Seeking the Heavenly Kingdom.

THESE words are part of our Lord’s Sermon on the Mount.. He knew that He had come to fulfil the Law, and to open up “a new . and living way” to eternal life. A way which, while requiring even a higher standard of character than that of the Law, could be a way by which life could be gained because provision was made for imperfections of the flesh, so that the heart and will would be accepted instead of actual perfection of deed or word.

John the Baptist had been the forerunner of Christ, and realised his privilege of introducing the Bridegroom, saying, He that bath the Bride is the Bridegroom, the friend of the Bridegroom greatly rejoiceth to hear the Bridegroom’s voice.” “This my joy therefore is fulfilled.” (John 3:29).

Our Lord Himself confirmed this thought when- He said, “Of all that are born there hath not arisen a greater than John, yet he that is least in the Kingdom of Heaven is greater than he.”

Up to that time Israel as a nation had represented God’s Kingdom—an earthly kingdom. From that time the heavenly kingdom was proclaimed. “The kingdom of heaven is at hand” was the message of that time. The Law and the prophets were until John, since then the kingdom of heaven is preached and all men began to press into it.

That is, that the earthly typical kingdom was to pass away and a new age was commencing, during which time the Church class, the Spiritual Seed, the Israel of God, would be chosen to be joint-heirs with Christ as the great Abrahamic Seed which would in the Kingdom Age (to. follow this Gospel Age) bless all the families of the earth.

Our Lord was then present directing the closing down of the Law Dispensation. As the “Lord of the Harvest,” His fan was in his hand to thoroughly purge the threshing floor, gathering the- wheat (the Israelites in-deed) into the garner and tying the ‘chaff in bundles for the burning.

In this beautiful Sermon on the Mount, He had been explaining the principles which were to operate in this Gospel, and which would prove whether or not a follower was really. an overcomer and ultimate sharer in the kingdom.

.While the principles of God’s throne are always righteousness and truth—Justice—yet the new way of harmony or of attaining harmony -or atonement with God was different from the way which was offered under the Law. There was no fault to be found with the Law itself, and yet by the deeds of the Law no man could be justified. The righteousness of the Law was unattainable by poor, frail humanity weakened by the fall, seeking but ever failing to attain the righteousness which was required. Paul describes the pitiable conditions of the Jews under their Law (Rom. 7:14-25), saying, “That which I do, I allow not, for that I would, that do I not, hut what I hate I do. For the good that I would, I do not, and the evil which I would not; that I do. O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death, 1 thank God through our Lord Jesus Christ.”

Here then was the way out, as Paul again declares (Gal. 3:13). “Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the Law.” “He was born under the Law that He might redeem them also which were under the Law.” The Law (he says) was our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ.

That is, that the Law proved that man by. his own works, even under the favourable conditions of God’s Law, could not attain righteousness. “Having therefore brethren liberty to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which He bath consecrated for us through the veil, that is to say. His flesh, and having a High Priest, let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith (Het). 10:20-22).

It was this new and living way, with its heavenly hopes and spiritual life, “glory, honour and immortality,” as the reward of faithfulness that Jesus came proclaiming and inviting “Israelites indeed” to enter.

During the Law dispensation it had been right for them •to look for earthly rewards and to labour for such things ,as food and clothing, as did the nations of the world, but those coming into the kingdom of heaven were to sacrifice the usual ambitions of the world and seek the things which would qualify them for the spiritual conditions, not by the way of the Law which was by works but by the new and living way, which was justification by faith, not the righteousness which is of the Law: but that which is by the faith of Jesus Christ. (Gal. 2:16). So we are not to seek to justify ourselves by any good deeds we. might be able to do, but seek first the kingdom of heaven and its righteousness, which is by. faith. -

That does not mean, however, that we are to be careless about good works. While recognising that “Nothing in our hands we bring, simply to Thy cross we cling,” our faith in Christ would be dead if we did not strive to live as He lived, to walk as He walked, and to speak as He spoke, and thus to show our faith by our works.

HOW DO WE SEEK THE KINGDOM?

During this Gospel Age it has only been “such as the Lord our God cloth call” that could seek the kingdom. We were all horn in sin and shapen in iniquity, and it was in the Lord’s grace that somehow we were led to realise our need of salvation and a longing to be at peace with God, free from sin. When thoroughly longing for holiness and to be right with God, it was indeed impressed upon our minds that this was the thing of first importance, “to seek first the kingdom.”

It was only as we came to recognise God’s mercy in Christ, in providing the means for our justification, that we found the peace and joy of reconciliation with God. This, however, did not gain for us the kingdom. It was but the first step towards it, and unless the next step was also taken, this first step would be in vain.

Thus far we had sacrificed nothing. Certainly we had turned away from the sinful course and determined to live righteously as far as possible, but now came the invitation to “take up the cross and follow Christ,” to deny ourselves, or, in other words, to offer ourselves in full consecration to God, devoted like Jesus to do God’s will even unto death. This is a great step to take, to step away from all the prizes which the world can offer, of pleasure and gain, comfort and ease and repute, and to accept instead the way of negation of self. To be willing to be nothing, to be counted, as Paul says, as the off-scouring of the world, to suffer persecution and be ignored and misunderstood and suffer loss for Christ’s sake, Indeed, to die daily, to be dead with Christ, to endure just whatever the Lord may permit to come to us.

From a human viewpoint the true ‘Christian life is not inviting, but even the appreciation of the loving sacrifice given for us to redeem us from death, would lead the grateful heart to say, “Lord, I am thine, entirely thine.”

“I am not my own, I am bought with a price, the costly price of the precious blood of Thy dear Son.” It is but the reasonable thing to do to give myself entirely to Thee, so “here I give myself away, .that ;I can do.” ‘beside Thy sacrifice.,I would lay down my. little-all, ‘tis lean. and poor,. I must confess,:I would that it were not so small.”

It does us good to look back to the time when We thus consecrated our lives to God; and Realise how to us it was the chief thing; how it was with us “God. first in everything.”

No doubt all who have catered the narrow way entered it in earnest peace and joy—we all meant to make God first in everything—to seek first the kingdom. However, the kingdom is not gained by our consecration, our promise to do God’s will even unto death. It is a wonderful hope, a wonderful prize, but our contract must be carried out,’ our • consecration was but the entrance into the race—we must so run as to obtain. It was but the beginning of the good fight of faith. We must so fight, “ not as one that beats the air, but as one in deadly earnest heating down every stronghold of error in our hearts, in our minds, and casting down every vain imagination and bringing every thought into the obedience of Christ.

It was comparatively easy to seek first the Kingdom of God and its righteousness, which is of faith and not of works of the Law, but it is more difficult to keep all our thoughts, our words, and doings in line with this motto, “Seek first the Kingdom of God.” How is it that there is danger of losing our first love, the great impulses of the heart that responded to the Lord’s invitation to “seek ye My face?” “Thy face, Lord, will I seek.”

It is one thing to express such love and zeal and sacrifice for the Lord, when filled with the sense of His pardoning grace and under the smile of His reconciled face, when there is no cloud to dim the sunshine of His countenance. Our love, our faith, , must, however, stand the stress of trial. We must, like our Master, learn obedience and be prepared in the fire of experience, of endurance. and must prove our loyalty under the severity of adverse circumstances.

It is easy to sail on a fair sea, or to flow down the river stream, but we must have a perfected character which will be true to our duties, staunch against the storms, loyal to our Captain and Lord, when things are against us.

Thus it is that the Lord permits the testing of our faith and loyalty of heart, and as a “father pitieth his children,” so the Lord “pitieth them that fear Him.” So “the trial of our faith is more precious than the trial and purifying of gold,” and the Lord is evidently watching in loving interest to see how well we may stand the tests, to see us come off victorious—conquerors by the grace which he supplies. He is- surely watching to see if we are seeking first—foremost—chiefly “the Kingdom of God and its righteousness.”

There are so many by-paths, so many other interests, so many pleasures, so many opportunities in life, that our great enemy will take every advantage to crowd out our one great aim. The parable of the sower indicates the ways in which the Adversary will seek to prevent the proper fruition of the Word of God sown in our hearts.

The seeds that fell by the wayside never got to root at all. The enemy’s messengers, worldly attractions, crowded out the good impulses that had been stirred some: message . of •the.Xord’s Word.

Some seeds fell in stony ground.' This represents some' who are touched by the message; it takes root 'and shows some growth, but there is not much nourishment in stony hearts. .The heart must be mellowed and kind and full of love to. God and to man to develop the perfect fruit.

The stony heart is a selfish heart, and though for a time it might have been stirred to “Seek the Kingdom,” if was even the chief aim of life, selfishness, the most- abominable thing, stirs within and desires to grasp some of earth’s good things—they cease to seek first the kingdom.-

Then there are those represented by the “seed sown among thorns.” The Word of God had taken good root in good hearts. There is no indication that the ground was not good. The trouble was that thorns were also in the ground. The thorns sprang up and choked them. Such would seem to have earnestly sought first the kingdom, and had devoted their lives to God, but these earthly thorns got too strong. They choked the growth of the word, “they quenched the spirit.” The kingdom was no longer the chief aim of life. Earthly joys, or earthly sorrows, pleasures of life, or business cares. pride of home or domestic worries, losses of riches, or friends, or the acquirement of prosperity and affluence with social arrangements, one thing and another either of adversity on the one hand, or of prosperity and social pleasure on the other hand, just choked the operation of the Word of God in the heart; the heart became divided. The kingdom was no longer just the chief and one aim. They could no longer say, like the Apostle, “This one thing I do. I count everything but loss and but dross for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ.”

The good seed in good ground are those who seek first the kingdom, and ever preserve their first love. They can say always, “I love Thy will, O God,” and keep God first in all their doings, in all their thoughts. These will be the ones chosen to sit with Christ in His throne. These will be those who “seek and find,” who “knock and it is opened unto.” They are the ones who seek for and obtain the glory, honour, and immortality and inherit the promise of divine nature, and passing from this world of woe and sadness shall awaken to joy and gladness.

“Behold what manner of love the Father has bestowed upon us that we should be called the children of God, and it cloth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He appears we shall be like Him and see Him as He is.” (1 John 3:1-2).

We have no doubt all, over and over again, resolved to more earnestly make God first in everything, and no doubt all have been astonished to find how much they have come short, how often they have failed, and allowed self to step in and imperceptibly usurp first thoughts, first attention. Self is so easily swayed by influences around us. Good friends, good from a human viewpoint, may be the means of hindering us in this way. Allowing our tastes whether in homes, foods, clothes, occupations and recreations or other inducements to have consideration before the essential things of the kingdom can only work our undoing as Christians. We must judge ourselves in these matters, and correct ourselves only if we keep God first, shall we obtain the kingdom.

How serious is the warning (Heb. 2’ “Therefore we ought to give the more earliest heed to the things. which we have heard lest at any time we should let them slip. For if the word spoken by messengers (under the Law Covenant) was steadfast and every transgression received a just recompense of reward, how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation, which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord.

So that, while we have so much to encourage us in promises of grace and strength for every time of need—all along the way—and by so great reward of joys to come, how serious is our position if we “having put our hand to the plough should look back.” Remember Lot’s wife. Oh, how trivial are the things that cause some to look back. We counted the cost when we made our consecration, and signified it in the water of baptism, our willingness, our desire, our promise to be “dead with Christ.” Having made that consecration, should we allow the drawings of the world, or the flesh, or anything else, preventing from “God first.” • Let us ask ourselves, “What will be the end of it?” Let us count the cost if we turn again towards the doomed city, as Lot’s wife turned towards Sodom.

At this, the beginning of a new year, could we adopt any motto so good as this one, which the Lord gave at the beginning of His earthly ministry, at the opening up of the call or invitation to the Kingdom of Heaven. “Seek first the kingdom and its righteousness.”

Do not let anybody or anything come between. “He that loveth father or mother, sister or brother, wife or husband, son or daughter more than Me is not worthy of Me.”

God has a right to our whole attention, to all our talents, all our wealth, all our powers of mind or body. When He says, “My son, give Me thy heart,” He is asking for His own.

Yet God is not at this time demanding our attention, or our consecration. He has, however, privileged us with the most gracious and wonderful call or invitation to become joint-heirs with Christ in His kingdom.

“God has called us ‘to a station We could ne’er by merit win.’”

If we do not appreciate the invitation we need not accept it. The privilege will pass to another.

O God, Thy life is mine!
Dwell ever more in me,
And let me see
That nothing can untwine

My life from Thine.
Thy life in me be shown!
Lord, I would henceforth seek
To think and speak

Thy thoughts,
Thy words alone,
No more my own.
Thy love, Thy joy, Thy peace,

Continuously impart
Unto my heart
Fresh springs that never cease
But still increase.

It just depends upon how far we really act upon these words of the Lord as to how peace and joy will attend us during this new year.

If we are successful in keeping our hearts -thus set in affection to God during 1930 we shall have such peace and, joy that we shall never want any other way. But this one thing will we do.

We shall find how much it will help us in our sorrows, perplexities and hard places, for God has pledged Himself to take care of such as so love and trust Him. It will help us in danger, in temptation, when almost -encompassed by the enemies’ darts and influences, just to remember, “I am seeking first, chiefly, the kingdom.” “God first in everything.” No one has loved us so much, no one has such claim on our hearts, our love. Even in adversity and in the deepest clouds of distress, keep God first, and though He may permit such affliction and gloom as a trial of our faith, He is watching to see us victorious, and soon the sunshine of His countenance will dispel the clouds and comfort our hearts and supply all our need and bring us joy and peace.

A NEW YEAR MEDITATION.

My God shall supply all your need according to His riches in glory by Jesus Christ. (Phil. 4:19.)

Can I trust Thee for all my needs, dear Lord,
Through the length of the opening year;

And wherever its pathway leads, dear Lord,
Need I never doubt or fear?

My needs are so many and great, dear Lord,
O stumble, and slip, and fall;

If for fleshly assurance I wait, dear Lord,
I shall never find rest at all.

I need wisdom to walk in the light, dear Lord,
And strength both to will and to do;

And courage to stand for the right, dear Lord,
With patient endurance too.

When clouds overshadow my way, dear Lord,
And Thy face I'm unable to see;

I need faith to permit me to say—
"Dear Lord, He knows what is best for me."

But Thy promise is rich and large, dear Lord,
Thy storehouse is boundless too;

Will "my need" be too heavy a charge, dear Lord,
For Him who is "Faithful and True"?

Has there aught of Thy word e'er failed, dear Lord,
In Thy way with me hitherto;

And has not Thy grace availed, dear Lord,
When nothing else would do?

Then I'll bring to Thee all my needs, dear Lord,
Through the length of this new born year;

And wherever its pathway leads, dear Lord,
I'll have never a doubt or fear.

And whatever it holds in store, dear Lord,
(A secret known only to Thee)

I shall clasp Thy hand once more, dear Lord,
And trust Thee implicitly.

When you behold in others, goodness, wisdom, justice or other virtues . . . say to your God . . . "I thank Thee, Lord, for this and for all other good gifts, which Thou hast bestowed upon my neighbour; remember, Lord, my poverty and sore need of this very virtue."—Scupoli.

Towards heavenly things

AT the beginning of another year it is appropriate that we should remember the Psalmist's words, "So teach us to number 'our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom.'"—Ps. 90:12. It is a time to take stock, to consider the gains and losses, to accept and remember the lessons of past experiences and to make plans for the future. Before plans can be formulated there must be a clear objective, a definite purpose in view. Then there must be a proper valuation of the ways and means at one's disposal, and in order to secure success and satisfaction there will need to be a steady application, a diligent pursuing, with unflagging earnestness and zeal,- the purpose desired.

The Christian has, from the commencement of his -as a new creature in Christ, determined his course. He determined that henceforth "for me to live is Christ," that he would devotedly seek God's will only. He recognised that the Divine will for him was his "sanctification," or, in other words, that such a transformation of mind and heart should be wrought in him that he would be drawn away from and become out of conformity to this world, and on the contrary be drawn more and more towards heavenly things and be transformed into the image of God's dear Son, in character. While the New Testament so plainly states the matter, it is astonishing how few there be that walk the narrow way in the same manner as the Master, or as Paul or the Apostles followed Christ. With many who have started the Christian way in all earnestness and with clear perception of the separateness from the world that is indicated in the teachings of Christ, the seductive influences of the world, the flesh and the Adversary have in time, sometimes a very short time, dulled their perceptions and induced a compromising attitude, permitting associations and indulgences which at the first would have been eschewed. Zeal has eased off, love for the Lord and His people and His cause has cooled, hope has been less sure, and faith weakened.

It is well for all seeking to make their calling and election sure to take stock in this way, and consider whether they have been growing in knowledge and in grace, or Whether indeed they have been losing ground. In this day of rush and turmoil and excitement of pleasures and thrills of new accomplishments. it is so easy to find the mind so taken up with the things of time and sense that the quiet moments for study and contemplation of the higher things of God are almost unconsciously being neglected, and once the drift commences it may soon drift on, further and further, and require the more effort to check the course and make a new start.

Experience as well as the Divine word agree that "He Who has begun the good work in us" will not quickly forsake those whom He has called. He is faithful that promised grace and strength for every need. "Faithful is He that calleth you who also will do it." Some way or other, experiences come which pull us up or bring to our attention our slackness or error, or it may be by the recurring of a New Year that we begin to consider how much we are progressing, or how much we may have slipped and gone back. It is well that such times do come, and that we look back and trace once again just what things have been helpful to us in our Christian endeavours, or what associations or experiences, what friendships or influences or fellowships, have helped or hindered us. There are things to forget and things to remember. While we are not to look back like Lot's wife to the things that used to please self, we are not to forget experiences which have taught us valuable lessons, but remembering the lessons of the day by day life, year in and year out, we are to press along toward the mark looking forward—reaching toward those things which are before. "Whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same things." (Phil. 3:16) that have enabled us to make progress hitherto, and let us avoid the things which have, on the contrary, been hindrances. It is here that the necessary valuation of things comes in. Do we find that certain associations or friendships or certain business conditions seem rather to "quench the spirit," it would -be "applying our hearts unto wisdom" as far as may be possible to avoid such contact, and, on the contrary, to seek to encourage such friendships and associations, or such studies or reading matter as seem to lift us heavenwards. While in ourselves we may realise that if left to ourselves we could never gain the required, the predestined character to receive the full reward, yet we learn more and more to truly value the Divine aids. He Who has promised is able to perfect what He has begun, and to bring us unto Himself. "Him that is able to keep us from falling and to present us faultless before the presence of His glory with exceeding joy." He has given us His word to enlighten, to comfort, to strengthen us and enable us to meet the tempting of the Adversary with. "It is written," as (lid the Captain of our Salvation. He has provided us with the robe of righteousness, with the appropriation of the sweet incense of the Saviour's perfect life and His advocacy that we may, having received also the spirit of adoption, come with confidence to the throne of grace that we may find mercy and grace to help in time of need. (Heb. 4:16). A proper valuation of ways and means leads us to take courage and to go forward confidently for "If God be for us who then can be against us."

The chief purpose of the Christian life is then clearly understood to be that we add grace to faith, and grace to grace, until we may be perfected in the character likeness of Jesus. How deplorable it is when we hear some express sentiments which would indicate that they are endeavouring to grow into His likeness, to be like Him, to do as He would do,- to think and speak as He would, and their actions and words are so often so out of accord with such profession, both in their dealings with the world and in the conduct in the fellowship, and in the business meetings of the Church. It is not for us:to judge one another, but it is for us each to judge ourselves and see that our words and thoughts and doings are not such as to bring dishonour .to the name we love. None of us are perfect, but our general. conduct should such that men may take note of us that we have higher standards of life and kinder spirit, and a truer life than others, "indeed, that we have been with Jesus 'and learned of Him." It is worse than useless for *us to preach Christ if we do not live somewhat as Christ lived. It must be with us as with Paul, "For me -to live is Christ." "That we may- apply our hearts unto^ wisdom;" that seems to be the principal thing from the Psalmist's view point. "He reverence of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom," and without that heavenly wisdom .which we are assured God is ready to give to him that asketh, we shall never be able to fill our days to. His.. praise. To apply our hearts unto wisdom will be to endeavour to perceive the Divine will and purpose, and to conform. to it, and thus to see things from the Divine viewpoint of justice, -righteousness, love, kindness and power, for with God nothing is impossible.

So may the New Year find us with hearts. pure and determined to spend our days to good purpose,, and make this year with all that it may bring us a year of progress spent to God's glory. He is able to do for us far more than we can -ask or think. • He is able to keep that which we have committed unto Him against that day. What good reasons we have as we consider our ways and means for going forward courageously, full of hope and confidence, for "all things shall work together for good to them that love God and are the called according to His purpose."

CANADIAN ZIONISTS SUPPLY MONEY FOR PALESTINE PURCHASE.

The recent acquisition of 12.000 acres. by the. Keren Kayemeth, Zionist Land Purchasing Fund, has brought virtually the whole of.the coast between Haifa and Jaffa into Jewish hands. This purchase was made possible by a contribution of 1,000;000-dols. from the Canadian Zionists.

The area includes Arab lands bordering on the southern end of the Jewish colony of Chedera. To the south it joins land owned by an American Jew living in Tel Aviv, and it also touches Nathania, the first Jewish coastal colony.

Eastward the area will be rounded off by 'an additional 6000 acres for which the Keren Kayemeth signed contracts shortly before the anti-Jewish disorders broke out. About half of the newly-acquired land is suitable for orange cultivation, a profitable crop in Palestine. The area will be divided into plots .and given to colonists in hereditary lease. The Keren Kayemeth does: not sell its lands, lest they fall back into Arab. hands.

Berean Biblical Institute,

Dear Brother,--The time has come round again the rem.' of my subscription to the "Peoples Paper" and "HERALD of Christ's Kingdom." Please find enclosed for above, and the remainder for the tract fund..

'I greatly appreciate the stand that has been taken by the "P.P." and "Herald" for "Present Truth," as we cot it from. Pastor Russell's writings, while the tendency to-day is to cast all that behind and look for something new, even if it is only some old error, dressed up

Hoping the brethren connected with these papers will still be used during the coming year, to act as guide posts to God's people, who are trying to run the race along the narrow Way.

With Christian love,

Your brother in Christ. J.M..M.

N.S.W.,

1/12/29.

Dear Brother.—I am enclosing , as the "Herald" subscription has nearly run out, also the "Peoples Paper," and please use the remainder as you see fit. I do miss dear Brother B. sorely, but I do rejoice in his release from all pain and weariness. His fight is over and the victory won. I meant to have answered your kind letter before, also one I received from the Melbourne class, but have been shifting about from place to place. How good it is to be able to take Jesus with us wherever we go. My experience lately is "One step see before me; 'tis all I wish to see." I just feel that I am depending moment by moment on Him Who has never failed me yet, and although I have been tested severely yet I have trusted in His gracious promise, "I will never leave thee or forsake thee." I pray that God's blessing may rest upon the little class in Melbourne, and that we all "Hold fast the confidence of our hope to the end."

Yours in the 'blessed Hope, A.B.

Question Box.

Question.—What Scriptural reasons have we for believing that the Lord Jesus is present again, and, engaged in preparatory work for the setting up of His Kingdom?

Answer.—In Daniel 12:4 we read, “Seal the book to the ‘time of the end,’ many shall run to and fro and knowledge shall be increased.” No one can reasonably deny that this “running to and fro” and “increasing knowledge” has been with us and increasingly so for the past hundred years. For centuries, nay, for thousands of years. prior, there had been no advancement either in locomotion nor in knowledge, but from the beginning of the 19th century, that was from the ending of Daniel’s 1260 days, all this has come about. ,There can be no question:but, that we have been in -”the time of -the end” since then.

The .Lord said, “The Harvest is the end of the Age.” So the Harvest must be in, if not .synonymous with, the “time of the end” mentioned by Daniel.

Is it not a fact that the Harvest work has been evident for many years. Was. not the parable of the Ten Virgins given by our. Lord in connection with the question of His disciples, “What shall the sign of ‘Thy presence and of the end of the world? Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins,”. etc. Is it not a fact that the virgins went out to meet the Lord in the Miller Movement of 1825, and that the testing time or ‘first Harvest testing came with the disappointment of 1844.The disappointment was cause they looked for the Lord to come “with observation,” whereas the Lord had said, “the ‘ kingdom of heaven cometh not with observation,” and also that “Henceforth the world seeth Me no more.”

The following parable of the “Talents” indicates the work which the Lord would first engage in. That is reckoning with His people. Has not this work been proceeding ever since 1825, or thereabouts?

Again there is the reward to the “Watchers,” Luke 12:37. “He shall gird Himself and make them to sit down and will come forth and serve them.” Has not the feast been prepared and enjoyed during the past 40/50 Years?

Then turning back to Matt. 24. Could it not be taken verse by verse and be shown its fulfilment? Do not verses 24-26 warn against any human ‘being claiming to be Christ,’ and declare that He is not coming again as a man, so that He will not be located or locatable in any room or desert? His presence is illustrated by the “bright shining” (sun) rising out of the east and shining unto the west. The separating work will proceed gathering the elect from one part of the earth to the other, out of all the systems of men into the garner of truth,—for the heavenly garner. “Where the carcase is, there will the eagles be gathered- together. Whoso hungereth after righteousness shall be filled.” Has not the ‘carcase--the truth—been found outside of the usual channels now for many years? Has not verse 31 been fulfilled. The messengers of present truth have gone everywhere gathering together the elect. Then is not the fig tree blossoming? Israel is again controlling their ancient land ‘and gradually restoring its prosperity and population. Then verses 37/39, “as in the days of Noah, so shall the presence of the Son of Man ‘be.” Are we not living under such conditions, such revelling in pleasure and sin, such utter indifference to God? Could there be any ‘clearer, concise definition of our days than that by Paul 2 Tim. 3:1-7?

With all these signs and developments before us, is it not clear that we are in days corresponding to the “days of Noah;” and can it be doubted then that we are indeed living “in the days of the Son of Man?” (Luke 17:26).

It is the fact of our Lord’s presence which.. accounts for all the separations and testings which have -been, among His people. Some cannot stand the trials and turn aside and lose the light. Who shall be able to stand? What does it mean to stand?

Question.-- How would you explain .God's justice in the condemnation' of all on account of one man's transgression? And visiting the sins of the fathers on children?

Answer.-- When we perceive God's great purpose with respect to mankind; we can see that not only was the condemnation of all on account of the one man's sin, just, but it was also in mercy and in wisdom that it was so arranged. The words of the Apostle in Rom. 11:32 seem to give the keynote, "For God hath concluded them all in unbelief that He might have mercy upon all." Unless all had been included in Adam, who represented the whole human family, they could not have all been redeemed by the -one perfect substitute, Christ, "Who gave Himself a ransom for all." It is "as all in Adam die so all in Christ shall be made alive again." (1 Cor. 15:22).

Supposing all the human family had been created perfect and innocent as Adam, and then permitted to be tried, possibly all would have sinned and each would have required a separate substitute or sacrifice to pay his penalty and make restoration to life possible. As it is, God is permitting every member of the Adamic family to have an experience of sin's penalty in all the sorrows; troubles, sickness, wickedness and death, so that When the restored opportunity of life is offered they will know how to eschew the evil and hold fast to righteousness and life. The justice then comes in, in that God provides the "Lamb of God to take away the sins of the world." The benefit of the cross of Christ is just as far reaching as the curse of Eden has been. •

That is why the sins of the fathers have been visited upon the children, so that the children may have the experience of evil before being placed on trial for life. It is thus seen to be a benefit, for it will work out finally for the best to all. It seemed to be also a merciful provision that the sins of the fathers should only reach as far as the third or fourth generation to such as turn to seek after the Lord and righteousness. That is that any inherited weakness can be fought against and be eradicated in three or four generations.

Under the great Restorer, when the times of restitution begin. "It shall no more be said that the fathers have eaten of the sour grape and the children's teeth are set on edge, but every one shall die for his own iniquity. every man that eateth .the sour grape, his teeth shall be set on edge." (Jer. 31:29, 30). "The soul that sinneth it shall die."

That will be in the great day when the tempter is taken out of the way and the stones of temptation removed and the way is made so plain that the wayfaring man though a fool shall not err therein. (Isaiah 35:8-10).

Teach me to feel that Thou art always nigh;
Teach me the struggles of the soul to bear;
To check the rising doubt, the rebel sigh;
Teach me the patience of unanswered prayer.

What Constitutes Spiritual- Mindedness.

ABILITY to understand the Scriptures, to talk fluently upon them, and to expound them clearly is a qualification which we think should follow in the wake of spiritual- mindedness; but some might be able .to expound Scriptures very well, and-to express truths in very good form, who are not necessarily very spiritually-minded.

To be spiritually-minded is to have a mind in harmony with the Spirit of God, and fully surrendered to. the Divine will—fully consecrated to the Lord.

In Romans 8: .6 the Apostle Paul uses the expression “spiritually-minded” in describing a certain class who have become followers of Christ, who have made a full consecration of their lives to the Lord, and who, in harmony with this consecration, have been begotten of the Holy Spirit. These are spiritually-minded. These are granted a spiritual insight into Divine things.

This was true of our Lord Jesus. Having left the glory which He had with the Father, and having humbled Himself to. take the human nature, He was found in fashion as a man. We read that He was not an imperfect man, but “holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners.” (Heb.1:26). Yet with all these special qualities He did not have the spiritual mind to which the Apostle has reference. Our Lord had a mind such as Adam had before the fall—a mind in perfect .harmony, perfectly balanced. Our Lord received the spiritual mind,- however, at the moment when He was begotten of. the Spirit, when He made full consecration at baptism, and as a consequence the Holy Spirit descended and lighted upon Him in bodily form like a dove.

Following that begetting, the Lord had an enlargement-of understanding, and was granted to see certain deep things of God which He had not seen before His .consecration; so we read in that very connection that “the heavens were opened” to Him—the higher things became clear to Him—the more spiritual things. The things. St. Paul calls “the deep things of God.” “The natural man,” St. Paul says (the natural man would be a- perfect man; fallen man is imperfect, unnatural- receiveth not the things .of the Spirit of -God. neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned.” (1 Cor. 2:14). Then he proceeds to say that we have received the Spirit of God through the begetting of the Holy Spirit; and that, having the new mind—this spirit begetting—we are enabled to understand the deep thing’s of God.—,1 Cor. 2:11, 12.

So, then, the one who has been begotten of the Holy Spirit is spiritually-minded. He sees things - from the pew standpoint which- God specially brings to the attention of the spirit begotten. As the, Apostle John says, “Ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye all know it.” (1 John 2:20). Whoever receives this begetting of the Holy Spirit, this anointing, has an understanding of heart and mind which is different from that which-any natural man would have, a quality that will progress with him. He has the privilege of growing ,in grace and in knowledge and in the appreciation of the deep things of God; and: he should. grow. - The Apostles Peter and Paul explains Peter 2:2^ 3 Heb. 5:13, 14; 1, 2) that one thus begotten of the Spirit of God is at first only a babe, and, as a babe, should desire the sincere milk of the Word—the first principles of the doctrine of Christ.; but as he goes on. he should feed upon the strong meat of God’s Word and desire more and more to tell forth the. blessings which he has received from the Lord.

It has been noted that some who speak with stammering lips. have sometimes accomplished wonderful things; while some • with a great deal of eloquence have failed to obtain the same results. The victory is not always, to the strong nor to the swift; for the Lord may grant His blessing with the feebly spoken word, particularly if the whole life be in harmony with the message given out.

Sometimes those who have apparently considerable understanding. of spiritual things in the sense of being able to tell about them, do not always give evidence in their lives that they really have the Spirit of the Lord. Sometimes in their lives there is that which is contradictory. We should. bear in mind that whoever speaks the words of the Lord with his mouth should uphold it in his every act, word and thought in private life, as well as’ in public.’ The Truth should be the standard, and we’ should daily live in conformity with it.

A broken and a contrite heart, O God, Thou wilt not despise (Psa. 51:17)

There is a valley in America called the Singing Valley,. covered over with loose fragments of broken stones and shingle, and when a morning breeze passes over it you. may hear most melodious sounds issuing from all parts of it. Think of this as an emblem. A broken spirit's debris or loose fragments may send forth sweet melody, when the Spirit breathes over the valley. This soul of loose, broken thoughts and feelings, shattered' joys, shivered hopes, smooth-worn cares, becomes an' Aeolian harp in the Spirit's hand. Even angels wonder: at a pilgrim's song, at the sweet sounds that issue from the New Jerusalem's broken stones."

It was the Bridegroom who bare the sins of His spouse in His, own body on the tree. What other burden will He not. bear? Even the troubles that our own folly brings upon 'Us are occasions to His love, if we do but cast the burden 'upon Him; but if we do not judge ourselves, He knows. how. to chasten us to bring us to self-judgment, that He may comfort His mourners with His immeasurable grace and love. HENCEFORTH.

Just as through the shine and shadow
Of the bygone days.

Step by step we each have proved Him.
Faithful, true always,

So within the mist veiled future,
Holding good or ill,

We may follow where He leads us,
We may trust Him still.

Hidden is the distant prospect
From our anxious eyes,

But our daily lot is portioned
By a love most wise;

Should the homeward path be dreary,
Rough, or roundabout,

All the brighter waits the glory
Never, never doubt.

Though the past may hold some shadow
Some heart throb of pain,

God is good, and with the future
Bids us start again.

He who “bath been mindful of us”
In the days of yore,

Still will shield, and still will bless us,
Henceforth, evermore.

NATIONALISTS IN CHINA MAKE WAR ON SUPERSTITION.

The ancient practice of worshipping the spirits of ancestors will soon pass out of the everyday lives of the Chinese people along with pigtailed and bound feet, if the leaders of the new Nanking Government have their way.

In their desire to make China as modern as possible the authorities in the principal cities have issued orders banning a large number of spiritual observances, especially worship of departed ancestors during the famous "Ghost Festival," which falls in the early part of the seventh moon.

All Buddhist prayer services, processions and sacrificial ceremonies in temples and homes have been barred, and as a result the Ghost Month, which the seventh moon is officially called; promises to be a quiet one this year. According to the authorities, there will be neither pilgrimages to sacred mountains nor religious fairs. The burning of joss paper and incense sticks will also be forbidden in many cities.

Offenders will be severely punished, the orders state. The various officials have adopted their own measures of punishment, however, and in some places a fine will satisfy the officials. In Hankow persons breaking the order will be liable to long imprisonment.

Just a little farther on—the Victor's song will then be sung by all who "honour Me," Thou hast done well, yet still—press on—and greater works I'll trust to thee, and grander glories thou shalt see, thus thou shalt fully honoured be—a little farther on !

Need of Controlling Self.

CONVENTION ADDRESS.

THIS subject of controlling self is a principle essential to all true Christians seeking to walk as nearly as possible in the Master's footsteps. Our first aim must be to learn to know what is to be controlled, and then to endeavour to do our best. As all mature Christians \Yell know. faith may be said to have in it two elements, intellectual perception and heart reliance. Both the intellect and the affections are necessary to gain the character without which it is impossible to please God.

The trial to which our Lord and the Apostles refer is a trial not only of the intellectual knowledge of Divine truth, but also of the heart's trust and reliance upon God. In both respects the true child of God will find himself severely tested.

It is apparent in our times that a large number of the brethren have attached undue importance to the mental or intellectual phase of their faith, a head knowledge, to the neglect of the heart appreciation of the truth. They have failed to devote proper attention to the qualities of holiness, righteousness, Christian forbearance, and love, such qualities as enter so largely into the composition of the character likeness of Christ that alone will win a place in the kingdom of God.

It is evident that one may receive a large intellectual knowledge of the Truth, he may be able to discern many of the fine lines and points with regard to some of the doctrines, so far as the letter or theory of the Truth is concerned, and at the same time may have little or none of the real power of the Truth in his heart or life, and be greatly lacking in those essential elements that go to make up a truly religious life analysed by. St. Paul in 1 Cor. 13 chapter. May we not in this way account for the lack of true piety, or love and brotherly kindness amongst the brethren to-day? Is it not because of too much theory, and too small a measure of religion in the heart that there is so much of the spirit of self-seeking and contention abroad amongst professing brethren, resulting in many bitter controversies and divisions?. It would seem so!

In learning how to control self we certainly need to be engaged in the intellectual study and searching of the Word, but let us remember that the primary object is to reach the heart and effect the change there if, we would be acceptable to God and make any progress. in the development of character. Does not St. Paul tell us that "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels and have not love, I am become as sounding and a tinkling cymbal," and does he not add, "Though I have the gift of prophecy and understand all mysteries and all knowledge, and though I have- all (that is, intellectual) faith so that I could remove mountains - and have not love, I am nothing?" The 'object, then, of all the revelation, of all the knowledge received through the intellect is to acquaint the child of God with the divine will, that he become informed as to what are his duties, -and the part he must perform if he would permanently secure the favour of God and the crown of life which He has promised to them that love Him.

In controlling ourselves we would need to be careful of one important trait of character of which those who may have an inclination to be heady and esteem themselves should beware, that is conceit, or pride. This arises from too low an estimate of other men. Estimates of ourselves as well as of other men are relative. All self measurements involve measurement of others. The only way by which the conceit can be taken out of a man effectually is by bringing him into a clear comparison and sharp competition with others. The more widely and truly we know men, the more we shall see we are frequently equalled and surpassed. Candid estimates • Of ourselves by comparison with others will make us think soberly and judge ourselves modestly. Conceit has no more fruitful root than a narrow knowledge and prejudiced estimate of the labours and worth of others. Conceit involves a faulty self knowledge.

It is noticeable that a man who thinks' most highly Of himself is one of whom others of a right mind think little.

The conceited man has only one ardent admirer and that is himself. A true self-knowledge reveals our faults to us; and -gives us a true view of ourselves. It lets- the light - in upon our narrow prejudices, and makes us ashamed of them. It discloses the insufficient grounds of many of our judgments, and unearths the subtle process of Our self deception. It lays bare the operation of motives, and shows how often conscience itself is made a mere convenience.

Self-knowledge humbles a man. Those who think themselves complete 'beyond other men commonly stand alone in that opinion. They are apt to think themselves complete only because, while they keenly perceive others' faults, they are blind to their own. In this view lies almost the only excuse which can be given for the man of inordinate self-conceit. It implies intellectual weakness, and incapacity for keen discernment. - God dulls the discernment of such, as it reads in Matt. 11:25, v, here Jesus answered, "I thank Thee, Father, because Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes." And the Apostle gives us a reason in 1 Cor. 1:27-29, "But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise, and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty. And base things of the world and things which are despised hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are; that no flesh should glory in His presence." Does it not also say in Isa. 5:21, "Woe unto them that are wise in their own eyes."

Conceit causes an inability to study successfully one's self and others. It may be a mental, quite as much as a moral fault, though it is usually both. In both phases it is-a quality the development of which is to be dreaded and checked with the utmost promptness and sternness. No trait of character conveys a more unfavourable impression, none so quickly excites disgust, none provokes such constant and universal ridicule. A proverb of the wise man expresses the verdict on this point: "Seest thou a man wise in his own conceit; there is more hope of a fool than of him." It is a mark of smallness of soul, a phase of selfishness.

The men who have been servants of humanity, the great reformers and philanthropists, have been free from conceit. They were great in humility; for humility rightly understood is an essential greatness. Humility is the quality which leads men to serve others; conceit the quality which leads them to serve themselves. Shakespeare said, "Conceit in weakest bodies, strongest works." Traced to its deepest root, therefore, it is a fruit of fundamentally defective character. It implies a lack of appreciation of God's greatness, before which every thoughtful mind should stand with reverence and humility. And, as the Apostle says, "When I am weak then am I strong."

The wise man informs us of the greatness of ruling our own spirit, and how can we do better than by giving strict 'attention to the influence of thought in the development of character? If we can control that part, how great an achievement would be accomplished; for our thoughts are the invisible influences which give completion to our lives, then, we would control ourselves and live good and worthy lives. We must not suffer our to become guilty thoughts. nor even allow them to be vacant thoughts. We must fill them with things of the spirit. How can we do this? Best by forgetting ourselves,- best by obliterating our own selfish will. best by thinking wholly of others and of God; the true life there are three factors—God, the soul, and our fellow men. Our duty to our own soul is best summed up in our duty to God and our duty to our fellow men.

When the wise man admonishes; "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life," he is telling us to guard carefully our hearts; to watch "our meditations, to carefully consider what motives and purposes control and guide us in the course we are pursuing: in life. Thoughts about God and contemplations of His; character, and the great qualities thereof cannot but have an elevating effect upon every soul that is really consecrated to Him. One writer says, "Very few of us, I fear, very few even of the best of us, think enough of God. I know many a life has been kept humble, and pure, and sweet, by the living realisation of that One truth, "Thou, God, seest me."

We realise how all of us are affected and made better in our hearts by the mere presence of someone to whom we can look up as good and true.

Now we realise that all mankind are born with more or less of determination. Some have this in a very marked degree, others in a lesser degree, but we find that whether our wills are strong or weak they need direction. We need to be careful not to pervert sound judgment. It would be disastrous to us to yield ourselves to passion, to allow it to sweep over us and master us. whether we are weak-minded or strong-minded.

All should recognise that the inclinations: the impulses, and the preferences of the fallen nature of man are often contrary to that which is right, noble, and truly desirable. All should be regulated by some standard. The Law of God is the very highest standard of law. It is one which the world recognises as good, and surely the Lord's. people should measure all their conduct, their words and their thoughts by it. it is thus they will be able to rule their own spirit.

We are to rule our own mind, our natural impulses. This means that if a thought presents itself to the mind, or if we feel a certain impulse, we should be quick to perceive .the nature of the thought or impulse, and if it is not in harmony with the principles of righteousness or with our covenant as children of God we should at once resist it. If we are unable to do this successfully of ourselves, as is often the case, the heart should 'be promptly lifted to the Lord for His promised grace to help in time of need. If we feel an impulse toward a certain action or course, we should carefully weigh the matter, and decide as to its righteousness or propriety in the circumstances, looking to our unfailing source of help for guidance. The world would think that this is too exacting, they would have more pleasure in doing their own will. But we know that in doing .their own. will they frequently get into trouble.

A Christian has covenanted not to follow his own will. The more advanced the Christian, the more should we expect that he would be able to -rule his spirit, casting down imaginations and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the will of God in Christ. If we rule our mind. our thoughts. we shall rule our tongue. f the thoughts were not in the mind the tongue would not utter them. There is great danger of saying or doing things under a momentary impulse which our heart—our con., 'rated judgment—would not approve; hence the necessity of bringing our thoughts and impulses into subjection. We should consider what would be the effect of our words or our actions upon another. Would they cause any harm or ill-feeling?

Bv thus scrutinising ourselves,, by thus controlling ourselves, we are showing our earnest desire of heart to be pleasing to the Lord and true to our covenant. And those who learn to rule their own spirit according to the will of the Father are the ones whom he will be pleased to make joint-heirs with His Son in His Kingdom.

In what way can -a-Christian cultivate the disposition to control himself ? At first the individual has not the power to rule himself in everything; but as he learns to exercise control in. the little things, more and more in thought and word and deed, doing what he can in this direction, he will gain in strength of character. if we daily practise, -controlling. ourselves we shall -gradually attain a strong character along this line, which will be of inestimable advantage. to us in our Christian warfare. There is no place in our daily walk where the proof of our ability to rule our spirit can be shown to greater advantage than in our own home. With husband and wife, with parent and child, with -brother and sister. this is an important matter. The battle with ourselves is the greatest battle we have to fight. Moral strength infinitely nobler than the greatest degree of physical strength or the most scientific. strategy. It is after we have become masters of our own flesh, after we. have conquered ourselves, and after we have cast out the beam from our own eyes, 'when we have subdued anger, malice, hatred and- strife in our own hearts, that we are enabled by means of these severe battles with our own weaknesses to assist the brethren. 'to assist our neighbours, to aid them by our example. in 'overcoming their besetments and infirmities.

To control ourselves implies a great conflict; for no matter where we begin, we find entrenched within us many armed and opposing powers. They have possession are there as the 'result of heredity. If we have the days of youth they are the more strongly emphasised, and it requires the greater skill and generalship to rout them out. But whether early or late, such as would succeed in life's battle of self-control must fight the good -fight o f faith. They must war a good warfare to the very end. If the children of God would be victors in this battle they must -storm the fortresses of the inherited evils which seem to be a part of their natures.

We all realise that to control one's self is by no means an easy task; it cannot .be done 'single-handed. There- fore, those who are wise will seek what assistance- they have at their command; for as the Apostle says. "We wrestle not with flesh and blood, -but against principalities and powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this it world, against wicked spirits in high places." As we well know, the world, the flesh, and the devil are powers that are closely allied, and all individuals who-have taken it upon themselves -to go into combat with. these allied forces must seek an alliance with another and. stronger power. or else they will soon be "hors de combat.'" -

This power is tendered to all who earnestly undertake this great work. It is none other than the almighty arm of our God; "Greater is He that is with you than all they that be against you." There is an old saying, "Where there's a will there's a way." for good or for evil. God will assist through various agencies for good, .Satan through various agencies toward evil. If the -will says it must be done, it calls in the needed help that is available; and forthwith it will set the other faculties of the mind at work, first to -subjugate, and then to regulate the entire being.

Conscience must be alert and keep a vigilant watch over all the mental operations. Then, -under the influence of conscience, judgment must decide as to the righteousness of any matter. If the will be 'weak it will be irregular in -its rulings; and the governing of such is apt to be unstable and perhaps ultimately wholly at the mercy of the fallen appetites, passions and ambitions. It is all important, therefore, that the will be entirely consecrated to God and righteousness, and -that it strengthen itself in the Lord: and -in His name and strength strive to rule with a firm hand, always humbly looking for His guidance in all of life's affairs.

One thing we must particularly strive to control, and that is the tongue; for how much evil has been 'engineered by an uncontrollable tongue. It is written in Matt. 12:36, "That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." From our Lord's comments at various times on the subject of the 'tongue. we realise that in:His day there must have been some seriously wrong condition prevailing amongst those with- whom He came in contact. The Scribes and Pharisees attributed- evil power to Him, and declared that He was the tool of Satan. that Satan was speaking through Him. In the beginning our Lord told them in a general way that they deceived themselves. Later He reproved them severely, and showed the fallacy of their arguments.

More and more we realise the wisdom of the Apostle James' statement that, although the tongue is a little member, yet it is the most dangerous of all, because it has the -widest influence, "If a man sin not with his tongue, he is a perfect man." We cannot possibly estimate the results of our words. This influence may reach even to the ends of the earth. 'Therefore; - -we have here a disposition of -character which needs controlling; and are to consider carefully what we may say in order to determine whether our words will glorify God or whether they will dishonour Him, whether they will stir up good thoughts and- impulses in the minds of others, or whether they will stir up that .which is evil.

God in His wisdom has seen .fit so to create us that our conduct of to-day has much to do with- our character of to-morrow, Thus- we are making or marring character continually. It is well that we. should all realise this fact. All Christians should understand this principle; for they are now on trial for glory, honour, and immortality. Therefore, by neglecting to weigh carefully their words, they may lose the great prize for which they are striving. There is a spirit which shoots out bitter words, and from the standpoint of our Lord this is murder. Thus at the end of the Jewish Age the Scribes and Pharisees criticised and slandered our Lord. Although from their knowledge of the law they knew that they would be accountable for their actions, yet they did not appreciate the fact that they would be judged by their words.

Under stress of sudden temptation, the Lord's people who are now on judgment may impulsively say that which is not pleasing. to the Master. But we must learn not to speak thoughtlessly; we must learn to weigh our utterances. Since we are servants of God, we should ever take heed to our ways, in order to render the most possible service. We are not merely to have a good will to- do that Nvllich is right, we are to seek to bridle our tongues. atever resolutions or restraints we may seek. to put upon our tongues may be considered as bridles. by which we are determined to bring ourselves into full subjection to the will of God. So. long as Satan and his emissaries are at large, the Lord's people will do well to take heed to their ways that they sin not with their tongue.. Satan and his angels are seeking to subvert those who have given themselves to the Lord and to catch them. in their words. The Psalmist says, "I will keep my mouth with a bridle while the wicked is before me."

Amongst the Lord's people, it is very important that they should learn to be very just. While it is right to be. loving, kind; 'generous, yet justice is the very foundation of character. All love and kindness not based upon justice are neither satisfactory nor pleasing to the Lord. In dealing with others, a Christian will think, what are the rights of others, and what would the heavenly Father have me to. do? It is very natural for one to recognise his own rights in any matter,' but the fallen nature does not .so quickly perceive the rights of others. Therefore, one of the most important lessons to be learned is to do unto others as we would have others do to us—simple justice.

One must be just in his thoughts before he can properly be just in his dealings. Whoever thinks unjustly will. act unjustly in spite of endeavours to the contrary. Many of the Lord's people find that while their hearts are good there is in their flesh a tendency for certain things that are not good. There is a continual struggle between the flesh and the spirit as to what kind of treasure will be stored up. In laying up good treasures in our hearts and minds we are building character.

Whoever goes into a man's house and sees what he has gathered in the way of treasures can easily perceive the direction in which that man's mind is bent. His preferences .demonstrate his character. Thus it is with all of us, the things winch we cultivate are an index to our character. When we come to render up our account as new creatures, character will decide whether we shall be esteemed worthy. Only those who have laid up the treasure of a character like that of our Lord Jesus Christ will be fit for an inheritance in the Kingdom. Our eternal destiny therefore will be decided by the way in which we now use our minds, and the thoughts which we now accumulate.

Our first concern, then, must be for the heart, that its affections and dispositions may be wholly under the control of grace divine; that every principle of truth and righteousness may be enthroned there ;:that justice, mercy. -ievolence, meekness, self-control, faith, brotherly kinds love, supreme reverence for God, and for Christ, and a fervent love for all the beauties of holiness may be firmly fixed as the governing principles of life. If these principles are established in the heart, we shall have no difficulty in controlling our tongue and ourselves generally; for out of the good treasure. of our heart the mouth will speak forth words of truth, soberness and grace.

ABIDE IN ME.

That mystic word of Thine,
O sovereign Lord!
Is all too pure, too high, too deep for me;
Weary with striving, and with longing faint,
I breathe it back again in prayer to Thee.

Abide in me—o’ershadow by Thy love
Each half-formed purpose and dark thought of sin;
Quench, ere it rise, each selfish, low desire,
And keep my soul as Thine—calm and divine.

As some rare perfume in a vase of clay
Pervades it with a fragrance not its own—
So, when Thou dwellest in a mortal soul,
All heaven’s own sweetness seems around it thrown.
The soul alone, like a neglected harp,
Grows out of tune, and needs that Hand divine;

Dwell Thou within it, tune and touch the chords,
Till every note and string shall answer Thine.
Abide in me; there have been moments pure,
When I have seen Thy face and felt Thy power;
Then evil lost its grasp, and, passion hushed,
Owned the divine enchantment of the hour.

These were but seasons beautiful and rare;
Abide in me, and they shall ever be;
I pray Thee now fulfill my earnest prayer—
Come and abide in me, and I in Thee.

Selected.

My heart is inditing a good matter; ‘I speak of the things... touching the King. Psalm 45:1.

If you want to live your life to the glory of God it must be made good to your own soul. If I enjoy the Word of God in my own soul I find it very easy and simple to make that Word sweet to the first soul I meet. If you read your Bible and get no blessing to your own soul, then God is not ready to use you while in that state; but if you get even a slight modicum of truth made good to your own soul, then the anointing oil must betray itself by its odour. The sweet fragrance of Christ must betray itself wherever we go.

J. Denham Smith.

There is no one clear way where all must go, Where none can wander, and where all may know; Then heed not thou where other mortals tread, But let thy gaze be toward the mountain’s head.

CONVENTION NEWS.

THIS Christmas Convention, held in Melbourne this year, again proved a means of great spiritual blessing, the general opinion being that, for earnestness of spirit and confidence, borne of a strong faith, together with that loving bond of true Christian unity, and oneness of thought, desire, and aim, this assembly of the Lord's people surpassed all previous gatherings of a like nature.

It was manifested throughout that all were rejoicing in the spiritual food provided by Him Who promised to gird Himself and serve us with the meat in due season, and the true Bread from Heaven, wherever His people assemble in sincerity and in truth.

While we had very many helpful and encouraging thoughts to stimulate and assist, more especially were we reminded of the fact, that if we are to be found faithful overcomers, it will only be inasmuch as our faith is firmly grounded, and our lives conformed to, and in harmony with the true teachings, and actuated by that Heavenly wisdom from above, which is first pure, right, just and honourable, and then peaceable, easy to be entreated; full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality (or respect of persons, but as members one of another) and without hypocrisy. We saw that unless the faith and life were based on that which is according to the fundamental and essential principles laid down in the Word, and exercised by the spirit of that Word, our every thought, word, and action would prove unprofitable, although some may be deceived as to what they consider are true Christian characteristics, and fruits or graces of the spirit.

All present greatly appreciated the many helpful points brought out in the Bible studies and addresses throughout the Convention season, particularly noting the necessity of exercising that true spirit of humility and meekness, if we are to make proper progress in our efforts to control self, against imperfection and fallen tendencies, which ever seek to war against the new mind in us.

On Christmas Day and Boxing Day, Bible studies were held on Matt. 5:1-12, and James 3:17, and with the addresses on "Strength and Courage," "Need of Controlling Self," and I Pet. 5:5, were much appreciated.

On Saturday, December 28th, the friends journeyed to, Upwey and partook of the good things provided, both spiritual and temporal, amidst pleasant surroundings of nature's own providing and setting.

Sunday, the final day of the Convention, was again made profitable by the Bible study on Psalm. 15; and, the addresses on "Pressing into the Kingdom" and "Our Lord's Return."

The latter address was much enjoyed, helping all to see the great importance of rightly understanding the Word of God as to the manner and purpose of our Master's Return. It was pointed out that it would not be as the man Christ Jesus, that He would come again, not again in the flesh as at His first Advent, but as a glorious Spirit Being, having given His "flesh for the life of the world." It was seen that as such our Lord is now present (though unseen by human eye) with His chosen people during this harvest time, and reckoning with His servants, until one by one the faithful stewards fulfil their covenant of sacrifice successfully, and finish their course in death, becoming joined to their Lord and Head in the Spiritual Kingdom. Not until the last of this chosen faithful class had finished their course and become associated with the Bridegroom, could the blessings flow out to the world of mankind, who are waiting for the manifestation of these sons of God.—(Rom. 8:19).

The presence of those friends who travelled long distances from other States and country districts added much to the encouragement of the Melbourne friends, and we trust brought a blessing to themselves.

Each and all present earnestly desired that the coming year would find the Brethren rejoicing with a stronger faith and an even brighter hope, as each would seek to press courageously, humbly, and meekly along the pathway of sacrifice, and at last receive an abundant entrance into the Kingdom of our Lord and Ahead.

PASSOVER MEMORIAL, 1930.

Some of our readers prefer. to follow the Jewish date in the matter of observing the memorial of Christ our Passover Lamb. We therefore take this opportunity of announcing that the date corresponding to the 14th of Nisan commences this year after sundown on April 11th, and therefore Friday evening, April 11th, will be for these the appropriate time to memorialise our Lord's death.

Others. however, prefer to observe the matter on the Thursday evening before Good Friday, feeling that it was on a Thursday night our Lord kept the Passover with the disciples, after which He left them this little observance to keep in future instead of the annual observance of the Jewish typical Passover Lamb. They realise more opportunity of getting away from worldly and business associations, being freer to think during the holiday of the Friday and weekend, of our Lord's sufferings, death, His lying in the tomb during Saturday, and His resurrection on the Sunday, the first day of the week. There is no command in the New Testament respecting which calendar we are to follow, so that each ecclesia is left to decide for itself which may seem to be the better from a spiritual viewpoint. It is not a matter that could be considered one of conscience, so that a minority in a class should realise it a privilege to fall in line with whichever date be agreed upon.

Spiritual Welfare Most Important.

"Therefore take no thought for to-morrow saying what shall we eat or what shall we drink? or wherewithal shall we be clothed? (For after all these things do the Gentiles seek). For your Heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of these things. But seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."— Matt. 6:31-33..

"For bodily-exercise profiteth a little, but godliness is profitable unto all things."—I Tim. 4:8.

WE do not understand that there is any suggestion here of carelessness in respect of the necessary things of life or any conflict with the teaching of the Apostle when he admonishes that we must "provide things honest in the sight of all men," and that "he that provideth not for his own is worse than an infidel." - The thought seems to be that though we should learn to economically and properly use the good things provided, and take the necessary steps to gather the daily manna, or in other words to gain an honest livelihood, yet we are to remember that our Heavenly Father knows all our needs. He careth for us and will supply what is essential- for our best interests. There-is therefore no need for anxious care, but instead- every reason for the child of God rest trustfully dependent upon the Great Provider.- "Therefore I say unto you. Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, nor yet for your body what ye shall put on. is not the life more than meat, and the body more than raiment? Behold the fowls of the air, for they sow not. neither do they reap nor gather into barns; yet your Heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they?"— Matt. 6:23,

There seemed a similar lesson from our Lord's words to Martha. s- She- was troubled over much serving and providing and having things "just so," to an extreme: Mary had Chosen the better part. With her, the gracious presence and words of the Lord made everything else secondary: She sought "First the Kingdom," and the Lord approved, saying, "Mary hath chosen the better part, which shall not be taken from her."

While many have engaged in- work which was supposed to be Christian work, and have neglected homes and responsibilities in order to do -so, -others have gone to the other extreme, and make home, dress, food and earthly hopes their chief aim, and have neglected great privileges of service and sacrifice in the service of Him Who loved us and- gave Himself for us. Both these classes fail to be pleasing in God's sight. Those who neglect home and family responsibilities to run after what they may call work for the Lord are making a great mistake, for such work cannot be acceptable. Duties must first be met before voluntary service can be pleasing to God. -

What is needed in these- matters is "the spirit of a sound mind,". and that is attained by a willing submission to God's holy will partaking of His spirit and thus being guided in the reading and application of His word.

Having- devoted -ourselves' and our -all to the Lord, the proper thought would be that all our concerns and belongings, our homes, our businesses as well as our lives and our 'bodies are henceforth the Lord's property, of which we are stewards, to make the best use of to His in His service: So, then, if we neglect our homes or our bodies we shall -be failing, to that extent, in our stewardship. We can serve God best by doing these things which are by natural ties, our duties, whether in home or 'business concerns, whether in eating or drinking, or whatever we do, "do all to the glory of. God, and in everything give thanks. Some seem to find the daily round and common task irksome, and feel constrained to neglect them in seeking some outside service which is thought to be more “Christian work,” and in which they receive perhaps more approbation from others.

On the other hand; it is not right that we should spend more time and strength and money in respect of home or what we shall eat or wherewithal we must be clothed, than is right. \ must ever keep the main object of our lives before us. “Seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness.”

With the general increase of knowledge in this our day. there has been much along the lines of hygiene and foods, their primer combinations, their food- values and chemical contents, and their proper preparation. All that is good in this direction is surely worthy of attention and personal application, but many are apt to go to extremes, and are led to waste time and money in attending lectures and seeking advice of men, who, having some knowledge of such things, assume a great deal more and take advantage of susceptible people to their own financial gain. These food specialists, as they are called, are like doctors who differ; some advise one thing. some another, and it is evident that much that they claim is uncertain. The point for our consideration. however, is that as consecrated Christians we are not seeking chiefly earthly good. “He who seeks to save his life shall lose it.” Our chief aim is to grow strong as new creatures, and to gain spiritual health and immortality.

There are all sorts of ways by which the adversary seeks to draw aside from the Christian narrow way. Some of these ways are not evil in themselves, but. nevertheless, they lead to the neglect of our spiritual needs.

There are simple rules of hygiene and instructions respecting foods which do not take much time or expense- to acquire, and even then natures are so different that what would be found to suit one would not suit another. The Lord’s people. need to use the spirit of a sound mind, in these as in all matters, and “Let your moderation be known unto all men.” Some are so apt to run after anything supposed to be new or, claiming to be of great benefit. How much we need the instruction first the Kingdom of God and His righteous make everything else subservient to our spiritual needs. Everything else will have its proper consideration, duties will be properly attended to, as unto the Lord, and our lives will be recognised as moderate yet decidedly Christian. Our consecration is unto death, but if we become so enthused over the natural benefits, and many supposed benefits, how easy it would be to neglect the more important spiritual life. and what the Lord said might have its application, “He who seeks to save his life shall lose it.”

Correspondence

January 6th, 1930. Dear Brother,—

just a line as we find ourselves back home again and starting into the New Year. To-day’s Manna text is in line with the piece in January “P.P.” “So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom.” The piece in the “P.P.” is very helpful; surely it is an appropriate time to examine our hearts, to inspect our lives and see just what associations are helpful and what are not helpful; to see just what has been profitable to us in the past and what has been a hindrance. Remembering that “this is the Lord’s will, even our sanctification,” we should be diligent in co-operating with the Lord’s-providential leadings to bring about the accomplishment of His will for us. The piece on “Seeking the Heavenly Kingdom”^ is also very helpful. What a good thought to have before our minds for the year before us, “I am seeking chiefly the heavenly kingdom.” “For me to live is Christ.” was Paul’s motto, and so it should be ours. When we think what a great favour God has bestowed upon us in giving us ears to hear and hearts to appreciate His wonderful Plan, and especially in calling us into this acceptable Day to be footstep followers of Jesus how our hearts should go out in gratitude and praise, the Psalmist says, “What shall I render unto the Lord for all His benefits toward me?”--Psa. 116.

We trust that this year will see us each one making good progress along the Christian pathway, that our faith may grow stronger, and brighter and love more warm and true and tender. • e may have our trials and testings. but we will also have unfailing strength from God to help us to overcome, for His promise is sure—“I will never leave thee nor forsake thee.”

Am glad to have been able to attend the Convention again this Xmas, and we appreciate all the kindness of the friends; and their efforts to make the meetings helpful. All these Convention gatherings are a means of blessing to us as we look for His blessing in connection with the same.-

Please give Our Christian love to all the friends, .

Yours in fellowship and service of Christ,

Melbourne.

Dear Brother,

As our subscriptions to the “Herald” and “Peoples Paper” expire at the end of the year, I am sending along postal note — to cover -same. Any little balance over you may use in the work,

We are both keeping well. We. often think of you all, and trust this finds you all well, .and that you had a happy and helpful time together at the Convention.

We are still clinging to the Lord and the truths we have learned and been assured of. “Surely goodness and mercy shall follow us all the. days of our life.”

