively and each member individually who sought to worship Him in spirit and in truth.

The presence of the visiting brethren once again added greatly to the encouragement received and it was a pleasure for the local friends to welcome more from distant parts than for years past. The zeal and sacrifice on the part of those coming long distances and their love and loyalty to the truth were all contributing factors in making the Convention such a profitable time.

Each day, following the opening praise and prayer and a short address, a Bible Study engaged the attention of the assembly with much benefit to all present. The passages selected for these studies were:—Psa. 23; 1 Thes. 4:13-18; Psa. 45:9-17, and Eph. (i):10-18. Space does not allow a detailed description of the thoughts from these very helpful

Scriptures, but our readers will understand what helpful lessons, encouragement and exhortation would be gained by a careful consideration of these selections from God's Word.

Psalm 23, so well known as the Shepherd Psalm, and expressive of that devotion and confidence which all the Lord's people should have in the "Great Shepherd of the sheep" as they traverse "the valley of the shadow of death" brought much blessing and encouragement to the brethren.

1 Thes. 4:13-18, brought out many important truths connected with the harvest of this age—the "present truth" concerning the first or chief resurrection which takes place over a period of time at the close of the Gospel Age. "The dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together (at the same time—during the time of the harvest, as each member finishes the earthly course) with them . . . So shall we ever be with the Lord." "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth,"—from the time of harvest, the presence of the Lord.

In Psa. 45:9-17, the plan of God for taking out the Bride of Christ was especially brought out, and the expressions used showed the beauty of character which must be developed by each one who will make up this jewel class. Other classes—the Great Company and Ancient Worthies--were also clearly seen as being represented in this passage, and it -will be through these that the Bride with our Lord and King will dispense the blessings to all generations on the restored earth. "Therefore shall the people praise thee for ever and ever."

The passage in Eph. 6:10-18, was a timely exhortation, showing how the Lord has made provision for all His people to be fully armed against all the conflicts of the Christian way, Each portion of the "armor of God" had an important lesson, and it was impressed that only as each member takes "the whole armour of God" shall he be able to "withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand."

The addresses were of a high standard; the varied topics covered so many features of Christian truth and all were very helpful. A number of the addresses will appear in this and later issues of "Peoples Paper" so the topics only are mentioned here--"Meditation," "Self-Examination," "Children of Light," "The Power of the Spirit," "Christ Lifted Up," "Songs in the Night," "Effectual and Ineffectual Prayer," "Unity of the Spirit," "Right and Wrong Ways of Service," "The Life of Stephen," "Lessons in the School of Christ," and "If God be for us."

On the morning of the third day of Convention a Baptism Service was held at which a Brother and two Sisters symbolised their consecration to the Lord. We rejoice with these clear members in the privilege of walking in the footsteps of the Master, in fulfilment of their vows of consecration. This service impressed again how solemn and yet how blessed is the narrow- way of sacrifice, made possible by faith in the death of Christ and obedience to God's call during this Gospel' Age. Psa. 116:1215.

The Fellowship Meetings, comprising Praise and Testimony and on the subject "The Joys of the Truth and our privileges in connection therewith," gave opportunity for personal testimonies. etc., and were very profitable, as also was the Question Meeting.

Messages were received from a number of Classes and individual brethren, brought by the visiting friends as well as received by post, all of which were gratefully appreciated by the assembly. The passage in Eph. 6:10-13, was chosen as a Convention message to be sent to the brethren in every place, together with warm Christian love and greetings from all gathered together in the Lord's name.

The parting hymns and Love Feast with concluding- prayer for God's blessing upon the members everywhere, brought to a close a most helpful time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

Earthly Course Finished.

THE earthly course of another of our dear friends was reached early in the new year with the passing of Sister Fry, of Legerwood, Tasmania. The following words from a Sister closely attached, expresses so fully the sentiments of all who had come to know the departed member.

"Dear Sister Fry finished her earthly course on the 2nd January. Her gentle presence will be very much missed by those who knew and loved her, and they must be many, for love begets love and she loved everybody. Kind, generous, sympathetic and humble, her face even in death bore the impress of her sweetness and leaves with us a fragrant memory. She surely has her wish, expressed some time ago, 'I do wish to see Jesus,' and so we rejoice in the midst of our keenly felt loss and look forward to a joyful reunion, through the merits of our dear Redeemer.

"When she felt some time ago that her voice was failing she remarked to a Sister that perhaps her witnessing was done however, at her burial a good witness was given through a paper written by her father, Brother Kidd, and read by an old friend of his who kindly conducted the service at the parlours and graveside. She was buried at Carr Villa Cemetery and we were surprised at the number of friends who gathered so far from her home and with such short notice.

"We are decreasing but He is increasing on the other side of the veil. 'Praise ye the Lord,' who doeth all things well. We sorrow not as those with no hope, and our sorrow will be turned into joy."

Right and Wrong Ways of Service.

(Convention Address.)

“Seek the Lord and His strength, seek His face continually.” -1 Chron. 16:11.

IN the first book of Chronicles, 16:7-36, we have recorded a psalm of praise and thanksgiving to God rendered by King David at that time, and which was so fitting for the occasion that after the rendering of it, “all the people said Amen, and praised the Lord.”

To come to some understanding of the cause of all the rejoicing in that psalm of praise, it is necessary to trace back certain happenings that had to do with the Ark of God. We find that it was constructed by Moses according to the measurements and instructions of the Lord; that it was a part of the ritual of the Law Covenant. God had given very minute instructions as to the care of the Ark, having commissioned specially the Levites to be the only ones who were to remove it from place to place. We find that so long as God’s instructions were obeyed, the Ark was designed to bring blessing upon His people, and if we follow history down we find, I think, that whilst the Ark of God was in its rightful place and fulfilling its God-decreed mission, it brought the promised blessing; but if, as happened on some occasions, it was taken by strangers, often forcibly in battle, and set up in their midst, it had the opposite result or effect, and that God’s wrath came down upon the people. On some occasions we find that such dire distress prevailed that those who had forcibly taken the Ark hastened to return it again to its rightful place.

Previous to the rendering of this psalm of praise we find that for many years the Ark of God had been absent from amongst the people of Israel. It had been captured by Philistines in battle, but it had brought such trouble and distress, the wrath of God, upon them that they hastened to get rid of it, and we read of it coming to rest in KijathJearim in the house of Abinadab, and there it lay. No attempt was made to remove it for a very long time, until David became King of Israel. One of the first things that he thought upon was restoring the Ark of God to its rightful place. So he assembled together such people as he needed, and he went forward to return the Ark of God. But we find that his attempt was frustrated, and by God Himself. He was not allowed to restore the Ark, because he went about the matter in other ways than what God had specially instructed.

We find the story recorded in 1 Chron. 13, and also 2 Sam. 6, where instead of calling for the Levites, David made a new cart, and set the Ark upon it, and put two oxen to the cart, and the two sons of Abinadab drove the cart. It came to pass as they journeyed that the oxen stumbled in the way, and one of the drivers put his hand to the Ark to steady it upon the cart. In the seventh verse of 2 Sam. 6 we read: “And the anger of the Lord was kindled against Uzzah; and God smote him there for his error; and there he died by the Ark of God.” The special instructions of the Lord had been disobeyed, and punishment followed. So fear fell upon David and upon all the people at these happenings, and they did not continue the restoration of the Ark, it remaining in the house of Obed-edom for three months.

At the end of that time David made a second attempt to restore the Ark of God, and this time he did not go about it in his own way, but studied the Lord’s will in the matter, and we find in 1 Chron. 15 recorded the second attempt to restore the Ark of God. In the second verse we read: “Then David said, None ought to carry the Ark of God but the Levites; for them hath the Lord chosen to carry the Ark of God, and to minister unto Him for ever.” And so we find he went about the work of gathering the Levites. And when he had gathered them, we read, verse 12: “And said unto them, Ye are the chief of the fathers of the Levites; sanctify yourselves, both ye and your brethren, that ye may bring up the Ark of the Lord God of Israel unto the place that I have prepared for it.” The Levites carried the Ark of God upon their shoulders, according to the commandment of Moses and the Word of God, and not upon a new cart drawn by oxen and driven by strangers. And in this, the right way, after such a long time, the Ark of God was restored amongst the people of Israel, and this called forth from King David and all the people that wonderful psalm of praise and thanksgiving.

Now, if we turn to 2 Kings 5, we read the story of a young Israelitish girl who was captured in battle and made a help to Naaman’s wife. She happened to mention to Naaman’s wife how she wished that Naaman might meet the prophet of her people, because she said that if he (lid he would surely cure him of his leprosy. So it came to Naaman’s ears eventually, and he went to find the prophet of the Lord. So he came with great pomp and show, with many chariots and servants, to the house of Elisha. But lo and behold, when he arrived, the prophet of the Lord did not even come out to interview Naaman, but sent out a messenger, telling him to go and wash seven times in the Jordan and he would be cured of leprosy. Naaman was angry. He expected a great show and a great fuss. He said, “Behold, I thought, He will surely come out to me and stand and call on the name of the Lord his God, and strike his band over the place, and recover the leper.”

Naaman thought that he should not be told to go and wash seven times in the River Jordan. He said, “Are not Aban and Pharpar finer rivers, in my own land? If it is necessary for me to wash, why not of these waters?" And he was turning away in a rage. But his servants pleaded with him and they said, "If the prophet of the Lord had asked thee to do some great thing, then thou wouldst have done it. So why not do this simple thing, and go and wash in the River Jordan?" So he listened to them at last, and went and did as he was instructed, and we know that washing the seventh time he was completely cured, and his flesh became as pure as that of a child. It was the full obedience to the instructions of the Lord that came through the prophet that brought about his healing; we know that obedience in part would have been insufficient. He could have chosen his own river, but it would have been without the healing. The full obedience to the instructions cured him.

Perhaps we might draw a lesson from these stories—we should be very careful not to be impatient of the Lord's way for us. It is very easy to follow readily where the Lord's will runs parallel with ours. But when we find the Lord's will crossing our own, it is often another matter. We must watch that we do not become angry like Naaman, or we must not, like David, forget to study out what is the Lord's will, and be wise in our own conceits and think that we can guide our life better than God. It is most important that we should be willing to say, "Thy will be done." -We must not only see that we are not openly rebelling against the Lord, but that we are not, like David, trying to do the right thing in a wrong way.

There is no question in my mind whatever of David's sincerity. He was jealous of the welfare of the people of Israel when he began to return the Ark of God to its proper place. But he made a new cart and set the Ark thereupon, and David was upset when his plans could not be carried out; we even read that he was angry. The Lord taught David his lesson, and the next time in following out the Lord's will, great blessing came upon him.

Possibly there is a further lesson too. In Psalm 33:10, one translation reads: "The Lord bringeth the counsel of the nations to nought, He maketh the devices of the people of none effect." We know that the reasonings of the nations of the world are the reasonings of man. We do not say that God has been wholly forgotten at all times by all nations, but it does seem that when men obtain positions of honour in the affairs of the nations that their thoughts are returned to the reasoning of man more and more, and even if they did have thoughts of God, it seems they grow less and less. We must not, of course, belittle the efforts of men who have given all their time and energy in an earnest attempt to better the conditions of their fellows, both nationally and individually. The majority have been sincere, but it is just that point that we might stress, that sincerity in itself is not sufficient, for man works according to his own standard, and not according to God's righteous laws. So we see that all the well-laid plans of man go aside, not because they are not sound from a business point of view; not because the men involved in them are insincere, but just because God is left out. His way, His plan, is not studied. So we find that it is not in the power of man to so order things that men would benefit in one class or section without bringing suffering and exploitation to another; and we know, too, as we can see it even now, that the forces are gathering together in the world for the day of reckoning.

"The Lord bringeth the counsel of the nations to nought" because they are so busy working things out their own way and not studying the Lord's Word in the matter. We know that before the righteous kingdom of God is set up on earth there must come the great Time of Trouble. Man's arrogance, pride and self-sufficiency, his selfishness, are all factors in bringing about that time when at last he shall have lost all confidence in his own way. He will see all his plans and devices, so well-made, come to nought. Truly, "except the Lord build the house, they labour in vain that build it." (Psa. 127:1.) Except the Lord make up the plan, the best schemes never can succeed.

We surely can take no delight in the great Time of Trouble. It may be that we wish it were not necessary, but we come to see that it is the only way in which man can be brought to understand the will of the Lord. So, we can rejoice, not in the Time of Trouble, but in those things which we can see coming afterwards and out of it. Man will be completely convinced of his inability to rule and govern in righteousness, and will turn to the Lord and study His way. Then it shall come to pass, "They shall not hurt nor destroy in all My holy mountain"; when war shall be no more, when the good tidings of great joy that began to be spoken by our Lord so long ago, will go on to completion. Then all people everywhere will sing psalms of praise and thanksgiving to God, just as did King David.

Songs in the Night.

“Yet the Lord will command His loving kindness in the day time, and in the night His song shall be with me, and prayer unto the God of my life.”—Psa. 42:8.

AS David is a type of the whole Church militant, the embodiment of the whole Psalms is expressive of the experiences of the whole Church from our Lord’s clay right down to the end. There are Psalms speaking of their joys and sorrows, their yearnings for better things, their hopes, their confidence, their trust, and their praise and thanksgiving. .

Does God give songs in the night to His people? It would seem so. Great songs are born of deep feeling. We read: “And when they had sung an hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives.” They sang an hymn; not the disciples only, but the Lord Jesus with them. Oh, the solace of that hymn; how it must have shown to them the heart of the Lord! It was His most tender and effectual way of parting with them. It was as though a mother soothed her child with singing. What a heavenly glow it would leave in their hearts that night; and in after years! What an example the Lord has set us. You and I should go forth to life’s conflicts in song.

What lovely sweet singers were John and Charles Wesley. I would’ just like to read a few lines of what John Wesley said on singing. “Above all things, sing spiritually. Sing any time. Have an eye to God in everything you sing. Aim at placing Him before yourself or any other creature. In order to do this in the strictest sense, see that your heart is not carried away with the song, but offered to God continually. So shall your singing be such as the Lord will approve of here, and reward when He cometh in the clouds of heaven.”

That lovely hymn we have been singing—“Jesus, refuge of my soul”—was written after a spiritual conflict. It was based on Galatians 2:20—“The life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave Himself for me”; and has caused much comment as to what the author meant. Of course, these hymns are getting mellow with age—it was in the ‘sixties that Charles Wesley wrote this hymn. Those who know him best think that the words should not have been changed. The verse that has caused so much comment—“While the nearer billows roll”—was written for those who are tempest-tossed with trials, the difficulties within, while others have peace and calm.

Two other great hymns, perhaps the best known in the English language, “Rock of Ages” and “Abide with me,” were written by men of sterling character—deep, spiritually-minded men. They were ministers—A. M. Toplady, “Rock of Ages,” and H. F. Lyte, “Abide with me.” Henry Lyte was quite a young curate when he endeared himself to his congregation. He had a great struggle against consumption, and it was not long before he died that he gave the world this lovely hymn, “Abide with me.” We know some of the words, especially “The darkness deepens, Lord, with me abide.” Surely this is one of the Lord’s ways of comforting His people! How much more dreary the world would be without these lovely songs, given to us by those who had the love of God in their hearts. Sometimes just a line will appeal to us, and what conviction it brings to our hearts, what a heightened picture of mind, what invigoration of hope. Have we not all found sometimes that we have great sorrows, the toils that come to us sometimes seem never to end; disappointments come so unexpectedly. Oh, if we can go forth with a song, how much more easily these things will be endured!

Music is said to be the speech of angels. It came to pass that when an evil spirit came upon Saul, David took a harp and played, soothing the mind of the king as by the psalm of an angel.

Another sweet singer was a blind lady, Fanny Crosby, who wrote “Safe in the arms of Jesus.”

“Jesus, my heart’s dear refuge,
Jesus has died for me;
Firm on the Rock of Ages
Ever my trust shall be.”

Of this hymn in particular Frances Ridley Havergal, another sweet singer, wrote:

“Sweet blind singer, over the sea,
Tuneful and jubilant, how can it be
That the songs of gladness, which float so far,
As if they fall from an evening star,

Are the notes of one who may never see Visible music of flower and tree?"

What a treasure in the earthen vessel, the love and the light! What a song in the night !

I read a little instance of how a young deaf and dumb girl had the love of Christ in her heart. She became very devoted to the Master, and when dining alone always put a chair for the unseen guest. She testified that if she had the power of speech for only five minutes, she would keep on saying she loved Him.

The other day, when we were down at the express meeting the friends, some of the deaf and dumb were there; they were speaking so rapidly on their fingers and I could not help thinking, What a song in the night? Perhaps not very long hence they may have their speech, and God's wondrous love in bringing it to them.

Many wearisome days were appointed to Job and also to the Church class of which we are members. Now, in the case of physical and mental weakness, the physician orders complete rest, perfect quietness. If this be so with the body, how much more should it apply to our spiritual life. There is quite a ministry in silence. Quietness before God-, that is when He speaks to us. could not help thinking during those two lovely addresses, "Meditation" and "SelfExamination," what a time for these.

I was reading not long ago a high. authority on Frances Ridley Havergal's little hymn, "Take my life and let it be." I told you once before how the words came to her as a rest in the Lord from intense suffering and weakness.

The night this little hymn came to her she did not sleep all night with joy, and really one cannot help thinking how the truth sanctifies. This shows that if we have nights sometimes when we cannot sleep, it may be very profitable to our spiritual life. No hymn has spread through the world like this one—"Take my life and let it be,"—and the author wrote the following words not long before she passed away: "The sense of His lovingkindness to me is simply overwhelming. Several times lately I have felt literally overwhelmed with the realisation of God's kindness to me. I say it deliberately and with thankfulness . . . Every day brings some quite new cause for thankfulness. Only to-day He has given me such a victory as I never had before in a very strong temptation. He lifted me above it in a way I never experienced yet." Oh, I think that is such a beautiful testimony; all her life she was humble to admit her faults.

How often and how much did David write of the lovingkindness of the Lord! There are two little texts which I have selected: "He leadeth beside the still waters," and "He restoreth my soul." It was given to David to know the joy of knowledge of the Lord's protection over him from his enemies. He could write: "I laid me down and slept; I awaked, and the Lord sustained me"; yet he also wrote: "When I think in the night watches." Now, the night watches give the thought of silence, the joys of fellowship and memories of our past victories.

What would we say gives our life's dearest impulse? Well, we would say the love and joys of the Truth, the light of God, but we would need perhaps something else; something to give us greater character-development—more loyalty to the Lord'. There are times when His lovingkindness has filled our hearts with the consuming assurance that His wisdom has provided for our every need; that His power has been equal to every emergency; that our names are engraven on the palms of His hands and we have the assurance of His constant protection—He being for us is mightier than all that be against us.

I was thinking of a portion in the 94th Psalm. In the American Version it reads: "When I said, My foot slippeth, thy lovingkindness, O God', held me up." In the same chapter he mentions the throne of iniquity. This poor man cried and the Lord heard him and saved him out of all his troubles. "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear -Him, and delivereth them." (Psa. 34:7.)

Do we think of His lovingkindness to us? Was that what David meant? Are not we all sure of his loving compassion? I cannot help thinking of the words of Brother Barton: "I hate my sins and failures, and I fight them every day; but from sin and all its weakness I can never get away." Oh, how wonderfully the great God of love is teaching us that we should remember and rely on Him. Not only in the night watches but you and I in the loveliness of the morning, the glory of the noontide, with quietness, comfort and peace, do we go about our tasks in that manner? Have we rested beside the still waters? Do we pass that refreshment to others as they journey along? How wonderful it is to some, who find themselves craving the things of this world, if they just find a helping hand—someone who can explain to them the deep spiritual things of God. We can give a Word to him who is weary; just a word to strengthen and cheer, a cup of cold water, or a ray of light. My prayer unto the God of Life is to be filled with the holy spirit. "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? the Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid." (Psa. 27:1.)

One of the chief characteristics of the unbelief of the Israelites was fear—fear to trust themselves and their own hopes amid the ever-changing and unlooked-for experiences of the way. They would not trust Moses, their appointed leader. You and I are in the same journey, and thus We have those same experiences, sometimes those disappointments, unexpectedly. Well, if we do not bring the reinforcements of the spirit to bear upon it we will lose our own steadfastness. Let us meet them with such promises as are given to us in God's Word: "As thy days, so shall thy strength be"; "The Lord redeemeth the soul of His servants"; "Faithful is He that calleth you, who also will do it"; "Trust also in Him, and He shall bring it to pass."

The greatest of all feelings is an utter forgetfulness of self. —Ruskin.

Cannot we, in looking at our neighbour's behaviour towards us, look at the better part of it, rather than the worse.?

IF GOD BE FOR US.

(Read Exod. 14:10-31, Rom. 8:28-30.)

“What shall we say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us?”—Rom. 8:31.

THE Scriptures provide us with many examples of God’s care and protection over His typical people. His mighty power was shown in the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt, and across the Red Sea when Pharaoh and all his hosts were destroyed.

God had been with the fathers of Israel, with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and His faithfulness was made known in all His dealings with and on behalf of the fathers, and then the time came when God would save Israel from the oppression of Egypt and bring them into the land of promise. God was for His ancient people and because He was for them, He was with them, guiding, instructing and providing for all their needs.

Moses was sent to deliver the people out of Egypt and later to give them the law of God and to instruct them in the right ways of the Lord. The majority of the people were lacking in faith and failed to please God, but Moses was the one strong man at that time. When all Israel would have cried, “Why were we brought out of Egypt?” Moses said,

“Be still and see the salvation of God.” The Psalmist describes the condition of the people under the Law Covenant—See Psalm 78:12-42. It was because of their lack of faith that they could not enter the promised land of Canaan, but must wander in the wilderness for forty years.

However, amidst all the backsliding and disobedience of Israel there were a few whose faith was pleasing to God and His favor was with them even in the midst of the sufferings which they endured for the Lord’s sake, and we can take encouragement from the examples of faith and loyalty of the prophets and faithful ones of the past. We can also take lessons from the failures of Israel. In 1 Cor. 10:11, the Apostle tells us that “All these things happened unto them for ensamples; and they were written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the ages are come.”

We of this age have greater responsibility than those of the past, because we have the advantage of the lessons to be learned from their failures. We have been favored much more than those of past ages. God has given us an understanding of the great Divine Plan of the Ages. We can see that God is for us of this Gospel Age in a sense and to a degree that was not possible to those of past ages.

In the opening chapters of his letter to the Romans, Paul shows how helpless mankind has become as a result of the fall. He shows how both Gentiles and Jews are alike guilty before God; they are all unworthy of life and not able to make themselves worthy—Rom. 3:10, 20. He then tells us what God has done in order to assist us out of our helpless state—Verses 21-20. What a blessing is this faith-righteousness—justification by faith. We could do nothing to commend ourselves to God, so “God commendeth His love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us,”—Rom. 5:8. So then, “Being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.”—Rom. 5:1, 2. Also in Eph. 2:4-8, the Apostle speaks of the great mercy and love of God toward us in Christ.

It is indeed a favour to be living during this “acceptable day”—the period of the Gospel Age—the time when God is pleased to receive the offerings of those who come to Him by faith in Christ. It is only a “little flock” that God is dealing with now. To these the Lord said, “Fear not little flock, it is your Father’s good pleasure to give you the Kingdom.”—Luke 12:32.

This class is now being drawn of God and invited to follow in the footsteps of Jesus. Our Lord said, “If any man will come after Me let him deny himself and take up his cross daily and follow Me.” The call of the Church is to share in Christ’s sufferings now, and to share His Kingdom and glory by and by. “If we be dead with Him we shall also live with Him: If we suffer, we shall also reign with Him.”-2 Tim. 2:11,12. See also Col. 1:24; Phil. 1:29.

Paul appreciated fully the great privilege of being associated with Christ in suffering now, that he might, by being faithful to the end, receive also in due time the crown of righteousness. What a grand faith the Apostle Paul exhibited at all times! He was fully persuaded that God had called him according to His foreknown purpose, and he was confident that, having accepted God’s call, all of his life’s affairs were under Divine supervision and overruling. How helpful are his words as we read them there in the eighth chapter: what assurance they seem to convey to us. There was nothing uncertain about Paul. He knew just where he stood, exactly what he was aiming for, and he knew that God was for him. He says, “And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose.” What does he mean there, “all things”? That is, we take it, all his life’s affairs, everything that had to do with Paul, was working together for good for his highest good; and so it is, friends, with us. We know that all things work together for good to them that love God. We are assured of that; all things work together for good to those who show their love by their efforts to do His will. These are the ones who are called according to His purpose--See 2 Tim.:8, 9.

This helps us to see distinctly that those with whom God is dealing during this age are not dealt with in a haphazard kind of way. No, God does not call people to-day and turn them aside tomorrow. God has called us according to a fixed purpose, which was foreknown before the world began. He purposed to have a New Creation, a class of saints on the Divine plane of life, and the Heavenly Father decided that unto Jesus Christ, his well-beloved Son, should belong the honour of being the Head of this class of sons, and the members of His body were to be selected from among the human family, to be composed of those whose consecration would be so full, so complete, as to enable them, by God’s grace, to become changed in character, transformed by the renewing of their minds, until ultimately they become conformed to the image of His Son.

In verse 30 of this 8th chapter of Romans, the Apostle shows that there are various steps in respect of the development of this New Creation class. “Moreover whom He did predestinate, them He also called; and whom He called, them He also justified; and whom He justified, them He also honoured.” The last word in the Authorised Version is “glorified,” but it should be rendered “honoured.” It should be understood to refer to the honour conferred upon all, who during this age, are brought to any knowledge of Christ—the true light. This “honour” went first to the Jews and selected “a remnant,” but when that nation proved unworthy of this honour it was turned to the Gentiles, to gather out of them a peculiar people, an holy nation, to bear the name of Christ. One might naturally expect the Apostle to begin with present conditions and trace them up to future conditions, while on the contrary, he begins at the other end and traces the result downwards. He does not begin by saying God honoured you with the Gospel of Christ and when you believed he justified you, and after that called you, and if you are faithful to your calling He will by and by exalt you. Indeed, it would not be possible to state the matter truthfully from that side, because many are honoured with the Gospel of Christ who are not justified, because they do not receive Christ and of those who do accept Christ and who are thus justified, it would not be true to say that they are all to be sanctified. Nor would it be correct to say that all who once are sanctified will reach the condition of glory, for “many are called but few are chosen ;” few “make their calling and election sure.”

The Apostle argues the matter from the only proper standpoint. Having said that God has foreknown the election of the Church, he steps forward to the time when God’s intention will be completed and accomplished, the time when the election will be finished and the Church accepted to glory. From that future standpoint he indicates the steps which led up to it, saying, all those of the foreknown ones, glorified, will previously have been called. “No man taketh this honour to himself, but he that is called of God” — As “the Head of the Body,” so with each member of the body. And, says the Apostle, every one thus “called” will previously have been “justified,” because God calls no unreconciled sinners to this high position. It was for this reason that Christ died, that through faith in His blood believers might be “justified” and thus prepared to be “called” Thus it is evident that the high calling to this glorious position of joint-heirship with Christ is a very different thing, indeed, from the calling of sinners to repentance. Sinners are called to repentance anywhere and everywhere, and when they repent the Lord in due time points them to “the Lamb of God who taketh away the sins of the world.” When ‘they have exercised faith in the Redeemer, they reach the condition of justification, and are ready to be “called” to sonship.

But the Apostle is still going backward in the argument and, having told that the foreordained class would all be “called,” and that they would all previously have been “justified,” he declares that the justified ones would all previously have been favoured or “honoured,” not glorified, but honoured or favoured with a knowledge of the Truth, a knowledge of the Gospel.

Perhaps we as Christians do not always fully appreciate the extent to which we have been honoured in having the light of truth brought to us at this time, when there is so much of darkness and ignorance of the true God everywhere. Comparatively few of earth's millions have really seen the true light-2 Cor. 4:4. We see then, that God has been "for us," or favourable to us, in bringing us into contact with the light and truth of the Gospel and helping us to appreciate it.

Protestant church ministers

THE expressions of protestant church ministers regarding the death of Pope Pius XI. seem significant and in line with the spirit of this Laodicean period of church history, as foretold in Rev. 3:15, 16. It is a spirit of indifference regarding doctrine or practice—"neither hot nor cold," lukewarm—willing to compromise truth and principle so long as they can be comfortable, "rich and increased in goods, lacking nothing"—Just let us overlook all the zeal for truth and godliness which our fathers showed and for which so many nobly died.

The remarks of Church of England dignitaries would indicate that they no longer, recognise in the Roman Church, as did the fathers of the Reformation, "the great antichrist," "the man of sin," "the abomination that maketh desolate," the great system of deception and wickedness which so polluted the teachings of Christ and the Apostles, and which kept the people over which she ruled in ignorance and oppression and tortured and killed thousands who opposed her pernicious doctrines and practices and dared to preach the gospel of Christ. The Roman Church is the same today, she boasts that she changes not; she would do the same things again if she had the power.

The Archbishop of Melbourne, Archbishop Head, is reported to have said:—

"Although we differ from Roman Catholics, as Christian men and women we are conscious of the great part his Holiness played in the very difficult times since the war, and I am sure we ought to thank God for the work he did under very difficult conditions, especially in Central Europe, where he had to fight the battle of the Christian faith." No doubt the late Pope was a better man than many of his predecessors, some of whom were notoriously wicked, but his policy was entirely directed for the prosperity of the great anti-christian system of which he was "head'."

If in fighting the battle for Roman Catholicism some good incidentally came to some protestants, such was not his object; it would be something undesired by him. Archbishop Head seems to see good that Pius XI. has done since the Great War, but has he forgotten the part that the Pope took in supporting the rebellion in Spain, against a duly elected constitution government, thus participating in the cruel slaughter of men, women and children by the thousands. Then, too, did he not give his blessing to the troops and their weapons as they went to slaughter the Abyssinians and to seize their land, and this in defiance of the League of Nations..

It would seem that many Church of England clergy might feel more at home and do less damage to the cause of true Christianity and protestantism and of liberty of conscience if they would leave the junction station and take the train for Rome.. The Lord spoke of blind leaders and what the result would be (Matt. 15:14), and His admonition to His true people to leave. both the mother and daughter systems is just as applicable to-day as at any previous period of the Gospel Age, and as necessary to be obeyed by all worthy of the name, "My people."—Rev. 18:4, etc.

The Power of the Spirit.

(Convention Address) (Read 1 Pet. 1:3-5)

THESE words of the Apostle Peter reveal to us a wonderful hope indeed, and the Gospel Age is the only acceptable time for any to become participators in it and eventually be joint-heirs with Christ our Redeemer. It is not held out for the world in general to obtain, but only for a “little flock,” who are kept by the power of God, and to whom it is the Father’s good pleasure to give the heavenly kingdom.

There are different influences or powers at work in the world to-day and many tend to draw away rather than lead nearer to the prize of the high calling. The desire for wealth, pleasure or fame are influences swaying different ones, but the Christian seeking the heavenly kingdom should not be drawn away by any of these. He has given up all to follow Christ and having been begotten of the spirit has come under the power of the spirit of God.

Some rather mysterious beliefs about the holy spirit are held by many, the idea being that it is one of three persons in the godhead—the trinity. They say this is a mystery that cannot be explained and no wonder, for it neither appeals to reason nor has any Scriptural support. The Lord’s Word assures us that the holy spirit or spirit of God is simply the power or influence of God exercised in any manner, and that it is always along the lines of justice and love. In the Christian it is a power from God in harmony with His Word, keeping and strengthening him in the way of life.

We might liken the holy spirit to the sun’s rays. The sun would represent God, and while we cannot see its rays, nevertheless we feel their influence. Without the sun there would be no life on the earth. Its influence is also purifying and health giving to animal and plant life. So with the holy spirit, though unseen we feel its holy influence upon us and without which we cannot have any life as new creatures. The holy spirit sheds its light about us and reveals things in God’s Word that are hid to most people. As Christians we dwell in the light of the spirit; its healing rays give the health and comfort which flow from the great source, hence we are able to walk in the light.

We cannot expect to have the full measure of the spirit as this was given only to Christ. (John 3:34) However, there are two important ways of obtaining a greater measure of the indwelling spirit of God—by diligent study of God’s Word and prayer. In studying the Word we should seek to know the truth fully, that we may be sanctified thereby (John 17:17), and as this progresses we are brought more and more under the spirit’s influence, because in His Word, God is fully manifest—His love, wisdom, justice and power. To be profited by the truth we must be thoroughly emptied of self, and having a very tender conscience may hear “each whisper of His \\\lord,” and having heard, “to obey Him first of all.” But while it may be easy to hear the Word of God, it is not so easy to keep it, and this is where the second matter of importance comes in—prayer. This is a privilege of which we should never refrain from taking advantage.

By this we are able to grow strong in the Lord and to subdue and overcome the many deceptive influences of Satan, as well as the daily weaknesses and shortcomings that so often mar the peace and joy of real fellowship with Christ. See Luke 11:10, 13.

In 1 John 4:12, 13, we read that the spirit of God is love. If God so loved us even while we were enemies of Christ through wicked works, how much should we show the spirit of love and forgiveness to our brethren who are not our enemies, but who profess, and indeed are doing their best, to walk the same narrow way.

Then the Apostle says, “Walk in the spirit and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh.” Gal. 5:16. The Greek word here from which ‘walk’ is translated, refers to the way we live, our deportment or manner of living. How easy it is to let ourselves drift and to become careless as regards our daily walk. Not only do we need to keep a constant watch over all our utterances but our actions also need to be kept strictly in line with the spirit of God.—Acts 24:16.

The Apostle Paul is one of those noble examples whom we may well endeavour to copy, for no doubt there was a rich indwelling of the spirit of Christ in his heart. When he was confident that anything was in accord with the Lord’s will, there was nothing on earth that could withhold him from the accomplishment of that purpose. See Acts 21:10, 14.

In Christ our Lord we have the perfect pattern, the one of whom it was said, “Full of grace and truth.” And yet He said Himself that it was only by the spirit’s indwelling that He was able to do so great works. John 14:10. The power of God was manifest in His righteous life and it kept Him in all the varied and trying experiences of His three and a half years of ministry on earth. Oft-times He was tempted severely but He always had that sufficiency of the Father’s spirit to enable Him to come off victor. Greater is the Father and His guardian angels than Satan and his angels.

In John 14:23, our Lord sets forth the only means by which we can expect to have a fuller measure of the spirit in our lives. This text, in short, means the keeping of all His commandments, of which love is the basis. If there is not this love for Christ and His ways, but on the contrary a chief love for pleasure, or business, or family, or wife, or husband, or anything but the heavenly things, then we cannot expect that Christ and the Father will make their abode with us. See Luke 11:34. Again our Lord said, "The Father Himself loveth you, because ye have loved me." Yes, those who love Christ are special objects of our Father's love. In these the Father and Son take up their residence, as their dwelling place, as stated by Paul —1 Cor. 19.

There are certain things which tend to hinder the spirit's power in our lives, and one of these is 'discouragement. It is one of the Adversary's weapons liable to beset the person of humble mind. A failing to live up to what is desired sometimes causes one to become discouraged, and if the mind is allowed to dwell on this and worry over it, despondency and a loss of courage and confidence will result. While we need to be repentant when we grieve the holy spirit—the new mind in us—we need to remember that we have an Advocate with the Father who will cover all our unwilling blemishes and make up that which is lacking in our sacrifice. This wrong spirit of discouragement needs to be fought with great energy, for "God hath not given us the spirit of fear, but of power and of love and of a sound mind."

The Apostle Paul was a great example in many ways; in all the varied and trying experiences that came upon him he never lost confidence, but kept a steadfast faith in God and His promises-2 Tim. 1:12; 4:8. It was Paul's faith that kept him and we need faith also, the faith that will take Him at His Word. His promises are all sure and nothing can prevent them from having fulfilment in us if we just exercise our faith and remember that what He has promised He is also able to perform. And then faith is a basis of things hoped for, a conviction of things unseen. May it be then, that our faith will convince us of the great power of our Father, who is able to keep us from falling, for to Him belongs all power and majesty in heaven and earth.

The Life of Stephen.

(Convention Address)

THE words of our Lord and the Apostle in Rev. 2:10, and 2 Tim. 3:12, seem specially applicable to Stephen, as he was one of the 'early Christians who was literally stoned to death on account of his loyalty to His Master and the truth. What we know of Stephen is recorded in Acts 6 and 7, which consists mainly of a discourse of defence given by him when brought before the Jewish council charged with blasphemy. It has been said that his words read more like the language of the Apostle Paul than that of any other New Testament writer, and we can trace through his statement a character worthy of being copied by all who are endeavouring to follow in the footsteps of the Master.

We first read of Stephen when he was chosen as a deacon along with six others to relieve the Apostles from the service of temporal things; he was a man full of faith and the holy spirit, an eloquent speaker and very zealous in proclaiming the truth—Acts 6:8.

The Church at this time was in its infancy and was rapidly increasing. This caused much opposition and hatred from a class of scribes and rulers who were endeavouring to uphold their traditions, and they wrongly accused Stephen of blasphemy. See Acts 1:12-14. After the false witnesses had given evidence He had the opportunity of defending himself in this very dangerous position which no doubt he realised to the full—set before a council of excited and angry people who were determined to take his life at any cost. Yet the record says, "All that sat in the council looking steadfastly on him, saw his face as it had been the face of an angel." What a testimony this is of Stephen's faith and confidence in God; well did he know that the Lord was on his side and had confidence in His words—Luke 21:15.

Stephen's discourse was based on Jesus and the resurrection. Beginning with Abraham he traced the history of Israel down to his own day, showing the Lord's leadings with them and making particular reference to Moses—Acts 7:37. He was drawing attention to the fact that just as Moses had at first been rejected by Israel, so the one "like unto Moses"—Jesus—had been rejected by them. Nevertheless, as Moses afterwards became the leader and deliverer of the people, so also Jesus in due time would be the greater Deliverer. Continuing, he showed that God at first established the tabernacle in the wilderness and then the temple at Jerusalem, and further that God has now provided that a still higher temple should take the place of the building made with hands. As it was not blasphemy to accept the temple of Solomon instead of the tabernacle of Moses, so neither should it be so considered to accept the higher spiritual temple of which Jesus is the Head, in place of the earthly temple. His words were so logical and convincing that his accusers could not resist the wisdom and spirit by which he spoke.

The words of chapter 7:51-53 were evidently the outcome of interruption by his hearers, and given as a rebuke, indicating that they were responsible for the death of Jesus, and which made them more angry. They could see that he was innocent of the accusations, yet were determined to kill Him. We realise that Stephen's face was still aglow with joy and peace of mind in the privilege of the last opportunity of proclaiming his faith in the resurrected Jesus and seeing the angry faces of his accusers caused him to cast his eyes heavenwards—verses 55, 56. This vision was no doubt given to strengthen his faith for his death just at hand. The explanation of it gave his accusers the opportunity they were waiting for, as they evilly construed it to be additional blasphemy—verses 57-60. Thus we have recorded the death of the first Christian martyr—"They stoned Stephen . . . and he kneeled down and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge; and he fell asleep."

The events leading up to Stephen's death were very similar to those preceding the death of his Master. Our Lord was falsely accused of blasphemy against God and the temple and brought before the Jewish council and condemned. Stephen no doubt had all this in mind throughout his own trial; he had consecrated to follow in his Master's footsteps even unto death, and had the faith and courage to fulfil his vow. What an example he is to all who have entered into the same covenant; we should also be faithful unto death by whatever means our Father may permit. It has been said of the life of Stephen, "The lesson for us all is faith, courage, zeal, a loyal heart, a shining face, love and prayers 'for our enemies—to see that none render evil in return for evil.'"

Let us all be copies of Stephen and do good unto all in the face of the greatest opposition. We may not be persecuted as was Stephen and other early Christians, but we all need to develop the same traits of character as manifest in them. The following quotation seems to sum up Stephen's life: "The beneficent influences of the Gospel of Christ since Stephen's day so permeated the civilised world, and so affected it, that the followers of Christ are not at present in danger of being stoned to death for preaching the Gospel. Nevertheless, the Apostle's words still hold good-2 Tim. 3:12. It is still necessary to suffer with Christ if we would be glorified with Him and share with Him in the coming Kingdom. But the persecutions of today are more refined than in any previous period. The faithful today are not stoned with literal stones, or shot with literal arrows, or literally beheaded, but it is still true that the wicked shoot out arrows at the righteous, even bitter words, and many because of faithfulness are reprov'd and slandered and cut off from fellowship—beheaded for the testimony of Jesus—Rev. 20:4. Let all such emulate Stephen, the first Christian martyr. Let their testimony be given with radiant faces like his. Let their eyes of faith perceive Jesus at the right hand of God', as their Advocate and Deliverer. Let their words be with moderation as was Stephen's, and let it be true of them as written of him, "full of grace and power" and "filled with the holy spirit."