The question in last “P.P.” re evidences of Lord’s presence was good and helpful. We have been thinking along this line. A little paper to hand is evidence- that some are abandoning the view that Christ is now present and are returning to the view that Christ’s coming will be visible to the world, and that He was raised in His human body. Surely we need the wisdom from above to guide us and keep us.

Christian love to you all,
Yours in Christ,

Question Box.

Question.—An important point has arisen respecting the understanding of our Lord’s prophecy in Matt. 24. Does the word “parousia,” which is translated “coming,” indicate the “drawing near,” the act of “arrival,” or the actual “presence” of Christ?

Answer.—To our understanding, and eminent scholars agree, the English word “presence” is the equivalent of the Greek word “parousia.” When we may look forward to having an absent friend with us for a season, We know that there must be a moment of arrival, also a time when he will be journeying and thus “drawing near,” but it is his presence that we look forward to. Though in speaking of the matter, we may say we shall do this or that when he comes, we do not mean, when he is drawing near or at the moment of arrival, but while he is present with us and we are enjoying the -renewed fellowship.

The word “parousia” occurs 24 times in the Greek “Testament, and there would seem to be no other English word than “presence” that can so well be used to translate it in every instance.

In the Epistles we have:—

(1) .. 1 Cor. 15:23. Speaking of the resurrection of Christ (head -and body), as the first fruits, afterwards, they that are Christ’s during His “presence.” James also speaks of the church—the body of Christians being a first fruits unto God. Christ died, rose and revived, that He might be Lord of the dead and the living, thus all belong to Him by right of purchase. All are Christ’s just and unjust—and are to be raised during His 1000 years’ reign. “As all in Adam. die, so all in Christ shall be made alive.” 1 Cor. 15:21, 24. Rom. 14:9. Acts 24:15. John 5:25, 29.

(2):1 Cor. 16:17. Here Paul is expressing his gladness at the presence of three brethren, “For they have refreshed my spirit.” That was not by their journeying or “drawing near,” nor by the act of “arrival,” but by their “presence” and fellowship..

(3). 2 Cor. 7:6; (4). 2 Cor, 7:7. Here the Apostle speaks of the comfort he had by Titus having come to him. It was not:that Titus was coming, but that he was comforted by his presence and fellowship, and the good news he .had brought.

(5). 2 Con 10:10. Here the word “parousia” is correctly translated presence, and it should be clear to all that that is what is meant. One could not reasonably say that His bodily “drawing near” was weak, or that His bodily “arrival” was weak.

Phill. 1:26. Certainly Paul did not mean that the act of his arrival would do the Phillipians good; it was his presence and fellowship, his instructions and counsel that would increase their joy.

Phill. 2:1.2. The word is again correctly translated “presence,” and is placed as the alternative to absense. No other word could so well convey the meaning of the passage.

1 Thes. 2:19. Again the meaning is not the “arrival,” or “drawing near,” but the “presence” of the Lord, for the Apostle speaks of the church as being in the presence of the Lord at that time.

1 Thes. 3:13. The word rendered “coming” should be “presence” here also. The Apostle is referring to the same event as in the previous passage, namely, the church being present with the Lord at His second presence with all His saints.

1 Thes. 4:15. Here again the word “parousia” rendered coming, should be “presence.” If the Lord was to come like a flash of lightning, as some so misunderstand, Matt 24:27, then no one could await it with joy, nor could there be any time when “The dead in Christ, having risen first,” some could be left over or remain. With the true rendering of “parousia,” i.e., presence, all is harmonious and reasonable. When the Lord should be present. He would first raise those who had fallen asleep in Christ, and then those who were still alive in the flesh, would be caught away just as they finished their course to be together with the Lord, with those who had preceded them. These do not sleep as others who died before the presence of Christ, but at the moment of death are “Changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye,” and so they together with all the body of Christ shall be “forever with the Lord.”

1 Thes. 5:23. Again read -presence instead of coming. It is not the act of His “arrival” we look forward to, but to His presence.

-2 Thes. 2:1; (13). 2 Thes. 2:8; (14). 2 Thes.. 2:9. The word should undoubtedly be rendered presence in each of these texts.

(15). James 5:7; (16). James 5:8. It should be evident to all that the “presence” is the thing which James referred to and not the act of “arrival,” or “drawing near.”

(17). 2 Pet. 1:16. That Peter had in mind the “presence” of Christ in Kingdom glory, is evident from the fact that he refers to the “Transfiguration” which was a picture of the Kingdom.

(18) . 2 Pet. 3:4. Should read “Where is the promise of His presence?” This verse is having fulfilment in this, our day.-

(19). 2 Pet. 3:12. This has reference to the time called, “The day of God,” “The day of the Lord’s wrath,” It will not be a flash of lightning in length of time, but a period, “A time of trouble,” even greater than that in Noah’s day, or at the destruction of Jerusalem.

.(20). 1 John 2:28. If the coming of the Lord was like a flash of lightning, there would be no time for anyone to feel ashamed “before” Him, but John had no such thought. he, along with all. those who love His appearing, look forward to being like the Lord’ with Him, and to “see Him as He is.” Such has confidence that they shall not. be ashamed before’ Him at His presence.

Thus we have gone over all the instances of the word “parousia” in the Epistles, and see that no other word than “presence” can so well convey in English the meaning of the inspired writers. Now we turn to Matt. 24, where the remaining four occurrences of the word occur, and find that the same word “presence” is clearly the Lord’s meaning in each case.

Matt. 24:3. Here is the inspired question which was asked of our Lord, in order that the inspired answer could be provided for our edification, and it is only when we allow the proper meaning of the Greek word “parousia” four times used in this connection that we can comprehend the “meat in due season.” V. 45.

“When shall these things be and what shall be the sign of thy presence (parousia) and of the end of the world?” So that the answer given is not indicating signs that the Lord was soon to be near, or to arrive, but rather that He would be present when the signs should be seen.

Had the Lord intended returning in a way visible to all human eyes, there could lie no value in providing any sign of His presence, but as He had said that it would not be with observation, the signs are given, and the signs are all now to be seen. -

Matt. 24:27. It would indeed be a sorry thing if the Lord was to come and go just like the lightning flash, but when we see that the Greek word rendered "lightning" is elsewhere used for the shining of a candle, we readily perceive that it is the glorious sunshine, rising in the east and shining all day, setting at evening in the west, that is here used to show the glorious reign of the "Sun of righteousness, which shall arise with healing in His wings." Also, that it is not just the "arrival," "coming," or "drawing near" that is referred to, but the "presence" of the Son of man, which will continue for a 1000 year day. The word rendered "lightning" simply means "brightness," or "shining," and could be used for sunshine, or shining of a candle, or brightness of lightning, and is dependent upon connections respecting translation.

Matt. 24:37; (24). Matt. 24:39. "As the days of Noah were, so shall also the presence of the Son of man be."

The word in the authorised Bible is mistakenly rendered "coming." As Noah was present in the "Days of Noah," so of course our Lord must be present in the days of the Son of man. See corresponding passage in Luke 17:24, 26..

STRENGTH AND COURAGE.

CONVENTION ADDRESS.

THE older a Christian becomes in his pilgrimage along the “narrow way,” the more he realises the necessity of being strong, stouthearted, and courageous, if he would seek to “win through,” and successfully combat the various .. trials and besetments that surround him ill the world in general, respecting this matter of what constitutes strength and boldness of purpose, both morally and physically. In the one case it is—“Not by might, nor by power, but by My Spirit”—as saith the inspired Word, and in the other case, self-confidence, and outward show, and the “survival of the fittest,” is the code of mankind generally. As we look around us, there is much to be admired in the world in the many evidences of nobility, strength of character, fortitude, etc., which must be commended and rightly appreciated, and, were it not so, there is no doubt that the world would suffer much in consequence. But even from the natural view-point, do we not perceive that these commendable characteristics are few and far between, that mankind generally is very deficient in strength and nobility, both morally and physically, and that only one here and there, in proportion to the world’s vast population, can claim these excellent qualities in both aspects of their nature?

Again, taking it for granted that the few possess these splendid qualities, it is only for a brief span of years in which the strength is maintained, and often the nobility of character undermine of the imperfection and degraded status of mankind in general, of whom he forms a part. While the wise man says The glory of the young man is his strength,”—the Psalmist pictures the true position when he said:—“The days of our years are three score years awl ten, and if by reason of strength they be four score years, yet is their strength, labour and sorrow, for it is soon cut off, and we fly away”—and again:—“As for man, his days are as grass, as the flower of the field, so he flourisheth, for the wind passeth over it, and it is gone, and the place thereof shall know it no more.”

Surely the world at large is a poor groaning creation, and well would it be if more serious thought and wisdom were exercised, during this brief span of life, with its fast fleeting ‘ears, in numbering their days, and applying the heart unto wisdom. We look forward to the time when mankind will appreciate, and be able to exercise the true wisdom, and when they shall say with the Psalmist of old:—“The Lord is the strength of my life, in whom shall I be afraid.” We rejoice that the time is very close at hand when all shall realise that it is not by might nor by power, but God’s Holy Spirit, “that worketh all in all,” and as the Scriptures say:—“Better is he that ruleth his spirit, than lie that taketh a city.”

Now, let us see what viewpoint we each must take in order to become strong, courageous Christians. First of all, we have fully to realise that we have no strength of our own, and, the sooner we appreciate this fact, the stronger Christians we will become. Only as we go in the strength of the Lord can we hope to accomplish anything, and successfully fight the good fight of faith, realising at all times the Apostle’s words: “When I am weak then am I strong.”

We cannot do better than examine a few worthy examples of strong. Christian character. What a wonderful demonstration of strength of character was exhibited by our Lord, as He rejoiced to walk the pathway of sacrifice and obedience, only in the strength of Jehovah, and energised by the power of the Holy Spirit’s influence. Surely, in viewing our Lord’s life, was it not fitting that He should be termed, “The Lion of the tribe of Judah”? In that faithful, obedient, sacrificial life, poured out with such fortitude, and in the face of continued opposition, was it not in verification of the Scripture which “In quietness and confidence shall be your strength I low can we explain, or harmonise this strength of character of our Lord, with His meek, submissive, and inoffensive disposition, so apparently contrary, and a stumbling to many? Amongst mankind in general, any indication of a quiet, inoffensive, meek, humble spirit savours of weakness, and is considered that such an one lacks confidence, independence and moral courage. Does this not forcibly prove that “the world by wisdom knows not God,” but relies upon its own vain self-esteem, wisdom and imagination? They have yet to learn that the wisdom of the worldly wise shall perish, as it is written: “I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and bring to naught the understanding of the prudent.” In our Master, we have a beautiful example of a well-balanced mind, strong for the right, and fearless of the consequences, and yet gentle, meek, and loving towards all with whom He came in contact. How we marvel at His strength of character, manifested in this twofold aspect, as represented in the “Lion” of the tribe of Judah, and as the “Lamb” of God. How easy it might be for us to stand up, strong and courageously for the cause of Truth and its defence, and yet lack the kindly spirit- of love, meekness humility, the lamb-like qualities so necessary and trial to every footstep follower of Christ.

Another noble example of great strength of character, and true Christian development, surely is the loved Apostle Paul. What a wonderful-, all-round, well-balanced disciple he proved himself to be. Do we not more and more perceive that it is only as we allow the operation of God’s Holy Spirit of love and of a sound mind to quicken and guide us, can any follower of Christ possibly hope to, become strengthened with might by His spirit in the inner man.

Let us look for a while at the position of some of the Old Testament worthies, and their strength of character, founded or based upon their faith in God alone. What an excellent example of strength and courage twofold aspect have we in David and Goliath, owed from both the Christian’s and the world’s standpoint. the one hand, a great giant of superhuman pitted against a diminutive shepherd lad, and • know the result of the combat. The Philistine came with sword, shield, and spear, to make short work of the shepherd boy, as the giant would view with disdain and contempt the young lad, while David came in the might and power of the Lord God of Hosts. A beautiful picture of the David class, triumphing the giant of evil, in its many forms, through the strength given to those who fight in the name of their God, and with the power of His spirit working mightily in them. Like David, we must know in what we believe, and be found only using the “pebble” from the brook, and the “sling” of Truth, the sword of the spirit, which is the Word of God.

Then, again, we note the three Hebrew children in their experiences and strength of character, demonstrating great faith and fortitude, in refusing to worship any other than the only true God, and in consequence, being cast into the fiery furnace. How these also were protected on account of their noble stand against the command of King Nebuchadnezzar, which was contrary to their well-established, God-fearing heart and mind.

Again we are reminded, in this connection, of the boldness and strength of character of Joshua and Caleb, the two alone among the spies sent out to spy out the land of Canaan, who showed faith and courage, and were permitted to enter the promised land, while the others, who became fearful, and brought an evil report concern the land. shed in the wilderness. Have we), as did I men, to seek the promised Canaan and have not many of the chosen ones of this Gospel become fearful like the majority of the spies, and nothing to commend, giving: only an evil report? Have not the giants in the land, and the difficulties of tuned many to become fainthearted and weak. How we need to press forward courageously along our wilderness journey, toward the promised Canaan rest, and like Joshua and Caleb, realise the Lord’s hand and oversight with us. In His strength we shall be brought safely to our desired haven, against every foe and difficulty which must surely be confronted and overcome.

Another notable example of God-given strength and courage in the face of fearful odds was the occasion of . Gideon’s small band of 300 against the hosts of Midianites and the Amalakites. We recollect how Gideon’s army of 32,000 were tested as to their courage, faith, and strength of character, and how, at the first testing, 22,000 were allowed to return home on account of their becoming fearful of the enemy, leaving still 10,000, which, the Lord declared, were vet too many, and a further sifting was necessary in order that the required number be, obtained according to Divine direction.

Perhaps of all Old Testament pictures respecting God ‘It! overruling providence and care for His people, none serves better than this one, to stimulate and .encourage the child of God in his battle against the hosts of sin, which, pressing hard, seek ever to draw him from the prize. Just as this small band of Gideonites came upon the foe with strategy with a great blowing of trumpets, and lamps in their pitchers which they brake, thus defeating the enemy taken unawares, so, too, we, although only a “little flock,” can just as assuredly overcome every obstacle, by fighting in the strength which God supplies, we see the wisdom, to let our light shine from our earthen vessels and at the same time sound forth the silver trumpets of Truth.

When we are judged,

we are chastened of the Lord. 1 Cor. 11:32.

When on entering a house I see a child in disgrace for disobedience, although I tenderly consider the erring child, I especially feel with the grieved, sorrowing parent. When we sin, and are chastened of God, we should rather consider how the heart of our heavenly Father has by us been grieved, than be taken up with the smart of our stripes by His rod of correction.

CONFUSION.

WHAT confusion reigns in religious circles at this time. Yet Christendom has claimed to be the gate of Heaven, the only means whereby mankind might escape from sin and death and hell. The old and terrible thought of a hell of torture has very generally given way to saner views of God's wisdom, justice and love. Only a small number of Protestant Christians would to-day teach or endorse it. With most people, however, the doctrine has been thrown over, not because they have come to understand God's great plan of salvation and in what way He will deal with mankind generally, after the Church has been selected, and what punishment is to be inflicted upon the incorrigibly wicked, but simply that they could see the foolishness of such a proposition, as preserving sinners alive in order to have them suffer eternally. They appear to have judged the whole teachings of Christianity as being equally false. Out making a proper study of the Bible, they wrongly concluded that such teaching was contained in it. They have scented to think that Christ and the Apostles were responsible for the "damnable heresies" which Peter foretold would be introduced and for which the great Papal System must bear the responsibility. The consequence is the great indifference to religion in all so-called Christian lands to-day.

Another factor leading to the infidelity of the times has been the "Higher Criticism" or historicism in the pulpits.

This movement has, however, received many hard humps of late in the many valuable discoveries in Egypt, Palestine, Mesopotamia and elsewhere, corroborating the Bible narratives which these critics had endeavoured to explain away. cast doubt on or deny.

But even among the most sincere of Christian ministers there seems little definite knowledge respecting the Divine purpose, or true Bible teachings. We often read statements from one or another that the old creeds are worn out and that the Church requires a new theology. They seem to recognise that much that is contained in the Church creeds is not necessary, and is not founded on Scripture. We quote the following from the "Spectator":—"We have now learnt that when our Lord founded the Christian Church, He did not give it a creed and a code of rules and a constitution. but He gave it principles. He did not establish either Presbyterianism or Episcopacy, but He built up His Church on the principles of ministry and discipleship. He did not give us a code of conduct, but He taught us the great principles of righteousness and love and sacrifice. He did not give us a creed but a gospel, and He founded the Church on Himself, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner-stone."

We quote this as indicating public opinion, and no doubt many eminent ministers will endorse the wide statements. Yet while they know there is something wrong with the doctrines and creeds, they do not get down to a thorough and honest search for the truth as revealed in the Bible. In their desire to appear "broad," they will admit to their pulpits and discussions Evolutionists, Spiritists, and others of all shades of thought and theories; but any who do not believe the unscriptural doctrines of the Trinity or inherent immortality of the soul are seemingly outside the pale of recognition. If Divine truth is earnestly sought after, then, realising how matters were confused in the Dark Ages, there should be an open inquiry as to what the Scriptures teach, regardless of sect or creed. These two pagan and Papal doctrines stand in the way of a clearer knowledge of the Bible. They are antagonistic to the whole tenor of the Bible; the word Trinity is nowhere found in it, and not in any instance is man or the soul termed immortal. On the contrary, we read, "Hear, O Israel, the Lord thy God is one Lord," Deut. 6:4. "Thou shalt have no other gods before Me." "To us there is one God, the Father of whom are all things and one Lord Jesus Christ by whom are all things," 1 Cor. 8:6. "The head of woman is the man and the head of Christ is God," 1 Cor. 11:3. Also respecting immortality, far from being a quality possessed by nature, it has to be striven for and is given only to the overcomers. "To them who by patient endurance in well doing seek for glory, honour and immortality, eternal life," Rom. 2:7. The soul that sinneth it shall die, Ezekiel 18:4, 20.

While the Lord did not place His Church under any set code of laws, He certainly gave implicit instructions regarding the conduct of His followers. In fact, how could He leave us the "great principles of righteousness and love and sacrifice" without indicating the lines of conduct. Then does not the Sermon on the Mount, commencing with Matthew, fifth chapter, indicate not only the manner of life but the spirit which must animate the true Christian. Nor did the Lord leave us without a creed; He that cometh unto God must believe that He is, and that He is a rewarder of "them that diligently seek Him." The sayings of our Lord and writings of the Apostles clearly and simply state what it is necessary one should believe in order to be saved. Doctrine is necessary, the truth has been given, and the Church is to be "the pillar and ground of the truth." The Christian is to fight the good fight of faith, "holding fast the form of sound words," 2 Tim. 1:13; 1 John 4:1-3; 2 John 7-9, etc. One can nevertheless, while differing from the sweeping statements, appreciate the spirit of the "Spectator's" remarks. Christianity is a practical religion. Christ's teachings provide the true principles for establishing a world in righteousness as well as for the selecting of the Church.

All theories and doctrines and professions and orations are simply tinkling cymbals and sounding brass, unless accompanied by earnest endeavour to apply the Christian principles and live the Christian life, and to attain the same character as the great Head of the Church.

They Had Been With Jesus.

"I here is none other name under heaven, given among men, whereby we must be saved."—Acts 4:12.

As the apostles were preaching Christ, taking for their text the manifestation of His power through Peter in the healing of the impotent man at the temple gate, "Beautiful," and while the devout worshippers heard them gladly and repentantly the theologians were disturbed. It seemed monstrous to them that any hut themselves should undertake to teach the people, and that the people were giving more interested attention to these "laymen" than they gave to them—the chief priests, religious rulers and doctors of the law. In this they but manifested the usual worldly spirit, which in every religious system except the true one manifests special opposition to any light on teaching which does not emanate from those recognised as "ordained" teachers. True, these apostles were ordained by the very highest authority in the universe—the spirit and power of God, communicated by Christ; but such ordination, such authority, to teach, was not recognised by those doctors of divinity who, like their successors to this day, failed to recognise the ordinations of God and merely recognise human authorisation to preach.

Not only were they envious that others than themselves should have the ear of the people for religious instruction, but they had listened sufficiently to the discourse themselves to ascertain that the apostles were really imparting to the people some knowledge of spiritual things. The people were actually being taught, and that upon subjects concerning which they, the recognised doctors of divinity and theology, knew nothing, and could teach nothing. If, therefore, such teachings were permitted, the worshippers would very soon know more than their religious rulers, which would never do. They were unable to teach the people themselves, and were not humble enough of heart to receive instruction, and hence were quite ready to be overcome by the spirit of envy, hatred and malice, against those whom the Lord had appointed, and was using, while passing them by. They had power to stop the preaching and to imprison the Apostles, and they did so.

This same spirit was equally manifested, and even more unrighteously, by the religious leaders during the dark ages: they not only imprisoned but tortured and put to death those who ventured to instruct the people in spiritual things without their permission, ordination, etc. This same spirit was manifested to a considerable extent by the reformers also, we are sorry to say—Calvin, Luther, and members in authority in the Episcopal Church from the sixteenth to the eighteenth centuries. were similarly grieved with efforts to instruct the people outside their own channels; and the same spirit to a t followed some who fled from persecution in the Mayflower, to American soil. We need not accuse any of these of intentional wrong: they lived in a time when religion and politics were blended, and they verily thought they did God service. in opposing as they did that which they considered to be "heresy." Had they opposed the heresy with force of logic and Scripture merely, and sought thus to vanquish what they believed to be errors, with what they believed to be truth, they would not only have been worthy of approval, but also of admiration, and they might have been led into the truth; but their zeal misled them into the use of unjust means, and they more or less fought against God. But be it noted, all these improper efforts were unavailing to suppress the truth, and merely served to purify and refine the saints, as "gold tried in the furnace."

Arrogantly accustomed to overawing the common people with their titles, learning and authority, the High Priest and all the priestly family, and the religious rulers, and elders, and learned scribes, met as a court to hear, to overawe, to brow-beat, and to condemn Peter and John for their temerity in attempting to teach the people.

They were surprised when the two men whom they had judged from their general manner, dress, etc., to be "unlearned," not theologians. but of the "common people," addressed them meekly. simply, yet with holy boldness, concerning Jesus of and His power to heal—as much since His crucifixion and resurrection as before. Peter, if speaking of himself, might have been inclined to avoid mentioning the guilt of his hearers in connection with the crucifixion of our Lord; but as a chosen vessel for this very purpose he was specially under the control of the holy Spirit; and, although in no bitter or acrimonious language, he told his hearers the plain truth concerning their guilt as the crucifiers of Jesus, and showed them from the prophets that they had set at naught the chief stone of the spiritual temple of God, but that, nevertheless, God had highly exalted Him to be the Head over the Church, which is His body—the spiritual temple into which we as living stones are being built up.

There is no ambiguity in preaching done thus, under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit: it is direct, to the point. Peter did not say that Jesus of Nazareth was one of the great teachers of the world, and as worthy to be heard as Moses or Confucius or others; neither did he say, “It makes no difference whether you ever hear of the historic Christ or not, as some false teachers now declare. Peter’s spirit-inspired teachings were evidently riot at all in harmony with what is known as the “new theology.” nor with what is known as the “higher criticism,” nor with what is known as the “broad theology,” advocated by many of our day. Peter gave the message direct and with force: “There is none other name given under heaven or among men, whereby we must be saved.” In these words he told his learned hearers that there was no hope of salvation in Moses and in the Law, any more than in the heathen systems of theology—that knowledge of, and faith in, and obedience to Christ was the only God-appointed way of salvation.

What could they say! What could they do under such circumstances? They had utterly failed to overawe these humble fishermen, and instead had received a discourse from them, which was wholly unexpected under such conditions. They were not in the humble attitude of heart to be affected as were the three thousand who, on the Day of Pentecost, were pricked to the heart and converted, nor were they of the humble, worshipful, teachable spirit of the five thousand worshippers who had been converted by hearing the apostles in the temple the day before. They could do nothing hut marvel. But they took knowledge of the fact that the same meek and quiet spirit of Jesus was in these. His disciples, and the same powerful logic, directness of discourse and humility of manlier.

So let it be with each of us, the followers of Jesus! If we have opportunity for testifying to His grace and gospel, let us not fear to declare the whole counsel of God, but let us not do it rudely nor unkindly, but with the gentleness and force which are of the spirit of the truth.

Just a little farther on—and all who “honour Me,” with joy shall prove My promise true; they too shall honoured be. Full well I know thy heart’s desire, the heights to which thou dost aspire; thy love which burns with holy fire—and all to “honour Me.”

Of too many it must be said, they are not convinced by Scripture. They do not possess an insight into the scope of the Bible. They know little of Moses and still less of the prophets. They do not understand the drift of an epistle. And therefore they may easily be tossed to and fro by every wind of doctrine. A good flow of language, solemnity of manner, and plausible philosophy carry them away. Our armour is the Word. Read the Scripture, and prayerfully and diligently study “the whole counsel of God.”—Adolph Saphir.

Question Box.

Question.—Will ally Christians escape death? Does the fact of our Lord's presence (parousia) in any way lessen our "blessed hope of His appearing" and kingdom?

Answer.—Quite to the contrary, we find that the many evidences of Christ's presence in preparation for the setting up of His kingdom is part of the "blessedness" experienced by those watching and waiting at the- end of the 1335 days of Daniel 12. Far from lessening the hope, the Lord gave the signs which would mark His presence in Matt. 24 and Luke 21, and said, "When ye see these things come to pass, then look up, lift up your heads, for your deliverance draweth nigh." Luke 21:28. This expression clearly shows that the Lord would be present for some time prior to the deliverance of the saints still in the flesh. The deliverance and joys of being with Christ in the kingdom is still our "blessed hope." It is surely nearer than when we first believed; "this generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled." Matt. 24:34. "When ye see these things come to pass know ye that the Kingdom of God is nigh at hand," Luke 21:31. If the "rapture" theory were correct, i.e., that all the saints should be caught away at the moment of our Lord's arrival, these Scriptures could have no meaning. On the other hand, Christ was to come as a thief unknown, secretly, and therefore there is the necessity for these "signs" of His presence, that those "who are alive and remain" might know of His presence and "lift up their heads". in refreshed hope of being one by one or more changed and caught away in the moment of death to be forever with the Lord.

The suggestion that ally members in Christ may pass into the glorified condition without passing through the veil of death is contrary to the words of the Lord and the Apostles. Only if we suffer with Him shall we reign with Him; only "if we be (lead with Him shall we share His resurrection"—we must be "planted in the likeness of His death." "He that seeks to save his life shall lose it."

Ever since the adversary said to our first parents, "Ye shall not surely die," he has made appeal to the human heart along the same lines; for instance, there is the doctrine of "immortality of the soul," by which he has deceived the whole race—heathendom and Christendom, It was the same method behind a message which some, on their own authority, proclaimed a few years ago, that "millions now living would never die," and he would deceive, if it were possible, some of the elect by this suggestion also, of escaping death by being carried away into the air to be with the Lord without dying.

CHRIST'S RETURN:

HIS REVEALING AND MANIFESTATION.

“And He shall send Jesus Christ which before was preached unto you, whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began.”—Act 3:20-2.1.

THE little band of believers who had followed the Lord in His service of love and sacrifice during the three and a half years of His earthly ministry, were about to be sorely tried. How great had been their expectations! The mighty power of God had been wonderfully demonstrated in the works of mercy accomplished by the Master, as also by His words of wisdom and grace. There could be no question but that He was The Messiah and Phillip confidently informed Nathaniel, “V\ .gave found Him of whom Moses in the Law and the prophets did write.” “Come and see.” Peter also boldly declared, “Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.” How plaintive was the statement of Cleo-pas as he and another disciple were joined on the way to Emmaus by the Master disguised as a stranger. After having mentioned the terrible tragedy that had been enacted by the rulers of the people in slaying their Lord, he adds, “but we trusted that it had been he who -should have redeemed Israel.”

We then remember how their hearts burned within them as He, Who spake as never man spake, in words of grace explained to them from Moses and all the prophets, how just what had happened was only fulfilling that “which was written.” That it was necessary before Christ should enter His glory and Kingdom and commence the great work of delivering Israel and all the world from the oppression, not only of Rome, but of Satan and sin and its consequences, that He should first suffer. The first step in regard to the liberation of Israel and the world was to pay the price of sin. The penalty of death was against humanity as a whole. justice had condemned the race to death on account of one man’s transgression. Adam represented the earthly family. It was in mercy that all were included in the transgression, so that in justice all could be included in the redemption wrought by the one man Christ Jesus. This is clearly stated in Romans 5:11-19, and again in that beautiful chapter on the Resurrection-1! Cor. 15:21-22, “For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead, for as in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive.”

Unless there could be a resurrection from the dead, then all the glorious promises of Messiah’s Kingdom could avail nothing for the great majority of the human family. Millions of heathen and millions of children have died and never heard anything of God’s great plan for blessing mankind, never heard of the only name whereby they could come to God and have salvation. I had not Christ undertaken to pay the price of sin, the death sentence could never have been lifted, and there could never have been any hope of a life to come, there could never have been any Resurrection at all. How necessary, then, was the great sacrificial work of our Redeemer at His first advent. The whole matter of His second presence in Kingdom glory, to “bless all the families of the earth” in accordance with the great Abrahamic promise, depended upon it.

Not only on the Way to Emmaus did the Lord point the disciples forward to the fulfilment of all the glorious prophecies of the Old Testament, but we read Acts 1:3, “To whom also He showed Himself after His passion by many infallible proofs being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.” They had also enquired of Him, “Wilt Thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?”

It had been a matter very much hidden in the scriptures of the Law and the prophets; that Messiah must first suffer, and thus make satisfaction for sin. Peter in his first epistle, chapter 1, tells us that the prophets did not understand their own utterances concerning the sufferings of Christ, but realised that the message was not unto themselves but was intended for those coming later—the church, the spiritual seed of Abraham” It was, then. not surprising that the disciples of our Lord should have such happy expectations regarding His presence. Not understanding the veiled utterances respecting the suffering they were more attracted by the beautiful expressions about the “King that should reign in righteousness.” “Of the increase of His Government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David and upon His Kingdom to order and establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever.” “But with righteousness shall He judge the poor and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth.” “They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain; for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea,” and “in that day shall there be a root out of Jesse which shall stand for an ensign of the people: to it shall the Gentiles seek: and his rest shall he glorious.” “In this mountain shall the Lord of hosts make unto all people a feast of fat things, of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines -on the lees. well refined. And He will destroy in this mountain the face of the covering cast over all people and the veil that is spread over all nations. He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces, and the rebuke of His people shall He take away from off all the earth; for the Lord hath spoken it.” “And the mountain of the Lord’s house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills. And many nations shall come, and say, Come, let us go up to the mountain of the Lord and to the house of the God of Jacob; and He will teach us of His ways, and we will walk in His paths. and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares .and their spears into pruning hooks. Nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.” “And they shall sit every man under his own vine and fig tree, and none shall make them afraid.” (Isaiah 32:1; 9:7; 11:4-10; 25:6-9; and Micah 4:1-5.)

“I WILL COME AGAIN”

John 14:3—”If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am there ye may be also.”

Nothing, then, can be more plainly stated than that our Lord Jesus is to come again and accomplish a great work for which the first advent was but the necessary preparation. The hope of Christ’s return and kingdom has ever been the great stimulus to the Church in all her trials and sufferings.

The Gospel Age is the Age of faith, not that faith is a characteristic of mankind during this time, but that God is only dealing with such as have faith, and that faith in Christ’s death is the means of justification and acceptance with God, in contrast with the Law Dispensation when perfect works were required, and also contrasting with the next Age, when under the New Covenant every man will be judged according to his works, (Rev. 20:12-13). During this Age of Faith, God is selecting a certain class which will, when the Christ character has been formed in each, become the Bride of Christ, and will “sit down in His throne even as He overcame and is set with the Father in His throne.” (Rev. 3:21).

In one sense the Lord has ever been with His people according to His promise, “Lo I am with you always, unto the end of the Age.” In the same way He is represented in Revelations as “walking amidst the candlesticks.” This was evidently in the way indicated by His words, “I will not leave you comfortless, I will pray the Father and He will send you another comforter even the spirit of the truth.” (John 14:16-18).

He would be with the Church in all her suffering. No member would he without His sympathy and gracious advocacy with the Father, and comfort of the Holy Spirit. Yet He is represented as being retained in the heavens “until the times of restitution of all things.”

At His first advent He came to His own, the Jewish people, who represented God’s Kingdom in the earth; He offered Himself as their King, and was rejected. “His own received him not.” They then failed to secure the privilege of becoming solely the Church, class; the Kingdom of Heaven class. “The Law and the prophets were until John, since then the Kingdom of Heaven is preached.” (Luke 16:16). They rejected the “chief corner stone.” They were the wicked husbandmen who slew the Son and Heir. Therefore, Jesus said “the Kingdom of God shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof.” (Matt. 21:33-43).

Peter refers to the rejection of the chief corner stone, and speaks of the Church, which is being selected from all nations, as being the nation of God. “Which before were not a people but are now the people of God.” (1 Peter 2:6,10).

Not until this Church class is complete will the Jews as a nation see that they crucified the Lord of Glory. Not until the fulness of the Gentiles has come in—the number of God’s elect completed— will blindness be removed from Israel, and they shall say, Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord. (Matt. 23:39; Rom. 11:25, 27).

James so concisely summarises the matter in Acts 15:14-17, “God at the first did visit the Gentiles to take out a people for His name, and to this agree the words of the prophets as it is written, “After this I will return and build again the Tabernacle of David, which is fallen down, and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up, that the residue of men might seek the Lord, and all the Gentiles upon whom My name is called saith the Lord, who death all these things.”

This, too, is in accord with the Apostle’s statement in Rom. 8:19-22. “The whole creation groaneth and travaileth together in pain until now, waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God. In other words, waiting until the Church is complete and shines forth “as the sun in the Kingdom,” for the blessing of all the willing and obedient of mankind, “All the families of the earth.”

The first and second advents are then closely related in that the plan if the second coming could not be undertaken until the justice of God’s throne had been met by the payment of the penalty for sin to redeem mankind. It will be readily seen how necessary it was that our Saviour should become a man— not a sinful man, though born of a woman yet not of Adamic stock, but separate from sin, spotless, undefiled—in order that He might offer Himself as a perfect man, in the place of Adam, and thus allow the sinner to go free. “He gave Himself a ransom for all to be testified in due time,” so that “as all in Adam die, so all in Christ might be made alive again.”

Thus it was that Christ came in the body of humiliation for the suffering of death, but the object at the second advent is so very different that He will not again appear in the flesh, of which He said, “My flesh I give for the life of the world,” but we look for Him the second time “in power and great glory,” in the express image of the Father’s person.” He was “put to death flesh, but raised spirit,” and comes to take control of earth, to bind Satan, the present “prince of this world,” and to reign in his stead. To stamp out evil and ultimately all evil doers, to bring in righteousness and peace and make this earth a paradise, filled with the glory of the knowledge of the Lord.

Till I come, give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine. 1 Tim. 4, 13.

The Book of God is a store of manna for God’s pilgrim children; and we ought to see to it that the soul get not sick and loathe the manna. The great cause of our neglecting the Scriptures is not want of time, but want of heart, some idol taking the place of Christ. Satan has been marvelously wise to entice away God’s people from the Lord.

CHRIST'S RETURN: HIS REVEALING AND MANIFESTATION.

THE Apostle in 11th. 9:24-28 uses the typical high priest and the two sacrifices of atonement as illustrative of the first and second comings of Christ. He put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself, and appeared in the presence of God for us. "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many, and to them that look for Him presence of God for us.

"So Christ was once offered to shall He appear the second time without sin (without a sin offering) unto salvation.

That will be as in the type where all Israel awaited the appearing of the High Priest, coming out of the Holy the second time; when Moses and Aaron then lifted up their hands and blessed the people." (Lev. 9:22, 23). After the great time of 'trouble has swept over the earth, the people will have learned the sad lesson, that no human government is capable of ruling in righteousness, nor able to bring peace and order in the earth. The desire of all nations will be the kingdom, which Christ will establish: Just as Israel awaited the second appearance of the High Priest Aaron who came forth and blessed them, so mankind is spoken of by Paul (Rom. 8:19-22) as the whole creation, groaning and travailling together in pain, waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God—the Church—the joint heirs with Christ in His Kingdom—who are to sit with Him in His throne. (Rev. 3:21).

HE COMES TO REIGN.

At the second coming of Christ, then, there will be a great change of Government. Satan and the fallen angels will be bound, they who have so long been ruling in the hearts of the disobedient, and enticing into sin and wickedness, deceiving millions in the many false religious and thousands in such cults as Theosophy, Christian Science and Spiritism, through witches and mediums. Instead of all this baneful influence there will be a new and happy influence towards righteousness, godliness, kindness and peace; because Christ and His saints will have taken control of the world, and the purpose is to raise the fallen, lift up the oppressed, relieve the afflicted, and encourage all to walk up the highway of holiness, and to gain the reward of eternal life.

When we see that the purpose of Christ's return and March Issue kingdom is so very different from that of His first advent, we can see that He will not need to come again in a body of humiliation, but as He Himself has said, "In power and great glory, and all the. Holy 'Angels with He has no need to again change His nature and become flesh.

His mighty work can the better be accomplished in His power and might, as the glorious spirit being, in the express image of the Father's person." (Heb. 1:3, 4).

Let us enquire as to what will be the first work of our Lord _ on His return. Will He At once begin His millennial reign, or is there not some preparatory work to be done?

PARABLE OF THE YOUNG NOBLEMAN.

Perhaps the Parable of the Young Nobleman in Luke 19:11-27 will be helpful to consider at this point.

The reason stated for this parable's -being given is, "Because they thought that the Kingdom, of God should immediately appear," and "Because they were nigh to Jerusalem." They were looking for a literal human king and earthly kingdom, with Jerusalem as the capital of all the earth.

Our Lord had already informed them that the Kingdom (Luke 17:20) cometh not with outward show or with observation. His hearers were but naturally minded men. The Holy Spirit had not yet been given, and so they could not think of anything but an earthly Messiah, with an earthly throne and earthly armies going forth to conquer and thus establish His Kingdom 'in all the earth. How differently does the matter appear when we receive the spiritual mind, and compare scripture with scripture. While some scriptures taken in an isolated way might appear to teach so, yet we see that though Jerusalem is again to be restored, and Israel, according to the flesh, is to return to God's favour, and will be the earthly representative of the Messianic Kingdom, yet the real kingdom class, Christ and His saints;

His joint-heirs, will be spiritual. They will have much more power and control of earth's affairs as spiritual beings than could be the case if they were in human form. • So the Lord's words on this point are very important, but may be referred to later on.

This Parable of the young nobleman was given to help those who had ears to hear, to realise that there was much to be done before their expectations of seeing Jerusalem again a joy in earth could be accomplished. Our Lord was represented by the young nobleman.

He would need to be absent for some time (the whole Gospel Age). He would then return with full authority to set up the Kingdom. It also shows that even on His return He will first deal with His servants. The ten servants -were each given a pound with which to trade, and on His return the Lord first requires of these an account. The pound appears to refer to justification, which comes to every Christian believer, and by putting this to the banker, or, in other words, by presenting our justified selves as living sacrifices to God, we receive the begetting of God's Holy Spirit, and thereby start in the Christian race, and endeavour to produce the fruits of the Holy Spirit.

There appear to be four classes here dealt with by the Lord.

The one who had gained ten pounds would appear to represent those who had faithfully used their privileges and opportunities, and had developed the perfect character—the likeness of Christ, and so received the abundant entrance into the Kingdom, "Have thou authority over ten cities."

The one who only gained five pounds may represent the great multitude who seem to gain a second prize and serve before the throne. (Rev. 7:9.)

The one who did no trading but simply handed back the pound would seem to be those who came so far as to justification by faith through the precious blood of Christ, but they do not go on to consecration, they do not go to the bank with their pound at all. They have never taken the step of offering their purchased lives to God. They are those "who seek to save their lives and so lose them." They are those who "receive the grace of God in vain." The pound is taken from them; they are not punished otherwise, and will no doubt be judged with the world in the next Age.

There are those who were rebellious and wilfully rejected the Lord's provision for them, and turned against the King. "We will not have this man to rule over us." These were slain, and would probably represent those who sin the sin unto death.

All this work or judgment among Christians appears to be, at the return of Christ to take the Kingdom, yet prior to His taking control of earth. So that there would appear to be some time during which Christ is to be present among His people, yet unknown to the world.

"IF ANY MAN HEAR MY VOICE." Luke 12:35-48.

The Lord, in verse 36, seems to teach in line with this thought. "Let your loins be girded about and your lights burning, and be ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord when He shall return from the wedding, that when He cometh and knocketh they may open unto Him immediately."

The thought appears to be that the Lord would be present and knocking, and that some might not be sufficiently alert to hear the "knock," while those who were in the right attitude and waiting for Him would more quickly recognise the Lord's presence. Then there is the promise of verse 37, "Blessed are those servants whom the Lord, when He cometh, shall find watching. Verily, I say unto you. He will gird Himself and make them to sit down to meat and will come forth and serve them."

This is surely a wonderful promise, and also clearly indicates that the Lord will be present among His people prior to

His taking control of earth's affairs. Not only will the world be unaware of His presence, but many of His own people will evidently be too much taken up with other things, soothed to spiritual drowsiness by worldly attractions, or social matters, or even social uplift, temperance or religious work, and thus fail to recognise His presence, and fail to enter the marriage feast, fail to sit down at the table to eat the meat specially provided by the Lord for the watchers. We find similar language in Rev. 3:20, addressed to the Laodicean Church: "Behold I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him and will sup with him, and he with Me."

Verse 45 seems clearly to indicate a class which will refuse to believe that the Lord is present, and who will begin to smite those who are rejoicing in the fact. and are enjoying the feast which the Lord promised to prepare, a feast of truths, new and old, out of the storehouse—the Word of God. So that here, again, we notice the solemn fact that the first work at the Lord's return is a separating work among professing Christians, "Judgment must begin at the House of God."

This separating work is termed the "harvest," and the Lord gave the Parable of the Tares sown in the wheat field to illustrate the matter. (Matt. 13:24-30.)

This parable covers the whole Gospel Age. The "good seed" is the Word of God, the true Gospel of grace in Christ. The enemy that sowed the tares is the Devil, who has sought to prevent the truth, and to pervert it by presenting error, right from the beginning. His crafty work is seen in all the false religions of heathendom, as well as in Christendom. The great anti-Christian Roman Catholic Church is surely his masterpiece, so wonderful a 'counterfeit of the true Church that millions have been deceived. The tares, sown among the wheat, have developed so that the wheat field has become a tare field. The terrible falling into error and development of tares could be seen even in the Apostles' days, but to the enquiry as to whether the tares should be separated or pulled up. the reply is: No, do not do any separating work until the Harvest time—"the Harvest is the end of the Age." Then the Lord would be present to direct the work, and would have the tares bound in bundles for the burning. Thus the wheat would be separated from these - bundles and gathered out of the field into the barn.

This is all to be accomplished by the present Lord, in preparation for the setting up of the Kingdom. The Kingdom will not commence its thousand years' reign of glory and blessing until the wheat is all garnered—that is, until the Church, the members in Christ, are all gathered home to reign with Him. The reign will not begin until the tares have gone into the fire, nor until Satan, the present prince, is dethroned and bound. • The question now is as to just where are we in regard to these important matters?

"Watchman, tell me does the morning
Of fair Zion's glory dawn?
Have the signs that mark its coming
Yet upon thy pathway shone.

Pilgrim, yes; arise, look round thee!
Light is breaking in the skies;
Gird thy Bridal robes around thee,
Morning dawns, arise, arise!"

While we have the prophecies of Daniel, the 1260, 1290, 1335 and the 2300 days, pointing to the years 1798, 1828, 1874 and 1846 respectively, yet none of these prophecies just clearly state that the Lord would be present again. They speak of the ending of Papal power and the cleansing of the sanctuary, and "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the end of the 1335 days." The Lord has left us rather to judge by the signs, the conditions about us, and the work going on among Christians, as to where we are in respect of His coming. The matter then may be discerned by those who search, "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear," and as for those who neglect the Word of God, neglect to watch, and do not trim their lamps—the Word of God .which is a lamp to our feet, a guide to our pathway—they will surely be left in ignorance of these important developments in connection with the Lord's presence and the deliverance of the Church.

The Lord has stated that when the Son of Man returns there will be similar conditions to those which existed in Noah's day, prior to the Flood. There were about 120 years during which Noah preached and warned of the coming catastrophe--the deluge—and during which time the people scoffed and went their own way eating, drinking, marrying, and giving in marriage. and knew not until the flood came. (Luke 17:26-27.)

"As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the days of the Son of Man, they did eat, they drank, they married wives. and they were given in marriage until the day that Noah entered the ark, and the flood came and destroyed

Likewise also in the days of Lot, they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded. But the same day that Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimstone from heaven and destroyed them- all. Even thus shall it be in the days of the Son of Man.” (Luke 17:27-30.)

St. Paul also speaks of the same time, saying, “This know, that in the last days perilous times shall come, for men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy. Without natural affection, truce breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce. despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God. Having a form of godliness. but denying the power thereof.” (2 Tim. 3:1-5.)

The Lord, after speaking of the signs of His presence, warns against the possibility of that day’s coming upon us unaware.

“Take heed to yourselves lest at any time your hearts be over charged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares. For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell upon the face of the whole earth. Watch ye, therefore. and pray always that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man.” (Luke 21:34-36.)

THE TEN VIRGINS PARABLE.

The Parable of the Ten Virgins indicates that there will be two classes even among those interested in the Lord’s return. Some have trimmed their lamps and have oil in their vessels, and are thus able to appreciate the presence of Christ, while others seem to lack the spiritual perception through lack of oil in their vessels, the Holy Spirit in their hearts, and so fail to enter the Bridal Chamber, and are not recognised by the Bridegroom.

It would seem probable that the outworking of this Parable of the Ten Virgins has been in course of fulfilment ever since the ending of Daniel’s 1290 days. It was somewhere about 1825 that the advent movement had its beginning, and the message went throughout Christendom, “Prepare to meet the Bridegroom.”

Mr. Miller and others prominent in this movement had concluded that Christ would return about 1844, which they understood was the end of Daniel’s 2300 days (years). (Daniel 8:14.)

A great disappointment occurred at that time, for those whose minds were exercised on the subject had not grasped the correct thought of the manner of the Lord’s return. They looked for Him to appear again in human form, visible to the human eye. They had not noticed the intent of the Lord’s own words. (Luke 17:20-24.), “The Kingdom of God cometh not with observation.” Neither shall they say, “Lo here, or Lo there! For behold the Kingdom of God is among you.” Even this disappointment of 1844 seemed to be intimated in the word, “And He said unto the disciples, The days will come when ye shall desire to see one of the days of the Son of Man, and ye shall not see it; and they shall say to you: see here or see there, go not after them, nor follow them. For as the lightning that lighteneth out of one part under heaven and shineth unto the other part under heaven (the sunshine out of the east unto the west), so shall also the Son of Man be in His day.” It is quite evidently a .Mistake to think of this lightening as the lightning flash. It is foolish to think that the Lord’s second presence would be but a flash as of lightning. He is represented elsewhere as the “Sun of righteousness that shall arise with healing in His wings” (Mal. 4:2),

That surely means that He will not be seen by the natural eye, though every eye of faith will see Him, and appreciate the light of the knowledge of the Lord, which shall cover the whole earth as the waters cover the sea, and feel the warmth of His love and the healing influences of those rays of sunshine from His glorious presence. We may recall the incident of Paul’s conversion, and how the Lord appeared to him in the way, and His appearance was above the brightness of the sun at noonday, and could not be looked upon. Paul was blinded. Then, too, we remember how highly the Lord was exalted after His resurrection. Paul declares that he saw Christ “as one born (in resurrection) before the time.” He saw Him as He will be. when He comes as a glorious spirit being, in the “express -image of the Father’s person” “whom no man hath seen nor can see.”

There is- not one word in connection with the Lord’s coming again to indicate that He would once more change His nature and again become flesh, but, on the contrary, He declared (Matt. 24:30), “There shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven, and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man. coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory.” And again (Luke 9:26), “He shall come in His own glory, and in His Father’s, and of the Holy Angels.” And Matt. 16:27, “For the Son of Man shall- come in the glory of His Father and with His angels.” It would be but reasonable that, if the Son of Man should return in human form visible to men, the angels also would. be in similar form, and thus also. be seen of men. We remember again that it was in order that Christ might pay the price of sin by giving “His flesh (His. humanity.) for the life of the world,” that He had become flesh, that He had been “made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, that- He might by the grace of God taste death for every man.” (Heb. 2:9.) Having accomplished the great sacrifice, He comes again, not in the body of humiliation; but in- power and- glory, in the “express image of the- Father’s person.”

The apostle John did’ not even know what He would be like. but he knew that He would come “as He is.” He would; not change His condition or nature, but those who will see Him must be changed to be like Him. (1 John- 3,:

There are scriptures which, if taken literally, might appear to- teach, to the contrary of the Master’s words, “Henceforth the world seeth Me no more,” but if we patiently examine these passages we believe it will be seen that they are figurative or symbolic, and when their real meaning is discerned they will be found beautifully harmonising with the plain statements of our Lord, and with the apostle Paul, who said, “Yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, henceforth know we Him (so) -no more.”

We have, for instance, the statement that the day of the Lord cometh as a thief in the night; and yet again we read that He will descend with a “shout.” and the “voice of the Archangel” and- the “trump of God.” All these take place at the presence of the Lord, yet only those who are -earnestly waiting, watching and listening will hear the shout, the voice, the trump, or the “knock.” Others shall be unaware of His having come. Rev. 3:3 (Diaglott). “Remember, therefore, how thou halt received and heard and observed it, and reform. if therefore thou shouldst not watch. I may have come as a thief, and thou mayst -by no means know at what hour I may have come on thee.”

All these symbols refer to the message of truth, a proclamation of His presence, etc.

Daniel 12: I shows that the Lord would be present, “shall stand up” prior to the “Time of Trouble.” Rev. 11: 1518 shows that the nations will be angry, and like those in Noah’s day, unaware of the presence. 1 Thes. 4:16 shows, too, that Christ will -be present when the shout, voice and trump sound forth, and Matt. 24:31 tells the purpose of the sounding of •the trumpet to be the accomplishing of the harvest work, to “gather together His elect from the four winds of heaven.” That is the gathering of the saints out of all the bundles of error and sectarianism, into the light and liberty of the truth as it is in Jesus.

THE HIDDEN CROSS.

The multitude saw but the cross of olive wood
The Man of Sorrows bore, nor knew how underneath,
Close pressed upon His heart a hidden cross He wore—
A dark and bleeding weight of sin and human woe,

Made heavier with the sentence of God's broken law,
And crowned with thorns of scornful and malicious hate—
A cross the world's Redeemer found on Jordan's brink,
Nor laid it down until He came to Calvary.

Oft times it seemed He almost craved some human aid,
Some sympathising heart to share that cruel cross.
Jerusalem, Jerusalem, hadst thou but known
What time that cross bore heaviest on the yearning heart

Of Him, thy King! And yet, O slow of faith and hard Of heart,
"Ye would not," and the King passed on His way;
And of the people there was none with Him!
He trod Alone the valley of this dark world's shame and woe.

O, chosen three, had ye but watched with Him "one hour,"
That awful night in dark Gethsemane, ye might Have lightened some the cruel weight of that dread cross—
Have known and shared with Him that agonising woe.

Alas! Alas! Your eyes were heavy, and ye slept.
So now, "Sleep on, and take your rest," ye weary ones.
An. holy angel's wing bath eased the hidden cross—
Your Master, strengthened, waits that other cross to bear.

Which one bore heavier on the way to Calvary ?
The cross the cruel Roman soldiers laid upon
The Blessed One? Ah, no! it was the unseen cross
That crushed Him to the earth, that wrung from those pale lips

The agonising cry, "My God! My God!
Oh, why hast Thou forsaken Me ?" In grief earth rent her breast,
The sun grew dark; " 'Tis finished," and the price is paid—
The hidden cross had pierced that loving, tender heart!

"Take up thy cross and follow Me," the Master said.
Ah, yes! His faithful Bride must also bear a cross—
The hidden cross, made not of life's vicissitudes
Alone, its -ills and pains, its loss and poverty,—

The outward signs the multitude behold.
All, no! We follow in His steps who went before Us in the narrow way. We, too, must bear the woe,
Be touched with feeling of the world's infirmity,

Its weary weight of sin and curse of broken law;
Let us, therefore, go forth to him "without the gate,"
Lay down our lives in sacrifice, spend and be spent;
And while we clasp this cross more closely to our breast,

Press on toward Calvary, for there our Bridegroom waits
To take the cross of woe, and give a crown of joy!

TILL HE COME

THERE are those who seem to understand these words of the Apostle, in connection with the Lord's Supper, to mean that such observance of His death:oust cease as soon as He would again be present. They suggest that, seeing we are living in the days of His "parousia," or, in other words, in the "days of the Son of Man," when Christ is secretly present, unknown, excepting to those who hear His "knock" and open unto Him (Rev. 3:20), that it is no longer right to "do this in remembrance" of Him.

The Apostle seems to have had no thought of limiting an observance initiated by the Lord. No such limitation is mentioned by our Lord when inaugurating this memorial of His death. Evidently the Apostle's thought was that so long as the Church sojourned in the flesh, they should keep this simple token of His suffering and their willingness to be broken together with Him.

The Lord's death first benefits only "the Church of the First-born," just as the Passover lamb in Egypt only spared the 'first-borns in each home, where the blood had been sprinkled. Yet all Israel were ultimately delivered as a consequence of the slaying of that lamb, and all Israel kept the memorial of that event throughout their generations.

So 1 John 2:2 assures us that Christ is "the propitiation for our sins and not for ours only, but for the sins of the whole world," so it would seem appropriate that all the world of mankind, as they come to, appreciate the fact that He died that they might live, should gratefully do this in remembrance of that loving sacrifice.

Once again the date for this observance has come around, and all who love Him who so loved us and gave Himself for us will find a blessing in obeying this dying request of our Saviour. While it may be that the world will always observe the little ceremony, yet there is a deeper meaning in the matter to the Church of the First-born. These are reminded of their own consecration to be dead with Christ, "to drink of His cup and to be baptised with 'His baptism,'" to be broken together with Him, to be poured but, as He poured out His soul unto death. The Apostle then exhorts all to examine themselves- to how far they are living up to our consecration. we still taking up our cross and closely following the Master? Then are we purged of all leaven of malice, envy, bitterness and strife, are we the pure lump of unleavened bread of sincerity and truth. It is in this self-examination and renewal of our devotion to. the Lord that the blessing of this little observance is obtained. We trust that a great blessing will rest upon the little companies of ones or twos or threes which gather for this purpose at this season, and that all. will go forward with more earnest desire to be more like Him who so loved us.

"The Church's one foundation is Jesus Christ the Lord.
She is His new creation by water and the word,
From Heaven He came and sought her to be His Holy Bride,
With His own blood He bought her and for her life He died."

THE COMMUNION OF THE SAINTS.

“Except ye eat of the flesh of the Son of Man and drink His blood, ye have no life in you.” (John 6:53.)

Gladly, dear Lord, we eat (appropriate to our necessities) the merit of Thy pure nature sacrificed for us—for our justification. Gladly, too, we will partake of the cup of suffering with Thee, realising it to be a blessed privilege to suffer with Thee; that in due time we may reign with Thee; to be dead with Thee, that in the everlasting future we may live with Thee, and ‘be like Thee, and. share in Thy love and Thy glory as Thy bride. Oh! that we may be faithful, not only in the performance of the symbol, but of the reality. Blessed Lord, we hear Thy Word saying, “Ye shall indeed drink of My cup and be baptised with baptism.” Lord, we are not of ourselves able thus sacrifice; lint Thy grace is sufficient for us, for we are wholly Thine, now and forever.

THE PASSOVER MEMORIAL.

The annual observance of our Lord’s Death, in accordance with His wish, that we should “do this in remembrance of Him,” will be held by the various classes,. and isolated ones generally, this month.

At Adelaide, the evening of Good Friday, April 18, has been, chosen, and the service will (D.V.) be held at 7 p.m. in Liverpool Building, Flinders Street. The days following, Easter Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, will be taken up with the Convention meetings at the same address.

In Melbourne, Saturday evening, April 12, has been selected, on account of this night being the most suitable for the friends generally to attend. The service will (1).V.) be held at 7.30. p.m., at 450 Tittle Collins Street (3rd, floor).

An invitation is extended to all fellow-members in Christ to be present at these special annual observances.

CLASS MEETINGS.

Regular meetings of the friends are held in Adelaide, Melbourne, Sydney and other centres, particulars of which. may be obtained from the secretary, Berean Biblical Institute, Hawthorn, Melbourne, E2.

STRENGTH AND COURAGE.

Be thou strong and very courageous. - Joshua 1:7.

ANOTHER excellent example of strength and courage have we in the meek Moses, type of the greater antitypical

Moses. Onin as this noble character realised and acknowledged his own weakness, did God assure him of the strength sufficient to enable him to fulfil his task as leader of his Jewish brethren, and as Mediator of their Law Covenant with Jehovah. How courageously this worthy leader led God's people in all their wilderness experiences, despite continual murmuring, and lack of faith in the one whom God especially chose, and in the face of Jehovah's promises, that if they heeded their leader's instructions. they would indeed be blessed and guided aright in all their journeyings. We know how the majority of these privileged Jews came far short, and displeased God and consequently fell in the wilderness.

What antitypical lesson and warning there is here for those of us who are chosen and privileged to be of the spiritual Israel class, under the greater 'than Moses, Christ. Do we not find, also, that many of this class are falling by the wayside, lacking courage in the fight, and displaying a disregard of the written Word, even to the extent of ignoring primary and fundamental doctrine? Let us not forget that such disregard and unbelief will prevent us from entering into our Canaan rest, even as the Israelites of old failed to view the promised land, and receive the inheritance.

Then last, but not least, we have that fine character, John the Baptist, as an outstanding picture of strength and boldness of purpose. Naturally of fine, strong, rugged physique, and accustomed to the outdoor life, this condition and circumstance well fitted him for the mission God intended of him. Our Lord's words regarding the prophets of old, that there had not arisen from amongst them a greater than John, speak volumes for the one whom Jehovah chose as the forerunner of. our Lord, announcing the Messiah, and the kingdom about to be established. As a voice of one crying in the wilderness, preaching repentance to the Jews for any violation under their Law Covenant, surely this noble character was fearless in proclaiming the message then due. He, too, in his association with our Lord, and particularly at the time when Jesus came to him at Jordan to be baptised, displayed that quality of humility and meekness which is so essential, and which must ever go hand in hand with true Christian courage and fortitude.

Further let us notice that important injunction of . the Apostle Paul when he said, 1 Cor. I 6:11: "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit ye like men, be strong." How vastly appropriate and necessary is this important admonition, especially to us living in this closing harvest period, when the Great Chief Reaper is present among His people, and when the tares are being bound in bundles for the burning, and the true wheat gathered out, when the fiery trials are doing a refining work, separating the dross from the precious metal, when the Master is reckoning with His servants, and when the account of our stewardship is being rendered. 'What necessity, then, that we "watch," as children of the day, to be awake, alert, and on guard against the errors of the wicked, and those who would handle the Word deceitfully. Only as we, like the wise virgins, have our lamps trimmed and burning, and a goodly supply of oil available, can we hope to enter in at the "marriage supper." Is it not, then, that the words of our text must be viewed, and acted upon, in our Christian walk and effort to make our calling and election sure? Watchfulness, a strong faith, and strength of character, are surely essentials which combine to keep us well pleasing to God. Do we not often find that carelessness in regard to these requirements of the Christian faith have resulted in immature development? Does it not seem that many of the Lord's people, during this Laodicean period, are on this account making little progress, and, as babes in Christ, need to get back to, and look into, the first principles of the Word of God? How we all need continually to realise the increasingly difficult way before us this harvest time, with its varied besetments and trials, and earnestly be found going on to perfection, being rooted, grounded, and sealed, strong in the one true faith, steadfastly standing for the pure doctrine. and defending loyally, humbly, lovingly, yet firmly, every principle of God's Word, and holding fast the form of sound teaching. Only as we thus continue in those things which we have learned and been assured of in the school of Christ, will the true followers of the Master be kept from falling, as they Manifest courage. and a stout heart at this time, when many are not enduring sound doctrine, and will arise speaking perverse things, to draw away many adherents, having the same erroneous viewpoint.

We are reminded. too. in this connection, of the prophet Jeremiah's words in the ninth chapter, where he says.

"Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, nor the strong man in his strength, neither the rich in their riches, hut let him that glorieth, glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth Me, that I am the Lord, which exerciseth loving kindness, judgment, and righteousness in the earth." Surely Jehovah shall put down the high and lofty in their vain imaginations, and bring to naught everything that savours of fleshly wisdom and headiness, for "the proud in spirit arc an abomination unto Me," saith our God.

Shall we not strive, by the power of God's Holy Spirit, to ever have that humble, meek spirit which alone will be guided in judgment, and enable such to see the light in God's light? Only as we possess this spirit of a sound mind, shall we be able to rightly divide the Word of God, and endeavour at all times, in the proper spirit, to let our light shine, and wherever possible convince the gainsayers.

In conclusion, there is one aspect of this subject that is misunderstood amongst Christians, and generally accepted amongst nominal believers of various sects and denominations, and that is, in regard to numbers constituting a means of strength in the Church, and an evidence of Divine blessing and oversight. We well know that the Word of God speaks of a federation, and warns us of this tendency in Christendom, especially in these latter days, when on account of greatly diminished congregations and empty pews, the various denominations are deceived into believing that "unity is strength," and hope by this means to at last Christianise the world. How sad to think that many of the Lord's people, also, are being led to believe that an increased attendance, and additional membership in the classes, are sure signs of progress.

We are glad that the watchful Christian of strong character is not deceived regarding this entirely wrong viewpoint, but sees that the specific teaching of the Scriptures in this harvest period will particularly witness a great sifting amongst the Lord's people, as, one by one, the true saints pass beyond the veil. John 3:30 gives us to understand that the antitypical Elijah, or Church class, must increase (as each finishes his course and becomes joined to his Lord and Head), while the saints this side must decrease.

Other Scriptures surely indicate also that while many are called to be of this class, few will be chosen, and that in this evil day a thousand will be found falling at our side and ten thousand at our right hand, through not heeding sufficiently the instructions respecting their covenant of sacrifice, and through lack of those strong, zealous, and courageous characteristics, needful, in order that we may stand. Again, we hear the inspired Word applicable to these very last days of this Laodicean period of the Church's history. "Because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold," or more particularly, as in the Diaglott rendering: "Because vice shall abound, the love of the many will cool." Again, our Lord's words in Luke 18:8: "When the Son of Man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?" Surely these appropriate and highly significant verses imply that in the closing period of this harvest time, the one true faith will lie almost extinct. How careful we ought to be in realising that the "ultimate attaining" is not by might, nor by power, not by having a large membership in a class, with an indifferent, lukewarm spirit, but rather, just where the Lord's spirit is, and manifested, with that fervent zeal, love and boldness of purpose among the few here and there, who are intent only, and have that earnest desire to spend and be spent in the service of their Lord and the brethren. The dear isolate brethren take comfort, also the twos and threes scattered abroad- find consolation, in knowing that their God delights to meet with His people under any condition and circumstance in which they may be placed, and most assuredly will "that servant" gird Himself, and serve them with "meat in due season," as they hunger and thirst after the "true bread from heaven."

Then, shall we not, as the days go by, give greater diligence, and pray that we each and all may be found growing stronger in the Lord, and more courageous for the right, against the opposition from within and without, realising that we can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth us? Yes, "strengthened with might by His spirit in the inner man." "Wherefore, lift up the hands that hang down, and strengthen the feeble knees, and make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way, but let it rather be healed."

"Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom."

Stand up, stand up for Jesus,
Stand in His strength alone,
The arm of flesh will fail you,
Ye dare not trust your own.

Keep on the Gospel Armour,
And watching unto prayer,
When duty calls or danger,
Be never wanting there.

"Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit ye like men, be strong."

Correspondence

New Zealand, 23rd February, 1930. Dear Brother,

Christian Greetings.

It gives me great pleasure to send you a few lines regarding the recent visit of our dear Brother R. E. B. Nicholson to New Zealand.

It is about seven years since Bro. Nicholson's previous visit, and we have greatly longed for such a pilgrim visit, so you will understand how much we appreciated this privilege, and thank our Heavenly Father for the help and fellowship we enjoyed.

Our brother visited most of our brethren in both islands, except where distance and circumstances would not permit, and we rejoice to know that his services have been greatly appreciated. His kindly words of warning against the many deceptions which at the present time are trying and testing those who are endeavouring to preserve • their liberty in Christ, and hold fast to those things they are assured of, have strengthened and confirmed the brethren.

Whilst in Dunedin. Brother Nicholson gave a series of discourses and exhortations, which were most satisfying and upbuilding, so it was with heartfelt sorrow that we took leave of our helper, and we earnestly hope and pray that the Lord will abundantly bless him in his labour of love, and guide and direct his future work amongst those who are striving for the glorious prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus.

With Christian love to all the brethren of like precious , Your brother by His grace, S.N.

N.S.W., Feb., 1930. Dear Friends,—

I did not get by mail the "People's Paper" of this month, which I am always looking forward to, as often I feel out of sorts in my Christian life and I pick it up and find something that brightens me up.

Dear friends, I know my life here is short. I am over the allotted time, and during my life have had many trials, more so in Christian life. I have read and studied "Foregleams of the Golden Age." It is nice, and makes We feel happier, as I long to live the life of my dear Saviour and have faith to walk in His footsteps. I will close with Christian love. E.H.

DESCRIPTION of the Person of our Saviour.— The following was taken from a manuscript now in possession of Lord Kelly, and in his library, and was copied from an original letter of Publius Lencullus at Rome. It being the usual custom of Roman Governors to inform the Senate and people of such material things as happened in their provinces, in the days of Tiberus Caesar, Publius Lentullus, President of Judea, wrote the following epistle to the Senate concerning our Saviour:—”There appeared in these our days, a man of great virtue, named, Jesus Christ, who is yet living among us, and of the Gentiles is accepted for a Prophet of truth, but his own disciples call him the Son of God—he raiseth the dead and cureth all manner of diseases. A man of stature somewhat tall and comely, with .very reverend countenance, such as the beholders may both love and fear—his hair of the colour of chestnut full ripe, plain to the ears, whence downward, it is more orient and curling and wavering about his .shoulders. In the midst of his head is a -seam or partition in his hair, after the manner of the Nazarites. His forehead plain and very delicate; his face without spot or wrinkle, beautified with a lovely red ;• his nose and mouth ,;) formed as nothing can be reprehended; his beard thickish, in colour like his hair—not very long but forked; his look innocent and mature, his eyes grey, clear, and quick. In reproving he is terrible; in admonishing courteous -and fair spoken, pleasant in conversation, mixed with gravity. It cannot be remembered that any have seen him laugh, but many have-seen him weep. .In proportion of body, most excellent; his hands and .arms most delicate to behold. In speaking very. temperate, modest, and wise. A man, for his singular beauty, surpassing the children of men.”

Not merely the devoted followers of the Lord Jesus Christ have recognised His wisdom and grace, and noted that He was “filled with all the fullness of God,” hut even His opponents recognised Him as far beyond the ordinary of our race, as we read, “And all bare Him witness, and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of His mouth.” (Luke 4:22.) • Others. said, “Never man spake like this man.” (John 7:46.) And Pilate, loth to destroy the life of the noblest Jew he had ever seen. endeavoured, as a last resort, to placate the malevolence of the multitude, perceiving that it was instigated by the Scribes and Pharisees, who were envious and jealous of our Lord’s popularity. ;Pilate finally caused Jesus to be brought forth to face .His accusers, evidently with the thought that a look upon His- noble features would turn back their hatred and their malice. So presenting him, Pilate exclaimed, “Behold the Man !” with an emphasis on the words which is not apparent in our ‘English translation, unless • the word “the” be read with emphasis—”Behold the Man !” as though he would have said, “The man whom you are asking me to crucify is not only the Jew above all other Jews, but the - Man above all other men.” And it was concerning our Lord’s manhood that John declares, “The Logos was made flesh and we beheld His glory, the glory of . the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth”—John 1:14 ;

And in this connection let us remember the oft-quoted and well-known eulogy of “The Son of the Man,” and His Teachings; by Rousseau, the celebrated Frenchman, ‘as follows:-

“How petty are the books of the philosophers, with all their pomp, compared with the Gospels! Can it be that writings at once so sublime and so simple are the work of men? Can He whose life they tell be Himself no more than a man? Is there anything in His character of the enthusiast or the ambitious sectary? What sweetness, what purity in His ways, what touching grace in His teachings! What a loftiness in His maxims! What profound wisdom in His words! What presence of mind, what delicacy and aptness in His replies! What an empire over His passions! Where is the man, where is the sage, who knows how to act, to suffer, and to die, without weakness, without display? My friends, men do not invent like this; and the facts respecting Socrates, which no one doubts, are not so well attested as those ‘about -Jesus. Those Jews could never have struck this tone or thought of this morality. And the Gospel .has characteristics of truthfulness, so grand, so striking, so perfectly inimitable, that their inventors would be even more wonderful than He whom they portray.”

Surely the perfect man Christ Jesus, anointed with the spirit of the Highest, was so different from the imperfect race of which He took hold, for its redemption, that the world is certainly excusable for questioning whether He was not more than a man. Assuredly He was more, much more than a mere man—much more than a sinful man; He was separate from sinners, and, as a perfect man, was the very image and likeness of the invisible God.

Think .not thyself wholly left, although for a time I have sent thee some tribulation, or even have withdrawn thy desired comfort; for this is the way to the kingdom of Heaven. T.K.

FULL ASSURANCE OF FAITH.

“Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I shall dwell in the house of the Lord forever.”—
Psalm 23:6.

SAINT Paul speaks of the full assurance of hope and of full assurance of faith as being the proper conditions for the Lord's people. (Heb. 6:11; In:22.) And this is the thought expressed by the Prophet in our text—full confidence that he who has begun a good work in us is both able and willing to complete it. (Phil. 1:6,) But how few Christians, comparatively, have this full assurance of faith; how few can say, surely, undoubtedly, goodness and mercy shall follow me henceforth through life, and, by God's grace, I ultimately shall gain the heavenly kingdom and the glorious things which God has promised to them that love Him! The few who can enter fully into sympathy with the Apostle and Prophet in these expressions have therein a great !, • a great blessing, a great rest of heart which others do not possess. Let us, therefore, inquire why it is that the number who thus enter into the rest of faith is so small. What are the hindrances to the others, and how can those hindrances be removed, that a larger number of the Lord's people may enjoy their patrimony?

The hindrances are of two kinds: (1) Many who are on the Lord's side, and who have been greatly blessed of Him, and who have made considerable progress in the knowledge of the truth, and who are trusting in the merit of the Lord Jesus' sacrifice as the only hope of a future life, and who are thus justified, have, nevertheless, failed to take the second step necessary to their full induction into sonship in God's family and into joint-heirship with Christ to all the exceeding great and precious promises which extend only to those who become His sons. This step, essential to becoming sons and joint-heirs, is the purpose of full consecration—the full surrender of our own wills, including all the aims and objects and purposes of life, and including also all that we have in the way of time, influence, means, reputation, etc. Not having taken this step, not having taken up the cross to follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth, this large class very properly feels that it is questionable to what extent the Lord's promises, either for the life that now is or for the life that is to come; belong to them. In this they are right, for none of the 'promises, present or future, belong to them, nor to any, until they have come under the terms of a full selfsurrender—consecration—presenting their bodies, living sacrifices to God, holy, acceptable, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Our advice to these, then, is that, realising the situation, they no longer delay, but hasten at once to avail themselves of the greatest privilege that could possibly be offered, even by the Almighty. If they stand still they are, in the language of the Apostle, receiving the grace of God in vain—failing to use it. (2 Cor. 6:1.) God's grace, as freely bestowed upon those who have come to a knowledge of the redemption which is in Christ Jesus, is the grace of the forgiveness of sins, of justification through faith and the very object of this grace is to permit or qualify us to become living sacrifices, acceptable to God's altar through the great sacrifice of our Redeemer.

Whoever, therefore, shall advance thus far and know of his privilege, and yet refuse to present his little all, has failed to be constrained by the love of Christ, has failed to appreciate the divine favor bestowed upon him, and manifests this failure with his neglect to use his opportunities, by his neglect to sacrifice the imperfect fragment of this present life, that he might obtain in exchange the great prize of glory, honor and immortality, and joint heirship with Jesus in the kingdom; such receive God's grace in vain, profiting nothing by it over and above the world, which as yet lies in darkness and blindness.

What should such do? They should at once resolve that to render all they have to the Lord's service is not only a reasonable thing, but an offering far too small —far less than what they would like to render to Him who has manifested such compassion and grace towards us. And we should feel thus, even if there were no rewards attached to such a consecration of ourselves. But, inasmuch as God has attached great rewards and blessings, we should feel not only that a refusal to accept would be an indication of non-appreciation of divine mercy, but an indication also of a weakness of mind, Of judgment, which is unable to balance the trifling and transitory pleasures of self-will for a few short years, with an eternity of joy and blessing and glory, in harmony with the Lord.

And more than this, the consecrated are the only ones who really fully and truly enjoy this present life, for they indeed have a peace of heart which the world can neither give nor take away—a condition which all the world is coveting and seeking after, but finding not, because they seek it not in the Lord's way of full self-surrender to Him. We urge, then, upon the class now addressed, that they promptly make their covenant with the Lord, and thus become heirs of His good promises pertaining to the life that now is, and also of that which is to come, and that thus they lay the foundation for entering into "full assurance of the faith" and full assurance of the hope that God's mercy and goodness shall follow them all the days of the present life, and that they shall dwell in the heavenly home forever.

But amongst those who are real Christians, and who have made a full covenant of sacrifice unto the Lord, we find many who say, and more who think it without saying—"O that I could feel sure that God's goodness and mercy would continue with me all the days of my life, and that I should attain unto His kingdom ! O that I might have a full assurance of faith, a full assurance that I am accepted of the Lord, and that by His grace I shall ultimately be an overcomer!" What is the difficulty with this class? Why is it that these do not possess this full assurance of faith? We answer, that their difficulty is a lack of faith in God, and such a lack of faith is not pleasing to God, for "without faith it is impossible to please God." Such lack of faith, moreover, is a constant hindrance to their overcoming, as it is written, "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." The Christian who has not the shield of faith, and a large one, is continually at a disadvantage before the adversary. 11:6; 15:4,

What Must be done to overcome this lack of faith, and to have an increase of faith ? We answer that, like the Apostles of old, he should pray. "Lord, increase our faith." And then, acting in harmony with this prayer, each should cultivate faith in his own heart—(a) BY refreshing his memory continually with the divine promises, becoming very familiar with these in the Father's Word. (b) He should seek more and more to remember that, having made his covenant with the Lord, these promises are his, and in his heart and with his lips he should claim them, as he does before the Lord in prayer with thanksgiving. He should claim them as his in his own thoughts, and in his conferences on holy things with the brethren.

When trials or difficulties or perplexities arise, he should think of these promises, remembering that they belong to him—because God has promised them to such as love him who have made a covenant by self-sacrifice. (Psa. 50:5; Mal. 3:17.) He should resolve henceforth to trust the word of the heavenly Father implicitly. Thus, if some seeming accident befall him, let him call to his mind the promise that "All things work together for good to them that love God, to them that are called according to His purpose," and assure himself that the seeming accident did not have occurred had God not seen a way to make it the channel of a needed lesson or blessing. Let him refresh his mind with the thought that he comes under the provisions of this promise because he loves the Lord, and so loved Him as to make a full consecration of himself to Him thus he is assured that this promise was intended for him.

Let such also remember the language of the Apostle, that if God loved us while we were yet sinners, so that He provided for us the great salvation in Christ Jesus (our Lord, much more does He love us now, since we have been justified through faith in the great atonement, and have made a full consecration of ourselves to Him, and thus come under the terms of adoption into His family. Let him remember, too, that He who has begun the good work changes never, and that if our hearts are still in harmony with Him, if our faith is still clear and firm in the great atonement, if our consecration is still full and complete, so that we seek not our own wills but His will to be done in our affairs, then we may indeed have the full assurance of faith, because, knowing that God is unchangeable, and knowing that we are still in line with His promises and arrangements, we know that all of His gracious providences are still being exercised on our behalf. This is full assurance of faith—full confidence in the Lord.

It is possible, however, for the true Christian who has taken the step of justification and the step of consecration and adoption into God's family, and who has had the blessing of full assurance of faith—it is possible for such to lose this, if he become overcharged with the cares of this life, cold and indifferent as respects the Lord, His kingdom, His brethren, His cause, etc. Such, of course, should not have a full assurance of faith. God does not intend it for them, but rather intends that if we leave the proper, consecrated attitude we should also lose the joys and consolations which belong to it. And this is not merely as a retribution or punishment, but designed specially to awaken us to a realisation of what we are losing to the intent that such as have "lost their first love" may be revived, may renew their consecration vows, and thus return to the Lord, who will abundantly pardon and restore unto them the joys of His salvation.

So then, reviewing our text. we say that this assurance of faith (that God's goodness and mercy will follow us all the days of our lives, and that we shall ultimately, 'by His grace, attain to the kingdom) is for the class mentioned in this Psalm, namely, the hold's sheep—those who are following Him, and who are having the experiences outlined in this Psalm. One of these experiences is that following the Shepherd they are not left to hunger and thirst. but are bountifully supplied in the green pastures and by the still waters of the truth. Moreover, it applies to those who experience the Shepherd's care. His rod and staff, correcting. reproofing or guiding them. Such sheep as learn to love and have confidence in the Shepherd and in His guidance. and to take comfort and blessing out of all the afflictions and trials of life which may be permitted to come upon them, realising that they are providential, and for their Blessing—such continue to follow the Shepherd.. continue to have the experiences of sheep. and may rejoice with full assurance of faith that He who began the good work of shepherding- them and leading them out from the by-ways of sin and of selfishness into the full blessing of the heavenly kingdom will continue this work and complete it. if they abide in Him.

REST IN THE LORD.

Psalm 16:11.

A precious thought cloth come to us,
A precious thought that cheers,
And oft 'twill come to comfort us
And calm away our fears;

For tho' we tread our ways apart
In paths as yet unseen,
The Lord will watch in absent hours,
While love cloth flow between.

The Lord keep watch in heat and cold though we're linked by chains of gold.
Should precious friends be this thy part,
And my lot lonely be,

Or you at times are sad at heart,
And joy o'erflow for me,
We'll rest in His abiding care,
Let doubts be ever still;

The gladsome glades and. darksome dales
Are by His sovereign will;
Will flow the blessings of His love.

And though we tread our paths alone,
And thy road is not mine,
Yet coming to the altar throne
My soul shall meet with thine;

He'll keep us 'neath His holy wings,
He'll keep us ever near,
His love and power will be our shade
So we may never fear,

For God will watch—and thee and me
Will in the end His glory see!

ADELAIDE CONVENTION.

ONCE again the Easter Convention at Adelaide has Proved to be a season of rich spiritual refreshment and blessing. The friends of the Adelaide Class had been praying and watching for the Lord's blessing in connection with the arrangements for the meetings. and the general expression of opinion by those who attended the meetings was that this occasion, in respect to real helpful Christian fellowship, was quite equal to, if not better than. previous gatherings of a like nature.

The Memorial of our Saviour's death was kept on the (good Friday evening, and a blessing was realised as we once again observed the simple remembrance of our Lord's death for us. As we partook of the emblems of His broken body and shed blood, we realised once again the preciousness of the sacrifice of Jesus, and that all our hopes of life and blessing are centred in the fact that "Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures." We realised, too, what a great favour has been given to the members of the Body of Christ who have been invited tut follow ill their Master's footsteps, to share in His sufferings in the present time: and also to share in the honours of His Kingdom if faithful to their covenant of sacrifice to lie broken with Him.

The Convention meetings began on Easter Saturday. and a Bible Studs. 1 Thess. 5:16-25 proved to be an hour well spent. It was pleasing to note how the friends came along well equipped with appropriate Scripture references, the reading of which served to comfort and strengthen our hearts. The same thing could also be truly said of the two other Bible Studies which occupied the afternoon of Easter Sunday and Monday. A portion of Rom. 12 ch. was chosen; verses 9-15 being considered ,01 Sunday afternoon. and verses 16-21 claimed our attention on the Monday. This beautiful portion of Scripture seemed to he much appreciated by those attending these meetings. The spirit of brotherly love was manifest in a very marked degree, showing that the heart's desire of the brethren is to attain to the mark of perfect love in all its various features of kindness. patience, meekness. gentleness. lowliness. etc. It was a pleasure to have with us some brethren from Melbourne, Victoria and New South Wales, as well as some from nearby country districts. It had been arranged to spend the Easter Monday with the Gawler Class. and as some from that class had visited us (01 the Sunday, a goodly number of the Adelaide friends took advantage of the opportunity to return the visit, and very happy time of spiritual refreshment and blessing was realised on the last day of the Convention—Easter Monday.

A Praise and Testimony Meeting, a discussion on "What Is a True Christian?" and addresses on "Stand Fast," "Watchfulness," "Walk as Children of Light." and "The Hidden Life with Christ," gave additional interest to the meetings, which concluded with the Love Feast, at which the friends bade each other good-bye with hearty hand-shakes and good wishes, and the singing of those well-known and beautiful old hymns. "Blest be the Tie That Binds our Hearts in Christian Love," and "God be With You Till We Meet Again." It should also have been mentioned that to those classes and friends who had kindly thought of us by sending messages of Christian love and Scripture greetings, the same was returned, and Rom. 12:9-12 was the passage of Scripture chosen by this Convention as a greeting to our brethren in Christ. who had remembered us in thought and prayer on this very happy occasion.

MEMORIAL SERVICE.

The Melbourne friends gathered at 45 (1 Little Collins Street) on Saturday evening, April 12th, to celebrate the anniversary of our Lord's Death. Several visiting brethren from other parts also partook of the emblems, and a very helpful and encouraging service it proved to be. No doubt, all present sincerely and earnestly desired to continue faithful to their Lord and to lead by giving utterance to their covenant of sacrifice, to be broken with Him, as they would seek to fill up that which is behind of the sufferings of the Anointed One.

We have pleasure in stating that the address of that evening will appear in our next issue, and trust that it will be helpful to others also.

Question Box.

Question.—Is there any reason for supposing that the saints during the approaching age cannot or will not reveal themselves visibly to mankind? If not, how will the world know them individually, if they are forever concealed from view?

Answer.—There would seem to be the same reasons for believing that the overcoming saints who are to sit with Christ in His throne, will be seen no more by the world, as there are respecting our Lord, who said, "Henceforth the world seeth Me no more." Such is Paul's reasoning (2 Cor. 5:16, 17). "Wherefore henceforth know we no man after the flesh; yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we Him no more." The only ones promised to see Jesus are those "new creatures," of whom I John 3:2 writes, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be (like), but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is." Paul had a glimpse of the glorified Jesus and was blinded by the sight, it was more gloriously bright than the sun at noonday. He says it was as though he had been born before the time—as those he had been resurrected, and, the Lord "as He is." "Who, being the brightness of His glory and the express image of His person upholding all things by the word of His power, when he had by Himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high." (Heb. 1:3.) Our Lord has been highly exalted, and has received the divine nature — immortality—and the Church are promised this same wonderful reward. God has not been seen by any human eye, and there is no reason to think that our Lord since His glorification will be, nor is there any indication that the Bridle of Christ will either. The Scripture, which reads, "And every eye shall see Him," refers to the eye of faith and intellectual discernment, just as in many other Scriptures, such as, "We see Jesus made a little lower than the angels, etc." (Job. 2:9), and "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." (Matt. 5:8). As for the second question: "There has never been occasion for Jehovah to appear to man, yet He spoke and was recognised by our first parents in the Garden of Eden. There would seem to be no reason for Christ or the Bridle to appear. They yielded human nature up as a sacrifice with all its relationships, and any communications necessary would be likely to be carried out by the great multitude which serves before the throne. However, such questions are not vital matters, and we know that whatever may be, the Divine arrangement will be perfect, and all His creatures in heaven or on earth will find complete satisfaction and enjoyment.

Correspondence

Queensland. 1930. Dear Brother:—

Loving greetings in our dear Redeemer's name. thank you for your letter, and also for volume 1 of Revelation by the same mail.

Re your remarks in regard to some becoming heady. To my mind it shows a lack of God's holy spirit, or else one does not realise one's own nothingness, and realise something of the infinite grandeur of the living God. Even a study of nature or any branch of natural science ought to keep one humble. The whole trouble seems to come from the error of comparing oneself with other poor members of the fallen race. instead of keeping one's gaze on our one perfect pattern, the Lord Jesus Christ. We must lie humble to get spiritual knowledge, and in my observation of men I find those who are proud in their own conceit, are not open minded enough to learn anything hardly.

I early learnt from the Scriptures that "God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble." My own experience has been a good illustration of it. ' two eldest brothers were good athletes, cricketers, etc., and when I was thirteen I won nearly all the prizes at local sports. The night after the sports I prayed most earnestly that God would keep me humble! He did in a way that I did not realise till years afterwards. MY health got very poor, so I did no good at sports after. Now I call see if I had retained good health I probably may have become 0 champion runner, but suffering ill body may have made me seek the Heavenly things. with the careful instruction of my dear mother. who was an earnest, consecrated Christian. So my loving Heavenly Father drew me that way and showed ire a far better race to run. even for the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus.

I thank you, clear Brother. for your kind thoughts. which are mutual, and for all the brethren in Christ our all.

With much Christian love, from your brother in the glorious hope of our calling. H. A. J.

Dear Predict in Christ:—

I wish to write and thank you for the "People's Paper" being duly received, and to tell you of my appreciation of its articles on Bible subjects.

The stand you have taken on the manner of our Lord's return seems most appropriate at this time, and may you still closely follow the Lord's guidance along truly Scriptural lines.

Here a few of us will observe the memorial of our Lord's death for us, and the whole world of mankind: our high privilege also of being counted in His secondary sacrifice. filling up what is behind of the suffering of Christ.

Praying the Lord's rich blessing on the work of lifting up a standard for the truth.

Your Brother in the Church's One Hope,

D. R. J.

Victoria. April, 1930.

Dear Brother, Christian Greetings.

It is now so long ago since I intended to send for the "Foregleams," and as things have not improved am% I will not send for the little books for the present. but will wait till conditions improve, if "God sees good." and I will send this little donation for the Tract. Fund. or where it may be needed. in His service.

Easter is now nigh at hand. and the observance of the great Memorial. Dav all who partake realise the solemnity of the keeping of it. and what it means to us. Surely we would benefit spiritually if we do our best and humbly look up to our Lord for guidance and strength. I should love to be there. too. but as it cannot be. I will endeavour to keep it here with faith bridging the distance between.

God's richest blessing be with you all.

With Christian love to all the brethren of like precious faith, From Your Sister by Grace. K.E.

The Second Presence of Christ.

We still have for further consideration the Lord's parables, "The Tares" and the "Ten Virgins," as indicating the work of gathering the saints out of all the systems of error during the second presence of Christ; and it will be noticed that in neither parable does the separation begin before the Lord has come.

All ten virgins were pure ones, they were Christians, they were interested in the Lord's Return, they had all gone out to meet Him. That does not mean that they had gone to any particular place to meet the Lord, but they had their minds exercised in the study of the Bible; they were watching. They, no doubt, represent those who in Miller's day and since have been "looking for I-Us Coming." There are two classes mentioned, wise and foolish, and evidently such trials or tests which the Lord permitted, through the misunderstanding of truth in 1844, and many others since that time, are for the very purpose of separating the wise from the foolish. Some get discouraged through these tests, and lose heart and become drowsy, and some seem also to have excitable dreams, and are led away by vain fancies and imaginations. What light they started out with flickers and dies, and they have no oil in their vessels, they are short of the Holy Spirit in their hearts to "guide them into all truth, and teach them things to come." Ultimately they appear to secure oil for their lamps, but too late to enter the marriage chamber. The door had been closed, the elect had been completed, the Bride had made herself ready and entered the joys of her Lord.

It is not for us to try and discern to which class any one may belong, but it is the part of wisdom for us each to examine our hearts and see that we have "oil in our vessels." We may gain a good deal of intellectual knowledge and discern something of the trend of events so that we may be expectant, even go out to meet the Bridegroom, and yet be sadly short of the Holy Spirit. It is not sufficient that we have been begotten of the spirit; we are leaky vessels, and need continual refilling.

This is the principal work we have to do; without it we shall be failures. If we have the Holy Spirit in our hearts, the Word of God, being prayerfully studied, will surely shine clearer and clearer, and reveal the presence of the Bridegroom. Not only so, but the fruits of God's Holy Spirit in our hearts will be manifest in our lives, in love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance. (Gal. 5:22-23.) Or as Peter (2 Pet. 1:5-11) puts it, "Add to your faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and love. . . . If ye do these things ye shall never fall. For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting Kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

WHY HE KNOCKETH.

"When He cometh and knocketh they may open unto Him immediately."—Luke 12:36.

From the Parable of the Young Nobleman, also that of the Wedding Garment (Matt. 22), and from Luke 12:37-48 and other Scriptures, it would appear to be manifest that the Lord would be present, judging among His people and otherwise preparing for the establishment of His Kingdom. while yet unknown to the world. He would bring to a conclusion the work of the Gospel Age, separating the "wheat from the tares," and finally gathering the perfect body of Christ, the full number of His elect, the fact of His presence being known only to those watching and listening for His “knock.” It is to such that He has promised to “gird Himself and make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them.”

This feast is a spiritual one, and indicates that the Lord “will bring forth things new and old” out of the store house. And the promise is that those watchers who are themselves refreshed by the truths specially revealed by the Lord when He has returned, are to be engaged in the service of providing these “things new and old” out of the store house, to all who are faithfully watching, to such as have ears to hear. And the Lord said, “Who then is that faithful and wise steward, whom his lord shall make ruler over his household, to give them their portion of meat in due season. Blessed is that servant whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing. a truth I say unto you that he will make him ruler over all that he Bath.”—Luke 12:42-44.

This spiritual feast appears to be what was indicated by the 1335 days of Daniel, “Blessed is he that Nvaiteth and cometh to the 1335 days.”—Daniel 12:12.

In this 12th of Daniel, three periods are particularly mentioned 1260 days (time, times and a half) , 1290 days, and 1335—which are to be counted from the setting up of the desolating abomination, and the taking away of the continual sacrifice. This event would appear to be about 539 A.D., when both items mentioned in Daniel 12:11 became facts. Papacy assumed civil control, and the mass was instituted, as though the all-sufficient sacrifice of Christ, offered “once for all,” was not completely satisfactory and all availing. These three periods appear to terminate respectively 1795-99, 1825-29, and 1874. The 1260 days or years reaching to 1795-1799 marked the time when the Papal power, which had so long trodden down the saints of the Most High, was broken, and the Pope was taken prisoner by Napoleon and carried to France. Thus the saints of God were relieved from Papal persecutions. With the greater liberty, the truth of God’s word began to shine, Bible Societies sprang into existence, and the work of cleansing the sanctuary went forward. The great Reformation under Zwingli, Ecolampadius, Melancthon and Luther had started the cleansing by rebuking the abuses and errors of Rome. Wesley had followed in preaching faith and true holiness. Sanctification was his chief theme. By 1825 there was the Campbellite or Church of Christ movement, also the Millerite movement, which awakened the Christian world to great expectations regarding the Lord’s return. A clear understanding of the doctrine of the ransom seems to have been attained, and a class has ever since 1846 been separated from the nominal churches.

It would seem to be about 1825-29 that the preaching respecting the Lord’s return drew together those who “loved His appearing.” It was as though the Parable of the Ten Virgins there had the commencement of its fulfilment, as already stated.

Ever since that time God’s watching people have been permitted to have experiences which have proved and tested their faith, and evidently divided class from class.

The great “shout” or proclamation which was promised has been accomplishing its purpose, and calling out those who “have ears to hear” to go forth to meet the Bridegroom. Then even among those who are represented as ten virgins there have been experiences which have no doubt been the means of demonstrating to which class each watcher belongs, the “five wise” or the “five foolish” virgins. The whole ten virgins represent Christians—pure ones—justified, cleansed by the precious blood of Christ. Not only are all Christians, but all are interested in the Lord’s return. They desire to meet Him and have some knowledge about His coming, yet there is a difference among them; five are wise. having not only a knowledge of God’s Word, “the lamp to our feet,” but they have a good supply of oil in their hearts and minds; these could readily adjust their minds and hearts to an appreciation of events and recognise the “signs of His presence,” and so enter into the joys of the near approach of the Kingdom, and enjoy the feast which the Lord had promised to prepare for those whom He would find faithfully watching.

The five foolish lack the supply of oil in their vessels, are short of the Holy Spirit in their hearts, and, therefore, have not the appreciation of events or a Scriptural understanding of the signs of the Lord’s presence, and, therefore, fail to enter into the feast. This first test of the. Harvest time soon came. Mr. Miller had predicted the second presence in 1844, and expected the Lord to come with “outward show” and to be seen by all. It was evidently expected that our Lord would appear with a human body instead of as He had said, “the Son of Man cometh not with outward show,” but “in power and great glory, and all the holy angels with Him.” They had overlooked the fact that Jesus was “put to death flesh, but quickened spirit,” that “flesh and blood (human nature) cannot inherit the Kingdom of God.” that “though we have known Christ (-• the Apostle) after the flesh, henceforth know we Him no more.” and that even the apostle John was ignorant of what our Lord was like in the glorified condition. “We know not what we shall be like, but we know that. when He shall appear we shall be like Him, and see Him as He is.” (1 John 3:2.) So the Christians of this Millerite movement suffered a great disappointment, which began the operation under the Lord's providence of separating the two classes of virgins. This was the commencement of the Harvest work, beginning first among the Lord's own consecrated people.

THE HARVEST AT FIRST ADVENT

There were evidently similar testings in our Lord's earthly sojourn, which was during the Harvest time of the Jewish Age.

It was the message that a new Age was about to open, and that Messiah had come, which at once separated the "Israelites indeed" from the nominal system. Then, as our Lord began to speak of the way of the Cross, of taking up the Cross and denying oneself, some withdrew; and when He talked of giving His flesh for the life of the world it was a stumble to some. "Then a question arose about whether Christ could come out of Gallilee. 'Hath not the Scriptures said that Christ cometh of the seed of David, and out of the town of Bethlehem, where David was, and so there was a division among the people because of Him.'" (John 7:41-43.) "Some said He is a good man, and others say, but lie deceiveth 01.2 people." (John 7:12.)

On another occasion when He spoke about "Whoso eateth My flesh and drinketh My blood bath eternal life," etc., we read that many therefore of His disciples, when they heard this, said, "This is a hard saying, who can hear it." And "from that time many of His disciples went back and walked no more with Him." (John 6:41-67.)

Thus it was that there were such truths sent out and such conditions permitted as would separate the wheat from the chaff. While the wheat was gathered into the Gospel Garner, the chaff was tied more tightly, in sectarian bundles, ready to be burned at the conclusion of the Harvest time, in the destruction of Jerusalem A.D. 70.

In the Parable of the Wheat and the Tares (Matt. 13:24-30), the Lord indicated that there would be a similar Harvest time at the end of this Gospel Age. He says, "Let both grow together until the Harvest" (elsewhere He explains "the Harvest is the end of the Age"). "And in the time of Harvest I will say to the reapers, 'Gather ye together first the tares and bind them in bundles to burn them, but gather the wheat into My barn.'" "

PRESENT DAY HARVEST EXPERT EXPERIENCES

Ever since the Millerite movement there have been just such experiences and proclamations of truths which have separated those who "have ears to hear" any news of the Bridegroom's Coming, and who "love His appearing Kingdom." Strong truths have been permitted to come to God's people, and discussions and disputings have clone their work. Sometimes it has been trivial personalities which have led astray. Sometimes differences on matters of order or on truths which are not vital have turned some away, and what light they possessed has become darkened and their spirit has become bitter, and, finally, they have seemed to lose faith and hope, and the light that was in them has become darkness. Very generally the difference of thought is not so much the cause of separations as the wrong spirit that is engendered in the discussions. Thus the lack of oil in the vessel is indicated. Sometimes it may be that more important truths have caused divisions, and sometimes error has been made to look like truth. "Light has been put for darkness, and darkness for light."

The Lord foretold that there would be such delusions and sections, saying "Many false prophets (teachers) shall arise and deceive many" (Matt. 24:4, 5, 11, and 24). "In so much that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect." The whole matter depends upon our having "oil in the vessels," i.e., the Holy Spirit in our hearts and earnestly seeking the guidance of God's Word, which is the lamp to our feet.

We would note that all this Harvest work is to take place after the Lord of the Harvest has arrived and also before the great time of trouble, when "The fire of the Lord's jealousy shall devour the whole earth" (Zeph. 3:8-9), in which the bundles of tares are to be destroyed.

The indication also is that, prior to this burning, the "elect" shall have been gathered home to lie with the Lord in the heavens.

Another parable found in Matt. 22:1-14 seems to take in the whole Gospel Age from the time the Gospel feast was prepared. John had introduced the Bridegroom (John 3:29), who had come to purchase His bride. The feast was spread, the fatlings, the antitype of the bullock (Lev. 16) and other types was slain; then the feast was ready.

The invitation was first to the leaders of Israel; few came, then the invitation was extended finally to all nations. Then the King comes in, the Lord returns, and the first thing He does is to inspect the guests. All who have entered the guest chamber have accepted the wedding garment, and therefore the Lord's query, "How tamest thou in hither not having a wedding garment?" This denotes that some even after being justified by faith and entering the Christian way, would, through one cause or another, lose faith, and trust in their own "filthy rags" as righteousness. They became agnostics, and are cast out of the Gospel favour and go into outer darkness.

Thus it would appear that the Scriptures indicate a progressiveness respecting the second advent of Christ. There is first the winding up of the work of the Gospel Age, preparatory to the opening up of the Kingdom Age. The Church must be all complete, the dead in Christ shall rise first, then those that remain are 'to complete their course and be also caught away at the moment of death, to be with the Lord in the air. (1 Thess. 4:17.) The present "prince of the power of the air" will be dethroned and bound, along with all his evil spirits, the wicked angels who have been operating in Spiritism. Spiritism will not be able to operate when the Kingdom of Christ is established.

So long as Satan's power in the earth abounds, so long as the evil spirits which have been operating with him since Noah's days can deceive humanity by personating departed friends, through mediums, called witches in olden days, in the seances and by other means in Christendom, and by medicine men, Devil priests, etc., in heathen lands, we may know that Christ's kingdom has not been set up. Probably the cessation of these evil practice, by the "angels that left their own habitation" (Jude 6; 2 Pet. 2:4), will be one of the first evidences that Christ has taken to Himself His great power and commenced His reign on the earth.

The Bible teaching respecting the second presence of Christ and the work which He will first perform at His return has been somewhat hidden through a poor translation of the Greek word "parousia" in the New Testament.

THE WORD "PAROUSIA"

The word occurs in the following texts, and in each case it should be properly translated "presence," not "coming"

Matt. 24:3—"What shall be the sign of thy 'presence?' "

Matt. 24:27, 37, 39—"So shall also the 'presence' of the Son of Man be."

1 Cor. 15:23—"They that are Christ's at His 'presence.' "

1 Thess. 2:19—"What is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not ever ye, presented before our Lord Jesus Christ at His 'presence.' "

1 Thess. 3:13—"That He may establish your hearts unblamable in holiness before God, even our Father at the 'presence' of our Lord Jesus Christ."

1 Thess. 4:15—"A which are alive and remain unto the 'presence' of the Lord, shall not precede them which are asleep."

1 Thess. 5:23—"Be preserved blameless unto the 'presence' of our Lord Jesus Christ."

2 Thess. 2:1—"Now we beseech you, brethren, by (respecting) the 'presence' of our Lord Jesus Christ, and our gathering unto Him."

2 Thess. 2:8 (see Rev. Ver.)—"Then shall be revealed the lawless one, whom the Lord Jesus shall slay with the breath of His mouth, and bring to naught by the manifestation (epiphania) of His 'presence.' "

Jas. 5:8—"Be ye also patient, stablish your hearts for the 'presence' of the Lord draweth nigh."

Jas. 5:7—"Be patient, therefore, brethren, unto the 'presence' of the Lord."

2 Pet. 3:3, 4—"There shall come in the last days scoffers walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of His 'presence'?"

The word "parousia" is twice properly translated "presence" in 2 Cor. 10:10 and Phil. 2:12. These two instances clearly demonstrate that the word "parousia" has the same meaning as is correctly translated by our English word

.”presence.” Some have suggested that “parousia” mean; “arrival” or “drawing near,” but how absurd it would be to say that Paul’s “bodily arrival is weak” or to say “beloved as ye have always believed, not as at my arrival only but now much more in my absence.”

It should be evident to any unbiassed mind that the general meaning of the word is presence, and when so tram ‘ fed we find there is a harmony and clearness in the New Testament teaching concerning the Lord’s second presence. EPIPHANIA.

Another Greek word used in connection with our Lord’s second presence is “epiphania,” which signifies “brightness” or “manifestation.” It is rendered “appearing” and “brightness” as in the following instances:-1 Tim. 6:14. “Keep this commandment without spot, until the ‘appearing’ of our Lord.”

2 Tim. 4:1—“I charge thee therefore before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at His ‘appearing’ and Kingdom.”

2 Tim. 4:8—“There is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord the righteous judge shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but to all them that love His ‘appearing.’ “

Titus 2:13—“Looking for that blessed hope and the glorious ‘appearing’ of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ.”

Published by the Berean Biblical Institute, National Bank Chambers, Glenferrie

2 Thess. 2:8—“Then shall the wicked one be exposed whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of His mouth, and shall destroy with the ‘brightness’ (epiphania or bright shining) of His presence.”

APOKALUPSIS.

The Greek words apokalupsis and apokalupto, which are also used in respect of the coming of the Lord. signify uncovering or unveiling (as of something previously present but hidden). Apokalupsis is rendered “revealed,” “revelation,” “appearing,” “coming” and “manifestation,” in the following texts which refer to the Lord’s second presence, power and glory, as these shall be made known—uncovered or revealed to the world.

2 Thess. 1:7, 8—“The Lord Jesus shall be ‘revealed’ from heaven. . .”

Rom. 8:19—“For the earliest expectation of the creature waiteth for the ‘manifestation’ of the sons of God.”

Luke 17:29-30—“Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of Man is revealed.” That is to say, that as soon as the Church has all been taken to be with the Lord, the Son of Man will be revealed to the world in the fiery time of trouble, as the Judge of mankind, who had already been present for some time dealing with His Church, sealing and gathering His elect from the four corners of the earth.

Other texts where this word occurs are:—Rom. 8:18; 1 Pet. 4:13; 1 Pet. 1:4, 5; 1 Cor. 3:13; 1 Cor. .1:7 (trans.: “coming”); 1 Pet. 1:7 and 1 Pet. 1:13. “Hope to the end for the grace that shall be brought unto you at the ‘revelation’ of Jesus Christ.”

Thus it seems that the Lord first comes as a thief, and is unknown to the world or even to most Christians. He makes His presence gradually known to the watchers, and those hear His “knock.” Gradually His presence is more and more revealed, and finally there will be the manifestation, the demonstration of His presence in the fiery judgment, in which the present world systems, religious, social and political, will be consumed in preparation for the bringing in of the better day of righteousness and peace tunder the Kingdom for which we have so long prayed, “Thy Kingdom come. Thy will be clone on earth as it is done in heaven.”

THE SECOND PRESENCE OF CHRIST:

THERE are some Scriptures which are used to teach contrary to what has been stated in these articles in the last three issues of this paper, but which we believe will be found to be in harmony therewith when carefully examined. For instance, Acts 1:11, "This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven." The apostle Peter (1 Pet. 3:18) informs us plainly that our Lord was "put to death flesh but quickened spirit," which is in harmony with St. Paul's statement "sown a natural body, raised a spiritual body." So then our Lord at His ascension was no longer human, but spirit, and after His ascension was exalted to the Divine nature "in the express image of the 'Father.'" He had, on a few occasions after His resurrection, assumed the human form so as to be seen by and to converse with the disciples, who were to be witnesses to the fact of His resurrection. Acts 1:9 reads, "And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, He was 'taken up, and a cloud received Him .out of their sight.'" The eleventh verse does not promise that anyone will see our Lord return, it simply says that He will come again in like manner as He went. 'The cloud that received Him, then, may symbolise the same thing that the Lord indicated when He said, "Ye shall .see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." (Matt. 24:30.) That' is, that clouds, in symbolic scriptural language, -indicates trouble, distress or calamities, and Daniel informs us . (Dan. 12:1) that when Michael (Christ). stands up there is. to be the greatest time of trouble ever experienced. The evangelist Luke, quoting the same words .as Matt. 24:30,. adds, 21:27-28, 'when these things, begin to come to pass look up, and lift up your heads, for your redemption. (or deliverance) draweth nigh.'" If it -were, as some ,think, that our Lord will suddenly appear .sitting on a cloud, there be no waiting for the deliverance soon to be, for they would according to their understanding be instantly caught away to be with the Lord. The meaning seems clearly to be that the clouds of trouble will encircle the earth, and the watchers will be able to discern. in. the severe experiences of the world, that it is the sign "of the presence of the Son of Man," who is to come and take control of the world. He will command .."Peace be still" (Psalm 46), and then cause "righteousness and truth to spring out of the earth." They shall discern the Son of Man in the clouds • in the same way that we can discern Satan in all the wickedness now in the world and in all the false religions of our day.

It is in this way that ultimately "every .eye shall .see Him." (Rev. 1:7.)

EARTH'S NEW RULER.

Satan has long been "The prince of this world," "The prince of the power of the air,"^ "The god of this world who now worketh in the children of disobedience." (2 Cor. 4:4; Ephes. 2:2.) He has been permitted thus to reign and bring experiences to mankind so that' they may learn what it is to be disobedient to God's laws. Christ comes to hind Satan, and to take the Kingdom instead. ..He will deliver mankind from bondage to Satan, sin and death. As no one sees Satan, who is a Spiritual being, so the world will not see the new Ruler, who has distinctly said, "The world seeth Me no more." (John 14:19.) The 'Church will see Him, for they -are to be changed to be "like Him," spirit beings.

It is when we see matters in this light that the Scriptures become so much clearer and truths respecting our Lord's second presence open up.

In the 24th of Matthew we have in symbolic a language a history of the Gospel Age, terminating with the second presence of Christ. The same history, with more detail, is given in the Book of Revelation, also in symbols.

The disciples being impressed by the Lord's doings and sayings respecting the Temple a few days before His death, asked Him, Matt. 24:3, "Tell us when shall these things be, and what shall be the sign of Thy presence (Greek, parousia) and of the end of the world (Age)."

Verses 4-14 seem to be a brief synopsis of the Gospel Age, from that time down to the end. It is an outline of prophecy which has been very clearly fulfilled, as history reveals. What deceptions there have been in connection with the Christian religion. What great claims have been made to great authority, even to be Christ. What wars and unrest, what famines, pestilences, scourges, and the people of God have been martyred and tortured. Nation has risen against nation.

Verse 14: "And this Gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come."

The Gospel is the good news of Christ's Kingdom for the blessing of all the families of the earth. It has now been preached in every land to every nation and almost every dialect, so that we are surely living in the "time of the end."

Verses 15-22 appear to be so worded that they answer that portion of the question relating to the typical temple and Jerusalem and gave instructions to such as had "ears to hear," which saved many lives when the city was taken by Titus's army. Josephus points out that. "The fall of the city seemed imminent about A.D. 68, but for some reason the Roman Army was recalled, and so Christians made good their escape. Only two years later the city fell amidst the greatest slaughter that had ever been up to that time. That, however, was only a partial fulfilment of the prophecy which is to be fulfilled on a larger scale at the end of this Age, in the destruction of the great systems of Christendom.

Verses 23-27 speak of the presence of Christ, and show that He will not again appear as a man, that they could say "He is in the desert," or that He is in some secret room. If anyone should tell us that He is here or there, that He can be located anywhere, then we are not to believe them. The presence will be everywhere just like the sunshine that comes from the east unto the west. The word "lightning," used in the authorised version, allows of a wrong thought, and has misled many to think that the Lord will come like "lightning," which stays not a moment. The Greek word means "bright shining," and is so translated in Luke 11:36. It is used in Revelations for lightnings, but it undoubtedly here refers to the "bright shining" of the Sun of Righteousness. It is a beautiful illustration of the presence of Christ. "Chose awake and watching may see the glories of the rising sun for some time, even before it rises above the horizon. How it dispels the gloom and darkness just as the Sun of Righteousness arising will disperse the dark night of sin and sorrow, of superstition and error, and bring healing in its wings. (Mal. 4:2.)

Thus the Lord would guard us from the many deceptions which were to be, and undoubtedly are, prevalent in this our day. The question of the disciples was: "What shall be the sign of Thy 'parousia,' presence?" —not a sign of His arrival and departure, like the lightning. The Lord adds, "So also shall the presence of the Son of Man be." Lightning has no presence: it is simply a flash and gone.

Verse 28 indicates that there is to be a feast just as eagles or carrions feed upon flesh, so those who hunger and thirst after righteousness and truth will be found where the food is (see again Luke 12:37; Rev. 3:20).

Verses 29-31 seem to refer to the tribulation of God's people during the dark days of Papal persecution and martyrdom foretold by Daniel 7:25.

This great desolating power received its deadly wound by Napoleon. Its power to "tread down the saints" was broken in 1799. There have been the literal demonstrations, in the literal heavens in the notable dark days of May 19, 1780 (sun darkened), and in the wonderful showers of falling stars of November 13, 1833, as though to draw attention to the more important fulfilment of this prophecy in the fact that the Gospel light has been darkened by false teachings, such as Evolution, Higher Criticism, etc., and that the clear shining of the writings of the apostles, the twelve stars, has been beclouded by destructive heresies. Then the powers of the heavens (the religious systems) shall be shaken. There has now been a general disintegrating process at work throughout Christendom. When we see such processes at work, we may take that as a sign of His presence. This is in line with our Lord's parable, "Let both (wheat and tares) grow together until the harvest" (the end of the Age). when He would send His messengers to gather the tares in bundles to burn them, and to garner the wheat. The trumpet would refer to the proclamation of truth by which the separation would take place. Then will come the great time of trouble, "all the tribes of earth shall mourn."

Verses 32-35 give another sign, this one on earth. The separating of the wheat from the tares is a work in the “heavens,” the religious world. The sign of the fig tree budding is of the earth, and refers to the nation of Israel, which must again come into Divine favour. Surely Israel’s hopes are budding again. When ye shall see all these things know that it is near. The generation seeing all these signs of Christ’s presence shall not pass until the great trouble has occurred, and the Kingdom of righteousness and peace has been established,

Verses 36-39. These verses clearly indicate that just as Noah was a preacher of righteousness for 120 years before the Flood, so Christ would be present for some time before the great calamity which is to destroy the world systems of this evil day. Noah preached and warned, but they went on with their own selfish pursuits, regardless of the message. They “knew not.”

2 Pet. 3:3-7, 10, 12, 13 foretell similar conditions, and are not these conditions with us to-day? Luke 17:26-30 also mentions the conditions in Sodom and Gomorrah, and they also refused the message in the days of Lot, and both Matthew and Luke state that “as it was in the days of Noah,” and “in the days of Lot,” so also shall it be in the days of the Son of Man. Thus the Scriptures clearly declare that Christ would be present for some time prior to the great calamity, although only the watchers would know of His presence. All others, as in the time of Noah and Lot, are not to know.

The important thing is to watch, for no one should know the day nor the hour of the Lord’s arrival, nor of the actual time when the great time of trouble will overwhelm the world.

The Lord did not inform the disciples so that the Church might fix dates for future events. In answer to the “when shall these things be?” He simply has given the signs of His presence and told us to “watch,” so that we may discern His presence when He has come. Then we may enter the feast of spiritual things which He has promised to His waiting people, and may be gradually called away to be with the “Lord in the air.”

Before He will set up His Kingdom He will gather His elect from the four winds of heaven. Then the saints are to share the glorious work of that Kingdom of peace. Satan, however, must first be bound, and the Church are to have something to do in this connection, for the promise is, “The God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly.” Then, the time of trouble over, the Prince of Peace shall reign from shore to shore, and the prayer be answered, “Thy Kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven.” (Rev. 21:1-4.)

Following this highly figurative statement of prophecy in answer to the disciple’s question respecting His second presence, the Lord gives three illustrative parables which indicate progressive conditions and work that will occupy Him on His return.

The “Ten Virgins” parable shows the proper attitude of the watching Christians, and how some will fail.

The Parable of the “Talents” shows how the Lord will have a work to do among Christians, in winding up the affairs of the Gospel Age, completing the number of God’s elect.

The Parable of “The Sheep and the Goats” then follows, showing the work of the Kingdom Age, when the Church, with Christ, are to judge the world during that thousand years’ reign (1 Cor. 6:2). Matt. 25:31 very distinctly informs us that the parable is applicable to that time. “Then shall He sit upon the throne of His glory, and before Him shall be gathered all nations, and He shall separate one from another.”

For nearly 1900 years God has been judging and selecting the Church, for the “High calling in Christ Jesus.” During that thousand years’ reign of Christ the whole world will have the advantage of the judgments of the Lord, and Isaiah 26:9 states that “when Thy judgments are abroad in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness.” (Psalm 22:27-28.)

Those rightly exercised by the favourable conditions of that time of blessing (Psalm 72; Isaiah 35) will develop hearts of love and care for their fellows, but others of the goat nature will not respond, but will think only of their own selfish ease and pleasure.

The righteous do kindness by nature without thinking of it, the unrighteous never think of doing kindness that will involve any cost or sacrifice. Eternal life is only designed for such as become righteous, such as are restored to “the image and likeness of God,” lost by the First Adam, but restored to all the willing and obedient by the Second Adam. Time and space would fail to tell of the blessing of that glorious Kingdom of Christ. No wonder the angels sang “Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace and goodwill towards men,” and said, “Behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people.”

The righteous receive eternal life and enter into the Kingdom “prepared for them from the foundations of the world”—Paradise—the earthly home. The wicked are cut off for ever. They have been redeemed from the Adamic sentence of death by the Cross of Christ, but have again incurred the death penalty—the second death from which there is no redemption—it will be an everlasting punishment. The Greek word signifies a “cutting off” as a branch is lopped off a tree. There is no life for humanity apart from Christ, who, “by the grace of God tasted death for every man.”

(Concluded.)

“THIS IS THE VICTORY THAT OVERCOMETH THE WORLD, EVEN OUR FAITH.”

“Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.”-1 Cor. 15:57.

When you are disappointed, set at nought, your wishes crossed, your tastes offended, your advice disregarded, and you take it all in patient loving forbearance,

This is Victory!

When you will not approve, by word or silent acquiescence, exaggeration, evil speaking, vain imaginations, or perverse conduct,

This is Victory!

When you do not love to refer to yourself in conversation, nor glory in your own pious deeds, when you can in honor prefer others,

This is Victory!

When you can be conscientious under all conditions, when you can be faithful in things small and great, when you can practice true Christianity equally in your home as in public life,

This is Victory!

When you have stumbled into error, weakness or sin, or seem overwhelmed by discouragement, suffering or wrong, and you thereafter grasp more firmly the hand of the Lord,

This is Victory!

When you can count all earthly desires and ambitions as loss and dross compared to the full approval of the Heavenly King,

This is Victory!

When you can stand face to face with the opponents of truth and righteousness, who misunderstand, hate, and persecute you, and you faithfully endure it all as Jesus did,

This is Victory!

THE work done during the past year has not been large, yet we trust it has been- of benefit to many. There are those in very lonely places who -find the monthly. visits of the “People’s Paper” a blessing and encouragement to press along the narrow way towards the “mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.” Others, too, who though having more opportunities of .personal fellowship write of their appreciation of the “People’s Paper,” which just aids in holding in touch with one another classes and individuals. rejoicing in the present truth.

It will be noticed that the subscriptions to the “People’s Paper” are far short of paying for its expense of printing and posting, so that the deficiency requires to be made up by the Tract Fund. Unlike other periodicals, there. are no paid’ advertisements to help out the cost of the Paper. Its only source of revenue is the subscription list, and there is opportunity for all interested to increase this by obtaining new subscribers.

Back numbers are freely supplied to all who can make good use of them. There is still work to -be done, and ..., probably the present conditions of stress may check the careless godlessness which has of late years more than ever manifested itself ill luxurious extravagance, waste and selfish pleasures, and affect some hearts so that they will feel after better things and be prepared for the comfort, joy and peace in the time of trouble, which alone the truth can .bring. There is still the joy of bringing-the cool, refreshing draught to the thirsty soul for the zealous worker. There are still “Israelites indeed” to be ‘found by the faithful Phillips. The truth presented in the .quiet earnest way is all that is necessary. It will be found more effective so than if accompanied by human. power or orator • ‘ eloquence, Phillip’s earnest “come and see” brought. Nathaniel, and such quiet invitation to read a tract or come to ‘a chart talk or class for studying God’s Word is all that is needed for any who are hungering for the knowledge of God and His great purposes.

We invite all to more earnest consideration in this service for the Lord of the harvest.

The Tract Fund has not quite met the expense of the year, but probably the new year will make it up. Besides the amount contributed, the Tract Fund. there was during- the year the ‘stint i:18/6 specially donated for the ‘purpose of publishing literature in the Zulu language. There have been difficulties in the way of having this accomplished, but there is now a prospect of having the work done. We hope to report favourably ill the matter before very long.

Tracts are available for willing workers, and we would just remind all that more results are obtained by personally handing them to. the people than by just putting them under the doors or in letter boxes. To be successful in this or any

Christian service there needs be the preparation of one’s own heart by prayer for grace to act and speak so as to gain all entrance for the word and to bring honour to His “name whose we are and whom we serve. •

AN ANZAC DAY SERVICE.

THE following clipping from the Melbourne “Herald,” of April 25th, gives the remarks of the Rev. A. Penry Evans, expressed at the Anzac Day service in the Independent Church, Collins-street, Melbourne, respecting the soldiers who fell during the great war.

He said it was the usual practice for mourners to believe that all the sacrifice was on the part of the Men who fell at the front. “We must think of their relatives,” he said. “They are still wounded, whereas we can think of the dead as being alive with Christ—as being a good deal better off.”

While sympathising with the relatives of the men who sacrificed their lives with commendable courage and fortitude in that which they believed to be their duty, how sad to hear of expressions from a professing minister of the Gospel such as herein quoted, and which seems characteristic of the clergy generally of almost every denomination.

We would that these gentlemen, who profess to sit in the seat of the great antitypical Moses, Christ, would seek afresh to study their Bibles and pray Divine guidance and wisdom that they may see light in God’s light.

The Scriptures clearly teach that the dead, whether they die from famine, pestilence, sword, sickness or natural causes, are dead, and their only hope is in a resurrection from that death state. God’s Word declares that- in due time all that are in the graves shall hear the voice of the Son of Man and come forth and have their opportunity of salvation when the judgments of the Lord are abroad in the earth, during the Millennial reign of Christ, and in order that the world of mankind generally shall learn righteousness. In the meantime, God’s purpose has been, and is, during this Gospel Age, to call out a people for His name, a class who desire earnestly to follow in the footsteps Of the Master. Such follow peace with all men and holiness, and realise that they must love their neighbour and fellow creatures, and do good to them that despitefully use and persecute them, and in no case to render evil for evil, but contrariwise blessing, in order that they may be the children of their Heavenly Father. This called-out class are predestinated to be conformed to the image of God’s dear Son, and delight to follow the great “Prince of Peace,” and develop the spirit of Christ more and more in their lives, while seeking to put away the fleshly mind, which is indeed carnal, and at enmity with God.

We rejoice that the day is not far distant when all the blind eyes shall be opened and the deaf ears unstopped, and when men shall see out of obscurity, and come to love their fellowmen under the righteous laws of Christ’s Millennial Kingdom and reign. Meantime, God is allowing all men to go their own way, and to learn the lessons by experiences with this present evil world over which Satan, the great-Adversary, reigns with God’s permission as the “Prince of the power of the air,” working in the hearts of the children of disobedience.

God’s Word assures us that Satan is shortly to be bound, that he may deceive the nations no more, and then the world of mankind, having tasted of the bitter fruits of evil and its consequences, will gladly conform to, and appreciate, the righteous judgments of that 1000 years reign of blessing under Christ, the blessed “Prince of Peace,” and when men’s hearts will be changed from their present hard and stony condition to one of flesh, as the Scriptures so beautifully attest.

The interesting matter respecting our Lord's return which has appeared in the last four issues of the People's Paper is now printed in booklet form, and should be useful- for circulation among all thoughtful Christians. It is important that all concerned should- have a correct understanding regarding the manner of our Lord's second coming. Many may have friends who would appreciate the truths explained in this brochure. The price is' 4d. each, or 3/- per dozen, post paid.

A supply of the booklet "God's Covenants," by II. B. Barton, has been received from the Bible Students' Committee, London. The question of the Covenants, with notes upon the ransom, sin offering and justification, is very clearly stated by the author. The price is 6d. per copy,.

Correspondence

THE -following extracts from letters of our readers show how the Lord's message of "present truth" is appreciated at this time; and is also found to be "meat in due season" to all of the same precious faith. A reader in Victoria writes:—I am enclosing my subscription, 2/6, for the "People's Paper," which, I think, is overdue. I look eagerly for its arrival each month. and would be grievously disappointed if it were not forthcoming, and although small, it contains so much that is comforting and food for thought. I should be pleased to have an extra copy each month.

I do regret my inability to attend the meetings. I thirst more and more for the revelations of the Scriptures. .I. have read the "Atonement," and am now reading "The !New Creation." They are beautiful studies and have been a feast of good things to me. One can read them again and again. "The Tabernacle Shadows" is not included in the "Atonement." Yes! I would be pleased to have it.. I am very thankful for all you have sent me. The dear Lord has blessed me and comforted me more than I deserve, for oft-times I have been impatient; now, with 'God's help, I will live not for to-morrow and its needs, but just for to-day.

Some of our subscribers in another State write:—

Loving greetings in our dear Redeemer's name. We wish to express in words the pleasure we have experienced -and also the help from the articles in the little paper brought out by you.

We can, dear friends, appreciate, at least to some extent, the financial difficulties and the time required to edit it, together with other matters connected with its publication that we know nothing of.

We rejoice to have seen that the old paths and matters that we have been assured of have not been departed from? Those blessed truths taught us by our Heavenly Father through the instrumentality 'of that faithful and wise servant, are still meat in due season for us; the great Divine Plan of the Ages, sufficient to make us wise unto salvation. -

It is our prayer that the spirit of humility, combined with strength in the Lord, may so keep you that the winds of present day doctrines may not shake you from declaring the truth as it shines in the face of Jesus Christ our Lord.

Watch and pray, dear friends, for the day is evil, and never was it more necessary for us all to. do so continually.

The loving . . . of humility, is of no benefit or advantage to you, but so far as you love to see all your own thoughts, words, and actions, governed by it. And the hating of pride does you no good, is no perfection in you, but so far as you hate to harbour any degree of it is your own heart.—W.L.

Let us trust in God, and not fatigue ourselves with indiscreet and unwarrantable apprehensions. Let us depend on the divine assistance for the conduct and issue of our lives, and let us not yield ourselves up to disconsolateness and despair.—Pascal.

"The heart that trusts, for ever sings
And feels as light as it had wings;
Come good or Ill,
Whate'er to-day, to-morrow brings, It is His will."

BROKEN WITH HIM. OUR PARTICIPATION AND PRIVILEGE.

IN presenting the following thoughts at this time in connection with the Annual Memorial observance of our Lord's death, it is with the desire that we may continually keep in mind the significance of our partaking of the emblems, which symbolise to us our Lord's broken body, and a life poured out in sacrifice on our account.

As we meet together on these occasions it is always "with desire" and gladness that we obey the Master's words and invitation, "Do this in remembrance of Me," and as St. Paul said, "As oft as ye eat this bread and drink of this cup ye do show forth the Lord's death till He come." As prospective members of the Body of Christ let us review something of the typical and anti-typical significance of the picture relating to the "passing over" or "sparing alive" of the firstborns of Israel, made possible through the shedding of blood and its sprinkling, along with the necessary eating of the lamb, etc., as recorded in the 12th chapter of Exodus.