Self-Examination.

-Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves."-2 Cor. 13:5.

THE Apostle's words to the church at Corinth contain very sound advice for Christians at all times. How beneficial it is to be continually examining ourselves — as to where we stand and how we are standing. While thus occupied we will be saved from much examination of others, which is not so profitable. It is impossible to know ourselves by looking at the present; none of us really knows the strength of his will until he is put to the test, so it is well that no one becomes too sure of his standing.

Some people are so minded in their judgment that they cannot see anything wrong with themselves, while others cannot see anything commendable in themselves. There is a difference between heart searching and life searching. If any one would judge correctly of his acceptableness with God by his perfection in thought, word or deed he would certainly have to condemn himself, but it is possible to come up to a standard of perfection as regards his will and intention. The Christian only grows godlike as he learns to look away from himself to the Lord.

In regard to self-confidence let us consider the Apostle Peter. He was the first to acknowledge the Master as the Son of God; and he was the first to deny Him. He was the only one who drew his sword in the Master's defence, and the only one who later swore that he never knew Him. By divine arrangement he was given the keys with which to open the door to the high calling—first at Pentecost for the Jews, and later for the Gentiles, which showed that the middle wall previously separating Jew and Gentile had been broken down. Yet, subsequently, he dissembled to the extent of ignoring God's grace to the Gentiles. In all these experiences St. Peter displayed the fact that his heart was loyal to God and righteousness, and that the faults and weaknesses of his character were of his flesh and not of his real heart intention.

The same 'exhibition of human nature makes David attractive. He was not so saintly that he could not make a mistake; he was not so far above general humanity that they could not realise in him a fellow creature. His weaknesses were fully offset by the evidence of his heart loyalty to God. David's very experiences in stumbling and recovery have so saturated his Psalms that they touch a responsive chord in every heart which is loyal to God, and has had experience with sin—his own, and that of others.

One of the great lessons the Master impressed was that of being "wise as serpents and harmless as doves." This wisdom is not of the selfish kind which looks out for its own interests, merely, but that which is generous, looking out for the interests of all and the Lord's cause generally. All need to be continually on guard to "keep their hearts with all diligence" and examine themselves by past records of those who have gone before and left us examples and footprints on the sands of time.

There was much that the Master could not tell His disciples while He was on earth, because they could not bear it, but what a change the cross of Christ wrought in them when their eyes were opened. The sufferings of Christ for us should also lead us to self-examination. Let us look for every trace of malice, or guile, hypocrisies and envyings. Let us see if there be any evil speaking in us, or the desire for the same, and let us do this with openness, seeking the truth with honesty of purpose. Let us see if Christ dwells within us and whether we love the brethren; this is our great test to-day. —1 John 4:7, 8.

The experiences 'of this life are needful that the joint-heirs with Christ may be: helpful for the uplifting work in the next age. The sufferings of the Master can be explained only from the standpoint that they were for others; He suffered as the Good Shepherd, giving His life for the sheep. The Apostle Paul says, "Christ died for us," and Peter declares, "Christ suffered for us," and as this great truth became clear to these apostles they were lost to all material considerations, and opened their hearts to the ministry of the holy spirit. It was by suffering that they perfected characters pleasing to God, and all the Body members must be made perfect by the same means—filling up the sufferings of Christ which are behind.

It is our Lord's atoning sacrifice that makes all our progress possible. It is the sure ground upon which is based our peace, our confidence, our joy. By His sufferings He has left us an example that we should follow in His steps; but do we realise fully what that means? The Master's chief source of strength was His nearness to the Father—"The Father and' I are one." This, then, is our guide as to how we should follow Him; filled with the spirit of God', emptied of self, the fruits will manifest themselves in our lives in an ever increasing measure, thus verifying the promise of God,"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace., whose mind is stayed on thee."

In those who have understood the words, "take up thy cross and follow Me," we find the greatest transformation of life and character, and as we see them going on before us unfolding still more the beauties of the new life, we pause as the conviction comes to us that God has also given ear unto our voice, that our prayers have ascended before Him, and we ask with the Psalmist—"Set a watch O Lord, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips. Incline not my heart to any evil thing."

In our self-examinations let us make an introspection regarding patient endurance. The Master spoke much concerning patient endurance toward such who persecute the Church. "In your patience possess ye your souls," is His advice to those who suffer by following His steps, for by so doing they are building character that will prove them over-comers. Faith in the power of God produces in the humble of heart a poise which indicates a victory over the forces of evil, a confidence in the promises, which, like love, casteth out fear.

Much of the suffering which comes to the Christian could be avoided if he learns to cast all his cares or anxieties upon the Lord in a whole-hearted way. He suffers from doubts which darken his spiritual horizon and from fears as to his ability to stand the storms of temptation and trial. He is disturbed as to the proper solution of the problems confronting him in his daily life; the seeming trifles multiply at times so greatly that they threaten to become overwhelming. But whatever may be the cause of our sufferings, we can find comfort and peace as the Master found it—by full trust and communion with the Father; "dwelling in the secret place of the Most High."

Let us proceed to make an audit of present assets and balancing of past accounts. Let us scrutinize the privileges and mercies enjoyed during the past, and the use we made of them and the blessings derived. May we note carefully which features of our daily course have been most helpful to us and which have to any 'extent retarded our spiritual progress, hindered our fellowship with the Lord or prevented our running with patience the race set before us. Each should consider also not merely how much time he has spent in talking about the Lord, but also how much time he has spent in listening to the Lord's voice, in searching the Scriptures, in seeking to know' the divine mind and plan as it pertains to himself. Consider whether or not you have been faithful in serving the Body of Christ to the best of your ability. It is the Lord's provision that he who watereth shall be watered himself.

In our reckonings, let us take good advice from the Apostles; let us note how they counted things — which were set down to the profit account and which to the loss account. The Apostle Paul says—"Neither count I my (earthly) life dear (precious, valuable) unto me." In another place he says, "I count all things (earthly) but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord, for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but refuse that T may win Christ and be found in Him." The Apostle James gives further advice on how to count, saying—"Count it all joy, when you fall into divers temptations, knowing that the trial of your faith worketh patience." (James 1 2). What do these temptations bring us? What value are they to us? One value is the lesson of forbearance; they prove to us that we are still in the schooling time, that we may demonstrate our loyalty to the Lord and our worthiness through His merit to share in His kingdom . The Apostle Paul summed up his account by saying, "I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us." In our counting up over past times, let us similarly reckon the things which we have suffered whether they be few or many, small or great; and let us rejoice and endeavour for the future to be more faithful in all these respects, that it may be our high privilege of suffering something further for the name of Christ and His cause.

How much we may thank the Lord that by His grace we are still what we are, and still have the opportunity of persevering -and running with renewed zeal. and patience the race set before us, even though our words and deeds come far short of the glory of God and of our own ideals, desires and efforts. I-Tow consoling it is to know that our imperfect work shall be acceptable through Christ to God; that the Lord counts us according to our intentions.

The Apostle rejoiced that he was counted worthy of a place in the ministry; may we similarly rejoice and let us remember that the word "ministry" signifies service, and the word "minister" signifies servant. The Lord has put us into the ministry and there is a service of kindness and love toward Him in honouring His name and declaring His righteousness unto tile brethren that they may appreciate more the lengths and breadths and heights and depths of the Lord's character. This is indeed a great privilege and if neglected to any extent brings corresponding loss in spiritual progress and character.

In 2 Thes. 1:5 we read, "That ye may be counted worthy of the Kingdom, for which ye also suffer." This is more of our Lord's counting, as no human being, of himself, is worthy of the kingdom, but the Lord purposes to count His faithful ones worthy. We are not to seek suffering by doing foolish things. Our Lord and the Apostles did not set such an example, so may we use the spirit of a sound mind and wait upon the Lord for His guidance at .all times.

In the wood-working trade there are different processes through which the material goes to bring it up to a proper finish. There are several stages of planning and sandpapering before the polishing process, all of which entails much care and patience. So with the Christian's development; he may be somewhat rough in the early stages, but if he keeps on examining his workmanship he will endeavour to put on a better finish, so that the finer processes can be accomplished, resulting in a lovely smoothness and beautiful gloss. All this is brought about through much patience and perseverance on the part of each workman.

In examining ourselves we need to get right down to bedrock —to consider well our thinking-. It is because the power of thought is recognised to such a considerable extent that it is appealed to on every hand, The difficulty- is that so many will not use a logical and discerning mind, but the Lord has protected His people along this line by providing us in His Word with the proper basis for reasoning on all subjects involving our duty to OUR Creator and fellow creatures: Wherever the Bible has gone it has been the torch which has led civilisation, but few walk close to its light and within its prescribed limitations of reason and conduct, and these few are the true Christians, "the first fruits unto God of His creatures."

Some are inclined to believe that since the brains of men differ to some extent, therefore their thinking, must necessarily be different—that a man can only think in harmony with his brain construction. But not so, as each may learn to weigh and balance his own thoughts, to curb some and encourage others. But to do this, each must have before him an ideal of character to copy. It is necessary to strive to control thoughts in the same manner as words and actions. The will is at the helm, and must decide which thoughts and sentiments it will entertain and encourage and which it will repel. It is necessary, therefore, for the will to be • rightly directed first of all, and secondly to be strong and to use its power in the control of thought. The will thus given to God seeks to know the divine will, to catch the divine thought and to obey it, and in proportion as this condition of the new mind is attained, in that same proportion will there begin to be a newness of life in every respect. May we therefore examine ourselves continually, and strive to bring our every thought into harmony with the divine will, that we may do everything to the honor and glory of God.

The Sacrifice of the Christ

AT JORDAN our Lord made a consecration of Himself, even unto death. That is to say, He was baptised, immersed. He said, "Henceforth, I shall have no will of My own. Whatever is Thy will, Father, shall be My will. I shall do anything that thou wilt have Me do; not merely those things required in obedience to the Divine Law—failure to do which would be sin—but all the things written in the Book. I have given up My life. Direct Me through Thy providences and through Thy words that I may see Thy will and do it." This was not a giving away of life in the sense of giving it to the world; for He was giving Himself to God. When He made His consecration unto God, He was prepared to face even death itself and to give up His existence if such should be the Father's will.—Psa. 40:7, 8 ; Heb. 10:7.

Following His consecration He began His ministry. As He advanced in the service of fulfilling the Father's will,

He submitted Himself to everything that was written in the Book. The language of His heart was, "Lo, I come (in the volume of the Book it is written of Me), to do Thy will, O God" (Heb. 10:7), and in His submission of Himself He gave out His power, strength, to such an extent that it is stated that great multitudes of people out of all Palestine and beyond, "came to hear Him and to be healed of their diseases; and they that were vexed with unclean spirits; and they were healed. And the whole multitude sought to touch Him; for there went virtue (vitality) out of Him and healed them all." (Luke 0:17-19.) He kept back nothing for the purpose of recuperating His vigor, but was daily yielding His life in obedience to what He understood to be the Father's will; He was, therefore, doing the things pleasing to God—everything that God wished to have Him do, as well as the things written in the Law.

"It is Finished!"

When on the cross our Lord cried, "It is finished!" He had "poured out His soul unto death"; He had "made His soul an offering for sin" (John 19:30; Isa. 53:12, 10); He had permitted His life to be taken from Him in obedience to the Father's arrangement. These things had all been prefigured in the type. On such a day and in such a month the passover lamb must be slain. Our Lord recognised everything particularised in the Law—whether by direct command or in type—as God's will. He declared that men did not take His life from Him, in the sense of doing something that He was unwilling to have them do. He had truly said, "I delight to do thy will, O My God; Thy Law is within (in the midst of) My heart" (Psa. 40:8), and He permitted them to put Him to death, because He was submitting to God's will.

Our Lord realised that His life was taken away fraudulently. He did not resist, but allowed this to be done. He had agreed that He would not resist, that He would do whatever the Father sent Him to do. After He had once made a consecration could He have withdrawn? No; for He had covenanted to submit to whatever Divine providence might indicate to be the Father's will. He had entered into a positive contract under which He had obligated Himself to be faithful to God's will, and God had bound Himself that He would give our Lord the exceeding great reward of exaltation to the divine nature because of that faithful obedience. God had given Him the holy spirit as a bond of that contract.

Human Life-rights belong to our Lord.

There is a wide difference between making an exchange and bestowing a reward. To exchange is to part with something in return for something else regarded as an equivalent. To reward is to give something in acknowledgment of merit. This word conveys no idea of obligation. Whoever gives a reward, acts altogether of his own free will.

The arrangement made between the Father and our Lord did not, therefore, involve our Lord's right to earthly life; for the Father did not contract to give Him life on the highest plane of existence in exchange for His life as a human being. Had this been the case our Lord would have had nothing to give to any of the human race — either to the Church or to the world of mankind. . .

On the contrary, the Father was to reward 'our Lord by exalting Him far above angels, principalities and powers as an acknowledgment of the Son's obedience even unto death. The earthly life-rights are still our Lord's. The fact that He is to give human life to mankind is evidence that He has the right to that earthly life.

We do not understand that our Lord Jesus agreed with the Father merely to lay down His life. So great was His love for and His confidence in Jehovah, that He was eager to carry out the Father's plan for the blessing of mankind, whatever the cost might be to Himself. The Scriptures set forth His position at consecration, in the words, "Lo, I come to do thy will, O God." How much of God's will did this assertion involve? "In the volume (the roll) of the Book it is written of Me, 'I come prepared to do everything that is written in the Book.' " "Not only had He come with God's Law written in His heart, but He- had offered to do everything written in the scroll of the Book.

How could Jesus know what was written in the Book? There is every reason to believe that He did not, at the time of His consecration, know all that was therein written. The things written in the Book, written in the types and shadows of the Old Testament, were understood by none of the Jew.; Many of them, doubtless, our Lord did not fully understand before His baptism. God's will is expressed in the types of the Law Covenant. Our Lord had said, "Everything written in the Book." But who will say that at that time He knew how much was involved? As a matter of fact, He did not know until after His baptism, when the higher things were opened to Him and made known to Him; and following this enlightenment He went into the wilderness to study and meditate upon them.

Dead to Everything but the Will of God.

Although prior to His consecration, Jesus did not know everything written in the Book about Himself, yet His consecration was complete. He had pledged His whole life to the doing of God's will. His own will was dead to all else. Later, He realised that His Covenant meant also actual death as a malefactor.

The- question has been asked, Did Jesus after His resurrection have human life-rights by reason of the fact that they were not relinquished in death, or by virtue of the fact that He had been appointed "Heir of all things"?—Heb.1:2.

This, like many other subjects, is capable of various shades of thought and expression. Our Lord possessed a right to human life and to all earthly things. This right to life and all its blessings Adam had forfeited by disobedience, but Jesus had secured it by obedience and held it absolutely free from risk of loss. Then, if so-me one, contrary to Law, cut Him off from His rights, this cutting off did not cause Him to forfeit any of them.

In other words, we cannot see how anyone could deprive our Lord of His life-rights in a judicial way. To our understanding, Jesus was cut off from His life and from all the rights that pertained to it by a fanatical company of fallen men; but their action could not destroy any right which God's Law had given to Him. So, then, when God raised Him from the dead and rewarded Him with a higher nature and certain wonderful blessings connected therewith, this exaltation could not interfere with the, right which God's law had given and which He had neither given away nor forfeited. He had merely allowed men to take His life from Him, thus separating Him from His rights, which remained His.

How Our Lord becomes Father of Mankind.

Since our Lord therefore had neither forfeited those rights nor given them away, then when God highly exalted Him because of His obedience unto death, this right to human life was amongst the things that He possessed. This right was it is irrespective of anything which the Father gave Him. It is because He holds this right to human life as an asset--His legally and not as a gift- that He is said to be the Life-giver.

During the Millennial Age, in fulfilment of the Divine promise, our Lord will give mankind restitution to perfect human nature. In doing this He will not be giving something that the Father has given T-Tim, but He will be acting in a special sense in His own name. If He did not have this right to everlasting life to give, then He could not be spoken of as the life-giver. But since I He possesses this right to human life, it is His to bestow during the thousand years of His reign.

At the end of the thousand years our Lord will no longer be _the Life-Giver. He cannot: be the Life-Giver to angels nor to any other than mankind, for His right appertained merely to Himself as a perfect human being. What He will give away to humanity in general, is what He now imputes, or loans, to the Church, to permit us to share with Him in sacrificial work and in His glorious work of the future.

Right to Human Life Our Lord's Personal Gift to Mankind.

We do not see how as "Heir of all things" our Lord could gain any additional control of His earthly nature and earthly life-rights which were His by obedience to the Law. As Heir of all things He will be the representative of the Father to all eternity. He takes the position at the right hand of authority on High. In due time, every knee shall bow to Him, and even the angels shall be subjected unto Him.

All these things came to our Lord as a part of the reward which the Father promised. But this one particular feature, the restitution of all things lost by Adam, is a special privilege coming as His own gift to humanity—that which He purchased at His own cost; that is to say, the laying down of His earthly life is the basis upon which He obtained the new nature and the right to control that earthly life, which shall be applied in restitution in behalf of the world.

If He had already applied that life and had actually given it up, then we do not see how He could accomplish anything special for mankind. But since He has this asset of earthly rights and privileges to give away, the process of bestowing it will continue during the Millennial reign; and what He will give is what He has by reason of His obedience to the Law.—Lev. 18:5.

Scriptural Usage of the Term, "Sacrifice."

The word "sacrifice" may be used from different standpoints. If an animal were killed for some benevolent reason or purpose, it might be spoken of as a sacrifice, particularly if it were something done in harmony with the Divine arrangement. But the mere killing of an animal would not be sacrifice. A dog might be killed without being sacrificed. But if the dog's life were surrendered for the purpose of scientific experiment, we might say that it was given in sacrifice to science. From this standpoint we should view the matter of sacrifice. The lives of God's consecrated people are surrendered for a purpose.

At our consecration we present our bodies as living sacrifices. We give • up to the Lord our life, our human bodies and everything that we possess. It does not follow, however, that God accepts this sacrifice to be put to death in some special manner. Some may spend their lives in serving the Lord's Truth, and may be said to be sacrificed as truly as though they had (lied at the stake. We may say to the Lord, All my life is in Thy hands; do with it as Thou wilt. If it means joy or pain, sacrifice or pleasure, we surrender our own will in the matter and become like unto Jesus, who said, "I came down from heaven, not to do Mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me."—John 38.

What do we Sacrifice?

The sacrifice of Jesus was made at Jordan, but it 'was finished at Calvary. His consecration was absolute. The killing of the bullock is symbolical of what Jesus did when He surrendered His will. And so with us. Following in His footsteps we become dead in the sense that we sacrifice our wills. But in what manner the Lord may accept that sacrificed will is His affair. We give it' freely, that the mind of Christ may dwell in us richly.

We part forever with the right to our wills, but we do not sacrifice our lives, although we know that the giving up of our wills ultimately leads to the giving up of our lives. But we have nothing to do with the parting with our rights. When Jesus becomes our Advocate, He takes us in charge. From the time we give up our wills, our bodies are counted as His Body. We merely give up our wills in the matter and leave everything for Him to dispose of. He attends to the sacrificing; for He is the High Priest; we are not.

Similarly, the great outcome is in the Lord's hands. During the Gospel Age, He imputes of His merit to the Church. When He has finished the work of sacrificing He will apply the merit of this great sacrifice, which He calls His own, for sealing the New Covenant for the world. But we have nothing to do with the sacrificing. We leave it all to our Attorney., or Advocate.

The New Creature is certainly the owner, or controller of the body and is made so by the Lord. We as New Creatures have a work to perform with our body. When our Lord accepts us as His servants we are to use all our talents as His stewards. In that sense of the word, the body will be under the control of the New Creature until death.

Life-Rights Merely Imputed to the Church.

Our position is somewhat different from that of our Lord. We had no earthly life-rights to begin with; and we had, therefore, none to give away. They were forfeited by Adam's sin. But if we become the Lord's disciples, if we surrender all to Him and accept the merit that He is willing to impute to us, our great Advocate will count us as members of His Body and permit us to share in His sufferings. When He imputed His merit to us all rights passed to Him. He gave His members whatever right they have and whatever privilege of earthly right comes to them.

When it shall be necessary for our Lord to use these rights in the future for the 'world, He will be quite competent and privileged to do so. Having never violated the Divine Law He will have the full right to use, command and direct in respect of all His earthly rights, which He did not forfeit, but which He laid down with the understanding that He should use them again in giving life to the world, so that He would be called the Father of mankind, in respect of their future life.

Nowhere in the Scriptures is the statement made that Christ came to sacrifice Himself. What the Scriptures say is that He came to do the Father's will. He did not refuse to drink the "cup" which the Father prepared for Him, but drank it to the dregs. And for His obedience to this Will, even unto death—no matter how long or how short a time the Father should be pleased to have that life continue—He received the reward. He gave over all into the Father's hands. This was a sacrifice; for He had a right to use His life. But His obedience to His Father's will led to the sacrifice for which He obtained the reward.

We all need "Poems of Dawn."

Under the above heading the following notice appeared nearly thirty years ago in a periodical, drawing attention to this selection of poems:—"This book contains nearly three hundred beautiful poems of, consecration and encouragement for Christians. 'Poems of Dawn' would make an excellent gift for any friend or relative not in the Truth, although most fully appreciated by the saintly. It is topically arranged, but you cannot open at random and read without being refreshed, comforted, drawn nearer to God."

Now, "Poems of Dawn" has been reproduced by duplicator print, and copies should be available for all by the time this issue reaches our readers. Orders in hand will be filled right away, and others desiring will also be supplied without delay. This edition is of nearly 200 pages, and well bound in stiff, dark green covers, with title in gold. The price is 2/9 (65 cents) per copy, with reduction for three or more.

“With desire I have Desired to eat this Passover with You before I suffer.”

AS ANOTHER anniversary of our Lord's death comes round, the above words of His, spoken to His twelve disciples on the occasion of the last Jewish Passover as they gathered together for the usual annual observance, are of special significance to all who keep the Memorial in harmony with His expressed request — “This do in remembrance of Me.”

Probably the disciples were no more interested in this Passover than the previous ones they had kept with their Lord; but with Him it was different. They at that time seemed unable to understand that their Master was about to leave them through death, though He had explained this to them more than once. (Matt. 16:21.) But “Jesus knew that His hour was come that He should depart out of this world unto the Father.” (John 13:1.)

Our Lord's realisation that He was “the Lamb of God,” and that, according to Daniel's prophecy, He would be “cut off” “in the midst of the week” (31 years after His consecration at Jordan --see Dan. 7:25-27)—revealed to Him that this Passover sacrifice was the one of which all the previous Jewish Passover sacrifices had been typical. Year after year Israel had slain the typical lamb, but now the time had arrived when the Lamb of God was to be slain—the perfect full sacrifice which alone could take away the sins of the world “for it is not possible that the blood of bulls and goats should take away sins.”

Can we wonder, then, that this momentous occasion was weighing heavily upon our Lord? He had come to be man's Redeemer, quite voluntarily —“Lo, I come, in the volume of the book it is written of Me, to do Thy will, O God”; but this did not mean that it was not a severe experience; surely it was. He had been laying clown His life over the 34-years, but now it was to be consummated fully in death, and at this particular Passover. So we read: “And when the hour was come He sat down and the twelve Apostles with Him, and He said unto them, with desire, I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer.”

It would seem that this “desire” or “longing” was mentioned by our Lord, because at that time He had purposed the institution of the Memorial of His death, which should henceforth take the place of the annual Jewish Passover Supper, and which would include His revealing the blessed oneness that was to exist between Himself and all His faithful followers who would from that time be broken with Him and drink of His cup, so that they may ultimately live and reign with Him in His throne. It was, then, that He sought to draw His beloved band into closer relationship before He would leave them, that when the holy spirit should come this great union might be the more appreciated and rejoiced in, though it would mean laying down the earthly life in the cause of Him who had gone before. With this last, important, earthly mission fulfilled towards His disciples, He was then ready to suffer and die, as would be the Father's will for Him.

From this standpoint we can realise the sincere desire or longing on the part of the Master, to impart the deep truths connected with the institution of the Memorial, that His apostles, and all who would believe on Him through their word may discern the terms of true discipleship and thus fulfil their vows of consecration loyally to the close of the way, as He was setting an example.

It is surely a great privilege again at this Memorial season to keep the simple, yet solemn observance in remembrance of our dear Redeemer • and all that He has done for us, and which also indicates our own heart-loyalty to Him and our covenant of sacrifice—“to be dead with Him.” “For as oft as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do chew the Lord's death till He come.” “The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ.”

“A ghastly sight. shows in the shivering air
On Calvary’s brow;
The Saviour of mankind, in love, hangs there,
While followers bow

The head low on the breast and sadly sigh,
‘How can He be Messiah—if He die?’
“A jeering mob surrounds the cursed knoll
And mocks the Lord;

Yet to His lips and from His stricken soul
Cometh no word
Of vengeance or reproach—ah, no; and when
In anguish came the final moment, then

“Tis finished!” rings in triumph through the sky;
He bows His head;
And while the querying soldiers mark the cry,
The Lord is dead.

All anguish past, His triumph (loth begin,
The world is saved, a death blow dealt to sin.
“Jerusalem, amazed, hears fishers tell,
With courage bold,

How Christ has vanquished Satan, death and hell,
As He foretold.
Humble disciples forcefully proclaim,
‘There is Salvation in no other name.’

“A Sabbath’s journey from the city gate,
With sorrow shod,
Two sad disciples bear their sorry weight To their abode.
The Christ appears, while holden are their eyes;

And doth expound wherefore Messiah dies.
“Emmaus reached, the Lord would further go;
They gently chide
Thou hast beguiled our grief and tears, and so
With us abide.’

He brake their bread—then vanished from their sight—
Their hearts did burn with holy joy that night.
“Still thus He comes; and though the faulty sight
Of clouded eyes

Perceives Him not,
He makes the burden light,
And stills our cries;
For, like weaned babes, we mourn, the while
He would Our hearts sustain with stronger, richer food.

“The tale is old, but ever sweetly new,
Why Jesus died.
The nail prints, doubting one,
He shows to you,

And in His side
A spear thrust gapes—a passage rent apart,
For easy access to your Saviour’s heart.

“It was for you, my brother, that He shed His life so free;
For you, for me, He bowed His godlike head
On Calvary’s tree,

That, trusting ill the merit of His name,
We might be saved from sorrow, sin and shame.
“The past sufficeth, surely, to have spent
In sinful deeds.

Come, join our band; and be our footsteps bent
Where Jesus leads.
So, in His righteousness serenely dressed,
We’ll meet Him face to face among the blest.”

If God be for Us.

(Convention Address.)

(Rom. 8:28-39.)

WE see, then, that God has been “for” us or favorable to us in various ways.

(1) In bringing us- in contact with the light and truth of the Gospel and helping us to appreciate it., Those who have been born in countries where the Bible has been respected and encouraged have been much more favored than those living in countries like India and China. Then, those of us who have been brought up under the influence of Christian parents have surely much for which to be thankful; perhaps we do not fully appreciate this also, at times.

(2) In a further sense God was “for” or favorable towards all who accept the light of truth; those who, through repentance and faith in the precious blood are “justified” from sin through His grace.

He was yet more “for” these justified ones, to the extent that He “called” them to suffer, with Christ during this Gospel Age, and by and by to share His glory.

In a still further sense He is “for” all those who accept the call and who are seeking to “make their calling and election sure.” God is in a special sense “for” all these who are so running as to obtain the prize which he offers.

“They shall be mine, saith the Lord, in that day when I make up my jewels.” They are dear to Him, as it says, “As the apple of His eye ;” they are graven upon the palms of His hands.

It is to this called and faithfully running class that the Apostle speaks as “us.” He and those whom he addresses (“called to be saints”—Rom. 1:6, 7), had first been “honored” with the light; second, they, by repentance and faith, had accepted it and been justified; third, they had been “called ;” fourth they had accepted the calling and given themselves wholly to the Lord. Those who to-day can recognise themselves in the same position, as having taken these same steps, may properly apply to themselves the Apostle’s words and say, “God is for us; who can be against us?”

All those throughout the whole world who have taken the aforementioned steps shall number altogether not a great multitude, but are comparatively a little flock. Yet each one of these may say to himself, and realise to the very bottom of his heart as applicable to himself, those wonderful words, “God is for us.” He may endeavour to grasp the significance of these words, but he will surely fail to get all their wonderful’ depth of meaning. It seems almost impossible to the human mind to fully grasp the riches of Divine grace and love and power. With the Apostle, we may well pray “that the eyes of our understanding might be enlightened, that we may know still more and more. what is the hope of his calling and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the, saints.” (Eph. 1:18.)

For God to be for us, with all His infinite wisdom and power, implies also that Christ is for us, for He is one with the Father. It implies also that all the angels and heavenly powers are for us. They are all enlisted on our side to do us good, help us, succor us in time of need, uphold us in time of temptation, strengthen us to do the Father’s --“All things are yours, for ye are Christ’s and Christ is God’s.”

The view granted to Elisha’s servant, of countless horses, chariots and horsemen of fire or like fire, was of course merely a vision; nevertheless, it represented a truth—that Divine power is round about God’s people on every hand for their protection and deliverance. “The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear Him, and delivereth them.” (Isa. 34:7.) “Are they (the angels) not all ministering spirits sent forth to minister for those who shall be heirs of salvation?” (Heb. 1:14.) Our Lord expressed the same thing, saying of His faithful followers: “Their angels do always behold the face of My Father.” The fact that God is “for us” and that He is making all things work together for good to those who love Him, is the central thought, the essence, the strength of this message to “us.”

The word “if” in this text does not signify a doubt or question on the subject; but quite the reverse. The Apostle has given the evidence that God is “for us,” in the preceding- verses, and now uses “if” as though he said, “If I have proved that God is for us, then who can be against us?” Who can be against us, if God is for us? Paul does not mean that having God on our side none would dare oppose our way. Quite to the contrary, we have bitter enemies and relentless foes. The Apostle Peter thought so, and we think his words are just as true to-day as ever; “Your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking- whom he may devour”; and admonishes us, “He sober, be vigilant.” The Apostle Paul’s words are no less clear and definite—See Eph. 6; 10-13. Yes, this armour was needed in Paul’s day, and it has been needed right down the age, and it is no less necessary to-day. Satan is still the God of this world, the Prince of the power of the air, and it is only as we are rich in faith that we can hope to resist him.

Also we have a great enemy in ourselves—the old man, the natural human tendencies which must be kept in subjection.

"I keep my body under, lest by any means when I preach to others I myself should be a castaway." That is, from the great hope of his calling perhaps to 'be merely of the Great Company class, or worse still, lose all. So we must watch, and guard against the tendencies of the old nature. We must keep our body under, and make it a good servant of the new mind. We must walk in newness of life. Perhaps the greatest battles and trials we are called upon to endure are these battles of the new mind against the old fallen nature, the mind of the flesh.

Further, we have the opposition of the world, as the Master said, "Marvel not if the world hate you; ye know that it hated Me before it hated you." "The servant is not greater than his lord."

The Apostle was not ignoring all of these great adversaries which like roaring lions would terrify us, and if possible arrest our progress in the path which leads to glory. That is not his thought when he says, "If God be for us who can be against us?" Quite to the contrary, his thought is, notwithstanding all these things which are against us, we may realise that God is for us, that He has predestinated a Church in glory and has justified and called us to be members of it, and brought us on the journey thus far, through all of these various steps.

As we look back over the way, can we not feel grateful for the great, loving, wise providence that has been with us; what wondrous mercy and patience has been manifest; can we doubt that God is for us? And if we realise that He has been leading us up to the present time and bringing us to see ultimately His glory, the glory of sonship, and that all things thus far have been working for our good, surely this is our assurance that all His great wisdom and power and love are still to be exerted on our behalf down to the very end of the course, if we are faithful to Him. "God is faithful that promised."

Let us then abide in Christ, keep near to our great Head. There is a beautiful thought expressed in Psalm 91 --- "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge and my fortress: my God; in Him will I trust. Surely He shall deliver thee from the snare of the fowler, and from the noisome pestilence. He shall cover thee with His feathers, and under His wings shalt thou trust; His truth shall be thy shield and buckler. Thou shalt not be afraid for the terror by night; nor for the arrow that flieth by day; nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness; nor for the destruction that wasteth at noonday. A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it shall not come nigh thee. Only with thine eyes shalt thou behold and see the reward of the wicked. Because thou hast made the Lord, which is my refuge, even the most High, thy habitation."

Surely, then, this thought is brought clearly to our minds in the verses which follow- "He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us, all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?" (Rom. 8:32) What shall we fear? What could oppose our way so as to hinder us, if God be on our side? This reminds us of the adage, "God with one is a majority." So. God with and for us and leading us makes us mighty indeed, stronger than all those adversaries with all their arts and devices and perversity, thus enabling us to come off more than conquerors through all that lured and bought us with His own precious blood.

Having given His own Son to (lie for us, shall He not with Him also freely give us- all things; i.e., all things necessary to help us make (my calling and election sure. Here the greater gift includes all the lesser gifts necessary to complete our character-likeness to Christ. The death of His son was necessary before we could come to God; but we need other things when once we have come into the school of Christ. We need instruction, certain experiences of various kinds. At first, like tiny plants we need much tender care, as illustrated by the hot-house in which small plants, are first raised. But it would not do to leave the plants too long under the hot-house conditions, or they would grow weak and spindly; they must be hardened off under cooler conditions where they learn to adapt themselves to the: changes of atmosphere and of sunshine and rain. So, as we develop, we need some trials and difficulties to strengthen us in faith and patient endurance, and in self-discipline. Happy are those who are able to just submit patiently to the experiences which a loving and wise providence sees fit to allow; seeking for grace to bear what would do us good, and if need be seeking in God's way, relief from what might be too much for us to bear.

As we go on in the way before us, let us ever remember that God is for us. if sometimes we are tempted to be discouraged by our failures, let us call to mind that it was while we were yet sinners that Christ died for us; therefore God must love us more now that we have accepted His Son, and are seeking to walk in His steps. Let us be of good courage and draw near to the throne of grace in Jesus' name, for has He not promised us mercy and grace to help us in our every time of need. "Ask, and ye shall receive; seek and ye shall find; knock and it shall be opened unto you." Let us remember that the great God, whose wisdom and power has brought the universe and all things connected with it into being is for us, stands ready to help us through His great Son, our Lord Jesus Christ.

Sometimes we have stood by the sea and looked across at the great cliffs that rise up, and watched the mighty waves as they swept in on to the rocks, and what a vision of power it all seems to carry to us! Again; we may stand at the foot of some majestic mountain and think . what a symbol of strength, of power, is there. Again, we may look into the starry sky and behold something of the expanse of the great universe. How it all speaks to us of the mighty power and wisdom that is governing these forces of nature! Yes, it is the same great God that is for us—for you and me. “For the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord.” (Is. 54:10).

Again, the Apostle asks, “Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? As it is written, for thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter. Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors. through him that loved us.” (Rom. 8:35-37.) So if we are found co-operating faithfully with God, working readily together with Him, surely no trouble that may come along can separate us. Nothing can separate us from the love of Christ, only our own lack of faith or confidence can separate us; nothing else can. Let us see that we are faithful, seeking to do our part, appreciating fully all His ways and loving arrangements, and seeking to serve Him with an undivided heart. This seems to be an important point to us all—that we should be found seeking to serve the Lord with all our heart, to love the Lord our God with all our heart and mind and soul and strength. That is what the Lord desires. Surely that is what the Lord deserves. Let us then be found holding fast to the Truth as it has been made known to us. In this special way God is for us, in that He has given us the knowledge of His truth, the wonderful plan, by means of which we have been drawn to Him.

How much we need to heed the counsels that direct our attention to holding fast to the true word, the present truth. As we have it in Hebrews 13:9, “Be not carried about with divers and strange doctrines. For it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace; not with meats, which have not profited them that have been occupied therein.” This is surely a day of trial, a day of testing. Let us see that we are not carried about with divers and strange doctrines. In 2 Tim. 3:14 we read, “But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them.” Again, in 2 Tim. 1:13, “Hold fast the form of sound words, which thou hast heard of me, in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus.”

If we are faithful to the Lord, seeking just to help others to the truth as it has been told to us, having on that heavenly protection, that armour of truth, surely God is faithful, and God is for us.. ‘Who can be against us? If we are doing this, what can separate us from the love of God? Let the Apostle answer in Rom. 8:38, 39, — “For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Jesus Christ our Lord.”

May it be, then, that by the Lord’s grace, the remembrance of the good lessons we have had brought before us by so many, may go with us and help us, that we may be able to make still better progress, seeking to be more fully conformed to the likeness of Christ, remembering that God is surely dealing with us in no haphazard way, but definitely for a decided purpose, that we might be transformed more and more into the character-likeness of Christ. So may we press on, seeking to do with our might what our hands find to do, seeking to fulfil the law of Christ.—Col. 3:12-17.

Easter Convention at Adelaide--April 7th-10th

The friends in Adelaide have their arrangements well in hand for the gatherings to be held there from Good Friday to Easter Sunday, and Easter Monday to be spent at Gawler. All able to attend any or all these assemblies will receive a very hearty welcome, and no doubt receive a blessing in fellowship with the Lord and His people.

Programmes and other information may be obtained from the secretary:— Mrs. H. H. Bartel, 10 Forest Avenue East, Clarence Gardens, Adelaide.

Kingdom and Consolation Cards

These Cards are proving a very good means of witnessing to the Truth. Enquiries are continually being received for literature by persons who have received one or other of the cards, and no doubt much good is done in thus bringing the message to those who are longing for something that will give hope and comfort amidst the perplexities and distress throughout the world.

These friends who have time to engage in the work of distributing these cards should apply for some: the Kingdom Cards being for general use, and the Consolation Cards especially for those who have suffered bereavement. Tracts can also be used in conjunction with the Cards.

Dear Brethren,

Enclosed find money order for which please send us 8 Volumes "Covenants, Mediator, Sin-Offering." We have a large class of young people and this is a fine book for many of them. Many of the older brethren have the original book; I would not want to do without it.

World events are speeding along at a dizzy pace and the ditch is not many turns ahead. The Lord's grace is needed the more as the days grow short.

The Pittsburg and Chicago Classes are endeavouring to arrange for a Mid-summer Convention, 5 days; it will be like old times if it can be arranged.

Your Brother, in His service.

7th February. Dear 'Brethren in Christ,

I was glad to hear from you and thank you very much for sending your "People's Paper."

Now I am interested in the booklet, "God's Best Gift," (for children) and the 90 cards of the Old and New Testament, which I would like to have for my little girl. Please send me these things if possible.

I am always glad to hear from you from afar, the other side of the globe. Ten years ago I came from Germany to the United States. How the conditions since then have changed in the old country; I hear very little from my old friends and am very glad and thankful to the Lord to still have the opportunity to meet with others of the same faith.

With love in the Lord and best wishes,

Yours by His grace.

15th Feb. 1939. Dear Brethren,

I appreciate greatly receiving the two volumes on the "Ransom, Sin-Offering, and Covenants" and we have been enjoying the clear expositions of these important doctrines.

While Sister and I have always been clear on these doctrines since the early days, it is, however, good to have such clear, concise explanations of these wonderful truths which are so important to our faith. We left the Nominal Church nearly thirty years ago and have been rejoicing in the Truth down through the years from that time until to-day. On every hand we see the evidences of the presence of the Lord and the dawn of the new day bespeaking our deliverance from the bondage of our imperfect flesh. Oh, how good it will be to enter into that glorious inheritance promised to the faithful. "Be thou faithful until death, and I will give you a crown of life,"

May the Lord bless your service to Him and the truth. Sister joins in sending Christian love. In the service of the King.

Canada,

22nd Feb. 1939. My Dear Brother in Christ,

Christian love and greetings in the precious name of our Beloved Lord and Head.

Thank you for your very welcome letter, and we were very glad to have news from you again. We also want to thank you for the supply of tracts "A New Dictator" which arrived safely and are being put into use here—and we trust will prove a blessing to many.

One lady told my dear wife that she was worn out with worry and trouble when the postman handed her our letter containing this tract. She said, "I just stopped work right there and sat down and read the tract all the way through—before I got up out of my chair—and it was just beautiful. I felt like a new woman and it gave me strength and comfort—it was simply grand."