Applying this in harmony with the Scriptures, we see that the firstfruits unto God of His creatures, the Church of the Firstborns, alone are being spared and dealt with, being "passed over," those who are under the blood, during this night time, this Gospel Age.

We see then that the term "firstfruits," or "firstborns," implies that there are afterfruits, and succeeding generations, and this is just what the typical Passover presents to us; for it was God's purpose that all Israelites should be saved, and that these typical people, representing the Household of Faith in the smaller picture, and the world of mankind in the larger sense, would eventually be delivered through the agency of Christ and the Church as the antitypical "Elder Brethren," and thus be enabled to obtain deliverance and eternal life in the "Land of Promise."

But particularly regarding the "firstborns," the Apostle Paul clearly identifies the Passover lamb with our Lord Jesus, saying in 1 Cor. 5:7-8, "Christ our Passover is slain for us; let us therefore keep the feast." He reminds us that we all need the blood of sprinkling—not upon our houses—but upon our hearts. Heb. 12:24; 1 Pet. 1:2. We must also eat the unleavened "Bread of Truth" if we would grow strong, and be prepared for our pilgrimage journey. and deliverance, in the morning of the New Dispensation. We also must eat the Lamb, must appropriate Christ, the great "Paschal Lamb of God," His merit, not merely by faith, but more and more "to put on Christ" to the extent of our fullest ability. We should seek to have the life of Christ more and more discernible in our mortal bodies, and daily to be transformed into His glorious character and likeness.

In every feature of the Law Covenant and its arrangements, we see shadows of good and higher things to come. In the type we note that the lamb was to be without blemish, well representing Christ, the spotless Lamb of God, holy, undefiled, separated from sinners. Not of Adamic stock, otherwise He would have been leavened with Adamic sin, but of a life, unblemished, from a higher, heavenly nature.

In type the animal was taken on the 10th day, and kept until the 14th -day, when it was sacrificed, corresponding to our Lord as the great "Paschal Lamb" selected, and offering Himself at Jordan, and for 372 years being killed "all the clay long," until the final completion of the sacrifice at Calvary, when He poured out his soul unto death. In the type each house represented the Household of Faith, each lamb the Lamb of God, and the firstborns of each family represented the Church of the Firstborns. the Priestly Class. The sprinkling of the blood in the type pictured salvation, the "sparing of, or passing over," those firstborns who obeyed instructions, and meant expectancy of deliverance during that night. So with the antitypical firstborns. Their hope of deliverance lay in the fact that the blood of Christ, the Lamb of God, was shed on their account, and these during this night time, must appreciate the means provided whereby they may have their hearts sprinkled from a consciousness of evil. Not only was it necessary that the typical we saw that the blood of the animal was sprinkled on the lintels and doorposts, in order to be delivered, but it was also imperative that the lamb must be roasted and eaten, and that in haste, during that night, and none of it be left over until the morning. Here we have a vivid picture of what must be, concerning the antitypical Jews, the Household of Faith.

It is not sufficient that we, as prospective members of the Church of the Firstborns, should have faith in the blood of Christ alone for our ultimate and complete deliverance, for we must partake of the Lamb by faith, and appropriate of our Lord's merit and sufficiency. and thereby maintain our justified standing before God. We must continually be found feeding on the Bread from Heaven, in order to grow strong, and, like the Israelites of old, be prepared for the wilderness journey and experiences ahead. In other words, we are, as the Apostle says, "Members in particular of that One Loaf," and must be broken with Him, and realise more each day that no hope of life is obtainable apart from Christ, "The Bread from Heaven."

'Fins appropriation or feeding on the "Paschal Lamb" must be during this dark night, this Gospel Age, the only acceptable period, and must be eaten “in haste.” Each and all must necessarily realise that the time is short in which to make our calling and election sure. Consequently the time must be redeemed, straight paths made for our feet, we must be found numbering our clays. and our hearts unto wisdom, for, as the Apostle says, now is our salvation nearer than when we first believed,” and again, “The night is far spent, the clay is at hand.” In this important connection we are reminded of our Lord’s words in Matt. 24th chapter and verse 20, “Pray that your flight be not in the winter, nor on the sabbath day.” This Age is the acceptable summertime of the sunshine of God’s favor, and, consequently, the typical picture conveys a special warning to the antitypical firstborn class.

According to the type, the passover lamb had to be roast with fire, and eaten in that night with bitter herbs. Bitter herbs in this typical connection, we understand to picture that which would serve to whet, to sharpen, to “keen up” their appetite, and in the antitypical sense, well represents the bitter trials and experiences that come, as a result of appropriating to the full, during this Gospel Age, or night time of evil. Being exercised aright by these experiences, the firstborns are caused to hunger and thirst after righteousness, and to continue to feed on the Lamb of God, with healthy, keen appetites, also. Eating the lamb in haste and with staff in hand and loins girded for the journey, would represent a readiness, an activity, an alertness and expectancy of deliverance, for the time was limited, and nicely corresponds to the position of the Church, as pilgrims, having here no continuing city, and being alert and ready, for the time is short, and rejoicing in the hope and expectancy of deliverance so soon to be accomplished.

As a joyful recognition and memorial of their deliverance, the Israelites were to observe a feast to the Lord of unleavened bread for seven days following, and to be observed throughout all their generations. No leaven was to be found in their homes, otherwise this would mean death. The correspondence seems to be that the antitypical first born class keep the feast with constancy of hope and rejoicing, in the realisation of their promised ‘deliverance. In type seven days represents our entire pilgrimage here below, during which period the leaven of malice and wickedness must be put away ,otherwise this would mean death to the spiritual Israelite also.

In type the firstborns occupied a special position in advance of their brethren and became liable to death previous to the general exodus. Also, after the exodus, these firstborns had a special work in connection with the general deliverance, as they became a separate class, represented in the Tribe of Levi. These gave up entirely their inheritance in the land, that they might be the teachers of their brethren, and became sacrificing priests or “able ministers” under their Law Covenant. We can see how the antitypical priestly class not only have the privilege of teaching and instructing some during this Gospel Age, with the “ministry of reconciliation,” but also the whole world of mankind during the next Age, as able ministers of the New Law Covenant. Having no inheritance in the land, and as sacrificing priests, we have been anointed to preach good tidings, as we journey on to our Canaan rest, and to be used, also, when ultimately delivered and glorified in blessing the poor groaning creation and world of mankind.

What, then, do these symbols mean to us, and what do we memorialise or commemorate? In partaking of the bread, and drinking of the cup, we remember the purity and sinlessness of Him, who as the Bread of Life, was broken for us, and the life laid down in sacrifice, even unto death, on our account. Viewing the plan of God and redemption through this great Central figure, “Christ our Passover,” we then celebrate four great matters.

1st—Our Lord’s Death as the “Passover Lamb.”

2nd—“Our relationship, or participation with Him in the sufferings and death of Christ as sharers in His cup.”

3rd—The great deliverance soon to follow this “passing over” of the present night time—first those “passed over,” and second the Levitical host or Tribe, who will be delivered in the morning—“the Millennial morning.”

4th—We incidentally commemorate the great “feast of fat things” to follow, when, with our Lord and Head, we will drink the cup of joy and blessing in the Kingdom.

In the light of the foregoing, should we not richly value, not only the great love of Christ, but also the love of the Father, in designing such a plan in which His Divine attributes are so wisely and graciously manifested, and the gift of faith whereby we can lay hold of the full meaning and purpose of these symbols, and what they memorialise?

Our partaking of the bread then represents symbolically our partaking of the fleshly perfection of the Man Jesus.

We partake of His perfection by faith, not actually. He gives us not restitution to human perfection, but merely an imputation of His righteousness, His perfection, which in turn covers, in the Divine sight, all our blemishes and imperfections. In a word, our Lord justifies us, and for us to maintain our justification, we must continue to appropriate or eat of that Bread from heaven, and this justification enables us to tender to God our fleshly bodies a living sacrifice. When, as our Advocate, the Redeemer imputes to our offering the merit of His sacrifice, the Father accepts the offering and begets the sacrificer to a new nature as a member of the Body of Christ. It is only those who have thus partaken of the merit of Christ, and whose sacrifice God has accepted, that are invited, and directed to drink of His cup, and be daily immersed, or baptised, into His death in conformity with their covenant of sacrifice.

Then regarding the cup, Aye must remember that it is the Lord's and not ours. The life or the sacrifice symbolised by the blood is not ours, but the Redeemer's. We merely are given the great privilege of drinking and partaking of it. The blood of Jesus could have sealed the New 'Covenant without ever having been offered to us at all. In this, then, is illustrated the grace of God, in that He is a willing to receive us, and make us joint-heirs with our Lord, if we demonstrate that we have the same spirit of devotion and loyalty as He. Hence, our Lord emphasises this fact when saying that all who shall share His throne, must drink of His cup of self-sacrifice and denial, and be immersed into His death.

The Apostle Paul points us to the fact that our Lord is the true Bread from heaven, and that we are invited to be portions of the One Loaf which eventually will be the Bread of Life for the world during the next Age. As we partake then of the bread, we can with propriety view the matter from two standpoints. First and primarily, we symbolise our Lord's broken body; and, secondarily, the breaking of the Church and our own breaking. or dying as members of that. Church Class. For. - vs the Apostle, "We being many, are one Bread and ;! Body, for we are all partakers of that One Bread.- The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the. Body of Christ?

The cup to us means the sacrificed life of our Lord, and, additionally, it reminds us that in becoming His disciples, we accepted His invitation to share the cup. This means faithfulness in self-sacrifice, even unto death as the Lord's representatives. Rightly viewed, then, and fully appreciated, we can understand why the Apostle says it is the cup of blessing "which we bless." Should not our thanks be unbounding, as we realise such unmerited favor bestowed? Does not the cup then represent the gracious invitation of God, in harmony with His is pre-arranged plan and fore-knowledge, giving the only opportunity held out during this acceptable Age of "filling up that which is behind of the sufferings of Christ " (To be continued.)

BELOVED OF GOD.

Eph. 1:2-6. — 1 John 3:1, 2.

Beloved of God! while anthems ring
That hail the presence of our King,
The harps of God, in golden tone,
Proclaim the joys that thou shalt own.

A chosen heir with Him to dwell,
For evermore His praise to swell;
And share with Him, in sweet accord,
Who died for all, our precious Lord.

Beloved and chosen; call to stand,
Enriched with faith in this dark land;
E'en though thy foes cloth thee surround,
His glorious grace cloth more abound.

The glad'ning song of hope and cheer
Proclaims the Presence ever near;
His loving arms around thee twine
Till in His likeness thou dost shine.

Beloved of God! Beloved by all
Who hear the Father's gracious call.
He calls us each and all by name,
His love remaineth e'er the same.

What glories we shall soon behold!
The half has never yet been told.
O happy they who find release,
Beloved of God in perfect peace!

LONDON.—

”There is some historical ground for the Biblical story of the fall of the walls of Jericho.” writes Sir Charles Marston, who is conducting the archaeological expedition which is excavating the ruins of Jericho.”

“We know,” he says, “how when Joshua crossed the Jordan before attacking Jericho with the Israelites, the river was dried up for some distance.

“Above the point of the crossing the river flows through high banks of earth. There seems little doubt that the caving in of one of the banks temporarily dammed the river.”

Sir Charles Marston predicted that it would be proved’ that some, at least, of the Walls of Jericho had “fallen down flat” at the date assigned in the course of the Biblical narrative, although others were still standing.

Question Box,

Question.—Col. 1:14—”Fill up that which is behind.” What is the meaning of “that which is behind”? Where not all Christ’s sufferings perfect and finished at the Cross?

Answer.—The actual personal sufferings of Christ. Jesus, of course, ended on Calvary’s Hill; but the sufferings of the Church, the members of Christ, are not yet completed. It has pleased God to invite a “little flock” to first “suffer” with Christ and then “reign” with Him. (Compare Isaiah 53:7 and Rom. 8:36.) The reward of such exaltation to the Divine nature and to reign in kingdom power was contingent upon first proving loyal and perfect in obedience under great suffering and humiliation. As it was with our Lord, so it is with each member in Christ. “The servant is not above his lord.” First the cup of suffering and then there will be the cup of joy in the Kingdom. “Are ye able to drink of My cup and to be baptised with My baptism,” said Jesus to the two disciples who would sit on His right and on His left in the Kingdom. Jesus is the Head of the Church, which is His body. The body members must, like the great Head, learn perfect obedience under similar experiences, and prove loyal and true before they receive the great reward of joint Heirship. He was “tempted in all points like as we are.”

The Church is a very special. class which the Father has given to the Son. The prayer of Jesus (John 17 11). “Holy Father, keep through Thine own name those. whom Thou hast given me, that they may be one as we are.”

So great is the oneness between Christ the Head and the members of the Church which is His body, and the Apostle says, “All things are yours, for ye are Christ’s and Christ is God’s.” The little hymn has put it beautifully “I am His and He is mine For ever and for ever.”

Whatever happens to the members of His body is as to the Lord Himself (Acts 26:14), and not until every member of the Body has completed the Christian narrow way, finished the way of the Cross and drank to the dregs the cup of humiliation and pain, will the sufferings of Christ be ended and the Body be complete in glory. So then, it was the sufferings of the Church, the body of Christ, which were left over, and of which Paul could say, “I rejoice in my sufferings for you. and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ, in my flesh, for His Body’s sake, which is the Church.”

“Know ye not that so many of us as were baptised into Jesus Christ, were baptised into His death.” (Rom. 6:3.)

Why should we do ourselves this wrong,
Or others,—that we are not always strong,
That we are ever overborne with care,
That we should ever weak or heartless be;
Anxious. or troubled,—when with us is Prayer,

And Joy and Strength and Courage are with Thee! —Matt. 28:20. R.C.T.

God's Great Plan of Salvation and Restoration.

IN the Bible we have revealed to us a God perfect in Wisdom, in Justice, in Love, and All-Powerful. In the first three chapters we have a very concise account of creation—first of this earth, and of its being gradually brought (no doubt throughout thousands of years) into a condition suitable for the habitation of mankind. Then at the end of the last long period, man was created, male and female, and placed in perfect surroundings. They were informed that if they were disobedient to God, they should die. This shows that, so long as they were obedient, they would have access to the grove of the trees of life, and might live forever.

This does not, however, mean that they had an immortal soul, or possessed immortality; there is no such teaching in the Bible. On the contrary, we read, "God only hath immortality" (1 Tim. 6:16), and "The soul that sinneth it shall die" (Ezek. 18:4). There is quite a difference between being able to live forever under certain conditions and being immortal. To be immortal means to have life in oneself.—John 5:26.

God is the fountain of life. He lives quite independently of food or drink, air, climate or environment. Man was made a mortal being (or mortal soul); that is, unless he has food, drink, air, and proper environment, he will cease to live. Our first parent, Adam, sinned, and was sentenced to death, "dying thou shalt surely die," and in order that this penalty of death should go into force, he was prevented from eating of the life-sustaining fruits in Eden, which would have kept him alive. Thus it was that Adam, and all the human race represented in him, were condemned to death.—Romans 5:12-21.

Does it not seem strange and unjust that we should all come under the sentence of death, through no fault of our own, but through another's sin? Yes, if that were all that was going to happen, and God had no other purpose in view, it would certainly seem quite unfair. However, the Bible shows that it is all a part of a great wise and kind plan.

All intelligent people will agree that there could be no satisfactory lasting arrangement, which did not have justice as its first principle, and "Justice is the foundation of God's throne."

So, then, this earth could never be a happy place unless all the inhabitants should learn righteousness (Isaiah 26:9). But how could all the inhabitants be taught to love righteousness?

The Lord evidently saw that it was well to allow man-kind to have an experience with evil, then to arrange for all to have an opportunity of turning from sin unto righteousness, and thus of enjoying everlasting life. How could this be done, seeing that God had said they must die? "The day that thou eatest thereof dying thou shalt surely die." God could not set aside His own decree; He must enforce His own law. But Divine Love and! Wisdom had foreseen a way whereby God could still be just, and yet provide the means of justifying them that believe.—Romans 3:21-26.

Had all been created perfect, all would have been personally responsible in case of disobedience, and it is reasonable to suppose that the great majority would have failed as did our first parent. In order to satisfy justice there would have been the necessity of providing life for life, each sinner would have needed a separate saviour to ransom him from death and provide opportunity for another trial.

How wise it was that all were represented in Adam, so that all could be redeemed by Christ (1 Corinthians 15:21-22);

Hosea 13:14). By this means all come into the world and have the experience of the baneful results of sin before they come to have the responsibility of choosing between sin and death or righteousness and life eternal.

The whole world is “dead in trespasses and sin” (Ephesians 1:2, 5), “condemned already,” as the Master said.

It is only as we receive the knowledge of salvation in Christ Jesus that we come to be on trial for life or for death; knowledge brings responsibility. So the Apostle says, “God will have all men to be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth.”

Some have received this opportunity and knowledge in Christ during this age, but the great majority have not. It may be asked: Why is it, seeing Christ died for our sins, so many years ago, that so few have as yet heard of the “only name given among men whereby they can be saved”? Evil still abounds, godlessness and misery still prevail.

To answer ‘his reasonable question, we need to consider the divine purpose and plan as revealed in the Bible, and note how it is gradually working out; we shall then see that the message of the angels at the Saviour’s birth is yet to be fully realised, “Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people.” This message is in perfect accord with God’s promise to Abraham, long, long before, “In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed.” No doubt, our Saviour referred to this promise when He said, “The Gospel was preached to Abraham.”

AGES AND DISPENSATIONS.

We find three distinct long periods in human history mentioned in 2 Peter, chapter 3. The first is called “the old world,” or “the world that was,” before the great deluge. The second is called “The present evil world,” which dates from the flood and reaches to the second coming of Christ, and the establishment of His Kingdom in the third great period, called “The world to come wherein dwelleth righteousness.”

We enquire, what purpose has been served in these past dispensations, and what will be accomplished in the new age that is so soon to begin? The whole of the past nearly six thousand years of human history has been, as we have already mentioned, for the purpose of allowing all mankind to learn by experience the terrible consequences of disobedience to God’s laws.

When Adam and Eve were thrust out from the Garden of Eden, the Lord’s providential care and protection were no longer over them. They had to earn their bread by the sweat of face, and became subject to accident, sickness and death.

Angels who had been created prior to the creation of man appear to have been allowed to assist mankind, if they would. It would seem that in this way the angels could learn by observation the dreadful results of sin, while men were learning the same lesson by experience. These angels had been interested in the creation, and quite likely assisted in the preparation of the earth for man.—Job 38:7.

It was indeed a sad experience beginning with the murder of a brother. Cain, through jealousy, slew Abel. The two brothers had brought offerings to the Lord. Cain brought of the fruits of the ground by his work, Abel brought a slain lamb. Cain’s offering could not be accepted because there was nothing to indicate that atonement for sin was necessary, for “without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sin.” Abel’s sacrifice of a lamb pointed to or recognised this necessity, and prefigured “The Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world.” There have always been, and still are, many people who think they can gain the Lord’s approval by their good works.

God appreciates good works by those who are at one with Him, but we all first need the blood of Jesus Christ—the Lamb of God—to cleanse us from all sin. Then, being justified and at peace with God, we must show our faith by our works, and add to faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and love.—2 Peter 1:5-7.

While there were a few during that period—the old world—of 1656 years, who pleased God, such as Abel, Seth, Enoch, Methuselah, Noah, etc., yet the majority became wicked, and the angels, who should have helped, also became wicked, and hindered men. They materialised, and assuming the human form, married the daughters of men. We read (Genesis 6:1-7) that “God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth . . . and said, I will destroy man whom I have created from the face of the earth.” Noah and his family, of whom it is written they “were perfect in their generations,” were instructed to build the large Ark, so that when the Flood came they were saved.

That ended the first world (age or dispensation). It had demonstrated how quickly men slide into more wickedness, and bring more trouble upon themselves, if they get away from God.

When the flood subsided Noah's family came forth from the Ark, and the new age commenced. Peter says, "The heavens were of old, and the earth standing in the water and out of the water, whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished."

Of course, all know that it was not the earth on which we stand, nor the heavens we gaze upon that perished. It was simply the order of things that then existed—the "heavens" referring to spiritual or religious arrangements and the "earth" to social arrangements—that passed away.

That world or age having ended, the "present evil world" began. The wicked spirits (angels) were no longer allowed to materialise and appear as human beings, as they had done. They were restrained in chains of darkness (Jude 6; 1 Peter 3:20). They have, however, operated in darkness, in seances of spiritualists and in various other ways in such lands as India, China, Africa, and in the pagan religions of Rome, Greece, Persia, etc. They have everywhere caused confusion and trouble, blinding the minds of the people, and thus hindering the spread of the true knowledge of God.

It is not that God could not further restrain them or even stamp them out of existence, but He has a good purpose in permitting evil to still exist, so that man will eventually have learned how hard and sorrowful the way of the transgressor is, and how much better it would be to live in obedience to God's righteous laws.

This is the lesson God wants everyone to learn, to hate sin and to love righteousness. The wages of sin is sorrow, trouble, disaster, and death; the gift of God for the righteous is life, peace, and joy. However, it is evidently the Divine purpose to allow the world to have 6000 years of the experience of sin, so Satan is permitted to be "prince of this world." This means that he rules in the affairs of men during this evil age. St. Paul, in 2 Corinthians 4:4, refers to him as the "god of this world who hath blinded the minds of them that believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ should shine unto them." It is because Satan is the present ruler of the world, that we see how the wicked prosper (Malachi 3:15). This prophet said, "Now we call the proud happy, yea, they that work wickedness are set up, yea, they that tempt God are even delivered."

When mankind has learned the needed lessons under these hard conditions, under Satan's rule, God will establish His Kingdom and bind Satan, and prevent sin and evil. He will enforce righteousness, that is why the new age is called "The world to come wherein dwelleth righteousness." (2 Peter 3:13). So this present evil world which began just after the Flood in Noah's day, reaches right down to the second coming of Christ. As the "old world" that was before the Flood ended with the great Deluge, in which all perished, except Noah and his family, so this "present evil world" will end with "a great time of trouble such as was not since there was a nation." We have long been praying,

"Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth as in heaven," and after this great time of trouble this prayer will be answered.

As this long period from the creation of man has been full of sorrow, calamity, sickness, pain and death, because God had allowed all men to go their own ways, this new age, so soon to begin, will give to every man, "all the families of the earth," an opportunity of turning to the Lord, of living righteously, and of receiving the reward of lasting life.

The prophet has said they shall no more die because of their father's sin, but each shall be personally responsible. If they do what is right they shall live; but if they do evil, "The soul that sinneth it shall die." (Ezekiel 18:20, 24).

In those days they shall no more say the fathers have eaten the sour grape and the children's teeth are set on edge, but everyone shall die for his own iniquity, every man that eateth the sour grape, his teeth shall be set on edge. — Jeremiah 31:29-34.

During the time Satan has been "prince of this world" evil has prevailed, the wicked have prospered, it has been hard to do what is right and to avoid sin, for so many snares lie in the path. "Satan like a roaring lion goeth about seeking whom he may devour"—or cause to stumble. All sorts of temptations to do wrong are abroad. It is surely a slippery path, it is a broad road that leadeth to destruction, and it has been a "narrow way that leadeth to life and few there be that find it."—Matt. 7:13, 14.

It would indeed be a sad thing if only those few were to be saved; and all the rest, the millions of men, women and children of all races, were for ever lost.

In this coming new age, there is to be another way to life opened up, "for a highway shall be there, and a way: it shall be called the way of holiness. The unclean shall not pass over it, but it shall be for all those, the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein.” (The way shall be made so plain that all will understand what is right, what is true, and what is God’s will). No lion shall be there (Satan is to be bound that he shall deceive the nations no more), nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon. (No selfish, cruel, greedy men or nations or corporations will be allowed to afflict or oppress mankind). It shall not be found there. But the redeemed shall walk there, and the ransomed of the Lord (“He gave Himself a ransom for all to be testified in due time.”-1 Timothy 2:3-6) shall return (from the land of the enemy, the grave—Jeremiah 31:16; Hosea 13:14), and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness (in the resurrection day), and sorrow and sighing shall flee away.

(Isaiah 35:8-10). “And there shall be no more curse, for God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away.”—Revelation 21:4.

We may wonder why the Lord has so long delayed to set up His Kingdom, and we find a wonderful reason as we turn again to His Word for instruction. In Acts 15:14, James informs us that before this time of blessing all the world it pleased God first to select a church “people for His name.” There has then been a very special work proceeding during this Gospel Age, a necessary work in preparation for the coming Kingdom Age.

DIVINE PURPOSES IN AGES PAST.

As we look back over God’s dealings with man, we find He has dealt differently at different times. “God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spoke unto the fathers by the prophets, bath in these last days spoken unto us by His Son.” (Hebrews 1:1-2). Prior to the Flood we have seen that in a general way God had let the world take its own course and receive experiences under the administration of angels, and how few there were who kept faithful to God during that time.

Following the time of the deluge, God dealt with certain patriarchs, such as Noah, Shem, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, but still allowed those who would to go their own ways; and they mostly went into idolatry and depravity. During this Patriarchal Age, God specially chose Abraham because of his faith, so that He could reveal to him something of His purpose. Because Abraham left his own land in obedience to God, not knowing whither he was to go, God led him into Canaan (Palestine), and gave him a sure promise, saying, “In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed.”—Genesis 12:3.

Many years rolled away, and yet Abraham had no son, but then even when he was a hundred years old, Sarah bare him a son, whom he called Isaac. Later, God very severely tested Abraham’s faith by telling him to offer up his son as a burnt sacrifice. Abraham was ready even to do this, believing that God was able to raise up Isaac again from the dead, and so fulfil His promise that “In Isaac shall thy seed be called.” God thus gave a picture of how God Himself would give His only begotten Son as a sacrifice to pay the price of sin for all the world, so that all could be redeemed from death; that “as in Adam all die, so all in Christ could be made alive again.” (1 Corinthians 15:21-22). Because of Abraham’s great faith, God repeated His blessing, and enlarged the promise, saying, “In blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of heaven and as the sand which is upon the seashore and in thee and thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed.”—Genesis 22:16, 18.

This great promise is still to be fulfilled, for while God did bless Abraham’s seed, the Israelites, in so far as they would remain obedient, yet in no sense have all the families or all the nations of earth been blessed. Yet the Apostle in Hebrews 6:13-20 reminds us of it, and that God hath confirmed it with an oath, so that it is sure of fulfilment.

God’s ways and thoughts are so much higher than our ways and thoughts (Isaiah 55:8-9), so much so that “A thousand years in His sight are but as yesterday when it is past (Psalm 90:4); therefore, what seems so long to us is only a little while to the Lord. He has all power and has His own time for the fulfilment of His word.

Abraham continued to believe, for he had learned that there was “nothing too hard for the Lord.” (Genesis 18:14). He knew that God could raise him up from the dead so as to give him the land and make him a blessing along with his seed, to all the nations of the earth. This great promise was passed on to Isaac and Jacob, and then to the twelve tribes of Israel. But God dealt differently with Israel as a nation during what we call the Jewish Age. God had allowed the Israelites to become slaves to the Egyptians, and this looked as though He had forgotten His promise to Abraham, but the experience was to do them good. Then the wonderful way that He delivered them by Moses was to be a picture of how the “Prophet like unto Moses,” the real Messiah or Christ, would deliver the whole world from slavery to sin and Satan in due time. So we learn to wait for God’s due time to relieve us from oppression and wrong, while we just do our best to please God and to remember His gracious promises.

God gave Israel the Law, which taught them what the Divine will is, and it has also helped all civilised nations to form laws somewhat along the same lines. If Israel had kept the Law they would have inherited the promise given to Abraham, but not one could fully keep it. This demonstrated the fact that no one could so live as to gain by his own righteousness the reward of eternal life. It showed that only by someone paying the price of sin, and thus removing the death sentence, and then taking man's hand and helping him to do right, gradually leading him up the highway of holiness, could there be any hope for the human race. So the Apostle says, "The Law was our schoolmaster to lead us to Christ."—Galatians 3.

While by the deeds of the Law no one was justified, there were many who proved faithful to God and suffered persecution and death; these are to be rewarded by "a better resurrection." (Hebrews 11:35). They are evidently chosen to be "princes in all the earth." (Psalm 45:16).

When our Saviour came to earth, He was born an Israelite, under the Law. He kept the Law perfectly, and thus gained a further right to life. He made an end of the Law, nailing it to the Cross (Colossians 2:14), and "opened up a new and living way" (Hebrews 10:20), and a new arrangement began. "The Law and the prophets were until John; since then the kingdom of heaven is preached." (Luke 16:16). There began the selection of a very favoured class, to be associated with Christ in the heavenly kingdom. Our Lord said that in all the past ages there had been no one greater than John the Baptist, but he who would be even least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he. (Matthew 11:11). Again, he said, speaking to His disciples as representatives of the Church, "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom."—Luke 12:32).

The Scripture is very clear that the selection of this class is the chief purpose of this Gospel Age. (Ephesians 1:411). God has been choosing the members of this class, and only such as "take up their cross and follow Christ" can hope to become "joint-heirs" with Him in heavenly glory.—Romans 8:17.

The Apostle informs us that, if we would make our calling and election sure, we must be "transformed by the renewing of our minds" (Romans 12:2), and gain the virtues and graces of God's Holy Spirit, and so become like Christ in character. It is predestinated that only such as be thus conformed to the image or likeness of His Son, will God number among those "called according to His purpose."

WHAT IS NECESSARY IN ORDER TO BE A CHRISTIAN.

The steps necessary in order to obtain an inheritance in Christ are clearly shown, and only such as take those steps can entertain a true hope of a heavenly home hereafter. It is by God's Holy Spirit operating through His Word and in the hearts of believers that the Christian pathway may be begun, continued and finished. "No man cometh unto the Son except the Father draw him." (John 6:44). First there is the realisation of sin which separates from God, along with a desire to know and be at peace with God, and there is joy and peace in thus appreciating that even when we were sinners Christ died for us, and so God commendeth His love to us.—Romans 5:8.

Oh, 'twas love, 'twas wondrous love
The love of God to me;
It brought my Saviour from above
To die on Calvary."

But we must not stop there, for if we fully appreciate such love, that Christ died for our sins, surely we should desire to show our love in return. We say, like Paul, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" and the Lord sends His message through His Word, "My son, give me thine heart." "If any man will be My disciple, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me," or, again, as the Apostle has said (Romans 12:1): "Present your bodies a living sacrifice to God"—it is but our reasonable service. It is, indeed, the only reasonable thing to do, for we were under sentence of death and were redeemed by the Cross of Christ. We are then not our own, we are bought with a price—so we gladly say, "Take Thine own way with me, dear Lord." Like our Master, we say, "Thy will, not mine, be done."

Then it is that we commence the narrow way to life—to walk in the steps of Christ, the way of sacrifice. We promise to drink of His cup, and to be baptised with His baptism; for the promise is, "If we suffer with Him we shall be also glorified together." (Romans 8:14-18). To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in My throne, even as I also overcame and am sat down with My Father in His throne.—Revelation 3:21.

Soon the full number of this elect Church will be completed. Then the Church with Christ will be the "stars of heaven" "class of the promised Abrahamic seed, which is to bless all the families of the earth.—Galatians 3:9, 16, 27, 29.

Then Acts 15:14-17 tells us that when God has taken out this people for His name, He will return and build again the Tabernacle of David, and set it up—(Israel must return to their own land, and once more be favoured of God)—that all the rest of mankind may be saved. The same thoughts are given in Romans 11:25-27. Blindness in part has happened to Israel until the fulness (the full number) of the Gentiles be come in, then all Israel shall be saved, as it is written, “There shall come out of Zion a deliverer that shall turn away ungodliness from Israel, etc.” The 31st of Jeremiah speaks of the joys of that happy time when God will bless them. Also Ezekiel 37:12-14, speaks not only of those who happen then to be alive, but “Oh, my people, I will open your graves and bring you into the land of Israel, and ye shall know that I am the Lord. But the prophecies are so full of that happy theme that there is difficulty in making a selection of citations. Micah 4:1-7, tells of how all nations will come to see that the God of Israel is the true God, and will say: “Come, let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob. He will teach us of His ways, and we will walk in His paths, for the Law shall go forth out of Zion, and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem They shall beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning hooks. Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. But they shall sit every man under his own vine and fig tree, and none shall make them afraid.”

This is what the Bible tells us of God’s gracious purpose. How much more could be said and quoted showing the good times of refreshing that are to come at the second presence of Christ. Times of restoration of all things which God hath spoken by the mouths of all His holy prophets since the world began. (Acts 3:19-22).

It is surely right that all should realise the goodness of God as revealed, in His great plan for the redemption and restitution of all the willing and obedient. To think soberly upon it will surely lead to a desire to reciprocate the love which is so manifested. It will lead to a reverence towards God and a desire to speak to others about it, so that the truth may be known among men. God has been so much misrepresented. No wonder that men did not love Him when they were taught that He was fierce and dreadful, but when we see Him to be Wise and Kind and Just and True, we must tell others that they may also rejoice in His goodness and the happy prospects of His Kingdom.

Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth As it is done in heaven.”

British Weekly

Mr GILBERT THOMAS, writing in the British Weekly some months ago on "The crisis in organised Religion," said: "What honest observer, whether in the churches or outside, can deny that, whether the misrepresentation has been accidental or deliberate, the real spirit and teachings of Christ Himself have similarly been too often obscured by the institutions existing in His name." The early church, freshly under the influence of His earthly presence, reflected vitally the spirit of Jesus. But as that direct influence faded, the church began to adapt and dilute His message, which was at once too simple and too difficult for it to grasp, and to practise. So The Church became the churches, torn asunder by different interpretations and traditions, and at last embroiling themselves (in the name of Him who was called the Prince of Peace, and who took as His favourite symbol, the simplicity of a little child) in some of the worst wars and persecutions of history."

"How true this statement of facts and conditions is, and what an exact fulfilment of the Lord's parables, such as the "Three Measures of Meal," and of the "Mustard Seed." The three measures of meal represented the pure gospel message, which was to comfort, sustain in faith and godliness, and encourage in hope of the "exceeding great and precious promises" of "joint-heirship" with Christ in His kingdom.

How soon after the Apostles fell asleep, an enemy sowed tares in the wheat field, or in this other parable, how soon the woman (the false church) contaminated the truth by false teachings, of which Peter also predicted (2 Pet. 2:1.) "There shall be false teachers among you who shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that brought them." The "mustard seed" also shows the development of which the above writer speaks. It had so small a beginning in the little movement in Galilee, Paul also foretold, "I know that after My departing many grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also, of your own selves shall men arise speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them." (Acts 20:29, 30.) Thus it was that the great papal system was developed, embodying many of the errors of Paganism, in its desire to embrace the whole world. It has become, as prophesied in the parable, of such great growth that the birds of the air may rest in its branches, such is the divided condition of "Organised Religion" to-day. How true is the Master's anticipation, "When the Son of Man cometh shall He find faith on the earth?"

Mr Gilbert Thomas proceeds in his article in an endeavour to comfort himself and Christian leaders, and hopes for the revival of true Christianity in the churches, and seems to still hold the thought that the church as organised will conquer the world for Christ. "We would have healed Babylon, but she would not be healed." It is not a pleasant thing to prophesy calamity and judgments; such is sometimes the duty of God's people, as in the case of Jeremiah. How plaintive is His cry (Jer. 8:20, 21): "For the hurt of the daughter of My people am I hurt, black; astonishment hath taken hold upon Me. Is there balm in Gilead; is there no physician there? Why then is not the health of the daughter of My people recovered?"

As indicated in the above quotation, the churches gave themselves over to the world and became "embroiled" in the great war to such an extent that ministers generally acted like recruiting agents, and blasphemously misquoted scriptures, endeavouring to give men a false hope that if they died in battle they would go straight to heaven. Such doings and teachings were so evidently contrary to the spirit and doctrines of the Prince of Peace, that men perceived that the churches no longer represented Christ. The result is that since that time the pews are so deserted. It seems that even the heathen world can recognise the difference between the life, teachings, the principles of Christ, and so called Christianity of to-day. This is shown to be a fact by Mr. Stanley Jones in his book "Christ of the Indian Road."

It should be evident to all who will sincerely compare present day churchianity with the description of Rev. 3:14-20, that this position has been reached. Christendom has surely been tried in the balances and found wanting. It is not for us to demur at the Lord's judgments, but rather to obey His will and invitation.

The true gospel of Christ and the Apostles has been leavened, and the system of religion has developed into a corrupt organisation. The proper course is to "Inquire for the old paths." Get back to the simplicity of the truth and Christian life exemplified in Jesus and His disciples. Let us cling to the cross of Christ and His principles, His spirit, and leave the corrupted systems, so contaminated by errors of the dark ages and the spirit of the world, to the judgments written. Instead of all the great efforts to confederate the churches by compromising doctrines, and customs and modes, etc., the proper course is to seek the one true church, or rather, as Selkirk has put it: "The one true church thou shalt not seek; seek then for evermore, instead the one true Christ its Head." We need to get back to the Bible, back to the teachings of Christ and the Apostles, laying aside the many false doctrines which have been such a hindrance to a clear understanding of God's great purpose for the church first and also for the world of mankind in due time.

"To the Law of the Testimony; if they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them." (Isa. 8:20.)

Question Box.

Question.--Acts 3:21 says that Christ is to be retained in the heavens until the times of restitution of all things; how then can it be that Christ could be present prior to these times commencing?

Answer.—The times of restitution of all things cannot take place until Christ's Kingdom is set up, and Christ must first come and bind Satan before He can reign in his stead. The difficulty seems to be in taking a small view of such matters. A thousand years in the Lord's sight are but as yesterday—a day with the Lord is as a thousand years--2 Pet. 3:8—and the matter of even one hundred years as a day of preparation is not long.

The thought of Acts 3:21, however, seems to be that the Lord had gone to the heavens until He would come to set up His Kingdom and restore the human family. (Other Scriptures are so clear in respect of the first work of the Lord being to reckon with His people respecting the use of their talents and their heart condition. Some will be found negligent and some evidently will be without oil in their vessels, and some without a wedding garment. The Diaglott rendering of Revelation 3:3 shows that the Lord may be present quite unknown to many who profess to be Christians. It reads, "If, therefore, thou should not watch, I may have come on thee as a thief, and thou mayest by no means know at what hour I may have come on thee.

Correspondence

South Australia,

8/5/30. Dear Brother,

Pleased again to have Your welcome letter, and it is good to know that some of the Sydney friends are again getting together. and we trust they will continue the regular meeting together for mutual encouragement in these days when fellowship with those of like precious faith -seems so new to our progress in knowledge and grace. Give our Christian love to any who may know us. Yes, the Eastern Convention was a very happy occasion. The friends of the class here and also at Gawler seem to have received a blessing. I am sure these special meetings do us good in stimulating us to renewed faith and zeal; so we thank God for all His many blessings to us, and we would go on with greater determination to do God's will, to light the good light of faith in the name and in the strength of our Lord Jesus Christ. We just want to be of those who patiently continue in well-doing, for, as the Apostle says, "in due season we shall reap if we faint not."

We regret that some who once appreciated the present truth have now seemingly lost their appreciation to a large extent. There are some who will say that so long as we retain faith in the blood of Christ we should -find helpful fellowship as brethren with all who make the same claim. irrespective of what their views on other doctrines may be. But, surely, this is too broad an attitude; it would include Seventh-day Adventists, Christadelphians^ Anglicans, and even Roman Catholics. Those who adopt this attitude are those who do not seem to realise the fact that we are now living in the Harvest of the Age, and a special message from the Lord is doing the gathering work. Those whose eyes of understanding have been opened to see the truths now due and to discern the signs which indicate the second presence of Christ must be true to their calling and responsibility, and let their light shine for the blessing of others.

We are glad to have your messages of love to the friends in this vicinity, and we will give them your message. It is nice to feel that we have your prayers also, and we remember you each day in our prayers. We will hope to hear from you again soon. Accept our warmest Christian love, in which I know Sister would also join.

Yours in the Master's service

R. J. M.

5/6/30. Dear Brother,

Greetings in the Saviour's Name, to whom be glory for ever.

Just a few lines to thank you and the other brethren and sisters for the helpful thoughts contained in the "People's Paper," for the Lord is good to His people. I would like to help with more contributions, but am coming out of employment for the time being, but take the will for the deed. The friend that Bro. — met and asked me to visit came to my home, and afterwards I went to visit hall and had quite a nice talk upon the Scriptures and the Truth, and he asked me to go again, which I promised.

Yes, every day is swelling the Lord's great army, but what a blessing. and what a deliverance is yet to come for the poor groaning creation. •

Many in the Ecclesias are being stumbled by the Cimcordant Version purporting to be an exact expression of the Greek in the English language. but its leanings toward Universalism are very subtle and misleading. Then Others are denying the Lord's presence. that wonderful truth, with all the undoubted signs which are almost sight, but so it is. Some are sending out papers to this effect, and many are adopting the views, so childish. May the Lord keep us in His is Presence "Parousia" and then receive us to Himself, where perplexities will be at an end, where we shall be known even as we are known.

Praying the Lord's blessing upon you,

Your Bro. by His Grace,

B. H. J.

"Return to thine own house, and show how great things God hath done unto thee."—Luke 8:39.

Are. you seeking to be your best to those nearest to you? If not, you may be quite sure you are missing some of life's purest joy and highest service. How often the teaching of the Christian home is discounted by the want of earnest effort to please and gladden and serve in the family circle! To those nearest to us God has given a stronger claim upon us than any others in the world.—Selected.

BROKEN WITH HIM. OUR PARTICIPATION AND PRIVILEGE.

JUST as the grape must be crushed in order to lose its identity, and produce the refreshing, life-giving properties, so our Saviour trod the winepress alone, pouring out His soul unto death, in order that the life sustaining blood might flow, and the world of mankind experience its cleansing, healing, and restorative powers in the Millennial Morning. In the meanwhile, we are invited to take up our cross, deny ourselves, and follow Christ. We, too, must lose our identity as human beings in the carrying forward of the work of sanctification unto obedience, and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ, and daily being made meet for the inheritance of the saints in light. In this connection, can we not more fully appreciate the words of the Prophet in 53rd chapter of Isaiah: "Surely He hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows, yet we did esteem Him stricken, smitten of God and afflicted. But He was wounded for our transgressions is, bruised for our iniquity, the chastisement of our peace was upon Him, and with His stripes are we healed."

As we always joyfully and earnestly gather to commemorate our Lord's death, and "with desire" partake of the emblems which are so grandly significant and mean so much, let us at this time remember that there is constant need for self-examination. While we lovingly and gratefully view the morrow and succeeding days, and rejoice inasmuch as the Lord is "risen indeed," we would recall the experiences which took place when the time came, at our Lord's first advent, that the Great Passover Lamb must be slain, and how a particular testing and trial time came upon our Lord's followers.

It was at this time that, amongst His loyal disciples, the most courageous forsook Him and fled. Another disciple, in his timidity, even denied his Master. On this occasion also there were those who would be found disputing amongst themselves as to who would be the greatest; and, finally, there was one amongst them who would prove so degraded, selfish, and despicable, as to betray his Master for this world's paltry gain, and that with a kiss.

What an occasion is this for looking to our own hearts, respecting the measure and degree of our faith, loyalty, courage, and willingness, in confessing Him under every circumstance and condition, as we desire to show our gratitude and love for the Master, who died that we might obtain "so great salvation." Shall we not the rather more firmly resolve that by God's grace we will not deny our Lord, but at all times gladly seek to acknowledge Him, not only with lip service, but also 'by our every manner of life?

So then, to the sincere child of God, having a true knowledge and deep appreciation of his or her covenant of sacrifice, and highly favoured standing in and through Christ, and a thorough realisation of what consecration to God means and embodies in its every aspect, respecting His will for us, a review of an occasion like this will surely be one of supreme interest and intense desire, for was it not in accordance with the injunction and will of our Head, and in joy and thankfulness, while yet with due solemnity in keeping with the occasion, that we partook of the 'blessed emblems of the bread and wine which are so full of meaning and deep import to each one of us?

To those who thus assemble on these memorial occasions which signify the anniversary of our Lord's death on 'our behalf, and in the larger sense and viewpoint, our privilege and responsibility in that one great sacrifice, as members of His Body, is it not -fitting that we look back over the past, and, weighing the matter carefully, seek to examine ourselves and determine whether or not we have partaken worthily, or been as earnest, zealous, and enthusiastic as we might have been in the carrying out of our vow of consecration, to be broken with our Head, and to drink of Ilk cup of suffering, which the tokens signify?

How strange is the attitude and viewpoint of some of the Lord's people respecting this great privilege and blessing in memorialising our dear Redeemer's death and partaking of the tokens which speak so forcibly and significantly to us. While in the past these brethren have seemed to rejoice in the great privilege of meeting with others of like faith to celebrate and partake, thus manifesting their desire to be broken with our Lord, and to drink of the cup which He drank of, now we hear of their changed viewpoint, when they state that on account of our Lord's presence it is not incumbent or necessary for the Lord's people to celebrate or memorialise our Saviour's death, because His Word says that such celebration is only "until He come," and now that He has come, and we are living in the days of His parousia, the partaking of the emblems can have no value or meaning to His people. how regrettable to see the blindness that is creeping over many in these latter days of peril and ensnarement, and to see the faith becoming beclouded by giving heed to false doctrines and seducing spirits, which ever lie in wait to deceive.

In this connection let the Lord's true followers ever keep before their minds the many precious teachings respecting our Heavenly Father's will and divine purpose. in that He is seeking out a Bride for His Son, only on condition that such a class fulfil their covenant of sacrifice to suffer and be broken with their prospective Bridegroom, and earnestly seek to carry out that covenant, in filling up that which is behind of the sufferings of Christ, for His Body's sake, the Church. In the expression, “Till He come,” can we not see the all-embracing theme of the “mystery” that has been hid’ from ages and from generations, and now revealed only to those who come. through consecration, under the enlightenment and influence of God’s. Holy Spirit, by which we are begotten, and by which means alone can spiritual things be discerned? What a deep antitypical lesson, and full of beauty and meaning, have we in the “Atonement day sacrifices” of the animal slain. in connection with God’s people of old, fleshly Israel, and the covenant relationship.

The Apostle tells us that their tabernacle services and sacrifices were given us as a shadow of grander and better things to come, and were written and carried out for our admonition and learning during this anti-typical Atonement day, the Gospel Age. In connection with the Lord’s words to His disciples on the eve of His crucifixion, “That He would drink no more of the fruit of the vine until that day when He would drink it anew with them in the Kingdom,” do we not clearly discern 1 I is words to mean that when the last of His is Body-members had partaken of the cup to the full, then the sufferings of Christ, Head and Body. would be over, and the Millennial blessings would then be instituted under the glorious reign of Christ and His Church, as they figuratively drink of a different cup, representing joy and gladness, and be made partakers of a different experience, that of glory, honor, and immortality, and the eternal joys of the kingdom.

How beautifully clear are the Apostle Paul’s words respecting this matter. when he says that we. the Body-members of Christ, together with our head, being many constitute the “One Loaf,” and again, “the bread which we break is it not the communion or participation of the Bode- of Christ?”

How significant to the saintly child of God is the expression, “Christ the Anointed One,” and our privilege of coming under the Holy Anointing as so beautifully expressed in the 133rd Psalm. Only when we get a proper viewpoint of our acceptance in the Beloved can we fully comprehend and appreciate the purpose of our Heavenly Father to have a class, predestinated before the foundation of the world to be the chosen Bride of the Lamb, on terms and conditions so plainly marked out for the true child of God.

Only as we suffer can we hope to reign; only as we are willing to drink of the same cup as our Lord partook of, can we claim to be “members in particular’: of the Body of the Anointed One.

Perhaps, one of the most interesting, helpful, and typical pictures we have in enabling us to see the meaning of our Lord’s words, “Till He Come,” is found in the killing of the bullock and the goat in connection with the Jewish Atonement Day sacrifices. The Apostle tells us in Hebrews 13:11-13. “That the bodies of those beasts. whose blood is brought into the sanctuary ‘by the High Priest for sin, are burned without the camp, wherefore Jesus also that He might sanctify the people with His own blood, suffered without the gate; Let us go, therefore. unto Him without the camp, bearing His reproach.” What could be clearer than these words of the inspired Apostle. enabling us to see our participation and fellowship with our Lord and Head, as these sacrificing members are being “killed all the day long,” and found filling up that which is left over of the sufferings of Christ for His Body’s sake, which is the Church.

The Apostle Paul also speaks of the shed blood as being the blood of the Covenant on behalf of many, for the remission of sin. As this New Covenant on behalf of the many, the ‘world of mankind cannot go into effect until the sacrifice in death of the last member of the Body of Christ has taken place, and the fulness from among the Gentiles be come in, so Bible students rejoice in the privilege of the breaking of bread, and drinking of the cup of suffering, in order that when the Bride class is complete the great marriage of the Lamb will take place, and the injunction of our Lord’s words, “Until He come,” will have been finally and faithfully observed as members in that blessed “Anointed One,” of whom Christ is the Head.

Finally, let us not forget that while we rejoice in the great hope set before us of being Joint heirs with our Lord in His kingdom, the pathway to tread is only by way of the Cross. “Whosoever will save his life shall lose it.” We must all pass through the trying experiences represented by the winepress. We are to lay down our lives by spending and being spent in the divine service. We are to joyfully and obediently submit ourselves to the crushing experiences, and as the wine is produced at the cost of the life of the grape, so we, too, are to be obliterated as humans. and become New Creatures. If we suffer with Him we shall also reign with Him—not otherwise.

So, then, we gladly accept the invitation to drink of His cup and not until the cup has been drained to the last, shall we receive the other cup, the cup of Kingdom joys, and the glories of the kingdom are only to God’ faithful saints. Forward to the future joy All my longing hopes aspire,

And for this world's mean alloy
I will not henceforth inquire.
O, the joy of that blest hour,
When, in glory, Christ I'll meet—
Raised by Him to queenly power,
In His righteousness complete.

WATCH AND PRAY!

Watch and pray, the storm clouds hover over,
Fierce billows gather near with threat'ning shock;
Watch and pray, no harm can e'er come nigh thee,
If thou art safely anchored to the Rock.

Watch and pray, the powers of night and darkness
Determine to engulf thee in their sway;
But swift the answer cometh from our Tower,
"I still am with thee, loved one—watch and pray."

Watch and pray, temptations round thee gather,
Cling to the Rock—its shelter hideth thee,
Tho' thousands fall, thou'rt safe if thou art watching,
Safe in its shelter, from the angry sea.

Watch and pray, trust fully, thou wilt never
Be swept away, then, by the seething foam.
A little while, the storms will all be over,
Then, child, a loving God will take thee Home.

HUMILITY IN SERVICE.

AT the time of this lesson Jesus, with His twelve apostles, was en route for Jerusalem. He had just explained to them more particularly the ignominy, shame and death which He would experience, and repeated His assurance of His resurrection. The rich young ruler had just visited Him, and gone away sorrowful upon learning the terms of discipleship. Jesus had just said, “How hardly shall they who have riches enter into the Kingdom.” The apostles had inquired what they should have since they had left all, and Jesus assured them that they should have a hundredfold more in this present time, with persecution, and in the world to come everlasting life.

The context says that Jesus was walking in advance of the twelve, who were discussing matters amongst themselves, overawed by the stupendous things which the Lord had declared to be imminent. The courage of our Lord in the narrow way fills us with admiration. What a strong character was His! He had no thought of turning back; He was intent upon accomplishing His Father’s will—upon sacrificing Himself in the interest of others. A noble pattern the apostles saw before them—greatness in humility, victory through service.

A GOODLY HERITAGE DESIRED.

It was at this time that James and John approached the Lord in a private manner. Matthew tells us that their mother Salome was with them and really made the request for them in their names. Salome is supposed to have been the sister of Mary, the aunt of Jesus, in which event James and John were His full cousins. Realising that matters were drawing to a crisis, they sought of the Lord an assurance that they might be very close to Him in the Kingdom, one on His right hand and one on His left, the two positions of chiefest favour.

Our Lord did not reprove them, for doubtless He read in their hearts a great love and loyalty toward Himself; and the desire for the positions indicated not merely the desire for the honours and authority implied, but specially because this would bring them closer to Himself.

Had the Lord seen in their hearts an evil form of ambition, undoubtedly He would have reproved it on the spot. His answer, however, was so framed as to impress these brothers and all of His followers since with what is implied in joint-heirship with the Lord in the Kingdom. ‘Very forceful is the expression, “Ye know not what ye ask. Are ye able to drink of the cup that I drink of, and be baptised with the baptism that I am baptised with?”’

The cup signifies experiences—as, for instance, when our Lord said, “The cup which My Father hath given Me, shall I not drink it?” (John 18:11.) Our Lord wished His disciples to see clearly that the Father had poured for Him a special cup of experiences, and had required of Him special baptism into death, as conditions precedent to His glory and kingdom; and that whoever would become if is associates in the Kingdom must become also His associates in the sufferings of this present time—in the ignominy and whatever experiences the Father might see best to permit as tests of faith and devotion and character. Our Lord did not refer to the Memorial Supper cup, but to the experiences which it symbolised, even as He did not refer to water baptism, but to the baptism into death which is symbolised by the water immersion.

How heart-searching was this question! It meant, “are ye willing?” because it would be impossible for the disciples to have known their own ability except in the sense of having confidence in God that He would give the ability to those who had their wills thoroughly subjected to His. This is illustrated in the symbolical baptism in which one no more buries himself than he raises himself. We merely surrender our wills, our all, to the Lord, and He, by His Word and grace, works in us to will and ultimately to do His good pleasure—expecting from us only the possibilities, and assisting us to these with grace sufficient for us, for every time of need.

“MY GRACE IS SUFFICIENT FOR YOU.”

That these two noble apostles were not inspired by selfish ambitions in this request is evidenced by their prompt reply to the Lord’s searching question and later on evidenced by their faithfulness even unto death. They said, “We are able”—that is, “We are willing. God helping us, we will sacrifice everything to follow in your footsteps; we will count nothing dear unto us; we will lay aside every weight and every sinful besetment; we will run with patience the race set before us, looking unto Jesus, the Author and Finisher of our faith.” ‘This we may assume to be a larger statement of their devotion.

Our Lord’s love and sympathy went out to them afresh as He answered them, guaranteeing that with such willingness of heart they should indeed have the experiences necessary to fit them for a place in the Kingdom. What a comfort this is to even the weakest of the Lord’s followers who are sincere!

The Lord looketh at the heart, and if He sees there full devotion to Himself, He is pleased to grant to such His blessing, His aid, saying, “I will never leave thee nor forsake thee”; “My grace is sufficient for thee—My strength is made perfect in weakness.” We, too, are desirous of sharing the Kingdom with our Lord, yet not from love of exaltation above others, but from a desire to have this evidence that we please our Father and our - Lord Jesus—to have this closeness of relationship to Him. and to have the privilege of participation with our dear - Redeemer in the great work of blessing all the families of the earth in due time. It is well that we should have the Lord’s answer clearly before our minds and know that unless we partake of His cup and are immersed into His death, we can have no share in His Kingdom of glory. Let us then count all things else as loss and as dross to obtain this necessary experience. As it comes to us let us not be fearful, nor think strange the fiery trials that shall try us, as though some strange thing had happened unto us. On the contrary, even hereunto were we called, that we might now suffer with the Lord and by and by be glorified together with Him.

As for the particular place to be occupied in the Kingdom by the sons of Zebedee or by us, our Lord pointed out that the assigning of such positions was in the Father’s hands—the choicest positions shall be given to those for whom they have been prepared by the Father. Not that we are to understand that the Father prepared the places in advance by any arbitrary divisions, ‘but rather that the Father’s prearranged plan is that each of the followers of Jesus shall have positions of honour in the Kingdom proportionate to the zeal of their faithfulness in the present time—for none shall have any part in the Kingdom who do not now prove faithful.

THE MEEKEST AND MOST ZEALOUS.

It is not for us to decide the zeal and faithfulness of the apostles—to say which two would better fill these positions of chiefest honour. The Father will make no mistake. It will not surprise us, however, should we find the Apostle Paul in one of these two positions. His faithful, loving zeal and loyalty seem to shine out conspicuously even amongst those who were also faithful and loyal. It is not for us to have any ambitious feelings respecting this matter, except that we desire always to serve the Lord and be pleasing to Him, and eventually to be as close to Him as possible. When we remember that the closer we come to Him in the present trials and experiences and sufferings with faithfulness the closer we will be to Him in the future, it explains to us the meaning of the Apostle’s words when speaking of his severe trials: he called them light afflictions but for a moment, working out a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.-2 Cor. 4:17.

We recall that there had been, a little while before, some rivalry amongst the apostles as to which should be greatest in the Kingdom. At that time Jesus took a little child as an exemplification of candour and guilelessness, and assured them that unless they became as little children—simple-hearted, honest, candid—they could in no wise have any part in His Kingdom. Now, when the ten other disciples learned the special mission of Salome and the request made by and for James and John, they were indignant at them. Possibly some of them, Judas included, were very anxious for the authority and power and dignity of the throne, but without the very special love and longing to be near the Master Himself, which seems to have influenced James and John in their request. But Jesus set matters straight with them all, and turned their displeasure into an opportunity for another good lesson, by the assurance that the chief positions in the Kingdom would be given along the lines of meritorious service, and that thus each one of them would have his opportunity to strive for the chief position by striving to render service to the others.

Amongst the Gentiles the rulers are lords, who do no serving but are served, but among the followers of Jesus the rule is to be reversed: he who would serve most was to be esteemed most highly. What a beauty there is in the divine order of How thoroughly all who are right-minded can sympathise with the principles here laid down! How reasonable they are and how contrary to the spirit of the world. ‘ Truly, the Lord’s followers will in this sense of the word be a peculiar people in their zeal for good works—for serving one another and for doing good unto all men as they have opportunity. The Apostle ‘Peter emphasises this point (1 Peter 5:6), “Humble yourselves, therefore, under the mighty hand of God, that He may exalt you in due time.” “He that humbleth himself shall be exalted, and he that exalteth himself shall be abased.”—Luke 14:11.

OUR LORD SERVANT OF ALL.

The Lord did not have one standard for His followers and another standard for Himself. Consequently, when they heard Him say, “Whosoever of you will be chief shall be servant of all,” they could promptly recognise that this was the course that He had pursued—that He had been, servant to them all; and it was on account of the services that He was continually rendering them that they delighted to serve Him, to acknowledge Him their Master, and to walk in His steps. Indeed, they had seen only a small fragment of the Lord’s sacrificing and of its far-reaching influence as a service to others. We can see this as we recognise the fact that our Lord was about to die, not merely for His disciples, not merely for the Jews, but to be a propitiation for the sins of the whole world, that the whole world eventually might have a blessing—a blessed opportunity for coming to life eternal through the Merit of His service. Our Lord called this to their attention, saying, “For verily the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto (served) but to minister (serve), and to give His life a ransom for many.” This is one of the very explicit statements of Scripture respecting the object of our Lord’s death—that it was not for His own sins that He died: that, on the contrary, it was for ours, and that in thus dying He gave Himself a ransom price—a corresponding price for the sins of the whole world.

No other lesson needs to be so carefully learned by the Lord’s people as this lesson of humility. It has to do with the very humblest of the flock, as well as with those who are teachers and elders and pilgrims, etc.; but the degree of force that seems to come with the besetment or temptation seems to multiply in proportion to the position and attainments of the individual. Pride and ambition may be in those who have no official position in the Church, often asserted in fault-finding and criticism which, to the hearers, is intended to imply superior wisdom or ability on the part of the critic—that his wisdom—only, waits for opportunity to manifest his greatness above his fellows. We are not objecting to a kindly, brotherly word of criticism given privately and with a view to helpfulness, but merely to the kind which vaunteth itself and seeks to do injury to the reputation of another occupying a preferred position.

“BE NOT MANY OF YOU TEACHERS”

As the Apostle intimates, however, this besetment bears chiefly upon those who have some talent, some ability, and whom their fellows have to some extent honoured as teachers: Little men, like little ships with broad sails, are in great danger - of being capsized if too strong a wind of popularity plays upon them. Not only so, but we believe that even the most humble, the most faithful, the most zealous of the servants of the cause, have continual need to be on their guard lest their good intentions should be used of the Adversary as a trap for their ensnarement. Let us remember the Apostle’s words, “Be not many of you teachers; my brethren, knowing that a man (who is a teacher) shall receive greater condemnation”—he is exposed to greater trials and temptations as a result. This must not hinder any who have talents from using them, but it should make each one very careful that he does not think more highly of himself than he ought to think, but to think soberly. If the judgment of the majority of the congregation does not recognise his adaptation to the service of a teacher, he should humbly accept its conclusion as correct, no matter how highly he had thought of himself previously. And even if the majority should conclude that he is worthy of a position as a teacher in Zion, he should tread very softly before the Lord, very humbly, realising that those who in any degree attempt to impart instruction in spiritual things to others are to that extent acting as representatives and mouthpieces of the Lord Himself, the Head of the body; and all should keep in mind the Lord’s words in this text and His own exemplification of the matter—that he who serves most and not he who lords it most should have the chief respect of the Lord’s people.

BE STRONG.

Be strong to bear, O heart of mine,
Faint not when sorrows come.
The sum of all these ills of earth
Prepares thee for thy home.

So many burdened ones there are Close toiling by thy side,
Assist, encourage, comfort them,
Thine own deep anguish hide.

What though thy trials may seem great?
Thy strength is known to God,
And pathways steep and rugged lead
To pastures green and broad.

Be strong to love, O heart of mine,
Live not for self alone;
But find, in blessing other lives,
Completeness for thine own.

Seek every hungry heart to feed,
Each saddened heart to cheer,
And when stern justice stands aloof,
In mercy draw thou near.

True, loving words and helpful hands
Have won more souls for Heaven
Than all the mixed and various creeds
By priests and sages given.

For every grief a joy will come,
For every toil a rest;
So hopes, so love, so patient bear—
God doeth all things best.

Be strong to hope, O heart of mine,
Look not on life's dark side;
For just beyond these gloomy hours
Rich, radiant days abide.

Let hope, like summer's rainbow bright,
Scatter thy falling tears,
And let God's precious promises
Dispel thine anxious fears.

SODOM WAS REALLY BURNT DOWN.

Site Discovery Proves It -was -Older than Jericho.

JERUSALEM.—The Pontifical Biblical Institute's excavations have resulted in the discovery of the site of Sodom, one of the "cities of the plain," mentioned in the Book of Genesis.

The remains of the city are situated on the eastern plain of Jordan, approximately five miles north of the Dead Sea. They contain pottery and other articles showing that the city was built early in the Bronze Age.

Therefore Sodom was more ancient than Jericho, but possessed an advanced type of civilisation.

The excavations prove that the city was destroyed by a great fire, and has not been inhabited since.

(Sodom and Gomorrah, it is stated in Genesis, were destroyed by fire when "the Lord rained upon Sodom and upon Gomorrah brimstone and fire from the Lord out of heaven," because "their sin was very grievous.")

It is no delusion, NO dream of a hot brain, NO error of a too confiding SOUL, that has made the children of God delight to trust in His providential aid. When God, in deed and in truth, is present and dominant in the soul of a man, He can and He will give to that soul a real guidance.—H.S.S. PEOPLES PAPER.

EXCERPT PITTSBURG CONVENTION REPORT.

HAVE we ever stopped to really think seriously just how the Saviour would view matters and what He would say to us were He visibly to appear in our midst in these times? Sonic have said, "Oh! how I wish the Master would visit with us as He did with those disciples long ago; how I wish I might consult Him with regard to many questions that have so troubled me; I am sure, if the Master were right in our midst, we could soon have the burning vexing problems and issues that have disturbed us in these recent years quickly settled." But, brethren, is there any question, problem or difficulty before us to-day that Master has not already answered in one or another of His.- many sayings when He was here long ago? Has He not through the Spirit in the Apostolic messages dealt with all the present issues?

But still someone says, "If He were here I would like to ask Him who has charge of His Church to-day, and whom He has put over His people to control and direct them with power and authority." How would Jesus reply to this 'question? I believe that we already have His answer to that question— "clear disciples, I have never vacated the position the Father gave to Me in the beginning of the Age. As I then said, "One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren," so now I say that I alone have charge of My Church, and I have never delegated authority to any man or company of men to rule over the Church or to interfere with the individual liberty of each member.

Another might ask: Master, tell us what great movement or work have you authorised your people to carry on in the earth to-day; what great pronouncement is there to be made in fulfilment of your will? Again we may be sure the Lord would answer in harmony with what he established as the mission of the Church when it was instituted, and that answer would be: I have not authorised any great movement or any great work to be achieved during this dispensation, for "My Kingdom is not of this world." I remind you that in the beginning of the Age I said that My people would be few, but a little flock, that they would be scattered here and there throughout the earth. I never authorised My disciples to organise any great and wonderful work while yet in their earthly pilgrimage. Was not this the sum of the teachings of Christ and the apostles with regard to what was authorised or expected of the faithful Church all along through the centuries until her glorification?

Another question might be: Master, will you not tell us just who and where your people are to be found in the earth to-day so that we may be numbered among them and thus enjoy fellowship with the true saints. We believe the Lord would answer, saying, "My followers are those who do the will of My Father in heaven; they are those who possess My Spirit; they are such as are consecrated—surrendered—to My will; they are those who deny themselves and have taken up their cross to follow Me; in fact, whoever will do the will of My Father, the same is My brother. My sister, My mother."

And, dear brethren, should not this reply of the Master be satisfactory to us? Do we not really love all who love the Lord Jesus and possess His Spirit? As many as are led by the Spirit of God they are the sons of God.

All our perplexities of to-day can be settled if we properly take them to the Lord and enquire what the Spirit has long ago said unto the Church.

MAN, NEARLY BLIND, GOES IN SEARCH 'OF LIGHT AND COMES BACK CURED.

UNDER the above heading the following appeared in the Melbourne "Herald" of 1st July:—A man returned to Australia to-day, who went away at the 'beginning of the year doubting if ever he would see Australia again.

When he left Australia, Mr. G. Kontalis was going blind. He had consulted every eye specialist of note in Sydney, and each of them had held out no hope. He was suffering from detachment of the retina.

He sent cables to his native Greece, which he had left 20 years before, and then he decided, as a last resort, to go there and see if anything could be done for him.

"The saddest moment of my life," he said, "was when I left my wife and small children standing on the wharf in Sydney. I felt that it was very unlikely that I would see them again, for what remained of my sight seemed to be failing.

"In Greece the specialists told me the story that I had been told in Sydney. There was no cure.

"One specialist, however, advised me to see a specialist in Switzerland, Professor Gonin, of Lausanne. I caught the express the next day. The doctor performed an operation and I am cured. My eyesight is 70 per cent. normal, and it is improving every day.

"There is so much joy for me in being cured," Mr. Kontalis said, "that I want everybody to know. I can barely wait until I get home to show my family that I am cured and that I can see them all again."

Maybe from the above report Bible students are again reminded of the deeper lessons derived from the experiences of everyday life respecting mankind and their attendant ailments and trials. We can all rejoice with this gentleman as he has at last been blessed with renewed sight (after having almost despaired), and the great joy experienced by him and his family in consequence.

While rejoicing greatly at every evidence of beneficence and uplift enacted amongst mankind generally in these days, do we not • the more deeply appreciate the plan and purpose of God, in His rich provision, through Christ, for the poor groaning creation (in the near future we believe) when the Great Physician will open all the blind eyes, and when men shall see out of obscurity, and come to praise the Creator to the utmost. (Isa. 29:18; 35:5.) At the present time (2 Cor, 4:4) "Satan has blinded the eyes of all that believe not, lest the glorious light of the Gospel of Christ should shine unto them."

Just as it was necessary for the afflicted one to go to the mountains (Switzerland), so, when Christ's Kingdom is inaugurated, it will be essential for mankind to go up to the mountain (Kingdom)' of our Lord for the real eyesalve, at the hands of the Great Restorer and Physician, and where the healing balm will be poured out for all Greeks (Gentiles) who seek earnestly and patiently the blessings of the Kingdom during the Millennial reign of Christ.

Then, as with the Greek and his home, all families of the earth will greatly rejoice and men will praise the Lord and sound His Name abroad throughout all the earth for His goodness.

"For dwellers in darkness with sin-blinded eyes, The Light of the World is Jesus, They'll walk at His bidding and light shall arise, The Light of the World is Jesus."

“THE DEAN OF PETERBOROUGH AND THE FLOOD.”

The following letter was addressed to the editor of “The British Weekly,” and appeared in a recent issue:—

“Sir,—It’s is a pity that Deans in the Church of England have so little time for study, Dr. Langdon, the

Professor of Assyrian at the Uni of Oxford, himself once held the Dean of Peterborough, has mistaken view that there was no Noah and no Flood. He now handsomely acknowledges his former error, holds firmly by the ‘historical accuracy’ of the Old Testament, and by his own discoveries has placed the fact of the Deluge beyond dispute as having taken place about 3400 B.C. He has even found ten kings ‘before the Flood, and sent notice of these ‘epoch-making’ facts (as he calls them) to the Press of Europe and America. I am now able to add to his authority that of his predecessor, Dr. Sayce, who, since the new discoveries at Babylon authenticating the traditional dates and facts of the Book of Daniel, allows me to state that he now regards the ‘Higher Criticism’ as bankrupt: the rout is complete.’

I wish Deans would keep abreast of scientific research. ‘The priest’s lips should keep knowledge, for he is the messenger of the Lord of Hosts.’—Mal. 2:7.”

Dare to look up to God and say: “Deal with me in the future as Thou wilt; I am of the same mind as Thou art;

I am Thine; I refuse nothing that pleases Thee; lead me where Thou wilt; clothe me in any dress Thou choosest.” — Epictetus.

A Present Day Church Service.

Another evidence of the spirit of the times is manifested by the following report published in the Melbourne "Age," dated 30th June, 1930, with regard to one of the usual "Pleasant Sunday Afternoon" meetings held under the auspices of the Methodist Church:—

"Prolonged applause greeted reference made at Wesley Church yesterday to the splendid performance of the Australian cricketers in England by Mr. I. Mackinnon, president of the Victorian Cricket Association, during the course of his address on "The Place of Sport in National Life."

Mr. Mackinnon is reported to have read out the cricket scores amidst further loud applause, and said he hoped the Australians would win, because it would put us on the map once more.

To the sincere 'Christian, hungering for the "Bread from Heaven," an occasion such as this must indeed have proved most unprofitable. It seems almost incredible that a professing Christian denomination would apparently allow such little oversight respecting the order of its meetings, and introduce a topic entirely of a worldly nature, and at a time and occasion when the Gospel Message should have been the all-absorbing theme for consideration.

According to Divine Prophecy it is apparent that there is a "famine in the land," not for the material, worldly, or carnal things, but for the "true Bread from Heaven." How often many Christian people attend church meetings • only to be turned "empty away," and for an "egg" receive the "stone" as foretold. Surely a great responsibility rests on every preacher, who has named the Name of Christ, as to the nature of the message he would give out.

Judging by the attitude of the congregation at Wesley Church, it would seem that the majority were delighted at the reference made regarding the test match, and no doubt have come to so regard these "pleasant" Sunday afternoon gatherings as very pleasing to the natural mind, which must be, and is, entirely opposed to the spiritual mind and desires of the true child of God.

God's Word declares that Christendom of to-day would be found worldly, indifferent, and largely blinded to the true teachings of the Bible, and thus constituting "Babylon," be judged as a class, "weighed in the balance and found wanting."—Rev. 18:4.

When disappointment foils you, and what you thought was best
Fades away as daylight when the sun sinks in the west—
Then tread the paths of wisdom, where riches real and true
Are waiting to be gathered—the treasure's great for you! —Prov. 2:1-11; James 3:17.

When wisdom's gems are gathered, rare gems which beautify,
Then praise the Lord of heaven, who heard your feeble cry,
And send them hither, thither, there are others in distress,
If you would live forever, then you must live to bless. —2 Cor. 9:6-15; 1 John 2:17. 30

Dear Brother,-

I have to thank you for sending me the copy of Leaser and Morton Edgar's paper on the British Israel question. These I am keeping meantime for further perusal, if you don't mind.

I have just skimmed Bro. Edgar's pamphlet. and I think his ideas regarding the resurrection are helpful; for I do not think, if the various tribes are to 'be again reformed, it is possible that the material-I might say the mixed material—at present available can help to any extent. But personally I do not see that there will be-need for discrimination in the work of the Kingdom, unless there will be some form of ritual needed to help some races—like pictures illustrating special heavenly teaching, for Christ used earthly things to illustrate heavenly.

But I find that the British Israel quest is not for the Ten Tribes as such. Joseph or Ephraim is the Tribe they are only concerned about, or chiefly, for the promises made to Ephraim approximate more closely the British fulfilment. They are put to great straits to get history to trace the wanderings of the Tribes to Britain, and apparently do not mind twisting things to suit. They make history out of their own "probabilities" and "conjectures," but the language of the New Testament decisively destroys their imaginings. "I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the House of Israel," said Christ, and He came to where He found them. •

Again thanking you and with Christian regards, Yours in Him M.W.

Question Box.

Question.—What is your thought re Ancient Worthies coming lack before the Great Company are glorified?

Answer.—We do not know of any scripture that would seem to teach that the Ancient Worthies would be resurrected before the members of the Great Company are glorified. To our understanding the raising of the Ancient worthies is part of the restitution work at the beginning of the Millennial Age, and the spirit-begotten class selected during the Gospel Age, must be complete before the Great Mediator, Christ, Head and Body, could reign for the restitution work. the Great Company will not be of the Bride filling their covenant of rice willingly. As the merit of our Redeemer is applied on behalf of the spirit-begotten class only, during this Gospel Age, our understanding is that it could not be applied to the Ancient Worthies, or the world of mankind until the new Creation is complete.

We realise. also. that there is no call to the Great Company class—we are all called in the one hope of our calling (Eph. 4:4)—and the provision God has made for -the lesser reward is an evidence of great mercy and favor, so that a large number of spirit-begotten sons do not go into the second death.

Question.—When did the Lord come to His temple, and how do You understand Malachi 3:1-6?

Answer.—This prophecy had its fulfilment at the first advent of Christ. The angel, in promising Zacharias the birth of John refers to him as the one who would fulfil this prophecy, de Luke 1:15-17, and Zacharias, being filled with the Holy Spirit when John was born, sings, “Thou, child, shalt be called the prophet of the Highest, for thou shalt go - before the face of the Lord to prepare His ways,” Luke 1:76. Our Lord also identifies John as the fulfiller of this prophecy in Matt. 11:7-14.

The Messenger of the Covenant, the Logos, Messiah, then came to Israel. “He came unto His own and His own received Him not.” He came to the temple and there witnessed to the-truth. The few were purified, and as wheat they were gathered into the Gospel gamer. The harvest of that period was ended; the words rang out; “your house is left unto you desolate,” and the bundles of chaff were ‘burned in the great destruction of Jerusalem—Ezek. 15. “Who may abide the day of His coming?” Only a remnant was saved. Rom. 9:27.

Reading to the end of Malachi’s prophecy it would seem evident that a further fulfilment is indicated in respect of the Christian Church what Paul speaks of as the Israel of God. As the angel of the Covenant” (the Law Covenant was also the Abrahamic Covenant) came quite unawares to the typical temple of Israel, just so He would come again as a thief. Rev. 3:3. “If, therefore, thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know at what hour I shall have come” (Diaglott).

As the Lord was present purifying the sons of Levi, calling out “the Israelites indeed,” conducting the harvest the religious leaders of that clay knew it not, jus so He would again come unawares to Christendom, the Harvest of the Age would proceed, He would be dealing with His- own who are all to be sealed prior to the great time of trouble which will destroy the present systems as completely as the Jewish polity was burned up. After this, His saints having all been glorified, His Kingdom will be established and righteousness and peace begin to dwell on earth. The Jewish people (Israel) will then come again into prominence, being blessed according to the Abrahamic promise. Rom. 11:25-29.

All evidences seem to indicate that the Lord came to His Temple many years ago, and has been conducting the harvest work and judging among His people. Who shall be able to stand? At the first advent the Lord came as a man “made flesh” to deal with a natural people, -but the second coming is to a spiritual people, who walk by faith and not ‘by sight, and He comes not again in a ‘body of humiliation that can he located, seen or handled. but in power and great glory as a spiritual being. “in the express image of the Father.” It is, tl • -fore. only those “brethren Who arc not in darkness those watching, who can recognise His knock and rejoice in His presence. 1 Thess. 5:1-9; Rev. 3:20.

BE YE TRANSFORMED.

THIS subject is relating to our character development, an important feature of the plan of God. The Christian's part in the eternal purpose depends upon his character development. God's plan is going to be carried out. He will have a class selected from the earth who will worship and serve Him. But whether we are to be of the heavenly number who will eternally love and praise Him and eternally enjoy His favour and blessing depends upon individual character development in Christ. So after becoming acquainted with the various features of the plan of God in a general way, our minds seem to fix upon that one thing, upon which the enjoyment of God's eternal blessing depends.

The great questions that confront us, then, are: What is the standard of character that we must develop in order to have the assurance of enjoying the plan of God in its consummation throughout the endless ages of eternity? Is it possible to develop such a character? And how is it developed?

Let us notice the standard that God has set. In Romans 8:29 it reads, “Whom He did foreknow, He also did predestinate (determine or decide) to be conformed to the image of His Son.” This shows the standard. God has decided that this class whom He did foreknow to be joint-heirs with Christ should be character images of Christ. The same thought is given in Eph. 4:11-16, when it speaks of the Lord's providing of evangelists, teachers and pastors for the perfecting of the Church, for the edifying (instruction) of the body of Christ. For how long? Until they come to the unity of the faith, unto a perfect man. What is that perfect man? Unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. We see from this last clause that the full measure of 'Christ's character is the standard.

Again, in Eph. 5:25-27, it says, “Husbands, love your wives even as Christ loved the Church and gave Himself for it; that He might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the Word, that He might present it to Himself a glorious Church not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without ‘blemish.’” Now we can see that if the Church would be presented in His presence without blemish, without spot or wrinkle or any such thing, she would be Christlike. would she not? What does it mean to be presented without fault or without ‘blemish’?

It means that every imperfection of character is to be overcome. Every unholy quality of disposition is to be cleansed away. He washes us from our past sins by His blood; but it takes the Word and constant obedience to sanctify us.

For example, take pride, the disposition of self-exaltation in heart or in act, and therefore an unholy quality of character. Of a king it is written: “His heart was lifted up to destruction.” Humility is expressed in the exhortation “Let each esteem others better (more important) than themselves,” and “Not unto us but unto ‘Thy name give glory.’” Now to be presented without fault and without blemish would mean that this disposition of pride would be so completely eradicated that no temptation, however strong, would ever arouse in the heart in the least degree self-importance or self-exaltation.

Further, since Christ makes the Church holy by making the individuals holy, this passage would read: Christ loved me and gave Himself for me that He might cleanse me by the Word, that He might present me unto Himself a glorious character without spot or wrinkle, that I should be holy and without blemish. Here again holiness or Christ likeness is set as the standard. Additionally, this passage also shows the possibility of reaching that standard. It says Christ so loved the Church, not that He may do an impossible thing; for if it were impossible that we could be presented holy, or to become Christlike and without blemish, do you think that Christ would have died and attempted it? No! Therefore the very fact that Christ died and attempted to sanctify the Church and present it holy, reduces it to a glorious possibility,

There are other texts that teach the same thing. Take Eph. 3:14-19, “For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and in earth is named, that He would grant you according to the riches of His glory, to be strengthened with might by His Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth and length and depth and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fullness of God.” What does it mean to be filled with the fullness of God? It certainly means to be filled with Godlikeness. That is the only reasonable way that we can be filled with the fullness of God while in the flesh. Here again the possibility of our becoming Christlike is taught. God knew that our weak faith and our depravity and our failure to make ourselves holy by our oft-repeated efforts would cause us to doubt the possibility of becoming Christlike. The thought of becoming a complete overcomer seems clearly beyond the range of possibility.

A brother was -once asked, "Do you think it is possible to attain to the condition described in these verses?" He replied, "It is for some." Another replied to the same question, "According to their capacity." We see how they doubted the possibility. But now note carefully and thoughtfully every word of the 20th verse, and it will be seen that reference is made the grand experience described in the previous verses. Now unto Him who is able to do exceedingly abundantly above all that we ask or think according to the power that worketh in us." We see He can do not only as much as we can conceive or ask, but abundantly more. It takes real faith to believe that God can make us holy or Christlike. So we see there is no question as to the standard now. It is Christ likeness or holiness, and it is possible for us as new creatures. And we can scarcely overestimate the importance of being thoroughly convinced of these truths.

If we are fully persuaded that we must become Christ-like or we cannot inherit eternal life, or the Kingdom, and if we are also fully persuaded that we can become like Christ in His strength, we will arouse ourselves to seek to attain it; If we indulge in the thought that our desire to be good, to be holy, to be like 'Christ is all that is necessary, we will never be willing to seek to become holy with sufficient earnestness, or willing to endure the trials and take the crosses that will perfect us in love. We must not let the enemy deceive us. Let this thought ring in our ears: We must become Christ-like, and we can through Him who strengtheneth us. There is a path that leads to it, and we will find and follow it.

Now, let us consider a few scriptures that show the ,necessity of developing^ Christlikeness. Since His character is the standard to be reached, and since it is reached gradually, we must bend all our energies to the attainment of this end, or sooner or later we shall become completely and forever separated from the Lord. He says, "Every branch in Me that beareth not fruit." We notice the 'branch was in the vine and yet did not bear fruit, did not make the effort to become Christlike. What shall become of such branches? "He taketh it away." Our standing in the Lord is not because of our knowledge simply, but because of our becoming Christlike. Are we growing? Are we bearing increasingly the fruit of the spirit? Do we have a clearer insight into what Christ's character is like? Again we must be developing more and more the spirit of the Lord in order to 'be useful now. First by example, "Be thou an example of the believers in word, in conversation, in character, in spirit, in faith, in purity." Arc we becoming examples to others? Is the life or spirit of Christ • being manifest in our mortal body? God expects this of us. The brethren need such an example and stimulus.

In Eph. 6:18 we are told to pray one for another with all prayer and supplication, and in James 5:15, 16, we are told that the prayer of faith shall save the sin sick, and that the prayer of the righteous man availeth much. It is the prayer of a righteous man and the prayer of faith that is to bring the results. A righteous man is not necessarily yet perfect, but he is obedient and growing. In John 15:16 we will notice that Jesus points out that the more we bear fruit (grow in holiness) the more successful will we be in prayer. Christ has chosen us to bear fruit, that whatsoever we ask the Father in His Name He may give it us. We see also the more we develop in character, the more we can serve the brethren by obtaining blessings and enlightenment and mercy for them through prayer. Have we the love that gives us the longing to thus help the brethren, or are we cold, critical and indifferent? If we get into the latter condition we are getting into a dangerous position. Do we pray the prayer of faith, and the prayer of the righteous man on behalf of the brethren? Does our love prompt us to this? We can have such a love if we will.

We find it written in 1 Thess. 3:12, "The Lord make you to increase, and abound in love one toward another." The great. work which the Lord has for us to perform in. the coming Age demands that we become Christlike. No other character would do. We see how hard it is to deal with one another now owing to our lack in courage,. faithfulness, patience, mercy, humility, firmness. Nothing but the love described in the 13th chapter of 1 Cor. will fit us to deal with the fallen race. "Herein is love (to be) made perfect in us, that we may have boldness in. the Day of Judgment, because as He is, so are we (to become) in this world."--1 John 4:17.

God has a love that is not discouraged with the deepest moral degradation in His object, but follows the welfare of the sinner with an unchilled devotion, though He hates the sin with a hatred no less than infinite; and we are to be filled with all the fullness of God. We must grow and grow into Godlikeness.

Another reason: The very character of God demands that we become holy. Habakkuk .1:13 says, "Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil (that is, look on with approval); Thou canst not look upon (or countenance) iniquity." We must be purified from all iniquity and evil before we can have the approval of God. Every defect in our character is evil. So we must perfect character before God could eternally endure us. Psa.:4, 5, says. "For Thou art not a God that bath pleasure in wickedness, evil shall not dwell with Thee; Thou hatest all the workers of iniquity ;" not only in all its grosser and outward forms.

God detects the smallest deflection in our hearts, and His character is so holy that He cannot but hate it. And this 'fitness of character to meet God's approval must be accomplished while in the flesh. Therefore we must in this life perfect character in Christ or else we cannot dwell with God eternally: as it is written, "Be ye holy, for I, the Lord your God, am holy."

BE YE TRANSFORMED.

IN presenting the matter of holiness, perfection of character, Christlikeness, it is necessary to point out a, that this does not mean a perfection in the flesh, which we understand is impossible; but it does mean a perfection of heart, of intention, of will, and of endeavour, for, “Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God” and “Sanctify the Lord God in your hearts.” There is, perhaps, a danger that some might misapprehend the right meaning and think it is perfection in the flesh, and might go to the extreme, as some people have in the past, of claiming that in act, word and thought they were as perfect as the Lord, and would no longer need the robe of His righteousness. This would be a serious mistake, as the parable of The Wedding Garment shows that the taking off or rejection of the robe would work the rejection of the individual from participating in the marriage. Such would ‘be cast into outer darkness of the world, be cut off from the knowledge and illumination of the present truth.

On the other hand, some of the more conscientious of the Lord’s people, realising the imperfection of their flesh, their conduct, words and thoughts, might become wholly discouraged and give up the race entirely. Let such always remember the force of the Apostle’s statement, “Ye are complete in Him,” (Col. 2:10) and the Master’s words, “Abide in Me, and I in you” (John 15:4, 7)..

It is the Father’s will that while we as new creatures thus tabernacle in the flesh, we should grow in grace, grow in knowledge, grow in love, grow in all the fruits of the spirit. It is not the flesh that is to grow up in the Anointed in all things, but the new creature. And the new creature never was a sinner. From its very start or begetting it was holy. It does not, therefore, pass from sin to righteousness, but from one degree to another degree of knowledge and appreciation of righteousness. Every step of the new creature is progress in Christ, progress along spiritual lines. The Lord has provided spiritual bread and spiritual water, and progress will be made in proportion as these are recognised and assimilated. Character development is thus a daily experience to these new creatures.

The character of Jesus becomes more and more their spirit, their disposition. If they maintain their original consecration, if they practise the lessons of the Lord’s Word, and if they grow strong in the Lord through partaking of His spirit, they are thus becoming more and more copies of God’s Son. Their testing is along the lines of continued obedience, continued devotion, as they reach larger degrees of knowledge of the Lord and Plan of God. Like their Redeemer, they must demonstrate that they are faithfully, fully submitted to the Heavenly Father’s will, fully loyal thereto. But we should all know that we must not mistake these new creatures and too closely identify them with the flesh. “Ye are not in the flesh but in the spirit, if so ‘be that the spirit of God dwell in you.” The flesh has its natural tastes, appetites and dispositions, through heredity. These will never be overcome entirely. Hence, as the Apostle says, there is continually a warfare between the flesh and the spirit. The flesh warreth against the spirit and the spirit warreth against the flesh; for the two are contrary.

The new creature fights his good fight of faith in that he stands loyal to the Lord and continues to seek in every way the will of God as did the Saviour. This will mean various encounters with the flesh. As St. Paul says, it signifies brow-beating himself, keeping his body under, and according to Scripture it will be a ‘fight to a finish. It is impossible to fully judge one another in this matter. Some of the Lord’s most loyal people may have a great fight with their flesh. Onlookers- might ‘be inclined to judge them severely and to think that they were not sufficiently loyal. But God alone knoweth the heart. In some instances, as St. Paul intimates, it is difficult even for one to judge himself aright, difficult to know to what extent the new creature 'has done all in its power to war a good warfare against the flesh, and to what extent the new creature may have been partly excusable for some failure to come up to the highest ideals. St. Paul says, "It is a light thing that I should be judged of you, or any man: yea, I judge not mine ownself. There is One that judgeth me."-1 Cor. 4:3, 4.

Sometimes the battle is so closely drawn, sometimes the new creature is so beset by the world, the flesh, and the Adversary, that his victory may seem to outsiders to be rather ignoble. God alone knows to what extent better results were possible. Every Christian, however, has recognised that if his heart has been faithful to the Lord, and the victory has even been only a partial one, nevertheless valuable lessons have been learned by the new creature, and its faithfulness and endurance have demonstrated its loyalty to the Lord, and the principles of His righteousness. The test of Jesus' character was humiliating resignation to the Father's will in everything, even unto death. This demonstrated His love to the Father, His loyalty to the principles represented in the Father's character and government. These are the tests upon all the followers of Jesus. Whoever has this love and this loyalty is to that extent a copy of our Lord.

Let us all be fully agreed as to the grand perfection of character of our Lord, and as to the fact that this heart desire must be in us if we would have the mind of Christ. It is for the Lord to let increasing trials and tests come upon us as we grow older and stronger. Sometimes He permits a great fight from within or without, or both, and we are put to the test of endurance. It is not the Lord's intention that trying experiences shall crush any; but, on the contrary, that the putting forth of endeavour to resist the Adversary and every evil shall make us the stronger. We have the promise, "He will not suffer us to be tempted above that we are able, but will with every temptation provide a way of escape."-1 Cor. 10:13.

Thus it was with our Redeemer. At the very close of His ministry came His most severe tests, and He cried in an agony of spirit, "If it 'be possible, let this cup pass from Me." The triumph of the new creature is shown in the succeeding sentence, "Nevertheless, not My will but Thine be done." As with the Saviour, so with His disciples there is a struggle, a fight, to the end of the journey. With the Master every trial brought a victory. With His followers, because of their inherent weakness of the flesh, this is not so, except as the Lord by His grace turns a partial defeat into victory. The new creature, even partly defeated, is exhorted by the Apostle to come with courage to the throne of heavenly grace, to obtain mercy and find grace to help for future needs. In doing this he is doing what God intended and foreordained for him. But if we say we have no sin (and as respects our flesh, no imperfection of act, word or thought), we deceive ourselves and the truth is not in us. But if we confess our sins (our shortcomings), He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all iniquity."-1 John 1:8, 9. He is just, for this is His plan.

In making this provision for the weakness of our flesh, God is not compromising with sin. _And in accepting this provision we are not compromising with sin either. Now the Apostle Peter gives us some sound advice in character 'building. He says, 1 Peter 1:14, 15: "As .obedient children, not fashioning yourselves according to the former lusts in your ignorance, but as He which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of 'conversation." This fashioning is a gradual process. Although we discover some things quickly, we do not learn all things at once. Some things are less conspicuous before our minds than are others, and represent the finer shadings of what would be proper for a new creature. We gradually come to note these things, and gradually come to know which things we shall choose, for the knowledge of God's will is a matter of education; and it takes some time to get everything harmoniously adjusted therewith. It is in line with this thought of our text, that the Apostle says, "Be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds." We must get .our minds rightly balanced to see things correctly, according to God's will.

We have in the Scriptures all the providential indications that we might be thoroughly furnished so as to obtain a clear knowledge of God's mind, and can therefore conform our minds thereto. Thus our minds become gradually fashioned, and our reason plays an important part. God wishes to appeal to our reason because we are thus better developed than in any others way. We have the teachings of our Lord Jesus and the writings of the Apostles as a sure and solid foundation to build upon; and to show what authority the Apostles had, our Lord declared that whatsoever they should bind on earth would be considered bound in heaven, and whatsoever they should loose on earth would be so considered in heaven.

Our education progresses until at the end of this life those who have thoroughly learned the lessons of this school will be those who have been obedient children. To be obedient children means to be obedient to His Word, not to their own ideas, or given to sentimentality whereby some deceive themselves in thinking they have greater love than others, who do not feel the same way. It brings to mind some in the past who, having sympathy for Judas, have expressed the idea that he should have another chance, and thought they had greater love through their sympathy for him. Our Lord placed the main responsibility and guilt upon Judas, when He said, "The Son of Man goeth (that is, to death)', as it is written of Him (prophetically); but woe unto that man by whom the Son of Man is betrayed. It had been good for that man if he had not been born.” As our Lord had greater love than any man, any giving the above view shows us the misguided love some have had. What has been can still be manifested in various ways.

We may even notice how many misguided nominal Christians will get up petitions to the Government for some very despicable murderer, in which the law of the land must take its course. One wonders how such can consider any measure of justice done to the victim or the bereaved. But those who have truly come into Christ, and hearken unto Him, soon learn how imperfect are their depraved conceptions, and they seek and obtain His mind that it may be theirs thenceforth, instead of their own judgments. “We have the mind of Christ,” says the Apostle. It is the new mind which is transformed so that we are able to prove and know what is that good and perfect will of God.

Those whose hearts go out too strongly towards gross evildoers seem to indicate that, however much they have submitted their judgment to God’s will on some questions, they have not submitted themselves on this point. To love an evil thing is on a par with hating a good thing. Both are wrong, both are evidence that the mind is not remodelled, transformed into the mind of Christ.

The mind of the Lord inculcated by His Word teaches that we are to love the beautiful, pure, true, noble; we are to love (in the sense of sympathising with) the weak, the penitent, the oppressed, who are seeking for the paths of righteousness and truth; but we are to hate iniquity and every false way, and all the meanness and sin which is against light and of the Devil. For our part we should have no thought of ever becoming more loving than the Lord; we accept His definitions and seek to be conformed mentally to His standard. We want to love just as He loves, and hate what He hates. Of Him it is written, “Thou hast loved righteousness and hated iniquity, therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows.”—Heb. 1:9; Psa. 45:7. Therefore let us continue the process of transforming our minds.

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP.

. . . . Toleration is not enough. Sometimes we hear the value of toleration praised in high terms, and we certainly agree that toleration is a great deal better than intolerance, but toleration is not fellowship. What kind of a time would I be describing to absent friends if I told them of the wonderful way in which the friends at the Pittsburgh Convention had tolerated me? They would not think that I had had such a wonderful time after all, would they? It would be apparent that only by a considerable strain on their Christian forbearance had the conventioners managed to put up with me for three days. My experience would not be exactly what we would understand by the word fellowship.

When the Apostle John (1 John 1:3) speaks of fellowship with “us,” I understand that he had reference to the fellowship of spirit which exists in the Christ Company. As our first thought in this connection let us consider 2 Cor. 5:16, “Wherefore henceforth know we no man after the flesh.” We are still in the flesh, each of us trying to “keep the body under,” and the fellowship we have is the fellowship of spirit. If I meet with ‘brethren who are striving to walk in the footsteps of Christ, handicapped as we all are by reason of birth, education, environment, etc., the fellowship I have with them is not after the flesh but in our mutual attempt to grow more and More like Christ. So with the Psalmist I rejoice to say, “I am a companion of all them that fear Thee and keep Thy precepts.”

In Phil. 2:1 the Apostle speaks of fellowship of the spirit. As illustrating this: Suppose I have been absent from a brother for a year or so, and during that time I have been seeking to grow more and more like Christ, to develop more of His spirit of humility and of truth. I have been trying to get more of the spirit of holiness in my life, more of the spirit of liberty, more of the spirit of joy in bearing the fruit of the spirit and in helping others, more of the spirit of patience, more of the spirit of peace. Suppose, when I meet this brother, I find he has been striving likewise and that as a result the mellowing influence of God’s holy spirit in him is manifest to me as the mellowing influence of God’s holy spirit in me is manifest to him. Is there not fellowship of spirit? There is, indeed. There is nothing else on earth quite like it.

There are some places where they are not so well educated—they spell the word fellowship differently. In the dictionary it begins with “f,” but there are some who begin it with “g,” and they go on in this way—g-o-s-s-i-p spells fellowship. That is not the kind of fellowship with which we wish to have anything to do.

Another point I have noted down for myself is, try and be a better listener—to listen in a way that shows I am giving full attention. If one’s mind is preoccupied he may appear to be listening when others are speaking to him when actually his mind is too much filled with other matters to be of any real comfort to the one who may ‘be seeking sympathy or attention. A father was reading a newspaper when his little child wished to tell him something, and he attempted to hold conversation with her while still reading the newspaper. “Listen, Father,” said the little girl, tugging at his coat sleeve. “I am listening,” he said, continuing to have his eyes glued to the newspaper. “Ah, but I want you to listen with your eyes, too,” she replied. And so in order to have more of the fellowship of my brother in Christ I am determined to give more of my fellowship to him and this will empty my life of all the things to centre around self, that I may be free indeed to fellowship with my brethren in a way that will mean something to them.

OUR PATTERN AND HELPER.

Turn the mind to Christ at the first assault (of the tempter), and keep it fixed there. Think of Him who walked amidst temptations without ever being submerged by them, as of One who can enable His followers to do the same. Think of Him. as calm, serene, firm, majestic, amidst the most furious agitations of nature, and as One who can endue thy heart with a similar steadfastness. Think of Him as standing close by thee, with a hand outstretched for thy support as soon as ever thou lookest towards Him. Remember that it is not you who are to conquer, but He who is to conquer in you.

THE DECEPTIONS OF SPIRITUALISM.

THE following report appeared in the Melbourne "Age" of July 9th, 1930, in respect of the death of the late Sir Conan Doyle, a great spiritualistic enthusiast. and leader: -----

"Father fully believed he would keep in touch with the family on the other side," said his son Adrian. "We are certain we are going to have conversation with him. We shall miss his physical presence, but that is all. Otherwise he might only have gone to Australia."

These remarks respecting the belief of the late author and spiritualist are just another indication of the increasing hold spiritism is getting through Satanic theories and doctrines predicted in the Bible, and pertaining particularly to these latter days.

All around us to-day we see the steady growth in numbers of adherents to this devilish belief, and one wonders how the average intelligent being could be so easily led to accept its teachings, with all the deception and contradiction of the Bible presentation respecting the death state. We have only to study our Bibles to note how- the great Adversary, Satan, has ever sought to oppose the Word of God and His plan and purpose respecting mankind, and in consequence has been successful to a very great degree in deceiving the people regarding the original sentence of Jehovah, on account of disobedience—"dying thou shalt die."—Gen. 2:17. This arch-deceiver, Satan, deceiving our first parents with his great lie (and he is the father of lies—John 8:44) in stating, "Thou shalt not surely die," set himself up in direct opposition to God, and it is this same great lie that he has been successfully foisting upon mankind generally, as he works continually in the hearts of the children of disobedience to blind them to the glorious Scripture truths.

We are glad that the Bible is so reasonable and clear regarding not only the state of the billions resting in the tomb, but also the remainder of the race in a dying condition, through hereditary weaknesses, trespasses and sins, mainly on account of our first parent's transgression. God's Word assures us that "the dead know not anything."—Eccles. 9:

5. "Though their sons come to honour, they perceive it not of them."—Job 14:21. "That there is no Wisdom, device, or knowledge in the grave, whither all goeth."—Eccles. 9:10. That the hope of each. and all from the grave and this death state is through the sacrifice of Christ as the ransom price for sin and the curse of death, and by a resurrection through Him, who said, "I am the Resurrection and the Life," in. the great central teaching and hub of the Christian's belief and faith; all else as expressed in the various beliefs, such as taught in denominations of to-day, and also by Evolutionists, Christian Scientists, Higher Critics, and Spiritualists, must be, and is, only credulity, without any ground for their Satanic and man-made theories. John 5:28, 29 clearly teaches that "the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear the voice of the Son of Man and come forth," and other Scriptures teach that God hath appointed a day (the great Millennial Day of Christ) in which He will judge the world in righteousness by that Man (Christ and His Body members, the Bride of Christ), whom He hath ordained (Acts 17:31; Luke 12:32); and the Apostle Paul states (Rom. 8:22, 19), "The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now, waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God."

While presenting the Scripture teaching respecting the departed, we are not underrating or denying the fact that spiritism is a very real thing, but acknowledge that it has been in existence right from the time of Satan's deflection and opposition to God. This great Satanic influence through his agencies, the evil spirits (Gen. 6th chap.) and mediums, has been very much in evidence following the days of the Flood and ever since, and soundly condemned by God to the extent that if any of His chosen people (Jews) were found associating with or practising witchcraft, sorcery, and the like, they were to be immediately put to death. Also, in the days of our Lord and His apostles, we find a strict denouncing of this evil tendency and practice, and the necessity of casting out numerous evil spirits in possession of certain individuals, who -had become obsessed and demented in consequence.

Surely, then, statements as appear from time to time in the daily news only go to show that the great leader of spiritism, Satan, is ever fostering and misleading, with cunning, device, the old original lie, "Thou shalt not surely die"—and thus mankind in general of all sects and denominations are becoming more and more susceptible to his seducing doctrines and devilish theories and teachings, such as, for instance, the immortality of the soul, and the evolution theory, both of which plainly deny the need of Christ as the sacrifice for sin through Adamic weaknesses.

Particularly in these last days we would warn each and all against this arch-deceiver as he transforms himself into an angel of light, putting light for darkness, and darkness for light. We need to have on the complete armour of God, that we may be able to withstand all the fiery darts of this wicked one, and to stand, having our loins girt about with the pure message and' light of the Truth. Only the Gospel truth can sanctify, • mid only the saintly few are being kept during this acceptable time from the wiles and besetments of the-Adversary, whereas the vast majority of the world have been blinded by erroneous beliefs at the hands of the Prince of this world, Satan.

Thank God the time is fast approaching when the shackles of sin, superstition and error 'are to be broken and the clear light of the Gospel poured out upon the people after this great deceiver has been bound. Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, .and men shall come to rejoice in the love, mercy, wisdom, and grace of God through His rich provision in Christ, who is the Resurrection, the Way, the Truth, and the Life."—Rev. 21

The statement of Mr. G. A. Brown, given in the first of a series of lectures on Spiritualism which appeared in the press some time ago, is heartily endorsed, and we would that all men would view this Satanic belief in the same light, and denounce it as this gentleman did, as opposing the Word of God and its teachings. We publish his remarks herewith, and trust that our readers will be encouraged and helped to stand on guard in this evil day against the deceptions of the Devil, the Prince of this world, and the father of lies. Mr. Brown admitted the phenomena of Spiritualism, but denied that they were the manifestations of departed human beings. "They were," he contended, "the work of devils and seducing spirits. Spiritualism was founded upon the lie first promulgated in the Garden of Eden, that man was immortal. It denied that there was any God and yet sought to make everyone a god. It was the witchcraft and necromancy denounced ill the Bible, and its prevalence at this time denoted that the second advent of Christ was at hand."

MR. ARTHUR BLACK, writing in the "British Weekly" regarding "The Life of the Poor," says: "While most people will agree that the struggling, ill-paid or unemployed family must be helped, in spite of poverty, into a decent home, is it not often forgotten by those who draw up tables of figures as to the weekly cost of living for working-class families, proving that their wages do not permit of as much as 11/- per week being paid for rent of council houses, that many slum dwellers are drained dry by the public house, by sport and the bookmaker, by the cinema and amusement hall? The proportion of weekly income that some poor families spend in indulgence is extraordinary. Those who want to get at the root of things cannot ignore such facts as those revealed regarding Bermondsey by Dr. Salter, M.P., and as to part of St. Mary's Ward, Birmingham, by the Rev. E. Benson Perkins. In the first named over 2000 families are overcrowded, more than half the deaths take place in public institutions, every seventh person two years ago was getting poor relief, and nearly 4000 were on the unemployed registers. Yet, based on -figures returned at the quinquennial valuation in 1925, it is computed that £1,200,000 was spent in the 230 licensed houses-and a few clubs, a yearly average of £10 per man, woman and child—a sum more than equal to all the rents and to the milk and bread bills of the borough. The average paid in compensation for surrendered public houses in recent years has 'been £5400. In the second case, in a melancholy area, with over 400 back-to-back houses, and with the infantile death rate twice as high as in favoured districts, there are 62 licensed houses, one to every 295 inhabitants, and an average of £1 per week per family is spent in drink. -Clearly a reform in many a family expenditure would be one long step. forward.

"No doubt such facts as these will be brought before the Licensing Commission by way of proof that the drinking habits of a section of the people who can least afford to waste their resources of health, character or cash are perhaps the most potent agency in perpetuating slum evils and in hampering every kind of attempt at removing them.

"Because the human element is more crucial than .the economic, I re-echo my cry for the much more adequate support of those engaged in this moral and spiritual struggle in the slums." •

The poor "groaning creation" still groans and waits for the Kingdom. That such conditions still exist in the land of the most enlightened nation and the nation that has clone so much to carry the Bible to the uttermost parts of the earth,- to evangelise and lift up the depraved races of the world, seems strange. •

We have heard much about the churches winning the world for Christ and establishing the Kingdom, yet how far from 'being Christianised is England, with all its-grand cathedrals and professions. Yet no land can boast of more noble effort to lift the fallen and to • provide opportunity to all to.earn an .honest decent living. Had we to think that such was the purpose of God for the Gospel Age we should have • to conclude, as so many have done, that Christianity had proved a failure. While approving and appreciating every good' effort calculated to alleviate the condition of the ill-born and unfortunate, yet we rejoice to say that Christianity has not yet ,been. tried. The Church has not yet been authorised to reform. the world. The commission given to the Church referred only to the preaching' of the Gospel as a -witness to all: nations in order to select a church—a class to be specially prepared to reign with Christ (Rom. 8:17; Acts 15:14-17) in the coming Age, for the blessing of all the families of the earth. When God's Will shall be done on earth as in heaven, there will soon be no such blots in all the earth. The present systems, with all their faults, have made some noble efforts to rule, but their 'best is failure. When man realises that he cannot of himself reach the Golden Age of peace and plenty, the Kingdom will 'be prepared to begin its wise and: benevolent reign. To-day we see the signs that the time is near. Before that day comes, however, the present systems are to go down ill a "time of trouble such as never was before, nor ever will 'be again." Then the Jewish people will again be established in Palestine and 'be used of God as the earthly representatives of the spiritual kingdom. Satan will be restrained and Christ and His Church will have the dominion. How great a change that will be. Satan has prospered the wicked, "yea, even those who tempt God are set up." but Christ will reward the righteous, who will "flourish like the palm." All who will turn 'to. serve God and righteousness will be rewarded by. health-. prosperity. and "when the judgments of the Lord are' abroad in the earth then will the inhabitants of the earth learn righteousness," "truth 'and righteousness shall spring out of the earth," and soon "the whole earth shall be covered with the glory of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the great deep."

The good hopes, however, are not to discourage any in any good efforts of relief. We are to "do good unto all men as we have opportunity, but especially to the household of faith."

CORRECTION.

A passage in the Question Box of last month's "Peoples Paper" stated that the Law Covenant was also the Abrahamic Covenant. The reading should have been the Law Covenant, as also the Abrahamic Covenant. While the Lord came as the Angel or Fulfiller of the Law Covenant so that He might redeem those under the Law; He was in the larger sense the Angel or Messenger of the Abrahamic Covenant, the Oath-Bound .Covenant, which is the hope of both natural and spiritual Israel.

The Messenger or Servant of that Covenant is the One through whom its provisions will be accomplished, namely, the seed of Abraham.—"which seed is Christ." (Gal. 3:16).

Correspondence

Queensland,

11th August, 1930. My Dear Friends,

Please find enclosed . I know I am in arrears for the little "Paper," but I thank you for sending it, and hope this amount will cover what is due, and pay for another year. I live in the bush, and seldom meet with Christian friends, at least with friends that will talk heart to heart about our dear Redeemer, so the little "Paper" is very welcome and very helpful. Hoping it will continue its good work for many a year, and that the Lord will bless every effort put forth for the advancing of His Kingdom.

Your sincere Friend,

New South Wales, 11/8/30. The Secretary,

Berean Biblical Institute.

Dear Brother,—

I received the copy of "The Divine Plan of the Ages" and also "Foregleams of the Golden Age" in safety and would be much obliged if you would send me "The Revelation of Jesus Christ" in two volumes. I sent two ones I had to my mother, but heard last week of someone whom I thought might be interested in them.

I am sorry to say that I do not know anyone in this area who seems to take any interest in religion, except that of the nominal Churches, so I have to rely on the "Herald's," etc., for companionship. Sister —, from writes often, for which I am very glad, as she was the friend who brought to my attention the very unsatisfactory state of affairs in the I.B.S.A.

I am enclosing — for the books. If there is a small amount left over after they are paid for, kindly keep it for the Tract Fund. With kindest regards from

Your Sister in Him,

Durban, South Africa. Dear Brother,

No doubt it will interest you and others, particularly those who contributed to the Zulu printing fund, to hear what has been done.

Immediately on arrival here I began to get the matter in hand, and within a week had settled upon both the work of translation and printing. The booklets will be ready, I hope, in about two weeks, and there are willing hands to endeavour to place them where they may be appreciated. We shall, anyway, feel that the message of the true Gospel has been put in a simple way so that the Zulus may take hold upon it. Our prayers should then be that the Lord will bless the effort, even if the results may not be seen for "many days." Being in booklet form, it is hoped to be more carefully preserved. During the remaining time I am hoping to get a little more in touch with some of the Indians as well as the natives. Many of the Indians speak English and are professing Christians. The class here appears to be progressing in Christian character, and it is a pleasure to see them all again. They are all so kind. Possibly they do not appreciate all the opportunities there are in this country. It may be that the narrow way being so near the end that not many more are to be gathered into the garner as members in Christ. Yet it is not for us to neglect the opportunity of "doing good to all men" but to seek to bring the glad message of the wideness of God's mercy to all. It is not for us to conclude that there is nothing more to do: it is for us to fulfil the commission of our Lord to the Church, "Go into all the world and preach the Gospel," and to leave the Lord to grant the increase whether it be for the "high calling of God in Christ Jesus" or for the call of the "Spirit and the Bride who say come, and whosoever will let him come and take of the water of life freely."

With Christian love to all,
Yours in Christian service,
R.E.B.N.

Question Box.

Question.—Are the foolish virgins that have no oil in their vessels a spirit-begotten class? Seeing they are shut out from the marriage chamber, will they ever get into the heavenly phase of the Kingdom?

Answer.—The parable of the ten virgins was undoubtedly given as illustrating the matter dealt with in the preceding chapter (Matt. 24). Indeed, the three parables of chapter 25 show the progressive development of our Lord's work at His second presence. This first one indicates the attitude of those Christians who at that time should be looking for His coming. Evidently all who are watching are not properly prepared for the event for which they are watching and waiting. Some have taught that the five foolish virgins represent a class of sinners eternally lost. There is no such thought intended, for the foolish as well as the wise are "virgins," pure ones. They have turned away from the world of sin to serve the living God. The only way to be "pure" ones is by faith in "the blood of Jesus Christ, which cleanseth us from all sin." This class (five unwise virgins), then, represents a justified class, "justified by faith, and at peace with God." Not only so, but they have faith in the Lord's Return and Kingdom, and have their minds exercised on the subject, and have their lamps trimmed. They discern Bible evidence in the signs of the times, so are in an attitude of expectation, and are associated and go out with the wise virgins to meet their Lord. They have the same hope of entering with the Bridegroom. The difference is that they were short of oil. Possibly those who had positively fixed upon some particular date when the Lord would come, and then became discouraged because He did not come as they expected, may be represented in these foolish virgins. They lacked sufficient supply of the Holy Spirit (oil). Their knowledge and enthusiasm had been more a matter of the head than of a fully devoted heart filled with God's Holy Spirit, ready to trust through light and shade, when the way is plain and when the road is dark, when the sunshine of Divine blessing surrounds them, or when "clouds and storms go o'er my head and every comfort be withdrawn," when "sometimes a light surprises the Christian while he sings," or when disappointment be their portion. Still they loved the Lord and hoped to enter into the marriage chamber. While they failed to have that deep heart appreciation and preparation which would have gained that great reward, they did go to the market of experience and the Word of God, and, having obtained a further supply of the Holy Spirit, they knock at the door and are disappointed to find they are too late. However, while the Lord could not recognise them as of the class He desired, they are not eternally lost. The purpose of the parable was to urge watchfulness and carefulness in preparation of heart to meet the great Bridegroom.

The thought that the five unwise virgins represent an earthly class is out of accord with the Scriptures. There is no calling to an earthly hope during the Gospel Age. "We are all called in one hope of our calling."

During the Law Dispensation there was no heavenly hope. It was an age of works to be rewarded by earthly hopes. The Gospel Age is an age of faith to be rewarded by spiritual blessings and a heavenly hope. The coming Kingdom Age again, be an age of works to be rewarded by natural human blessings and eternal life on earth. The five unwise virgins represent a class begotten to the same hope of the high-calling of God in Christ Jesus as the five wise who enter in. They fail to gain the prize, but being rightly exercised by their disappointment, they seek grace and help and secure more "oil," more of the Holy Spirit and its work of grace in their hearts, and come through great tribulation with their robes washed in the blood of the Lamb. While they missed the wondrous opportunity of sitting with Christ in the throne, with those who are "more than overcomers," they are shown in Revelation 7 as serving before the throne. They are indicated in Psalm 45, "The virgins her companions that follow her," and in Genesis 24, as the nurse of Rebekah, who represents the Bride of Christ.

Question.—What is the difference re anointing and spirit-begetting?

Answer.—The anointing and spirit-begetting of the members in Christ throughout this Gospel Age we would understand to be a little different, and yet together bringing about the same result to the faithful—the birth of the new creature to the Divine nature.

In the type of the anointing of the priesthood (Exod. 29:7) the anointing oil was poured upon the head of the high priest only, and ran down over the body to the skirts of his garments (Psa. 133:2). So with the anti-typical Priesthood, the Head only was anointed. The under-priests are not anointed individually, but as members of Christ's Body are partakers of the same anointing after their Head. "The anointing which ye have received of Him abideth in you."—1 John 2:27.

On the other hand, each truly consecrated member accepted by the Father is begotten individually to the new nature, and throughout their earthly pilgrimage it will be necessary to keep under the holy anointing oil, the Holy Spirit, flowing down from our Head for the purpose of development as new creatures. If we come out from under the anointing, or, in other words, if we put off the wedding garment, there would be immediate danger of quenching the spirit within us. So while each member is begotten individually, how necessary it is that we keep under the holy anointing of our Head, for we are complete only in Him; we are accepted in the Beloved.—Eph. 1:3-6.

Question.—Will you please explain Luke 12:36, “When He will return from the wedding”? What wedding is meant here? and who are the servants that He will find watching? Can it be the marriage of the Bride?

Answer.—While the above text is much misunderstood, perhaps there is a no more important one than these words of the Master respecting what must be the attitude of the Lord’s people in this only acceptable Age and particularly during the period of His Parousia.

From the context we note our Lord’s words are along the line of watchfulness and a state of preparedness concerning the -Saintly footstep followers of Christ, urging all to have their loins girded about and lights burning, and admonishing His people to give diligence that they might be found at all times acceptable to Jehovah through ‘Him. But especially do the words of this text apply to the period of our Lord’s. presence, and warning His followers to be in such an attitude of piety and readiness for His presence in order that they should receive the promised blessing which His parousia would bring to the faithful according • to verse 37 of this chapter.

In explaining this verse we are not to view it in the light of our questions, but must realise that it is only in the nature of a parable that our Lord would picture the matter in illustrating the alertness and attentiveness that shall ever characterise His followers. Amongst the Jews there would be no occasion on .which the servants of the _household would, be expected to be more alert or to manifest more interest in the •welfare of the household than on- the evening or morning on which their master would come to his home bringing with him his bride. And -so the Lord chooses this as an appropriate illustration of the alertness that • should characterise His followers while waiting for His second coming.

.The sole lesson here is that diligence in service, that watchfulness for the interests-of the Master’s cause, that faith in His promise to return and expectancy of the event, serve as an aid or stimulus to proper service. When the master of the house should arrive with his company it ,would be a reflection against the interest of his servants and their love and devotion for him, if on such an occasion . they. were found asleep or otherwise than ready to open the door at the master’s intimation of his arrival: The parable implies that at our Lord’s second coming He will have arrived before any of His faithful servants .will be aware of the fact, and this agrees” with our. Saviour’s reply in answer to the disciple’s question, “What shall be the sign of Thy presence?” not what shall be the sign of His arrival, but the indications of His presence after He had come. His presence will -be known by the knock, and the knock would correspond to an announcement, through some special unfoldment of His Word and..a .recognition of the fulfilment of prophecy.

.- According to ancient Jewish method of reckoning the night time, the second watch would be from ten to two o’clock, and the third from .two to six o’clock. The parable does not state in which watch the Master may be expected. That question was left open; the faithfulness Of the.:servants being tested in proportion to His delay, Many-would find it easy to keep awake and alert during the ‘first watch, not so many during the second watch, and still fewer during the third. It is in accord with this implication of the parable that we find to-day general lethargy amongst Christian people respecting the return. of the Bridegroom and the glorious things of the Kingdom to be brought unto His faithful household.

Many are asleep in Zion, many are overcharged with the cares of this world and the deceitfulness of riches. Not only have worldly people made a god of -business, money and pleasure, but many who are at heart lovers of righteousness, and who desire to be considered servants of the Lord; are seriously overcharged, absorbed in worldly things. Their hearts are so filled with these, other minds are so occupied with some great work, movement, outward success, pleasure or personal interest that they cannot hear the knock. “They know not” in the sense of a heart appreciation of the Master’s presence and open not their hearts to the things pertaining to this-wonderful announcement for which the Lord’s people have waited so long and have prayed earnestly. “Thy Kingdom come.” ‘Such arc missing in consequence a great blessing implied ‘in our Lord’s words and parable.

What I say unto you, I say unto all—”Watch.”

THE VALLEY OF SILENCE.

“Come ye apart and rest awhile.”

“In the hush of the valley of silence
I dream all the songs that I sing;
And the music floats down the dim valley,
Till each finds a word for a wing,

That to hearts, like the dove of the deluge,
A message of peace they may bring.
“But far on the deep there are billows
That never shall break on the beach;

And I have heard songs in the silence
That never shall float into speech;
And I have had dreams in the valley
Too lofty for language to reach.

“And I have seen thoughts in the valley,
Ah me, how my spirit was stirred!
And they wear holy veils on their faces,
Their footsteps can scarcely be heard;

They pass through the valley like virgins,
Too pure for the touch of a word.
“Do you ask me the place of the valley,
Ye hearts that are harrowed by care?

It lieth afar between mountains,
And God and His angels are there:
One is the dark mountain of sorrow,
And one the bright mountain of prayer.”

Vol. XIII., No. 10 MELBOURNE, 1ST OCTOBER, 1930. PRICE-TWOPENCE

THESE were no empty words. The Apostle Paul boasted of nothing save the cross of Christ; there was no empty profession, no veneering Christianity with him, no sham religion, or formal Churchianity for respectability's sake.

No, with the Apostle Paul, Christ was a reality. He had seen Jesus, he had been convicted of a wrong course, the respectable religion of that day to which he had belonged had been proved wrong. The ceremonies of Judaism had become unacceptable to God; Israel, because of unbelief, had become blind. God in His mercy had laid His hand on Paul and stopped him in his zeal in persecuting the followers of Christ, and revealed to him the error of his ways. He was struck blind by the brightness of Christ, who appeared to him in the way. Paul was not disobedient to the holy vision; he was ready as ever to serve God, and, therefore, to join the persecuted followers of Christ. “Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?” What a dilemma he was in. There as a captain of a band he had been sent by the authorities to bring any who preached Christ, bound to Jerusalem, and now God had shown him that Jesus whom he persecuted was indeed the Messiah. What a position to be in! There was no vacillation with Paul, for all he needed was to see the truth and to know God's will, and his mind and heart were determined, and he at once began to witness that Jesus whom he had persecuted was indeed the Christ, through whom alone salvation was attainable.

What an example we have. He did not take long to count the cost. There could be nothing to weigh in the balance against what was right, what was truth. “Truth at any price,” should be the principle of every man and woman, irrespective of whom it would please or offend, or what it might cost. Paul was a man of such principle, and as soon as he was convinced that Jesus whom he had persecuted as an imposter was indeed the Christ, his energies were turned to support as strongly as he had previously. opposed. Indeed, it would seem he felt much forgiven, and so he loved much and would seek, if possible, to make up for the damage he had done the cause.

Such a course we can understand from any honest, good human heart, but there was something deeper than this that came into Paul's life. He was at once ready to obey the will of Christ, “Lord, what will Thou have me to do?” The Lord did not explain such detail to the Apostle, for evidently it was good that he should suffer blindness for a day or two, during which time he could meditate upon the new aspect of things and count the cost, not just of standing up for what was right and true, which every one should do, but of yielding his whole heart and soul to God. The Lord used human instrumentality, a humble follower of Christ, who no doubt would have been one of the victims of Paul, had not the conversion taken place. Ananias explained the Christian way, and Paul was ready to present himself a living sacrifice to God, to take up his cross and deny himself, to give up all his hopes and prospects of position and influence in Israel and join the cause of the despised Nazarene—to be dead. with Christ.

When we read some of Paul's epistles in which he makes the Christian pathway so clear, and when we read of his life and how he demonstrated his teachings in his faithful zeal and sacrifice, so that he counted not his life dear unto him, one wonders how the millions of professing Christians can reconcile their easy going respectable religion with the contrast of his life, and his plain statements regarding the sacrifice involved in undertaking to be true followers of the Lamb. The usual thought is so different from what Jesus and Paul and the other Apostles taught; as though heaven is gained by a mere profession of Christ, or a simple act of faith, or by a confirmation service.

How necessary it is to have our pure minds stirred up along the lines of our consecration, and what it involves.

In reading the history of the ancient Grecians, one is struck with the strict and thorough vow which the young men were required to make if they would be recognised as members of the State—"I will never dishonour the profession of arms, nor save my life 'by a shameful flight. I will fight till my last breath for the religion and civil interests of the State in concert with other citizens or alone if needs be, etc." Here was a consecration to the State which involved one's life, if necessary, -and the.. necessity very frequently arose and the vow was wonderfully carried out.

How well the Apostle expressed the matter when he said, "For me to live is Christ He had so much entered into the life of sacrifice and zealous service that he could say that, "If in this life only we have hope, then are NYC of all men most miserable." He had sacrificed name and fame, position and, honor; and, wearied in the sufferings and experiences of foes without and false brethren within, he could hardly say whether he preferred to still live and serve the cause, or to die and rest in the sleep of death until the clay of Christ, when the dead in Christ should rise first. his determination, however, was that Christ should be magnified in his body, whether it be by life or by death. For himself he would long to be at rest, and yet for the sake a the Church- he was pleased to abide in the flesh. One thing he was decidedly desirous of, and that was for the clay of the Lord's return, When the dead in Christ would be loosened from the tomb and be forever with the Lord.

Probably a good many of God's people as they get along in life and find that the "ties that bind them to a world like this" are becoming fewer and fewer, and may be experiences are disappointing, trusted friends have failed, hopes we had have vanished, the work in hand seems different from what had been expected; and there seem, maybe, few, if any, who can sympathise with our hopes and aims. It would seem that a good many of the Lord's people reach some such condition and get almost like Elijah, who had been so valiant in God's service, and then, wearied and lonely, requested that he might die.

Paul had no flowery bed of ease to carry him to the paradise of God. His zeal brought him great hardships; shipwrecked, hungry, stoned and left for dead, beaten with forty stripes save one, and besides all his journeying and hazards,. he had experiences among false brethren, and yet he felt the responsibility of all the Churches. No wonder he felt a longing to 'be at rest and waiting for that happy awakening at the presence of the Lord.

Yet he was beautifully submissive to the Lord's will, ready still to battle on and trust and wait and work. Earthly hopes had perished, his life was hid with Christ in God. If it be the Lord's will that I still remain, then it will not be for self that I shall live, it shall be for Christ. That is, his life was entirely devoted to God in Christ's service,.

It is no use our trying to find an easier Way . the heavenly .prize: "If 'any man will follow Me, let him deny himself and' take up. his cross." Sometimes we hear of people having self-denial. weeks.: That is they will deny themselves little comforts, and. some things which are considered .necessities. Is that what the. Master meant by denying oneself no, it is much more than that. It really means to deny that one's —self-has any rights, to deny one's own existence for oneself. It mean, that we made a covenant with God to be dead, to sin, and that. henceforth our life should be lived for Him. We signified this in the water of baptism; it was a funeral of self, and a raising up to a new life, as a new creature, dead to human hopes and aims, alive as a spiritual being begotten of God's holy spirit, and so .able to grasp . heavenly truths and promises, and to rejoice in .things not seen. This is what Paul means when he says,. "I -died, yet I live, yet not-I, but Christ liveth in me." "For me to live is Christ".

Such is the Christian walk, and how far are we living up to it. How far are we allowing earthly interests of home, and .''business, of . friends, and socialities, of pleasures and. pastimes; -16 usurp our time and attention. How far are we living up to our consecration vow to the Lord?"