Thank you for your very kind interest in the special truth stories for children; these have been written by my dear wife, Sister and they have met with a very warm reception amongst the Truth friends who want something to give to their children and the demand has been greater than we expected. In the first place, Sister wrote them out for our own little girl; others listened and wanted to borrow them; then she received requests from the Truth friends for copies, and has been busy typing out copies to the best of her ability. By this mail I am sending you the complete set—they are entitled "The Ten Camels" and shall be glad to have your opinion as to how they appeal to you. If you can use them they are free to you to use as you deem best in the service of the Master, and shall be glad to hear from you.

With much Christian love and praying the Lord's continued blessing,

I am by His kind favour,

Your brother in Christ.

We are glad to have the above Bible Stories—"The Ten Camels,"—compiled by our Sister in Canada, and appreciate the desire that these be used as seems good, in the Lord's service. The Stories are very nice indeed, covering as they do so much of the Divine Plan in simple and interesting language.

They comprise in all about 150 pages of typed articles and are not only beneficial for children but grown-ups cannot fail to receive a blessing also, and probably in many cases would be led to understand the various truths more clearly by going through these stories with the children.

In commending these Bible Stories to our readers it is with the thought that many may desire copies for their children, or other little ones. Should the demand be sufficient, it could be produced in booklet form. All who are interested are asked to communicate, stating the number desired. If any charge is necessary, it would be for the paper • and postage only.—B. B. Inst.]

South Australia.

Dear Brethren,

Please find enclosed 2/6 for which forward "People's Paper" for one year.

I have read with pleasure a copy of the booklet "God and Reason" and now I want to know the price of a dozen, as I could distribute them amongst my friends.

Would you kindly send me a free copy of the following Papers—"Thy Word 'is Truth," "The Messengers of Gods" "The Harvest Home," "Why Sorrow, Sin and Evil is Permitted," and "Joy Cometh in the Morning,"

May you ever be blessed in doing your good work.

I remain, Yours in Christian faith.

Little Known Associates with the Anointed

(Convention Address).

Psalm 8:3, 4.

A TOPIC of this nature should appeal to all, because, those of us who are well-known, privileged, as it were, to have some position of honour, realise that it is not by any outward signs or glory that makes us commendable to God, but that the best of our efforts are puny. Yet we would be better known in the Beloved. Better-known . . . yes, and to be better known, we will want to be little-known; unboastful, not vaunting up of self, seeking not our own, and he who would be the best known, let him be the least known. "He that is least among you all, the same shall be great" (Luke 9:48). How reverse are the laws of the Kingdom with the laws of earth.

The Apostle Paul seems well-known to-day, but in passing, it is good for the little-known of today to reflect just what the great Apostle did think of himself. In one of his early letters (1 Cor. 15:9) he says of himself that he is "the least of the Apostles." (If this be true, the great Apostles must have been mighty.) In a later letter (Ephes. 3:8) he seems to think a little less about himself, because he writes that he is "less than the least of all saints." The further we go the less we want to be, just to be faithful in that which is least, such a delight to the called ones, yet such a lesson of humiliation according to the natural bent. Those who aspire to be great, aspire to pitfalls and many snares. In a still later letter we find Paul still thinking less of himself; not now the "least of the Apostles," not now "less than the least of all saints," but he says, "Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief." Convinced of our sin, and partakers of the grace that cleanses, should we once again contend for honour or glory_ among ourselves?

Paul—was he well-known? He was well known as. Saul, but when the change to Paul came, when he started on a new ministry, he had considerably less fellowship than was formerly his as a member of the famous Sanhedrin. But even in the new ministry, what was the extent of his acceptance among those who would be the called and chosen? Not very great, indeed, for does he not write that all forsook him, and again in Rome, writing of Onesiphorus, he said that this brother sought him out very diligently. Do you know that the great Paul of to-day was then practically obscure, just a little-known associate with the Anointed, just sharing' similar experiences as the Head? While many know Jesus as the carpenter's son, very few acknowledged Him as the Anointed Jesus. "As I was in the world, so will ye be," and it surely is true whether we be well-known or little-known among men. The important matter is to be well-known with God, and then what does it matter whether we be great among men or of no account; whether we be mighty in the Church, occupying chief positions of respect and thought well of among our brethren?

And so, while our topic should appeal to all, it should be of most appeal to those associates with Jesus who are little known; they comprise the majority, and it is they who are exerting a great influence in their homes, families, friends, etc., as they quietly go about their business, pursuing a consecrated life in some little corner of the world,. some little position despised among men, for they are quietly conscious that Jesus is using their all, and would surely convey to them the knowledge that while their ministry is not greatly known, it is as effective as the influence of the little-known heavenly bodies that pervade space. Is this so? Do these heavenly bodies exert an influence for good? Who has not experienced the elevating comfort from looking up? We all have. Take a telescope, still more glory is revealed, there all the time, but obscured with greater light just as our sun absorbs the light of everything on our planet. Take a larger telescope, and wonder of wonders, where is it all going to end? God's work is of such magnitude that it becomes impossible for words to describe. The order, the precision, the excellence, how can we but gape with astonishment as some of the little-known influences are revealed? The glory of the sun we all know to be excellent, and yet we believe there are greater bodies of glory that could absorb our sun's glory as easily as it absorbs the lesser lights of the known heavens. The existence of such bodies is never doubted, but let us not doubt that because they make no big show, or big noise, their influences are apparent. "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth His handywork.

Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge; there is no speech, there is no language, their voice is not heard, but their line is gone out through all the earth.” (Their melody extendeth, is one translation.)

The lesson is, that if these little-known bodies can be so effectual in their own peculiar way, being so far away from us, cannot the ministry of the little-known associates with the Lord be just as effective? There are countless and little-known examples before us in the Word to instil a better determination among the least of us. Our witness does not have to be noisy to be effective. With the starry bodies there is nothing to be heard and no contention among themselves to outshine one another, but a quiet manifestation by emitting whatever light is their privilege. The darker the night the more and greater is their opportunity. The darker our experiences, the better opportunity we have of shining brighter. The harder we find things working against us the better opportunities we shall find for transmitting a purer light, and it is not whether we are big or small lights, but whether we be bright lights. When we read, “Let your light so shine,” and “No man when he lighteth a light hideth it under a bushel,” some of us may reflect that our light is not much anyhow, and it is not very big in the Church or in the world, and thereby apt to become discouraged. It all amounts to this, that if you cannot be a Christian in your own sphere right now, you will not be a Christian in any other sphere.

“Faithful in that which is least,” according to the Kingdom laws, will ever precede faithfulness in that which is great. And so the little-known may take fresh courage again and again as they have so much above their fellows for which to be thankful, and to know, for surety, that though they have not much eloquence or entrancing speeches, etc., their influence is desirable, especially desirable by the better-known members in the Church, so that there may be a more effectual working of the complete body. The little insignificant leaves are as important in their places as the better and more shiny ones.

There are many instances in the Bible where the Lord did not despise the meagre offering that certain would lay before Him. If He set us such an example, let us not mistakenly look for justification by any law of works. The Lord did not despise the woman of Samaria, for many believed because of her word, and was she not a prominent cause that contributed to His sojourning several days there? Some dissociated themselves with the woman after they had heard themselves, but however much they may dissent, the woman, whose name we are not given, would still be comforted with the thought that she was an instrument used to bring blessing to many. This should have outweighed the despising she received at the hands of many who had been blessed. Another instance of one whose little was not despised, and eventually it became the means of satisfying the wants of many, is recorded with the miracle of feeding the five thousand. This great multitude had followed Jesus, and had made no provision against hunger. Jesus knew they would have to be fed, and invited suggestions from the Apostles. Phillip’s answer was possibly the reply of the majority—that “two-hundred pennyworth is not sufficient.” Andrew’s thoughts possibly went a little further, for, even were it enough, where would they purchase the quantity, and it is tinged with ridicule that he answers that “There is a lad here with five barley loaves and two small fishes.” Who do you think was most pleased after that meal, Andrew for his adopted suggestion, the people who had been abundantly fed, those who collected so much that remained over and above their requirements, or the lad, whose little the Lord had used? We don’t know the lad’s name, but what honour came his way.

Another little-known friend of Jesus was one who supplied Him with the means of meeting for the last time with His Apostles before His crucifixion. We have recently been reminded at the Memorial season how fervently Jesus had been looking forward to this meeting, and as the time drew nigh, arrangements began to take shape for the last meeting, and they asked of Him, “Master, where wilt Thou that we should prepare the pass-over?” He said, “Go into the city and say to such a man, the Master saith, My time is at hand; I will keep the Passover at thy house with my disciples.” Say to such a man; no doubt the Lord described him, but his name has gone into obscurity; not so his ministry towards the Master. Our Lord was his Master, it must be apparent; and knowing the Lord’s requirements, he made available for Him such as was asked. What momentous hours were spent in this man’s house, in the Upper Room. Would you have liked to make available a room for the last supper?

This brings us to the partakers at that last supper. How many of them do you know? Many are little-known, indeed, and yet the Church itself has for a foundation, not one Apostle, nor two, nor three, but the twelve chosen for the Apostolic office (Eph. 2:20). How much do you know of Simon the Canaanite (Simon the Zealot)? Very little, too, do we know of James, the son of Alphaeus, and Lebbeus, all Apostles, and yet little-known Apostles. Why, then, should the little-known saints feel “in the cold” if their names do not become greatly-known among men, when obscurity is the portion of several of the Apostles?

The little-known have no just cause to be envious of the well-known, for the well-known have more forceful temptations, and with more knowledge how apt we are to think more highly of ourselves than we ought to think.

How easy it comes to. the efficient to become wise in their conceits, how easy we could think we are in some way superior to our less-known brethren, possibly because we might be more able in expounding certain passages, or possibly because more helps were available to us, and we became more efficient in a scholastic manner than those less fortunate, those to whom valuable helps are not so easily accessible, and sometimes if they were available, the over-worked and hard-pressed saints would have not the time for quiet and restful meditation. Little cause should prevail to make us envy the well-known of the Lord's people, whereas, with the little-known and hardly-recognised they have much cause for thankfulness in that they could not very well think highly of themselves. The conditions and ever-present experiences of the little-known are not conducive to a superiority-complex. Their discouragement would be mostly from the direction of thinking themselves not worthy of any favour. Yet it is possible for the little-known to think themselves better in some way or another than the not-known. It is a matter of degree. This spirit of lordship is manifest on every hand in the world, and it is not easy to rid ourselves of the only habits we possessed at one time. "Godliness with contentment is great gain."

God is a great economist, and it is a strange, but a very true matter that whether we be well-known or little-known associates, we all have similar experiences. These experiences, permitted for our development as new creatures, are not peculiar just to you or just to me (1 Cor. 10:13). In the midst of affliction, it is an easy matter to think within our own hearts that God has singled us out for some purpose and making us bear more than our share. We might even be disposed to think that So-and-So who seems always happy and contented has no troubles at all, has no worries to discourage, etc., and thinking thus, we become so sorry for ourselves. Disbelieve such conjectures, for who among us has not a "skeleton in his cupboard?" The one we think so well-off may be more in need of our comfort than we are of his. No man liveth unto himself alone, and we all need each other's help. Understanding will not be our lot if we separate ourselves from the experiences that the Lord is pleased to permit. Have you had any lesson to learn twice?

Or many times had to try again for a better answer to a problem in your life? Why do you think the same experience has to be repeated from time to time? The answer must be that we failed to get the right answer the first time. Can we act wisely upon the matter before us, and when a constantly recurring experience worries, try a different method and prove whether our deliberation was right the first time? What opportunities belong to all in the days before us.

In regard to the "little foxes" that spoil the vines, is it not true that it is also the little things that count in the other direction? Well, we all have something to render to God, if it may seem so small in our eyes as our justification. Let us all consider further, have we nothing else to render to Him for all His benefits? Indeed, is it so small a matter to praise Him and offer the sacrifice of praise with the fruit of our lips and giving thanks to His Name? The most insignificant of all saints will find this a mighty work, and very acceptable.

Now, strange as it all is, there have been some great ones in the Church, and we know comparatively little of them. Take, for example, one who was qualified to fill an Apostolic office, Joseph, called Barabas. Also many others—Aristarchus, Paul's fellow prisoner (Acts 19:29; 20:4; 27:2; Col. 4:10); Aristobulus (Rom. 16:10) Apollos, Aquila and Priscilla, Onesiphorus—all mighty men and women in their own way, but not a great deal of their ministry is recorded.

Two little illustrations show how the little-known influences in a natural manner are so tremendous in their effectualness. Take Boron in apples. Without it, the apple is practically useless, and yet it is so insignificant in itself. Take this earth of ours. It would possibly be news to many to realise that we are being hurled through space seven ways at once. For instance,—rotates on its axis, revolves round the sun, revolves with moon round the gravity centre of the two great bodies, travelling the meanwhile through space with the rest of the Solar system at twelve miles a second, changing direction of its own axis on a circular path that takes 26,000 years to complete; another motion displaces equator and causes variation in latitude. Little-known influences, indeed, but how necessary to complete the purpose of such an unfathomable mind as God's.

The "salt of the earth" might well be insignificant and despised, but where would the savouring be without it? And what does it matter whether it be here or there, in little out-of-the-way places, such as Merino or Digby, or whether it be from such highly esteemed places as Canberra, Sydney, Melbourne, or Adelaide; let us be a means of blessing where'er we be, however little-known we be as Associates with The Anointed!

Convention News from South Australia.

THE Easter Convention arranged by the Adelaide and Gawler classes proved once again to be a happy and helpful occasion. All praise and thanks is offered to the Giver of every good and perfect gift for the many blessings received, during the four Convention days, and for the happy fellowship with those of "like precious faith" which this occasion afforded. Truly it is good to meet together in the Lord's name; i.e., with sincere purpose to honor Him and learn of His ways; for we find that the Lord meets with us, and "in His presence there is fulness of joy."

The portions chosen for the Bible Studies which occupied the afternoon of each of the four Convention days were as follows:-2 Cor. 3:1-8; John 6:47-54; Eph. 3:14-19; Col. 2:6-12. Many good and encouraging thoughts were expressed in the course of these studies, and the consideration of the meaning of the words of our Lord and the Apostle proved a stimulus to our faith and hope.

The addresses by various brethren were helpful, and it was good to hear the words of encouragement and exhortation to zeal and diligence in the Christian way. The topics of the addresses were—"Little-known Associates with the Anointed," "Working out our Salvation," "Christian Alternatives," "Hope," "Apparent Failures," "The Offer- ings^ for Sin," "Approved of God," "Quietness."

At the Praise and Testimony meeting several messages from Classes and individual brethren were read; and the good wishes of Christian love, and desire for the Lord's blessing upon the Convention, were much appreciated, as also were the greetings sent in the form of Scripture texts. To those who thus remembered us, and to all the Lord's dear people everywhere the following passage of Scripture is commended-2 Peter 3:11 and former part of verse 12.

The Fellowship and Question meetings also proved to be helpful, and we trust that all present were encouraged to press on in the narrow way, seeking to run with patience the race set before us. It was encouraging to have a nice number of visiting brethren amongst us--nine from Victoria, and one from New South \Vales. The zeal and self- sacrificing spirit of these dear friends is much appreciated, and we trust and pray that each and all may be richly blessed and "strengthened in.. the inner man," in the days that lie before us.

There is no doubt that the Convention gatherings bring blessing to the Classes- which arrange them, and the local friends seemed to find pleasure' in entertaining the visiting brethren in their homes and in various ways ministering to their needs, happy in the thought that in serving His people they are serving the Lord 'Christ. How good it will be when the same happy spirit of loving helpful service prevails amongst men generally. Surely our hearts earnestly echo the sentiment of the Lord's prayer—"Thy Kingdom Come, Thy will be done on earth as in heaven." -

Memorial Observances.

Melbourne and Merino, Victoria.

ON Sunday evening, April 2nd, the brethren in Melbourne observed the Memorial of our Lord's death with solemn and reverent hearts, in response to His request conveyed to His little band just a few hours before the completion of His sacrifice as our Passover Lamb. -

In the afternoon a profitable study on our Lord's word's as recorded in Luke 22:14-20, was a fitting preparation for the Service in the evening. At 7 p.m., following the singing of appropriate hymns and prayers of thankfulness with remembrance of the Lord's dear people everywhere for His blessing, the reading of helpful Scriptures pertaining to 'our Lord's great sacrifice, and an address of encouragement and exhortation to follow faithfully in the steps of our dear Redeemer, a goodly number partook of the emblems, thus confirming again their pledge to honor His cause and His name, by "filling up the sufferings of Christ," by His grace.

The brethren seemed to realise the great privilege that is granted to us and "all of like precious' faith," who have been blessed with hearts- and minds fully appreciative of the great sacrifice of our dear Lord—"Who gave Himself for our sins, that He might deliver us from this present evil world, according to the will of God and our Father."

"Were the whole realm of nature mine,
That were an offering far too small;
Love so amazing, so divine,
Demands my soul, my life, my all."

WE had solemn, yet happy fellowship at Merino on the evening of April 2nd, when the Digby brethren met with the brethren of that town. to once again commemorate the anniversary of our Lord's death, and to remind ourselves of our privileges of sharing with Him in His sufferings now, (Col. 1:24) that we might later share with Him His glory. A visiting Sister joined us, making, in all, nine participating.

The hymns sung, the Scriptures read and the words spoken were all such that carried our minds back to the death and awful sufferings relative thereof of the One: who came to give..His life a ransom for all, and His subsequent resurrection to the right hand of the Father and forward to the joys awaiting the faithful who will soon share the glories of His resurrection and Kingdom.

How good it is on these occasions to review the many Scriptures picturing our Lord's suffering and glory, and our own privilege of participation with Him, that we might go forward by His grace, "filling up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ"; left behind, not because our Lord could not suffer enough for all, nor because His sufferings were not sufficient for all, but because He wished (and in harmony with the Father's plan) to have us with Him to share His nature and glory, and only by suffering with Him as His members could we be allowed to share His glory, honor and immortality.

Adelaide and Gawler, South Australia.

ONCE again the Memorial season has come round; and about. 25 of the consecrated brethren in Adelaide observed our Lord's dying request, "This do in remembrance of me."

Previous to the observance we studied together how the Passover originated with typical Israel and that it's fulfilment in antitype took place in the death -of. Jesus when He said on the cross, "It is finished," and through faith in His sacrifice we are now able to pass from death to life.

Our privileges in Christ were again brought to our attention in our study of 1 Cor. 11:23-29, where the Apostle refers to the participation that all the members have in suffering for and with Christ, which are the means of accomplishing our sanctification.

ON the evening of April 1st, the class at Gawler Met to observe , the Memorial of our Lord's death. What deep significance is in this simple Service arranged for us by our Lord, and we are glad to comply with His request "This do in remembrance of Me." Accepting the emblems of His broken body and shed blood, we are reminded that all our hopes of life and blessing centre in Him who so loved us that He was willing even to die for us, in-order to meet the demands of Justice against us. Yes, what wondrous love is manifested in Calvary's cruel cross.

"In the cross of Christ I glory,
Towering o'er the wrecks of time:
All the light of sacred story
Gathers round its head sublime."

How this occasion reminds us too of the privilege which is ours of being broken together with Him as members of His body; of sharing in His cup of sufferings now, that we may be prepared to share the joys and blessings of the Kingdom and its work of uplift for mankind in the Age to come. Thanking God for His goodness and mercy to us and for His keeping power, our thoughts and earnest prayers were for all the dear Israel of God everywhere as they would meet at this season to keep the Memorial ;.may each and all find grace and strength to be faithful, as our blessed 'Lord and Saviour was faithful—even unto death.

Burnie, Tasmania..

WE had quite a large meeting on April 2nd, to partake of the emblems of our dear Lord's finished! work .on our behalf. We say large, because all came; seven does symbolise completeness frequently in the Scriptures and it assuredly did in this case, for that number embraced all the friends in the N.W.C. of Tasmania.

We did not depart from its simplicity; first and foremost renewing our minds concerning all that our clear elder Brother has done, is doing, and will. do for us. How His great, loving heart instituted this simple ceremony for our good—to ever keep clear and definite before us, His work for us, and the great privilege given of sharing in the cup, in His merit, “filling up that which is behind of His sufferings for His body's sake, which is the Church.”

How increasingly solemn these occasions are as all around us indicate the close of the church's earthly course to be very near, and with what joy we can look forward to drinking it anew in the Kingdom with Him and all the dear ones gone before.^ Yes, it was solemn as the thought came “Shall we celebrate together this side of the veil again,” and the thoughts of the nearness of the Kingdom filled our hearts with joy.

So, the Christian's New Year's Day has dawned again; God grant that by His grace, we and all who are truly His may fight on in the armor of light, until we hear the cry of victory of the Church Triumphant.

Perth, Western Australia.

WE celebrated the Memorial . on Sunday, April 2nd, and it was indeed a time of blessing and - uplift, and searching of our hearts. We had a nice gathering of twenty.

The afternoon .study was taken from John 6 :-53- 58, and many beautiful and helpful thoughts were expressed.

The evening was of course the usual Memorial Service; the Scripture readings being taken from Luke 22-24, and the address being based on Scriptures bearing on type and antitype.

It is indeed helpful to be able to remember, our Lord's great sacrifice in such a way, and to remind ourselves of our covenant to be dead with Him, that in due time we might reign with Him, and no doubt we will: all resolve to be more faithful' in the coming year and lay down our lives faithfully in His service, even as Christ laid. down His life in the service of those He loved.

Two Services at Sydney, New South Wales,

THE Memorial was held in the Sydney Class room on Sunday, the 2nd inst. The attendance was a little less than previous years, but that can be accounted for, because several were absent through age and sickness who for past years had been with us.

At these Memorial seasons our thoughts go back to the trying hours of our Lord just before the type was passing away and the antitype was commencing. When He broke the bread, it was the symbol of His broken body, and the wine represented the blood of the New Covenant.

The disciples did not understand the significance, but with what force the meaning came to them after Pentecost, when His words came to their memory—"This do in remembrance of Me." No command, but a loving request.

The general thought amongst the Lord's people is that the end of the road to the Kingdom is near "For when ye see these things come to pass, lift up your heads and rejoice for your deliverance draweth nigh." Our prayers go up to the Throne of God that the Israel of God may be kept safe from the many delusions abroad at this time, which if possible would deceive the elect.

LAST Sunday being April 2nd, we had the Memorial at night, when there were 15 present amongst whom were two dear aged sisters who testify to God's faithfulness throughout their long lives.

In the afternoon a Brother gave a lovely talk on "The Loaf," which was full of rich thoughts. At the Memorial we were reminded of its institution, its purpose and our privileges. Our prayers were offered for others in that sacred fellowship and we realised-that, at most, not many more such meetings would be held on earth as "drinking of His cup of suffering" but, the faithful would soon join Him in drinking of the new wine of rejoicing in His Kingdom of heaven.

As we see corruption setting in more and more, we realise that the "salt" must be passing out of the earth and as we notice the various restraints being exercised in holding back the four winds of earth, there is need of running for the fadeless crown with every effort, casting aside every weight and besetting sin, as also seek to build up, encourage and comfort other pilgrims in the hope that soon the "sealing work" will be complete, and the sharp, dark night pass over and give place to that only sure panacea for poor, bleeding humanity in the establishment of "Thy Kingdom Come on earth." At the Memorial, there was such a realisation of its sacredness and the deep reverence made it so impressive.

The Cross stands high; that all the world may see
The conquest which Christ won on Calvary.
The Cross stands wide; two arms, one East one West,
To clasp the world and hold it in God's rest.

The Cross stands deep; with roots which grip the rock,
It draws in life— gives life— and bides death's shock
The Cross stands long; that all the world may know
The debt is paid which every man doth owe.

Col. 2:14, 15. (Rotherham's)

Quietness.

“In quietness and in confidence shall be your strength.--Isa.15 (Convention Address).

QUIETNESS is defined in this text as repose, rest, and to be still. It is also written in Job 34:29, “When He giveth quietness, who then can make trouble?” Those who have developed this confidence in God, fully realise that when He giveth quietness there is no one that can prevail against Him. However, we have on various occasions experienced disturbances of spirit in our daily affairs which cause that quiet disposition to depart for a time, leaving somewhat of an unrestful condition of mind. While it seems very nice to go on in a quiet tranquil march, this is not always the best way, because there does seem a necessity for stirring experiences from time to time if progress is to be made in stabilising character. So, if this experience of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price is not realised at once, we must not be discouraged. It is not only of a great price as to value, but it often costs a great price to gain. It follows successive battles, often repeated self-surrender, and multiplied trials, in which the unfailing care and love of God have been manifested.

The Apostle, speaking to the Thessalonians (1 Thee. 4:11), exhorts that “ye study to be quiet, and to do your own business.” This shows that some effort must be put forth—to strive, to labour, to be ambitious toward the disposition of quietness. The unruly type are of a disturbing spirit, and are sure to be a hindrance to growth in spiritual things. It is when we are quiet that we have the mind that will reflect and consider, and it is then that God can work upon us; this is surely the earnest longing of every sincere child of the Lord.

The strongest and most advanced in the spiritual life well know their own weakness and insufficiency; that without the constant assistance of the Lord, failure would mark all their strivings. There are forces and dangers, seen and unseen, against which none at present are equal, but the Lord in His goodness assures us that He has fully anticipated the necessities of our case and that He will lead us by His spirit and unerring wisdom. The Apostle says, “As many as are led by the spirit of God they are the sons of God.” It is this leading of the spirit that is so essential. Before one can be led of the spirit, he must possess the holy spirit, and to possess this spirit he must come into the attitude of an obedient son—submissive and quiet so that the Lord’s leading may begin and work in him.

Now, we realise that God does not perform His work mechanically, but works by promptings and inspirations. If we treat these workings with neglect, they will subside, but if in quietness and confidence we carefully obey the right, these things will, no doubt, become more powerful, and our obedience makes their effect more permanent in our characters.

There is an important point, however, that we should keep continually in mind, and that is, if we attend only to the inner working and striving of God’s holy spirit, we may possibly become confused as to what is really His; for Satan, being a wily adversary, will try and bring in something very similar that he may confuse and annoy, transforming himself into an angel of light. We should remember, therefore, that God is educating His children by three agencies—by the Word, the spirit and the providential events—and these must always agree. Whenever, therefore, we are sensing a mighty striving within our hearts, we must test it by the Word of God and His interpretation thereof on the one hand, and on the other we should await the opening of circumstances, watching unto prayer. If we follow the inner workings, without the Bible, we shall become visionaries; if we follow the inner light without awaiting the unfolding of circumstances, to at least some extent, we shall be impractical, and we realise that that which is practical weighs down technical experiences. As we are “His workmanship, created . . . unto good works,” let us ask Him to work in us, to will those good works, that we may be permeated and moulded by His will.

In harmony with the exhortation to quietness, the Scriptures inform us that “the servant of the Lord must not strive.”

Therefore, of all people, the servants of God should be the most sincere and true exponents of peace and good will amongst men. We remember our Lord’s words: “Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God.” The foundation principles of His government, which centre in the qualities of justice and love, are such that all the loyal people of God will be found on the side of true peace and quietness. It will also be true that such lovers of peace will deplore everything in the nature of contention, strife and ill will. Our Lord has been designated, most appropriately, the “Prince of Peace,” because through His administration of future affairs, He will eventually establish peace on earth and all shall dwell in quietness and confidence; no one will be able to make them afraid. Thus, He pronounced His benediction upon those who are real peacemakers.

While this is one aspect of the matter, and truthfully so, yet we are given to understand that peace is not the all-important thing. Our Lord taught this in word and in deed; His words in Matt. 10:34, are, “Think not that I come to send peace on earth; I came not to send peace but a sword.” When the two lines of thought are viewed in the light of the circumstances, and of the development of the Divine Plan, they are seen to be in full accord. Our Lord, as the chief representative of Jehovah, came, as He said, to bear witness to the truth of the Divine character and plan. He knew that as He appeared upon the earth His faithful ministry would at once antagonise the powers of darkness operated by Satan. As our Lord explained, the darkness of sin and error is in direct antagonism to the light of truth, and, consequently, when His people let their light shine so as to glorify their Father in heaven, the effect upon the darkened world is to awaken opposition, because the effect of the light is to make manifest the evils of darkness, which would not otherwise appear, and thus to disturb and make uncomfortable those in sympathy with darkness.

All the way down through the Gospel Age those who have been burning and shining lights in the world have been hated and persecuted, largely and chiefly, almost exclusively, by those who had some light, but whose light was darkness in comparison with the great light of the holy spirit shining in and through the Lord's fully consecrated ones. Our Lord's testimony is fulfilled—"If they have hated Me, they will also hate you." "Whoever will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution."

Therefore, the reason is manifest why the Lord's people appear at times to be acting and ministering along lines that do not bring harmonious results, just as in the case of our Lord and the Apostles. The truth people, throughout the age, have appeared to be promoters of controversy, while all the time they have been the greatest admirers and lovers of peace, though they do not love peace at any price. They are taught that the truth and the principles thereof are more important, and these should be defended, even though it means that peace and harmony seem to be disturbed at times. Real truth is of a controversial character during this dark time of the reign of evil, and it would appear that no truth could be presented, but what would be disputed and rejected by the great majority.

It was not the mission of our Lord to rule the world, nor to judge it, at His first advent, and so the Apostle assures us that we are not to judge the world now, but on the contrary, to go on quietly "filling up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ." While we are to do good unto all men, as we have opportunity, our service is to be specially to the household of faith, expended chiefly and directly upon the members of the Body of Christ, building one another up in the faith.

In the quiet life of a Christian, a great amount of love, tolerance and forbearance should be exercised. As those who bear the true light examine their own hearts and motives, they should find a deep desire to promote only peace and harmony, and should deplore everything in the nature of strife and contention, ever seeking to keep the Apostle's admonition before the mind—"The servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle unto all men." Hence, such will desire to preserve in their own hearts the essence of true humility and reverence, and to keep themselves free from all disposition to run ahead of the Lord, or to speak where His Word does not speak. The ambassador of the Lord will ever acknowledge his own weakness and insufficiency and will continually rely upon the assistance of the Lord's promised grace, upon the wisdom from above, and thus, keeping on quietly with confidence, so shall his strength be.

The Apostle's words, "study to be quiet," is advice of the soundest. Even in temporal affairs, it has great weight amongst intelligent people, who will take more heed of one with few words and to the point. The wise man exhorts (Eccles. 2, 3), "Let thy words be few," and "A fool's voice is known by a multitude of words." The Apostle Peter also says, "Let it be the hidden man of the heart, a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price" (1 Pet. 2:3). At the same time the Christian must "fight the good fight," and while we all know that a fight is not quiet, generally, it is accompanied with a great deal of noise and striving to get power over the opponent, yet, here is a fight that is to be conducted in a quiet manner, in which the Christian is to gain power over himself, in subduing the unruly elements that rise up within and try to gain the mastery.

We all learn, as did the Apostles, that the securing of the approval of the Lord for a place in His glorified Body is a matter of time and experience, obtained only by keeping steadily on, not in fits and starts, but by persevering efforts, perhaps painful at times, which will make the lessons more precious to us. The lessons imparted to us must all be appropriated in such a way as to work out the desired results.

When the Apostle wrote to the Philippians, he said that he did not count himself as having "already attained," which means that he had not yet arrived at the goal and won the prize; neither did he consider himself as "already perfect"—he had not then attained what to him was the full Measure of character development. Yet, some might ask, Who could make better claims to having attained perfection than the Apostle Paul? Who has surpassed him in love and zeal and self-denial and true devotedness to the service of God? Who has more elevated views of God and of the plan of salvation? Who lived nearer to God than He? It would be extraordinary piety which surpasses that of the Apostle, and anyone who lays claim to a degree of holiness, which even he did not, gives little evidence that he has any true knowledge of himself, or has ever been imbued with the true humility which the Gospel produces. Then, in hope of ultimately succeeding, the Apostle writes, "Brethren, I count not myself yet to have laid hold, but one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before, I press on toward the goal, unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

The Apostle, in speaking of this prize, expresses his full appreciation of his opportunity to gain it, as something of great value—worthy of laying hold upon. Christian development, then, should be steady and continuous. We are to be more filled with the spirit, and fully realise that the adornment of a meek and quiet spirit is of great price in the sight of God.

Bible Stories for Children.

In last month's issue reference was made in the correspondence (page 32) to Bible Stories for Children, written by a Sister in Canada, and kindly supplied for use amongst the brethren. It was suggested that probably many of our friends would desire copies, and if sufficient were required, the Stories could be put into booklet form. It is nice to hear from those friends who have ordered copies, and no doubt many more would desire them if they realised the value of these . stories for their young people.

There has been difficulty in the past in procuring truth literature for children, but these stories of about 150 pages of typed articles should prove most helpful in the stories where the Lord is revered and His Word taught to the young members.

All interested and desiring copies are, n asked to communicate as early as possible, stating the number required. The cost, if any, would be to cover paper and postage.

Lord Grant Our Worship.

Heb. 10:24, 25. (Rotherham)

Lord, grant our worship every day may he
A thing sincere, acceptable to thee ;
Help us to he the song of praise we sing,
And by our deeds to prove we serve the King.

Strengthen our will to do the thing we know,
And in the doing let our knowledge grow;
So may our mind each day have added light,
So may we learn to do Thy will aright.

Quicken our faith that in Thy love we may
Work out the good we ask, for day by day;
Thus may we prove Thy love to those around,
When we the secret of that love have found.

Lord, may Thy spirit touch with sacred fire;
The altar of our heart, and wake desire;
That we may be acceptable to Thee
In prayer and deed, and all we wish to be.

CHRISTIAN ALTERNATIVES

IT sometimes helps to make Truth clearer and bring home to our hearts its importance by considering some of the great verities of our faith in their negative aspect. This method is frequently employed in the Scriptures and Truth seems to shine out brighter when we consider sometimes what might have been, if one thing or event had not happened, or if the other thing had happened.

How often, even in our daily lives that little word "IF" forces us to make important decisions with far-reaching consequences. This little conjunction "if" serves somewhat the same purpose as a hinge does to a door; it will either admit you or shut pin out. This little word contains tremendous power.

After we have exercised faith and consecration, it may be said that our whole sanctification and future glorification depends on that little word "if" The Apostle Peter says so—"If ye do these things ye shall never fall," (2 Pet. 1:10), but, if not, what then? "Then he is blind and cannot see afar off," —he is unfruitful. (2 Pet. 1:8, 9.)

The same was true of natural Israel. Whether they would be a holy nation—God's own people—depended also on that little word "if." "If ye will keep my commandments and statutes . . . then ye shall be a holy nation, high above all nations." etc. (Dent. 11:22-28.) In Deut. 28, there are sixty-eight verses which state the blessings coming to them if obedient to God's law and the curses if they were disobedient. So, again it is "if" ye do, or "if" ye do not.

In Dan. 3:13-25 we have an account of King Nebuchadnezzar and the three Hebrews. In this story we have faith's alternative. Faith answered the king and said, "We have no need to answer thee in this matter. If it be so, our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the burning, fiery furnace, and He will deliver us out of thy hand, O king. But if not, be it known unto thee, O king, that we shall not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up."

If these Hebrews had acted at that critical time as all the people of Babylon acted, how different the story would have been; possibly their names would not even have been mentioned. There would be so much less to encourage the faith of future righteous men and women. There would be so much less for Christians to rejoice in; fewer examples to which we may point, or on which to meditate, if these faithful three had denied the true God at the last moment. There would be fewer words in the book of Hebrews,— "Quenched the violence of fire," would not be there, and who can measure the weight of influence their decision and example of faith had to do with the victories of the faithful martyrs, over the Papacy and its idol worship, and errors, in the dark ages, when many suffered the violence of 'literal' fire and were not delivered. Who can doubt that these words, “if” and “if not,” were the deciding factor in their battle with Babylon the Great. If we would contribute something to, future generations, let us also make firm, unchangeable decisions for Truth..

Consider, if Moses had preferred the treasures of Egypt and its pleasures as greater treasures than the promises of the Messiah, what a gap there would be; how different would be the history of the Jews, and what a loss to us. Take Moses out of the purposes of God, then we and Israel of old would have so much less to encourage us and in which to glory; so much less to contemplate, less light to guide us on our way and to interpret the Scriptures. If Moses had not existed, or if he had preferred Egypt, then our Bible would be much smaller.

There is one great vital subject in the Bible where the negative side is discussed, only in a few Words, yet it is made to hinge upon that little word “if.” It appears six times in seven verses and if it were true, it would be appalling, a dreadful disaster, not only to the Christian but to every individual. But if it is not true, then, joy knows no end, for our joy is based on and springs out of that very fundamental truth. This is found in 1 Cor,15:12-19. “If Christ risen”—what a calamity. “If there be ‘resurrection’; “If so be the dead rise not” ;””,If in •this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable,” etc. “If Christ is not risen,” what despair, what disappointment, as we would contemplate the inevitable ,doom of all, our hopes. Neither the Apostle Peter, nor any, of the. Apostles; would have written of their “glorious hope, or thanked God “for ‘His abundant mercy, who hath betotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from-. the dead.” (1 Pet. 1:3.)

To us, now, it would mean our faith is in vain, being still in sins and condemnation,, and all that are asleep have perished. Eternal ‘death spreads itself and settles down, embracing all, in blackness and darkness for ever. Then the present night of sorrow .and weeping and pain cannot be pierced with rays of ,hope, light or consolation. Man’s life of a few days and full of trouble must remain forever an unexplained, a locked mystery, and there would be no answer to Job’s complaint and question—
”Wherefore, then, hast Thou brought me forth? . . . Oh that I had given up the spirit . . . I should have been as though I had not been,” etc. (Job’ 10:18-21.) Surely, life would be a tragedy “IF Christ is not risen.”

Suppose you could be elevated to some high position above the earth, and from there distinctly see and watch the scene on the earth as it revolves every twenty-four hours. What do you think you would see? Perhaps one would see it through the eyes of Isaiah, and “Behold, the darkness covers the earth and gross darkness the people.” (Isa. 60:1.) Another would see it through the eyes of the Prophet Joel and behold “preparations for war . . . beating their plowshares into swords and pruning hooks into spears.” (Joel 3:8-12.) You would see that the nations are angry; they are all assembling together for battle. You would exclaim in the language of the Apostle Paul, “A groaning creation, groaning and travailing in pain together until now.” (Rom.. 8:22.)

What a view of misery, woe, anguish, degradation, oppression, hatred, cruelty and death you would witness among mankind, and the only change you can see in this scene is that at frequent intervals and places there are special, intensified outbursts of calamities, and religious hatred and intolerance, slaughter and oppression, and know that this has continued practically six thousand years, and^ must continue to all eternity, or end in self-destruction--”IF”—”If Christ is not risen.”

What a colossal mistake to bring into existence a race of intelligent beings possessed of instinctive longing for fulness of life, worship, freedom and happiness, if they can never be satisfied; far better, we Would tell the atheist, had the human race never existed.

Since the days of righteous Abel there have been men and women who loved right principle and purity, and who have', suffered persecutions and shamefully cruel deaths, and if Christ is not risen, or "If there be no resurrection," what shall we say of these? Surely we would have to come to the same conclusion as the Apostle Paul,—"If in this life only we have hope in Christ, then all is vain," --they have perished forever. "If the dead" rise not, let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die," (1 Cor. 15:32.)

"If Christ is not risen," then there is nothing to glorify our common task. It would be the end of all hope, life would become a tragedy, the sacrifices and 'self-denials to attain sanctification would be a wasted, fanatical life, for if such sacrifices and faithfulness cannot be rewarded with a "better resurrection," then all has been vain, our hopes have perished with us. ,

Then, the angels, "who aid the righteous with friendly arm and guard us on our way," must also sigh in despair. On the occasion of the creation of man upon the earth we read, "The morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy. (Job 38:7.) The vast spaces of heaven rang with jubilations, but "If Christ is not risen," then their service for us is wasted, they see nothing for the future but a desolate earth, a silent heaven.

"If Christ is not risen," then we would have no New Testament, except perhaps the story of Jesus' life of courage, good works and power, but nothing on which to base our future hope; our hymns and spiritual songs would be void of comfort or consolation. Our mind is staggered at those things that are swept away; we must sorrow for the dead as others who have no hope, while in our ears the mocking voice is heard, "He is not risen." The destructive work of St. Paul's "if" is complete; there would be no message for despairing and broken hearts.

And to the world, this little word "if" hangs, as it were, as a curtain hiding the scene on the stage. How mankind waits and longs for the curtain to be raised, "waiting and groaning for the manifestation of the sons of God." If there is a God, they say, why are such dreadful calamities and inhuman cruelties allowed. "Man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn."