We wonder if any can just feel that they. have kept their vows fully,. and are inclined to think that we all realise how much we have come short. The things of earth; especially the tender ties of human loves, of home and children and other relationships, are difficult to keep in their place. They come so tenderly, pleading for a little more attention. The loving heart longs to please, and, oh, how easy it is to forget that, "for me to live is Christ." All I have and all I am, I handed over -to the Loud, and now only hold as a stewardship, so that it is not a matter whether I like to do so and so, to please even a loved one, it is; "What would Christ do? What would God have me to do?"

Such is the Christian way. The only way to the crown is by bearing the cross. If we do not like to bear the cross, then the crown "will ne'er be won.. This position is not new to us, but we are so apt to be 'affected by the influences about us this day that we need to be continually reminded and -to watch and pray lest we enter temptation.

There is, however, a joy in faithfully hearing the cross. It is the Adversary that would try to make us think contrariwise. Let us keep the end in view. Let us ever remember the Divine purpose for us, that God has chosen us to -be members with Christ, members of His elect, and how He is overruling the circumstances of our .lives so that the way of the cross may mould our characters and make perfect. Let us try and note any little good effect in ourselves as a result of our trials or denials or zeal, and we shall count it all joy to be dead with Christ, to bear the cross and to despise the- shame.

So we must bear the cross cheerfully. We must not try to make everybody know that we are bearing the 'cross. We can expect our brethren in Christ to .appreciate it, but those of the world, good as they may be as men and women, cannot understand the position at all therefore, all they need to know, is that we have determined to be true Christians, and we are to- try and prevent our sacrifices from affecting others. A Wife may be just as good and better a wife, and a husband a better husband. Mother.. father, son or daughter, employer or -employed can all meet the reasonable responsibilities of such relationships better than ever as Christians, still doing all as for the Lord. _ Yet there must be a definite, firm stand against anything that the Lord would not do or allow, for "for me to live is Christ."

This is to be the rule of the Christian's life, not only in contact with our fellow-members in Christ, - but in every affair of our lives in the daily contact with people of the world. We must remember that we are to do all things in the name of Christ, as stewards of God, not only in all honourable dealing, but we must manifest God's spirit, Christ's spirit, in all patience, gentleness and consideration of others' interests and feelings. It is thus that we must let our light shine that others may glorify our Father which is in heaven.

All, our words or preaching or Christian works or profession will count for nothing unless our lives accord. the most powerful witness for Christ and the truth will be our manner of life if we live the Christian life and manifest the Christian spirit.

It is surely a most important matter to .continually keep in mind, for while it is so plain in the New Testament, it is easy to allow the day by day concerns to make us forget, that we are' dead and our lives are hid with Christ in God.

What a splendid motto for life. It was Paul's motto, it is our motto, if we are walking the same 'road as Paul. No earthly love can have precedence, our love to God and to Christ must be supreme. If we allow love to our dearest loved ones to intervene .we shall not gain the prize. of the high calling. We may deceive ourselves even in this respect, and fail to -see that we are allowing some earthly love to influence us and interfere with our Christian privileges of the service of .God and witnessing for- the Truth, or our assembling together not only for our own building up in faith and hope, but to encourage and help others in the way. Each member in the body of Christ must do its part to edify the body. We have such a- responsibility which we cannot shirk 'and be true to our. consecration. "For me to live is Christ."

The Christian life is a practical life: as the Christian faith is logical and reasonable. Christ left us. an example that we should walk as He walked, in His steps. "He who was rich yet for -our sakes' -became poor that we through His poverty might 'be • made rich." Is that the way that He is our example?. Is that the life we must Live as His followers. Surely it 'is, "because He bath laid down His life for us, and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren:" Only by walking the same way in the same spirit, learning the same lessons of obedience and developing the same' loving;' zealous, perfect character can we hope to share. the same reward. So, then, as Christians, we are consecrated' to be dead with Christ. ' "I died; yet I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me," "For me to live is Christ."

The question may arise, Is it not right that we love our loved ones who are members in Christ more than other members in Christ? We are reminded of our Lord's statement, "My mother and my brethren are those who do. the will of my Father in heaven." We must love as Christ loves. Does Christ hve Our son or daughter, .or father or mother, more than some other member's son, daughter, father or mother? No, we are all one in Christ Jesus. If we are dead to all human things and risen with Christ, "our lives are hid with Christ in God." If it is that "for me to live is Christ," then we will try to view matters from God's viewpoint, from- the same aspect as our Lord. Probably all know these things, only we forget, and earthly loves are apt to creep in and hinder our way. They must be kept in their proper place. Our love must be to God and Christ supremely.

Take my life and may it be Lord, acceptable to Thee ;

Take my will and make it Thine It shall be no longer mine;

Take myself—I wish to be Ever, only, all for Thee.

“Love is sweet in any guise,

But its best is sacrifice;

He who, giving, does not crave Likest is to Him who gave Life itself the loved to save.

Love, that self-forgetful gives,

Sows surprise of ripened sheaves Late or soon its own receives.”

EXCERPT FROM PITTSBURGH CONVENTION.

ONE of the brethren has told of Brother Russell's implicit confidence in God's leading and that in even the little things of his service of the truth and the brethren he was looking for and taking the experiences of life, and even the thwarting of his plans as from God—His providential dealings. I, too, noted this characteristic of faith. At breakfast in the train one time travelling from New York to Pittsburgh I asked him if he thought the sermons in the newspapers were reaching and deeply interesting many people. He replied that he did not know surely, that we had to take that by faith, and added, "Faith is a good thing to have, anyway." How true that is: Faith in a miracle-working God makes miracles possible even to-day in our own lives, for He is still working miracles in those who have faith. Just think of our infinite minuteness compared with the creator of the universe, of the 125 millions of worlds scientists claim they can see or account for, and by whose infinite wisdom all these are ordered in their relation to one another. And then beyond that utter smallness we are not even perfect in our own sphere, but "born in sin and shaven in iniquity," weak and imperfect and subject to death.

Yet it is still true "according to your faith 'be it unto you.'" God is more willing to give His own infinite spirit to us than a good earthly parent is willing to give gifts to his child. What can we not do when that spirit works in us? More and more I see that the Christian life is not primarily what we can do for God, but the acceptance of what He will do for us, if we constantly ask for an increasing measure of His spirit, which will in fact make us more than conquerors. Many things are impossible with us; but "with God all things are possible," and "He will work in us to will and to do His good pleasure," if we "but 'Humble ourselves under His mighty hand'" and become as Jesus was, "a broken and emptied vessel" for Him to fill and use. How beautifully Jesus illustrates this attitude in saying "of Mine own self I can do nothing, but," as I hear I speak, "the words are not Mine but His that sent Me," and "the Father than dwelleth in Me. He death the works."

Again when the ruler came to Him and said, "Good master, what must I do to inherit eternal life?" Note well the reply, "Why callest thou Me good? There is none good but God." What a glorious thought is here suggested—that all the beautiful qualities of character which we see in Jesus, and in smaller measure, learn to depend on and to enjoy in our friends, brethren and relatives, all that makes life and its relationships interesting and desirable, in any degree, all good is from God, the "giver of every good and perfect gift," and the perfect expression of every good quality. We only need to see Him clearly to love Him with all our hearts and to love and desire His blessed and holy will in all the avenues of life. The most successful prayer I have ever offered is that I might see Him more clearly as He really is. I am continuing to make that the burden of all my petitions.

FROM SOUTH AFRICA.

THE pamphlet has now been printed in the Zulu language. It comprises 16 pages, containing the matter which has appeared in the "People's Paper," entitled "God's great plan of Salvation and Restoration," prefaced by a chart of the Ages.

It will now be the endeavour of the friends to have these placed in the hands of those natives able to read Zulu, and especially those having some interest in Christianity. We pray and trust that it may be the means of leading some of this noble race to a clearer perception of the Divine purpose concerning mankind and a better understanding of the Bible apart from sectarian teachings. The cost has 'been great, but it is hoped that the visit here has 'been also of some benefit to the South African friends. The amount contributed by the Australian readers amounted to £61/1/6.

Travelling expenses to South Africa, local fares,

postages, etc., amounted to	..	£281	0
Translating and printing 5000 copies	22	10	0
Leaving towards personal expenses further	and travelling		10	6
		£611	6

As throughout the world, there are lots of religions in this dark continent, and all sections of Christendom appear to be represented. It must be confusing to the native mind, when awakened to the faith of Christ, to find so many divisions all professing to be in some way superior, and often claiming to be the only true religion. Our pamphlet, as will be seen from its English Version, makes no appeal of a sectarian nature. Its purpose is simply to state the Divine plan of salvation, as shown in God's Word, preaching Christ and Him crucified and risen, and in due time to "see of the travail of His soul (as "a ransom for all") and be satisfied. We have endeavoured to "water" the seed that others have sown, and now leave the results in the hands of Him Who can "give the increase" according to His Own will. With those who contributed to make this effort possible we rejoice that we have done what we could, and pray and hope for a blessing upon the work, together with those who will distribute the pamphlets "free and without price" to God's glory.

PRESENT DAY CONDITIONS.

ALL nations are faced with great problems to-day. Each country has its own particular difficulties to overcome, while finance and unemployment seem to be the lot of nearly every State.

The earth itself is beautiful, and produces abundant supply, but it seems clearly impossible for man in his present fallen and selfish condition to devise a system of economy whereby every one may have the opportunity of doing his share in the productive work and receive his proper supply of the things needful so that all might enjoy the good things provided for mankind.

The troubles afflicting the so-called Christian nations to-day are mostly the natural consequences of careless and unsound government, and personal indifference to the principles of justice and economy.

The world has run wild since the war. Instead of seeking the simple life, which is the healthiest and really the most enjoyable, it has plunged into extravagant living and careless expenditure on things satisfying only to pride and selfish desire for luxuries and pleasures.

In order to satisfy these unnatural desires and ambitions, both governments and people have become involved in a system of credit, - and have thus lived beyond their means, and the only possible conclusion to such a course is now evident.

So it is that mankind, both nationally and individually, automatically bring upon themselves the necessary punishment or correction. The sooner the lessons are learnt the better. The sowing has been to the wind, and the reaping will be the whirlwind. There can be no lasting prosperity, no lasting happiness of nation, or people, apart from the principles of righteousness. There can be no successful government apart from providence. In of his own volition, however good may be his intention, cannot evolve a perfect system. Much 'better could have been done, however, in the past ten years had simple justice been the aim of legislation. On the contrary, however, most enactments of Parliaments seem influenced by partisanship, selfish interest, and absolute indifference to expense or thought as to where the money was to come from.

Just such conditions are what the Scriptures would lead us to expect. Man's period of opportunity in trying to formulate a good government in his own way and by his own power is terminating, and it will terminate in a way clearly demonstrating his utter failure, in his fallen state, and apart from Divine aid, to govern himself successfully.

The automatic consequences, in the time of trouble ensuing, will prepare mankind to look to the only source of help, "The Desire of all Nations," the promised remedy for earth's woes.

It would seem that as Pharaoh was specially raised up to the Egyptian throne, that God's power in delivering Israel from bondage in Egypt might be manifested (Romans 9:17), so to-day certain types of leaders of nations and governments are being permitted to lead the world to a breakdown of the present order of things, resulting in chaos and "trouble such as never has been nor will be."—Dan. 12:1; Matt. 24:21.

Satan has so far been the "prince of this world." His wicked spirit of selfishness, pride, ambition, lust and strife has led the world, and the time of trouble is the natural outcome. Mankind choose to serve Satan instead of God, and this is the result.

Then it will be that Christ will depose Satan and take control of the world's affairs. He will speak peace to the people, relieve the oppressed, and put righteousness to the line and justice to the plummet.

Instead of the wicked prospering as a green bay tree, as has been the case up to now, the "righteous shall flourish as the palm." Instead of every man's hand being against his fellow in selfish ambition and lust of power, Christ's sweet spirit will prevail, the spirit of love, joy and peace and goodwill towards all. Thus it is that we see "The bright shining that there is in the clouds."

Luke 22:39.

THE mountains are Nature's monuments. Like the islands they dwell apart, and like them they give asylum from a noisy and irreverent world. In their silence many a meditative spirit has found leisure for the longest thought, and in their Patmos-like seclusion the brightest visions and largest projects have evoked; Whilst by a sort of over-mastering attraction they have usually drawn to themselves the most memorable incident which variegate our human history. And, as they are the natural haunts of the highest spirits, and the appropriate scenes of the most signal occurrences, so they are the noblest cenotaphs. Far off they arrest the eye; and though their hoary chronicle tells its legend of the past, their heaven-pointing elevations convey the spirit onward towards eternity.

We do not wonder that excited fancy has sought relics of the Ark on the top of Ararat; and in the grim solitude of Sinai, it is solemn to remember and easy to believe that the voice of God has spoken here. Elijah has made Carmel all his own, and the death of Moses must be ever Pisgah's diadem. The words of Jesus seem still to linger on the hills of Galilee, their lilies forbidding “thought for raiment,” and their little birds twittering “No thought for to-morrow,” whilst every grassy tuft and scented flower is breathing its own beatitude. But though heavenly wisdom spake on that mountainside, and excellent glory lighted up the top of Tabor, there is another height to which discipleship reverts with fonder memory, and which it treads with softer step—that mountain where beyond any spot in Palestine “God was manifest in flesh”—where the great Intercessor was wont to pray, where Jesus wept over Jerusalem, on whose slopes He blessed the Apostle-band, and sent His message of mercy to mankind—the mountain at whose base lay Bethany and Gethsemane—on whose gentle turf His feet last stood—the Sabbatic, pensive and expectant Mount of Olives.”

Applying the Truth to One's Self.

TO be established in the present Truth signifies that I have carefully studied and thoroughly proved it by the law and the testimony (Isa. 8:20), and that as -a consequence I am* convinced of its verity, so that my faith is stedfast and immovable.-1 Peter 5:9; 1 Cor. 15:58.

That I know in whom I have believed.-2 Tim. 1:12. ‘That I have tasted and seen that the Lord is good.—Psa. 34:8.

That I have partaken of the sweets of fellowship with Him.-1 John 1:3-7*.

That I have partaken of His spirit of meekness, faith and godliness to such an extent as to be led into a joyful realisation of the fullness of His grace as manifested in the wonderful divine “plan of the .ages.”—John 14:26; 16:12-15; 1 Cor. 2:10-16.

That I have been permitted to see not. only the .various features of that Plan the Worlds and Ages, Permission of Evil, Restitution, Kingdom .of God with its Human and Divine Phases, Second ‘Death, Great Time of Trouble, Times and Seasons, Second Presence of Christ, Harvest and Its Work, etc., but also the necessity and reasonableness of, its various measures in -order to the full accomplishment of its glorious outcome in the fullness of the appointed times.

. This ‘is what it is to be established in the present Truth. It is indeed a most blessed condition, bringing with- it such peace and joy as the world can neither give nor take away.

But though I be thus established in the present truth, there are quite a number of •

THINGS WHICH I MUST REMEMBER.

That my election to the high position to which I am called is not yet made sure—the race for the ‘prize of My high calling is still before me.

That I am yet in the enemy's country, surrounded by many subtle and powerful foes.

That if I would be successful I must fight the good fight of .faith:

That the weapons of my warfare are not carnal, but (God's .truth is) Mighty to the pulling- down of the strongholds. of error, superstition and inbred sin. 2 'Cor. 10:4.,

That I wrestle not with flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places.—Eph. 6:12. . .

. That it is in view of the warfare before me—the subtlety of my temptations, the weaknesses of the flesh—that the faithful Peter urges all -diligence in the cultivation of .the Christian graces, and a continual calling to remembrance of the precious truths I:have learned—that I may be strengthened for the conflict, and thereby able to make 'ailing and election sure.

That faith is a good thing (without which I cannot please God, I cannot be justified, I cannot maintain my justification or have: .into the' additional. favor, I cannot be an overcomer; yet faith. without. virtuous works is dead; and to hold the truth in unrighteousness is worse than never to have received it.

That the truth is given to me for its sanctifying effect upon my heart and life—it should have; free course and be glorified—its precious fruits should appear more and more from day to day.

That I must add to my faith, virtue-true excellence of character that will mark me as separated from the world and its spirit.

That in me the world should see those moral qualities which. they must approve—however they may oppose (the objects of) my faith. • That I must acid sterling honesty, truth and fair dealing. in all business. relations; moral integrity in all social relations; manifestly clean hands, and a pure heart, and a bridled tongue that 'works no ill to a neighbour.

That all of these the world has a right to expect froth me .and all others who call ,themselves Christians; and that- all of these are indispensable features of that virtuous character which must be added to my faith.

That if my hands be clean, they will not dabble in any= thing that is not virtuous—they, will have nothing to do with unrighteous schemes or projects in. business.

That if my heart be pure, it will not devise evil .things, or harbour evil thoughts, or -plot mischief.

That if my tongue 'be bridled, it will not be given to evil-speaking, but will hold its peace when it cannot speak well and wisely. -

That the promptings of-virtue go. further than merely these negative features which refuse to do anything which would work ill to a neighbour—they incite not only to passive, but also to active, goodness—in benevolent charity which seeks to alleviate suffering; to' sympathise with sorrow, to comfort those in distress, and to, elevate and bless others; to assist "all men as 'I' have opportunity."

That I must gain a knowledge of God's character in order that I may the more thoroughly imitate it, and of His truth, that I may more fully conform to its teachings. . That I must exercise temperance—or self-control—in all things, letting my moderation be known unto all men, and- taking care not to be hasty, hot tempered, rash or thoughtless; but endeavouring to be evenly 'balanced, thoughtful and considerate.

That my whole manner should be characterised by that carefulness which would indicate that I am ever mindful of the Lord's pleasure, of my responsibility to Him as His representative, and of my influence upon my fellow-men to see that it always be for good, never for evil.

That I must let "patience have her perfect work, that I may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing."

That this grace smooths the way for. every other because all must be acquired under the process of patient and continuous self-discipline; and that not a step of progress can be, gained without the exercise of this grace. . That not one of the graces more beautifully adorns the Christian character, wins the approval of the world's conscience or glorifies the God of all grace, whose truth inspires it.

. That it. is long suffering meekness earnestly striving to stem the tide of ,human imperfection- and weakness, and endeavouring with painstaking. care to regain the Divine likeness.

That it: is slow. to wrath and-plenteous in mercy.; quick to perceive the paths of truth and righteousness, and prompt to walk in them; mindful of its- own imperfections, and sympathetic with the imperfections and shortcomings of others.

That I must add to “patience, godliness.” I must carefully study and imitate the .divine character as presented in the Word.

That I must exercise brotherly kindness towards my fellowman.

That I must add, to brotherly kindness, love.

That kindness may be manifested where but little love exists toward the subject of such kindness; but I. cannot long persevere in such acts of kindness before a sympathetic interest is awakened; and by and by that interest, continually exercised, deepens into love, and even though the subject may be unlovely in character the love of sympathy for the fallen and the degraded grows, until it. becomes tender and solicitous. and akin. to that of a parent for an erring son.-

That Peter describes a most amiable character—one which cannot be acquired in a day, nor a year, ‘but the. whole life must be devoted to it.

That day by day, if I am faithful, I will be able to realise a measure of growth in grace and development of Christian character.

That it is not enough that I know the truth—nor should I be contented to hold it in. unrighteousness. . I must see to it that the truth is having its legitimate and designed effect upon the character.

That if I receive the truth into a good and honest heart, I have the assurance of the Apostle that I shall never fall,. and that in due time I shall be received into the kingdom of- my Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.

That I should see the necessity of ever keeping the instructions and ‘precepts of the Lord fresh in my mind, and of drinking deep into their inspiring spirit—although I am already established in the faith.

That to be established in the faith is one thing, and to be established in Christian character and in all the graces of the spirit is quite another.

In claiming to be a divinely recognised child of God and a follower of His dear Son, I stand before the world as God’s representative; and, presumably, all my words and actions are in harmony with His indwelling Spirit.

I stand as a guide-post in the midst of the world’s dark and uncertain way; and if I am not true to my profession, I am a deceitful sign-board, causing the inquirer to lose the right way and to stumble into many a snare. Therefore, to take the name of God, claiming to -be His son, a Christian, a follower of Christ, without a fixed determination, and careful effort to fairly represent Him, is a sin against God of which I will not be held guiltless!

I realise that to undertake the Christian life is to engage in, a great warfare against iniquity; for, though the grace of God abounds to me through Christ to such an extent that my imperfections and short-comings are not imputed to. me, but robed in Christ’s imputed righteousness I am reckoned holy and acceptable to God, I am not, says the Apostle (Rom. 6.:1, 2) to continue in sin that grace may abound; for by my covenant with God I have declared myself dead to sin, and that I have no longer any desire to live therein. But having made such a covenant with God, and having. taken upon myself His holy name, if I continue in sin, or cease to strive against sin, I am proving false to my profession (Rom. 6.:1, 2, 11, 12). This means a great deal. It means a constant warfare against the-easily besetting-sins of my old nature; and-the struggle will be long and constant until the power of sin is broken; and then only constant vigilance will keep it clown.

If I ‘be true .to my. profession, I will daily strive to realise an increasing mastery over sin in myself, and will be able from time to time to-distinguish some degree of advancement in this direction. I will grow more. like Christ—more self-possessed, more meek and gentle, more disciplined and refined, more temperate in all things, and more fully possessed of the mind that was in Christ Jesus. My old temper and unlovely disposition will disappear, and my new mind will assert its • presence and power. And thus -the silent example of- a holy life will reflect honour upon that holy name which it is my privilege to ‘bear and to represent ‘before the world, as a living epistle, known and read’ of all men with whom I come in contact. -I -realise that the formation of such 4- noble- and pure character is the legitimate result of the reception Of truth into a good and honest heart. ‘ Or; rather; such the’ transforming power of divine truth upon the whole character, when it is heartily received and fully submitted to. “Sanctify them through thy truth: thy Word is truth,” was the Lord’s petition on the Church’s behalf; and may I not fall into the error of some, of presuming that the sanctifying work can go on better without the truth than with it? -2 Pet. 1:4; I John 3:3; John 15:3; 17:17; Eph. 5:26; Rom. 12:2; 2 Cor. 3:18; 7:1; Psan. 19::7-14 ; 1 Tim. 4:16. -

-. I need the instruction and guidance and inspiration of the truth for holy living, and our Lord’s words imply, that all the truth that is necessary to this end is in the Word of God, and that, consequently, I am not to look for any further revelations through visions or dreams or imaginations of myself or others. The Word of God, -says the Apostle (2 Tim. 3:16, 17), is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness (Heb. 4:10), that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works. It reveals to me the spirit, mind or disposition of God, and exhorts me to let the same mind dwell richly in me; and in conjunction with the study of the mind of God as revealed in His Word and communion with him in prayer, I receive the blessed influences of His spirit, which brings me more and more into conformity ‘with His perfect will. I realise that to live a holy life: is not to do some great and wonderful things; it is to live from day to day a life of quiet unostentatious conformity to the will of God—of secret communion with Him •in my closet, devotions, and daily work, and of zealous activity to the extent’ of my ability and opportunity in His service. I have named the name of Christ (2 Tim. 2:19), it is my determination—God helping me—to depart (more and more) from iniquity and apply my heart unto instruction, confident that I shall be led of God into green pastures and beside still waters: my table will be richly and bountifully spread, and my cup of blessing and joy and gladness will overflow; while the wrath of God will in due time be revealed against all who take His hallowed name in vain, however they may band themselves together, and however loudly they may proclaim themselves heaven’s appointed messengers.

DAVID’S KINDNESS.

2 Sam. 9:1-13.

IN considering the incident of this lesson we are reminded of the words of the Apostle James (5:10), “Take, my brethren, the prophets who have spoken in the name of the Lord, for an example.” What examples they present—of faith, humility, meekness, obedience, patience, endurance, brotherly kindness, love. We call to mind Moses’ devotion to God and His cause, his tireless zeal and loving ministry through long years of extreme trial; we mark also the obedient faith of Abraham, of Jacob, of Samuel, of David, and of all the noble list of ancient worthies who fought the good fight of faith with unabated energy to the end of their course.. While we consider these worthy examples of loyalty and faithfulness to God and to His truth and righteousness, • we remember that these characters were developed under only the moonlight of the law-dispensation; and in this view of the matter, reason suggests what the Apostle Peter also calls attention to: “What manner of person ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness?” (2 Pet. 3:11)—we who are the recipients of the much more abundant grace of this gospel dispensation.

The kindness of David, to which attention is directed in this lesson, is another mark of noble character. David was now well established and prosperous in his kingdom. The way to it since his anointing had been a rough and stormy one; and in one of the seasons of severest trial, the remarkable friendship between himself and Jonathan, Saul’s son, was thoroughly proved and strongly cemented.

And while Jonathan freely submitted to the will of God which intercepted his own succession to the throne of Israel and gave it to David, he desired and received of David the assurance that when he should be thus established in his kingdom he should always show kindness to him and his posterity. See 1 Sam. 20:14, 17.

When the days of his prosperity came at length, years after Jonathan had gone to his rest, David, remembering his covenant, began to inquire if there were yet any left of the House of Saul to whom he might show the kindness of God. He found but one, the only surviving son of his friend Jonathan, and upon him he lavished the affection and kindness which it would have been his pleasure to bestow upon Jonathan himself, had he survived. Gratefully he remembered the love of his friend, and lovingly he endeavoured to requite it to the extent of his ability.

There is really no more worthy trait to adorn a righteous character than that of gratitude. It is gratitude that returns to God that filial affection which is due from the creature to the Creator. It is gratitude that encourages and sweetens the cup of loyal devotion between friend and friend. It is always the due reward of loving service, and especially of self-sacrificing service, though it is not always the reward rendered. The spirit of the world is, alas! so far removed from this that even loving and self-sacrificing service is more frequently rewarded With cold, thankless indifference, and not seldom with reproachfulness or persecution. Those, therefore, who will live godly and cultivate the graces of a godly character must not be disappointed in failing of their reward here, and in meeting the rebuffs that are sure to come to them in the line of duty. Let them duly appreciate their opportunity of proving their devotion to righteousness and truth by taking patiently and bearing with humble fortitude whatever of reproach or ingratitude may be the present reward, content to await God's time and God's way for giving to righteousness its due reward. Such overcomers who count not their lives dear unto them are of the David (beloved) class.

The text of this lesson needs no comment except the exhortation that we should each more and more endeavour to put it in practice, and to see that with each passing year we are able to note some degree of advancement in this element of godlikeness, not overlooking that sure proof of brotherly love mentioned in the last clause—"in honour preferring one another," remembering also the similar counsel of the same Apostle on another occasion, "In lowliness of mind, let each esteem others better than themselves" (Phil. 2:3), If we merely say that we love one another and yet pursue a steady course of self-seeking, wherein is the love manifest? Let us not love in word only, but in deed and in truth.-1 John 3:18.

When there is some secret foe which claims you for a prey, Fierce becomes its dread approach, it fills you with dismay

Just wing your flight to Jesus, for with Him alone is rest, He'll show the way to conquer, and grant you your request.

—Psalm 19:12-14; Matt. 11:28,30.

VOL. XIII., No. 11 MELBOURNE, 1ST NOVEMBER, 1930. PRICE-TWOPENCE HALFPENNY

Lest Ye Fall from Your Own Steadfastness.

“Ye therefore, beloved, seeing that ye know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness.”—2 Pet. 3:17.

THIS exhortation applies to the Lord’s consecrated people living at the present time. The proof of this is found in the context: the apostle has just been portraying some of the events connected with the day the Lord in which we are living—the “day of vengeance.” In verse 10 he has pointed out that the I present age will end with the dissolution of the symbolic “heavens” and the symbolic “earth,” which signifies the utter disruption of the present social and ecclesiastical order. In verse 13 he points out that we are looking for a new order of things, and not hoping either to patch up the old order ourselves, or that others will succeed in patching what the Lord has declared “shall pass away.” And now in our text he refers to “these things.” In the eleventh verse he points out that those who have such expectations should be separate and distinct from all other people in the world, saying: “What manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness?” And then in our text and in the verse preceding it he points out that at this particular time the Adversary will get advantage of certain ones, will beguile them, get them to wrest the Scriptures, and thus to deceive themselves to their own destruction—to their loss of present light at least.

Finding thus that the apostle is particularly addressing ourselves, let us indeed give earnest heed to his counsel. We notice further that the apostle is not addressing the worldly, nor even the average nominal Christian; but he specifies that his warning is to the “beloved,” who already have attained to “steadfastness.” This implies that they have become rooted and grounded and built up, both in the knowledge and in the love of God; for only such ever become steadfast. Does it surprise us that the apostle should address such a developed class of Christians and warn them of their own personal danger of falling into the “error of the wicked”? It does strike us as peculiar, and we are inclined to think that there must be some hidden meaning in the expression, “error of the wicked.”

It would be past comprehension that such a class as the apostle has just described should be in great danger of falling into such errors of the wicked as blasphemy, or murder, or arson, or theft. We must look the matter up more carefully, and see whether or not the translators have given us a correct rendering of the apostle’s words. We find that they have not, and that the word wicked is too strong. The Greek word is athemos; according to Professor Young’s Analytical Concordance (undisputed authority) it signifies “unsettled,” or “lawless.” Now, the passage seems more reasonable. There is danger, we can readily see, that those once established in the truth might be led away as to become unsettled, and to wrest the Scriptures, “handle the Word of God deceitfully,” and thus become lawless in the sense that they would set aside the Word or law of God, and take instead thereof a twisted interpretation which would the better suit some theory of their own. Such a wrong course, the apostle points out, would surely unsettle them, and eventually mean the destruction of their spiritual interests; and that they would go into “outer darkness” in respect of “present truth.” “Beware, lest ye also, being led away with the error of the unsettled, fall from your own steadfastness.”

The apostle’s language not only points to the present time, but seems to imply that there would be previous fallings away or siftings, which he calls “the error of the wicked”—literally, “the delusions of the unsettled or lawless.” The implication seems to be that the not settled ones would first be shaken out, and that subsequently there would come a still more insidious trial which would test even the “steadfast.” We inquire, therefore, have there been, during this “harvest” time (whilst we are waiting for the dissolution of the present order of things and for the establishment of the new order of things)—have there been such siftings or fallings away by delusions which have affected those not settled?

We answer: Yes, there have been several: we might recount some of these. First of all came a shaking directly upon the subject of the ransom. Certain lawless ones, “heady,” rejected the testimony of the Lord’s Word, denying the Lord’s having “bought us” with His own precious blood. They would accept Christ as an example only, and claimed to be able to follow that example, and that they needed no sin-offering to • compensate for their imperfections, inherited or personal. This, the Adversary’s first move, was remarkably bold, yet it found adherents who were not rooted and grounded upon the testimony of the Lord’s Word. Then came the “flat earth” theory, whose advocates strangely concluded that the shape of the earth is a part of the gospel. The result was that certain others of the unstable were “led away” in that delusion, by not settled leaders who wrested certain Scriptures to their own confusion and to the extinguishing of the light they had enjoyed.

Then came another delusion, in effect teaching the old doctrine of Universalism—that God would finally force eternal salvation upon all men and even upon Satan himself. This theory, of course, also denied the ransom, because, to have admitted that the condemnation to death pronounced in Eden could not be set aside without a ransom, a corresponding price, would logically have implied that disobedience under a full trial secured by the ransom would similarly bring an everlasting punishment—everlasting death—from which there could be no resurrection. Hence, this theory boldly denied the ransom, wrested or twisted the Scriptures which speak of the second death as “everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord,” handling this and other Scriptures so deceitfully as to declare that the second death would be a great blessing to all upon whom it would come. Of course, none but unstable souls could be beguiled by such open and arrogant perversions of the Word of God.

But still another sifting came for the “unlearned” and unsettled, not thoroughly furnished with the whole armor of God: this was the teaching that God is the author and instigator of all the sin, crime and wickedness there is in the world; and that after He shall become weary of evil doing He will reform, change His course and incite all mankind to righteousness and holiness, as He now (this theory claims) incites the majority to sin, etc. Of all the theories which the Adversary has brought out in this “evil day,” this one seems to be the most blasphemous. So-called “orthodoxy” is certainly quite blasphemous enough in claiming that God, after permitting His creatures to be “born in sin and shaken in iniquity” (which He had nothing to do with bringing upon them), claims that, as a punishment for sins which they could not avoid, the vast majority of the human family will be imprisoned in a flaming hell of unspeakable torture, and divinely provided with everlasting life, so that they shall never be able to escape those sufferings by death, and that the devil will be similarly supplied with eternal life (but free from pain) for the purpose of torturing them; and that fuel for the torture will to all eternity be provided by divine power. We say that this is extremely blasphemous of the divine character, yet it is as nothing at all in comparison to the teaching which claims that God is the instigator, the first cause, of all the sin and crime and wickedness in the world. Some Scriptures were also wrested to support this theory, just as Spiritualists and Christian-Scientists do. Of course, only those who had never become thoroughly rooted and grounded in the truth could ever be “led away” by such a blasphemous delusion as this.

The Anglo-Israel question, and communistic and social questions “led away” from the truth, and into more or less darkness and confusion, some others who were not well rooted and grounded ‘in the knowledge of the fact that all present institutions will go clown, and that the new order of things to be introduced will not be of human institution, but the work of God through the glorified Christ. But the apostle comes in. our text to a time after such delusions had “led away” those not established or settled; and his warning is given to the steadfast. The implication seems to be that the Adversary has more subtle delusions before us than any of those in the past; and that the fully consecrated of the Lord’s people may need to be more than ever on guard against “the wiles of the devil.” “We therefore, -beloved, seeing ye know these things (that all of the affairs, reforms, etc., of the present time will avail nothing, and that all the present institutions will pass away, and that God is about to establish His own kingdom in His own way; and knowing further, that just at this particular time there will be a special sifting and testing of those who are in the light), beware, lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked (the unsettled or lawless, who do not bow implicitly to the Lord’s Word, but wrest it ‘to establish theories of their own), fall from your own steadfastness.” ‘While the “siftings” specially affect those who have been I brought by the Lord into the light of present truth, yet in a more general way and along different lines slightly different siftings are in progress with the nominal church as a whole. Each denomination is being shaken, and the theories of Evolution, Spiritism, Christian Science, Theosophy and Moralism are making great inroads upon all who have named the name of Christ, even if they have not come into the light of the “harvest” truth. Unsettled, lacking the knowledge of the Divine Word and plan, necessary in this evil day, the whole nominal church is gradually losing its faith in the Bible, under the lead of its most able ministers, who, blinded to present truths and unable to rightly divide the Word of Truth, are generally coming to hold the opinion that their own ideas respecting truth (“higher criticism”) are superior to the Scripture presentations.

The apostle in our text cautions that we beware against being “led away.” The word here rendered “led away” occurs in only one other place in the Scriptures (Gal. 2:13), where the Apostle Paul says, “Barnabas also was carried away with their dissimulation.” The words “carried away” give the same thought as “led away,” but a little more strongly: they imply that the danger to the steadfast will be along some line which would sweep away or carry away their judgments from the fixed statements of the Divine Word, through personal preference, or sympathy, or through the influence of someone held in respect or esteem. Let us all, therefore, ‘be on guard, that whoever may, consciously or unconsciously, become the instrument of the Adversary, and seek to lead us away from the sure testimonies of the Lord’s Word (whether congenial to our natural tastes or Uncongenial); we may not be “carried away,” but that we may be more determined than ever that

“To our Lord we will be true,
Who bought us with His blood.
Only Jesus will we know,
And Jesus crucified.”

While we see that the danger to the majority of God’s people will be through being “carried away” by sympathy, influence, etc., we must remember that this implies that there will be certain leaders of thought whose conduct will tend to carry away the others. It is not necessary for us to suppose that these leaders into error will knowingly and intentionally get wrong themselves, and carry away numbers with them into their ideas and lawless disregard for the testimony of the Lord, wresting its statements. We may rather assume that in a majority of instances these leaders will be themselves deceived; as the apostle expresses it—“deceiving and being (themselves) deceived.”-2 Tim. 3:13.

All who seek to teach the Divine Plan to others are exposed to peculiar temptations, so that the honor of serving the Lord and His people demands a correspondingly larger measure of the graces of the Holy Spirit, as well as of knowledge. The-tendency of knowledge, as the apostle points out, is merely to puff up, make vain and conceited, and to become a temptation of the Adversary, to draw away followers after them. (Acts 20:30.) Whoever, therefore, would be an instructor of others, a mouthpiece of the Lord, should cultivate all the various graces of the Holy Spirit, including meekness; that these combined (love) with knowledge, may build up himself as well as build up those to whom he ministers. “Knowledge (alone) puffeth up, but love buildeth up.”-1 (“or. 8:1.

Let us not forget that there is a way, and one way only, whereby we may insure ourselves against falling into any of these traps of the Adversary. This insurance is not secured wholly by knowledge, although knowledge is a very important element in it: it is secured chiefly by obedience to the principles laid down in the Lord’s Word, and illustrated in the life and character of our Lord and His apostles. The same apostle who gives us this warning against falling from our own steadfastness, tells us in the same epistle (2 Pet. 1:5-12), “If ye do these things, ye shall never fall: for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly, into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.”

What things? Does he give us the particulars of this work of grace that will so insure us against falling that we shall receive the great prize? Yes. He tells us that it is by continually adding to our stock of the heavenly graces—”Add to your faith fortitude, and to fortitude knowledge, and to knowledge self-control, and to self-control patience, and to patience piety, and to piety brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness love; for these things .being in you and abounding they will not permit you to be inactive or unfruitful in the knowledge (personal intimacy, acquaintance) of our Lord Jesus Christ. . . . Therefore, brethren, give the more earnest heed that you may make your calling and election sure, for if ye do these things ye shall never fall.”

The Unfailing One.

HE who hath led, will lead
All through the wilderness:
He who hath fed, will feed;
He who hath blessed will bless;
He who hath heard thy cry
Will never close His ear;
He who hath marked thy faintest sigh,
Will not forget thy tear.

He loveth always, faileth never;
So rest on Him, to-day, for ever!
He who hath made thee whole
Will heal thee day by day;
He who hath spoken to thy soul
Hath many things to say.
He who hath gently taught
Yet more will make thee know.

He who so wondrously hath wrought
Yet greater things will show.
He loveth always, faileth never;
So rest on Him, to-day, for ever!
He who hath made thee nigh
Will draw thee nearer still.
He who hath given the first supply
Will satisfy and fill.

He who hath given thee grace,
Yet more and more will send;
He who hath set thee in the race
Will speed thee to the end.
He loveth always, faileth never;
So rest on Him, to-day, for ever!
He who hath won thy heart
Will keep it true and free;
He who hath shown thee what thou art
Will show Himself to thee.

He who hath bid thee live,
And made thy life His own,
Life more abundantly will give,
And keep it His alone.
He loveth always, faileth never;
So rest on Him, to-day, for ever!

Then trust Him for to-day
As thine unfailing Friend,
And let Him lead thee all the way,
Who loveth to the end.

And let the morrow rest In His beloved hand;
His good is better than our best,
As we shall understand,
If, trusting Him who faileth never,
We rest on Him, to-day, for ever!

JUDGING from articles in leading religious papers of England, it seems to be generally acknowledged that if the present trend of indifference to religion and church attendance continues, the churches will, in less than ten years’ time, have to close their doors. Principal Garvie a few months ago was reported as deploring the state of the churches which, he said, was obstructing missionary enterprise. Such voices are raised from time to time, and some prophesy and seem to hope for a great revival; but Churchianity and its empty forms and ceremonies and teachings that have so misrepresented the God of their worship, appears to be sickening unto death. While it is a sad condition of things, yet, it is exactly what the Scriptures have foretold. Peter spoke of “damnable heresies” which would be brought in after the decease of the apostles. Paul tells how that “in the last days men shall be lovers of their own selves rather than lovers of God, having the form of godliness (professing to be Christians) but denying the power thereof.” The Revelator shows how the Church in its last stage would reach this worldly lukewarm condition and be disowned by the Lord (Rev. 3:12). There are many who think the churches will yet revive and be the means of the world’s conversion. “We would have healed Babylon but he will not be healed.” It is good to hear voices of Aarm raised, honestly acknowledging errors and wrongs which have come about through false teachings. Canon Fancourt, in Auckland Cathedral, candidly declared “we have in the past misrepresented God,” and he could not say a truer word. The churches have inherited from the Dark Ages the many “damnable heresies” which have weaved a confusion and mystery around the Christian religion, which have made the Word of God of non-effect. It is truth that must conquer error, good that must overcome evil, faith that must take the place of superstition, and the knowledge of God that must banish ignorance, as the “Light that shall lighten every man that cometh into the world” shall dispel the darkness and gloom of sin and sorrow and death.

The trouble with the churches is that, while they have great classical and scientific knowledge, they hold so much error and understand so little of the true knowledge of God and His Word. How can they convert the world when they do not themselves understand the Gospel of Christ, which is the power of God unto salvation to them that believe?

The only foundation on which the true Church of Christ can stand is the truth, “Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.” It needed no scholarship to understand the simple yet profound teachings of the Saviour. “The poor had the gospel preached unto them.” It was not then, nor has it been since, that many great, noble or learned have grasped the Gospel message.

It is a sorry thing to see numerous churches of various sects, creeds and theories all claiming to be the Church of Christ, yet mostly still steeped in the delusions of teachings hatched in the Dark Ages. Instead of trying to mend, to end, or to unite such systems of error, it would be better to Obey the Lord’s voice of Revelation: “Come out of her, my people.” It would be well to abandon the “old bottles,” which would, anyway, burst if the “new wine” (the present truth) concerning the coming new dispensation were to be poured into them.

The true Church can only be based on the Rock foundation, “Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.” There was nothing in the teachings of Christ about such things as the Trinity, or that man has a soul that cannot die, or the wicked will be granted eternal life so that they can forever suffer torture. He claimed to be the Son of God and said, “My Father is greater than I.” He came to save that which was lost and dying. “Ye will not come unto Me that ye might have life.” Those who wilfully continue in sin are to go into “gehenna” for destruction. “All the wicked will God destroy,” for He is able to destroy both body and soul in gehenna.

NOTICE.

Our attention has been drawn to the fact that from time to time certain letters are being circulated by people in Sydney and other parts, under the names of Berean Bible Students, Associated Bible Students, or some such titles.

We recognise the personal liberty and privilege of all to publish what they believe to be truth. We find, however, that some of our readers have received such letters, at first under the impression that they came from this office. They then noticed the variance of teachings and have written to us for explanations of statements so contrary to the matter which is contained in our columns. We wish all to know that we are not responsible for these emanations. All our publications are sent out from this office only, and under the title of the “Peoples Paper,” or by the Berean Biblical Institute, Hawthorn, Melbourne.

FIRST FOUR RULES OF LIFE.

Add up your blessings—such a host! you surely must have more than most. With such a long impressive sum, no least excuse for feeling glum. Add “grit” and gladness to the rest, and you’ll stand up to every test.

Subtract from all your calculations petty crosses and vexations; take away the times you fail, every temper, slight and wail, Shedding trouble, every fraction—that’s the right use of subtraction.

Multiply by two or four advantages you had before, by keeping an adventurous mind, by seizing every chance you find; by laughter much more oft than sighing; by working, learning, hoping, trying.

Divide your wealth with poorer folk. You’re strong enough to halve a pack that’s weighing down some older back. You’re kind enough to split in two the task a frail one has to do.

Add, subtract, multiply, divide! Remember this, whate’er betide; if to the first four rules you stick, you’ll work out life’s arithmetic!

The Closing of the Gospel Age.

We have been requested to present our views respecting the closing of the present Age, and the establishment of the Lord's Kingdom on the earth. While there are more essential matters, of faith and the working out of Christian character, yet we remember that the Lord upbraided the Pharisees because 'while they could daily discern the skies and foretell the weather, they failed to perceive the more evident signs about them indicating the times, and that they were living in the end of their Jewish Age and in the presence of the Son of Man, so that they "knew not the time of their visitation."' —Luke 19:44.

The Lord also taught that a similar position would prevail at His second coming, "As in the days of Noah. .. they knew not until the flood came and took them all away, so shall it be in the days of the Son of Man." Just as truly as there was to be a flood in Noah's day, is there to be the "great time of trouble such as was not since there was a nation" prior to the inauguration of the new Age and Messiah's Kingdom.

In all the great Divine judgments of the past—the Flood, Sodom and Gommorrah, Egypt, and Jerusalem—God has forewarned His faithful people. How beautiful are the words of the Lord when proceeding to destroy Sodom, "Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do."—Gen. 18:17. Again, it is declared, "The Lord will do nothing but He revealeth His secret unto His servants the prophets" (Amos 3:7), and concerning the great time of trouble with which this Age ends the Apostle writes, "Ye brethren are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief." So, then, while we may not know the day nor the hour, we must "watch and pray" and discern the times in the light of the prophetic lamp if we would "know the time of our visitation."

Most of our readers realise that we are living in the "time of the end," and have been since about 1795-99. The wonderful increase of knowledge, means of locomotion and communication and wondrous other inventions, completely fulfil the prophecy of Daniel 12:1. 4. Likewise all the signs of our Lord's great prophecy. 24, Luke 17 and 21, are discernable to-day. '1 Master said, "When ye see these things, then know that the time is at hand," that generation shall not pass until all be fulfilled.

The difficulty generally is that we take too small a view of these things. So many seem to expect the Lord's coming and going to be like a flash of lightning, and everything to be consummated in a day. The Apostle Peter warns us in his second epistle, chapter three, to remember how much higher and greater are God's thoughts than our thoughts.

He says, "a day with the Lord is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." To understand correctly these things we must try and take the Lord's viewpoint. "The time of the end" covers quite a period, during which many events are to take place in the world, in connection with Israel and particularly in respect of the Church, for "the Harvest is the end of the Age."

It would be during this same period that Christ would again be present in the world preparing to establish His Kingdom, receiving the overcoming Church unto Himself that they may be with Him and reign with Him. The Harvest means a separating of the true Christian from the mere professing Christian. The Parable of the Talents indicates the Lord's first work with His people. The Gospel Age will be closed by all the Church being taken to be with Christ.

They will have been prepared for the great work of dealing with mankind, of leading all the willing and obedient up the highway of holiness—to receive the reward of eternal life which was forfeited by our 'first parents, and separating the 'incorrigibly wicked who will be destroyed in the second death, which work is shown in the parable of the Sheep and the Goats. —Matt. 25.

It seems very clear that Christ must be present for some time attending to this work, among the members of the Church. This is in accord with His own statement, that as there were "days of Noah" 'before the flood so there would also be "days of the Son of Man," prior to the great time of trouble with which this Age is to end. We believe it is reasonable to think that the "days of the Son of Man" will anyway be as long as were the "days of Noah," and that we have been some considerable time in these days. Daniel's time prophecies have reached their termination, viz., 1260. days, about 1796-99; 1290 days, about 1826-29; 1335 days about 1872-4. Also the seven times of the Gentiles ran out about 1914; yet the last members of the Church are still in the flesh and the Kingdom is not set up.

Some have thought that the words, "In the days of these kings shall the Lord God set up a kingdom," mean that the reign of Christ would commence as soon as the Gentile Times ended. That does not appear to be the case, but rather that during the times of these Gentile kings God would select the heavenly kingdom class that should reign with Christ. Throughout the 'Gospel Age, this Kingdom has been in course of preparation. Soon now, we believe, the last member in Christ will be glorified and then the great time of trouble will reach its climax, will break down the present systems, social and religious, that are out of accord with righteousness, and the humble the hearts of men and lead them to turn to the Lord, their only refuge and strength. The 1260 days of Daniel (or 3Y2 times) were to be days of persecution of God's people, and at the end of that period the Papal persecution was broken, when Napoleon took the Pope a prisoner to France. At the end of 1290 days, 30 years later, the Christian Church was awakened respecting the second coming of Christ by the Millerite movement, which terminated in 1844 in disappointment, because they expected Christ to come again visible to the human eye. He did not come that way, but as a glorious spirit-being. At the end of the 1335 days the present Lord had prepared the promised feast of Luke 12:37, the feasting on which is the "blessedness" promised to those at the end of that time.

Now the Lord is inspecting His people regarding the use of talents, and, at the same time; matters are working out in the world and with the Jews in preparation for setting up the Kingdom. When the Kingdom is established all the "little flock" to whom it is the Father's good pleasure to give the 'Kingdom will be with Christ in the throne (Rev. 3:21), for they are promised to reign with Christ 1000 years. Satan also will have been bound, for he is to be bound 1000 years.

Many think that 6000 years of human history are past, but we think not, but incline to the thought that when 6000 years are over the seventh 1000 years will be the reign of Christ, and will be the great antitypical sabbath, for which "the whole creation groaneth and travaileth together in pain until now, waiting for the manifestation of the Sons of God."—Rom. 8:22, 19.

Correspondence

The following extracts from letters of our brethren in the various States show true appreciation and thankfulness to the Lord, while rejoicing in the truth. A brother from a distant State writes:—

"Your welcome letter duly received and I thank you for same, and the kind expressions. Also many thanks for Vol.

1 and 'Voice' received safely. I have plenty of 'Perplexed Humanity's Only Hope,' but was out of the others. I like to have copies of 'The Voice' on the Divine Plan.

"Have just re-read the copy of January 1st 'P.P.,' and appreciate the encouragement to 'seek first the Kingdom of Heaven.' This must surely be our first and most earnest desire, but the trivial cares and pressing needs of our struggle for existence are always with us. I liked the thought given in a recent 'Herald,' that these everyday trials and apparently trivial details of our daily routine are being used by our all-wise and loving Heavenly Father as a grindstone to smooth and polish us into shape. This is evidently so if we accept the Apostle Paul's words, 'All things work together for good to them that love God.' These words must have been a source of great comfort to all God's children striving to be conformed to our 'Pattern.'

"'The Manna' of September 6th and comment are very encouraging. I would almost have lost heart in these isolated parts, and apparently useless life, only for such assurances of God's Word. I mean, this humdrum life I am living seems so trivial and useless in regard to giving much witness for the furtherance of God's Kingdom on earth; but I thank my Heavenly Father and the Lord Jesus Christ that I have learnt that sublime lesson that, if faithful in little things, we may be accounted worthy to help Him in the glorious future, when there will lie the unspeakable opportunity to do the great things in the restoration of mankind. May we be kept faithful in the little things which He gives us to do

One of our brethren in New South Wales writes as follows:-

"It is some time since I wrote to you last, but I have been receiving the 'P.13,' regularly and always welcome its arrival, and trust you will always preserve that meekness of spirit which has characterised it in the past. "The last PPs." have been 'meat in due season,' and have contended for the faith, and also for the presence of our Lord—invisible to the world.

"May the Lord bless your labour of love and help you to show forth praise to His everlasting honour and glory.

“I visit the little class meeting at Rawson Chambers, Sydney, when opportunity offers. Enclosed herewith please find — toward the tract fund. Please remember Me in your prayers. Your brother in Christ.”

The following also shows how the truth is enjoyed by others of our readers, one having just received the free papers

“I am writing to let you know I have just finished reading and studying the lovely book, ‘At-one-ment Between God and Man,’ which you so kindly sent to me. I cannot tell you in words how much I enjoyed reading it. How beautiful the chapter entitled ‘The Undefined One,’ also the ‘Holy Spirit of God,’ but the chapters all through the book are most interesting. The book has been a great help and comfort to me, and I do pray to my Heavenly Father to help me to understand and make it plain to me.

“I will now, with God’s help, read and study ‘The New Creation’.”

“Just a line to thank you for the pamphlets, which I read and enjoyed, and sincerely hope you will send me some more soon, as I consider them of-immense value to the hungry mind. I would also like you to forward me Foregleams of the Golden Age,’ for which I enclose postal note for 3/-.”

Post-Resurrection Appearances.

“Attention has often been drawn to the fact,” Writes Rev. Gerard Sampson in a little volume of “Eucharistic Meditations for the Sundays and Saints’ Days of the Year,” “that in all the appearances of the risen Lord, He is never recognised by sight.”

“He is supposed to be a spirit, or a stranger, or a gardener. Not one of His disciples ever recognised, with His eyes, that it was Jesus. This is remarkably significant. The Jews and other enemies of Christ ceaselessly spread reports that the accounts given by the apostles and evangelists of our Lord were false, and had no historical truth in them. This applies not only to His miracles and sayings, but to the accounts of His resurrection and ascension. If the apostles and evangelists had made up the appearances of the Risen Lord out of their own heads, they would have composed very different accounts from those which the evangelists have given us. For instance, if it were not an actual fact, well known and authentic, that after the Resurrection our Lord did appear to many chosen witnesses, and that not one of them recognised Him, and that they all at first disbelieved the word of those who had seen Him; if this were not an historic fact, who would have invented it?”

The Gospel as Preached to Abraham.

THE word gospel signifies good news. There are parts or elements to the good news, however; there are first principles of the gospel of Christ (Heb. 6:1), and there are more advanced doctrines, also. For instance, when you became aware that you were a sinner, and learned that Jesus had become your ransom, and that as a result you might now approach God through faith in the righteousness of Christ, and that by-and-by, in God's due time, all marks of sin would be removed, and the willing and obedient among the human family would be lifted up to actual perfection, that was good news for you: it was the basis of your harmony and friendship with God. It was the same thing which centuries ago was good news to Abraham. Paul tells us, "Abraham believed God and it was counted unto him for righteousness" (Rom. 4:3). What good news did God communicate which Abraham believed? The gospel . . . saying,

"In thee shall all nations be blessed." The process by which all nations were to be blessed was not understood by Abraham, except that it should be through his offspring, but he believed the fact without knowing how. We are made acquainted with the manner in which the blessing comes, viz.: that Jesus was (through Mary) the seed of Abraham, and as such gave His life a ransom for all men: that, as a consequence, in due time all men will be released from all the ills which come through sin.

Yes, the restitution from Adam's sin—the justification of humanity by Christ's sacrifice, was the good news to Abraham, to us of the Gospel Age, and is to be good news to the whole world in the next Age, for it is to be testified "in due time" (1 Tim. 2:6). It is the message that is called "the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth and to every nation and kindred and tongue and people" (Rev. 14:6).

But there is another phase of the good news (gospel) which belongs exclusively to this Gospel Age, something "which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now (during this Gospel Age) revealed unto His saints and prophets (public expounders) by the Spirit" (Eph. 3:5). This special good news is, that since Jesus' sacrifice, God is calling out from the world of humanity, some to become the Bride, the Lamb's wife—to "become partakers of the divine nature" (2 Pet. 1:4), to cease to be men and become "new creatures in Christ Jesus" (2 Cor. 5:17), and as such to be "Heirs of God, joint-heirs with Jesus Christ our Lord." This is "our high-calling" of God, which we are to make sure of, by crucifying and sacrificing the human nature. This is the prize for which we seek—"glory, honor, and immortality." •

But these prizes were not offered to Abraham: he was not told about the joint-heirship, nor about sitting in the throne, nor about immortality. No, these were not made known in past ages. "Jesus Christ . . . brought Life and Immortality to light through the gospel" (2 Tim. 1:10), Nor will this high calling be made during the future ages, for the "body of Christ" will be completed in this age. The Bride will be developed, and the marriage of the Lamb will come when his wife hath made herself ready (Rev. 19:7).

So we see that we get all that Abraham got, viz., justification by faith from Adamic sin, and in addition are invited to become a part of "The Seed which is Christ" (Gal. 3:29). Abraham was the father of this seed in a certain sense.

Jesus was anointed of the Spirit—"the Lord's anointed"—and this, we have seen, is the meaning of His title, Christ; and all who become members of the Christ must be made partakers of the Holy Spirit—anointed. Now we want to show that none were ever thus anointed before Jesus, and if this be the case none ever were members of His body before this age.

David is called the Lord's anointed, but he was anointed of Samuel with the anointing oil to the office of king; but both David and the oil were types. The oil is a type of the Holy Spirit, and David a type of Christ in his office of king. Aaron was the Lord's anointed also, but he, too, was anointed only with the typical oil and was himself a type of Christ in his office of priest. The Spirit of God (Holy Spirit) came upon the prophets during the Jewish Age, but in a different way entirely and for a different purpose from that of its operation on the Church during this age. Then, it was simply a power, which took possession of the prophet, over which he had little or no control (see Num. 22:38). Never before Jesus did the Holy Spirit act as "a comforter" and guide into an understanding of truth, and this is the special work of the Spirit now. It is given to the new creature as a seal or evidence of his being begotten to the divine nature and as an earnest of his final deliverance or birth into the spiritual form.

The Spirit had written the mysteries through the prophets, but had not revealed them. These mysteries were written for the church (Jesus and His body), and no one else could know them, nor will anyone else understand them until the church is complete and "the mystery of God . . . finished."

Many of the prophets were good men who loved God and whom God loved, yet Daniel, called the “greatly beloved,” prayed for weeks to God, desiring an understanding of some of the prophecies which he himself had uttered. But the Spirit gave him no understanding of it; finally God sent an angel, gave him all the understanding possible (but evidently not satisfactory), and finished by telling him that the thing was closed up and sealed for a time, but would be understood when due (see Dan. 12:9).

For the same reason that prophets though beloved could not understand, the angels also beloved could not understand. God had not revealed His plan, hence it is written, “Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man (nor angel, we might add, on the strength of Peter’s statement) the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him. But God hath revealed them unto us (the Church) by His Spirit . . . Now we have received . . . the Spirit of God, that we might know, the things freely given to us of God” (1 Cor. 2:9, 13).

Peter evidently refers to Daniel’s interest above referred to, when he says (chap. 1:10), “Of which salvation (our high calling) the prophets have enquired and searched diligently who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you; searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was (speaking) in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the suffering of Christ, and the glory that should follow. Unto whom it was revealed that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister, the things which are now reported unto you, by them which have preached the gospel (good news) unto you, with the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven (to be your guide in understanding the preaching), which things the angels desire to look into.” They prophesied of the grace (favor—high-calling) which is come unto you—the gospel church. Now notice another point made strong by Peter’s expression: the prophets testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ. To all who see how the church or “body” of Christ has fellowship with the “Head” both in sufferings and glory, this statement is full of meaning. Our hope is to be accounted worthy to suffer with Him, that we may be also glorified together (Rom. 8:17); but the prophets spoke of the sufferings as all future: they spoke of them “beforehand,” so we may be sure that no matter how much the prophets may have suffered as witnesses for God, their sufferings were not like those of the gospel church, reckoned a part of the sufferings of Christ.

Now, again, to His body, the Church, Jesus is called the “Head,” “Leader,” “Captain of our Salvation,” and how proper it is that a leader should precede his followers. How could Abraham and the prophets walk in His footsteps as He hath set us an example? (1 Pet. 2:21.) If Abraham and the prophets be counted as a part of the Christ, then Jesus was their follower; if their sufferings be a part of the afflictions of Christ, then Jesus was merely filling up their afflictions. But not so—the Head suffered first and then the body follows—“considers Him” and His example. This is our privilege to “Fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ” (Col. 1:24).

But we have already shown that one reason why we are called the Christ, is that we are like our Leader, anointed of the spirit or power of God. The Father gave it without measure to Jesus the Head; and Jesus when glorified gave the same to His body, the church at Pentecost, as Peter explains: “He being by the right hand of God exalted, hath shed forth this” (Acts 2:33). The spirit in this sense as a witness of our sonship (on the spiritual plane), as a guide into all truth (as it becomes “meat in due season”), came to the church first at Pentecost, as we read that the Holy Spirit was not yet given because Jesus was not yet glorified (John 7:39). Jesus must first make His sacrifice and be accepted of the Father, before any could be received as spiritual, new creatures and recognised by the Spirit’s adoption as such. Jesus’ words bear the same import. He said, “It is expedient for you that I go away, for if I go not away the comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart I will send him unto you”—“even the spirit of truth” (John 16:7; 15:26). Hence it is evident that the Spirit in this sense of enlightening and anointing is given only to the body of Christ (anointed).

But someone enquires: Is it ever stated that the church is anointed? Yes, we read (1 John 2:27), “The anointing which you received from Him abides in you, and you have no need that anyone should teach you (ye are not dependent upon human wisdom and science), but the same anointing teaches you concerning all things” (Diaglott). Again, let Paul tell us of our anointing (2 Cor. 1:21), “Now He which establisheth us with you in Christ, and hath anointed us, is God; who also hath sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts.”

We conclude, then, that whatever God may have in His plan, as the reward of Abraham, the prophets, and all ancient worthies, it is not the same thing which is promised to the Christ, which began with the head and will end with the last member—in this age. Thus we see that while there was good news to Abraham, and is to be everlasting good news in future ages, yet our Father hath bestowed “the exceeding riches of His grace, in His loving kindness, toward us in Christ Jesus.”

The Bible in Russia.

“During 1928 and 1929 and up to the present time,” writes Dr. John H. Ritson in a brochure on British and Foreign Bible Society’s work in Russia, “the door against Bible importation in any form appears to have been doubly barred, and permission to print the Scriptures within Russia cannot be obtained at present.”

“The policy of opposition,” says Dr. Riston, “is futile, and sooner or later doomed to fail. In 1835 persecution broke out in Madagascar. Missionaries were expelled. There was a death penalty for Bible reading. Christianity was proscribed and public worship was forbidden. But many copies of the Scriptures had been distributed before the persecution began, and they were “the fuel that kept the sacred fire burning (luring a quarter of a century.” When the missionaries returned they found more disciples of Jesus Christ than there were when they left. This has happened again and again in history. Many of the 23 million volumes of the Scriptures circulated by the Bible Society in Russia are there still. The seed is sown and much in good ground. The roots have struck deep down into the hearts of the Russian people. No Government can root them out.”

“He always wins who sides with God
To him no chance is lost;

God’s will is sweetest to him when
It triumphs at his cost.

Ill that He blesses is our good,
And unblest good is ill;

And all is right that seems most wrong,
It it be His sweet will.

Glad Tidings of Great Joy.

“Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall ‘be to all people; for unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.” “For the Son of Man came to seek and to save that which was lost. (Luke 2:10, 11; 19:10.)

Our confidence in Jesus •, t He was the sent of God the Redeemer, the Deliverer of His people. rests not mere,; upon the testimony of the apostles in the New Testament records, wonderful and convincing as these testimonies are; they gain nine-tenths of their weight and importance from the fact that !they evidence the fulfilment of promises, types and prophecies given by the Lord with more or less explicitness from time to time throughout the preceding 4000 years. He who does not discern something, at least, of the divine plan of the ages in connection with our Saviour, His birth, His three and one-half years’ ministry, His sacrificial death, His resurrection, His ascension, etc., fails to get the real strength of the divine revelation, designed by the Lord to be the firm foundation for His people’s confidence in Him, and in all the glorious things which lie has promised He would yet accomplish through this great Saviour.

Note the original promise of the Saviour shortly after sin had wounded our first parents and brought them under divine sentence. (Gen. 3:15.) Note the promise made to Abraham respecting Messiah, that He should be of his .posterity. (Gen. 22:18.) Notice the same to Jacob. (Gen. 28:14.) To David. (2 Sam. 7:12 16.) Through Isaiah the prophet, His coming and His greatness are foretold. (Isa. 9:6, 7; 11:1-9.) Daniel, the prophet. also refers to the importance of His work of making an end of sin, and bringing in everlasting righteousness, and thus sealing the visions and prophecies, which the Lord had just given respecting Him and the favour to come through Him. (Dan. 9:24.) We recall also how He was typified in Isaac. who was not only the heir of the promises made to Abraham, but who was also in a figure put to death and received again from the dead ad. We remember also the types and figures of the Mosaic arrangement. and how ‘Moses himself was declared to be like unto the greater One to come after him.

Had the hopes of Israel been merely inventions to deceive the people, we may be sure that the deceiver would have been careful to have marked out some remarkable line of parentage for the coming Messiah—free from blights, scandals, etc., but this was not done; instead, the weaknesses of the flesh amongst our Lord’s progenitors are fearlessly noted. The New Testament writers are similarly candid, and make no hesitation in recording the genealogy. All of this is in full accord with the scriptural presentation of the matter; namely, that our Lord’s virtue, His sinlessness, His separateness from sinners, was not through the flesh, not through His mother, but through His Father. God.

According to the flesh, Jesus Christ took hold. of the seed of Abraham, as the Apostle explains; but through various circumstances He was indirectly related also to the outside world. All of this is interesting to us, but nothing to be compared to our still greater interest in the fact that our Lord Jesus, although born a Jew under the Law, and redeeming those who were under the Law, did more than this, in that his death as planned by the Father and accepted by Himself, was a propitiation “for the sins of the whole world.” He died as the ransom price for Adam and his sin, and thus purchased from condemnation, not only Adam, but his entire posterity involved through his transgression; hence, as the Apostle points out, “He is able to save (deliver) unto the uttermost all who come unto God through Him.” (Heb. 7:25.) Not only so, but our Lord’s circumstances of birth and early experiences in comparative poverty as a working man impress us with the thought that He is indeed able to sympathise with mankind in every station of life; having passed from the glory of the Father to the conditions of fallen humanity and back again, He is surely able to appreciate and to sympathise with all conditions and classes.

Our chief interest centres in the message which our heavenly Father sent us through the angels at the time they announced the birth of Jesus: “Fear not”—the angel understood well that through sin and degradation a fearful apprehension comes over man when he finds himself in contact with spirit beings; he is apprehensive of certain further condemnation or punishment; his acquaintance with his fellow man in influence, authority and power, leads him to dread the still greater authority and power of the Almighty, lest it should be injurious to him. Only the true Christian, having the eyes of his understanding opened to appreciate the length and breadth and height and depth of the love of God, can have that perfect love toward the Heavenly Father which is built upon an intimate knowledge of His Word, and which casteth out all fear. We are reminded of the prophet’s words respecting the Lord’s people of to-day, “Their fear toward Me is taught by the precept of men.” (Isa. 29:13.) The Lord would have His people free from this fear, though not free from a proper reverence toward Him. •

What was the first angelic word
That the startled shepherds heard ?—

“Fear not !” Beloved, it conies to you
As a Christmas message most sweet and true,

As true for you as it was for them
In the lonely fields of Bethlehem ;

And as sweet to-day as it was that night,
When the glory dazzled their mortal sight.

The message continues, “I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people.” How slow the Lord’s people have been to believe this message, and to accept the Saviour at His full worth! How prone they seem to be to suppose first of all that He was to be a Saviour merely for the Jews; or, secondly, a Saviour merely for a special elect class; or thirdly, a Saviour only for those who, under present darkness, ignorance, Prejudice, superstition and devilish influences, manifest a special love for righteousness! But how broad is the statement—great joy—for all people! Our faith is not broader than the positive declaration of the Scriptures, when we hold firmly that our God graciously has arranged that every member of our poor fallen race shall yet be blessed with a clear understanding, not only of his own weaknesses and imperfections through the fall, but also by a clear understanding of the great redemption price paid by the Saviour, and a share in the glorious opportunities thus secured, to return, if he will, back to full harmony with God, and to full ‘blessings and everlasting life. •

The angels did not declare that our Lord came to bring universal and everlasting salvation to all people; but they did declare that the good message of joy, of privilege, love, hope, shall extend to all people. The explanation of this is that a Saviour had been born—a deliverer of the weak, the helpless, the dying, able to succor to the utmost all who would come to the Father through Him; able to open the blind eyes and to unstop the deaf ears that all may come to an appreciation of the goodness of God shining toward them in the face of the Lord Jesus.

The word Saviour, otherwise rendered Deliverer, signifies in the Syriac language, literally, Life-giver. What a wonderful thought is conveyed by that word! What is it that our poor, dying race needs? 'It needs deliverance from the sentence of death, and then it needs deliverance from death itself, into life, complete, abundant, and everlasting. Our Lord has already become our deliverer in the sense that He has settled our account with Justice. As a result of this work already done, and since the Church, which is the body of Christ, has followed in the footsteps of our Lord, and has about "filled up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ," (Col. 1:24), very shortly now, under the sounding of the Seventh Trumpet, the mystery of God will be finished—completed—and atonement for the sins of the world shall be proclaimed in a proclamation of full emancipation to all people. Good tidings of great joy it will surely be! full of gracious opportunities for enlightenment, restitution and obedience, and for a full return to all that was lost by father Adam, including life in perfect degree—lasting life!

No wonder, - after this message had been delivered, the Lord -permitted an angel host to serenade the proclamation, and, incidentally, to prophesy also of the grand results yet to flow from the great work of redemption. which was then only beginning in the birth of the Redeemer ! Properly, the anthem begins with praise to Him that sitteth upon the throne, to Him who devised the great and wonderful plan of redemption, and who sent His Son, our willing Redeemer; glory to Him in the highest—in the highest strain of heart and voice, with fullest appreciation of Him as a Saviour ! Next came the consequences on earth; namely, peace—not such a peace as men might patch up between themselves and between nations and parties, and that under present conditions would very soon be scattered to the winds, but a peace with God, a peace which comes from a restoration to the race of the divine good will. It was because divine justice could not spare the guilty, that the sentence of death, the "curse," has borne down upon our race for now six thousand years. Under that divine sentence of death, the dying race has become impoverished, not only physically, but mentally and morally. Selfishness has become the rule, and, in its wake, have come all our selfish ambitions and pride and strife and vain-glory and money-love, which have caused so much of the trouble that mankind has experienced.

But now, glory to God in the highest! because peace has been established upon a firm foundation—the lifting of the curse through the payment of our penalty by the Lord's own arrangement ! As soon as the body of Christ has suffered with the Head, the great antitypical day of atonement will be complete, and peace between God and man will be established, will be renewed, and as a consequence the Redeemer shall take to Himself His great power and reign for the purpose of blessing and uplifting those whom He purchased with His own precious blood. In their interest, it will be necessary that the great peace shall be introduced by the breaking in pieces of present institutions with the iron rod of the new Kingdom, as the vessel of a potter they shall be. crushed as henceforth useless; that in their stead may come the grander and perfect institutions of the Lord's Kingdom. He will wound to heal, to bless, to bring in peace on the basis of everlasting righteousness; for ultimately, He will destroy all those who, after being brought to a knowledge of the truth, will still love unrighteousness, and tend to the corruption of the earth. He will destroy them, not in anger, but in justice, in love, that an everlasting peace in full accord with that which is in heaven may prevail upon earth.

Wherever the story of God's redeeming love has gone, even though confused by various falsities, it has carried more or less of blessing with it—even to neglectful hearers, and not doers of the Word, it has brought blessing; and still more blessing to others who hear partly and obey partly; but its greatest blessing has been to the little flock, the royal priesthood, who, entering into the spirit of the divine arrangement, have realised themselves justified through faith in the precious blood, and, in harmony with the invitation of the Lord, have gone forward, presenting themselves living sacrifices, that they might have fellowship with Christ in the sufferings of this present time, and also, by and by, in the Kingdom glories that shall follow. It is this class, chiefly, that is now rejoicing in a still fuller opening up of the divine Word. so long beclouded by the falsities coming down from the dark ages; it is this class that is chiefly now rejoicing in the discernment of the lengths and breadths and heights and depths of the divine love and of the divine plan which has purchased the whole world and will, eventually, recover from present degradation all who, under the favourable conditions of the Millennial Kingdom, will develop the character which God demands of all who shall have eternal life—a love of righteousness and hatred of iniquity.

STAND FAST.

HOW many times do the scriptures admonish us to “stand fast”? “Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit ye like men, be strong,” says Paul. (1 Cor. 16:13.) He also says to the Corinthian Church, “Not that we have dominion over your faith, but are helpers of your joy: For, by faith ye stand.” (2 Cor. 1:24.) Then again, “Only let your conversation (behaviour) be as it becometh the gospel of Christ; that whether I come and see you, or else be absent. I may hear of your affairs, that ye stand fast in one spirit, with one mind, striving together for the faith of the gospel.” (Phil. 1:27.)

These admonitions, so necessary at that time, are much more necessary now. How easy it would be to drift with the tide and become weary and faint.

The Apostles were arrested for preaching Christ and healing a lame man at the temple. They were illiterate fishermen, unaccustomed to speaking before the learned, and we may be well amazed at their courage, and at the straightforward presentation of the Gospel given by St. Peter. It astonished the High Court too. They wished to arraign the Apostles, not for the good deed of healing the lame man, but rather for their preaching of Jesus. However, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, St. Peter wisely and properly drew attention to the fact that they were on trial really for the healing of the sick. Again he disowned any power on the part of himself and his companions; admitting that they were merely ordinary men, he credited the miracle entirely to Jesus.

What a lesson is here for all who would rev’ the Lord, as TI is ambassadors, as St. Paul said, preach not ourselves, but Jesus Christ.” (2 Cor. 4:5.) How courageous were the Apostle’s words, “Be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by Him cloth this man stand here before you whole.” St. Peter was not only preaching that Jesus was the Messiah, whom the Jews had long expected, but, additionally, he was declaring that the Sanhedrin had murdered the Messiah. It was the truth, and it was necessary to utter the truth. To have evaded the point would have shown fear.

Next, the Apostle quoted to them from the prophecy of David (Psa. 118:22), saying. “This is the stone which was set at naught of you builders, which is become the head of the corner. Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved.”

Perceiving the boldness of Peter and John, and noting that they were unlearned and ignorant, these leaders in Israel marvelled; and “took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus.” Of Jesus, it was also said, “How knoweth this man letters, having never learned.” (John 7:15.) They knew of His power with the people through the spirit of the Lord, and of His straightforward presentation of the truth. They recognised these men as of the sane character, filled with Jesus' spirit.

To this day, this is true of the followers of Jesus. "God hath not given us the spirit of- fear, but of power, and of love, and a sound mind." The Lord's people should remember this point and should cultivate such a spirit, and be copies of the Lord Jesus, and of the faithful Apostles, so that all might take knowledge of them that they have been with Jesus and have learned of Him.

As the Apostle indicates in his discourse, "There is none other name given among men whereby we must be saved." We must make a personal acceptance of Him as our Saviour. We must consecrate our all to follow in His steps faithfully, even unto death. On these conditions, we become His disciples; and having become His disciples, learners in the school of Christ, and having been begotten of the Holy Spirit, we are privileged to show forth more and more His praises, and to let our light shine before men, that they, seeing our good works and our likeness to the Master, may glorify God on our behalf.

The Sanhedrin were perplexed, as they perceived that the disciples had so strong a case, and had really turned the tables upon them, charging them before the people with being the murderers of the Son of God, the Messiah. As they looked at the man who had been healed, they perceived a great miracle, and they could say nothing. So they put forth the disciples from their midst, that they might discuss the case privately. They could not deny the miracle, and they were afraid of what it might lead to if talk of this kind about Jesus, and about their being His murderers, should spread amongst the people. They thought it best to let the disciples go, charging them not to preach any more in the name of Jesus. Then was shown the marvellous courage of the Apostles. They replied, "Whether it be right in the sight of God to harken unto you more than unto God, judge ye, for we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard." The Bible directs the followers of Jesus to be subject to the powers that be; but while seeking to be thus law-abiding in (very respect. Christians are to recognise that there is a still higher Ruler, and are to be subject to the worldly powers only in the absence of a contrary divine instruction. God had commanded the disciples through Jesus, that they should preach the Gospel. It was, therefore, the duty of the Apostles, as it is the duty of all the followers of Jesus, to make known the Gospel message wherever there are hearing ears, and not to fear what man may do.

The church.. young in faith, had been greatly distressed by the imprisonment of the disciples, and when they were released. a general meeting for rejoicing and praise to God was held, thanking the Lord for the courage given to the Apostles, for the promises of His Word, and for the miracle which led up to this. As a consequence, all were so encouraged that "they spake the Word of God with boldness"; and "with great power gave the Apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus; and great grace was upon them all."

This text is properly an exhortation to all of God's people everywhere, to be faithful and loyal to God and His cause. Let us each apply it to ourselves. "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit ye like men, be strong."

“DEAD UNTO SIN-ALIVE UNTO GOD.”

Romans 6:11.

I count myself, O Saviour, dead with Thee!
By faith I also in Thy death have died:
Shall sin still have dominion over me
The sin which on Thy Cross was crucified

Thy Cross and mine, since I, by faith, was One With Thee in condemnation, in the day
When God the Father made His willing Son
A sacrifice to put my sin away ?

I count Thee, O my Lord, alive in me!
I know as surely as in Thee I died,
So surely Thou Thyself hast risen in me!
And ever more Thou wilt in me abide.

And all the wondrous graces which are Thine
The glorious gifts which God in Thee has stored—
Come in Thy coming and with Thee are mine,
Since I am One with Thee, my risen Lord!

PEOPLES PAPER.

PRINCIPAL A. E. Garvie, D.D., evidently realises that there is something wrong with the church. He says, "It is a constant regret and trial to the forward-looking men, who do, passionately, desire to win the world for Christ through the church, that there are not only so great obstacles in the world, but also, so great hindrances in the churches themselves." . . . "It is painful for any Christian believer to disturb the beliefs of another, and so cause him grief. But, just as a serious operation may be imperative to preserve an imperilled life, so is it necessary for the church to take the risks and pay the costs of making herself fit for her tasks." . . . "There must be much more thinking done, and thinking so free of the traditions and prejudices of the past, that the church's intelligence shall be equal to the necessities to be met and the opportunities which offer. And this thinking will lead to recognition of how much needs to be revised and adjusted to the new situation in preaching, worship and service, if the church again to exercise the influence and command the authority in the world, which was once her portion, and which the treasures of truth and grace entrusted to her justify her in expecting and qualify her for attaining."

More thinking is necessary, and yet there are great. ----- always thinking, but it is thinking "free from traditions and prejudices" that is necessary, and it must be thinking under the guidance of God's Holy spirit and reverence for His word. Such unbiassed, unselfish, disinterested thinking, should lead to the discarding of all unscriptural doctrines, forms and ceremonies, and human traditions, and the adoption of only the beautiful: yet profound teachings and simple methods of Christ and the Apostles. "Thy Word has still its ancient power." It needs no secular power, it needs no influences of court or strength of earthly arms. If the Word is preached in faithfulness, if the gospel message be proclaimed in its simplicity, "It shall not return unto Me void; it shall accomplish that whereto it was sent." (Isaiah 55:11.)

There is nothing wrong with the Gospel of Christ. The message of the Bible is all right, and sufficient. "It is the power of God unto Salvation." (Rom. 1:16.) The trouble is that men did much thinking on wrong lines. They thought of how to gain power over the minds of men, and so all sorts of mysteries were concocted, and "doctrines of devils" (1 Tim. 4:1; 2 Pet. 2:1.). The church gradually gained the worldly power and influence, which the doctor thinks she was justified in expecting, but which the Apostle Paul, as also the writer of the Apocalypse, speak of as the great "falling away," or the unfaithful woman.

In our thinking upon this matter, it is not only necessary to return to the pureness of teachings and simplicity of the faith, but also to search out the purpose Divinely intended in sending the Gospel to the Gentiles during this age. Whatever that purpose is, depend upon it, it is being accomplished, whether it be in accord with the teachings of the churches, or our own particular ambitions or thoughts or not.

What a joy, what blessing, there would be for all who would meet apart from bias and prejudice, just to search out the truth as it is in Jesus concerning the Gospel message, what it is necessary to preach, and what should be expected as a result of such proclamation.

It is because of the wrong thought that it was the church's mission to convert the world during this Gospel age, that there is the seeming defeat of the Gospel. The New Testament clearly shows that the object during this time is only.

"To take out a people for God's name," to choose a "little flock to whom it is the Father's good pleasure to give the Kingdom"; to select a Bride class, which shall reign with Christ in His Kingdom. When the church has been perfected and glorified with her Lord, then Christ's Kingdom will be set up. Grace and truth will have sanctified those accounted worthy to "be 'joint heirs with Christ.'" and qualified them to as "kings and priests unto God," and for the of all the families of the earth. (Romans 8:1; 1:6; 1 Pet. 2:9; Galatians 3:16 and 29.) It was the mistake of the early church that they wanted to "reign before the time." Only by walking the humble narrow way of the Cross, "despised and rejected of men," can "the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus," be won.

It will be no earthly organised church that will win the world for Christ. Christ has “all power in heaven and in earth,” and, in His own time, will command obedience, and “unto Him every knee shall bow and every tongue confess.” The Gospel, however, is fast accomplishing the mission on which it was sent. “Preach the Gospel in all the world for a witness.” Nothing in the New Testament suggests any thought of the church winning the world or gaining power to exercise influence and command authority in the world. The purpose is very plainly stated to be simply the selecting of a people for God’s name, and the Gospel came to the Gentiles to fill up the number of God’s elect, which might, had the Jewish nation accepted Christ, have been taken entirely from that nation. (Acts. 15:14-17; Rom. 11:25-27.)

Dr.. Garvie truly said, “It is painful for any Christian believer to disturb the beliefs of another, and so cause him grief.” Such is Christian spirit. and well would it have been, had all who have criticised their brethren in the faith, had more of such spirit. How much has been done in the denunciatory spirit, as though glorying in fault-finding and in a feeling of superiority. “Knowledge puffeth up” has been more frequently demonstrated. The true Christian who comes to a clearer knowledge of Bible truths and the Divine purposes, rather than feeling “puffed up,” should realise the favour bestowed upon him, and endeavour to use his best powers of mind and heart, in humbly transmitting the rays of light to others, who may be hungering for the knowledge of the truth. Divine truth upon spiritual matters has not reached anyone because he or she was clever; it comes only by having yielded ourselves to God, and having received Holy ‘by which alone, His Word can be interpreted.

If this is ever borne in mind, how much more tenderly will these “operations” of breaking up the mists of error and confusion of creeds and dogmas be undertaken.

There are some who seem to take pleasure in seeing the discomfiture of those whom they attack. It is the natural mind that would do so. The spiritual mind has confidence in simply ‘presenting the scriptural view of matters, kindly and prayerfully seeking to gain—not to defeat—the hearer, and recognising that all glory in any success is to the Lord, whose we are, and whom we serve, and who has provided us with “the weapons of our warfare, which are not carnal, but are mighty, through God, to the pulling down of strongholds.” (2 Cor. 10:4.)

The carnally minded way of bluntly denouncing and smiting with ridicule, may break down the error, and leave the person stranded in doubt and unbelief. ‘The true soldier of Jesus Christ will seek rather to gain the ear and build up in true faith and doctrine, and it is in such results that there is the real joy of service.

CLASS ADDRESS.

Word is to hand from our Sydney friends that their class meeting room is now number 523 (Burn’s Club Room), 5th floor, Rawson Chambers, Pitt Street. Studies are held on Sunday afternoons and evenings, at 3.30 and 6.30 p.m.

CHRISTMAS CONVENTION.

Having finally decided that the days of the Convention season will comprise Thursday (Christmas Day), Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, December 25 to 28 inclusive, the Melbourne Friends have now drawn up their Convention syllabus, including what should be very helpful and interesting Bible studies, addresses, etc., and in which some of the visiting Brethren will take part. The season proper will include Thursday, Friday and Sunday, with afternoon and evening sessions, while the Saturday afternoon will take the form of an outdoor gathering at Heidelberg, when each and all can look forward to a happy, enjoyable, and profitable outing. On Saturday morning (if necessary) a baptism service will be arranged for any of the brethren desiring to symbolise. Tea will be provided each day, and it is hoped that as many as possible of the Friends from other parts will avail themselves of this opportunity of fellowshipping at convention this year with those of like precious faith, so that all may be further encouraged, exhorted, strengthened, and made to rejoice together, especially in these latter days.

The meetings will be held at Molesworth Chambers, 450 Little Collins Street, Melbourne, and any desiring further particulars. or accommodation are asked to communicate with the Secretary, Berean Biblical Institute, National Bank Chambers, Hawthorn, E.2., Melbourne.

“All God’s angels come to us disguised,

Sorrow and sickness, poverty and death,
One after other left their frowning masks,
And we beheld the seraph’s face beneath,
All radiant with the glory and the calm
Of having looked upon the face of God.”

Correspondence

Dear Brethren,

Recently, a book, "God's Eonian Purpose," came my way. It introduces the Concordant Version. While we appreciate a desire to clarify the Scriptures, we cannot endorse the practice of reading into the Scriptures the purport of one's thoughts, or, as we remark with secular things, making the wish father of the thought.

Just now, we find all freak religions ready with a cure-all. If we have once really understood Jehovah's plan, we must be aware that the pivot on which it turns or its centre feature is the Ransom sacrifice.

If we apply this test to anything but Jehovah's plan, that is presented to us, we shall find that the Ransom sacrifice is either evaded or regulated to be a nonessential feature, instead of being the paramount feature.

And so with this presentation, we perceive that while we understand that the world has been redeemed by the sacrificial death of God's Son, they would have us understand that the world has been justified by His death, without any action on their individual part. Romans 3:28; 5:1; Galatians 2:16; 3:24, all show we must use our wills and signify our faith. Acts 13:39 tells us the same thing.

It seems quite easy to fail to remember that we are free-will agents. Jehovah gives us the opportunity, but we must exercise our own wills, and will either to live or die.

Some are not capable of exercising their wills, just so, and, at present, are not responsible, and we rejoice in Isaiah 35:8 for them.

If we would just strive to become clear on the fundamentals of the plan, these subterfuges would not detract us. We do well to remember that these earnest folk, not having comprehended the plan, are not responsible as we are, who claim to have understood it.

With the fundamental error as above, the book is replete with many others as a consequence, and, as the sects hopelessly confuse the texts referring to the church and the world, so does this presentation confuse the spiritual and earthly phases of God's plan.

We do not hope to convince these people of Jehovah's plan, as they apparently have never comprehended it, but we humbly trust that aspiring saints will remember, that as such we have a responsibility to be fully persuaded in our own minds, and that we cannot put on the whole armour of God, unless we experience 2 Tim. 1:12. Again, in 1 Cor. 9:26, .27, Paul reveals that he was well aware that it was possible to fall from grace. Hebrews 6 also warns us to this effect.

I gather from this book that they consider these punishments a banishment for a period of time, with an eventual reconciliation. This does not harmonise the operation of Jehovah's characteristics, Justice first, then Wisdom, Love and Power. When refuting this teaching, Brother Russel, among other things, quoted Acts 3:23. How much more comprehensive and satisfying does the philosophy of the Plan appeal to us.

The claim is that the Concordant version is a word for word rendering of the Greek in translation. considering a much paraphrased translation, and remember it is only one of others. Mr. Benjamin Wilson has given us the Diaglott, a word for word translation of the New Testament, and its conclusions are at variance with the Concordant version.

Romans 16:1 7 and Hebrews 13:9 need no comment. Christian love, Brother.—From yours, humbly,

Question Box.

Question Well day should we keep as the Sabbath?

Answer ..—"We who have believed do enter into rest," not a ceremonial Sabbath once a week. "Let us, therefore, fear lest a promise being left us of entering into rest any of us should seem to come short of it." Only as we cease from our own works, "as God did from his," shall we be able to "rest in the finished work of Christ." If we would try to justify ourselves by good works, or by keeping a literal seventh day, we shall fail to enter into the real rest of faith. When we, as followers of Christ, consecrate ourselves to God, we devote, not only part of our belongings, talents, time, etc., but, "all my days and all my hours."

The ceremonial seventh day Sabbath of Israel was then but a type or a shadow of good things to come, but the reality is of Christ—the real Sabbath of faith. (Col. 2:14-17.)

There is no command that the followers of Christ observe the seventh day, but our Lord arose from the tomb on the first day of the week and appeared to His disciples on that day, and it seemed generally the first day of the week that He appeared afterwards. Thus it became a practice for the Lord's people to meet for prayer and fellowship on the first day. It is thus called "The Lord's Day."

It seemed to be the Lord's intention thus to make it evident that an entirely new dispensation had commenced, that the Law Covenant for the selection of a house of servants under Moses (Gal. 4) had closed, passed away, and that a new age for the selection of a house of sons under truth and grace had begun.

While, therefore, there is no Scriptural command that the Christian observe any particular day, it is, nevertheless, a good providence that the laws of the land provide one day a week when secular work may cease, and thus leave an opportunity for all of like precious faith to assemble in Christian fellowship.

Question:—Should the Mosaic Laws respecting clean and unclean meats still be observed?

Answer—As has been stated above, the church is being dealt with, "not under Law, but under grace," not as "a house of servants under Moses, but as a house of sons under Christ." (Heb. 3:5, 6.) Paul can, therefore, say both respecting the Sabbath and regarding meats, "Let no man judge you," in these things. (Col. 2:16.)

Yet, while we are not under command in the matter, we may learn much wisdom and guidance from the divine arrangements for Israel under the Law Covenant. "The Lord will not withhold from the righteous any good thing," and we may be sure that, as well as containing typical lessons, there were good health reasons for the withholding from the Jews certain meats and certain fishes. Let every man be persuaded in his own mind, and act according to conscience. Question:—Is there anything in God's Law forbidding the eating of meat on Friday, or is it only one of the Roman church's many errors?

Answer. No, there is no divine command respecting the keeping of Friday as a fast day. While there were fastings at times commanded under the Mosaic Law, there is no command respecting such matters for the Christian church. With the development of Papacy, it seemed to be part of the scheme of subjugating the laity to formulate all kinds of forms and ceremonies, and to make religion mysterious.

What is needed to-day is a return to the simplicity of the faith, and the practice of Apostolic days. Forms and ceremonies and man-made mysteries are all a hindrance to true Christianity. The Law Covenant and its ceremonies passed away when "Christ made an end to the Law, nailing it to the cross." "The Law came by Moses, but grace and truth by Jesus Christ."

South Africa's Native Problem: The Clash of Colour.

THE most formidable of all the political problems which loom in the future," writes Sir Herbert Samuel in "The Spectator," "is the relation of the coloured races to the white. The leaders of the Asiatic and African peoples are no longer naively ignorant of the nature, of the strength and the weakness, of European civilisation. Within the last half century, easier communications and widespread education have worked a great change. It is as though a curtain had been drawn up. They see the world as it is."

"If," he says, "they were to have reason to think that the British Empire is not, as it has claimed, a friend seeking to help them, its Government a trustee acting in their best interests, its commerce striving, on equal terms with the rest of the world, to serve their needs; let them see the British nation as a distant ruler, gaining power and holding it in order to exploit their trade; let them have reason to contrast their own conditions with those of other territories under the mandatory system where commercial privileges are forbidden, then the moral foundations of the Empire, more important than the economic, will be undermined; the principles on which it has been built and by which it has flourished, so different from those of any Empire of the past, will have been renounced."—(Christian World.)

South Africa, like other parts of this selfish sin-cursed earth, needs the Kingdom, and the Kingdom only will solve its difficulties. The general attitude of the white intruders to dark Africa is unchristian. What is needed here, as elsewhere, to bring peace and happiness is the application of the Golden Rule. The sentiment, particularly in the Dutch, is that the native must be kept down. They know that as education and Bible truths are received by the natives that the result must be a perception of justice and liberty, which will lead to the natives claiming their human rights. This will mean that their labour will no more be exploited and taken ad-vantage of. The natives of South Africa, in their native condition (particularly the Zulus), are a noble race capable of all that a white man can do, if given proper opportunity of development. For generations untold, they have been left in ignorance of the "only name" and only power that will or can lift man out of degradation and bring an intelligence of the Creator's purpose, yet, notwithstanding that fact, the moral standard has been equal to and probably higher than European civilisation.

The Zulu is naturally a gentleman and trustworthy. Those, however, who have come in contact with the white man have imbibed his evil ways, and can be as little trusted. There are good and bad natives as there are good and bad white men, but probably a larger proportion of whites are bad than of the natives. There are those who blame the Missionaries, and not without some reason. It would seem to be a fact that, even those who have gone to these foreign lands, ostensibly to suffer hardship for the Gospel's sake, have lived in luxury, exploiting native labour for a few shillings a month, on plantations, by which they have made considerable money. The inconsistency of these professing to be followers of Him who died for all, "Jew or gentile, bond or free," and "had not where to lay His head," is what has done so much harm, not only in Africa and India, but in the home lands also. What is needed to-day is genuine faith, producing works in accordance therewith. That should be the attitude of true followers of Christ, walking as He walked, talking as He talked, seeking to spend and be spent in His cause, adorning the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Then, too, let all churchianity cease, all the doctrines of the dark ages pass, all the dogmas and creeds of man depart, and let the pure word of God in its simplicity, yet depth, be brought to these people, how beautiful would be the effect. The Dutch, who now rule South Africa, are a religious people, but it would seem very hypocritical. 'They will quickly refer to the curse on Ham and interpret it to mean that the natives, descendants of Ham, are destined by God to be hewers of wood and drawers of water for the white man. They ignore the fact that it is only until the third or fourth generation that God has said He would inflict punishment of the fathers upon their children, and that Christ died for every man, and that, as "all nations are of one blood," so there is no respect of person with God.

As indicating the Dutch attitude, we quote the words of a young Dutch Judge, who said; "We do not believe in the right of the native to rise to our level; we are passing a few laws to ameliorate the native position, but that is only to keep Britain and the League of Nations quiet; we are fighting to keep the native in his place, but we know we are fighting a losing battle."

Well would it be if the Europeans of South Africa were to take advice of our Lord, when He said to the Jews who were so soon to lose the divine favour, and fettered by the Gentile powers: "Make friends unto yourselves with the mammon of unrighteousness." That would mean that while they still have the power, they should treat the natives justly, firmly, kindly, as fellow beings.

There are many who say, if you treat the native kindly, he will despise you and take advantage. White men will do the same, of which there are many experiences, but kindness can be dealt out with dignity, and we have personally tested natives along this line, going out of our way to show a kindness, and in no case did we have anything but pleasant results and received well-expressed appreciation.

While there have been Honaries and Mission Stations which have, no doubt, done more harm than good, yet, as in the past, there are still to-day those earnestly striving to do good and bring to the natives of Africa the glad message of life and truth and liberty. The British and Foreign Bible Society has surely done a great work in printing the Bible in the native languages. The American Mission Board is also doing good work in educating and teaching useful trades, and there are schools for teaching reading and writing. We visited several of these with native teachers, and it was a pleasure to see the work going on. The native seems to be a plodder, and often, though able to read very slowly, he will plod through. The "Christian World" quotes Miss Margaret Wrong respecting Africa's need of Christian literature, as saying. "We are teaching a great number of people to read and creating in them a mental hunger. but we are failing to provide them with anything with which to satisfy that hunger. A good book is a very cheap form of a missionary. In these days of increasing literacy, few needs are more urgent."

It is a pleasure to know that, through the sacrifice of some of our readers, a pamphlet has been published, which, anyway, may be a morsel to hem in the great need—a little to help along the way until the day breaks, bringing the pure gospel in its fulness and beauty to these and all earth's groaning creation, when, "no one will any more need to say to his neighbour. know the Lord, for all shall know Him from the least unto the greatest."

The following letter, just received from South Africa, written by a Zulu to one of the friends who had placed the pamphlet into his hands, shows good appreciation, and that a blessing has been received:

Dear Sir.

I thank you very much for the copies about Bible that we get presently.

The fact is this, the Bible wholly is very hard to understand, and thus explained it's much easier. And if I can keep in touch with these copies I would be very much pleased.

I am, Sir, yours faithfully, J. M.

In such a world as this, with such ugly possibilities hanging over us all, there is but one anchor which will hold, and that is utter trust in God.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS.

“Thou hast received gifts for men.” (Psa. 68:18.)

Christmas gifts for thee, Fair and free!
Precious things from the heavenly store,
Filling thy casket more and more;
Golden love in divinest chain,
That never can be untwined again;
Silvery carols of joy that swell
Sweetest of all in the heart's love cell;
Pearls of peace that were sought for thee

In the terrible depths of a fiery sea;
Diamond promises sparkling bright
Flashing in farthest reaching light.
Christmas gifts for thee,
Grand and free!

Christmas gifts from the king of love,
Brought from His royal home above;
Brought to thee in the far off land,
Brought to thee by His own dear hand.
Promises held by Christ for thee,
Peace as a flowing river free,
Joy that in His own joy must live,
And love that Infinite love can give,
Surely thy heart of hearts uplifts
Carols of praise for such Christmas gifts.

God Commendeth His Love.

“God commendeth His love towards us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us” (Rom. 5:8).

HOW many there are in Christian lands who have no proper idea of God or real faith in the message of the Bible. Even yet in this day of enlightenment the general conception of God is that He is terrible, austere, vengeful, and seeking occasion to condemn. How different is the Bible view of Jehovah, the one true God, whose nature is love, who is perfect in wisdom, exact all righteousness—justice—and all powerful. He is able to do all His good pleasure—”There is nothing too hard for Him.” “With God all things are possible.”

How we rejoice to find that the almighty God is kind and good. Life would indeed be unbearable if He were cruel and vengeful; if He took any pleasure in causing suffering, life would be a calamity instead of a privilege and pleasure. But Jesus Christ manifested the character of God so perfectly that He could say, “he who hath seen Me hath seen the Father also” (John 14:9); and Jesus is the noblest, truest, kindest, and, while firm for righteousness, the most merciful character that humanity has ever known. With such a character as an example of the disposition of the Heavenly Father, we surely agree with the Apostle John, when he declared, “God is love,” It is a beautiful thought expressed by the Psalmist when he speaks of the Lord as looking down from heaven to see who there is that may be feeling after Him. “The Lord looked down from heaven upon the children of men to see if there were any that did understand and seek God” (Psalm 14:2).

How numerous are the teachings in the Christian world that have grossly misrepresented God. Probably many of the Lord’s people have been painfully misunderstood and slandered, but none can have been more misrepresented than the great Creator. How many have taught that God, instead of looking down in mercy, was just watching to see every mistake, and to punish the sinner. The teaching has been that God was going to give eternal life to the wicked, in order that they might suffer eternally, and that all the millions of men and women who have died without ever having heard about the way of salvation were forever lost.

The Bible, however, tells us of a God of love, “who is the saviour of all men, especially of those that believe” (1 Tim. 2:3-6, 1 Tim. 4:10), and that He appeals to men to consider how much He has done for them—He recommends His love to us. “God commendeth His love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us” (Rom. 5:8). How beautiful it is to think of the great God, “the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy; dwelling in the high and holy place with Him that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the heart of the contrite ones” (Isaiah 57:15). So the Bible represents the Lord as looking clown upon this sinful world, with a longing heart, commending to us His love that we should think about it, for God has given us reasoning ability and says, “Come, let us reason together; though your sins be as scarlet they shall be white as snow, though they be red like crimson they shall be as wool” (Isaiah 1:18).

The Word of God is full of such expressions of love. What a beautiful picture of the Heavenly Father Christ gave in the father of the Prodigal Son. The parable recorded in Luke 15 is familiar to all. The son had requested and gone off with his portion of the inheritance and wasted it all in sin and folly. Then in miserable want he became repentant and returned to his home, The father could justly have said, I have given you all there was coming to you; you have taken your own wilful course and must accept the consequences and make the best you can out of the position. Possibly he might have allowed him, as requested, to be a servant instead of a son. How differently did the father act. How at once, on hearing of his coming, he went to meet him and received him with great rejoicing. -He clothed him in the best robe, put a ring on his finger, and killed the fatted calf for the feast (Luke 15:20-23). It is just so with God, He "so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever 'believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life.'" "He willeth not the death of the sinner." "Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die" (Ezekiel 18:23).

Some one may say, "Did not God arrange that the wages of sin is death, that the soul that sinneth it shall die?" Yes, indeed, (God is righteous and just, and yet His justice is in accord with His love. It is easy to see that it would not only be unjust, but unkind, to allow the wilful sinner to continue to live forever. There is no happiness in sin. The "pleasures of sin" are but fleeting, and consist mostly in excitement and sensations only for a short time, which leave the mind and heart dissatisfied, the physical health impaired, and often in a wretched and pitiable condition. The wicked could never be happy themselves, nor could the happiness of the righteous be complete while sinful conditions existed about them. For the wicked to be allowed to live forever would mean a blot on the great Creator's work. It would mar the beauty of earth as the home of mankind.

God is righteous—just—and it is wise and just and kind that all who so love wickedness, after having the full opportunity of being assisted up the high way of Holiness, as to knowingly and wilfully refuse to obey God's righteous laws, should die and be as though they had not been.

The Divine purpose is that the earth shall be filled with a perfect human race, everyone able to reason, and to appreciate the principles of righteousness, and having a sincere reverence towards God and love for all His creatures. All will have perfectly free wills, which, controlled by hearts and minds loyal to God and the beauties of His arrangements, will 'always be exercised along proper lines in accord with wisdom, justice and love.

The Apostle in Hebrew 2, recognising the wonderful purpose of God, says, "We see not yet all things brought under Him (Christ)." No, indeed, sin still reigns, and even those in Christ find they cannot do the things they would, and often do the things they would not. All are born into this world weak and sinful, even under a sentence of death. How could we be expected to live righteously, and how can it be just that we are condemned before we are born? Why should we not all have been created perfect and had the opportunity of being- obedient to God and so gaining eternal life?

It is just here that we observe the Divine wisdom and kindness. Had all been so created and given the opportunity of our first parents, how many, we ask, would have remained obedient? How many would have avoided sin, of which there had been no experience? Probably all will agree that most would have done no better than our first parents. Then for every one who sinned under such individual trial a separate redeemer would have been required, to give a ransom if they were to be redeemed from death, which is the penalty for sin. God in His mercy concluded all in sin in order that He might have mercy on all in one, that "as all in Adam die, so all in Christ shall be made alive" (Rom. 11:32) ;

1 Cor. 15:22). The principle of justice demands an equivalent—pound for pound—eye for eye—hand for hand—life for life. Human life was forfeited by "one man's sin," and God's only begotten Son covenanted with the Father to become flesh and die, the just for the unjust, the Father promising a great reward to His Son for such loyalty and loving sacrifice, namely, that He should be highly exalted above every name in heaven and earth, and that unto Him every knee should bow.

"Whom God hath set to lie the propitiation through faith in His blood, to declare His righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God. To declare, I say, at this time His righteousness, that He might be just, yet the justifier of them that believe in Jesus" (Rom. 3:24-26).

The first three chapters of Genesis inform us of the creation of man, of the entrance of sin, and the sentence, "Thou shalt surely die." The race has 'been dying ever since, and if there had been no sacrifice, which Christ gave on Calvary, there would have been no resurrection; we should have died without any hope of life beyond the tomb. But all through the Bible we find it emphasised that "without the shedding of blood is no remission of sin," and, "Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures" (1 Cor. 15:3), and in the last three chapters of the Bible the result of that redemptive work is shown in beautiful figurative language. The happy time of the resurrection and opportunity of life under perfect conditions is spoken of, when the whole earth shall be as the Garden of Eden, and God's bountiful love will be appreciated, and His will shall be done on earth as in heaven.

There is no discord in the Bible when rightly understood, but a perfect theme winds itself through all the various books of Moses and all the prophets and apostles, all in beautiful harmony, sounding the glorious message of love in Divine wisdom, justice and power.

Oh, how that message of love, the gospel of "good news, which shall be to all people" (Luke 2 • of peace and good-will towards God and man, that Gospel of Christ, which is the power of God unto salvation," has -been twisted and marred and misrepresented by church dogmas and creeds of men. The harsh old teachings of hell, torments and purgatory, have belied the God of love. There is nothing in them of love or joy or peace, nothing in them to commend, but "God commends His love to us, in that, while we were yet sinners. Christ died for us," that we might have life. God's message to the world is as full of love as it is of wisdom and justice. How much there is speaking of His gracious purposes, of His yearning for His erring creatures with a compassion as of a parent. "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him" (Psalm 103:13). How long suffering He was with Israel, all His punishments were corrective, and the prophet represents God in the yearning appeal, "Oh why will ye die, oh House of Israel." Again, "I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, but rather that he turn from his wickedness and live."

It may be asked why the long delay, of Ages during which ignorance and sin have so prevailed; when the wicked have seemed to prosper most and the righteous have suffered; when the world has been and is full of envy, strife, greed, war and calamities. Oh, what a sad world it has been and still is. Why the long delay?

Briefly stated, God has allowed man to take his own course and to learn the hard lesson of the results of sin.

"God has suffered all nations to walk in their own ways, winking at their ignorance." Yet He has been preparing the remedy. "In due time Christ died," and since then God has been selecting a church class, members in Christ to be joint heirs with Christ in His Kingdom (Act 15:14-17; Rom. 8:17, Rom. 11:25-27).

The time will soon come when He will establish His Kingdom and speak peace to the people, and cause righteousness and truth to spring out of the earth.

Then the angel's message, "Behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people," will be fulfilled, and the promise to Abraham, which is just as wide and good—"In thee and in thy seed, (Christ and the Church (Gal. 3:16. 29), shall all the families of the earth be blessed (Gen. 22:17-18). "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as in heaven. Such is the Gospel of Christ, which is the power of God unto salvation.

What does it mean to us? Is it just a matter that we reason it out and accord" that it is right, and just and good. and that it enables us to see the foolishness of the many systems of religion and the creeds of the dark ages? If that is all, then we have failed to grasp its fulness, its beauty. If the love of God for mankind has been so revealed to our hearts, it can have none other effect than that we shall desire to be in perfect harmony with God, we shall desire earnestly that the love of God be shed abundantly in our hearts. We shall desire to have that same spirit of God operating in our lives, leading us to mould our characters, influencing our thoughts and words and actions, so that we may, to some extent, manifest our Father in Heaven, and be used in His service to sound His praises, and to tell forth the glad message of His love and of His gracious plan of salvation for all the willing and obedient.

EXCERPT FROM “STRANGE FIGURES,”

BY J. NEIL, M.A.

“WHERE two or three are gathered together in My name, there am I in the midst of them. Lo, I am with you all the days, even to the end of the age.” Many earliest believers, among them a large portion of that body known as “The Brethren,” take these words literally and actually teach that the Lord Christ, as well as the Holy Spirit, has ‘been personally present in all the gatherings of His Church. But other plain scriptural statements contradict this view. After the Lord’s ascension Peter, speaking of Jesus the Christ, says: “Whom the heavens must receive until the times of the restoration of all things (that is, the end of the age) of which God has spoken by the mouth of all His holy prophets, since the world began.” To the stunned and sorrowing disciples who had seen Him depart the angels say, “This same Jesus who has been taken up from you into heaven, will so come in like manner as ye beheld Him go into heaven.” That is clearly at His second advent, but they give no hope of His coming personally before that time, or in any other way. He Himself said of leaving His people, “Days will conic when the Bridegroom will ‘be taken from them. It is expedient for you that I go away; I go to my Father and ye see Me no more,” etc. In keeping with this we read that when Stephen in the extremity of martyrdom was comforted with a vision of Christ, he saw Him not here, not down by his side on, earth, ‘but far above on high, for he cried, “I see the heavens opened and the Son of Man standing on the right hand of God.” All the texts that speak of His ascension and His present session at the right hand of the Father, “to appear in the presence of God for us,” point to His personal absence from His waiting Church, and so do such allusions to Himself as He makes in the parable “a certain nobleman” who “went into a far country to receive a kingdom and to return” . . . Now these, at first sight, apparently contradictory statements of His presence and absence here on earth during this dispensation are both fully, practicably and most comfortingly met if we hold that the presence of Jesus with His people has been represented by the Holy Spirit, unlimited by any bodily conditions, that can be and is literally present wherever the Lord’s people meet in His name. This is the meaning of the Master’s words, “I will pray the Father and He will give you another comforter that Ire may be with you for ever. . . .” When, therefore, lie adds immediately these words of comfort, “I will not leave you orphans, I will conic to you,” we cannot help perceiving that His coming here is figurative and is spoken of His coming by and through the agency of His spirit, the Paraklete or Advocate, that He has just before promised. “What a world of mysticism this simple explanation sweeps away ! How it cuts down at the roots Rome’s monstrous doctrines of transubstantiation and transaccidentation, or the change of bread and wine in the Lord’s Supper into the Body and Blood of Christ.”

Many failing to realise the actual personal absence of Christ during the Gospel Age, and that He has but been represented by the Holy Spirit—the Comforter which He had promised to send from the Father—are unable to recognise how He could come at His second advent and be unseen by any and unknown to all excepting those watching—the “Brethren who are not in darkness.” Yet the statements are so plain that “in the days of the Son of Man,” at His second presence, the world would be ignorant of the fact (Matt. 24:37-39).

It is so clear that the Lord at His second coming first deals with His people (Matt. 25:14-30). The affairs of this age must be cleared up and other preparations made, and then Christ is to be revealed to all, the Kingdom established, and justice put to the plummet and righteousness to the line.

Accustom yourself to think vigorously. Mental capital, like pecuniary, to be worth anything, must be well invested— must be rightly adjusted and applied, and to this end careful, deep and intense thought is necessary, if good results are looked for.

The close of the year

At this, the close of the year, happy surely all will be who can look backward through it and realise that safe and secure in the city of refuge, which God has provided for us as His people, We have been prospering, rejoicing, growing, under His favor and guidance in the school of Christ in preparation for the glorious work of the Millennial Kingdom.

We trust that all will find much of encouragement as they look back. If we can see that We have faithfully sought at every step to walk in the footsteps of Jesus, amidst the experiences and trials of the past year, there will be special cause for rejoicing; and if it is seen, On the contrary, that some of our steps have been crooked and perverse, and if we mourn for such digressions from the narrow way, we may be sure that the Lord is Very pitiful, of tender compassion, ready to forgive, to heal, to help. It is for this very reason that He provided this city of refuge, and for this very reason that we must needs abide in it continually—abide in Christ, under the cover of His merit and His robe of righteousness.

It will comfort our hearts, in any event, to remember the suggestion of the Apostle, that if God so loved us while we were yet sinners, that He gave His only begotten Son for our redemption, much more does He love us now, that we are adopted into His family, and seeking to walk in the footsteps of Jesus, however imperfectly our good desires may be accomplished.

There is need to make fresh resolutions continually along the way, and now at the close of the year is a favourable time for this. Not that we liberate ourselves in any degree from the everlasting covenant into which we entered with our Lord, but that, recognising its permanence, we strengthen ourselves by re-asserting it to the Lord, telling Him of our good desires and intentions in respect of faith for the future, and taking this occasion of the beginning of another year, for a reiteration of our loyalty and of our confidence in His faithfulness.

I am the Resurrection and the Life (John 11, 25).

Oh, let me know
The power of Thy Resurrection;
Oh, let me show
Thy Risen life in calm and clear reflection;
Oh, let me soar
Where Thou, my Saviour Christ, art gone before;
In mind and heart
Let me dwell always, only, where Thou art.

Correspondence

Dear Brother,

Our subscriptions to the “Herald” and “People’s Paper” are about expired, so am enclosing postal note , for renewals for another year. Any balance you nay place in the Tract Fund.

We trust this finds you all well. As time goes on we realise more how rich God’s blessing is towards us. His love and care seem to become more real to our eyes of faith, and our feet planted more firmly on the great foundation Christ a ransom for all. The present seems more than ever to us to be a time of patiently waiting oil the Lord in faith and trust. We cannot see before us, but we can trust in God’s promises, He is faithful.

As the darkness seems to close round, and the earth seems to languish, the truth becomes more beautiful and precious. How wonderful to think the long night of sill and death is nearly over, and the glad day, so long foretold, is near at hand.

Am pleased to note the “People’s Paper” maintains a good and helpful standard, and the “Herald,” too, is always so good and helpful, and they both continue to point us to the one standard—the one Head, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, and away from all things human and earthly.

We trust that the little Christmas -convention proves a blessing to you all. We would have liked so much to have been with you, but it seems now that we will be unable to come. The conditions here, as everywhere. are such that it places the trip beyond us.

With Christian love to you all. The Lord bless you and keep you.

Yours by the Lord’s grace,

Dear Friend,—

I am writing to let you know how pleased I am with Foregleams, which I have read, and greatly appreciate the way the truth is conveyed and made so easy for one to understand. It has certainly enlightened me on many subjects which I never understood. In fact, I may say that I have been far from a Christian until I commenced to read your papers. But now I hope that, in future, I will serve our Lord to the utmost of my ability, as since I have read your papers and books, my whole ideas and views of life in the future are changed. I may here add that, as a lad, I attended the protestant Church, but their teachings and doctrines seemed to be too complicated for me to understand, and, therefore, I never took the trouble to go any further with religion, with the exception, that I always had a fear of going to everlasting torment when I died. But limy, thanks to your books, I see things very differently, although there are some points on which I am not too clear. The first is that of eating meat on Friday; can you please tell me if this is God's law, or is it only one of the Roman Church's many errors? Secondly, which day should we keep as the Sabbath, as I recently became acquainted with some people who claimed Saturday to be the correct day. Thirdly, with reference to meats, clean and unclean, Deuteronomy 14:4, 9, 11; should these laws still be observed? I would also like to know if you have any books suitable for children, between the ages of 7 and 11, as I have four children, and would like to bring them to understand God's Word much clearer than I did. I shall, also, be very pleased to receive some more papers, as I have read those you so kindly sent me.

Hoping to hear from you again soon,

Yours in Hope,

F.W.S.

This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith (1 John 5:4).

Faith knows no defeats. Absurd as this sounds from a human standpoint, yet this is true. Faith surmounts all trials and difficulties, it overcomes in every kind of circumstances and surroundings. This is the victory—Faith. Faith counts on God and this is the victory. It stands firm where everything and everybody else would fail. Faith glories in the Cross of Christ. The Cross of Christ meant untold suffering. Read Hebrews 11 and see what faith conquers and triumphs in. Faith is the victory.

Selected.

STAND FAST.

WHILE we take heed to this admonition, we would generally look to the examples of steadfastness in the past, so that we may understand what it exactly means to stand firm. We know our Lord Jesus was holy, harmless, and separate from sinners, and we might feel our absolute insignificance. when compared with Him; but when we see such wonderful stability in one of the fallen human race, as the Apostle Paul, we can see what can be accomplished; and as we also read his words in Hebrews 13:7, “Remember your leaders. those who have spoken to you the Word of God; and viewing attentively the result of their conduct, imitate their faith” (Diaglott), we stand in awe before such an example of moral heroism as we find in him.

As we follow him from city to city, we mark his faithful labor and care, his patient endurance of persecution, his untiring devotion and zeal for the truth, his patience in instructing and bearing with the weak and ignorant, and all his sufferings for Christ’s sake, and then hear him say, “None of these things move me.” He was standing fast upon the rock, and we can feel that we are indeed contemplating a sublime character. See how in every city bonds and afflictions awaited him; mobs and stripes and imprisonment were his constant expectation. Then read his epistles, and mark his fervency of spirit. His deep insight into the things of God; his care for the churches, and his deep solicitude for their spiritual welfare, his earliest exhortations and his loving example. Read till you are filled with the inspiration of his noble example, and behold in him a miracle of divine grace. No ordinary hopes and ambitions could inspire such a life. His eye of faith was fixed on the things as yet not seen. He was a man of superior advantages and blessings, as well as of peculiar and almost unprecedented trials, he himself said, “I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me,” and that it was the power of Christ that rested on him. And as we look upon his shining course we see Christ in him; and reason says, if one who thus saw the Lord, and heard His gracious voice, and who lived in such close and constant fellowship with Him, was so inspired with hope and joy, and -so nerved to cheerful endurance of hardship, pain and loss of every earthly treasure, the reward itself must indeed be glorious.

Let us mark the noble examples of our Lord and of Paul, and let us run with patience in this race, having this object before us, as did Paul, and looking to Jesus for all needed strength and consolation. He said, “I have not shunned to declare unto you the whole counsel of God” (Acts 20:27). There was .no compromise of the truth with him, no mixing of it with human philosophies to make it more palatable to either Jews or Gentiles. or to avoid persecution.

We may note, also, his faithful warning against false teachers, who would surely develop in their midst; against wolves in sheep’s clothing, who would not spare the flock, while selfishly seeking their own temporal advantage. The Apostle did not counsel the handling of these wolves very gently, as perhaps some of our day would advise. He did not say that we should call them all:brethren, and tell them they are probably as near the truth as we are, and that we must have a broad charity for all sorts of vain philosophies, and tell them we should all love one another, at the expense of justice and truth.

If we are determined to stand fast we will need to keep particularly close to the Word, which makes no allowance to compromise with any error, often clothed under a robe called love, a love of individual preference, which makes a show in the flesh, but has no standing before God. We must remember that the Lord does not raise up rulers from among our .brethren in the body of Christ, but he does raise up faithful leaders to whom earnest heed should be given, and whose faith and example should be imitated.

Another admonition of the Apostle Paul is to “put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil” (Eph. 6:11). Before we could stand fast, we must lie fully aware of what is required, so as to be able to stand. ‘Pile wiles of Satan mean his methods, his cunning frauds; and we may understand that these will be subtle, as, if it were possible, they would deceive the very elect. Every person on earth is doing service for one or the other, for the Lord’s army or for Satan’s army. There is no middle ground, as the Apostle puts it, “his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness” (Rom. 6:16).

Each one must fight the good fight of faith and be victorious before he can attain to the position of joint-heirship with the Lord, and each one having the Master’s spirit will fight, together with all the other members of the body, to maintain the spirit of unity in the body. All such must fight under the leadership of their Captain. Again St. Paul says, “Only let the lives you live be worthy of the Gospel, that we may know who are standing fast in one spirit and one mind, lighting shoulder to shoulder for the faith and good news. Never for a moment quail before your enemies” (Phil. 1:27-28), (Weymouth),

To a soldier who engages in war, it is of the greatest importance that he should know who his enemies are, their number and force. A good soldier will study to know what will be the method of attack by the enemy, and seek to strengthen his position of defence, that he may repel every assault. In the Christian warfare this is even more vital.

In Eph. 6:11-12, the Apostle particularly warns the Church concerning our enemies. Weymouth’s translation renders it, “For ours is not a conflict with mere flesh and blood, but with spiritual beings in unseen places, despotisms, empires, the forces that control and govern this dark world, the spiritual host of evil, arrayed against us in the heavenly warfare.” It is important that we take heed to the Master’s method of meeting these attacks. God governs the entire universe by fixed principles, and everyone who is governed contrary thereto is governed by passion. Perhaps many do not fully understand what is meant by principle. Seemingly they think it is whatever they themselves may consider to be right when guided by their conscience, or by the argument of someone else. Principle means a settled rule of action, the governing law of conduct.

This rule of action, or governing law of conduct, is set forth in the Bible, and all who are governed by the Word of God are governed by principle. Passion means the capacity of being affected by external agencies, to be susceptible to control from external influences. The new creature must avoid passion and be governed always by principle. If we are influenced or swayed in our judgment or conclusion about anything, reason of what others may say or do, we are governed to that extent by passion. If we prayerfully and diligently seek to know what is the Lord’s will, and what His Word says on the matter, and are governed by that, then we are governed by principle. The spirit of the world is to follow methods that make outward show of great piety to attract attention. Any attempt on the part of a Christian to attract attention to himself is a manifestation of the spirit of the world, and a violation of principles, and out of harmony with God’s methods.

All temptations are the effects of the adversary’s influence. He employs various methods in order that he may deceive. He makes some believe that they are not receiving the proper consideration to which they are entitled. This leads into a wrong course. St. Paul emphasises the fact that the conflict of the Church in the end of the age will be particularly with the evil spirits. The Scriptures indicate that the real battle of the Christian is in the mind, therefore the attack of the evil spirits will be expected along this line. According to information from one who was long subject to the influence of these demons, their method of attack is first by suggestion. By this is meant that they first intrude evil thoughts upon the mind.

All Christians realise that they have a conflict in keeping out of the mind thoughts that are improper, and that it is a constant warfare to keep them out. But where one indulges in evil surmising, judging another, he is filling his mind with evil thoughts. Such are yielding to suggestions, which, if persisted in, lead to the second stage, which is designated “abbreviation.” This word means to cut short. It here means lack of continuity of thought, or lack of concentration of thought, upon the Lord's Word.

One who finds himself given over to evil surmising and evil thoughts, will find great difficulty in concentration of mind upon the study of the Lord's Word. Attempting either study or prayer the one finds his mind suddenly turned away from his subject, or turned to or set upon evil things. Thus continuing, he loses sight of principle, namely the great truths of God's Word, and this leads to the third stage designated as "impression," which means that one is moved to act from sources other than the Word of God. It is the result of influence exerted from without in words controlled by passion and not by the Word. "fake aim instance where one would say, "I am moved to take this course because of what I have heard, or what influence another has brought to bear upon me," at the same time entirely ignoring the Word of the Lord on the subject. This persisted in leads of the fourth stage, namely "possession," whereby it is understood that the evil spirits take possession of the mind of the person and control his conduct.

The Apostle tells us. "God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble-minded" (1 .5:5:5 1. From this we would understand that humility of mind and heart would be a special protection provided by the Lord; and that anyone manifesting spiritual pride or ambition would forfeit His protection, and thus evil spirits would have special power over them.

Now we believe these evil spirits use human agencies to attack members of the Body of Christ. We may reasonably expect that all of the Lord's servants who are actively engaged in the closing hours of the harvest will be attacked through 11(1111011 agencies by these wicked spirits. We may expect that all manner of charges and attacks may be made by such, against the character and reputation of those who are zealously engaged in the Lord's work, which will constitute a test to all the brethren as to whether they will be governed by passion (outside influence), or whether they will be governed by the "principle" of God's Word.

Let each one examine his own heart carefully and see to it that his own conclusions are based upon right principles, namely, God's Word, and not upon outside influence. No other course is safe. All the Scriptures bearing upon the point indicate that the conflict will be more severe as we near the end. Referring to this time. St. Paul says, "Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and the power of His might" (Eph. 6:10). The clear inference here is that each soldier of the cross must have special strength in order to stand at this time and to repel the combined attack of Satan and his coadjutors.

If we look at it from one standpoint we would become dismayed and despair of winning, but looking at it from another viewpoint, we know that He who is for us is greater than all who can be against us; and he being for us none can prevail against us. We are now in the evil day. Now, then, may we have the strength needed ! The Apostle tells us to put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand (resist) in the evil day, and having done all to stand (remain a victor), (Eph. 6:13).

The Apostle says in 2 Thess. 2:15. "Therefore, brethren, stand fast, and hold the traditions Which ye have been taught, whether by word or our epistle." And, also, he speaks in Rom. 6:17, "But God be thanked that ye have obeyed from the heart, that form of doctrine which was delivered you." Our Lord lays special stress upon obedience. He says, in John 13:17, "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." -Many seem content simply to know these things. How many there are who stop with a knowledge of God's plan, as it is now revealed and understood, seemingly unmindful of the latter clause of this verse. Their lives are not conformed to -the Word, nor to the likeness of Christ.

It would seem at first that some really desire to be fashioned into the image of our Lord, but they go no further. They are not willing to pay the price of obedience; are not willing to endure self-sacrifice and self-denial. How prone we are to desire and acquire knowledge, forgetting that "knowledge puffeth up, but love edifieth." Knowledge alone does not produce happiness. Obedience does. Let us not disregard our Lord's words, that not just knowing these things will produce character, but. "happy are ye if ye do them." (Concluded).

Dispensational Changes.

THE PASSING OF THE PRESENT ORDER.

SO many prophecies of the Scriptures are having fulfilment to-day, of which Haggai 2:6-7 is an evident example. "Yet once it is a little while and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land. And I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come: and I will fill this house with glory." That there can be no question that this prophecy has not been fulfilled in the past we have the Apostle, in Hebrews 12:26-27, quoting it as being of then future fulfilment. Further than this, both the prophet and the Apostle indicates that, as a sequence to the great shaking and removal of those things which can be shaken, the Lord's kingdom, the "desire of all nations" shall come, and the House of the Lord, the Temple or Tabernacle of God (Rev. 21:3), shall be filled with glory.

All should be able to see what is meant by the "earth" that is to be shaken, also what the "heavens" refers to. There have been great shakings of the literal earth in past and recent years, that have wrought terrible destruction of life, and changed the formation of countries. Such occurrences, however, are not the fulfilment of these words of the prophet and the apostle, but they are used simply to illustrate the great social upheaval that will 'break up all systems and organisations of Mankind that are out of accord with equity and justice.

The word "earth" is so used in the Scriptures to designate the social order among men. Thus we read that the "heavens and earth" composing the world before the flood, "being overflowed with water perished" (2 Pet. 3:5-6).

All know that the literal earth did not perish, nor did the literal "heavens" of that time. Noah stood upon the same earth, and looked upon the same heavens when he came forth from the ark as he did before the flood.

As the "earth" refers to things secular, social, national, etc., so the "heavens" refers to things spiritual—religious arrangements.

Up to the time of Noah, angels had been permitted to communicate with men for their instruction and assistance. Instead, however, of leading to holiness and true worship of God, they themselves fell into folly and God saw that the earth was filled with violence and corruption, and destroyed all mankind, except Noah and his family (Gen. 6:1-13; Jude 6; 2 Pet. 2:4-5). It was thus that that world, social and religious passed away, and the present world "heavens and earth" began.