But faith takes the "if" out, and to us all is clear. "Christ is risen," and "The glory of the Lord shall be revealed and all flesh shall see it together, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it:" (Isa. 40:5.) What a consolation! There has been advocated among men various ideas or theories of Utopia—various attempts have been made to bring in just, equal and better conditions, with peace and goodwill, but they have ended in disappointment. Their theories hinged upon that little word, "if." "If only you would do as we advocate," which is really an admission of doubt and lack of power to establish their Utopia.

But the Utopia or Millennium of which the Bible speaks will know no defeat, for it will not be introduced by man's will or power, but the Lord speaking by the mouth of the Prophet Isaiah says, "I am God and there is none else. Declaring the end from the beginning and from ancient times the things not yet done, saying, I will do all my pleasure . . . yea I have spoken it, I will also bring it to pass; I have purposed it, I will also do it." (Isa 46:9-11, Also Isa. 45:22, 23.)

The Millennial rule of justice and love shall be established. That does not mean universal salvation for every individual, regardless of obedience to that righteous rule. No, the Lord leaves salvation to the individual choice and free-will. The Prophet Ezekiel tells us this when he wrote of the laws to be established during that golden age. See Ezek. 18:1-32.

The same alternatives are placed before the Christians now. "If we be dead with Him (Jesus) we shall also live with Him. If we suffer we shall also reign with Him; if we deny Him, He also will deny us. If we believe not, yet He abides faithful." (2 Tim. 2:11-13.) Jesus also said that we would be His disciples only "If ye continue in my word." (John 8:31.) In John 15 some alternatives are brought to our attention by our Lord. Verse 6: "If a man abide not in me he is cast forth as a branch." Verse 7: "If ye abide in me and

.my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you.” Verse 10: “If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love.” Verse 14: “Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you.”

In 2 Pet. 1:5-11 the Apostle Peter refers us to character development, but only “If ye do these things ye shall never fall.” One wonders what use the advocates of the Universalist theory have for this little word “if” That doctrine would have us believe that such a word, which is fraught with such consequences, does not occur in the teachings of our Lord and the Apostles. But to us the Word has spoken with Divine authority. If ye are obedient, or if disobedient, eternal decision will follow. So “Remember well this little word,

A word so small is seldom heard,
But on it rests success or fall,
To heed it not we lose our all.

‘Tis IF we ‘will’ and IF we ‘love,’
That links us to our Lord above.
“To wondrous heights we may attain:
But then we must with heart and main

Consider well—not overlook
This little word found in God’s Book.
So if from heart of love we give,
It tokens well that we shall live.”.

“If ye do these things ye shall never fall.” (2 Pet. 1:10, 11.)

ONCE again the twelve month's term for the Berean Bible Institute . is completed. In reviewing another year it is with much gratitude and thankfulness of heart to the Giver of every good thing for the many privileges and blessings bestowed in connection with the work of the Institute in co-operation with the dear brethren generally. By the Lord's over-ruling providence the work has continued as in past years, with some variations according to opportunities and circumstances.

The monthly "People's Paper" has again served as a means of contact with a nice number of friends and it is encouraging to know that its message has been helpful and is appreciated by our readers. The articles for the "Paper" are contributed by a number of brethren, whose services in this way are much appreciated. While the subscriptions have shown an increase over the past year, the "People's Paper" is far from being self-supporting, the balance being made up from, the Tract Fund. Quite a number are on the free list, and these are gladly supplied so long as our funds permit; a request every twelve months to be kept on the free list is desired, as by this arrangement we are sure the journal is being read with appreciation. Additional subscribers are welcome, and those friends able to assist in this way are supplied with extra copies of the "Paper" for passing out as samples. Lists of names and addresses sent in also receive attention with three months trial issues, free. All the friends are invited to assist in extending the message of truth contained in the "People's Paper" wherever possible.

The call for general literature published by the Institute and that stocked from overseas has been maintained. During the past year another edition of the "Daily Heavenly Manna" has been published; this little book is a favourite in other lands as well as in this country. The "Poems of Dawn" has also been produced and is appreciated by many.

A good quantity of the helpful Bible Studies—books and booklets—has been supplied throughout the year. Those friends able to devote time to colporteur work should not overlook this privilege of service; particulars are available to all enquiring.

The distribution of tracts has continued, some thousands having been forwarded to willing workers and by this means the message of truth has brought a blessing to a nice number, and no doubt much more good has been done without visible results. All Who are rejoicing in God's plan of salvation, should surely desire to pass on the glad message to others, and having a supply of tracts always at hand is 'a Means to this end. The tracts are supplied free to all who will use them wisely..

Over the past year, the use of what is termed Kingdom Cards has been tried, to encourage people to send for the free literature, and has brought some good results. From about 20,000 cards distributed in ten months, sixty enquiries have been received, and Sortie who have come in' contact with us by this means are now rejoicing in the truth fully and are regular readers. These cards are for general use, and all the friends are advised to make use of this opportunity of witnessing.

In more recent months, another card, known as he. Consolation Card, has been made available for the benefit of bereaved persons. A number of these has been used by the brethren and have brought in 14 enquiries for literature to the present time, and no doubt the message of hope has been a comfort to those who have lost loved ones. Supplies of these cards are on hand for all who are able to place them in the hands of the bereaved, either in person or through the post. In using the news papers or directories for either the Consolation or Kingdom Cards, it is well for the friends in each locality to combine their efforts in order to avoid duplication of names.,

The insertion of free literature coupons in the newspapers has not been overlooked. Some Classes and individual brethren have continued to witness in this way, with the result that 55 enquiries have reached us for booklets and papers. This is also encouraging, especially as some have been brought to a knowledge of the truth by this means. All able. to co-operate in this form of service wilt be supplied with samples of coupons that have already been used to good advantage.

A further increase in correspondence has been in evidence over the 'past year, and the words of encouragement are appreciated. It is a pleasure to hear from the friends regularly, and we assure all of sincere interest in their well-being, and desire to be, of all possible help in supplying their needs both for personal use and in the witness work.

As 'usual, the Tract Fund Account shows the amount 'of donations received for the general work over the' twelve 'Months, as well as the expenses met for the same 'Period. The loving, voluntary assistance from the brethren, in the Lord's providence, lids enabled all calls for literature to be met, and it represents much self-sacrifice on the part of those friends who have helped the work in this way, as unto the Lord. It will be noticed that the credit balance of £13/3/8 at this time last year is now practically exhausted. The supplying of Kingdom Cards, and also free booklets, to the enquirers from the paper advertisements has meant extra expense, but it is felt that the results have fully justified the extra outlay. It is with confidence that another year is entered upon, realising that the provision will be sufficient to meet the needs of the Lord's work, in which it may be our privilege to engage, in co-operation with the brethren generally.

While the world outlook is dark and gloomy indeed from the human standpoint, yet, from the Lord's standpoint, which is the Christian's standpoint, it is brighter than this time last year, because we are this much nearer the fruition of our hopes, as also the hope for the poor, groaning creation. May it be that the dear brethren may seek to draw the nearer to the Lord in the days ahead, knowing that He is indeed "our refuge and strength," and will deliver His people at a time and in a manner that will, be in their best interests and to His own praise and glory. In the meantime it is the privilege of all who arc His to serve His cause in every way possible, using their every talent —"while it is day: for the night_ cometh, when no man can work." The prayers of the brethren on our account are warmly appreciated, and a continuance of same is requested, to the end that the Lord's will may be done in all things, assuring all the dear friends, known and unknown, of remembrance before the throne of grace for their highest welfare. "God is not unrighteous- to forget your work and labour of love, which ye have showed toward His name, in that ye have ministered to the saints and do minister."

The response to the notice in last month's issue, respecting the above has been very gratifying, and the work of producing the stories in booklet form will go ahead in the near future, No doubt the helpful explanations of the truth in simple language will appeal to all, Further orders may be placed as desired, and the cost for materials, etc., will be stated in next month's issue, D.V.

Question Box.

Question.—What is or will be the sign of the Son of Man in heaven?—Matt 24:30.

Answer.—The Lord is here dealing with the questions in verse 3 of this chapter and in this 30th verse particularly with the indication of His second presence (parousia) as requested by the disciples—"What shall be the sign (indication or proof) of Thy presence," (parousia).

The Lord had in previous verses given a short synopsis of the history of the Gospel Age as it would affect the Church, and in verse 29 He foretold of the darkening of the sun and moon and falling of the stars. That did not mean the literal sun, moon or stars, but that the Gospel light (sun) would be darkened, and the moon (the Law) would not give her light. This has already been fulfilled; the light of the Gospel has been darkened by teachings of higher criticism, evolution, Christian Science, Spiritism and many theories of men posing as preachers of the Gospel, as well as the false doctrines adopted by the Church of Rome during the dark ages. All these teachings have obscured the light of the Gospel of Christ, as also of the Law and the prophets.

In verse 30 the Lord appears to have reference to a particular indication of His actual second presence. It is a sign, not in the literal sky, but in the religious elements of society ("heaven")—something that would occur when He shall have again arrived, to prepare for taking His great power to reign. Verse 31 informs us what work will proceed as the first indication of His presence. "He shall send his angels (messengers) with a great trumpet, and they shall gather together His elect from one end of heaven to the other." That shows what "heaven" is meant, for the elect are still on earth, but while in the world (on the earth) they are not of the world,—they "sit with Christ in the heavenlies." Eph. 1:3. The trumpet is not a literal trumpet, but means a special call; it is a great proclamation of truth—the Word of God—which is as the sickle in the Harvest to gather the wheat into the garner.

This work at the second presence is foretold by our Lord in His parables; see, for instance, Matt. 13:47-49, also verses 38-43. The parables of Matt. 25 illustrate the phases of work to be accomplished during the second presence of Christ, explaining the Lord's discourse of Matt. 24. The first parable of the Ten Virgins shows the condition of believers at the coming of Christ; many were not properly prepared and could not recognise His presence until it was too late to enter into the feast. The next parable shows that the Lord has a work to do with His elect in apportioning positions for the work of the Kingdom. The third parable shows the work of dealing with all the rest of mankind during the Kingdom Age.

So, the sign of the Son of Man in the heaven would be that a work would proceed of dividing or separating the wheat from the tares,—a gathering of His elect by a proclamation of truth. "Where the carcass is there the eagles (class) will be." Such a work has been going on for many years; many have had to leave the various churches, because there was no food there. They heard the trumpet sound and gathered to the carcass in small or large companies, wherever the feast was spread. The feast was promised in Luke 12:35-40,—":He will gird himself and make them to sit down to meat and will conic and serve them." See also Rev. 3:20. That this work is and has been in process for many years is, we believe, the indication in the heaven (the religious phase of society), the sign (indication or proof) of the Lord's presence.

Gladness of Heart.

The Lord wants His people to be a joyful people, and the joy of the Lord is the strength of His people. There is nothing more attractive and inviting than a glad and joyful Christian. So we should see to it that our souls are kept happy in the Lord and enjoy gladness of heart which the Lord (who was anointed with joy and gladness above His fellows) wants to put into our hearts.

Extracts from a Memorial Address.

(Held over from last issue)

HOW clearly the Apostle identifies our Lord with the Passover Lamb. he says, "Christ our passover is sacrificed for us: therefore let us keep the feast." (1 Cor. a:7, 8.) There is special force in the Apostle's words; our Saviour is not the world's passover, but the Church's passover. All Israel pictured the world of mankind under the bondage of sin and death, the great taskmaster in the type being Pharaoh, in the antitype Satan. So, all of the church of the firstborn (pictured in the firstborn of Israel) need the blood of sprinkling upon their hearts, to appropriate to themselves the merit of Christ, the value of His sacrifice. Also, they must eat of the unleavened bread 'of truth if they would be strong and ready for deliverance and the work of the new dispensation. Thus, do we put on Christ, not only by faith but more and more as we are transformed into His image in heart and life.

No wonder our Lord chose as His memorial that which represented what was in His and in God's estimation His mightiest work—His sin-offering on our behalf—and that which His real followers, and they alone, would appreciate more than any other feature of His mission. True, His followers would have appreciated something commemorative of His wonderful words or works, but the worldly also could have appreciated these things. But not so the value of His death as our ransom sacrifice, the basis of our reconciliation and atonement, which has never yet been fully apprehended by any but the consecrated little flock—the elect. It was for these that the remembrancer was arranged and instituted, and though a Judas was present, he was given a sop and went out from the others before the supper was ended, thus possibly representing that in the close of this age, before the little flock will have finished their part of having fellowship with their Lord in His sufferings, the sop of truth will have become so strong, as to drive forth, from the company and communion of the faithful, all who do not rightly appreciate and value the ransom accomplished by the Lamb of God, for the taking away of the sins of the world.

It was by the giving of His life as a ransom for the life of the Adamic race, which sin had forfeited, that a right to life might come to men through faith and obedience under the New Covenant. The shed blood was a ransom for all, provided by the Lord Himself, but His act of handing the cup to His disciples and asking them to drink of it, was an invitation to them to become partakers of His sufferings, or as Paul expresses it—"To fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ."

On the occasion of the institution of the memorial of His death and in conversation with His disciples, the Lord said, "I will not drink 'henceforth of the fruit of the vine until that day when I drink it with you in my Father's kingdom." Thus, He contrasted two great days, the day of sufferings and the day of glory. The Gospel 'Age is the day of suffering and the Kingdom Age is the day of glory. Thus the cup of wine would represent not only the crushing of the grapes, but also the exhilaration that comes as a result. So, in our drinking of the literal cup, it symbolises to us our Saviour's sufferings and death, and our own participation with Him in those sufferings, "If we suffer with Him, we shall also reign with Him." We joyfully accept His invitation to drink of His cup and not until His sufferings are complete—the cup drained to the Last—shall we receive the other cup of Kingdom joys.

The Words of Jesus.

“All wondered at the gracious words that proceeded out of his mouth.—Luke 4:22.

THE question is, how far do the teachings, dogmas and creeds of the churches, Roman Catholic and Protestant, Anglican or Non-conformist, represent the words, the teachings of Jesus? Jesus said, “He who hath seen me hath seen the Father.” God was manifested in the life of Jesus; that is, that the character of the Father, His disposition, was revealed in Jesus’ life and words. 1 John 1:2 says, “For the life was manifested and we have seen it and bear witness and show unto you that eternal life which was with the Father and was manifested unto us.” See also John 1:14, 18. How truly the Psalmist (Psa. 45) also wrote of Him,—“Grace is poured into thy lips.”

No wonder Mary loved to sit at His feet and listen to His wonderful and gracious utterances; of the “Good Samaritan” for instance, which Parable showed how the priest and Levite, the leaders of the worship of God, passed by the wounded man in their pride, while the Samaritan, apart from the commonwealth of Israel, showed mercy. Then, too, how the Parable of the Prodigal Son and the benevolent, merciful and gracious father was given to illustrate the yearning heart of the great Creator—the Heavenly Father—yearning for the return of the sinner—even going to meet him at the least indication of repentance and return, and to make merry, to kill the fatted calf and make a feast for the occasion. The complaint of the elder brother shows that the father, who was the one sinned against, was ever so much kinder, gracious and forgiving than even fellow Christians may be. (Rom. 5:8.) The feast reminds one again of the words, “Joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety-nine just persons that need no repentance.” (Luke 15:7.)

Recently listening to the Roman Catholic Requiem Mass on the occasion of the death of the late Prime Minister, one was struck with the inconsistency. Does the Heavenly Father who “commendeth His love toward us, in that while we were • yet sinners Christ died for us”; who sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins, require to be pleaded with mutterings and groanings in long mournful song, like a dirge, to receive a soul into eternal rest? That would be very unlike the father of the prodigal son. Surely if “God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son,” He would be like the father of the prodigal, ready to meet him and welcome the believer home.

As it happened, a day or two previously, we had heard the oratorio “Elijah,” and the direful groanings, like the howling of dogs, of the priests in the Requiem Mass just made one think of the howling, screaming and groanings of the prophets of Baal.

In view of the fact that God so loved the members in Christ—indeed also all mankind—in that He “spared not His own Son but freely delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him, freely give us all things?” “Who shall lay anything to the charge of God’s elect, it is God that justifieth.” (Rom. 8:31-33.) God has justified and imputed the righteousness of Christ to His saints and loves the members of His Church even as He hath loved the Son, and so much more than any earthly father loves his children, being “more willing to give the best gifts to them that ask Him.” (Luke 11:13; Matt. 7:11.) How foolish, in view of the revealed disposition of God as shown in His Word and by His Son and the Apostles, is all this mummary and wailing in the man made ceremony of the dark ages of ignorance and superstition—the Requiem Mass.

This great, false ceremony is supposed to be based upon the emblems used by our Lord “on the night in which He was betrayed,” but such was very far from any intention of Jesus. He had just partaken of the Passover Supper, which was a memorial of the deliverance of the first-borns of Israel in Egypt. Now, there would be no need for this memorial to be observed any more, for the great antitype of the Passover lamb was now to be slain. “Christ our Passover is slain for us”—the Church of the firstborn, says Paul. (1.

Cur. 5:7, 8; Heb. 12:23.) So, Jesus gave the disciples these simple tokens, so full of meaning, to partake of just once a year, to remember His sacrifice for us. "As oft as ye do this (annual Passover), do it in remembrance of Me." It is no longer needed in regard to the type because the antitype has taken its place, and there is no need for any officiating clergy; any two or three gathered together may "do this."

The love of God, declared by Himself and manifested in His Son and revealed in all His works, words and promises, is incompatible with this doctrine of the Mass, or with purgatory or eternal torture. The real purpose of God has been hidden by such paganish doctrines; there is nothing about such teachings in the words of Jesus, the Apostles and Prophets. If we lay aside the doctrines and dogmas of men and go to the Word of God the truth may be seen and a purpose regarding the human race revealed to the earnest enquirer that will satisfy any reasonable, honest heart and mind.

"The Son of Man came to give His life a ransom for many." (Mark 10:45.) "My flesh I give for the life of the world." (John 6:51); that is, that Jesus came to pay the penalty of sin under which humanity is born, for "by one man sin entered into the world and death by sin, so death (penalty) passed upon all men." (Rom. 5.) The dogma from the dark ages says that the wages of sin is eternal torture, but the Bible says, "the wages of sin is death." (Rom. 6:23.) Jesus (did not suffer eternal torture in order to pay the penalty for sin, but "Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures," (1 Cor. 15:3.) So, the doctrine of eternal torture denies the efficacy of the cross of Christ. This God-dishonouring doctrine is based on the pagan teaching, or shall we go back to the beginning, on the lie which Satan, "who was a liar from the beginning," declared when he said, "Thou shalt not surely die." The teaching of the inherent immortality of the soul was promulgated in the time of Isis at Babylon, supported by Plato and adopted by the false Roman Church and along with eternal torment and purgatory, brought great wealth to Papacy.

The usual church teachings are based upon the thought that man has something in him called "soul" that cannot die, but the Bible says "the soul that sinneth it shall die." Jesus said, "Fear not them that may destroy the body but cannot destroy the soul (the being—the personality—they cannot prevent the resurrection of the individual) but fear Him who is able to destroy both body and soul in Gehenna," (destroy forever in the second death). There is no passage in the Bible that speaks of the soul as being immortal. Indeed, the Apostle in 1 Tim. 6:16, tells us that God "only hath immortality." Immortality (life in oneself) was primarily, then, only possessed by the Heavenly Father. Then Jesus, because of His faithfulness unto death, was highly exalted, even to the Divine nature—immortality. He says (John 5:26), "As the Father hath life in Himself, so hath He given to the Son to have life in Himself." Isaiah 53:1, 12 prophesies that this would be the reward of Jesus. "Therefore wilt I divide him a portion with the great (God) and he shall divide the spoil with the strong, because he hath poured out his soul unto death."

Our Lord was with the Father in the beginning; see John 1:1-3, Greek text. "In the beginning was the Logos (Word) and the Logos was with the God and a god was the Logos." The Logos, the only begotten of the Father, the Archangel Michael (Dan. 10:13, 21; 12:1), offered Himself to be "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." That is, the arrangement was made that He would leave "the glory which He had with the Father before the world was," and by His death purchase the human race, which, it was foreknown, would forfeit life, by sin. He became man, was made flesh and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. So it was that "He gave Himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time." The first Adam sinned and brought death upon all, Christ offered Himself as a corresponding price, a perfect man, thus redeeming Adam and all his posterity and in due time will return in power and glory to restore all the willing and obedient to perfect manhood by a course of judgments, during His thousand year reign over the earth. So our Lord "poured out His soul unto death," "He made His soul an offering for sin." (Isa. 53.) "He bore our sins on the tree," says Peter. "He died, rose and revived that He might be Lord (owner) of the dead and the living." (Rom. 14:9.) There would be no use being owner or Lord of the dead, if they were always to stay dead, but Jesus declares, John 5:28, "Marvel not at this for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear His voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good (believers) unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto a resurrection of judgments"; i.e., a time when they will have a trial and if they are obedient they will be rewarded, while the disobedient will receive punishments of correction and may go up the highway of holiness (Isa. 35) and receive the reward of everlasting, earthly life. That is the hope of the world generally, but the Church, those who walk in the steps of Christ now, during this Gospel Age, have a heavenly hope—to be like Christ, spiritual beings in the heavens.

So, the Scripture declares that because of our Lord's suffering and death, "God hath highly exalted Him and given Him a name above every name that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow." And the Apostle, in 1 Cor. 15:

21-24, informs us that when Christ has brought the world back to righteousness and health and life, that He will hand over the Kingdom to God, the whole work accomplished, the whole earth restored like the Garden of Eden—the earth, which is God's footstool, made glorious, and the knowledge of the glory of the Lord shall fill the earth as the waters fill the great deep, "for all shall know the Lord from the least to the greatest." (1 Cor. 15:25-28.)

"No place shall be in that new earth
For all that mars this universe;
No evil taint the second birth—
There shall be no more curse.

"Ye broken-hearted cease your moan,
The clay of promise dawns for you;
For He who sits upon the throne
Says, 'I make all things new' "

The churches' doctrine is that Jesus is God; that when Jesus died on the cross it was God who died, but such teaching is foolish—all acknowledge that it is incomprehensible. Jesus at no time ever claimed to be God; He continually referred to the fact that "He was sent of God," and "the Son of God." He said, "My Father is greater than I," and prayed to the Father. How foolish to think that Jesus would pray to Himself—that He would say to Himself, "Let this cup pass from me, 'nevertheless, not my will, but Thine be done,'"—two wills, but one quite submissive to the other. How Jesus' loyalty abounds in such expressions as—"It is not I that do the works, but my Father." "The words that I speak, are not mine but my Father's." "As the Father gave me commandment, so I do." "I have kept my Father's commandments and abide in His love," etc. Then on the cross He cried, "My God! My God! Why hast Thou forsaken me." At His ascension He said, "I ascend to my Father and your Father; to my God and your God."

Not until we are prepared to accept the words of Jesus, the teachings of the Apostles and of the Law and the Prophets can we fully appreciate the beauty and fulness of the Word of God.. The false teachings of the dark ages have been the means by which "the god of this world has blinded the minds of them that believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them." Why should the churches hold in such reverence those doctrines which have no Scriptural foundation and teachings which will neither stand the tests of reason or sense or Divine authority and which only cause confusion and hinder any clear understanding of God's purposes or harmonious understanding of the Bible and which are responsible for so much infidelity and indifference to religion to-day ? "To the Law and to the Testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

Surely the great need to-day is to get away from human theories and creedal fences back to the Bible and to the liberty of individual judgment and freedom to serve God in the spirit and in truth according to conscience. In the dark ages, when there were no Bibles available, and when even few of the clergy knew anything of it, the church dignitaries assumed authority to dictate creeds, dogmas and ceremonies, but now that everyone may possess a Bible gratis, if unable to pay for it, there can be little excuse for ignorance of the simple, beautiful and reasonable doctrines of Jesus, the Apostles and Prophets. It is indeed strange how many intelligent people, who are capable in worldly matters, can accept the unreasonable teachings of church creeds,

Working Out Our Salvation.

(Convention Address) Phil. 2:12, 13.

PAUL is here addressing the Church, not the world. The world is not now on trial for salvation. This exhortation is applicable only to those whose sins have been forgiven, and who through Christ have been brought into a special relationship with God. This class alone is able to appreciate the import of the Apostle's words.

In the chapter from which our text is taken, the Apostle Paul pays a beautiful tribute to the church at Phillippi.

He refers in tender and loving terms to their obedience always to his instruction and counsel, not only when he was present with them, but likewise in his absence. He urges them to continued faithfulness and earnestness in this good way. He desires that they make still further progress in the Master's likeness, working out in themselves through humility and obedience the character development necessary, with fear and trembling, doing their part in the attainment of the salvation to which they had been called in Christ.

While addressed to the church at Phillippi the Apostle's words come down to us to-day no less forcibly. How wonderfully the Lord blessed the Apostle's writings, and used them for the benefit of the entire Church from Paul's day right down to the present time. They apply to all the sanctified in Christ Jesus. He reminds us, as he did the Phillippian church, that we are to "work out our salvation."

The question arises — Does this exhortation to work out our own salvation conflict with Paul's other statement, that our salvation "is not of works, lest any man should boast"? We reply: No, our salvation from death is entirely by faith. As fallen, human creatures we have no opportunity of doing any works that would justify us before God. Until we have been accepted into God's family no works that we could do would be acceptable. God, who is perfect, is not pleased to receive anything imperfect, either works or anything else. But when we have received the forgiveness of our sins—not by works, but by faith — and have become sons of God, through consecration and spirit-begetting, then comes the time when we can do acceptable works; for we are then members of the Lord's family, and the holy spirit within Us through this begetting now has an opportunity to show itself to do some works. In other words, as imperfect human beings, we cannot work out our salvation; but as new creatures we can do this. Phil. 4:13.

Being justified by the blood of Christ, and being called with the heavenly calling, we can do our share in this great work Of our own preparation for our future station and glory. We do this by giving heed to the instructions of our Lord, by allowing His Word to dwell in us richly, and following the example which He has set us. We can never attain perfection in the flesh; but from the beginning of our consecrated life, our heart, our intention, must be wholly loyal— God would not accept a half-hearted consecration—and day by day this heart intention must become more and more fixed in the way of righteousness. We are to continue the work of bringing our very thoughts as well as our words and doings into subjection. and enlisting our talents in the; service of the Lord.

It is encouraging for us to know that this warfare is not one which we must wage alone. It is God who has led us thus far, and' provided for all our needs in Christ; it is He who has implanted in our hearts the desire to do:His good pleasure, and He will continue to lead and help us and, work in us by His Word of Truth, if we continue to give heed to His counsel. The Gospel message is the “power of God unto salvation” unto every one who accepts it, and no greater stimulus can be found than the “exceeding great and precious promises” given to us, that by these we might become “partakers of the divine nature.”

Our salvation is a salvation from death to life, from sin to righteousness. Moreover it is a transformation from human nature to divine. The first step to our salvation was the work accomplished by our Lord Jesus at Calvary—”He died for our sins.” But the death of Christ alone was not sufficient to give us justification before God. No, a dead Saviour would avail us nothing. In order to help us out of our fallen state Christ must rise again from the dead, as the Apostle Paul states it—”If Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished.” 1 Cor. 15:17, 18. So we see that the resurrection of Christ was, a matter of vital importance. Christ must rise from the dead and ascend to the Father, there to present the merit of His sacrifice, before God could recognise us and justify us by faith. So Christ has appeared in the presence of God for us (the Church), and God has accepted our consecration, because Christ’s righteousness is imputed to us, making our sacrifice acceptable to the Father.

It is only a certain class with whom God is dealing now; He is not dealing with the whole world at present; only those who wish to turn away from all sin and to gain a character of holiness like unto Christ are now being received of God and trained, disciplined and fitted for the great work of the future — the blessing of all the families of the earth.

It is this special class, the “little flock” for which God is seeking in this age, and the invitation has gone out—”If any man would come after Me let him deny himself, take up his cross daily and follow Me.” Yes, the class now being drawn to Christ will be made up of those who are willing to suffer something for Christ’s sake—for the Truth’s sake. These are the ones of whom the Apostle speaks in Rom. 8:1, saying--”That the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us who walk not after the flesh but after the spirit.” Christ demonstrated His perfection by keeping the law and now because we have accepted Him as our Saviour and are seeking to walk in His steps, the righteousness of the law is counted as fulfilled in us who walk not after the flesh but after the spirit.

When our Saviour’s’ merit was imputed to us, all our past was forgiven, our blemishes covered, the Father accepted the offering, and our High Priest sacrificed us as justified human beings. At that moment we were begotten of the Father by His holy spirit, “to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for us.” We became embryo New Creatures, who were then to grow and develop day by day until, in due time, we would be born as spirit beings on the divine plane if faithful unto death.

The working out of our salvation is no small matter; only by the Lord’s grace to help us could we continue the work to its completion. It calls for patient, steady, earnest effort day by day — a gradual bending heavenward of that which naturally tends toward things of earth. We are to be transformed by the renewing of our minds. We must “put off the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts; and be renewed in the spirit of our minds; and put on the new man which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness.” Eph. 4:22-24.

The Apostle’s exhortation comes to us individually—”Beloved, work out your own salvation.” No one has salvation now except in a reckoned sense. We are saved by hope the Apostle says in another place. We are not completely saved as yet. We must work out our salvation. This is something which each one in Christ must do for himself or herself by the Lord’s assisting grace. One cannot work out the salvation of another; each must work out his own salvation. The expression “work out,” has a peculiar force and Meaning. It suggests something that will cost us an effort—something that requires time, patience and perseverance.

Some Christians have the erroneous idea that God does all the fashioning, and that His children are to be merely passive in His hand; but the Apostle Peter as well as Paul does not so express it (see 1 Pet. 1:13-16). Peter exhorts us not to fashion ourselves according to the former manner of our lives in our ignorance of God and His truth, but rather we are to strive to be holy in our manner of living (Revised Version). There is a work to be done in us and about us, and those who are not up and doing, but who passively sit and wait for the Lord to work miracles in their behalf, are greatly deceived and have need to give earnest heed to the Apostle’s injunction to work out their salvation with fear and trembling. In writing to the Romans (chapter 13:11, 12) Paul says “that now it is high time to awake out of sleep, for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent, the day is at hand; let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armour of light.” Even though we have been awakened from the sleep of sin, there seems to be a danger that we may become somewhat drowsy concerning the wonderful salvation set before us. We must not allow ourselves to become “slothful in our diligence” but maintain our fervency of spirit in our service of the Lord. (See Rom. 12:11; Revised Version).

The Heavenly Father has predetermined that His New Creation shall all be copy-likenesses of Christ. The faithful overcomers must all be proved and found loyal to God and the principles of His Word. The Lord our God proveth us to see whether we love Him with all our hearts. When we made our covenant with the Lord by sacrifice, We promised that we would live henceforth not for self, nor for the things of this world; but we would live for Christ—His will would be our chief concern; self would be denied and we would take up our cross daily and humbly follow in the steps of our Lord, who left us the example. So it is well that we examine ourselves from time to time to see to what extent we are carrying out our vow of consecration. Our Lord says take heed to yourselves lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness and cares of this life” (Luke 21:34). How we need to take heed to ourselves—to examine ourselves, to criticise and correct ourselves; and to watch and pray continually so that we may walk more closely in harmony with the Lord’s requirements. This proper judging or examining of ourselves will assist us in the working out of our salvation.

In Heb. 3:14 the Apostle tells us that “we are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end.” How important is this matter of faith. We will need to - be strong in faith in order to be successful in working out our salvation for without faith it is impossible to please God. And then the Apostle Peter tells us that we will need to give all, diligence to add to our faith, by which we are justified, virtue, i.e., real goodness of character; this can only come after we have made full consecration of ourselves to God; then knowledge, which apart from consecration might puff up the mind, but received into a humble heart will nourish and sustain; then moderation, control, the spirit of a sound mind is necessary to make proper use of the knowledge attained, and patience or the cheerful endurance of hardship, that we may be properly exercised by our experiences, and further developed in piety, godliness, sterling character, justness, a clear perception and determination to carry out that which is right—pleasing to God.

Brotherly-love must also grow a love that loves God, must love also him that is begotten of God. "He that saith he loves God and hateth his brother is a liar." (1 John 4:20). But while it is easy to love the brethren in Christ—to love them that love us—there is a further step into the likeness of Christ, for "while we were yet sinners Christ died for us." We must love all men; yes, even our enemies. "Love your enemies bless them that curse you; do good to them that hate you, and pray (that is, not formally, but with desire for their good) for them which despitefully use you and persecute you that ye may be the children of your Father in heaven." (Matt. 5:44,45.)

We notice that the Apostle Peter's exhortation—"Give diligence to make your calling and election sure," is similar in meaning to that of Paul who says—"Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." The thought in both these text is that there is a work for each follower of Christ to do in the matter of attaining the prize set before us. God is faithful who has given us the exceeding great and precious promises. He has made every necessary provision for us, and will sustain us all along the way, and indeed without His help we could do nothing, but the Lord will expect us to show our appreciation of His goodness by our earnest desire to co-operate with Him in respect of the High calling to which He has called us in Christ.

Why does the Apostle say we should work out our salvation with fear and trembling? Does the Lord wish His children literally to tremble with fear before Him? We believe the Apostle's thought is that we should exercise great care in respect of everything pertaining to our heavenly calling. It is the most important thing in the world to us; and we should realise how great a privilege is ours as well as our responsibility to make the best possible use of the., many favors and blessings so freely bestowed upon us. As we consider Christ's example, also that. of Paul, what an encouragement their lives are to us along the line of earnestness of purpose in doing the will of God. Our Lord said "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent Me and to finish His work" (John 4:34). How earnestly He set Himself to know and do the Father's will. Also Paul said, "For me to live is Christ" (Phil. 1:21). He had no other aim in life but to do his Master's will. So we want to have more of the proper reverence toward God—the holy fear to do anything displeasing to Him—the earnest desire to have His approval and blessing.

The reason why we should work out our salvation with fear and trembling (with great carefulness) is, that it is God who. is working in us both to wilt and to do of his good pleasure. The thought that God, the Almighty Creator of all things has chosen us, invited us and given us of His spirit to enable us to run the heavenly race should inspire us to zeal and diligence in the Christian way. God is working in us to cause us both to will and to do of His good pleasure. The question is—How are we reacting to the influences of His spirit which are at work in us and around us? Are we so fully appreciating the great love of God toward us (manifested in. His Word, and also in the life and sacrificial death of our Saviour) that we are being constrained daily to yield our hearts and minds and all our powers in loving, willing- obedience to His will? Are we earnestly watching to keep our' hearts—our motives, as well as our thoughts—pure and in harmony with whatsoever things are just and honorable and good and true? Is the love of God more and more being shed abroad in our hearts; and is it our one aim to be changed into the likeness of the character of Christ? Can we say with the poet

"My highest place is lying low
At my Redeemer's feet,
No real joy in life I know,
But in Him service sweet"?

If so, then we may well be glad. that we are learning some good lessons in the school of Christ, and we can be assured that He who has begun the good work in us will also complete it, if we continue to follow on in obedience and trust. So may the good work go on in us; let us resolve that as each day comes around we will strive to learn the lessons God is seeking to teach us; the lesson of patient submission to His will the lesson of kindness and consideration for those around us and with whom our lives are linked; the lesson of trust and willing co-operation with God and with each other as members of the family of God. So, then, the working out of our salvation will be a labor of love. God, through His Word and spirit will work in us while we work out by His grace. "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, for as much as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord" (1 Cor. 15:58)

Spiritualist Seances.

THE increasing prevalence of spiritualistic seances, and the great deceptions that are used to attract and entertain people at these circles is revealed in the following article from the Melbourne "Sun":-

"Suburban nights are being enlivened increasingly by physic circles like that described by a doctor in Prahran Court, when he declared there was certainly nothing counterfeit about a trance in which he heard a woman medium speak as half a dozen different persons.

"The art of the seance is spreading. On any night of the week, in any Melbourne suburb, earnest groups would be found, in Cottage and mansion, seeking physic development.

"In an unimpressive South Yarra cottage, I was present as a privileged, non-investigatory inquirer, at a medium's private 'circle.'

"Sixteen people sat around the walls of a small drawing-room. Women, middle-aged, spectacled, were among them; here and there a younger woman spaced the circle.

"A leading company director, whose luxury limousine almost filled the little street outside, sat beside a young man whose aerial inventions may some day bring him fame. Opposite the pair sat a man who might have been a butcher, a baker, or any suburban tradesman.

"The firelight flickered on their faces. They spoke quietly or not at all. A small oil lamp made a double pin-point of light in the mantel mirror above the fire. Otherwise the room was dark.

"The medium, a short woman of middle age with a mop of auburn hair, lay back quietly in an armchair in the shadow.

"Quiet reigned; then voices joined in the hymn, Abide with Me, and went on for several verses. When they stopped, there was a movement from the armchair. The medium rose, tottering a little.

" 'Good evening friends,' It was a deep man's voice, the voice of a man accustomed to public speaking, which undoubtedly issued from the woman's lips.

“He was welcomed like an old friend. The tension in the circle eased. Here and there a friendly chuckle mingled with the chorus of ‘Good evening, Doctor H

“The doctor, a former West Australian preacher, was an • old. friend, apparently. He it was who, throughout the rest of the evening, ‘cleared the line,’ so to speak, for at least a dozen other personalities to ‘come through.’

“The word ‘personalities’ is used in its' full sense. The most impartial observer would have been obliged to admit that each voice imparted not only words, but reflected an associated character.

“The Doctor (a courtesy title) explained gruffly that he felt the heat, and was assisted out:of ‘his’ coat. He addressed the gathering on spiritual matters, then spiritually ‘stood aside’ for the next-comer.

“She was a little girl of perhaps four years.

“ ‘Hello, Norma.’ ‘Glad to see you, Norma,’ the greetings went around the circle.” Norma’ walked to the centre of the floor, spoke shyly, picked out some newcomers, offered to sing a song, forgot her words in mid-verse, and was helped out by the company to the end.

“A flick of the medium’s fingers, and Norma was gone, after a childish ‘good bye.’

“Norma was a baby when the circle first came to know her, it was explained afterwards.

“In place of Norma’s voice came many others; the broken’ English of a Chinese, male voices which promised later to disclose their names, when they became better-known to their hearers.

“The medium walked, strode, tottered in accord with the voices she conveyed. There were no introductions.. Either the voice was welcomed as that of a familiar, or conversed with in the tones of respect one would accord a stranger.

A snap of the fingers and they were gone.. “Towards the end came William, who introduced a lighter note. He was an old man, a veritable Cappy Ricks,, given to semi-senile jokes. He was a popular visitor to the crowded little room.

“His voice trailed off, and in its place came the cultured tones of a woman.

“Edith’ the circle Whispered to one another.

“A business man beside the fire leaned closer to the medium beside him. Edith was his particular control.. She spoke tenderly to him, sent her good wishes to the others.

“Dr. H -----came back to close the evening. The medium was tired, he said.

“Silence, then a hymn. Towards its close the woman rose, herself again. She was assisted from the room to rest.

“‘I have seen visions since I was six,’ she told me some time later. ‘I got more smacks than kisses for the ‘stories’ I told in those days.’

“She has been a medium for years. Doctors, scientists,, people of wealth, as well as the poorest are among the members of ‘circles.’

“It costs only 2/- to hear the voices almost anywhere’ in suburbia.”

Most of our readers are aware that such happenings as related above are not the result of communications from departed friends, but rather the impersonation of the dead by evil spirits (described by Jude 6, and 2 Peter 2:4 etc.) under the control of the great prince of darkness, Satan.

The Scriptures are very definite that “the dead know not anything,” (Eccel. 9:5, 10; Psa. 6:5, 146:4, etc.) and that the only hope of future life and consciousness is in the resurrection (1 Cor. 15:17-22 • 1 Thes. 5:13, 14, etc.).

The difficulty with many people is similar to that of the doctor at the court—they realise there is something superhuman in what they see and hear, at the seances and not understanding the truth of the matter as revealed in the Bible are quickly deceived by such evil practices. Literature exposing- the great deceptions of Spiritualism will be forwarded to all who can use it profitably.

Treasures of Darkness.

It is in the factory of suffering that the holy spirit manufactures the article of sympathy. The sweetest of God’s children are generally those who have suffered most.. Paul’s life was full of comfort to others, but it was packed. with suffering to himself. John’s life was the same. Suffering generally hardens the sinner, but it softens the saint. It is safer to pray for suffering that it is to pray for ease.

HOPE

(Two Convention Addresses)

Of the many good verses respecting hope, the following two are selected:—"By two immutable things in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation . . . ' to lay hold of the hope set before us." (Heb. 6:18); and (Rom. 15:13), "Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope, through the power of the holy spirit."

Perhaps we could say that hope is the most essential element of the Christian's true happiness—for the glorious hopes contained in the Word, of his own future happiness as well as that of the world, should inspire confidence.

Again, Paul tells us in Thessalonians, to "Put on the breastplate of faith and love; and for an helmet, the hope of salvation." It was to be part of our armor, and the Apostle knew, when he exhorted the Romans, to "abound in hope," that the Church would require it in their armor to gain the prize—that important one, to be heir with Christ, the Anointed. "For all things are yours and ye are Christ's."

That the race to run, to win it, would be a severe one, and the course that was set would be difficult and hard, the Apostle knew from his own experiences. So, it seems that he gave this message specially to the Church, as they would require it, "to abound in hope." This hope which he mentions here, would be only for those who had fled from every institution of man, whose hope only was in God, for this was the only way they could abound in hope.

Before discussing anything further on hope, there is a very searching question which we must carefully examine.

It is this: "He that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as' He is pure." We are still in the world—most of us not at all sheltered from it—and we have the world, the flesh and the Adversary with which to contend. Perhaps we may have a great battle. with a wrong thought; we put it back and away, we did not want it. It returns, sometimes so often, that we feel discouraged. We must not only put it away from us (for that creates a vacancy, and the Adversary is looking for vacancies), but we must fill the vacancy, as the Apostle Peter tells us, "Gird up the loins of your mind." We must realise the necessity of thinking on spiritual things. I like the way that John Bunyan puts it, namely, "I took myself unto the Word of God for good, and as an antidote for my faithlessness."

I have at home a copy of a picture that I value. Perhaps many would look on it as meaningless; but those who have been through life's storms would appreciate its message. It is "Hope," the best and best-loved picture of Watts, a great English artist; and it is this: This earth flying in space, and it has a figure of a woman—desolate and in an attitude of the most intense sorrow. Her eyes are bandaged; her grief is blinded. (We do live sometimes as in another world, when we think that no hand can aid us, and no heart understands us.) In her hand is a harp, ten strings and every one broken, save one, which tells of /earthly joys, friends that are now dead. Pressed gently to her ear is this one string. From afar off the sun gleams down—a star!—a gleam of light from Heaven shining on her unnoticed — perhaps even unthought of—but it is there, and the lesson, as the picture goes on to say, is that in one's most, desperate circumstances, there is always something at hand and something afar off, on which to base hope, and on which we can rely. The verse under the picture is as follows:—"Oh, lyre of hope; the anguish of the world has rent asunder all thy silver strings — save One — that (thrilling with immortal strains, sounds ever clearer as earth's music dies), tells that God's love must triumph evermore." Oh! how deep, and wonderful is the love of God.

When Hagar put Ishmael in the shrubs and walked away a distance (she did not wish to see her child die), she lifted up her voice to heaven. God heard the voice of the woman and the angel of the Lord answered, saying, “What aileth thee, Hagar? fear not. Arise, lift up the lad, and hold him in thine hand; for I will make of him a great nation. And God opened her eyes, and she saw a well of water, and filled her bottle and gave him drink.” What a lovely little story this is, portraying God’s love which was shining then upon poor Hagar, who, in her grief, did not see it. But God’s love was there.

Again, in the case of the widow, when she was preparing the last meal, when she and her child were dying, God sent Elijah and they had sufficient until the famine was past.

Then, too, in Naomi’s case, “Call me not Naomi, she said, for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me.” But we see God’s love for Naomi—in Ruth’s marriage—and she was cared for in her old age and widowhood.

One little thought, I particularly like, of John Bunyan’s—you will remember how Christian and Hopeful, when so very tired and weary, found a way out from the hands of Giant Despair by the key of promise.

So, coming down to our own clay, we too can be hidden in God’s love—hidden in our trials, perplexities and difficulties.

Again, in Paul’s words, “Perplexed, but not in despair; cast clown, but not destroyed,” how there runs that beautiful strain, like a golden ray of hope.

And so it seems that each life has its own limitations and each one is passing through experiences and meeting conditions they would otherwise faint under, were it not for the power of God.

The great Apostle, when he wrote these words--“Be anxious for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God,” (such courageous words), was a prisoner in Rome, awaiting his trial, probably ending in death. Denied so much for the present and his future absolutely uncertain; burdened by his own physical thorn in the flesh; denied the comforts of home life—yet there flowed from his heart joy and comforting hope. He could write “In nothing be anxious.”

“Be anxious for nothing!” Why? Because God has been careful for everything. What was the secret of Paul’s “abounding in hope?” I think it is answered in this little sentence of all gold, which the Apostle wrote—“Be careful (anxious) for nothing.”

Let us examine his words; what power and peace are in them. In writing to the Hebrews he said, “The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me.” • The Lord is at hand, and if God be for us, who can be against us?

There is nothing in the world so important to the child of God, as to realise and believe that he belongs to Christ; that He is his own personal Saviour, night and day; through trials, difficulties and temptations, it is well, as in joy and peace. How dignified and ennobled our tasks and trials become, if performed in a sense that He abideth in us. The following verses are from Job—“Behold, I. go forward, but He is not there; and backward, but I cannot perceive Him: On the left hand, where He doeth work, but I cannot behold Him: He hideth himself on the right hand, that I cannot see Him: But he knoweth the way that I take: when He hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold.”

Perhaps you or I may have a temptation which besets us, or has followed us for years, and we have prayed to the Lord to remove it, but it has not been removed. Can we abound in hope then, as the Apostle tells us? What is the position of the child of God then? We have been reminded recently of the statement, "By fixed submission to the will of God." Perhaps we could add the words, "with sweet resignation." If we can manifest that—that the Lord permits these things to come upon us: well, we can "abound in hope," knowing that He will help us. "Fear not, for I will heal thee." "Is anything too hard for Me?" Now, if God chooses to put upon us trials and difficulties, still, we will surely never let our feelings hide us from His love, He knows all about it and He will never try us beyond that which we are able to bear. He will always provide a way: of escape for us: Yes, "A mother may forget her child, yet will I never forget thee." Surely, with these thoughts we should have hope—even "abound in hope," (for they were written for our admonition) and learn that we, through the comfort obtained from the Scriptures might have faith.

We are approaching Mount Zion. "Mountain" means Kingdom and "Zion" means sunny, bright, happy. Happy the people who have the God of Jacob for their helper. The Lord expects us to be apostles of hope, like the Son of Righteousness, with- gladness for the upright in heart.

I would like to quote these few words of Longfellow

"There is no flock, however well attended,
But one dead lamb is there:
There is no home, however well defended
But has some vacant chair."

How fortunate are we, perhaps, though not many of us can look back through vistas of years and say it is not so, in our home family circles.

"Lips that we once pressed in their bloom,
Names we once loved to hear, have Been carved many a year on the tomb."

So, what a glorious hope this is for you and me, when we remember the 31st of Jeremiah, and it is throughout the Hebrew writings. You will remember Rachel wept for her children, refusing to be comforted, because they were not, and the answer of the Prophet—"Refrain thy voice from weeping, thine eyes from tears, for thy works shall be rewarded."—And there is hope. Then Isa. 51st, "Therefore the redeemed of the Lord shall return, and come with singing unto Zion; and everlasting joy shall be upon their head; they shall obtain gladness and joy; and sorrow and mourning shall flee away." Another part says, "There shall be melody and gladness." What a beautiful hope! Furthermore, should not these things carry us above our surroundings and make us appreciative in our hearts and minds to enter into His bliss? We know we shall see them again, and perhaps, by God's help, show them the way to happiness.

I think we should walk as children of light. The simplest and least talented of us can be lights in the world. As Paul said, "Ye are witnesses and God also, how justly and unblameably we behaved ourselves among you that believe."

"In the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world." Surely, we can "abound in hope" and acknowledge these glorious things,. especially as we see the Day approaching.

I would like to quote a few lines by another—"It is manifest that the King is already present, in letting loose and dissolving the present order of things and effecting a transfer from the old to the new conditions. The world's great revolutionist, the Son of Righteousness, the Light of the World, is broadening and so shall henceforth: the night is far spent and the day is at hand."

May the light of God shine on and be increasing, until the fires and storms sweep away the world, its houses of sin, its castles of air, its wood, hay and stubble the fabrication of man — until the Church shall be the Church indeed.

Seeing the importance given in God's Word to the subject of "Hope," it has been thought not inappropriate to supplement the previous talk on this topic with a few additional thoughts. Hope is such a big factor in the Christian's experience, in enabling him to lay hold of God's promises and also in aiding him to set and keep his face Zion wards.

We are reminded of the Apostle's words in Rom. 15:4, "Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope." What a tremendous work would seem to be embraced in those two • words, "Whatsoever things." It would seem to mean nothing less than the whole Word of God. Yes, and in addition God's causing to be enacted by His typical people, Israel, the types and shadows of better things, portraying the whole scope of, God's great and wonderful plan of salvation. "All things are for your sakes," says the Apostle, and the foregoing verse would seem to be corroborative of this, as also his further statement, that "All things work together for good to them that love God, to the called according to His purpose."

Referring to the Gospel Age Church, we read that we are called, "in one hope of our calling," and that hope and calling implies a vital union with Christ—"Christ in you the hope of glory." Not only does it mean that we have admitted Christ into our hearts as our Saviour from sin and condemnation, but it means additionally, that He has come into our hearts as King, Ruler and Controller of our whole being. "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus the mind that led Him, in harmony with God's will, to lay down His life a ransom sacrifice for the whole world.

The Apostle describes the Christian's hope as a new and living- one. Perhaps the thought behind the word "new". is in contrast with the hope held out under the Old Law Covenant, the sacrifices under which could never really take away sin and thus ensure a living hope. How different is the Christian's hope, based on the living and true sacrifice of Christ and the realities of the living Word of God.

Again the Hope set before us has the vast power of God behind it for its accomplishment; the same power that raised our Lord from the dead to the, glory honor and immortality of the Divine nature, is working on our behalf, that we too might attain to the same glory and be forever with the Lord.

Various, too, are the illustrations given us of the influence that hope will have in our Christian experience, and the protection a strong hope will afford us all along the way. Thus the Apostle likens the hope of salvation to • a helmet. A held met afford's protection to the head and this should mean that we are enabled always to maintain a proper mental outlook in harmony with God's will for us, as expressed in His Word. , Thus we will have also a right spiritual vision and sense of hearing, in short, the spirit and mind of Christ.

Again, using another illustration, the Apostle shows the effect .this hope will have on us from another standpoint. In this case, he likens hope to an, anchor. We all know how necessary an anchor is in a ship's equipment, and so it is with the Christian also. In the troubled experiences of life and in the midst of the surging forces of human wisdom, 'human methods and passions, we need and have this God provided anchor, entering within the vail.

However, in addition to the foregoing illustrations, the Apostle expresses the thought that we also. should abound in hope. The thought of abounding would mean that the influence of hope would not be limited to one or two directions in our lives, but, rather, gives the thought of an ever increasing and widening circle of influence in all the affairs and circumstances of our lives. Thus, our rejoicing in the hope will increase our patience, become deeper and stronger, and we will be better able to combat a tendency to weariness.

The prophet Jeremiah 17:7, 8, speaks of the man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is, saying,

“He shall be as a tree planted by the waters, and that spreadeth out her roots by the river, and shall not see when heat cometh, the leaf shall be green; and shall not be careful in the year of drought, neither shall cease from yielding fruit.” An example of growth and fruit-bearing is here brought to our attention. So may the Christian bring forth fruit also, if the roots of his faith, trust and confidence in God are kept in close contact with the life-giving waters of God’s Word.

‘The End of the Way.

Word ‘was received from Brisbane, Queensland, while our last issue was on the press, to the effect that our dear elderly Brother Langdon had finished his course there, some time previously.

Some of our friends will well remember this Brother as a humble and sincere Christian, who ever rejoiced in the wonderful message of present truth and to which he continued faithful to the end. About four years ago he moved from Melbourne to Brisbane, where he continued to witness to the truths of God’s Word; some isolated brethren there, will no doubt feel the loss of his fellowship, and others will miss his correspondence. However, we can rejoice that our Brother’s trials and sufferings are over, and that he has gone to his reward, by the Lord’s grace. “Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord.”

Correspondence

Berean Bible Institute, U.S.A., 1/6/39. Dear Brethren in Christ,

Your letter and the "Poems" received in time for the Convention and we were glad to get them. That part of your letter conveying your Christian love was read to the friends and Heb. 12:22-24, 28.

The question is how much to order for the large Convention to be held Aug. 2-6 at Webster, Ind. The Pittsburgh and Chicago Classes are co-operating. Send us then at the new address 35 "Poems" and 8 "Ransom, Covenants, Sin- Offering." It is my hope that they arrive in time and I am going to send this letter Air-Mail to help it along. Money order enclosed.

We had a very fine Convention and those attending received a rich feast and blessing; it is always so where unity in Christ is.

With Christian love and best wishes,

Your Bro., in His service.

Victoria, 18th June, 1939. Dear Brother,

Just a few lines and hope they find you well as I am pleased to say I am by the Lord's goodness and able in Him to quietly rejoice in the experiences of the Christian way. Just at present the outlook for the poor old world is so gloomy and dark that even we who have knowledge of it all are tempted sometimes to become a little fearful. However, "as our days, so shall our strength be." It is good to know that we need not fear, at the same time remembering of course that little word "if" and what it means. I enjoyed "Christian Alternatives" very much.

Would you please send me "Atonement Between God and Man" and I hope I shall be able to pass it on. I would like one of the new Hymn Books also, and think you had better send me another dozen "God and Reason" as I have none on hand. My relatives seemed to appreciate "God and Reason" and also seem fairly clear that the nominal church systems are really false. There is no doubt the nominal church has lost all knowledge of "suffering with the Master" in order "to be glorified with Him later" and to present this aspect of the Christian way, appears now to many as "false doctrine."

I am sending , please pay for "God and Reason,"

"The Atonement," "The Hymn Book," subscription to "Peoples Paper" I think about due, also an extra subscription to "Peoples Paper" for someone unable to pay, and the balance you can place to the Tract Fund.

Well, I must close for this time, with much Christian love to yourself and Sister.

Your Bro., in Christ by His mercy and favor.

Queensland. Dear Brother,

I am writing you a few lines to send postal note for 10/- to go towards the Bible Stories for children. I hope you have had a good response to the notice re same in "P.P." And I would like you to please send a copy to . Another one I would like to send a copy to is With much Christian love, from your brother by His grace.

New South Wales, 19/6/39. Berean Bible Institute,

Dear Sirs,

Would you kindly forward some of your literature as advertised in "The Voice." We have an undenominational meeting, and we are interested in all subjects dealing with God's, plan and the coming Kingdom.

Thanking you in anticipation, Yours faithfully.

All Things for Our Good.

In a factory building there are wheels and gearings,
There are cranks and pulleys, beltings tight and slack—
Some are whirling swiftly, some are turning slowly,
Some are thrusting forward, some are pulling back;
Some are smooth and silent, some are rough and noisy,
Pounding, rattling, stinking, moving with a jerk.

In a wild confusion, in a seeming chaos,
Lifting, pushing, driving—but they do their work.
From the mightiest lever to the tiniest pinion,
All things move together for the purpose planned—
And behind the working is a mind controlling,

And a force directing and a guiding hand.'
So all things are working for the Lord's beloved;
Some things might be hurtful, if alone they stood;
Some might seem to hinder, some might draw us backward;
But they work together, and they work for good.
All the thwarted longings, all the stern denials,
All the contradictions, hard to understand,
And the force that holds them, speeds them and retards them,
Stops and starts and guides them—is our Father's hand. —

Bible Stories

It has been found that the Bible Stories for children will make a book of about 130 pages, and to meet the needs of all the friends it is proposed to have it bound in both cloth and paper covers.

The cost for materials in the printing and the bookbinder's charge is expected to be 1/- per book in paper binding, and 1/5 in cloth binding. Postage costs will bring the prices to 1/2 and 1/8 respectively, for single copies.

The cloth covers will look and protect the books much better, though the paper covers will be reasonably strong, and those friends using quantities may prefer the latter, at the lower cost. It is expected that the work on these books will progress well this month, and we shall be pleased to hear from all who have ordered copies, as to the particular binding required—one or the other, or some of each binding can be supplied as desired. Further orders may be placed, and we have no doubt that these Stories will be appreciated by the friends.

Next Month's Issue

It is proposed that the "People's Paper" for August take the form of a booklet, D.V. This will be forwarded to all our readers in the usual way.

Kingdom and Consolation Cards.

A large quantity of both the above Cards has been Prepared, and all who have the opportunity of placing these in the hands of people, where good may be done, are invited to order according to their requirements. These cards are supplied free from the Tract Fund.

Ye have taken away the Key of Knowledge

“Woe unto you, Doctors of the Law, because ye have taken away the Key of Knowledge: you entered not yourselves, and those approaching you hindered.”—Luke 11:52.

We are living in a pre-eminently practical day, when results are sought rather than doctrines. Indeed, in but few Christian pulpits are doctrines ever considered in these later years. Doctrinal preaching is considered obsolete, and has been replaced largely by what is termed practical preaching. In other words, the preaching of good works, has taken the place of the doctrines preached by Jesus and the apostles. The reason of this is not far to seek: talented men, of all denominations, in the pulpit and in the pew, are heartily ashamed of the doctrines confessed in their creeds.

The preachers, therefore, are glad enough to let these alone, hoping that their congregations will forget them, and especially that they will not ask them any troublesome questions respecting them.

As a result we have throughout the civilised world to-day just what the Jews had at the first advent of our Lord, namely, a form of godliness without the power. Our Lord's discourses and Parables continually bore witness to the fact that the Jews of His day, especially the prominent ones, were outwardly pious, zealous for God's Law, but inwardly -ravenous wolves and full of all manner of corruption. Our Lord upbraided the leaders for their long prayers and affectations of piety, which were entirely contradicted by their conduct in daily life; their selfishness, which would lead them to take advantage of the widow, to grasp for property, and which would bind heavy burdens of Law observance upon the weak and the poor, to their discouragement. Our Lord declared to them how they had made the divine Law of none effect through their traditions—more than this, had made God and His Law abhorrent to the poor and the ignorant by exaggeration. For instance, the Law of the Sabbath was exaggerated and is still exaggerated in the Talmud, which teaches that, to rub wheat between the hands and to blow away the chaff in order to eat the kernels would be unlawful, a violation of the Sabbath Day, because it would be threshing and winnowing on a small scale.

Taking Away the Key.

Thus did the Doctors of the Law in Jesus' day, by the substitution of traditions instead of the divine Word misrepresent the character of God and turn the attention of the people from Him. Thus did they take away the “Key of Knowledge,” for the “reverence of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom (knowledge).” Note our Lord's words, “This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent”(John 17:3). In a word, God’s creatures need to know Him well and truly in order to appreciate Him and in order to have confidence in His gracious promises. Such a knowledge is necessary to a true worship such as the Lord appreciates, for, as the Master said, the Father seeketh such to worship Him as worship Him in spirit and; in truth (John 4:22, 23). Whoever, therefore, misrepresents the divine character and the divine plan is taking away the “Key of Knowledge” of God. This was the crime of the Doctors of the Law; which their hypocritical professions and prayers only helped to aggravate; for the common people, relying largely upon the holy professions and teachings of those leaders, were the more thoroughly deluded and the more thoroughly alienated from. God by reason of their professions of sanctity.

Our Lord’s words, “Woe unto you, Doctors of the Law,” had a fulfilment, too. Certain woes fell with special weight upon this very class but shortly after our Lord’s prediction. Very soon a period of disintegration set in, which affected everything, and every prospect of the wealthy and professedly religious class of the Jews, especially the Doctors of the Law. This led to anarchy and ultimately the destruction of their national polity, A.D. 70. True it meant dire tribulation to; all people; but as always, those most intelligent and in the high stations of life, must have suffered proportionately more in the stress which came upon all the people in fulfilment of the prophecy—”Wrath is Come upon this people to the uttermost.”

The Jewish Age and People Typical of Spiritual Israel.

The Jewish Age began with Jacob, the Gospel Age with .Christ; the former was established in the twelve sons of Jacob and the latter in the twelve apostles of the Lamb. The former had typical sacrifices and sin-offerings, while the latter has antitypical or “better sacrifices than those”; the former had a typical priesthood in. Aaron and his sons, while the latter had an antitypical priesthood, called by the Apostle a “Royal Priesthood,” of which Christ is the Chief Priest and His faithful followers the under-priesthood. As the Jewish Age ended with the harvest in which our Lord was present in the flesh as the Chief Reaper, so this Gospel Age is ending with a harvest in which our Lord, as a spirit being, is present as the Chief Reaper, gathering the wheat into His garner, before the great time of trouble, the figurative burning-day coming upon the world in general—”a time of trouble such as was not since there was a nation” (Dan. 12:1).

Is it not wonderful that to-day we find amongst nominal Christian people (Churchianity) conditions in many respects corresponding to the conditions described by our Lord amongst the Jews in their harvest time? To-day, also, we ‘find an outward respect for God and for religion — a drawing nigh unto the Lord with the lips while the hearts are far from him—busied with fashion, pleasure and money seeking. Now, also, we find that the people look to Doctors of Divinity for guidance • and instruction; that they greatly reverence them, and that the latter could have great power if they were in harmony with God—if, behind the profession, there was a knowledge of God’s character and plan, and if this were imparted to the people who, according to the Scriptures, are now famishing — a famine not for bread nor for’ water, but for the hearing of the message of the Lord (Amos 8:11). This sad arraignment of the pulpit of our day is thankless and unpleasant task; but it is as proper to-day as it was nineteen centuries ago to show those hungering and thirsting for the Word of the Lord the real cause of their difficulty—to show that the clergy have taken away the “Key of Knowledge” and are keeping it hid, and that neither are they themselves entering into the knowledge nor are they favouring any others entering in. On the contrary, they hinder in a hundred ways the spread of a true knowledge of God and his Word amongst the people.

When the Key was Lost.

We should not be understood as teaching that all the responsibility of the loss of the key of Knowledge belongs to the Christian ministers of today, neither did. our Lord charge the Doctors of the Law of, His day with the full responsibility. He pointed back to the same class in earlier days, saying “Woe unto you! for ye build the sepulchres of the prophets, and your fathers killed them” (v. 47). Our Lord seems to have arraigned the clergy as a class, and to have held the modern representatives responsible, because they gave evidence of having the same spirit that their predecessors had, even though they condemned some of their practices. Thus; their fathers killed the prophets, while they killed the Lord Himself and, persecuted His followers. Nor should we understand our Lord’s words to apply to every individual of the Jewish clergy, the Doctors of the Law, but rather that He spoke of them as a class, ignoring the few exceptions. Similarly we hold that amongst the teachers of to-day there are exceptions to the general rule—God-loving and God-fearing men, themselves striving to enter into the knowledge of God and to assist others to enter in. But surely these are a very small minority, and they are rarely heard’ from.

The Key of Knowledge of God’s true character was lost long ago, buried under what the Lutherans style the “dunghill of Roman decretals.” It was lost during the “dark ages.” Luther and some of his coadjutors (lid valiantly in striving to recover the Key, and at least got hold of the handle. But, alas! little progress has since been made.

The key, while recovered, is ,still hidden by a vail, a mist of superstition and false doctrine. Shall we illustrate this? How, we ask? Could any one come to a knowledge of God — a true knowledge, an appreciative knowledge, a hearty sympathy, a true devotion -- while still thinking of God as the all-powerful Creator, who made mankind for His own pleasure, yet before man’s creation prepared for the vast majority a place of eternal torment, manned with fire-proof devils and supplied with fuel enough for all eternity? Who that has that thought before his mind, who that believes that unscriptural teaching could rightly reverence his Creator as a God of justice and of love? In proportion as this cloud of error, this “doctrine of devils,” comes between an intelligent mind and its Creator, in that same proportion it will be impossible for him to really know God. whom. to rightly know would imply life eternal. Before the Key of Knowledge can be found and used, and access gained to a right appreciation and worship of God, this doctrine and other similar superstitions of the “dark ages” must be cleared away. We thank God that in His providence some to-day, Israelites indeed in whom there is no guile, are being helped to a knowledge by a message of the great Teacher, even as a little flock of Israelites indeed were taught of God and inducted into a knowledge and love of God, despite the conduct and false teachings and wrong attitude of the Doctors of the Law at the first advent.

It should be noted that our Lord does, not intimate that the Doctors of the Law themselves, had entered into the knowledge and were keeping others out of it, but, on the contrary, that while they were in a favoured position to supply the Key and to enter in and to enjoy the knowledge, they were not doing so, and in avoiding the knowledge they were hindering others who were in quest of it. So to-day we are not to be understood as intimating that, the preachers of Christendom have the true knowledge and are withholding it from the people, but the contrary—that they are confused, that they know not God, and that therefore the divine plan of boundless mercy for the sins of the whole world is hidden from their view. As a class they know not God — they misunderstand Him. But, instead of seeking for the Key and entering in, and seeking to assist others to enter in, have they not abandoned the Word of God and taken up Higher Criticism and Evolution, and are they not guiding those who look up to them for counsel in the same direction? Why do not these educated men of great opportunity awake to the privilege of their position and search, the Scriptures, and by full consecration of their all to the Lord enter into the school of Christ that they may be taught of Him, that they may find the Key of Knowledge and assist in putting it into the hands of those who are seeking God, “feeling after Him, if happily they might find Him,” but who are now being misled’: and misdirected? As our Lord said, the blind are leading the blind, and surely all will fall into the ditch. The ditch of that day was the time of trouble which wrecked the Jewish. nation. The ditch of our day is the approaching day of trouble, in which Christendom will be wrecked in a cataclysm of anarchy, according to the Scriptures.

Knowledge During the Next Age.

As the knowledge of God reaches but comparatively few of the human family during this Gospel Age, and few, therefore, gain the eternal life, it is of deep interest to all that the Lord's Word enunciates that it is His will that all men should be saved (from the condemnation to death) and come to a knowledge of the Truth that they may be saved (1 Tim. 2:4). if the knowledge of the Lord is a blessing to us now, and brings with it responsibility and great opportunity and blessings present and prospective, it is in full accord with this that the Lord here promises that ultimately all shall know Him, and all, therefore, have a full opportunity of attaining the blessings He is so willing to bestow upon those who seek Him in sincerity. Let us hearken to some of the promises given to these through the prophets. Isaiah tells us that the whole earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord (11:9). Habbakuk gives a very similar statement of the matter, assuring us that the earth will be filled with a knowledge of the glory, the greatness, the grandeur of the Lord (2:14). And again, the prophet Jeremiah declares that there shall be no longer need for every man to say to his neighbour and to his brother, "Know thou the Lord, for all shall know Him from the least even unto the greatest," (31:34). How glad we are that ultimately God's glorious character shall be clearly seen by all mankind—when the blindness of superstition, ignorance, bigotry and Satanic deceit and doctrines of devils shall have given way to the glorious, light of the Sun of Righteousness, with healing, restitution, in its beams !

"Whom Shall He Teach Knowledge?"

Isaiah the Prophet is caused to give a picture of our day in which is pointed out the stumbling of the teachers of our time. Symbolically they are represented as drunken with the wine of false doctrine, so that they "err in vision, they stumble in judgment," because Babylon made all nations drunk (Rev. 17:2; 18:3). These, the creeds of the different denominations, are represented as their table, at which they feed, and are declared to be full of uncleanness. Then still referring to our day, the Lord through the Prophet inquires (Isa. 28:9), "Whom shall he teach knowledge and whom shall he make to understand doctrine?" The question implies that few will be in a condition to understand the Truth in this day, and then the answer is given—"Them that are weaned from the milk and drawn from the breasts." This symbolical picture represents the Lord's faithful people as merely babes in Christ, and informs us that even these must be weaned from their infantile condition that, as the Apostle suggests, they may appreciate the strong meat of divine revelation, and thus grow strong in the Lord and in the power of His might, advancing from the infantile condition to full manhood in Christ—Heb. 5:12.

While the intimation is that the Doctors of the Law at the first advent and the Doctors of Divinity at the present time will wield so strong an influence as to hinder the majority of those who are trusting them from entering into the riches of God's grace which are properly their portion, we have various intimations that the Lord will not permit this to be the case with those who are at heart loyal to Him. These will be drawn from the priests of sectarianism and from the creeds of the "dark ages"; they will be weaned; they will find the sectarian bed too short and the sectarian covers too narrow, and will get out from these conditions into the full liberty of the children of God, under the limitations of the Divine Word of revelation, which to them will be line upon line, here a little and there a little. As at the first advent the Lord found such a class and fed them, strengthened them so —although they were recognised as ignorant and unlearned men—they were soon known as talented, and their neighbours and enemies took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus and learned of Him—learned of the true God, of His true character and of the true hope set before them in the Gospel; so we have the Lord's promise that in the end of this age—notwithstanding the fact that the Key of Knowledge is lost to the majority, and that those who should have it and should be leading the way into it have it not and are turning the people aside from looking in the right direction—nevertheless our Lord Jesus, whom the Apostle styles the great Shepherd of the sheep, promises that at His second advent He will gather His sheep: in that dark and stormy day.—Ezek. 34:11, 12.

He promises also that in this day He will cause His faithful ones, weaned from the milk and drawn from the breasts, to sit down to a table of His own furnishing, not filled with dogma of the “dark ages,” and that He himself will come forth and serve His people meat in due season, things new and old. Let us not only take this attitude of readiness to enter into the light of the knowledge of God and to be fed thereby, but additionally let us see to it that the strength which we derive from this strong meat of Present Truth shall be such as will build us up, sanctify us, that we may attain to that full knowledge of God which can be had only by those who come into heart-fellowship with Him through Christ, and which will constitute to them an evidence -that they are sons of God, taught of God, for such is the message of the Saviour, “The Father himself loveth you” (John 16:27). To all- who have hitherto been careless in respect of this Key of Knowledge and the blessings that are to be unlocked thereby, we urge that it is high time for them to awake out of sleep and out of darkness and to search the Scriptures and to enter into the blessed joys of the Lord to be had now through faith in His Word, and to be prepared to enter into the joys of the Lord actually very soon.

His Afterward of Peace.

PROCLAIM ye this among the Gentiles; prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up. Beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruning hooks into spears: let the weak say, I am strong. Assemble yourselves, and come, 'all ye heathen, and gather yourselves 'together round about: thither cause (see margin) thy mighty ones to come down, O Lord. Let the heathen be wakened,, and come up to the valley of Jehoshaphat: for there will I sit to judge all the heathen round about. Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe: come, get you down; for the press is full, the fats overflow; for their wickedness is great. Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision: for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision. The sun and moon shall be darkened, and the stars shall withdraw their shining. The Lord also shall roar out of Zion, and utter His voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake: but the Lord will , be the hope of His people, and the strength of the children of Israel." (Joel 3:9-16.)

"But in the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow into it. And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and He will teach us of His ways, and we will walk in his paths: for the law shall go forth of Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And He shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks: nation shall not lift up' a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid: for the mouth of the Lord of Hosts bath spoken it. For all people will walk every one in the name of his god, and we will walk in the name of the Lord our God for ever and ever." (Micah 4:1-5.)

IN the above words from God's prophets we have a most descriptive account of the great change that is pending with the close of 'this present evil world," and the introduction of the "new heavens and new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness

In the former statement from the prophet Joel we have depicted, well over two thousand years ago, the very happenings of our own day. Who can doubt that such language is fulfilled in the world-wide military preparations unprecedented in the history of the world? There never has been such colossal armaments for the destruction of fellow-men—we see the literal fulfilment of the words, "Beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruninghooks into spears." Well might leading statesmen declare that the conflict, of which all are in fear, (Luke 21:26) will mean the destruction of civilisation as it is to-day.

No human efforts are able to resist the mighty forces now gathering for the great climax. All the accumulated powers of evil and selfishness for past centuries, greatly multiplied by the increase of knowledge in this "time of the end," are about to meet in, conflict, with the result, as described by St. Peter in symbolic language—"The heavens shall pass away with a great noise and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up" (2 Pet. 3:10).

The words of our Lord as He wept over Jerusalem, knowing of its rejection of Him and pending destruction some years later (picturing the fiery time of trouble at the close of the present age) come to mind—"If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things' which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes." These words of our Lord are pathetic indeed; they show how sad He was to think that Israel, God's covenanted people, were rejecting Him and His heavenly Father and were bringing upon themselves the judgments that followed.

Likewise, to-day, we may be sure that, the Lord has no pleasure in “the great time of trouble such as never was,” but in His wisdom, permits it, that one great, lasting lesson may benefit the whole human race throughout the ages of eternity. The words of the prophet Malachi seem appropriate here, “Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord: And He shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse.” The Elijah here mentioned would be the Elijah Class—the Christ Head and Body—who have sought during this Gospel Age to turn as many as possible to a childlike condition of heart, similar to that of the ancient fathers. These efforts have been unsuccessful as a whole, only a few have had ears to hear the message of truth from the Word of the Lord, as He foreknew and foretold, hence “the curse” must ensue.

In the words from Micah’s prophecy we have a beautiful picture of the mountain (kingdom) of the Lord established in the top of the mountains (over earth’s kingdoms which will then have passed away—Rev. 11:15), and exalted above the hills (the lesser governments of earth also subdued) and people flowing into it. This will follow the time when the Lord speaks peace to the raging masses of humanity and the opportunity is given to every one, living and dead (the resurrection taking place in due course), of learning of His ways and walking in His paths. Oh, happy day.

How different it will be when “nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more, for they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks and all people will walk every one in the name of his God.” How we can thank the Lord that the end will be glorious indeed, and that the judgments now pending upon the world will really be blessings in disguise for all who are rightly exercised thereby and turn to serve Him with one consent (Zeph. 3:8, 9).

What consolation there is for the Lord’s people, even amidst the distress: of nations in knowing that at all times,

“All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose.” They realise that God’s purpose in calling them to the heavenly inheritance, is that they may be conformed to the image of His Son, and that the conditions abroad in the earth cannot interfere with this most important work in their hearts as they follow in the steps of the Master—fully loyal to His truth and cause in all things.

The closing days of the Church’s earthly career must indeed be severe and stormy—very similar to those of the early Church. Faith and confidence in the Lord will be fully tested and proved, but just as surely as He was watching over the saints at the beginning of the age and right through the hundreds of years since, so He is now very near to His true people, especially in the present “days of the Son of Man,” “the day of His preparation,” during which the first resurrection is taking place—each member in Christ receiving his reward at the close of the pilgrim way in readiness for the Kingdom work which is soon to commence, when “He maketh wars to cease unto the ends of the earth.” “God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble; therefore will not we fear, though the earth (present order of society) be removed, and though the mountains (kingdoms) be carried into the midst of the sea (lawless masses of mankind); though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains (kingdoms) shake with the swelling thereof. God is in the midst of her; she shall not be moved; God shall help her and that right early.” (Psa. 46:1-3, 5.) God’s ways are equal: storm or calm,

Seasons of peril and of rest,
The hurtling dart, the healing balm,
Are all apportioned as is best.
In judgments oft misunderstood,

In ways mysterious and obscure,
He brings from evil lasting good,
And makes the final gladness sure.
While Justice takes its course with strength,

Love bids our faith and hope increase
He'll give the chastened world at length
His afterward of peace.
When the dread forces of the gale

His sterner purposes perform,
And human skill can naught avail,
Against the fury of the storm,
Let loving hearts trust in Him still,

Through all the dark and devious way;
For who would thwart His blessed will,
Which leads through night to joyous day?
Be still beneath His tender care;

For He will: make the tempest cease,
And bring from out the anguish here
An afterward of peace.
Look up, O Earth; no storm can last

Beyond the limits God hath set;
When its appointed work is past,
In joy thou shalt thy grief forget
When sorrow's plowshare hath swept through,

Thy fairest flowers of life shall spring,
For God shall grant thee life anew,
And all thy wastes shall laugh and sing.
Hope thou in Him; His plan for thee

Shall end in triumph and release;
Fear not, for thou shalt surely see
His afterward of peace.

Let Your Moderation be Known to All.

ST. PAUL urged, "Let your moderation be known unto all men. The Lord is at hand." (Phil. 4:5.) The latter clause of this exhortation implies that it belongs: Specially to the closing of this Gospel Age. Surely we find his words applicable to ourselves—yea, to all mankind.

Surely there never was a time when this counsel of moderation was so much needed as now! The very air seems charged with some exciting, nervous force. Good people, wise people, thoughtful people seem easily excited and liable to lose their balance at the very suggestion of ridiculous and foolish things. If any of us find such to be our condition, prayer should be made for that Wisdom which cometh from Above, to strengthen, establish and settle our hearts and lives in the will of God.

Excitement over some vagary of interpretation of God's Word may be injurious to ourselves, injurious to those with whom we may have any influence, and injuriously encouraging to the one who propounds the foolish interpretation whether such interpretation relates to the general interests of the Harvest work, or to other matters and persons.

It is unavoidable that politicians, socialists, anarchists, and others, attempting to forecast the future respecting themselves and the world, should be carried away with their own ideas, and lose their bearings and talk irrationally. God's people, on the contrary, are to be most moderate in all things. First, they are to recognise their own littleness and inability, and God's greatness and sufficiency. Secondly, they are to remember that God is ordering all the affairs and interests of His Church and also those of the world; and that all things are working together for good to those who love Him and who are called according to His purpose—to be members of His elect Church, the Bride of Christ.—Rom. 8:28-30.

Such consciousness of personal littleness and of Divine greatness should keep us very humble and restrain us from all boastfulness and headiness. We should be very thankful and very appreciative of what God has made known to us of His gracious purposes, but should strictly avoid every attempt to 'run before the Lord and to try to rudely break into any feature of His Plan which He has not yet unlocked. We should remember that any knowledge we might gain in advance of God's due time would be injurious to us. As, for instance, Mother Eve, already possessed of knowledge of good, by disobedience broke into and gained a knowledge of evil, in advance of the Divine regulation. The knowledge thus gained was expensive.

We urge our readers to exercise moderation in respect of their faith and conduct in all matters—including their chronological forecasts of the future. In our judgment, it is very unwise to spend valuable time and energy in guessing what will take place this year, next year, etc. On the contrary, we should be using the knowledge we possess—doing with our might what our hands find to do. The Adversary undoubtedly would like to attract us away from the things that we already know, and from our privileges of service, into speculation respecting those matters of which we have no knowledge. We urge that the Lord's people stifle curiosity, and desist from prying into things not clearly set forth in God's Word, as being injurious to them, hurtful to our Cause we are all desirous of serving, and tending to hinder the work of grace in our own hearts and in the hearts of those to whom we are the Lord's ambassadors and mouthpieces.

We urge that a knowledge of the times and seasons: connected with the Divine Plan of the Ages is helpful, encouraging and inspiring. Nevertheless, such knowledge is not of itself the Gospel. If every date of the chronology and every prophecy were blotted out, we should still rejoice in His glorious Gospel, of which Jesus and His great Sacrifice constitutes the centre, and our promised Participation with Him as His members in the blessing of all the families of the earth constitutes the circumference.

This is the Good Tidings of God's grace in Christ. Let us preach the Message of God's grace, and let our hearts be stimulated with God's Message through the Prophets, to the effect that the blessing is nigh at hand. Let our moderation be manifest to all, and let the fact that we know only in part and understand only in part help to keep us humble and moderate in word and deed and thought. Thus we shall best serve the interests of our Master and His Cause, and be most in harmony with the teachings of His Word.

The Wisdom of God's Great Plan.

"He shall see of the travail of his soul and shall be satisfied."—Isa. 53:11.

To the earnest Bible Student one thing becomes very apparent, that is, that God has known all things from the beginning and that His way and wisdom is infinite. The mind of man is often questioning "Why" and "Wherefore" but to those who know God and learn of Him from His Word of Truth, there comes the blessed realisation that He doeth all things well, and especially for those who put their trust in Him. Such can be still and know that God is God indeed, and that none can hinder His purposes. God is pleased to use men in the fulfilment of His purposes, but it is important that their services be in strict obedience to His revealed way, and all are obliged to be constantly on the alert to see that in them God's purposes are really having fulfilment.

God has created all things the world and all that is therein — and He created all for a purpose. Who that reads and believes His Word can doubt that God is good, and that no evil of any kind has place in the mind of the Infinite One. This is borne home to us long before we understand His ways or Plan. We may not at first fully understand the intricate ways of God's dealings with men from the beginning of creation, though we are convinced that He knows best, but God does not intend that we should forever remain at this point. It is the will of God to reveal to all, who truly desire, His methods of bringing to consummation what He had in mind from the beginning. The unveiling of His mysterious ways, reveals how far above man's thoughts and ways are the thoughts of the Eternal One.

God as yet, however, does not reveal or unveil His ways to all indiscriminately, but only to such as avail themselves of the means that He has provided, whereby they might daily grow in knowledge of these things. However, more or less generally, God's ways are counted foolishness with men. They discern not the light and continue to walk on in the darkness. But the light shines for all of an understanding heart, and with ears that hear now. But at last "all flesh shall see the salvation of our God" and then shall men know that it was their ways that were foolish, and that the Almighty and Eternal God was all-wise from the beginning. So we are constrained to believe that everything that has taken place in the world since it was created by God, will finally work out good. That is not to say that everything that has taken place has pleased the Creator, but He is so all-wise, all-loving and all-powerful, that He is able to make even the wrath of man to praise Him. Many a bitter experience that has come to man through disobeying God's righteous laws, will, through God's wondrous love, be turned into a blessing at last.

Leaving the earlier events concerning mankind, viz., creation of man, his fall, expulsion from Eden, deterioration into wickedness to the time of the flood, the saving of righteous Noah and family, the promises to Abraham, and the choosing of Israel and the Law Covenant, etc., all of which God in His wisdom has used as steps towards the accomplishment of His great Plan, which He inaugurated from the beginning, we come to the time of Christ. This was God's most wondrous and loving act on behalf of men, that He should send His own Son into the world in order to restore to man that which he had lost—the blessings attendant to reconciliation with God. And at what cost was it won? What it cost our Lord

Christ Jesus, to offer tip the sacrifice necessary for that which was lost, we can but dimly comprehend—“While we were yet sinners Christ died for us.” “He was despised and rejected of men—a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. We hid, as it were, our faces from Him; He was despised and we esteemed Him not. Surely He has borne our griefs and carried our sorrows, yet we did esteem Him stricken, smitten of God and afflicted.”

It was not the physical suffering that made it so hard for our Saviour to bear; (cruel though death by crucifixion was), it was the estrangement from His loving Father in heaven which had to be borne, because upon Him was placed all our sorrows and griefs—all our sin. All men deserted Him at that hour. He could have borne that, hard as it was, but for God to hide His face from Him also, brought from Him the cry “My God, my God, why hast Thou Forsaken Me,” together with the sweat drops of blood, and the apprehension of which is shown in the thrice repeated prayer, “Oh God if it be possible let this cup pass from me.” It was for’ our sin that He bore all this.. He died the just for the unjust. God hid His face from Him then, because He cannot look upon sin, and Jesus was made sin for us. He paid its bitter price to the uttermost; yet in this dark hour God’s plan was going forward and man knew it not — “We did esteem Him stricken, smitten of God and afflicted.” “If He be the Son of God” as He said. “Let Him come down from the cross” we hear the sneering cry. Ah, little did they know that they were really crucifying the Son of God, who if He had chosen could have there and then come down from the cross. Why did He not? Because He came to do the Father’s will—to complete the part then due to be fulfilled in His fathers plan, so that in due time that which God had willed from the beginning would be fully accomplished.

Remember Jesus saying; “Now is My soul troubled and what shall I say, ‘Father save Me from this hour: but for this cause came I unto this hour.’” This is what He came for: His mission then was to die the just for the unjust. When the disciple took up his sword to defend Jesus, he was forbidden. “Not so,” said Jesus. Could not the Father even now send twelve legions of angels to deliver Me? but how then could the Scripture be fulfilled, for it shows that it must be this way. Thus we see God’s plan again in the forefront. We remember too the troubled disciples on the way to Emmaus, and Jesus showing them how they failed to comprehend God’s plan. They tell -Him, ‘Jesus is dead, and we trusted He was the Saviour for whom we looked.’ “Oh, slow ones to understand God’s plan,” says Jesus in effect, “Ought not Christ to have suffered these things and enter into His glory.” What a joy to them as He opened up the Scriptures that they might see God’s plan advanced, instead of frustrated, as they had thought.

Then began to open up the ‘next feature of God’s great plan. The out-calling from amongst men of a people for. His name—the Church the bride of Christ—those to whom it is promised that if they are faithful in fulfilling the stated conditions, they will be allotted a share in the Kingdom of Heaven and shall be co-heirs with Jesus, their Head. So far as the world is concerned, and even with the majority of professing Christians this is still a great mystery. How vastly different, indeed, in faith and practice, is that referred to in the Scriptures as “The Church” compared, with what the world and Christendom of to-day calls “the Church.” Just how topsy, turvey the whole matter has become is daily, becoming increasingly evident, even to the worldly. But each day brings us nearer to the completion of the mystery, and then men shall again behold how God, as of yore, has been working in mysterious ways -His wonders to perform.

The out-calling of the church is the work which has been in progress since Christ’s death and resurrection and is still going on. All are not called to become members of the bride of Christ and all who are called are not chosen—many are called, but few are chosen. Only those who are faithful, actually become members of the bride of Christ. The whole matter clears, when we see that., as soon as one is called of God, and accepts the privilege of becoming a member of the body of Christ, of the true Church, which is His Body, then, from that time he is on probation—his time of proving and testing which is severe then begins.

It is a great and responsible position to which we are called. Whole-hearted loyalty is therefore required; half measures are not acceptable — “Ye cannot serve God and Mammon.” Christ is the Rock upon which the Church is built; He is the great example whom the called are to follow. Those who prove faithful and at last are chosen, are exalted to a position which is described as sitting with Him (Christ) in His throne. To ever become worthy of such a place of ourselves, would be attempting the impossible, but God in His wisdom, love and mercy has provided the merit for our lack, in Jesus our Redeemer and Lord. Nevertheless in Him we must work out our own salvation with fear and trembling. Our probation does not end until we finish our earthly course in death. -We must never could ourselves to have fully apprehended, but must be pressing on towards the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

It is a narrow way. The servants are not above their Lord, therefore we cannot expect the world's friendship which is enmity with God. “Woe unto you when all shall speak well of you” but “Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and say all manner of evil against you falsely for My sake and when they shall separate you from their company.” • Jesus said, “I came not to send peace; on earth but a sword or division.. From henceforth there shall he five in one house divided, three against two and two against three. Father against son and son against father,” and so on. He was not then referring to the Universal Kingdom of Peace which will eventually be on earth as God's great plan progresses to completion; but to the time of the out-calling of His Church, showing how its members could not expect peace in earthly things but rather division, being strangers and pilgrims on earth, having no continuing (or abiding) city, but seeking one to come.

However, the peace of God which this world can neither give, nor take away, is always with the -faithful. Troubled perhaps on every side: yet not distressed; perplexed but not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken. To suffer is necessary in order to share His glory. It was the way the Master went, should not the servant tread it still. But you say, How can a God of love take pleasure in suffering of any kind: only in this, that it is necessary for a time to work out His infinite plan, which at last when all is unfolded shall leave men speechless with wonder at its wisdom. Can we doubt that God would keenly feel the agony of His dear Son as He cried, “If it be possible let this cup pass from Me.” But it could: not be lifted and God's will, be carried out. God knew His beloved Son would eventually see the cost of the suffering- to have been well worth while, and that He would not have had it otherwise. The time' would come when He would see of the travail of His soul and would be satisfied. And to those who are granted by grace a part with Him in the sufferings of this present time and the glory to follow, let us remember that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us as God's great plan advances even to the consummation of all which He had in mind from the beginning.

“For in that He died, He died for sin once, . . . Likewise reckon ye yourselves to be dead indeed for sin.
“—Rom. 6:10-11.

This Booklet is in lieu of August, 1939, issue The Offerings for Sin

“Knowing that Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over Him, For in that He died, He died unto (for) sin once: but in that He liveth, He liveth unto God. Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto (for) sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord.” Romans 6:9-11.

THE subject of the offerings for sin is one by which we are reminded at once of the terrible consequences as a result of “sin entering into the world, and death by sin,” and while our purpose is not to dwell particularly on the introduction of sin into the world and examine the dire results therefrom, but rather to emphasise the wonderful provision to take away sin from off the face of the whole earth, yet it is fitting to note the extensiveness of this evil, for by so doing, we realise more fully the effectiveness of the remedy God has provided, as expressed by the little poem:

“To wipe away of sin each trace,
To, make of earth a perfect place,
With glory everywhere.”

While, then, our text’ in the. 6th of Romans explains in few words the offerings for sin, in the previous chapters of this same Epistle we find’ that St.’Paul covers the whole. subject of the introduction of sin, and how God, without violating’ one of His great attributes can effect a lasting remedy. that will not only bring blessing to the human race, but also. great glory and honor to His holy name throughout all eternity.

In the first chapter of. this Epistle, Paul shows how quickly the entrance of sin into the world’ brought man down to the condition of the brute beasts—”When they knew God they glorified Him not as God, neither were thankful; but became vain in their imaginations. and their foolish hearts were darkened; for the invisible things of Him from the creation of, the world are clearly seen, being understood by, the things that are made, even His. eternal power and God head; so that they are without excuse.” By one man, sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men for that all have sinned. Yes, “death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam’s transgression.” All were not put on trial similarly to Adam, yet “when they knew God they glorified Him not as God”; “Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools.”

All the World Guilty before God.

Paul then passes on to Israel and reviews their standing before God under the Law Covenant, yet, while stressing the great advantages that they had over the other nations of the world, in being God’s chosen people and receiving His laws through Moses, the typical mediator, when he comes to the question of their salvation from sink and death and hope of eternal life, he asks:—”What then? Are we better than they?”—are we, better than the Gentile nations whom God allowed to go their own ways? “No, in no wise: for we have proved both Jews and Gentiles that they are all under sin; as it is written, There, is none righteous, no, not one.”

The Apostle, in proving the point that “all the world stands guilty before God,” teaches the same lesson as that revealed in the vision shown to St, John as related in Revelation, chapter 5. St. John beheld a sealed book in the hand of Him that’ sat on the throne, and the question was asked by the angel, “Who is worthy to open the book and to loose the seals thereof ?” And no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth was able to open the book,. and to look thereon and John wept much because of this. The following scene also agrees so fully with Paul's statement:—"And one of the elders said unto me, weep not, behold the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Root of David,. hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof. And I beheld, and lo, in the midst of the throne, and of the four beasts and in the midst of the elders, stood a Lamb as it had been slain."

Jesus the Ransom.

Here we have revealed "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world," agreeing with Paul's words in Romans 3, where he declares that, "all have sinned and come short of the glory of God; being justified freely by His grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood, to declare His righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God; To declare, at this time His righteousness: that He might be just, and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus."

Here, then, is God's wondrous means of providing salvation for a world of sinners lost and ruined by the fall—the giving of His only begotten Son to be the ransom or corresponding price for all mankind condemned in Adam. This matter is expounded fully in Romans, chapters 4 and 5, then when we come to the 6th chapter we find not only the foundation, first principles of our faith and hope brought out, but also the deeper, spiritual truths that pertain to the outworking of this wonderful plan of salvation.

The Ransom, Not the Sin-Offering.

It is one thing to appreciate very fully God's great gift of our Lord Jesus to be the propitiation for our sins and for the sins of the whole world, but it is quite another to understand, to grasp and rejoice in God's method of taking away the world's sins by means of that satisfactory price provided by His dear Son.

It is respecting the application or use of the ransom price to which our subject particularly applies, and it helps greatly if we keep in mind the fact that the Sin-offerings signify how God, in His wisdom and good pleasure, has seen fit to make application of the blood of Christ so that each and every member of the human race may, in due time, receive all the benefits intended, though in God's plan, the Lamb was slain before the foundation of the world.

God's Plan Accomplished-In Due Time.

How often we have it brought out in the Plan of the Ages that God has a due time for everything, so this term, "in due time," explains many difficulties, not only when we are first coming to a knowledge and appreciation of the truth, but also in regard to the deep things of God, of which the Sin-offerings is one.

The statement of John the Baptist as he introduced his disciples to the Lord is very familiar—"Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sins of the world," and at first thought one might say, "Yes, Jesus took away the sins of the world when He proved faithful unto death at Calvary;" but not so. It is one thing to provide a price that can release the world, from its sins, but quite another to so apply that valuable thing to Justice that the condemnation is lifted. Yet how true John's words were—"The Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world,"—that will take away their sins, in due time.

We have the same thought in John's Gospel respecting our Lord—"That was the true light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." Again we must say, not so at the present time; the Lord has not lightened every man; yet the statement is true. "The true light that lighteth every man"—that will lighten, in due time, every man that cometh into the world.

Again, we have the statement of Paul's in 1 Tim. 2:6 —"The man Christ Jesus gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time.” Does not Paul imply here that Jesus paid to Justice a ransom or corresponding price on behalf of all mankind at His first advent? No, we do not think that is his thought. He had just previously stated, “God will have all men to be saved and to come unto the knowledge of the truth”—in due time. Just so his thought respecting our Lord’s sacrifice seems to be—Christ Jesus gave Himself to be a ransom for all, in due time; and which would also be testified or revealed to all in due time.

Rightly Dividing the Word of Truth.

It may be asked, how do we know that this is the true understanding of the matter? It is from the Scriptures as a whole that we find both typical and antitypical sin-offerings agreeing with this thought, though they are often not clearly understood by the brethren. There is a tendency with some, when they come to appreciate the great sacrifice of Christ at Calvary, to conclude that all sacrificing for sin was finished there; that by some means the corresponding price was paid to Justice on behalf of all mankind, and that it is really dishonoring His precious blood to think of further offerings for sin during this Gospel Age.

However, on this, as on all other matters of faith, the Scriptures alone must be our guide, and it is as we go to both Old and New Testaments that we find the subject of the Sin-offerings clearly expounded, which, when rightly understood, brings additional honor and glory to Christ and the great plan of redemption of which He is the centre.

It is necessary to add that there is no thought of ransom price in any other offerings for sin, than that of Christ, our Head. As stated previously, our subject has to do with the application of the valuable thing, the ransom price, so that eventually, “As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.”

Type and Antitype.

Let us examine some of the helpful types of the Old Testament, which we may be sure have their fulfilment in the antitypes or realities, commencing with Christ. At the Passover in Egypt, this was a means whereby the children of Israel were delivered out of that land, and the shedding of the blood of a lamb was the central picture of the whole matter. At the appointed time a lamb without blemish was slain by each household of Israel, and its blood sprinkled on the door posts and lintels of the houses. This was for the protection of certain individuals only, in each house—the firstborns. No others were in danger of death during that terrible night when the firstborns in every Egyptian household were destroyed. It is well known that the lamb in Egypt pictured our Lord Jesus—the lamb of God—and while that type had special reference to the ransom, or corresponding price, the fact that the application, of the blood was made in the interests of the firstborns only, is most important. This shows the application of the blood of the Lamb of God during the whole of this Gospel Age; it is only for the covering of the firstborn class; no others have had the blood applied for them; justice is satisfied only for the few—the church of the firstborns whose names are written in heaven.”

What a wonderful thing this is, that God should determine to choose out some from the human race and give them the privilege and benefits of being covered with the blood of Christ far in advance of the multitudes of mankind, and for a very special purpose, over and above anything we could have thought or asked. So, we see in this important type, the truth of the mystery hid from ages and dispensations, but now, during this Gospel Age, made manifest to the saints.

It is, however, from the further types of Israel’s day of atonement that we find the better sacrifices for sin so completely, so beautifully and so clearly pictured, and it is to these that the great Apostle Paul makes special reference when expounding the realities, particularly in his Epistle to the Hebrews. How fitting that the Lord should give the Hebrew Christians these precious truths first of all, that they may realise how fully their law arrangements were shadows of good things to come, and as we also come into Christ, it is our privilege to be fully informed of these matters, if we are ready to receive that which the Lord has in store for us.

Increasing. Light.

Have we ever felt, dear friends, in looking back over past years, how little we had understood God and His plan prior to receiving the truth in a general way. No doubt we have; but have we also realised how little we have understood and appreciated God and His plan, even after receiving the truth in a general way? If so, we are in a happy condition, because our hearts and minds so filled with the greatness and goodness of God, will be ready to receive more and more of His spiritual truths for our upbuilding as the under-priests in our special order or profession, of which our Lord is the great High Priest. When we have gotten rid of the errors of the dark ages and come to love the Lord and His truth with pure hearts, we are only beginning to know and appreciate something of the goodness of our heavenly Father. On the night in which He instituted the Memorial of His death, our dear Lord said, "This is life eternal, that they might know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent." What a thought—"to know Thee, the only true God." Yes, and to obey Him; this is life eternal. And as we come to know God and His wonderful plan, we find over and over again, "still there's more to follow." This is particularly so in the subject of the offerings for sin, in which some of the grandest and deepest truths of the plan of God are to be found. How the noble Apostle labored to expound these things for us, and let us endeavour to trace his thoughts, as he brings out the realities from the types of Israel's Atonement Day.

Typical Atonement Day.

The thought in the word "Atonement" is in itself a beautiful one. It signifies, reconciliation; and so we find on that 24-hour day, set apart once a year, Israel was typically reconciled to God. And why be typically reconciled every year;

why did not this reconciliation last? Because those offerings for sin were typical only, just as was the day—"In those sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins every year. For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins." (Heb. 10:3, 4.). No, indeed. But why does the Apostle so clearly and definitely say, "the blood of bulls and of goats"? Because in the type both animals must be slain to complete the sin-offerings, and this pictures the important antitype.

Typical Sin-Offering-Bullock.

In the 16th chapter of Leviticus, we have Israel's day of atonement offerings for sin so fully explained. Aaron, the high priest, was instructed to be clothed in the holy linen garments, which in themselves are very significant, and the first of the sin-offerings is a young bullock —'which is for himself, to make atonement for himself and for his house." It will be remembered that in the type there were the high priest, the under-priests, and additionally the Levites from, whom the priests were selected; so this bullock of the sin-offering was sacrificed on behalf of these only — himself — the members of the priesthood and his house — the tribe of Levi.

The account in Lev. 16:11-14 reads—"And Aaron shall bring the bullock of the sin offering, which is for himself and shall make an atonement for himself and for his house, and shall kill the bullock of the sin offering which is for himself: And he shall take a censer full of burning coals of fire from off the altar before the Lord, and his hands full of sweet incense beaten small, and bring it within the vail; And he shall put the incense upon the fire before the Lord, that the cloud of the incense may cover the mercy seat that is upon the testimony, that he die not: and he shall take of the blood of the bullock, and sprinkle it with his finger upon the mercy seat eastward; and before the mercy seat shall he sprinkle of the blood with his finger seven times.” Here, we have a most wonderful picture of what was completed in reality, forty days after the death of our Lord, not within the precincts of an earthly tabernacle, “For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us.”—Heb. 9:24.

Antitypical Sin-Offering--Jesus.

Undoubtedly, the bullock in this typical sin-offering pictured our Lord Jesus as He presented Himself a perfect, living sacrifice to God, at Jordan. There, He was killed, in the sense that His humanity was placed on the altar—dead to His own will—fully submitted to God’s will. As the high priest passed under the vail dividing the Holy from the Most Holy, we have represented the actual death of our Lord at Calvary. The incense being sprinkled on the coals of fire before the mercy seat would picture the acceptableness of Christ’s sacrifice before the heavenly propitiatory; and then follows the sprinkling of the blood on the mercy seat, not for Israel as a whole; no, but for himself and his house. Had the high priest ceased with that sin-offering, Israel outside in the Camp, would never have had their sins typically removed.

So we see in the great antitype that Christ, on His ascension to God, appeared not for the world in general, but for us—the members of His body and household of faith generally. Does this mean that the world’s sins are not yet cancelled on the heavenly propitiatory? Yes, it surely does. How often the Apostles point out—“the whole world lieth in wickedness.” But in speaking of the “us” class, says—“Ye are bought with the precious blood of Christ”; “Who gave Himself for our sins that he might deliver us from this present evil world, according to the will of God and our Father.” (1 John 5:19; 1 Peter 1:18, 19; Gal. 1:4.).

What a wonderful privilege it is to know God’s will in this matter, as again expressed by the Apostle—“Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of our great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ; who gave Himself for us that He might redeem us from all iniquity and purify unto Himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works.” (Tit. 2:13, 14). Let us note the particular point, that it is for this peculiar or specially called out people that Christ has thus far done so much. It may surprise some to know how many times this thought is brought out in the Scriptures but all can look up the references for themselves; two more texts will suffice here--“And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished.” (1 Cor. 15:17, 18). Why does the Apostle mention those only who are “fallen asleep in Christ”? Because the world of mankind, having had no application of the blood of Christ, were not in his mind at that time. Lastly, we refer to our Lord’s own words in the memorable prayer on the last night of His earthly sojourn—“I pray not for the world, but for them that Thou hast given Me.”

But, what about the world in general; did not “God so love the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life”? Yes, indeed, and let us look again at the typical picture, which we know was so arranged by the Lord, even to the smallest detail, that it might correctly prefigure all that was to take place in the antitypical or better sacrifices of this Gospel Age.

Secondary Sin-Offering in Type-The Lord’s Goat.

In Lev. 16, following the offering of the bullock by the high priest “for himself and his house,” we read—“Then shall he (the high priest) kill the goat of the sin-offering, that is for the people and bring his blood within the vail, and do with that blood as he did with the blood of the bullock, and sprinkle it upon the mercy seat, and before the mercy seat.” The particular point to note about this secondary sin-offering is, that it was offered “for the people”—on behalf of Israel generally, as a sin-offering for them—this goat being one of two especially provided by the congregation of the Children of Israel. With this type completed, the people of Israel generally, in addition to the priesthood and house of Levi, had their sins typically removed for the twelve months ahead, and the question is, how is this fulfilled in the antitype?

As we have seen that the typical priesthood and house of Levi typified the royal priesthood and household of faith of this Gospel Age, so Israel, out in the Camp—outside the Tabernacle and Court altogether—would picture the world of mankind. As Israel’s sin-offering was an animal separate from, yet following the one offered for the priests and house of Levi, does it follow in antitype that there is a secondary sin-offering following that of Jesus, whom we have seen has appeared in heaven for the antitypical priests and household of faith only? Yes, we believe this is very definitely taught in God’s Word, our verses in the 6th chapter of Romans being one of the references on this matter.

Secondary Sin-Offering in Antitype —The Church.

The bullock in the type pictured our Lord and as everything done with the bullock’s blood was done also with the goat’s it is very clear that the class being called out during this antitypical Atonement Day, and “planted in the likeness of Jesus’ death,” constitute (because “accepted in the beloved” and being members of Christ) the second part of the better sacrifices, which in due time shall take away the sins of the world, or rather shall release from Adamic condemnation all who desire to be reconciled to God. Those who are unappreciative of the gracious means whereby they may be delivered from sin and death must die the second death.

And what does it mean “to be planted together in the likeness of His death,”—the death of Christ. It surely means that as our Lord’s death was a sacrificial one, this must also be so, in the case of those members who follow His steps—the antitypical goat class which follows the anti-typical bullock.

Head and Body Dead for Sin.

In Isa. 53, we have the words—“Thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin,” and this is undoubtedly the Apostle’s thought in Rom. 6:10, respecting our Lord —“In that He died, He died unto sin once,” or rather “for sin” as a sin-offering. Then, in the following verse, we have the members of Christ shown as the secondary anti-typical sin-offering—“Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto (for) sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord.” It is very clear that the Apostle had this deeper thought in mind here. As our Lord had no sin to put away, he could not have meant that Christ died unto sin in this sense. No, it was as an offering for sin that Jesus died; so, if His followers are likewise to be reckoned dead, it must also be for sin, with them; they having previously had their sins covered with the robe of Christ’s righteousness, so that they could appear holy, and be acceptable sacrifices to God through Jesus Christ.

Does this imply that there must be a secondary anti-typical sprinkling of the heavenly mercy seat, or propitiatory, to make satisfaction for the sins of the whole world? Yes, it surely does, but it will again be the valuable ransom price of Christ, that is at present in His members, that will clear the guilty world of mankind before the seat of Justice. Before that time every member of the Church of the firstborns, which includes the Bride and the Great Company, must have finished their course, the blood then being available for the sins of all natural people, and will be applied on their behalf. This secondary antitypical sprinkling cannot take place, then, until the close of this Gospel Age, and this point helps us greatly to determine where we are on the stream of time.

The Garments in Type and Antitype.

Turning again to Lev. 16, we find that after the two animals for the sin-offerings are killed and their blood sprinkled in the Most Holy, also the scapegoat dealt with, it says in verse 23—"And Aaron shall come into the tabernacle of the congregation and shall put off the linen garments, which he put on when he went into the holy place, and shall leave them there: And he shall wash his flesh with water in the holy place, and put on his garments"; that is, his usual garments of glory and beauty. And what does this mean? Has this picture been fulfilled as yet?

In the type Aaron pictures our Lord, the High Priest of the new order of priests, the royal priesthood, and the linen garments were worn by the typical high priest during the sacrificing and sprinkling of the blood of the animals offered for sins, and until, the scapegoat is dealt with. This represents our Lord in His sacrificial robes during the whole of this Gospel Age and until the Great Company' has finished its course; and, as in the type, it was only after all the offerings were completed that the garments of glory and beauty were worn by the high priest, (the linen garments and those of glory and beauty could not be worn at the same time) so, it is fitting that Christ, in the antitype, could not be wearing the garments of the sacrificing High Priest and also those of glory and beauty that He will put on when His reign begins. We know that God's plan is working out in harmony with His Word, and we may be sure that this type at the close of Israel's Atonement Day was just as true as the typical sin-offerings themselves.

Therefore, dear friends, if we believe, and there seems not the least reason to doubt but everything to confirm, that there are some members of Christ still being sacrificed on earth, it must follow that our Lord is still clothed in the linen garments, as the sacrificing High Priest. This is implied very fully by the Apostle's reference to our Memorial—"As often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death, till he come."

Reign Follows Completion of Church's Sacrifice.

The garments of glory and beauty will be put on at a later time—when all the sacrificing is over—and will be worn not only by our Lord, the great High Priest, but also by the members of His Body, and then. His millennial reign will begin, but not before. There are no Scriptures that we know of to imply that our Lord is reigning in the heavens while He is sacrificing on earth; He must still be wearing the linen garments in antitype, on the other side of the veil, while one of His members is being sacrificed on earth. All the lines of chronology must not be permitted to interfere with the spiritual truths pertaining to the hidden mystery the taking out of the members of the Body of Christ who are counted in with our Lord and have part in the sin-offerings on behalf of the world of mankind.

Much more could be said respecting how the type of Israel's Atonement Day has been, and is being, fulfilled during this present Gospel Age, and another thought may be added here. It is generally understood that the incense offered with the blood of the bullock, in type, pictured the acceptableness of Christ our Head—His perfect offering on the heavenly propitiatory. But with the goat's blood no incense was used—the perfume would still remain in the Most Holy from the incense of the bullock's offering. So, in antitype the Lord's people have no acceptableness in themselves as offerings for sin, on behalf of the world of mankind, but, covered by the acceptableness of Christ they are privileged "to fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ, for His body's sake, which is the Church"; that is, that God has predetermined that there should be this Body of Christ, to participate, first of all, in the sufferings of the Anointed, and later in the glory that is to follow. It will be seen, then, from this standpoint, how much depth there is in the many Scriptures pertaining to our fellowship in the sufferings of Christ, being made conformable unto His death, and just how this really must be apart from, and in advance of, the world's release from sin altogether.

How favored are all those drawn of God during this acceptable time, accepting His call to sonship, having the privilege of being offered as the members of Christ, being broken with Him, drinking His blood, if so be, that proving faithful they may also be associated with Him in His throne, putting on the garments of glory and beauty and dispensing the blessings to all humanity during the Millennial reign in the age to come. “So Christ was once offered (tho Head at Jordan and the members at Pentecost, to be consummated at the close of this Age) to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for Him shall He appear the second time without sin (without a. sin-offering) unto salvation.” (Heb. 9:28).

“Now if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with Him: knowing that Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over Him. For in that He died, He died for sin once: ‘out in that He liveth, He liveth unto God. Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed for sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord.”

In Thy due time, our Heavenly Father, shall be known Thy gracious plan, which now is hid Except unto Thy saints alone.

O glorious day, when Thine
All-wisdom, justice, power and love,
The whole creation shall approve!
In His due time, O blessed Jesus, Thou shalt see
The travail of Thy soul, and shalt Be satisfied eternally;
Thine agony on Calvary—the price that Thou didst give,
Shall cause the dead again to live!

In God’s due time, O pilgrim on the “narrow way,”
Thy painful journey ended, darkest
Night shall turn to brightest day;
Thine every trial, then, thine every tear, shall prove a gem
To beautify thy diadem!

In His due time, O weary, groaning, sin-cursed Earth,
The Lord will wipe away thy tears,
And bring the promised “second birth”;
And there shall be no pain, nor any death in that blest day
When sin and sorrow flee away!

In His due time angelic choirs shall sing again In grander strain that heavenly message,
“Peace on earth, goodwill toward men!”
And every knee shall bow, and every loving heart confess
The Christ who comes to reign and bless!

A Blessed Hope for Suffering Humanity

“We know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together, until now. And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we groan within ourselves, waiting for sonship, to wit, the redemption of our Body.”—Rom. 8:22, 23.

ONLY for a short time will any thoughtful person question the declaration of the Apostle that the human family, taken as a whole, is a groaning creation. He does not include the Church, for reasons which we shall see shortly, yet he points out that the Church also groans under present conditions. As we pass along the streets and hear the strains of music which occasionally come to us from public and private performances, as we hear the laughter and merrymaking and see the throngs going to theatres, expositions, games, etc., we might be inclined at first to say—there is a good share of the creation which does not groan much. But, as we look more closely at the facts as they come to us in the daily course, we find that much of the laughter is hysterical, and an offset to tears; that much of the music is paid for on business principles, to cheer and enthuse others, and some of it indulged in with the desire to drown care.

Similarly, those who attend places of amusement do so, not because they are happy, but because they are unhappy. Groaning in spirit, they are seeking something to drive dull care away—to assuage their disappointments and heartaches. We believe that the experienced in life will generally agree with us that childhood is life’s happiest hour, and that with the coming of greater knowledge and responsibility, come cares, disappointments, heartaches and crosses to the world of mankind in general. Let us remember, too, that what we know of the world is in many respects the best, most favoured, and least burdened section.

Looking into the Bible, we are informed respecting the angels and the joys of heaven, and given to understand that no sorrow enters there, nor any tears, nor any dying. We inquire, did not the same God who created man create the angelic hosts? Why, then, should there be so wide a distinction, so wide a difference between the conditions on earth and in heaven, that our Redeemer should teach us to pray that ultimately God’s Kingdom should come to earth and His will be done on earth as it is done in heaven? Why does He tell us that the faithful in the resurrection will be made like unto angels, neither shall they die any more? Why are we not like the angels now? Why do we die? Why are we sick? Why are we imperfect in our mental, moral and physical powers? Why are we deficient in our physical strength?

The answer to these questions requires superhuman wisdom. There must be a reason; otherwise, the same just, loving, gracious God would treat His human creatures, His human children, as kindly, as generously as His spiritual. Why is it that all of our blessings are of hope while all the blessings of the angels are actual and present?

“God Looked Down and Beheld.”

Still seeking information, we inquire of the Bible respecting man's condition, why it is as it is and how it came about. We note the prophetic declaration that God “looked down from the height of His sanctuary; from heaven did the Lord behold the earth; to hear the groaning of the prisoner; to loose those who are appointed to death.” (Psa. 102:19-21.) This is in full conformity with the Apostle's statement, and adds the further explanation that the groaning is because man is a prisoner and under death sentence. But when did he become a prisoner? When did the death sentence come upon him?

The Scriptures answer that our race was sold under sin—became the slave of sin—and that the experiences of sorrow, degradation, imperfection and death are all parts of the wage of this great taskmaster, sin. The Apostle declares that “the wages of sin is death,” and personifies Sin and Death, representing them as the great monarchs that are now ruling the children of men. He declares that Sin and Death have reigned, and as a matter of fact we know that the whole race is subject to these monarchs. (Rpm. 6:23; 11, 21.) The tomb, into which both good and bad go, is the great prison-house where all are figuratively said to sleep, waiting for the morning of the blessed Millennial Day, when Messiah shall come, and shall deliver the captives from the chains of sin and from the prison-house, of ‘death, Sheol, Hades, the grave.

Mark the Redeemer's words, “I am He that liveth and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, and have the keys of death and of Hades (the grave).” (Rev. 1:18.) Note again the prophetic statement along the same line, referring to Messiah and the work of His gracious Kingdom, when it shall be established. We read, “I, Jehovah, have called Thee in righteousness and will hold Thine hand, and will keep Thee and will give Thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles—to open the blind eyes, to bring Out the prisoners from the prison; and them that sit in darkness out of the prison-house.” (Isa. 42:6, 7.) And again, “The Spirit of Jehovah is upon Me, because Jehovah bath anointed Me to preach the good tidings unto the meek; He bath sent Me to bind up the broken-hearted; to proclaim liberty to the captives and the opening of the prisons to them that are bound.”—Isa. 61:1.

Our Lord personally preached from this text, and declared Himself to be the One who would fulfil this prophecy— who would release our race from its slavery to sin and its bondage to death. The assurance of the Word of the Lord is that we have Divine sympathy, and that a Saviour adequate to all the conditions has been supplied by the Heavenly Father, and that the world merely awaits the proper time for Him to act, to strike off these shackles, to unlock the prison door and to let all the prisoners go free from this condemnation.

Origin of Man's Slavery to Sin.

A matter which is so general as to include every member of the race in this slavery to sin and death conditions is very noteworthy, and it is profitable that we hearken carefully to the Word of God for an explanation for it. The Apostle gives the explanation, saying, “By one man's disobedience sin entered into the world and death as a result of sin, and thus death passed upon all men because all are sinners.” (Rom. 5:12.) Turning hack to Genesis we find the Apostle's words abundantly supported by the history of Adam and his deflection from obedience to God and his rejection from Divine fellowship, including his expulsion from Eden, that he might be thus subjected to dying conditions because of his disobedience, his sift. There the slavery began; there the groaning and dying of our race had its start. The Creator's words were, “Thorns and thistles shall the earth bring forth to thee; in the sweat of thy face shalt thou , till thou return unto the ground; for out Of it wast thou taken; for .dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return.”—Gen. 3:18,-,19.

Nothing could be plainer, simpler, more easy of 'comprehension to those who^ had no human philosophy and smoke of the Dark Ages to becloud their vision. It is most evident that the groaning began with father Adam, and that it has continued ever since, as his posterity has lost more and more the perfection of the image and likeness of God in which Adam was created, and has become more and more depraved mentally, morally and physically, until now, "there's none righteous, no, not one"; none perfect either in word or deed. (Rom. 3:10.) To will aright may be present with us, as the Apostle suggests, but how to perform all that we will is another matter. As he again declared, "Ye can not do the things that ye would." (Gal. 5:17.) The difficulty is that the dying conditions have left us incapable as respects absolute good, and weakened as respects resistance of the temptations of the Adversary. The explanation is sufficient, as is no human speculation on the subject. Thank God that with the explanation, the Bible holds out before us the hope referred to—the hope of the deliverance of our race from this bondage of the prison-house.

Our context notes these facts, saying, "The creature (humanity) was subject to vanity (frailty, imperfection, weakness), not of its own will, but by reason of him that subjected it (by reason of Adam's transgression)." Nevertheless, we read that this subjection to frailty was not without hope, a good hope, a great hope, a blessed hope, and this in the Bible is called "The hope set before us in the Gospel."

We note the context which declares that although the creature, mankind, was subjected to sorrow, imperfection, dying, through another — through father Adam—he is not without hope; for "the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption (death) into the glorious liberty of the sons of God." (Verse 21.) This is a remarkable declaration, for be it noted that it is not referring to the Church, the Elect, the Little Flock, but to the- creation, the- World in general. Do other Scriptures support this declaration that God proposes ultimately to deliver the human family from bondage to sin and death—from bondage to corruption? Yes, we reply, this was the very statement of the angels promulgated at the time of the announcement of our Saviour's birth, "We bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be unto all people."—Luke 2:10.

Moreover, the Scriptures give us a reasonable explanation,,not only of why 'the reign of Sin and Death has been permitted, but of how and where their reign shall be annulled and humanity be delivered. The declaration is that the Lord Jesus paid the penalty for Adam, and that this works not only a release of Adam himself from Divine condemnation to death, but works also the release of all those who came under Divine- condemnation through Adam's sin—the entire groaning creation. All the Scriptures, in speaking of the deliverance of the groaning creation, point to Messiah as the Divine Agency in effecting this deliverance. We have already quoted the declaration of Jesus and the prophets to the effect that He shall open the prison doors and .set the prisoners at liberty. We remember also the words of the angels on the subject of -good tidings of great joy which shall be unto all people, that it was because a Saviour had been born—the anointed Lord, Messiah. Thus, all through the Scriptures, every hope of the race as respects deliverance from sin and degradation is based upon Messiah and His work—His sacrificial work, finished at Calvary,. and His work of glory during the Millennial Age, which will begin at His Second Advent.

"The Liberty of the Sons of God."

Adam, In his original perfection, was a son of God, as the 'Scriptures declare (Luke 3:38), but he lost his sonship for himself and for all of his race and received instead degradation and bondage to corruption. The hope for Adam and for his race, then, in Christ, is deliverance from the power of sin and death into the liberty proper to them as sons of God. The entire Millennial Age, as the Scriptures show us, will be devoted to this work of setting free the human- family from the various bondages of ignorance, superstition, weakness, heredity, and of bringing back all who will, by restitution processes, to the original image and likeness of God, and making them again human sons of God, like unto father Adam before he sinned, plus a large and valuable experience gained during the six thousand years of the fall, and also through the one thousand years of the raising up the Millennial Age, the Resurrection Age.

Note the Apostle's argument on this subject in a preceding chapter leading up to our text. After telling that sin entered by one man's disobedience and that it was communicated to all of the race, he declares, "For 'as by the transgression of one many died, much more did the grace of God and the gift by the grace of the one man, Jesus Christ, abound unto many. For, if by the transgression of one, death reigned through the one, much more shall they that receive the abundance of grace and of the gift of righteousness, reign in life through the one, even Jesus Christ.

So then, as through one transgression the sentence came upon all men to condemnation, even so through the one act of righteousness the free gift came unto all men to justification of life. For as by the disobedience of one - man many were made sinners, so by ...the obedience of one shall many be made righteous." —Rom. 5:12, 15, 17-19, R.V.

How beautifully clear is this statement by the Apostle ! We wonder how it was that-we so long overlooked the true import of these words. We perceive that our eyes were holden and blinded 'by the unscriptural theory that when the Church,. the "little flock," the saints, should be selected, all the remainder of mankind would be condemned to an eternity of torture! Since we have gotten rid of that delusion, our eyes are opening more and more to behold the lengths and breadth. and heights and depths of God's great plan of salvation, which first deals with the Church during this Gospel Age and subsequently will deal with all the redeemed—all of the children of Adam condemned for Adam's disobedience, and bought with the precious blood of Christ, and to be justified from their condemnation and set at liberty by the great Redeemer when He shall in due time take unto Himself His great power and reign.—Rev. 11:1519,

Why So Long Delay? .

The question is frequently asked, why should God so long delay to bring these blessings to the world? If God's Plan indeed be higher and nobler than any of the plans and theories of men, why has it not yet been demonstrated? Why has He permitted the world to remain so long in its slavery to sin and death-4000 years and more before He sent the Redeemer—nearly 2000 years since that .Redeemer has purchased the world, and yet only a mere handful of the race. has, as yet, even heard of the only name given under heaven and amongst men whereby we must be saved? Why the delay? Does it not contradict God's claim of love and sympathy and power? If He has the love which longs to help the world, does He lack the power? Is He unable to accomplish His good purposes? Or, if He has the power, does He lack the love, the will?

The Scriptures assure us that the love of God is boundless, and that He has already accomplished for mankind a redemptive work at the cost of the life of our Lord Jesus. They assure us, too, that God's love is the same to-day as it was eighteen centuries ago, that Divine Power is almighty, and that it only waits for the proper time to come to exercise itself for the full accomplishment of the Divine will and for the full blessing of all the families of the earth, through the Messiah, the Redeemer.

The explanation of the delay is fully given in the Scriptures, which assure us that before the Divine Plan shall extend to the world for its blessing and uplift another work must first be accomplished; that God's purpose to bless Adam and his race is a restitution promise and that the Millennial Age will be "times" or years of restitution, uplifting their reign shall be annulled and humanity be delivered. The declaration is that the Lord Jesus paid the penalty for- Adam, and that this works not Only a release of Adam himself from Divine condemnation to death, but works also the release of all those who came under Divine condemnation through Adam's sin—the entire groaning creation. The Scriptures assure us that the love of God is boundless, and that He has already accomplished for mankind a redemptive work at the cost of the life of our Lord Jesus. They assure us, too, that God's love is the same to-day as it was eighteen centuries ago, that Divine Power is almighty, and that it only waits for the proper time to come to exercise itself for the full accomplishment of the Divine will and for the full blessing of all the families of the earth, through the Messiah, the Redeemer.

The explanation of the delay is fully given in the Scriptures, which assure us that before the Divine Plan shall extend to the world for its blessing and uplift another work.- must first be accomplished; that God's purpose to bless Adam and his race is a restitution promise and that the Millennial Age will be "times" or years of restitution, uplifting mankind from the mental, moral and physical degradation into which, it was plunged during the six thousand years of the reign of Sin and Death. It will also be a time for blessing the physical earth, and making it the proper home for the perfect race, the footstool of God, filled with His glory.

But before doing this, God purposed a work, if possible, still more wonderful, namely, the selecting of the Little Flock, the elect Church, who, instead of being restored to human perfection, will prove her loyalty to the Lord by her self-sacrifice, even unto death, and be granted a share with Christ in the First Resurrection—a change from earthly nature to Heavenly nature—far above angels, principalities and powers, like unto her glorified Redeemer and Head. This work of selecting the Church has been an important one, and has occupied a long period; and those who now have the privilege of becoming members of this elect Church and joint-heirs with the Redeemer cannot esteem the privilege too highly, but should with the Apostle, count that any loss or sacrifice would be as dross in comparison with the excellency of the blessings promised.

Note again that the Apostle shows that while both the world and the Church groan, they are waiting for different things. We are waiting for the deliverance of our Body (not bodies in the plural); we are waiting for the deliverance of the Church as a whole. Some of the members have gone before, but finally the entire Body of Christ, which is the Church, will be completed. Then we shall see our Lord, and will be with Him and share His glory, a united Church, a united Body of Christ beyond the veil. For this we wait, we hope, we pray.

But the world, the groaning creation, knows not of the Divine Plan. Its groaning is of a hopeless character; but we may know what God has provided for mankind even though the world be blind and in ignorance of this. We know that through the Christ, during the Millennial reign, all the families of the earth will be blessed with recovery from death, and with enlightenment and restitution assistances to righteousness and eternal life, and that only the incorrigible will die the Second Death.

And so the Apostle says that the groaning creation is "waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God." We are the sons of God. As the Apostle says, "now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be (how glorious); but we know that when He shall appear, we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is." (1 John 3:2.) We see, then, that the world's hope is in the glorified Church, whose glorious Head is the Redeemer Himself. When this Church shall be exalted in Millennial glory, the world's time of blessing will begin. Then all the groaning creation shall be liberated and have the opportunity of coming out of the corruption of death, mental, moral and physical, and into liberty and perfection, of life as the sons of God, all of which privileges have been secured for them through the merit of the precious blood.

How glad we are that the true light is shining from the Divine Word, as well as throughout the realm of nature ! How glad we are that we no longer must think of the Church alone as the subjects of salvation, and the world as a whole the subjects of everlasting condemnation! How just, how reasonable, how loving, are the Divine arrangements! To see these things should draw our hearts near to the Lord in appreciative love, and we should worship with the greatest devotion One whom we thus see worthy of praise and adoration.

Let us, whose ears and eyes have been blessed of the Lord, respond with all gratitude and humility, not merely with outward praise of our lips, but also with our hearts, let us confess His loving kindness and tender mercy; and let this appreciation more and more sanctify our hearts and separate us from the world, its aims, its selfishness. Let us fight a good fight against sin, especially in our own mortal bodies; for even though the imperfections of the flesh be not counted against the New Creature, begotten of the spirit, nevertheless, the fact that we possess the spirit of the Lord should lead us more and more to desire that perfection which is most pleasing and acceptable to Him, and to strive, therefore, to the extent of our ability; not trusting to the attainment of that perfection, but relying upon the merit of that great Atonement Sacrifice, offered once for all and sufficient for the sins of the whole world.

How much we need the Kingdom

ONCE again the world is stunned by the clash of arms—such armaments, such weapons—in the air, on the land, on the sea and under the sea. How much we need the Kingdom, “the desire of all nations,” although the nations as yet know not where to look for the relief from oppression. The Apostle says, “The whole creation groaneth and travaileth together in pain until now, waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God.” (Rom. 8:19, 22.) “To as many as received Hire gave He power (or privilege) to become sons of God.” (John 1:12.) “As many as are led by the spirit of God they are the sons of God,” etc. (Rom. 8:13-17.)

It is evident that the selection of the Church, the elect, during the Gospel Age (that is, since John the Baptist, until now) is almost completed. Then, and not till then, will righteousness and truth prevail and peace be established, for this Church class, the believers of this Gospel Age are to be associated with Christ in His Kingdom (Rev. 3:21) the object of which is to bless all nations (Gal. 3:8, etc.).

The Scriptures as a whole help us to understand how it is that God can allow these terrible things to happen on the earth. God is love, He is full of mercy and truth, but He is also wise and just. Justice condemned the human race to death on account of sin and God then withdrew His protection and kind providence from man. Mankind chose its own course and Divine wisdom has seen that it is better the lesson should be learned that there is no life worth living, apart from Divine providence and care, and that only by obedience to Divine requirements can this be enjoyed.

For 6000 years God has permitted man to go his own way. “He suffered all nations to walk in their own ways, winking at their ignorance.” (Acts 14:16; 17:30.) Only when extremes were reached and when it was necessary has God interfered with the usual course. Nothing will be allowed to hinder the progress of His great Plan of the Ages, the purpose of which is the redemption and uplift of all the willing and obedient.

Many may be puzzled that God allows such terrible slaughter, such cruel barbarity, such misuse of the great increase of knowledge and opportunities of education as now exist which could be of so great blessing to all the world. But God can and will “cause even the wrath of man to praise Him and the rest He will restrain.” “He slumbers not, nor sleeps,” and in His own wise time He will command peace, and the humbled, human family will be ready to obey and look to God to help them out of all their troubles. We are assured that the cries of the oppressed will “come up before the Lord of Sabaoth.”

In Exodus 3:9 the Lord said to Moses, “The cry of the children of Israel is come up unto Me, and I have also seen the oppression wherewith the Egyptians oppress them.” Israel had been allowed very severe experiences in Egypt, but when certain lessons had been learnt and in His own wise time the Lord wrought such a mighty deliverance for them by the hand of Moses that has never been forgotten. That deliverance was a figure of the greater deliverance of Israel from a later oppression when in due time the people should be gathered again to their own land and be received once more into Divine favours. (Jer. 31, especially verses 31-33; Ezek. 16:60-63.) That deliverance from Egypt not only pictures the greater deliverance of Israel from all the countries in which they have been scattered and oppressed but it pictures the even greater deliverance of all the “poor groaning creation” from all oppression of the reign of Satan, sin and death, by the greater than Moses, even Christ.

The events of our day all indicate that the time has arrived when the Lord will take up the cause of His people, the cause of truth and righteousness and the punishment of the nations.—1-sa. 26:20, 21. Verse 9 of this chapter tells us that then, “when the judgments of the Lord are in the earth the people will learn righteousness.”

Just how far the present spasm of cruel suffering, death and calamity may lead to the crisis of the great time of trouble prophesied in Dan. 12:1, we may not say, but there can be no doubt that it is related to it. It is doubtless one more spasm leading to the final cataclysm which will end this present evil world (age).

Our Lord’s instruction is that when we see the things of which He spoke, which indicate His second presence and the end of the world (age), we should lift up our heads, we should recognise that He is again present in the world and is dealing with His people and preparing to establish His Kingdom and that our (the Church’s) deliverance into His likeness, to be where He is and see Him as He is, is near. (1 John 3:1-3; John 14:2, 3.)

Even amidst the sorrow and gloom of present conditions we may rest in confident faith that the Almighty “will make even the wrath of man to praise Him,” and to work out some further feature of His great plan and purpose. How good it is to know that when “the present evil World” breaks down in the fiery time of trouble, that a new age will dawn, a world to come “wherein dwelleth righteousness.” (2 Pet. 3:10-13.)

Christ shall be King over all the earth in that day. Satan, the present prince and instigator of evil influences, will be bound and Christ, though no more visible to human eyes than Satan is, will be the King that shall reign and prosper. “With righteousness shall He judge, the poor and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth.”—Read 11:1-9; Psalm 72.

The Rewards of the Righteous.

-And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars forever and ever. ”—Dan.12:3.

IN considering who are the wise here referred to, we are forcibly reminded of Paul’s significant inquiry -- ”Where. is the wise? Where is the scribe (who boasts of his wisdom) ? Where is the disputer of this world? Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world? For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching (i.e., the preaching of this foolishness) to save them that believe.” (1 Cor. 1:20, 21.) And these believers are the truly wise ones to whom our text refers.

Those who so thoroughly believe the testimony of God as to yield themselves fully to His will are wise indeed. They have prudently chosen that good part which shall not be taken from them. In this present evil world, it is true that, like their Lord, they have tribulation, but if they endure it as good soldiers, faithful unto death, their eternal reward is sure. The reward promised is beyond this vale of tears, and the valley of the shadow of death. Then those who suffered here, meekly bearing the reproach of Christ; who took up their cross daily and followed Him; who nobly adhered to the principles of truth and righteousness, and faithfully conformed their lives thereto; who delighted themselves in the Lord, and daily meditated His law; who devoted themselves faithfully to the doing of His will, sacrificing their own—these shall by and by shine forth as the sun, as the brightness of the firmament, in the Kingdom of their Father.

O, weary ones, look up; sad hearts, be glad; for even now your deliverance is nigh, even at the doors! Soon the sorrows of this earthly pilgrimage will be ended, and your glory will appear.

It is a very noticeable fact that the nearer we approach to the consummation of our glorious hopes, the opposition of the powers of darkness grows more and more severe, as well as more subtle, and those who walk by faith alone must indeed have a very strong faith to be able to wage a successful warfare to the end, and win the victor’s crown of glory. To this end, dearly _beloved, let us keep these precious promises of God ever in mind. “Wherefore comfort one another with these words.”

While this glory that excelleth is to be manifested by- and by in the overcoming Gospel church, there is a lesser, but nevertheless a great glory to be manifested in all the lovers and doers of righteousness in all ages past. Faithful Noah, a preacher and doer of righteousness; faithful Abraham, with whom the Lord’s Will was always paramount; faithful Enoch and Elijah and Moses and Aaron and Joshua and Caleb, and a host of others, of whom the world was not worthy, shall by and by gleam forth in the earthly phase of the Kingdom of God, as “Princes in all the earth.”

When righteousness is finally established in the earth, and men have learned to appreciate the pure, the beautiful and the good, when generous love shall have displaced all selfishness, then indeed will the good deeds and blessed influences of those who., in the midst of sin and wickedness, sought to turn many to righteousness, come into remembrance and receive from all men their just reward of appreciation and praise. They shall shine as the stars forever and ever.

How refreshing the prospect of the glorious consummation of the Divine plan! Let us rejoice and be glad, and daily strive to prove ourselves worthy of the glory promised to them that love God, to the called according to His purpose.

“Come, Lord Jesus.”

“O Master, Blessed Master, it is hard indeed to know
That thousands round our daily path misunderstand Thee so!
Despised and rejected yet, no beauty they can see,
O King of Glory and of Grace, beloved Lord in Thee.”

“O Saviour, precious Saviour, come in all Thy power and grace,
And take away the veil that hides the glory of Thy face!
Oh! manifest the marvels of Thy tenderness and love,
And let Thy Name be blessed and praised all other names above.”

The Messengers of God.

"He shall give His angels (messengers) a charge concerning thee, to guard thee in all thy ways. Psalm 91:11 .

IN the midst of the "perilous times" of this "evil day," and of the warning voices of the Holy Prophets and Apostles pointing out snares and pestilences and subtle dangers on every hand—and in the midst, too, of a realising sense of the actual existence of such evil besetments and perils—how precious to the saints are the assurances of Divine protection and care and personal love!

Evidently the person referred to in our text as giving a charge, or message, is Jehovah, the Heavenly Father. The Prophet David is prophesying in respect of some person, then future. That person was primarily, we believe, the Lord Jesus Christ, and secondarily, all those whom He has accepted as members of His Body throughout this Gospel

Age--the Messiah class, Head and members. The words imply a special care of God over -this class. All through the Scriptures they are referred to as those whom God specially loves and specially cares for. Our Lord Jesus is the Only Begotten, the well-beloved Son, and all those who are His members are peculiarly loved. Jesus said to some of His faithful disciples, "The Father Himself loveth you."

The charge given to the angels we would understand to have a very broad application. The Apostle Paul assures us that the angels of God are ministering spirits sent forth to minister unto and to serve those who shall be heirs of salvation, the saved ones of this Gospel Age. Yes, all of these, because believers in Christ, because at heart faithful, because fully consecrated to the Lord and begotten of His spirit, are the special and happy objects of His grace, Ministered to and served by the invisible messengers. Our Lord Jesus sets forth practically the same thought in His declaration. "their angels do always behold (have access to) the face of My Father." The Master's words seem to imply that one or more of these angels have charge over the consecrated ones, the Very Elect.

Our Lord uses a different figure of speech from that of the Apostle, as though He would assure us that these messengers would not be delayed in caring for our interests. They would not be hindered by more important Heavenly business, but would at once have direct access to the Divine presence and attention, so that our interests would have all needed consideration. Our Lord would have us realise that we are of the House of Sons, under Himself the chief Son, hence no time is lost in bringing our interests to the Father. Our interests have first place. our angels have always access to the Father. Before we speak, He knows our minds. Before we realise our own necessities, He has made provision for them, A. wonderful watch-care has been arranged. It is hard for us to understand how the Almighty God can give such particular care and attention to our needs. Instead of being puffed up that God has manifested such loving consideration towards us, it should make us feel how little we are, how unworthy of such blessings.

Although the Father makes such use of Heavenly messengers, this by no means invalidates the thought that the Lord's earthly children are frequently used of Him as ministers, servants, the one of another. Indeed, we may be assured that the invisible messengers are required generally to act through human instrumentalities. Of this we have illustrations in the Harvest work, supervised by our present Lord and His Heavenly hosts, yet in the main carried on by members of His Body in the flesh.

The Apostle Paul has stated that the Lord makes His ministers, or servants, a flaming fire, and intimates to us that any and every agency and power that Divine providence uses is a part of that care over His people. (Heb. 1:7.) In other words, every agency used of God—whether it be fire or electricity or man, or whatever--would be a -messenger of God. And whatever would not be to His praise and work out what He chooses, He is able to restrain—as He tells us (Psalm 70:10).

Overcomers Developed by Trial.

These angels are to “keep thee in all thy ways” -- not only in all the affairs of the Church, both individually and collectively, but also in all times; they were kept during the Dark Ages as well as at other times. But this care will not keep us from temptation. None can be of this elect Church unless they have trials. In order to have the overcoming qualities of heart they must have the tests. But the Lord’s promised grace is to be with them for their assistance—not to overcome for them, but to sustain them. His grace is sufficient for us. He does not make up for a poor will; but He does make up for imperfect bodies. If the will is poor, He does not want such in His elect Church. He wants His people to be strong in will—nothing doubting—overcomers.

The next verse of the Psalm from which our text is taken proceeds to say that these messengers which have a charge over the affairs of the Church, Head and Body, will keep the feet from stumbling. In a general way we might apply the term “feet” to some members of the Body all down, in all times of the Age; as we might say, for instance, one member is a hand, and one a foot, etc. The Church, resting on those “feet” members all the way down, throughout the Gospel Age, will be guided aright; they will not be allowed, to stumble; for, “Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet. and a light unto my pathway.” Thus they would be enabled to surmount the difficulties in their path.

So all down through the Gospel Age the messengers of the Lord have helped His people over all of their trials. But this reference to the “feet” seems especially applicable to the last members of the Body of Christ.

Christ’s Presence a Stumbling Stone.

The text seems to imply that the feet members at this time would be in a position of special trial, and be as a stumbling-stone. And this calls to our remembrance that the Lord foretold this, saying, “He shall be . . . for a stone of stumbling and for a rock of offence to both the houses of Israel.” (Isa. 8:14.) This stone was stumbled over in the end of the Jewish Age. (1 Peter 2:8.) The Scriptures set forth that Jesus is the Way. The Lord is a Stumbling-Stone in the pathway of many. These passages do not refer to the world. It was not the Gentile nations that stumbled over Jesus at His First Advent, but it was some of the Israelites who were there stumbled. And the text implies the stumbling of some Spiritual Israelites because of the coming of the Lord in a way totally different from what they had imagined. So we believe that there are very many good Christian people to-day who are stumbling over Christ’s appearance. They thought so and so; they imagined so and so. And all is so different from what they had imagined and expected that it is just as it was in the end of the Jewish Age, when the rabbis stumbled.

The question is, why should not the angels have charge over all good people, so that they would not stumble? Is not this the promise? We answer that the promise was made to all who are of the elect class. But in order to remain members of this Body, they must all stand the trial. It will be a test. Are they willing to have the assistance of the angels--messengers? Are they willing to surmount these difficulties and to remain in the way ?

One class will be in a condition to receive the trials in the proper manner; another class will be so self-confident, so overcharged with the cares of this life, and so lacking in spiritual development, that they will not be ready to avail themselves of the services of the angels. This is because God uses as His messengers some whom the world will not be ready to receive.

Parallelism Between. Jewish and Gospel Ages..

In the Jewish Age the Lord used some whom the scribes, the doctors of the Law and the chief priests could not accept at all. If He wanted to use agents, or channels, or messengers, to teach the people, why did He not choose the learned scribes or the pompous Pharisees of that day? Why did the Lord use as His messengers men who had been fishermen, tax-gatherers — persons whom the learned would think entirely unfit as instructors, or teachers? We recall that in the end of the Jewish Age it was written of two of them (and perhaps of all of 'them). that the people perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men (Acts 4:13). How could it be that God would pass by some of the most learned of that day? "Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father: for so it seemed good in Thy sight." (Matt. 11:25, 26.)

So to-day the Lord is using agencies, messengers, that are not acceptable to many whom they approach. And while these are making up their minds to believe, slow in this because overcharged with the cares of this life, the elect company will be made up. Then the others will say, "Lord, Lord, open unto us." But the Lord will declare that He cannot recognise them as members of His Body, the Elect. They will not have shown the spirit of meekness, gentleness, patience, love necessary to give them a place in this Body. So it will be only the Body members who will be lifted up by the messengers and carried safely through the trials and difficulties which will be permitted to test the love, loyalty and obedience to the will of God, of all who have made with Him a Covenant of Sacrifice—even unto death.

"The Ten Camels."—

Appreciation of these Bible Stories is expressed by a number of friends in their correspondence recently. The following extracts are samples:—"We were pleased to receive the two copies of 'The Ten Camels.' It is nice to see, at long last, some effort being made to record the story simply, that a child may understand; to re-tell so that childish minds may appreciate the truths that have made us so glad. The little book contains a wealth of good news; enough information surrounds the story of each camel to warrant an illustrated series of booklets."

"We were glad to have the copy of 'The Ten Camels' and it is a very nice little book indeed, both in its get up, binding, etc., as well as in the matter contained. So far as I have read I think it is splendid. It would do all the Lord's people good to read it. We trust it may be much blessed in the homes of the friends and be a means of comfort and help to many, young as well as older ones. We would like another copy, please."

The Epistle of Christ.

“Forasmuch as ye are manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ ministered by us, written not with ink; but with the Spirit of the living God; not on tables of stone, but in the fleshly tables of the heart.”—2 Corin. 3:3.

THE writings of the Apostle Paul are rich with quotations and illustrations from the Old Testament Scriptures, thus furnishing us with most valuable inspired comments and explanations as to the meaning of the types and prophecies which God gave back there for the edification of His people “on whom the ends of the ages have come.” (1 Cor. 10:

11, Diaglott.) Our text is a wonderful example of how the inspired apostle presents type and anti type and makes a practical application of the lesson to the mission of the church in this age. Note his reference to the tables of the law, given by God to Moses, and of the suggested antitype, the “epistle of Christ” written in the hearts of the consecrated followers of the Master.

Those tables of the law constituted the basis of the old Law Covenant; hence we get the unmistakable thought that God, through His spirit, is now preparing His church to be associated with Christ, the Mediator of the New Covenant, in the administration of its laws. Thus, also, do we see that the New Covenant has not yet been inaugurated for the reason that the preparatory work therefor has not yet been completed. How valuable, then, are these words of the apostle, in helping us to see the harmonious arrangements of God’s covenants, in His divine plan for human reconciliation.

In Exodus 24:12, we are told that the tables of the law were given to Moses in order that he might teach the people. Such is the mediatorial relationship of the entire Christ to the New Covenant which is to be inaugurated with Israel and through Israel with the whole world at the beginning of the thousand-year period. In 2 Cor. 3:6, the apostle tells us that we are made “able ministers of the New Testament,” or Covenant. Moses was a servant of the old Law Covenant, Indeed, he served that Covenant even while it was being prepared. So we are now serving the New Covenant, in the sense that we are participants in the work of preparing it, getting ready to minister it to the people. The fact that faithful Christians of this gospel age are thus shown to be servants of ‘the Covenant indicates clearly that they are not to be among those to be blessed or served by that Covenant.

In 2 Cor. 5:18, 19, the apostle indicates that our ministry of the Covenant is one of reconciliation. Indeed, the great work of The Christ during the next age will be to reconcile the world to God. But those who are to be judged worthy of participating in that future glorious work of reconciliation must themselves first be reconciled to God, and be prepared as the epistles of Christ to administer the laws of that New Covenant. We are admonished to walk honestly as in the day; that is, we are to live now as though the righteous laws of the Kingdom were already in force. Even so, while the New Covenant is as yet merely in the course of preparation, its “law, which will then be in force, should even now become a part of our being. It is upon this basis that the “epistle of Christ,” the antitypical tables of stone, are now being written, not with ink, “but with the spirit-of the living God.”

The apostle adds a further word of explanation by saying that these “epistles of Christ” are “ministered by us” -by the apostles, and by all the church, as we build each other up in the most holy faith. True, this epistle is being written “by the spirit of the living God,” yet that spirit, during this age, operates through the truth, and each consecrated follower of the Master is authorised by the spirit to be a communicator of the truth-a minister of God and of His spirit. Yes, it is as we speak the truth in love that we grow up into Him in all things-Eph. 4:15; 5:18, 19.

Thus we have brought home to us, in still another way, the fact that the work of the church in this age is not to convert or reconcile the world to God but to make herself ready for participation with Christ in that blessed future work of the Kingdom. But, in carrying on this present work of the ministry, we are to be energetic in proclaiming the truth; for in God’s plan He has arranged that, through such faithfulness in witnessing, all the ministers of the New Covenant will be found and prepared for their future work.

Inasmuch as the apostle makes it clear that the tables of stone on which was written the Law in Moses’ day are illustrative of the “epistle of Christ” being written in the hearts of God’s people during this gospel age, it is in resting to note some of the circumstances in connected with the preparation of that typical “epistle”- the great tat* 61 Sinai.

An account of this is given us in Exodus 34:4=7, as follows:-

‘And He [Moses] hewed two tables of stone like unto the’ first, and Moses rose up early in the morning, and went up. into Mount Sinai, as the Lord had commanded and took in his hand the two tables of stone. And the Lord descended in the cloud, and stood with him there, and proclaimed the name of the Lord. And the Lord passed by before him, and proclaimed, The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and’ gracious, longsuffering, and abundant in goodness and truth. Keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin, and that will by no means clear the guilty; visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children’s children, unto the third and to the fourth generation.”

Typical and Antitypical Features

The original tables of law were destroyed by Moses on account of the sin of Israel in turning away from God and worshipping the golden calf. This reminds us that the original covenant relationship that existed between God and man was destroyed because of man’s sin. Also that the Law Covenant was broken because of sin-“which My covenant they brake,” the Lord tells us. (Jer. 31:32.) Thus it would seem that the second two tables of stone on which God wrote His Law would very fittingly represent the Law of the New Covenant; or, to be more exact, the method by which that Law would reach the people; and in our text Paul shows that this will be through the church, as the “epistle of Christ.”

Moses hewed those stones and took them up unto Mount Sinai, and there God wrote His law on them. So the “epistle of Christ” is hewn or called out from the world, by Christ. After His resurrection from the dead, He ascended to the Father’s presence and there “appeared for us.” Thus, He bore His followers before the Father, and throughout the age these have been seated together in “heavenly places in Christ Jesus”-not on literal Mount Sinai, but by faith, on Mount Zion. (Eph. 2:6.) It was while Moses, bearing the tables of stone, was with the Lord in the cloud that God’s Law was written on those tables; so, it is while the prospective joint-heirs of Christ are, throughout the age, dwelling with Him in heavenly places and thus by faith in the presence of God, that the Law of God, the Law of the New Covenant, is written in their hearts and they are thus prepared to administer that Law as co-judges with Christ in the Mediatorial Kingdom yet future.

And how wonderful was the experience of Moses in connection with the preparation of those typical Tables of the Law ! God talked to Israel's leader and told him of His own glorious attributes. So in the antitype, God talked to Christ, and through Christ-who "hath in these last days spoken unto us"-that same message of God's glory comes to us. And thus it is, that while seated with Christ in heavenly places we hear the voice of God, through the glorious truth of His plan, and thereby learn of His glory in order that His attributes may be written in our hearts.

The object of the Mediatorial reign of The Christ is that the world of mankind may be brought back into harmony with:, God and restored to His image and likeness. Thus it is necessary that the Law of that New Covenant as it will be presented to the people by those who now are constituted the "epistle_ of Christ," reflect the glorious attributes of , Jehovah's character in order that the people, through obedience to that Law, may learn to know and serve God acceptably. Indeed, the Lord tells us that this is to be the ,happy result of the making of that New Covenant-"for they shall all know Me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord." Jer. 31:34.

God's Plan in Review.

What a wonderful vision of God's glorious character was given to Moses at the time those typical tables of the Law were prepared-"And the Lord passed by before him, and proclaimed, The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, longsuffering and abundant in goodness and truth. Keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin, and that will by no means clear the guilty; visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children's children, unto the third and to the fourth generation!"

And, brethren, through Christ, and by means of the spirit of truth, God speaks to us now; and in that glorious message of truth, we see reflected all the various qualities of the Divine Character that were briefly stated to Moses. Indeed, the import of the divine-plan message is that through it we may learn to know God, receive the impress of His character in our hearts, and thereby be prepared to be co-workers with Him, as the "epistle of Christ," in causing the knowledge of His glory to fill the whole earth "as the waters cover the sea."-Isa. 11:9; Hab. 2:14.

Let us note the qualities of God's character as they were stated to Moses on Mount Sinai: "Merciful and gracious." How wonderfully the divine plan reveals to us the mercy and graciousness, or grace, of God ! And how absolutely void of these characteristics is the demon god of the dark-age creeds! Here, again, is brought forcibly to our attention the vital importance of the truth in the Christian life; for it is by the truth, not error, that we are set apart to the divine service. Yes, God is merciful and full of grace. We see this manifested in the fact that while His justice condemned our first parents to death because of their disobedience, and through them the whole world lost life, yet He was not content to let it go that way forever; so His mercy and grace and love "contrived 'a way to save rebellious man."

And "longsuffering." Oh, how longsuffering our Heavenly Father has been! For six thousand years He has witnessed the rebellion and sin of His earthly creatures; yet He still loves them, and still plans to bless them. And He is also longsuffering toward His saints, who because of their fleshly imperfections often fall far short of the goal in their efforts to do His will. How glad we are for the many promises of His longsuffering attitude toward us! We could not truly know and appreciate our Heavenly Father's longsuffering toward us and toward the world in any other way except through an understanding of the divine plan.

“Abundant in goodness.” Yes, “God so loved the world ‘that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever be- lieveth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life.” (John 3:16.) What an abundance of goodness we thus see manifested in the One who is so loving, that it is said of Him that “He is love.” Not only does the divine plan reveal this abundant love and goodness of our Heavenly Father in the gift of His Son to be man’s Redeemer, but it shows, also, a still further manifestation of His love in the wonderful arrangement He has made whereby the merit accruing from His great gift may become available for the actual blessing of the world. Think of the love that is revealed in His plan to select a hundred and forty-four thousand representatives from among the world of mankind to sit with Christ on the board of mediation which is to reconcile the world to God during the Kingdom period. And how could we see this vision of God’s love except through the divine plan ?

And He is abundant in “truth” also. The thought of the word truth, in this instance, is probably equity or justice.

Yes, God is just, even as He is loving; and that is the reason we can depend upon Him. This thought is amplified in the further statement made to Moses; namely, “keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin,” and yet, “will by no means clear the guilty; visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children’s children, unto the third and to the fourth generation.” A wonderful balance of the divine attributes of Love and Justice is furnished us in these words, Yes, God is love, and merciful, yet at the same time, just. It was His justice that condemned the race to death because of sin; and it is only through the divine plan that we can understand how it is possible for Him to continue being just in this’ matter, and yet be the “justifier of him which believeth in Jesus.” (Rom, 3:26.) Thank God for this glorious truth which has so clearly revealed the divine character to us! Yes, it is the truth that reveals why God has permitted evil, how His justice has operated, how His love is manifested, how His Wisdom planned it all, and how His almighty Power guarantees the accomplishment of His loving, just, and wise designs.

The Vision is Important,

And how important is this vision of truth to us who are now being prepared as the “epistle of Christ.” We must know God in order to be like Him and put our trust in Him. If God were not just, for example, how could we depend upon Him ? This seems to be the import of the information given to Moses, that God would by no means clear the guilty. God wanted Moses to understand, and He wants us to understand-indeed, through the divine plan, has already made us to understand-that while He is abundant in goodness and mercy, longsuffering and kind, yet that the wages of sin is death and that those found wilfully guilty must suffer that penalty, and that through the law of heredity, the penalty has passed on down through the centuries affecting the succeeding generations.

That’s the way God’s justice was operating in ‘Moses’ day, yet His love and His wisdom were all the while planning for a future blessing for the people in that the original penalty of death was to be set aside by another. But even when the Adamic condemnation is set aside, still God’s justice will operate; and it will still be true that He will by no means “clear the guilty.” Then, however, each one will be dealt with individually. No longer will it be a case of the father eating the sour grape of sin, and his children’s teeth being set on edge; but every one shall die for his own iniquity. See Jeremiah 31:29, 30, and note that this is descriptive of God’s method of dealing with the people under the New Covenant, as shown in verses 31-34.

Thus we are learning to know God, not only as a God of love, but also as a dependable God, a God who makes promises and keeps them, who has established a penalty for sin, and inflicts it. In fact, every attribute of His glorious character is becoming more and more apparent to us as we continue to look into and study His divine plan for human salvation. And as the brightness of the vision increases, the beauties of God's character and Law should become more and more indelibly stamped upon and imbedded in our hearts.

The Sealing Work.

The great message of truth back in the type was spoken directly to Moses while he had the tables of stone with him on Sinai. In the antitype this is also true: We receive the message through Christ, as it is passed on from one to another of His faithful followers. (See Heb. 1:1, 2; 2:3.) Thus it is that by our faithfulness in disseminating the truth and manifesting its spirit, we are helping to write the "epistle of Christ"—helping to impress the seal of His character as it is displayed in His plan, upon the hearts of the consecrated ones. Paul says that this "epistle of Christ" is being written by the Spirit of God; and, as the Spirit of God is writing this message of life and love on His willing and obedient servants, its grandeur, harmony and beauty is also being transmitted through them to yet others—their lives thus reflecting the truth of the Divine Plan.

Now let us note briefly the final conclusion which the inspired apostle reaches with respect to those said to be the "epistle of Christ" and the purpose for which this epistle is now being written. Throughout the third, fourth and fifth chapters of 2 Corinthians he discusses various details of God's plan for human reconciliation, calling our attention to type and antitype—with an occasional parenthetical suggestion not so directly related to his main theme. He reminds us of the present ministry of suffering in which the church participates, preparatory to the glory that shall follow, as typified by the glory on Moses' countenance as He came down from Sinai. He tells us of the ministry of reconciliation that has been given to us, as servants of the New Covenant, and that as such servants we are co-workers with Christ and with God.

And then, in the second verse of the sixth chapter he reaches the final point of his lesson and quotes his proof text from the Old Testament. He admonishes us not to receive in vain this great favour of being a co-worker with God, and assures us of divine grace and help to carry on if we will but do our part. "For He saith, I have heard thee in a time accepted," he quotes from Isaiah, and then adds, "now is the accepted time." Turning back to Isaiah 49:8-10 from which Paul quotes, we find a wonderful prophecy of the New Covenant and the restitution blessings it will bring to the people.

We quote "Thus saith the Lord, In an acceptable time [which Paul shows is this Gospel age] have I heard thee [Paul applies this to the church] and in a day of salvation have I helped thee: and I will preserve thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, to establish the earth, to cause to inherit the desolate heritages: that thou mayest say to the prisoners, Go forth; to them that are in darkness, Shew yourselves, They shall feed in the ways, and their pastures shall be in all high places. They shall not hunger nor thirst; neither shall the heat nor sun smite them: for He that hath mercy on them shall lead them, even by the springs of water shall He guide them."

What a glorious blessing is thus coming to the world, when those who are the "epistle of Christ" are given "for a covenant of the people." In the type, Moses came down from Mount Sinai bringing with him the tables of stone upon which was written the Law which formed the basis of that typical covenant; and here the Lord is telling us—and Paul has explained it for us—that the joint-heirs of Christ, in whose hearts has been written the unchangeable Law of God, the Law of the New Covenant, will be presented as "covenant of the people." Or, to put it in other phrase: Just as the typical tables of the law were given to Moses in order that he might teach the people, so these antitypical tables, the "epistle of Christ," are to be used throughout the age as the instrumentalities through whom Christ, their Head, will instruct the world in the Law of the New Covenant. Thus they are indeed given “for a covenant of the people.”

No wonder Paul declares that the whole creation is waiting “for the manifestation of the sons of God”! No wonder he says that we are being “baptised for the dead.” No wonder we are promised a share in the glory of The Christ. No wonder we are said to be “ministers of reconciliation.” Paul gives us a further beautiful thought in this connection, in Romans 11:26, 27, saying, “And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: For this is my covenant with them [Jer. 31:31-34] when I shall take away their sins.” Moses came out of Sinai and established the typical covenant and here the apostle is telling us that the greater than Moses shall “come out of Sion,” and establish the antitypical covenant. Moses brought with him the tables of the Law, and Christ will bring with Him, as His joint-heirs, all those who are His “epistle,” to be given as a “covenant of the people,” and through this glorious mediatorial arrangement, ungodliness will be turned away from Jacob and from the world—they will be taught to know the Lord and to be like Him.—Isa. 54:13.

So completely and universally will these who are the “epistle of Christ” proclaim and teach the knowledge of God and of His law throughout the thousand years during which the New Covenant is being made with the people, that when the work is complete there will be no further need of teachers or epistles of any kind; for, says the prophet:

“They shall no more teach every man his neighbour, and every man his brother saying ‘Know the Lord’: for they shall all know Me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more.” —Jer. 31:34. —From “The Dawn.”

The Weapons of our Warfare.

The question has been raised as to what Scriptures forbid Christians engaging in present day warfare, and this is a matter of vital importance to the Lord's people.

The whole example and teachings of Jesus were to the effect that His followers while in the world should not be of it. In other words, their hopes, aims and ambitions must be set on things above and having no continuing city here (Col. 3:2; Heb. 13:14); they are in the position of strangers or aliens in whatever country they may be situated (Psa. 39:12; 1 Pet. 2:11).

A quotation from "The New Creation" is thought very helpful on this point, and is as follows:-"Aliens must be obedient to the laws; so must we. Aliens must pay taxes according to the laws; so must we. Aliens may look for protection under the laws; so may we. But aliens would not feel compelled to fight against their own King, the allegiance which they recognise primarily; and we would prefer to be in the same position, so far as possible, for are not we 'translated out of the kingdom of this world' into the Kingdom of God's dear Son,'-in its embryotic condition ? (Col. 1:13.)

"Are not we subjects of the great King? And are not all the kingdoms of this world more or less identified with 'the prince of this world' and his law of selfishness ? Are not we, therefore, strangers and pilgrims here, and to some extent aliens and foreigners ? It is. eminently proper that we should love and appreciate every good law' and all the servants of earthly laws . . . hence, we neither traduce our country, its rulers, or its laws; but this does not mean that we must fight for these with carnal weapons.

"True, government may not always exempt those opposed to war from participating in it, although a very gracious provision of this kind has in the past been made for some who, like ourselves, believe war to be unrighteous. We may be required to do military service, and if required we would be obliged to obey the powers that be, and should consider that the Lord's providence had permitted the conscription and that He was able to overrule it to the good of ourselves or others. In such event we would consider it not amiss to make a partial explanation to the proper officers, and to request a transference to the medical or hospital department, where our services could be used with the full consent of our consciences; but even if compelled to serve in the ranks and to fire our guns we need not feel compelled to shoot a fellow-creature."

Further, our Lord's words to Peter, "Put up again thy sword into its place: for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword" (Matt. 26:52), impresses the principle, as also expressed by the Apostle-"whatsoever a plan soweth, that shall he also reap," and "the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds; casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ."

While it is true, then, that the Lord's people "through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God," the above Scriptures show that the tribulation should not be the 'result of using carnal weapons. Truly, the followers of the Master delight to walk in His steps, and in harmony with His words, "The Son of Man is not come to destroy men's lives but to save them," so they will continue in His approval as they lay down their lives in His service-preaching the glad tidings of the Kingdom which embraces the spiritual hope for the Church during this Gospel Age and the earthly inheritance for all the willing and obedient in the age to come.

Thus witnessing and comforting other members in the Body of Christ, each one who is fully consecrated to God, will continue, until his sacrifice is completed in the way and manner that the High Priest sees best to permit. It may be that some severe experiences will come upon the last members of the Church very shortly, but all who have fully “set their affections on things above” will come through triumphantly in harmony with the promise-”The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear Him, and delivereth them.” (Psa. 34:7.)

Comments on “The Ten Camels”

QUITE a number of favourable reports respecting the Bible Stories, “The Ten Camels,” are now to hand, and the following comments ‘on the importance of fulfilling responsibilities towards the children will no doubt be appreciated by all.

“This little book should be a great help to parents to know how to lead the minds of their children to love the Bible and so learning to love

God and our Saviour as they learn the truth of God’s great purpose of blessing all the willing and obedient of. the human family.

“Perhaps some items could have been omitted and some statements may not be quite correct, though nothing that is of importance.

“To treat a child as this mother dealt with her little daughter is surely one of the greatest joys of human life; to see the little eyes brightened with interest and have the little questions and to note- the increasing interest and ultimately to see the happy result, is surely a crowning joy, for the children grow up to call their parents ‘blessed.’

“Truly it is the general failure of parents to thus nurture the minds of their children that has led to the present decline of godliness and increase of paganism in what we call Christian lands and to the sad condition the poor world has reached to-day,

“The church has been ‘the salt of the earth,’ the ‘light of the world,’ but the salt has lost its savour. All down the dark ages many false doctrines beclouded the truths of the Bible but still there existed, a reverence for God, and a seasoning of righteousness affected the people and the laws of nations. Then there arose the teachings of the ‘higher critics’—clergymen who seemed intent on proving the Bible untrue, uninspired of God—and the people lost faith and concluded that if there was no real revelation of God, there was nothing certain. They became careless and the instruction of children was neglected and thus the condition foretold by Paul has collie about-1 Tim. 4:1; 2 Tim. 3:1, 2, etc. Whole nations that were called. Christian nations have become pagan. Even Germany, the land of Luther and the Reformation, became the hot-bed of the Higher Criticism Infidelity and, like the pagan nations of old, has plunged Europe into the horrors of war of the most diabolical kind.

“How far, may we ask, is the neglect of parents regarding Christian instruction of their children responsible for the present cataclysm ? How great is the responsibility of parenthood; what a stewardship ! How sad at the end of the way if the steward cannot give a good account, if the children have grown up ‘weeds’ instead of lovely blooms. What joy if, on the other hand, there has been careful Christian training and they not only receive the present joys of loving reverence of their sons and daughters but also the ‘well done good and faithful servant’ from the Lord.”

The Patience of Christ.

(Contributed.)

“And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ.”-2 Thess. 3:5.

Possibly there is no pure teaching of God’s Word that has received greater violence at the hands of Christendom than the second advent of our Lord. One finds professing teachers and expounders of God’s Word ‘frankly admitting that the whole subject to them is “vague.” What, then, could we expect of the masses ? The fact remains, however, that all truly consecrated Christians down through the ages have loved and longed for the promised second advent, and it can be asserted that it is one of the sure tests to-day regarding truth and error. There are those who still dare to assert that there is no second advent until the whole world is converted to God through the agency of the church systems. How ridiculous ! If God’s Word told us this was to be so we would certainly believe it, but it shows quite plainly that it is not so. What it does tell us, is that when the Son of Man cometh there will be very few who cling to true faith founded upon His Word (Luke 18:8), and that there will be many scoffers regarding His presence (2 Peter 3:3, 4).

We are also told that the days of the Son of Man will be like unto the days of Noah (Matt. 24:37). There was nothing about the conditions of Noah’s day that would give us a thought of a converted world, but quite a deal that would harmonize the Scriptures concerning scoffers, for they scoffed at Noah’s warning of the impending flood. Likewise, as there were a few then who heeded God’s Word, so now in the days of the Son of Man there are a faithful few who are warned of God of things not seen as yet (Heb. 11:7). The erroneous teaching that the church is to convert the world in this age has much beclouded the issue. The Scriptures certainly show that it is God’s design that at, last the world shall be converted unto Him through Jesus Christ (Phil. 2:10, 11; 1 Tim. 6:15). When the whole earth is at last filled with a full and true knowledge of God through Christ (that is the consummation of the prayer “Thy Kingdom come”) the earth truly will be a beautiful place. Many, however, who are captivated with the vision of a perfect earth, fail to discern the plan of God which He has ordained to its accomplishment, and work with more fervour than knowledge for its attainment. We should all be quite familiar with the special mission of our Lord Jesus at His first advent, the giving of His life a ransom for all, dying the just for the unjust-the price of sin paid that man might be redeemed from the power of the grave. Because of His (sacrificial) death, life has and will be proffered to all who will accept it at His hands.

In and through the life, death and resurrection of Jesus, God -had in mind two objectives which were to work out eventually one purpose, viz., the full establishment of His kingdom of righteousness. The objectives • were--first, the outcalling, perfecting, and gathering together of the Church which is Christ’s body (Col. 1:18, 24); second, thus through the first objective accomplished, to inaugurate the order whereby God’s blessings should flow to all mankind. To clearly understand the Scripture it is most essential that we keep these two parts of the one Plan distinct and separate in our mind. Failure to do so will surely confuse.

Much is written in the Scriptures concerning the establishment of God’s righteous kingdom on earth, and many prophecies paint mind pictures of what will be during, the glorious Kingdom Age, and it is no wonder that all who have caught the vision of these things, both now and in the past. have longed for and prayed earnestly “Thy Kingdom. come.” However, of that which is to be accomplished first (the outcalling of the church) there appears to be little foretold directly in the Old Testament. It has been a great mystery, revealed only since Christ’s death and resurrection by His holy apostles and prophets with the aid of the holy spirit (Eph. 3:3, 5, 9, 10). Through such revelation we discern that the New Testament scriptures have been written chiefly for the benefit of this class-to perfect the saints, to build up the body of Christ (Eph. 4:11-16).

This, then, has been the work in progress since Pentecost, and not, as some have supposed, “world conversion.”

We are thankful to our God to know that this will all come “in due time” (1 Tim. 2; 6), after the Church has been perfected in Christ and is complete. If as students of God’s Word we find it clearly foretold that a time of glory is to be over all the earth-when tears shall be wiped from off all faces; no more death or pain (Rev. 21:3, 4); when there shall be no more wars nor the fear of such (Isaiah 2:1-4; Micah 4:1-3), and the way of righteousness be made perfectly clear to everybody (Hab. 2:14; Zeph. 3:9; Isaiah 11:9; 35:8); then as we look around us and behold sorrow, pain and death prevalent everywhere, nations frantically preparing for war on a scale never before realised and the hearts of all men failing them for fear of the consequences, and all this together with the intense confusion of religious thought caused by divided denominations each proclaiming differing doctrines, do we not ardently look for the dawning of the new day that will bring such far-reaching blessings to all mankind ! Surely we do. But this also we will learn as students of the Word-before this- glad time is ushered in, the church must be complete, the last member of the Bride of Christ gathered home preparatory for the marriage (Rev. 19:7). Then .will be complete the Christ (Head and Body) who is to bless the whole world (“all the families of the earth”) (Eph. 5:23-32; Gen. 28:14; Gal. 3:29).

So whilst we joyfully anticipate the blessings due to the world by Christ’s Kingdom established, we discern that a degree of patience is required “until the due time.” Meanwhile that which is necessary of accomplishment first (the outcalling of the Church) continues. This, then, is the objective of the Christian- that he or she should daily seek by the grace of God in Christ to make their own calling and election sure, whilst the acceptable time for perfecting the joint-heirs with Christ is still open (2 Peter 1:10, 11; Rom. 8:17), as also doing all we can to help others of like precious faith “to gain the crown” (2 Tim. 4:8; 1 Thess. 5:11). This is not as easy as it may seem. If we are faithful in presenting our bodies living sacrifices, not being conformed to this world (Rom. 12:1, 2), we shall find that the way is well defined as “narrow.” The renewing of our minds must not be forgotten for a day, in order that God’s transforming work might continue in us. The way is very exacting and we shall need much patience as we seek by grace “to keep the body under,” “to overcome the world,” “to fight the good fight of faith.” Quite often, too, in seeking to help others of like precious faith our way is beset with difficulties which prove or test our fidelity and patience in the race set before us. So as we plod along this narrow way, so often reminded of our own weaknesses, and daily coming into contact with the forces of “this present evil world,” as well as beholding the suffering of humanity generally “groaning and travailing in pain,” we are tempted to become impatient and to give way to doubts and fears that assail from within and without.

The Revised Version of the text reads: “And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God and .in to the patience of Christ.” The apostle would have us attain the patience of Christ. Quietly meditating over the Scriptures which tell of the life of Jesus upon earth, it is clearly manifest how patient He was. The calm which seemed to permeate all His utterances and actions was. surely born of patience. What was the secret of His calm and patient spirit ? If we know, surely we are well on the way of attaining the patience of Christ. Was it not His unswerving faith in His loving Heavenly Father’s word? In the agonies of Gethsemane it was. “Thy will be done.” As. He claimed to be the Son of God, His enemies railed on Him to prove His authority, but He bore it all patiently, understanding quite well that the time to exert His authority and to show His power lay in the future.

The Jewish people. who refused Jesus, knowing not the time of their visitation, caused Him much sorrow at heart, evidenced by His lament over them in Matthew 23:37. We feel and know how sad He was in declaring their house desolate (v. 38), yet He remained quite calm and patient because He knew that according to His Father’s word all hope was not gone. While verse 39 meant little or nothing, then, to those who were addressed, yet, He who uttered it, quietly rejoiced in a knowledge of the Word which revealed that yet they would say, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

So then, if we have little Gethsemanes to pass through in our daily walk, what better antidote against the natural tendencies to meet reviling with reviling, etc., than a mind saturated with knowledge of the Word that explains why we must have these oppositions (1 Peter 4:12-14; Rom:8:17; 2 Tim. 3:12). If we have this, we will rejoice by experiencing a calm in such testing times.

Paul, so clear in knowledge of God and His plan in its various features down through the ages, revered God from his heart, and his experiences show how he had the indwelling of the spirit of the patience of Christ. He wished and prayed that others may be directed to this love of God and patience of Christ which he himself enjoyed (Acts 26:29; Eph. 3:13-19). So now as we see the world so disturbed and in a state of chaos, cannot the Christian remain calm? Whilst we should do what we can to alleviate distress, we realise how little we can do. And does not a knowledge of the Word of God explain all this trouble? Does it not point us to the glorious outcome of it all? Let us then, with the patience of Christ, wait God's appointed time, meantime calmly and quietly going about doing good unto all as we have opportunity (Gal. 6:10).

Let us not forget to seek grace that we might ever be patient in seeking to bring others to a knowledge of the truth of God's Word. Should we be tempted to impatience along this line, let us consider how patient God was in dealing with us, and how patiently He deals with us still. Such reflection will immediately suppress any feeling of impatience with others. If, as Jesus found "His own" (John 1:11), we encounter any who refuse to listen to the gracious messages that come forth from the Word, shall we despair? If our hearts are full of the love of God we will naturally feel it rather keenly when some refuse to investigate the truth, and in their ignorance continue in the ways of vanity which we know will assuredly end in loss and vexation of spirit; yet in a knowledge of God's Word we can be patient in Christ to know there is still a ray of light and hope that even these may at last echo the words, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

Streams of Living Waters.

"A river the streams whereof make glad the city of God."—Psa. 46:4.

"Therefore with joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation."—Isa. 12:3.

NEXT to the breath of life we breathe, pure water is the chief essential of our existence. Foods are also necessary to sustain our lives but we can live quite a while as human beings, if able to drink pure water.

Thirst is a terrible thing, which perhaps only those fully know, who have traversed the hot parched lands of blazing sunshine with water all gone and no shelter. Unless relief soon comes death quickly results and the poor body falls to the hot earth. Sometimes such tragedies have occurred even when the needed water was close at hand, was unknown. Such persons died because they "knew not."

The poor world to-day is perishing for lack of water of life—yet there is a mighty Rock in this weary land and there are wells of water; but they know not—"My people perish for lack of knowledge." "There is a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord." (Amos 8:11.) "Yet there is a river the streams whereof make glad the city of God." "Light is sown for the righteous and gladness (the joy of the truth) for the upright in heart." "Thou preparedst a table before me in the presence of mine enemies; Thou leafiest me beside the still waters." See also Isa. 55:1.

The streams that gladden the hearts of the people of God had their commencement even in the utterance of the curse on Satan by whom our first parents had been decoyed into sin with its consequence that "death passed upon, all." It was only the beginning of a stream, the small spring which ultimately gained such wideness and fulness, such soul reviving power. "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head."

It gave hope to such as sought righteousness, and there was doubtless some good understanding as to what Justice required in order that reconciliation with God might be achieved. Abel evidently had the correct thought in bringing the sacrificed lamb—a type of the Lamb of God that should take away the sins of the world, "The Lamb slain from the foundation of the world," the promised Redeemer. Cain failed to perceive the, principle of Justice envolved in the sentence of death, as though God could be appeased by the pleasantness of the beautiful productions of the earth—his own works. He failed to drink of the stream of truth and promise, but Abel drank of it and so is reckoned among the justified—"righteous Abel"—says Jesus (Matt. 23:35.) See also Heb. 11:4.

Throughout that age the stream of hope was such as to sustain faith and out of that corrupt time a few names are recorded of those who “walked with God” and looked forward to a day when right would triumph over evil and when “the Lord would descend with ten thousand of His saints to execute judgment and to convince the ungodly of all their ungodly deeds.” (Jude 14, 15.)

The stream grew clearer and deeper when God dealt with Abraham and made a great covenant with him, promising that all the families of the earth would be blessed and that this should be through his seed. Abraham drank of that good promise against all odds, and was sustained by its refreshing draught and so proved his faith in God and His promise that he ever stands out as “the father of the faithful.” So with Isaac and particularly with Jacob, who like Paul, “counted everything as dross” that he might inherit the promise, and God emphasised the promise to him.

That Abrahamic promise has sustained and refreshed God’s people ever since and is the “anchor to our souls” says Paul. As we read through the Bible we find all along the way this river the streams whereof make glad the, city of God. Joseph drank of that stream and was strengthened to Maintain his faith and loyalty to God’ under the most trying circumstances of slavery, false accusation and unjust imprisonment.

The children of Israel were sustained. by the same stream, in those two hundred. years. ‘of _oppression and slavery; they were still looking for the promised deliverer-Messiah. Moses had been taught of his parents and drank deeply of the same stream and grew strong in faith so that he “chose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God’ than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season, esteeming the reproach of Christ (Messiah) greater riches than the treasures in Egypt.” (Heb. 23-26.)

With the deliverance from Egypt by such miraculous means, the plagues of Egypt, the slaying of the first-born, the Passover of Israel’s first-born and crossing the Red Sea, the stream of hope seemed to run deeper and fresher. All through the days of the Law and the prophets it was that same refreshing stream that gave hope. How often is the fountain referred to. In times of trial or calamity, prayer is addressed to the God of Abraham, of Isaac and of Jacob and claim made upon that promise to them. Also when God would speak to them, as to Moses, it was “I am the God of Abraham, of Isaac and of Jacob.”

How the stream clarified and widened and deepened as new messages came through the prophets. While some messages were so deep as to be hidden, like “the mystery hid from ages” there was much that plainly spoke of happy days to come when the great covenant with Abraham would have fulfilment. For instance Isa. (11, and Jer- 31, and so many portions full of promise of Divine providence and blessing.

Time would fail to speak of the faithful in all ages who drank deeply of this stream. How David rejoiced in it and loved to dwell in the courts of the Lord’s house. The 110th Psalm is full of the hope of the fulfilment of the promise of Messiah-the Melchisedec King and Priest-”He shall drink of the brook in the way, therefore shall he lift up the head.” It is at the brook we get the refreshment and it is the place to find the pebbles for the sling to slay the giants that oppose the people of God. How Psa. 119 abounds in appreciation of the stream of truth, the Lord’s words of promise, of the Law’ and of testimonies. “O how I love thy law, it is my meditation all the day, etc.”-verses 97-103. Also Psa. 42:1, 2-”As the hart panteth after the water brook so panteth my soul after thee, O God.”

So it was that David was sustained all through those days of trial, chased as an outcast by Saul seeking his life. So much did David drink of the stream of God’s good promises not only to Abraham, but also the personal promises “the sure mercies of David”-that he would not lift up his hand against Saul. He simply used his diligence to keep safely out of -Saul’s way, in beautiful confidence sparing Saul’s life when he could have slain him, although tempted by his faithful adherents who argued that surely it was the Lord who had put his enemy into his hands on two occasions. See 1 Sam. 2’6:8-10.

Drinking of the stream that makes glad the city of God gives confidence and trust in God and sustains faith in the hour of need. This stream of truth and Divine promises continued to flow, always fresh with truths appropriate for each day, present truth for every age, -as also a fountain of living water for every one who like a "hart pantiig for the water' brooks" longs for God and the knowledge of His way and will, and to understand His purposes. It was this stream that supported those of whom Paul speaks in Heb. 11- "Of whom the world was not worthy." See verses 36-38.

How good were the expressions of Psalmists and prophets declaring God's good providence, protection and blessing upon Israel and those who put their trust in the Lord. While there is the deeper and wider meaning to many of these prophetic expressions, they undoubtedly were intended to be an encouragement to the Lord's suffering people in the days of old. "The Word of the Lord endureth forever" and is ever fresh-present truth in every age.

How the songs of the Psalmists and words of the prophets would cheer and support the faithful in their days and yet those same songs and messages contain for us deeper truths and are "meat in due season" to the household of faith all along the way, even to us at the present time.

Paul tells us that Israel drank of the water of the rock which was a symbol of Christ. The faithful then drank of that spiritual rock, which rock was Messiah-that was their hope. We drink of that same spiritual rock in a deeper, fuller sense, for our hope is to be members in the Messianic. company members in Christ.

That privilege was reserved for Israel, hut as. a nation they had failed to drink deep enough of that Messianic stream; they saw human glory, national exaltation and thought God was bound to protect them and give them such prominence and establish His Kingdom through them. There were others, however, who were better able to perceive the Divine Promises and provisions and like old Simeon and Hannah could rejoice in the Babe of Bethlehem who was "set for the falling and rising again of many in Israel."

For some four hundred years or more from Malachi to John the Baptist, the stream of Divine light and truth and promise was not increased. There was however sufficient to sustain the faithful through those trying years of the Gentile oppression and to make strong the brave Macabeans who by their faith were able to overcome their enemies.

Then came John the Baptist preparing the way for Christ and many were refreshed and made ready for the further development of truth by Him who spake as never man spake. That was the time of the harvest of the Jewish Age; the Lord of the harvest was present and the "present truth" was the sickle used to find the "Israelites indeed," the true wheat that had to be separated from the chaff and garnered into the Kingdom of Heaven.

How the stream flowed in splendour as the Gospel sun began to shine in the place of the Law age moon. As the moon gives only reflected light from the sun, so the Law and its types and ceremonies were but shadows of better things. "The law came by Moses but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." "God who spake in times past . . . by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by His Son." (Heb. 1:1, 2.)

No wonder Mary loved to listen to the gracious words of Jesus; no wonder the common people heard Him gladly. The Law was a yoke on them which they were unable to bear, but Jesus cried, "Come unto me all ye that are weary, and I will give you rest." Yes, a new and living way was opening up. The stream began to flow into deep waters bringing refreshment, joy and peace to those who had ears to hear. How beautiful is the incident of Jesus and the woman of Samaria at the well. (John 4:10-14; also John 7:37, 38.)

Certainly there were trials and testing, and many went back when they could not understand some of the deep truths which Jesus uttered, but the faithful were helped and strengthened and said, "To whom shall we go, for thou hast the words of eternal life.” Then, after the great trial of the crucifixion, how their hearts burned within them when

He talked with them by the way and opened to them the Scriptures “Beginning at Moses and all the prophets He expounded unto them in ,11 the Scriptures the things concerning Himself.” Then, later they began to see that just what they had deemed the great defeat of the Gospel movement was the greatest victory ever won and that Jesus was crowned as conqueror over sin and death; end - that the great Divine Plan was not hindered but progressed a most important step.

Then, after the ascension came the promise of the Father.-the holy spirit-in fulfilment of the Lord’s words, “When the spirit of truth is come it will guide you into all truth and teach you things to come,”- things which Jesus could not tell them, while He was with them, for they had only natural minds and could not comprehend heavenly truths. Now the purpose was revealed-the choosing of a “little flock” that should share the throne with Jesus and be the Abrahamic seed that would bless all the families of the earth. See Peter’s words Acts 5:14-17.

How wonderful are the truths that opened up at that time and they are handed down to us in Paul’s beautiful letters and the writings of Peter and John. The Church, as the flock of the good Shepherd has been led “beside the still waters”--deep and refreshing. Well did the Master’ say, “Whoso drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst.” “If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink. He that believeth on me, out of him shall flow rivers of living water. This spake He of the spirit which they that believe on Him should receive: for the holy spirit was not yet given; because Jesus was not yet glorified.” (John 7:37-39.)

But oh, how that stream of truth has been polluted. It was so foretold by the Lord in His parables that this would be the case, particularly the parable of the three measures of meal into which a woman placed the leaven. So the apostate church, the wicked shepherds, bishops and clergy introduced so much error and polluted the stream. What a severe indictment of these “shepherds” we find in Ezek. 34:2, 3, 18, 19. So in Revelation the Word of God is represented as being clothed in sackcloth, as lying in the street-neglected. It has revived and the purifying of the stream of truth has been going on since the Reformation. Various movements under one reformer or another have been instrumental in removing the errors of the dark ages - pagan-papal doctrines that beclouded the truths of God’s Word.

Then came the great movement of later years first under Miller, stirring the whole Christian Church to expectation of Christ’s return and then. under Brother Russell came the glad message revealing the Divine plan, not only of selecting a “little flock” but of using that little company -the completed Church-to assist our Lord as His joint-heirs of the Abrahamic promise, in blessing all the families of the earth. More than this, prophecies were understood and seen in fulfilment in events of our day, and all the signs of the presence of Christ were observed and then it was seen that we were actually living in “the days of the Son of Man,” the second presence of Christ.

Then we realise the fulfilment of Luke 12:37- “The feast is spread.” The blessing promised at the • end of 1335 days realised. The invitation of our present Lord (Rev. 3:20), is heard and accepted by those “whose lamps are trimmed and burning.” Truths are revealed showing that we are at the end of the age, the harvest time is well advanced, soon all the wheat will be garnered and the tares are being bound in bundles. Soon the burning up in the great time of trouble will take place - “The sea and waves roaring; mountains are being cast into the sea,” and this river “the streams whereof make glad the city of God,” is refreshing, gladdening and strengthening the hearts of God’s people, the City of God -the city of God’s people-the holy of the Tabernacle of the Most High ;. yes, God is in the midst of her, she shall not be moved: God shall help her right early.”

Surely the Lord has “descended from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God.” “Blessed are the people who know the joyful sound.” Soon now the City of God this “New Jerusalem” will be complete and then will become the new government of earth-- the great antitypical temple as figured in Ezek.

47:1-12, where the waters are seen to flow from under, the threshold of the door, flowing deeper and deeper. Then verse 7--”Behold at the bank of the river were very many trees on one side and on the other . . . These waters issue out towards the east country, go down into the desert and go into the sea which being brought forth into the sea, the waters (of the sea) shall be healed. And it shall come to pass that everything that liveth which moveth whithersoever the rivers shall come shall live, and there shall be a very great multitude of fish because these waters shall come thither for they shall be healed and everything shall live whither the river cometh.”

During this Gospel Age it has only been few who have tasted of this living water. Only a net full of fish taken in the Gospel Age and then “some taken, and some cast again into the sea,”- the world. But then, (in the next age) will be fulfilled Isa. 60:5-”The abundance of the sea shall be converted unto thee.”

It has been by the “wells of water” that the Bride class has been found and chosen; soon now that class will be complete and then “the spirit and the Bride shall say come, and let him that heareth say come, and let him that is athirst come, and whosoever will let him come and take the water of life freely.” Rev. 22:17; see also Rev. 22:1-5.

Outward and Inward Sight.

Yes, gone from me all earthly sight,
The forms and faces dear;
The eyes soft gleam or sparkle bright,
The answering smile or tear.
The rosy tints of opening day,
When soft lights come and go,
The wondrous ever changing clouds,
The sunsets golden glow.

The diamond flash of countless stars,
That gem the robe of night,
The moon's clear radiance covering all
With softened silvery light.
The glories of the ocean vast,
The dancing, dashing waves,
The feathery foam the tangled weed,
The rocks, and shells and caves.

Yes, gone from me all earthly sight,
The charm of mount and dell,
The varied beauties of the earth,
The flowers I love so well.
I know it all, I feel it all,
Yet I do, not rebel,
I'm resting in my Father's love,
Who doeth all things well.

And, Oh, how much is left to me,
It is not dark within;
The light of hope and peace and trust,
That suffering cannot dim.
The tender love and thoughtful care,
That dear ones give to me,
The loving touch of lips and hands I feel, but cannot see.
The power of memory and of thought,
The light and joy of prayer;
The love of Jesus, best of all
There is no darkness there.

The light of all the promises
To shine along the way;
The light of hope that points above
To everlasting day.

Harvest, Winter, Sabbath 'Peace on Earth'

AS we approach the close of another year, and the time generally observed in celebration of our Lord's birth, on earth, the thoughts of His people are not improperly directed towards the wonderful message of hope announced by the angels when He came as the babe to be the Saviour of mankind-"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." (Luke 2:14.) While we cannot agree that 25th December was the time of, the birth of Jesus, but rather maintain that it took place about three months earlier, in harmony with His death at the Passover season 331 years later, yet this message may well be considered more particularly at this time, especially in view of its apparent failure after nearly two thousand years have elapsed.

This is surely a hopeful and inspiring message, but, as with all other portions of God's Word, it can be understood only by those who have come to know the Lord and have been blessed with a knowledge of His Plan, of the Ages, and even then, much of its beauty and grandeur are beheld only after continual progress has been made and vital union with. the Lord is an accomplished fact.

This proclamation of promised "peace on earth," at once acknowledges the necessity for a great change from the present "wars and rumors of wars" with which the pages of history are stained; in fact, as the history of the past two thousand years is reviewed, the conflicts that have raged from time to time are appalling, and all this since the message was given "On earth peace, good will toward men." It would be sad indeed if this promise of peace should fail of fulfilment, but just as surely as it was announced by the Lord's direction, so it will also come to pass by His authority when the due time arrives. This earth, which is beautiful in itself, will become a peaceful haven, where mankind may dwell in safety and none shall make them afraid; and, then, shall the Lord's prayer be answered -"Thy Kingdom come: Thy will be done on earth, as in heaven."

However, the Lord's people, instructed by His Word, have realised all down the Gospel Age that the glad day of peace cannot come until the second advent of their Lord, and further, that at His return He does not immediately establish peace, but has another most important work to accomplish first; namely, the gathering of His elect, His Church, His Bride, unto Himself in a harvest work at the close of this Gospel Age.-Matt 24:31.

.This harvest work of which our Lord speaks so fully in Matt. 24 is the culmination of the selection of His "Little flock" of consecrated followers, which began at His first advent in the calling of His little band of disciples. All down the Gospel Age numbers have been added to this "people for God's name," and in the time of harvest "the dead in Christ" are raised, and the remaining members on earth are gathered into the heavenly garner, in preparation for the reign of peace which is to follow.

It is important that the harvest work be clearly understood, and the Lord has given ample instruction for all who will prove their value as true “wheat” and be gathered into the garner within a certain period of time. As in the case of the Jewish harvest those who were in the religious systems of the day and failed to respond to the Lord’s message were burned up as “chaff” (Matt., 3:12), so in the close of the Gospel harvest, those in the religious systems who do not respond to the harvest message must go through “great tribulation,” a fiery time of trouble with which this age will end, and be revealed as “tares.”—Matt. 13:30; 24:21.

It is to this wheat class—“My people”—that the Lord has been calling through His Word and by His spirit for many years now, to flee from the present systems of Christianity, which have become worldly institutions and have been cast off from favor.—Rev. 3:14-22; 18:1-5. This “flight” from Babylon (mother and daughter systems) must be undertaken before the “four winds” are let loose (Rev. 7:1-3), by all worthy of the name “My people,”—“that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues.”

Flight is to be made not from one denomination to another, but the instruction is “flee into the mountain,” i.e., the kingdom of the Lord (Matt. 24:16), and being translated into the Kingdom of God’s dear Son, He has provided the harvest feast for all such—“For whosoever the carcase (the food, meat in due season) is, there will the eagles be gathered together.” — Matt. 24:28. And so it is, God’s people are found gathered together in twos or threes or larger numbers rejoicing in the truths provided only for this class by their Lord who has returned unseen by human eyes, to conduct this harvest work before the great time of trouble and later the bringing of peace to the earth. (Rev. 14:14-16.)

The importance of making flight from the systems of Babylon during the harvest of the Gospel Age is impressed again by the Lord in His exhortation—“But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the sabbath day.” (Matt 24:20.) These terms “winter” and “sabbath day” are not to be taken(literally, but rather our Lord was referring to periods of time • which would be very unfavorable, yea, impossible for flight from the systems He has cast off.

The “winter” would refer to the great time of trouble, when the “four winds” of Rev. 7, are let loose, bringing about a great tempest amongst the restless masses of mankind--“the sea and the waves roaring” (Luke 21:25)- resulting in “the heavens” (ecclesiastical systems) passing away with a great noise . . . the earth also (present order of society) and the works that are therein being burned up.” (2 Pet. 3:10.) No wonder the Lord exhorts His people to flee to Him, to His Kingdom before the “winter.” During a literal harvest time there is plenty of food obtainable as the grain is gathered into the barn; but how different it is when winter sets in. So in the harvest of this Gospel Age there is abundant provision of spiritual food for the sustenance of all the Lord’s people who are courageous and answer His call to leave the lukewarm Laodicean systems of to-day, but with the coming of the winter period the opportunity of feasting on the harvest truths will be past. “The harvest is past, the summer (time of favourable opportunity) is ended, and we are not saved (as members of the Church)” is recorded by the prophet Jeremiah 8:20, as representing the Great Company, who, though unworthy to be of the Bride of Christ, receive a lower spiritual inheritance following the washing of their robes through great tribulation. See Rev. 7:9-17.

The term “sabbath day” would not refer to a twenty-four-hour, seventh day of the week, but rather to a period of time, typified by the Jewish sabbath day. This period is generally understood by Bible students as referring to the seventh millennium during which Israel and mankind as a whole will be blessed with lasting rest and peace, which the term “sabbath” signifies; and it will be during this very time that the words of our text will be fulfilled —“Glory to God. in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.” How fitting, then, that our Lord should say—“Pray ye that your flight be . . . neither on the sabbath day,” implying that when this period is ushered in, flight from the Babylonian systems would be out of the question, inasmuch as Babylon will have been thrown down during the “winter” time, which precedes the “sabbath day.”—”Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all.” (Rev. 18:21.)

If this be the correct understanding of our Lord’s words (our readers are exhorted to prove all things fold themselves from the Scriptures) it will be seen that the harvest, winter and sabbath day refer to three distinct periods of time.

The harvest is for the complete gathering of the Gospel Church during the “days of the Son of Man,” corresponding to “the days of Noah” prior to the Flood. There would seem no doubt that we are at present very near the close of this period, and how important, therefore, that any of the Lord’s people still in Babylon, in any of its forms, should act quickly and flee from all such, associations, ere the great tribulation (Matt. 24:21) cut off all opportunity of being gathered into the Gospel garner, as “The plowman overtakes the reaper.” (Amos. 9:13.)

The winter’, time is for the purpose of ridding the world of everything out of accord with the Lord and His righteousness—the man-made systems, ecclesiastical, financial, political and social—”the removing of those things that may be shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain.” (Heb. 1 2:2 7.)

The sabbath day, following the severe winter time, is the period during which the elect Church shall be “priests of God and of Christ and shall reign with Him a thousand years” (Rev. 20:6), bringing peace and happiness—”the desire of all nations”—to the chastened world of mankind, for their uplift and progress to perfect human life on the restored earth. Of this time the Apostle Peter says—”We, according to His promise, look for new heavens (Christ and His Church) and a new earth (new social order) wherein dwelleth righteousness.”-2 Pet. 3:13. “Glory to God in the highest, ,and on earth peace, good will toward men.”

The End of the Way.

EARLY last month another of our dear brethren, Brother W. E. Goldsack, finished his earthly course in Melbourne after many years of faithful service and devotion to the Lord.

Our dear Brother, who was in his 82nd year, had been a Christian for the greater part of his life, and for over 30 years had rejoiced in the harvest truths revealed to God's called out people during the close of this age. Of a nice kindly and lovable disposition he was ever earnest and zealous for the Lord's cause of truth. We rejoice that our dear Brother's trials and sufferings are over, and that he has entered into his reward, promised of the Lord to all who love Him supremely.

In recent years our elderly Brother had experienced failing health and removed from the country to Melbourne, and it was a great pleasure for any of the brethren to visit him and have fellowship, conversing on those things dearest to his heart. There was no complaint or murmuring of any kind against what the Lord in His providence had permitted, but always a humble submission with cheerfulness to all the Lord's will for him.

Our sympathy is extended to the bereaved members in the home circle; a large number are left to mourn the passing of a devoted and loving husband, father, grandfather, and great-grandfather amongst whom he will no doubt be greatly missed. All undoubtedly will have lasting memories of a living witness to the faith once delivered to the saints, and which will prove of benefit as well as comfort in days to come.

"Blessed are the dead which die in, the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

" 'Forever with the Lord!'

Amen, so let it be!

Life from the dead is in that word,

'Tis immortality."

Joy Cometh in the Morning

'Sing unto the Lord, O ye saints of His, and give thanks at the remembrance of His holiness; for His anger is momentary; in His favour is life: weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning.' --Psa. 30:4, 5.

THE watchman said, "The morning cometh." (Isa. 21:12.) Through making this answer, he forewarns us of night, but assures us of the morning. There is a morning, says he, therefore do not give way to faintness of spirit, but there is a night between; therefore, take warning that you may not be surprised nor dismayed, as if the promise were broken, or some strange thing allowed to befall you.

There may be delay, he intimates, before the morning—a dark delay, for which we should be prepared. During this he calls for watchfulness, for the length of the night is hidden, the time of daybreak is uncertain. We must be on the outlook, with our eyes fixed on the eastern hills. We have nothing wherewith to measure the hours, save the sorrows of the Church and the failing of hearts.

During this delay the watchman encourages us to "inquire," to "return," to "come." He expects us to ask "how long?" and say, "when will the night be done?" He takes for granted that such will be the proceeding of men who really long for the morning. To the hills of Seir they will again and again return, to learn of the watchman what is the promise of the day; for no familiarity with the night can ever reconcile them to darkness, or make morning less desirable.

It is right for us to desire the morning, to hope for it, to inquire as, to the signs of it hour after hour. God has set this joy before us, and it were strange indeed if, when compassed about with so many sorrows, we should forget it, or be heedless as to its arrival, for the coming of the morning is the coming of Him whom we long to see. It is the coming of Him "who turneth the shadow of death into the morning." (Amos 5:8.) It is the return of Him whose absence has been night, and whose presence will be day. It is the return of Him who is the resurrection and the life, and who brings resurrection with Him, the return of Him who is creation's Lord; and who brings with Him deliverance to creation, the return of Him who is the Church's Head, and who brings with Him triumph and gladness to His Church.

All the joy, the calm, the revivifying freshness of the morning, are wrapt up in Him. When He appears day appears, life appears, fruitfulness appears. The curse departs. The "bondage of corruption" is no more. Clouds, storms, troubles, sorrows vanish. The 'face of nature reassumes the smile of unfallen times. It is earth's festival, the world's jubilee.

"The heavens rejoice, the earth is glad, the sea roars and the fulness thereof, the fields are joyful and all that is therein; the trees of the wood rejoice, the floods clap their hands, and the hills are joyful together before the Lord, for He has come, for He has come to judge the earth, with righteousness shall He judge the world, and the people with His truth."—Psa. 96:11-13; 98:7-9.

This morning has been long anticipated. Age after age has attracted the Church's eye, and fixed her hope. On the promise of it her faith has been resting, and towards the hastening of it her prayers have gone forth. Though afar off, it has been described and rejoiced in as the sure consummation towards which all things are moving forward according to the Father's purpose. "There is a morning," has been the word of consolation brought home to the burdened heart of many a saint when ready to say with David, "I am desolate," or with Jeremiah, "He hath set me in dark places as they that be dead of old."

Let us dwell for a little time on some of these Old Testament allusions to the morning, beginning with the Psalm from which our text is taken.

David had been in sorrow, and in coming out of it, he -makes known to the saints his consolations: "Sing unto the Lord, O ye saints of His, and give thanks at the remembrance of His holiness. For there is but a moment in His anger; in His favour is life; weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."-Psa. 30:4, 5.

The earnest of that morning he hath tasted, but the morning itself he anticipates. Then joy has come. Then he can say (verse 11), "Thou hast turned for me my mourning into dancing; Thou has put off my sackcloth and girded me with gladness." But it is the voice of a greater than David that is heard in this Psalm. It is, like the 16th and 18th, one of Christ's resurrection Psalms. He was "lifted up," so that His foes were not made to rejoice over Him. He cried and was "healed." His "soul was brought up from the grave." There was anger against Him "for a moment," when He bore the sinner's curse. But in Jehovah's favor there was "life." He had a night of weeping, a night of "strong crying and tears," when His soul was sorrowful "even unto death," and when beneath the waves of that sorrow He sunk, commending His spirit into the Father's hands. But it was a night no more. Morning came, and with morning, joy. Coming forth from the tomb, He left all His sorrow behind; His sackcloth was put off, and He arose "girded with gladness."

He found morning and joy; and He is "the first fruits of them that slept." There was a morning for Him, therefore there shall be one for us-a morning bright with resurrection glory.

Let us next take Psalm forty-nine. These are Christ's words, as is proved in Matt. 13:35, from the quotation of verse 4. He Summons the whole world to listen. He "speaks of wisdom," for He is Wisdom. He points to the vanity of riches, and their insufficiency to redeem a soul; and who knew so well as He what a ransom was needed? He sees men going on in their wickedness, self-confidence and vain glory. He contrasts the wicked and the righteous. "Over the wicked the righteous shall have dominion in the morning." The morning then brings dominion to the righteous- redemption from the power of the grave. In this Jesus rejoiced, in this let us rejoice. This joy of the morning was set before Him: it is the same joy that is set before us. Dominion in the morning is that to which we look forward-a share in the first resurrection of which those who partake live and reign with Christ.

Look again at the forty-sixth Psalm. It is the utterance of the faith of Israel's faithful ones. The earth is shaken (verse 2, compare with Haggai 2:6 and Heb. 12:26, 27), the sea and the waves roar (verse 3, compare with Luke 21:25), but there is a river whose streams gladden them. God is in the midst of her. Nay, "God helps her when the morning appeareth" (verse 5, margin), just as in the morning watch He looked out from the fiery cloud and troubled the Egyptians. Then the heathen are scattered at His voice- He sweeps off every enemy, He makes wars to cease, and sits Himself on high over the nations, as King of kings, "exalted in the earth." From which we gather that the morning brings with it deliverance from danger-victory over enemies, the renewal of the earth, peace to the nations, the establishment of Messiah's glorious throne. What a morning of joy that must be, for the Church, for Israel, for the whole earth-resurrection for the Church, restoration for Israel, restitution for the earth!

Look at the 110th Psalm. We see Jesus at Jehovah's right hand, waiting till His enemies be made His footstool; and then He who said unto Him "Sit," shall say, "Arise" (Psa. 82:8.) He is yet to have dominion on earth, and to sit upon the throne of his father David. Willingness, beauty, holiness, brightness shall mark His people in that morning of joy which His coming shall produce.

Read also "the last words of David" (II. Sam. 23:1-4), in which, as in the 72nd Psalm, "the prayers of David are ended," or summed up. "There shall be a just one ruling in the fear of God; as the light of the morning shall He arise, the Sun of an unclouded morning, shining after a rain upon the tender grass of the earth." Not till that Just One comes is that morning to dawn, for He is its light, and from His countenance is to break forth that light in which all earth is to rejoice. Then the darkness of the long night shall disappear, and the tribulation tasted in the time of absence be forgotten in the abounding blessedness of His everlasting presence.

Let us hear how in “the Song,” the bride refers to this same morning. She rejoices in the bridegroom’s assured love, and her desires and longings are not questionings as to the relationship in which she stands to him. This is with her a settled thing, for she has tasted that the Lord is gracious. “I am my beloved’s and my beloved, is mine.” What directions do her longings take? Her “eyes are toward the hills,” over which she expects to behold him coming like a roe. Thus she pleads with him not to tarry, “Make haste,, my beloved; and be thou like a roe, or to a young hart on the mountain of spices” (8:14). Thus she also anticipates the morning of fuller joy, even while enjoying present fellowship. “He feedeth among the lilies until the day breaks and the shadows flee away”

(2:16, 17). And thus the bridegroom himself, feeling if one may so speak, the loneliness of the night, and, that it is “Not good to be alone,” longs like herself for the day, and resolves to climb the hills, where he may not only be regaled with freshest odors, but may catch the earliest gleams of dawn. “Until the day break and the shadows flee away, I will get me to the mountain of myrrh, and to the hill of frankincense” (4:6). On that hill let us, meet Him in faith, and watch with Him in hope, yet ever remembering that though His joy which faith gives here, is unspeakably comforting, it is not the gladness of the marriage supper—it is not the blessedness of the bridal day. For He Himself, while telling His disciples, “Lo, I am with you always,” says also this, “I will not henceforth drink of this fruit of the vine until the day that I drink it new with you in My Father’s Kingdom” (Matt. 26:29).

There is the joy of deliverance from overwhelming danger. This was the joy of the Jews when their adversary perished and Mordecai was exalted:—“The Jews had light, and gladness and joy, and honor . . . the Jews had joy and gladness, a feast, and a good day” (Esther 8:16, 17). Such shall be the Church’s joy in the morning of her great deliverance. ;There is. the joy of escape from captivity and return from exile, such as made Israel feel as men that dream.

Such shall be the Church’s joy when her long captivity is done. Then shall her mouth be filled with laughter, and her tongue with singing; having sowed in tears she reaps in joy (Psa. 126:2, 5). There is the joy of harvest (Isa. 9:3), and such shall be the Church’s joy. There is the mother’s joy when her pangs are over, and the child is born into the world (John 16:21). With such joy shall we rejoice, and our joy no man taketh from us. The joy in reserve for us is manifold and large; it will abide and satisfy; it is the joy of the morning—a long glad day before us; no evening with its lengthening shadows, no night with its chills and darkness. “There shall be no night there, and they need no candles, neither light of the sun, for the Lord God giveth them light, and they shall reign for ever and ever.” (Rev. 22:5.)

.The prospect of this morning—this “morning of joy”—nerves and cheers us under all our tribulation. Were this morning an uncertainty, how dark would the night seem! How difficult for us to fight against faintness and despair!

But the thought of morning invigorates and braces us. We can set our faces to the storm, for behind it lies the calm. We can bear the parting, for the meeting is not distant. We can afford to weep, for the tears shall soon be wiped away. We can watch the tedious sick bed, for soon “the inhabitants shall not say, I am sick.” We can look quietly into the:7.7_72 of buried love and cherished hope, for resurrection shines behind it. Things may be against us here, but they are for us hereafter. The here is but an hour; the hereafter is a whole eternity.