This present "heavens and earth" are much more complex than that of the world before the flood, and its social fabric and national institutions, as also its religious systems, have been so long established that the general thought seemed to be that they were like the literal earth, "established that it could not be moved" (Psalm 93:1-2, 104:5; Eccles 1:4). St. Peter had written that such would be the thoughts of men. They would say "all things continue as they were since the fathers fell asleep" (2 Pet. 3:4).

However, we have reached the times of shaking, and one would need to be blind to conditions and events who could so fold his arms in complacency to-day. Everything is changing and no institution of the social order, no government nor nation, Kingdom or Republic can rest secure. They often change or pass away so quickly. Commercially, and industrially, things are depressed. The strange part being that it is the abundance of everything exists that the poor multiply and poverty increases. This, of course, demonstrates that there is something altogether wrong in the present arrangement for distributing the necessities of life in the social order. Financially the whole so-called Christian world is reaping the results of a long period of debauchery in eating, drinking, dressing and pleasure seeking. This has been as much in respect of the governments as of individuals. To blindly live beyond the means is sure to bring a reckoning day, whether the culprit be an individual or a government.

What changes have come about in the world during the past few years. There has been the overthrow of despotism in various countries. Russia is probably little better for the change, having but replaced one form of despotic cruelty for another, and one which seems bent on crushing all kind of organisation for the worship of God. China has been suffering the tortures of civil war between rival war-lords since her ancient monarchy was cast aside. India is seething with fomented discontent, and clamouring for independence. Egypt appears once more as a kingdom with constitutional government. Palestine is again occupied by Israel, but nowhere is there peace. The whole creation still “groaned” and travaileth together in pain, waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God” (Rom. 8:22. 19). Conditions are still such in the “earth” to-day that more than ever we still earnestly pray, “Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth,” when “Peace on earth and good will toward men “ will prevail.

The state of the “heavens”—matters spiritual—or the religious elements, is sad indeed, yet again, it is but as predicted by the prophets, the Lord and the Apostles.

Christ said, “when the Son of Man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?” No, for as the Revelator declares,

“The nations shall be angry” when He comes to take His kingdom (Rev. 19:1). Every religious system—the whole “heavens” is having its shaking, including the heathen religions, the Mahomedans, Roman Catholics, Anglicans, and Non-conformists. All kinds of new theories are promulgated, but confidence in the so-called orthodox Christian religion has been shaken in various ways. There have been the “higher critics,” who, professing to be exponents of the Bible, undermined the faith of their congregations by their ridiculing portions of Scripture, which they did not understand, even “denying the Lord Who bought them” (2 Pet. 2:1).

There is another way in which faith is attacked to-day, without mentioning the false reasoning of Christian Scientists, Theosophists, and the deceptions of Spiritists, and which has more the semblance of earnest faith. It is what is called faith healing, and the Pentecostal movement. These people seem to mistake feelings for faith, and sentiment for holiness, and certain religious phrases and expressions are taken as indicating holiness of life.

This all seems to be along the line of the deceptions that would, “if it were possible,” deceive the “very elect.”

Any deception which would have weight with God’s elect must be something that has the semblance of truth, something that, while “darkness,” would be so presented as to appear “light,” or some light made to appear to be darkness.

Thus we realise that these present day systems, religious, social or national, are being shaken, and the result of this shaking will be, so says the Apostle, the removal of those things which can be shaken. The 46th Psalm graphically describes this transition period, and gives the comforting assurance respecting the outcome of the great time of trouble and confusion. “God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble, therefore will we not fear though the earth be removed, and the mountains (kingdoms) be carried into the sea (anarchy), though the waters (peoples) thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof. There is a river, the streams thereof make glad the city of God, the holy place of the Tabernacle of the Most High. God is in the midst of her, she shall not be moved; God shall help her, and that right early. The heathen (nations) raged, the kingdoms were moved, He uttered

His voice, the earth melted. The Lord of hosts is with us. The God of Jacob is our refuge. Come, behold the works of the Lord, what desolations He hath made in the earth: He maketh wars to cease unto the ends of the earth: He breaketh the bow and cutteth the spear in sunder: lie burned) the chariot in the fire. Be still and know that I am God, I will be exalted among the heathen (nations), I- will be exalted in the earth. The Lord of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge.”

The kingdoms of this world will then become the kingdoms of our Lord and His Christ. The Church completed with Christ—the antitypical Temple—the habitation of God—shall 'be filled with the Lord's glory, and embued with the power to bless all nations, and to fill the whole earth with the knowledge of the glory of God, as the waters cover the great deep. Righteousness and truth. shall spring out of the earth, peace and goodwill toward God and man shall abound, and God's will shall be done in earth as it is done in heaven.

BE PATIENT, BRETHREN.

We sometimes wonder why our Lord doth place us
Within a sphere so narrow, so obscure:
That nothing we call work can find an entrance
There's only room to suffer, to endure.
Well, God loves patience! Souls that dwell in stillness,
Doing the little things or restful quite,
May just as perfectly fulfil this mission ;
Be just as useful in the Father's sight
As they who grapple with some great evil,
Clearing a path, that every eye may see,
Our Saviour cares for cheerful acquiescence
As much as for a busy ministry.
And yet He does lave service—where it is given
By grateful love that clothes itself in deed;
But work that's done beneath the scourge of duty,
Be sure to such He gives but little heed.
Christ never asks of us such heavy labor
As leaves no time for resting at His feet;
The waiting attitude of expectation
He oft-times counts a service most complete.
He sometimes wants our ear—our rapt attention
That He some sweetest secret may impart,
'Tis always in the time of deepest stillness
That heart finds deepest fellowship with heart.
Then seek to please Him, whatso'er He bids thee—.
Whether to do, to suffer, to lie still;
'Twill matter little by what path He led us
If in it we sought to do His will.

Upon the Earth Distress with Perplexity

(Luke 21:25.)

THE TROUBLED WORLD'S HOPE.

WHILE it was the hope of many that, when the great war was concluded, Millennium conditions would soon prevail, class distinctions were to cease, everyone was to have an opportunity of earning an honest living without too much "sweat of the face," how differently it has all turned out. Instead of bringing in righteousness and peace, the war seemed to loosen the standard of morals, and the world is more wicked today than it was before 1914, perhaps we may correctly say than it ever was. Instead of amity betwixt classes, strikes and labour troubles have increased, and there is a deadly, stealthy undermining of principle being continually carried on throughout the world, while the anarchistic spirit is gradually eating its way among all nations. Unemployment is prevalent everywhere. The overcrowded parts of the world are puzzled to know what to do with the great surplus of population.

On the one hand, the wonderful inventions and discoveries that are continually being made open up a vision of comfort, luxury, and even freedom from, many of the dread diseases which have so long preyed upon the human race, such as cancer, tuberculosis, etc.

On the other hand, there are the murderous inventions of destruction, submarines, airships, air torpedoes, poison gases, etc. What a day of possibilities for good in all this increased knowledge in every department of life, and yet, what a day of dread probabilities, because of man's greed, selfishness, ambition, and strife. Who can doubt the outcome of all we see about us? There is no human force able to control present-day influences. It seems almost as easy to resist the ebb and flow of the mighty ocean; mankind, like the mighty torrent of Niagara, sweeps on to the great fall, the precipice. The great systems of unrighteousness, trusts, unions, combines, and pools formed for selfish ends, and restricting the free commerce and liberties of the people, also the great religious systems with their manmade creeds and dogmas, which "fetter reason," and which drive men away from religion and hinder a true knowledge of God; will go down like a millstone into the sea.

All thinkers seem to see the dread prospects, but with all their good desires they cannot devise a way out of the trouble. Some suggest one thing, some another, but the best suggestions are only such as might postpone the evil day. The world is mad with selfishness and extravagant indulgence on the one side, while the submerged classes strive to carry on an existence with sweat of face and anxiety to provide for dependants.

Among all the remedies which have ever been suggested, and we have some splendid examples in old Grecian History, there has been nothing to equal the Law Covenant with Israel. There was an economy which, lived up to, would have resulted in a condition of righteousness, peace, prosperity, and health. The people with which this covenant was made were of the best stock among men, and no greater, nobler leader of men than Moses has ever been found in the world. The fact that it did not achieve the possible happy results demonstrated that mankind is incapable of lifting itself out of its troubles, and of establishing righteousness and peace, or, in other words, of bringing in the Golden Age.

THE DESIRE OF ALL NATIONS.

Both the Old and New Testaments predict that a better time is coming: a time when justice and righteousness will be established in the earth, and peace abound everywhere. The apostle in Rom. 8:22, 19, speaks of the whole creation groaning and waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God. Hag. 2:6-7 also speaks of the desire of all nations coming, but indicates a great shaking time preceding that event. "Yet once more will I shake the heavens and the earth and the sea and the dry land, and I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come."

Peter, in his second epistle, chapter 3, speaks also of a new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness, and also describes the great time of trouble preceding the establishment of same. He speaks of the "Heavens being on fire, and being dissolved. The earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up." It is clear that the apostle is speaking in figurative language, for if the earth and the heavens were literally to be so destroyed, there would be no people left to enjoy the "new heavens and the new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness," which he assures us is to follow the burning-up time, just as the prophet declares that after the great shaking "the desire of all nations shall come."

Peter simply refers to the destruction of the present order of things in a fiery time of trouble, just as the first heavens and earth, which were before the flood, had passed away. The "earth" refers to the social arrangements or order among men. The heavens refers to the spiritual or religious portion of humanity. These elements have both got out of accord with God and righteousness. The whole earth is ungodly and selfish, and the religious elements have become confused. in teachings and have lost the spirit of Christ, and have ..become-but worldly institutions. The Apostle Paul (Heb. 12:26-27), quoting Haggai, says, "Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven, and this word yet once more signifieth the removal of those things that are shaken as of things that are made, that those things that cannot be shaken may remain."

Thus the apostle and the prophet refer to the woes of earth and the great remedy that God has provided, and which is soon to be applied. The declaration of the prophet that God will eventually establish a reign of righteousness in the earth which, when realised, will indeed be the desire of all nations, is 'borne out by the testimony of every prophet and apostle (Act 3:19-21), and cannot, therefore, be disputed by any who acknowledge the inspiration of the Bible.

The cause of all creation's groaning and pain is sin; for all the moral and physical degradation which directly or indirectly causes the pain and groaning of humanity is part of the wages of sin. Humanity is thus under a blight, and suffers both individually and as a whole. Its own imperfect and often unjust governments, as well as its aches and pains of body and mind, are the natural consequences of its imperfect, fallen condition; and although men can do something toward general improvement, their efforts are at best but feeble and spasmodic—they are utterly incapable of releasing themselves from their difficulties.

Truly, all mankind are groaning; and yet, as the apostle indicates, they are not hopeless; they are waiting for something, they know not exactly what—a panacea for sickness, pain, sorrow and death—a just and righteous government, which will lift up the poorest and meanest from the mire of ignorance and squalor, to comfort and happiness.:’

What all mankind have longed and vaguely hoped for, God, through His prophets, has clearly and definitely foretold; and, further, He has shown exactly how it will be achieved, namely, through the agency of the Lord Jesus Christ, who, nineteen centuries ago, redeemed mankind by giving His life as a ransom-price for the life of the world, and who will shortly set up His kingdom and establish His authority over the redeemed race.

The only hope for the world is in this Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. It is God’s long-promised remedy. Man’s extremity will be God’s opportunity; “The desire of all nations shall come,” at a juncture when human ingenuity and skill will have exhausted themselves in seeking relief without avail. The present world-wide disorders are all factors in the “time of trouble,” the “day of vengeance,” with which this age is closing. Not only will it be a just recompense for misused privileges, but it will tend to humble the arrogance of men, making them “poor in spirit,” and ready for the great blessings God is about to pour upon all flesh (Joel 2:28). Thus He wounds to heal.

God’s Kingdom will be established in due time, when He “whose right it is,” will “take the Kingdom.” Yes, He, who bought it with own precious blood, will “take unto Himself His great power and reign.” Force will be used—“He shall rule them (the nations) with a rod of iron—as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers” (Rev. 2:27). He will gather the nations, assemble the kingdoms, and pour upon them His fierce anger, and the whole earth shall be devoured with the fire of His jealousy; then, when they are humbled and ready to hear and heed His counsel, He will turn unto them a pure language, that they may call upon the name of the Lord to serve Him with one consent (Zeph. 3:8-9).

Not only will the Kingdom ‘be established with force, and be a power that men cannot resist, but it will so continue throughout the 1000 years of Christ’s reign, which is for the specific purpose of vanquishing the enemies of righteousness. “He must reign, till He hath put all enemies under His feet,” “His enemies. _ Ulan lick-the dust,” “The soul that will not hear (obey) that prophet (the glorious Christ—antitype of Moses) shall be destroyed from among the people’ (in the Second Death). 1 Cor. 15:25; Psa. 72:9; Acts 3:23.

Satan will be bound; his every deceptive and misleading influence will be restrained, so that evil shall no longer appear to men to be good, nor good appear undesirable, and evil; truth shall no longer appear to men untrue, nor falsehoods be caused to appear true (Rev. 20:2).

The reign of Christ, however, will not be one of force only, but side by side with the rod of iron Will be the olive branch of mercy and peace for all the inhabitants of the world; who, when the judgments of the Lord are abroad in the earth, will learn righteousness (Psa. 26:9). The sin-blinded eyes shall be opened, that the world may see right and wrong, justice and injustice, in a light quite different from now—in “seven-fold” light (Psa. 30:26; 29:18-20). The outward temptations of the present will be suppressed, evils will neither be licensed nor permitted, but a penalty sure and swift will fall upon transgressors, meted out with unerring justice ‘by the glorified and competent judges of that time, who, nevertheless, will have compassion upon the weak.—1 Cor. 6:2; Psa. 96:13; Acts 17:31; Mal. 3:5.

OBSTACLES TO BELIEF IN CHRIST’S KINGDOM.

All this would seem reasonable to thinking people but for two reasons. -One is, the unscriptural view which for centuries has predominated, that Christ is now reigning over and ruling the world. And yet, if versed in the world’s history, all candid minds must admit that up to the present time there has not been a rule of righteousness such as the prophets predicted of the reign of Christ (Isa. 32:1). On the contrary, it is manifest that the kingdoms of this world are all under the power and subject to the invisible “prince of this world,” Satan, who takes advantage of the darkness of human ignorance, superstition, and depravity.

Poor, frail humanity has indeed made some noble efforts at self-government, but the unseen and unrecognised powers of darkness have been too much for their efforts, and have succeeded in keeping in power a majority who were not lovers of righteousness. Nor can we hope for better than present results while selfishness remains the rule of action.

The second reason lies in the long delay before the establishment of Christ's Kingdom. People naturally wonder that God has not long since exerted His great power to suppress sin, and to lift mankind out of its present state of depravity, disease and death; and since Dearly six thousand years have passed without such an interposition, many reason that God's future dealings should be judged by the past. Hence they conclude eve cannot expect such a rule or kingdom in the future, believing that all things must continue as they are now, and have been from the foundation of the world.

We answer, it can be shown that the Scriptures teach that not only has God promised such a Kingdom for the purpose of blessing the world, but He has also foretold the long period intervening in which evil has been permitted, good and sufficient reasons being given in the Bible for the nearly six thousand years that have elapsed. Yet, in examining these reasons for the apparent delay in the establishment of the reign of righteousness, let us not forget that it is only measured by the shortness of the present life that six thousand years seem very long; with God, "a thousand years are but as yesterday" (Psa. 90:4). When clearly seen, this should remove every obstacle to belief in the promised Kingdom of blessing.

WHY- THE LONG DELAY?

The long delay and its purposes are clearly marked in the Scriptures. Over four thousand years after the first promise of deliverance, given in Eden (Gen. 3:15), the redemption was accomplished on Calvary. Nearly two thousand years more fill the measure of the Gospel Age (the period between Christ's first and second advents), during which time God is selecting and developing the Church—the Bride of Christ. Furthermore, this long period of six thousand years was designed to give the race a necessary experience with the dreadful effects of sin, its exceeding sinfulness, and the firmness of that justice which will by no means clear the guilty violators of God's just and holy law. Such an experience will be of inestimable value to all for all eternity and by contrast it will lead to so great an appreciation of righteousness, during Christ's reign, as to make it, when realised, what the prophet predicted—"The desire of all nations."

The delay, from the time of the redemption to the Kingdom Age, while fulfilling this purpose to the world, serves particularly the further purpose—the development of the Church, a "little flock" of believers in and followers of Christ, sharers of His reproach in the present time, and therefore chosen and counted worthy to share His spiritual Kingdom, His glory, and His work—to reign with Him as joint-heirs of the long-promised Kingdom of God for the blessing of all the families of the earth.—Gen. 28:14; Gal. 3:16, 29.

During the Messianic Age, Christ's power will be exercised to prevent deceptions, clear away ignorance, strengthen the weak, and restore to sight those now blinded by the god of this world (2 Cor. 4:4). A thousand enticements to sin, which now make special appeal to the depraved appetites of the fallen race, will not be permitted when the new, heavenly rule is established; but the Gospel Church—the Kingdom--class—is called and tested during this age, while evil is permitted to hold sway, in order that their proving may be like that of gold tried in tile fire. This company will be complete when the Gospel Age ends, and then the control of earth will be entrusted to them, under and in cooperation with the Lord Jesus, the King of Kings.—1 Cor. 6:2; Rom. 8:17.

PRESENT SO-CALLED CHRISTIAN KINGDOMS

During the first century of its existence the church held firmly to the apostolic teaching and waited for the second coming of the Lord Jesus, to bring the establishment of the long-promised kingdom of (sod, with its rule of righteousness.?

_That first century was the period of the church's purity and fervour, before she left her first love. As time passed, and the expected Lord came not, the love of many waxed cold, and their hopes turned in other directions. Then, as Christianity became formalistic, Grecian philosophers came into the church, and the doctrines of Christ became blended with heathen mythologies, producing the great apostasy, or falling away from the true faith (2 Thes. 2:3). Nevertheless, there was always a faithful though small minority, which clung to the truth; for the Lord has never left His truth without witnesses.

It was at this time that, the degenerated Christian system conceived the view commonly held since, that the church was to establish Christ's Kingdom upon the earth, without waiting for her Lord's return, and that Christ would come after the Millennial reign of the church had ended—to approve the work. This view introduced into the nominal church an aggressive political policy, under which the church sought influence and affiliation with the civil power. As a result, Papacy was developed, and in time became the mistress and queen of nations.—Rev. 17:3-5; 18:7.

By this policy, everything was changed; instead of suffering, came honour; instead of humility, came pride; instead of truth, came error; and instead of being persecuted, she became the persecutor of all who condemned her new and illegal honours. Soon she began to invent new theories and sophistries to justify her course, first deceiving herself, and then the nations, into the belief that the promised reign of Christ had come, and that Christ, the King, was represented by her popes, who reigned over the kings of the earth as His vicegerents. Her claims were successful in deceiving the whole world. She made all nations “drunk” with her erroneous doctrines, or mental imbecility will be able to resist His doctrines (Rev. 17:2), intimating them by teaching that healing touch. eternal torment awaited all who resisted her claims. Soon the kings of Europe were crowned or deposed by her edict, and under her assumed authority.

CONVENTION NEWS.

CHRISTIANS are exhorted at all times, "In everything to give thanks." Especially here the Melbourne Brethren desire to render praise and thanksgiving for the blessed 'privilege of having been permitted again to assemble in convention with those of like faith this Christmas season. How freely the friends expressed the general helpfulness and encouragement experienced throughout the period, and how graciously our Lord blessed the assembly with that "meat in due season" promised so liberally to all those that gather with oneness of heart and sincerity of purpose, in spirit and in truth. How pleasing to note that each and all sought to the utmost to be found doing their part in realisation and appreciation of their responsibility and privilege, and throughout endeavoured to have nothing undone in order to obtain the highest possible blessing. and see that everything was in preparation for the consideration and enjoyment of the brethren generally. Surely it was a time of mutual uplift and encouragement, and the earnest desire of all the friends was that they might, by God's grace and help, seek to leave no stone unturned, whereby the new year would find in them a greater development in the character-likeness of Christ, and a larger growth in the fruits and graces of God's Holy Spirit.

The Melbourne brethren particularly desire to thank their Heavenly Father for the blessings received at the hands of the visiting brethren, as they would travel many miles in order to be present, and, with mutual fellowship, seek to spend and be spent in the service of God and the cause of truth and the brethren.

We pray God's blessing in richest measure upon them in their loving zeal, earnestness, and desire to make the meetings profitable and uplifting.

Throughout the season the studies and addresses were such as would impress deeply the great need of stability of character, and steadfastness in the narrow way of sacrifice, especially in this evil day, when iniquity so much abounds, and an indifferent, lukewarm condition, predicted to be in evidence, prevails in the lives of those brethren not living up to their full privileges under their vow .or "covenant of sacrifice," to 'be dead to this world's aims, hopes and, ambitions, and instead only and ever "alive toward God."

We were particularly reminded in one of our Bible studies that we have been figuratively raised with Christ to newness of life, and made to sit in heavenly places with Him, henceforth not to serve sin, 'but to realise that old things have passed away and that the Lord's people are to be found setting their affections on heavenly things, counting everything else as but "loss and dross" in comparison with the rich hope of our inheritance with our Lord in the glorious kingdom. We were reminded, also, that the course had yet to be completed, and the race finally run, before the precious prize of immortality and association with the Bridegroom could be obtained, and to this end it was 'forcibly brought to mind in another of our studies, the necessity of using our every talent faithfully, zealously, and loyally, as required in stewards, and according to our Lord's own parable of the Talents, which is such a warning and reminder to all of His followers of their individual responsibility and privilege. In this connection we saw that in the use of our every talent, care must be taken that the same be manifested and exercised in the true spirit of humility and love, that the "spirit of a sound mind" be sought at all times as we endeavour to fulfil our part for the welfare of the Body- members, realising that all that was done was to be considered primarily as "done unto our Head."

In the closing address of the Convention, our brother particularly 'brought to our attention the necessity of "waiting patiently on the Lord," and being guided only by the dictate of our Head. He reminded us of the importance of a well grounded faith, without which it is impossible to please God, and that this faith of ours would be tried, tested, and exercised to the full through the fiery experiences that must, and will, surely try us if we are to be purified and found unto praise and honour at the appearing of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. All present realised the importance of "waiting patiently for Him," as they would seek to have that refining influence brought about in the life as the experiences would be humbly submitted to, with cheerful endurance and constancy of faith and hope, knowing that in this way the peaceful fruits of righteousness would surely be developed on account of being rightly exercised in and by those experiences.

Perhaps one of the most pleasing, encouraging, yet solemn moments enjoyed during the Convention season, was the occasion set aside for a baptism service at West Hawthorn, on the Saturday morning. All rejoiced as they would assemble to witness in symbol that true consecration of two of the dear brethren who so beautifully desired, before an assembly of the Lord's people to give evidence, by immersion in water, of that true "death 'baptism,'" which had preceded it. Surely in this witness each heart rejoiced with our dear sister and brother, as the service would serve further to bind still closer our hearts in Christian love and unity with that blessed seal of sonship.

In recording the happy season of fellowship, we would not overlook again the Lord's favour and blessing as we availed ourselves of the kindness and hospitality of a brother and sister in inviting us to their home at Heidelberg for the Saturday afternoon and evening. Here again full opportunity was taken of enjoying sweet Christian fellowship, and also. the natural beauty and freshness of the locality and surroundings. During the evening we were encouraged and exhorted by the words of the Apostle Paul, in Phil. 4:8, to think, and think deeply, on those things which are true, honest, just, pure, lovely and of good report, provided that these were in every way praiseworthy; and so the happy outing ended with thanks to our Heavenly Father for His rich provision, so often manifested at the hands of one or another of His faithful people.

May God grant that the lessons and experiences gained during the happy Convention season will bring forth fruit abundantly in honour to our Head, and to the praise and glory of our loving Heavenly Father.

It was a pleasure, also, to hear from our Sydney brethren of the very helpful and profitable season of fellowship 'and communion with the Lord and each other, experienced by them at their two days' convention, held on Saturday and Sunday, 27th and 28th of December.

While separated by many miles from our fellow-brethren in Christ during the assembling in convention, it is very evident from the word to hand, that the same spirit of the Lord was richly bestowed and fully realised as they gathered with the purpose of honoring the Lord with praise and thanksgiving, and encouraging each other to continually add to their faith the necessary virtues, that will enable all to remain true and faithful to Christ and His truth in this evil day.

The gatherings were held at Rawson Chambers, Pitt Street, the usual meeting rooms of the Sydney class, and although numbers were not large, it was encouraging to the friends to have with them several brethren who had travelled long distances to be present. Such a spirit of zeal and sacrifice for the Lord's people and cause of truth is surely very pleasing to our heavenly Father; and the addresses given by the visiting and local brethren, together with the testimony and fellowship meetings, were realised to be a means of cementing the friends closer together in the unity of the spirit, and in the bonds of Christian love as body members in the faith and truth of our Lord Jesus Christ.

We trust that the recording of the blessings and encouragement received at these convention gatherings may serve to strengthen our fellow-brethren in Christ everywhere, and particularly those in isolation, who were remembered in thoughts and prayers before the throne of heavenly grace.

BAPTIZED INTO HIS DEATH.

PERHAPS we can safely say that no subject is more helpful, encouraging, and a means of blessing than that for which we are now assembled. How beautifully significant and realistic to the true child of God are the words of the Apostle Paul, in Rom. 6, as he would present the matter so fully and forcibly, and apply this subject of baptism in addressing fellow-members in Christ. We rejoice because of the privilege we have of gathering as we would witness ill picture and symbol that desire of heart and purpose of will that has already taken place in the life of our dear brother and sister through that real consecration to death, to which the words of the Apostle refer, and to which we have ourselves joyfully responded, and as they would relate and apply only respecting those who have already consecrated themselves in line thereto.

Let us keep in mind that water baptism is not the real baptism or immersion into Christ as so many of the various sects and denominations would suppose, for be it noted that in the (above) verses by the Apostle in the 6th chapter of Romans, not one word is in reference to water baptism, but he addresses those who have consecrated to be dead with Christ and planted in the likeness of His death, having been baptised into His death, beautifully representing the burial of the human will and henceforth to accept only the will and dictation of their Lord and Head. To this class the Apostle elsewhere states that old things have passed away, and behold all things have become new. If then this death and burial of the old will and raising to newness of life represents the true baptism and consecration of the Christian, what does this baptism or immersing in water represent to us? We do well to view the question in the light of Scripture as it would apply to our Captain and Head and High Priest of our profession. We remember that our Lord on reaching manhood's estate, 30 years of age under the law, hastened to make a total surrender in full consecration of all earthly hopes, aims, and ambitions, that the Father's will only might be done in Him. How in Psa. 40:7-8, the language of His heart was prophetically foretold, as He presented Himself at Jordan, "Lo, I come, in the volume of the Book it is written of Me, to do Thy will, O God. I delight to do Thy will, O my God, Thy law is within my heart." Our Lord, thus consecrating Himself to the Father's will, realised that His outward baptism symbolised the surrender of His earthly life and nature, already immersed or buried into His Father's will, even unto death. Thus the immersion in the waters of Jordan at the hands of John the Baptist was merely in symbol a pictorial representation of the baptism, burial or consecration of His will which had preceded it. Only our Saviour understood fully the purpose of His coming to Jordan for baptism, for John knew not the reason why such immersion should be necessary respecting this sinless Son of God. Our Lord's words to John the Baptist, "Suffer it to be so now, for so it becometh Me to fulfil all righteousness," seem to clearly show that He well knew that the immersion in Jordan was only a symbol or picture of that consecrated heart of His, which, unto death, would be found fulfilling the righteous requirements of His heavenly Father as the Saviour of mankind, through the laying down of His life in obedience and sacrifice, and, in consequence of such faithfulness, be raised again by the power of Jehovah.

The fact that our Lord did not view the immersing at Jordan as the real baptism is further evidenced by His words subsequently toward the end of His earthly ministry and sojourn. "I have a baptism to be baptised with and how am I straitened until it be accomplished." How plainly our Lord shows that this was not a water baptism, but a real death baptism, in harmony with the divine arrangements and requirement, as man's redemption price and sin offering.

Noting then our Leader's example, happy are they who perceive that the closer we can emulate our dear Lord, the greater blessing and uplift will be experienced as we seek to follow in His steps, and the nearer we come into line with our Master's own life and experience, the richer will be our appreciation of that oneness that should, and must exist, in order that we all may grow up unto Him in all things, who is our Head.

Again, respecting this subject of the symbolic picture of the true baptism, the Apostle Peter in his 1st Epistle 3:21, gives us a good thought in presenting that matter. he says (taking Noah's Ark as a type of Christ), "The like figure whereunto even baptism cloth also now save us, not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God by the resurrection of Jesus Christ." by the context that the Apostle had in mind the great deluge, and reminds us that all mankind perished in the flood, save eight souls, who were preserved from a watery grave by means of the Ark, which God provided for them. That ark, though encompassed by water, was their salvation. As the whole world perished in the great flood, so now the entire world of mankind is a dead world, a perishing world. The Lord's true followers were of that world, until they got out of it, through Christ. As Noah and his family were saved from death by coming into the ark in obedience to God, so the Church of Christ are saved from Adamic death by obedience to God in accepting His offer of salvation. Whoever then comes into Christ comes into safety and salvation, out of danger and destruction. All who come into this relationship to God are said to have "passed from death unto life" (John 5:24). If any man be in Christ. the Apostle Paul says. "He is a new creature," and of this new creation Christ is the first-born among many brethren.

Referring again to our text we notice that the Apostle says, "The like figure whereunto baptism cloth now save us." Salvation through the Ark was one figure of the salvation of the Church through baptism into Christ, baptism in water is another figure. What is the correspondency between these two figures? Noah and his family, while in the ark, are pictured by the Apostle as being submerged in literal water; candidates for baptism are also submerged in literal water, but in neither case was it the water that saved. So likewise it is not the outward observance that has saving power, except as a figure of the true baptism. It represents the real. But St. Peter assures us that the figure, picture, or symbol, is not in washing away the filth of the flesh in water, as this can only be accomplished by God's provision in Christ, by the washing of water by the Word, and is a gradual process after becoming new creatures in the Anointed One. So, then, the Apostle's words relate not to a baptism that either literally or figuratively washes clean the flesh, but to the answer or response of a good conscience toward God. Ah! Yes, what wondrous grace and love bath the Father bestowed upon those who have been so highly favoured of Him who bath called us, invited us, to a heavenly station, and have we not responded by gladly accepting God's will and purpose for us. Surely, then, we rejoice with our dear brother and sister as they would witness in symbol, before fellow members of the Body, that answer of a good conscience toward God, in which is pictured that earnest heartfelt and sincere desire to fulfil their covenant of sacrifice previously entered upon. Do we not render thanks to God, as time and again one or another of His consecrated children seek to pay their vows before the Lord in the presence of His people. What a stimulus and an encouragement it is to each of us, as brethren in Christ witness thus, and take their stand for the cause of truth, righteousness, and the brethren, and so we gladly rejoice with those who do rejoice. "Gather My saints together unto Me, those who have made a covenant with Me by sacrifice" (Psa. 50:5). So then our surrender to the Lord was the answer of a good conscience toward God, for when He invited us to become living sacrifices through Christ, to be saintly followers of our Lord and Head, the answer of our conscience was, "Lord, we respond, we accept Thy gracious invitation." Was not that the answer or response of a good conscience; surely, as the Apostle says (Rom. 12:1), it is but our reasonable service.

St. Peter goes on to say that it all comes about through the resurrection of Jesus Christ. How clearly the Scriptures teach that if Christ be not raised, if there be no resurrection from the dead, then is our faith and hope exercised in vain, and our lives profit nothing. On the contrary, we learn clearly that our Lord has been raised by the power of the Father, and is the resurrection and the life, and the true Light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world. Thus the Apostle Paul beautifully expressed the matter .as one who gratefully responded to God's call for him, as a specially chosen disciple to show forth the evidence and power of a truly consecrated life, and God's glory among the Gentiles. Harken to his words in Phil 3:10-11, "That I may know Him and the power of His resurrection, and the fellowship of His sufferings, being made conformable unto His death, if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead."

We who would fully appreciate this matter of real baptism in Christ, of which water is but a figure, will do well to realise, as did the Apostle, that only through Christ, our sufficiency, can the ultimate object of our baptism. in Christ be attained, viz.:—The resurrection from the dead, and our awakening in the likeness of His resurrection. How many have been hindered from making progress on account of seemingly relying upon their own efforts and strength to carry out their covenant of sacrifice, instead of allowing God to work in -them to will and to do according to His good pleasure. Only as we bend our wills to the will of God in Christ, and allow the great hand of the Potter to mould and shapen us as ‘vessels meet for His use, can we expect to be made vessels unto honour, and in so doing our Heavenly Father will .be pleased to grant us such opportunities. through special circumstances and conditions brought about, as we allow of a daily consuming of the sacrifice we have laid on the altar, and this with our every effort to co-operate in obedience with His will for us, and in patiently submitting to the trials by the way, will result in yielding up a sweet incense, acceptable to God through Christ, who has made all this possible, as we would go to Him without the camp, bearing His reproach.

I laving in mind, then, that the symbolic burial witnessed here is a figure of a true death ‘burial, what a picture this is then of a baptism into death. Just as the candidate is lowered into the water and submerged, indicating the death condition of his own will, so the raising up out of the water pictures the one raised to newness of life. Such henceforth live not unto themselves, but unto Him who died and rose again, that they might live. Such count not their lives dear unto them, but seek daily to mortify or deaden their members, which are upon the earth, realising that if they live after the flesh, they shall die, but if they through the spirit of Christ do mortify the deeds of the body, they shall live.

Let us exhort one another daily respecting the step we have taken, and ever by precept, example and practice, endeavour to demonstrate to our fellow-members in the Body, that we fully are awake to the importance of what the real baptism into Christ signifies, that our one desire is to bury our own wills and accept the will of God in Christ, and just as our Lord came not to do His own will, but that of the Father, so we too may be found saying with the Apostle of old, “For me to live is Christ, and to die gain.” How glad we are, then, to assemble in honour of the ones who to-day in symbol have pictured to us that true evidence of an answer and sincere response of a good conscience toward God, who has been pleased to call them, also, with a high and holy calling, according to the good purpose of his grace.

May God richly bless this loyal indication of a heart given up wholly and unreservedly to the service of the great King of kings, and grant the grace sufficient that the sacrifice may lie consumed in His own time and way, and that such experiences may be brought to bear in their lives that, will enable that sweet .incense of an obedient life to ascend as a sweet smelling savor continually to Him.

Our Lord said, “He that putteth his hand to the plough and looketh back is not fit for the kingdom.”

“He that will seek to give his life shall lose it, but he that loveth his life forsake and the Gospel’s, shall find it unto life eternal.

“And what cloth it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul; for what shall a man give in exchange for his soul.”

May God help us all to so number our days and apply our hearts unto wisdom, and in so, doing, surely He will cause His face to shine upon us, and give us that rest, peace, comfort and rich blessing, which the world cannot give neither take from us.

According to Thy gracious will,
This watery symbol here fulfil,
Like unto my clear Head.
In token of my earnest vows,
I sink beneath right here and now,
And rise as from the dead.
Lord, grant me all sufficient grace
To walk as to behold Thy face,
In newness of that life.
All earthly aims and hopes subdue,
As I my sacrifice renew,
In this my daily strife.
Accept my weak imperfect all,
As ever at Thy feet I fall In consecration sweet.
Blest Master, all I have is thine,
O cause my life for Thee to shine,
Until Thy glory it complete.

Correspondence

Dear Brother,

Greetings in the Master's Name, to whom be praise for ever. Just enclosing postal note for "Herald" subscription, which we believe is now due. I am, not sure, whether I acknowledged the receipt of the book, "Desolations of the Sanctuary." Some are getting their eyes opened to the true position, others of course are fast asleep. The letter in the "People's Paper" re Concordant teachings is only too true, and many are being deceived by these plausible deceptions. In fact, both the I.I.S.A. and Concordant teachings seem to be coming from the same source; but the Lord's people should have their spiritual sense exercised to discern between good and evil, truth and error (Heb. 5:14). Hope you had nice convention during the holidays, and praying the Lord's blessing upon the work.

• Yours in the Master's service, B.H.J.

Dear Brother,

You will see by this that I am back home again and found things alright, and the family seemed very pleased to have me back again.

Needless to say, my thoughts have been running on the various meetings and gatherings we attended together, and I can say they have been a great blessing to me, and I believe to all concerned. It is a time I will never forget as long as I am in this tabernacle. The friends all seem to be one family, and that is God's will. There is no restraint but a fellowship of brotherly and sisterly love for all, which is in line with the teachings of God's word, as in Rom. 12:8-10. "Love one another, for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law. Love worketh no ill to his neighbour, therefore, love is the fulfilment of the law. He that loveth his brother is in the light, and there is none occasion of falling in him" (1 John 2:10). "Hereby perceive we the love of Christ, because He laid down His life for us, and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. Love God, love the brethren, love one another. Three things, faith, love, works. Faith without works is dead" (Jas. 2:17, 20). Now these graces seem to me to be prevalent among our brethren, so with Christian love to them one and all, including yourself.

I remain,

Yours in His service, H.J.W.

It is my duty to distrust my own ability, that I may have reliance on Him that is stronger than all.—
J.B.

Look straight into the light, and you will always have the shadows behind you.—A.FW.I.

The Principles of Love and Justice Contrasted.

NOTHING is more necessary to the peace and prosperity of the Church of God than that its members should have a clear understanding and appreciation of moral principles, with a full determination to be controlled by them. Even among Christians there are often differences of opinion with reference to principles of action, which greatly interfere with spiritual growth and prosperity. Such difficulties most frequently arise through failure to distinguish between the relative claims of love and justice. Therefore, we consider it profitable to examine these principles and Their operation among the children of God.

Justice is sometimes represented by a pair of evenly poised balances, and sometimes by a square and compass, both of which are fitting emblems of its character. Justice knows no compromise and no deviation from its fixed rule of action. It is mathematically precise. It gives nothing over for "good weight" or "good measure." There is no grace in it, no heart, no sympathy, no favor of any kind. It is a calculating, exact measure of truth and righteousness. When justice is done, there are no thanks due to the one who metes it out. Such a one has merely done a duty, the neglect of which makes one culpable, and the doing of which merits no favor or praise. And yet, firm and relentless as this principle is, it is declared to be the very foundation of God's throne. It is the principle which underlies all His dealings with His creatures. It is His unchangeable business principle; and how firmly He adheres to it is manifest to every one who understands the plan of salvation, the basis of which is the satisfaction of justice against our race. Though the arrangement for the satisfaction of justice cost the life of His Only-begotten and well-beloved Son, so important was this principle of divine justice that God freely gave Him up for us all.

JUSTICE BEFORE GENEROSITY.

The principle of love, unlike that of justice, overflows with tenderness, and longs to bless. It is full of grace, and delights in the bestowment of favor. It is manifest, however, that no action can be regarded as a favor or a manifestation of love, which has not underneath it the substantial foundation of justice. Thus, for instance, if one comes to you with a gift, and at the same time disregards a just debt to you, the gift falls far short of appreciation as an expression of love; and you say, "We should be just before we attempt to be generous."

And this is right; if justice is the foundation principle in all of God's dealings, it should be the same in: all ours. who are brethren in Christ, much more so among those in the world. As brethren in Christ, we have no right to presume upon the favor of one another. All to which we have a right is simple justice, though we may waive those things that are really our rights. But in our own dealings, we should strive always to render justice—justice in the payment of our honest debts to each other, justice in our judgment one of another (which must make due allowance for frailties, etc., because we recognise in ourselves some measure of similar imperfection), and justice in fair and friendly treatment one of another.

As we have just said, there is no obligation to demand justice for ourselves, and we may if we choose, even suffer injustice uncomplainingly. must, however, if we are Christ's, render justice so far as we are enabled to recognise it. In other words, we are not responsible for the action of others in this respect, but are responsible for our own. Therefore, we are to endeavour earnestly that all our actions, our words and our thoughts may be squared by the exact rule of justice, before we offer even one single act as an expression of love.

JUSTICE, EQUITY-, A CHRISTIAN QUALITY.

It would appear that many Christian people spend Years of their, experience without making any great progress. One difficulty leading up to this condition is a failure to recognise the basic principles underlying the divine laws, which apply to us from the moment we are adopted into the Lord's family. The first of these basic principles is justice. We need to learn more and more clearly what are our own rights and the rights of our fellow creatures in the Church and out of the Church. We need to learn how to measure the affairs of ourselves and of others with the plummet of justice, and to recognise that we must not under any circumstances or conditions infract the rights, interests, or liberties of others—that to do so would be wrong, sinful, contrary to the divine will, and a serious hindrance to our growth in grace. Secondly, we must learn to esteem love next to justice in importance in the divine code. By love we mean, not amateness. nor soft sentimentality, but that principle of kindness, sympathy, consideration and benevolence, which we see manifested in our heavenly Father, and in our Lord Jesus.

In proportion as we grow up in the Lord, strong in Him, it must be along the lines of these elements of His character. More and more we must appreciate and sympathise with others in their trials and difficulties and afflictions; more and more we must become gentle, patient, kind towards all, but especially toward the household of faith. All the graces of the spirit are elements of love. God is love, and whoever receives of His spirit receives the spirit of love.

These two basic principles must cover all of our conduct in life. Justice tells us that we must cease to do evil—that we must not speak a word, nor do an act that would work injustice to another, nor even by look imply such injustice; that we must be as careful of his or her interests and welfare as of our own. Justice may permit us to give them more than justice could require, but justice demands that we must never give them less than due. No matter if they do riot require justice at our hands, no matter if they are willing to take less than justice, no matter if they would say nothing if we should take advantage of them, no matter if they would not appreciate our degree of justice, still our course is the same. We have received of the Lord's spirit, and must act from this standpoint and not from the standpoint of others who have not His spirit, or who are more or less blinded and disabled from dealing justly.

LOVE AND JUSTICE BOTH CONTROL.

If justice must mark our conduct toward others, so love must be used by us in measuring the conduct of others toward us. We may not apply to others the strict rules of justice which we acknowledge as our responsibility to them. Love, generosity, demands that we accept from others less than justice, because we realise that they are fallen, imperfect, not only in their flesh, but also in their judgments. Furthermore, we see that the great mass of the world has not received the spirit of the Lord at all, and therefore cannot appreciate these basic principles of justice and love, as we appreciate them. We must in love look sympathetically upon their condition, as we would upon the condition of a sick neighbour, friend, parent, or child. We must make allowance for their disordered condition, and think as charitably as possible of their words, conduct, etc.

This does not mean that we are to be blind or oblivious to true conditions, and permit ourselves to be deprived of all that we possess or earn; but it does mean that we should take a kind, sympathetic view of the unrighteousness and injustice of those with whom we have dealings. We should remember that they are fallen, and that they have not received the grace of God as we have received it; and that they are not, therefore, to be measured by the line of strict justice, but rather that their imperfections are to be allowed for reasonably by the elastic cord of love. It is our own conduct that we are to measure by the law of justice, the Golden Rule.

HOW LOVE MAY OVERFLOW THE MEASURE.

Flow clearly the Master sets forth these conditions, urging upon us the Golden Rule as the measure for our conduct toward others, and that in measuring their conduct toward us we shall be as generous as we shall wish our Lord to be in His judgment of ourselves, in harmony with His statement. "With what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged" ! A right appreciation of these basic principles, justice and love, by the Lord's people, and worked out in the daily affairs of life, would lift them above the world. It would save many an altercation, many a law suit, many a quarrel, and would make of the Lord's people shining examples of kindness, generosity, love, and at the same time examples of justice, right living, sterling honesty, etc.

Love is not, like justice, an exact principle to be measured and weighed. It is three-fold in character: it is pitiful, it is sympathetic, in the sense of kinship of soul—affectionate it is reverential. These different forms of love are exercised according to the object upon which love is centered. Pity-love is the lowest form of love; it takes cognisance of even the vile and degraded, and is active in measures of relief. Sympathetic love rises higher, and proffers fellowship, comradeship. But the reverential love rises above all these, and delights in the contemplation of the good, the pure and the beautiful. In this latter form we may indeed love God supremely, as the personification of all that is truly worthy of admiration and reverence; and love our fellowmen in proportion as they bear His likeness. The divine law demands love, both to God and to man.

Although we owe to every man, as a duty, love in one of these senses, we may not demand it one of another; but love overflows justice. Love shakes the measure, presses it down, heaps it up. The lack of love is not to be complained of by the Christian, however, but when bestowed it is to be appreciated gratefully and reciprocated generously. Every one who craves love should crave it in its highest sense—in the sense of admiration and reverence. But this form of love is the most costly; and the only way to secure it is to manifest that nobility of character which calls it forth from others who are truly noble, truly like our Lord Jesus.

The love begotten of sympathy and fellowship is also very precious. But any sentiment that comes merely in response to a demand, is deprived of love's choicest aroma. Therefore, never demand love, but rather by manifestation of it toward others court its reciprocation. The love of pity is not called out by the nobility of the subject, but rather by the nobility of the bestower, whose heart is so full of love that it overflows in generous impulses toward even the unworthy. All of the objects of pity, however, are not unworthy of love in the higher senses; and some such often draw upon our love in every sense.

A SELFISH, ONE-SIDED VIEW.

To demand love's overflow of blessing—which is beyond the claim of justice—is only an exhibition of covetousness. We may act on this principle of love ourselves, but we may not claim it from others. If we do, we manifest a lack of love and the possession of a considerable measure of selfishness. Some seem to see clearly where brotherly love should be extended to themselves, but are slow to see their own obligations in this respect.

For instance, two brethren were once rooming together, and through failure to consider the relative claims of both love and justice, one presumed upon the brotherly love of the other to the extent of expecting him to pay the entire rent of the room. When the other urged the claim of justice, the first urged the claim of brotherly love, and the former reluctantly yielded, not knowing how to refute the claim, yet feeling that somehow some Christians had less principle than many worldly people. How strange that any of God's children should take so narrow, so one-sided, so selfish a view ! Cannot all see that love and justice should work both ways; that it is the duty of each not to oversee others in these respects, but to look well to his own course, to see that he manifests brotherly love; and that if he would teach others, it should be rather by example than by precept only?

LET LOVE REIGN SUPREME

Let us beware of a disposition toward covetousness. let us each remember that he is steward over the Lord's goods entrusted to him, and not over those entrusted to his brother, that each is accountable to the Lord, and not to others, for the right use of that which the Master has placed in his hands. There is nothing much more unbecoming and unlovely in the children of God than a disposition to petty criticism of the individual affairs of one another. It is a business too small for the saints, and manifests a sad lack of that brotherly love which should be especially manifest in broad and generous consideration, which would rather cover a multitude of sins than to magnify one.

The Christian is to have the loving, generous disposition of heart—a copy of the Heavenly Father's disposition. In trivial affairs he is to have so much sympathy and love that he will take no notice, just as God for Christ's sake deals with us and does not impute sin to us, except as it represents knowledge and wilfulness. With such a rule operating amongst Christians, a determination not to recognise as an offence anything that is not purposely done, or intended as an offence, would be a great blessing to all, and the proper, God-like, The transgressions to which our Lord refers Matthew 18:15-17, are not trivial affairs of no consequence, are not evil-surmisings and imaginings, are not rumors, are not fancied insults, but positive wrongs done us, and on account of which it is our duty, kindly and lovingly and wisely, to give some proper rebuke—some intimation that we recognise the wrong, and that it has grieved us and hurt us, and needs correction.

The disposition to forgive should be with us always, and should be manifested by us at all times. Our loving generosity, our kindness and our desire to think no evil, or as little evil as possible, should be manifest by all the words and acts of life. This is God-like. God had a kind, benevolent, generous sentiment toward us even while we were yet sinners. Nor did He wait for the sinners to ask forgiveness, but promptly manifested His desire for harmony, and His readiness to forgive. The whole Gospel message is to this effect, "Be ye reconciled to God," Our hearts should be so full of this disposition toward forgiveness that our faces would not have a hard look, nor our words of reproof, a bitter sting. We should manifest the loving forgiveness that we should have in our hearts at all times.

May love and justice find their proper, relative places in the hearts of all of God's people, that so the enemy may have no occasion to glory ! The Psalmist said,

"O how I love Thy law (the law of love whose foundation is justice). It is my meditation all the day" (Psalm 119:97). Surely, if God's law were the constant meditation of all, there would be fewer and less glaring mistakes than we often see! Let us watch and be sober, that the Adversary and our fallen flesh may not gain an advantage over us as new creatures. Let "Self" be more and more eliminated and "Love" reign supreme.

It takes great love within the loyal heart
 To live beyond the others and apart
 A love that is not shallow, is not small,
 Is not for one or two, but is for all.
 Love that can wound love for its highest need;
 Love that can leave love, though a heart may plead;
 Love that can choose the right and leave the wrong,
 And breathe in hope and joy the victor's song.
 A love that will not waver—that will find
 Just what it means to suffer and be kind.
 It takes great love to conquer self and pride,
 And swim against the swift and evil tide—
 A love that wends its course to that grand height
 Where dwells our God enthroned in wondrous light.
 Like that great love our Lord did sweet express
 So strong in faith and patient tenderness.
 Yea—like the glowing sun, this love must live,
 Moved by one burning, deathless force—to give.
 Love, faith and courage—courage, faith and love.
 Of such are God's victors—crowned from above.

PASSOVER MEMORIAL.

THE Passing over of the First-Borns of Israel On that dreadful night, when all the first-borns in all the houses of the Egyptians were slain was a wonderful demonstration of God's protection of His people. It should have been a lesson to Israel never to be forgotten, and, no doubt, had that nation carefully observed the memorial of the slain lamb by whose blood their first-borns were all spared, the annual observance, would have kept in memory what great things God had done for them, and have kept them from turning to, idols and forgetting their covenant with God.

That night in Egypt was a picture Gospel Age, and how the blood of "Christ our Passover" is first applied to save the "Church of the first-borns whose names are written in heaven.- Just as the consequence was the deliverance of all Israel and the destruction of Pharaoh and his hosts in the Red Sea, so the consequence of the death of Christ and the saving of the Church of the first-borns will be the deliverance of all who will be God's people, from slavery to Satan, sin and death, and finally, the destruction of Satan and the wicked angels in the second death (Matt. 25:41).

As it was only the first-born in each house that was in danger on that night in Egypt—they would have perished had there been no blood sprinkled on the lintel and door posts of the home—so it is only those who have by faith become members in Christ members of the Church of the first-borns, who are in danger of the second death during this age (Hebrews 6:4-6; 10:26-29). Those who remain under the blood—and they only—are safe. The teaching of salvation by faith in the blood of Christ was the stone of stumbling to the Jewish nation. They rejected the stone which is become the chief corner stone of the building. It is astonishing how the nominal Christian Church is now stumbling at the same stone—the cross of Christ lets become to many a stone of stumbling and rock of offence. "Behold I lay in Zion a chief corner stone elect and precious, and he that believeth on Him shall not lie confounded. Unto you, therefore, which believe He is precious, but unto them which he disobedient, the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner, and a stone, of stumbling and a rock of offence to them which stumble at the word being disobedient" (1 Pet. 2:6-8).

The Word of God, from Genesis to Revelation, consistently teaches that "without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins." The salvation of mankind from the curse of sin and the condemnation of death entirely depended upon a ransom sacrifice of a perfect human life to pay the penalty incurred by Adam. So it was that Christ became flesh, "was made man, a little lower (nature) than angels, that He, by the grace of God, should taste death for every man" (Heb. 2:9). John introduced Jesus as the Lamb of God "that taketh away the sins of the world." Jesus Himself said, "This is my blood which is shed for many." "My flesh I give for the life of the world." How wonderful was the sacrifice of Him who was rich (in heavenly glory with the Father) and became poor, that we, through His poverty, might be made rich. The old, old story of Jesus and His love is so beautiful, and so simply and plainly stated in the Bible that it would seem that those who deny the efficacy of the cross of Christ in satisfying justice on man's behalf, must first lose faith in the inspiration of the Bible. There are all sorts of new theories to-day among professing ministers of the Gospel, which are contradictory to this foundation doctrine of the Christian faith, "Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures." They are stumbling to-day at the same rock of offence, as the Jews did of old.

Our Lord knew that He was to be the antitype of the Jewish Passover lamb. He, therefore, day on which He must die (Nisan 14th, Jewish time). He knew the year in which He must be "cut off" from Daniel's prophecy.

He would keep the last annual pass-over with His disciples, and instruct them that they need no longer observe the memorial of the type, but instead, "as oft as ye do this" do it in remembrance of Him. "Christ, our passover, is slain for us: let us therefore keep the feast."

Instead of this simple memorial of Christ's death once a year the Apostate Church of Rome instituted the ,abomination of the Mass, and celebrate it as often as it may be deemed convenient or profitable. The Church of England and other denominations also celebrate the Lord's supper—though generally taken in the mornings—just as often as they feel like it or think fit. They fail to grasp the Lord's intention that it was annually to remember His death and its purpose. The Apostle reminds us that it was "in the night in which He was betrayed" that He took the bread and wine as symbols of His flesh and blood, and instituted the simple service by which all His followers could lovingly and thankfully remember His sufferings and death on their behalf, and indicate afresh their consecration to be "dead with Him," to be broken together with Him. "If we suffer with Him." says Paul. "we shall be also glorified together with Him."

Many like to keep the memorial according to the Jewish date (14th), which this year will be after sundown. Tuesday, . March 31st, and all who do this in remembrance of Him who loved us and gave Himself for us, realise that it is a means of grace and strength to earnestly press along in the narrow way in the footprints of the Lamb whithersoever He may lead.

"DO THIS IN REMEMBRANCE OF ME."

Arrangements have been made by the Melbourne Class to hold the annual observance of the Memorial of our Lord's death on Tuesday evening, March 31. This date corresponds to the 14th Nisan, Jewish reckoning, on the evening of which our Lord instituted this observance to be kept in remembrance of Himself as the antitypical Passover Lamb. about nineteen hundred years ago.

The service will be held (D.V.) at 7.45 p.m., in Moles-worth Chambers, 450 Little Collins Street (3rd Floor); and all consecrated believers in the atoning sacrifice of Christ are invited. "Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us; therefore, let us keep the feast."

EASTER CONVENTION.

The Adelaide Class is making arrangements for a four day Convention at Easter. The meetings will be held at Liverpool Buildings, Flinders Street, and will commence on Good Friday. Further meetings will be held on Easter Saturday and Sunday, and Easter Monday will be taken up with a visit to Gawler.

The service in commemoration of our Lord's death will be held on Thursday evening, April 2, at 8 o'clock. All believers in the ransom-sacrifice of Jesus Christ are cordially invited to attend these meetings.

Those desiring further information or accommodation are requested to write to the class secretary, Miss IL Copping, 70 Fairford Street, Unley, South Australia.

Helpful Thoughts from Christmas Convention, 1930.

LET us avoid any tendency to seek the chief seats (Eccl. 8:9; 3 John' 9, 10.)

Let us not forget to seek in humility to wash each other's feet (no. 13: I 2-15).

Let us strive more faithfully and earnestly to fulfil our consecration vow daily.

"All for Jesus." "All for Jesus."

Let us be guided by the principles of God's Word, not by our own preferences, which are misleading. Let us not respect persons among the Lord's brethren. "One is your Master even Christ, all ye are brethren."

Let us not through fear of offending another, be lacking in courage to voice our own sentiments. Let us not condone error or wrong. Speak the truth in meekness and love.

Let us be earnest in redeeming the time.

Let not our lives be so full of earthly cares, or even duties, that we find no time for study of the Word.

Let us not forsake the assembling of ourselves together, and let us see that we give time to prepare the lesson beforehand and not selfishly expect others to do the preparation for us.

Let us not trust in man, nor in human sect or party, but let us hold the Head in proper respect (Jno. 5:44).

Re the dangers of Nicolaitanism-- Russell remarks—"The Church's dangers have always arisen from those who sought to lord it over God's heritage, and to dispense their own wisdom, or the wisdom of other men, instead of the Word of the Lord."

In Re "Evil-speaking"—To tell fairly what another believes and to show that it is wrong is not evil-speaking. It is speaking the truth, which should always be spoken in love. In many instances it is a duty to speak."

Thyatira was rebuked because she "suffered" the woman Jezebel and her errors (Rev. 2:20). Let us not suffer errors, self-conceit, arrogance and blasphemy of the Truth. Ours is the duty and the obedience toward God.

Let us learn to wait patiently for the Lord; not chafing under our trials, but waiting heartily—cheerfully enduring hardship for the truth's sake.

Question Box.

Question.—In Jer. 34:19, what was the significance of the passing between the parts of the calf ?

Answer.—The passing between the parts of a slain animal was the ceremonial binding of a solemn covenant.

The message which the Lord sent by Jeremiah, as recorded in this chapter, was upbraiding the Jews for failing to keep the covenant which they had made only little more than twenty-five years previously. In the 18th year of Josiah, the king had wrought a great reformation in Israel. The whole nation were enthused with zeal, and covenanted to observe all that was written in the Law Covenant. One feature of that Law was that no one should hold a fellow Israelite in servitude beyond seven years. The Jews when threatened with disaster from their enemies had remembered this law and had liberated their slaves, but when the danger was passed they compelled their poor brethren to return to bondage, regardless of their covenant with God. worldly gain weighed more with them than the keeping of the Divine commands.

To ratify the covenant, a calf had been killed and cut in two, the parts being placed at some distance from each other: the contracting parties passed between these parts, thus signifying that they consented to be served in like manner, if they failed to keep their part of the covenant.

The custom of sealing a compact in this manner dates from the time of Abraham, and was by Divine appointment (Gen. 15:8-10, 17). God gave to Abraham His oath in confirmation of His promise, and bound Him, self by what is termed the "Covenant of blood." A full description is given in verses 9 and 10. A heifer of three years old, and a she goat of three years old, etc., he took unto him all these and divided them in the midst, and the Lord, represented by a lamp of fire (verse 17) passed between the parts of these sacrificed animals, thus swearing by a covenant of blood, sacrificed life, to fulfil the promises He had given. The Apostle says, "He swore by Himself."

This outward evidence was given to Abraham to assist his faith in the fulfilment of the promises, though it might be so long delayed during the development of the Divine plan of the ages.

God graciously deigned to confirm His covenant in this way, not only for Abraham's sake, but for the comfort and consolation of those who were to be the heirs of the promise—the Church.

The Apostle in Heb. 6:16-19, referring to this matter, says, "An oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife, wherein God willing more abundantly to show, unto the heirs of promise the immutability of His counsel, confirmed it with an oath, that by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us. Which hope we have as an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast."

What strength of hope there is here for thou art Christ's, and therefore "heirs of the promise," "Abraham's seed" (Gal. 3:16, 27, 29). For the promise is unto those who are adopted into the heavenly family by the spirit of adoption, sons of God, joint-heirs with Christ" (Rom. 8:16, 17). They, like Abraham, have to wait for the fulfilment, and like the natural seed have hard experiences "waiting for the kingdom." but the fulfilment is sure, for God "bath sworn by Himself," and not one thing of all lie bath spoken, bath, nor can fail.

Question.—Will you kindly explain the meaning of Romans 8:11, "the quickening of your mortal • bodies"? Is that process going on in this life and how?

Answer.—The Apostle in this connection has ;been contrasting the mind of the flesh and the mind of the spirit.

He has shown that not one (except Jesus) could keep the Law Covenant. That which had been ordained unto life, a way of gaining life by perfect obedience to the Law, had only brought a further condemnation to death. So then it was evidenced that the best efforts of humanity could not by deeds of righteousness gain life. All are, therefore, born in sin—"There is none righteous, no, not one"; all are at enmity with God—"They that are in the flesh cannot please God." The only ones who can please God during this Gospel Age are those who, though they "were by nature children of wrath even as others," have placed themselves in the Lord's hands, and have been quickened by His spirit, "But God who is rich in mercy, for His great love wherewith He hath loved us even when we were dead in sins hath quickened us together with Christ" (Ephes. 2:3-5). This making alive is by God's holy spirit, which begets new mind, a new heart within us, and we become new creatures begotten to a lively hope, a spiritual life, with the promise of a heavenly home. This new mind and heart delights to please God, and will seek to serve Him and His cause and His people. It cannot do anything like what it would like to do in such service, because it only has an earthly body, always very weak, and very circumvented in its abilities; nevertheless, the holy spirit which we have received is so anxious to serve, that it stirs up the faculties of the human body to make it serve the cause. The new creature takes possession of the human body. It is the only body it has, and this body, with the holy spirit-begotten new mind, comprises the new creature. "Know ye not that your bodies are members of Christ."

So then it is quite evident that this quickening of our mortal bodies is a present experience. This is where the great fight between the spiritual mind and the fleshly mind takes place. The human mind is still there and seeks to assert itself, seeking its natural rights and urging its likes and dislikes, but the new mind delights to do God's will, and has devoted these human rights, the fleshly mind, to death.

"The past time of our lives
Sufficeth to have wrought
The fleshly will which only ill
Hath to us ever brought."

The new creature is then steward of all his faculties, and it will depend upon how well he quickens the both into activity, in the cause of Christ, as to whether he may receive the "Well done" at the end of the way.

Question.—We are having some good studies in the "Tabernacle Shadows," and have been thinking about the typical bullock of the "Atonement Day Sacrifices" (Lev. 16). Bro. Russell says the bullock represents Jesus only, and its blood was applied for Himself (Jesus) and His house. The High Priest typified Jesus, his house typified his sons the under priests. The blood of atonement is taken as the price of our redemption (Pages 58. 59) , so would not the blood of atonement also be the price of our Lord's redemption from death?

Answer.-- We would not understand that there was any redemption required to deliver our Lord from death. The promise was "Thou wilt not leave my soul in the grave, neither wilt thou suffer thine holy one to see corruption.

'Whom God hath raised up having loosed the pains of death, because it was not possible that he should be holden of it' (Acts 2:27, 24). It was not possible that the Holy One could be 'holden of death.' for He had not forfeited His life. He came to earth to do the Father's will, to redeem mankind; He willingly laid aside for the time the heavenly glory; He had in no sense forfeited His heavenly existence. Yet He took the sinner's place and freely gave His human life as a ransom for Adam's race, that "as all in Adam die, so all in Christ might be made alive again." For this purpose He was "made flesh," became man, born under the law thus with the privilege of keeping the Law and of gaining the reward promised under the Law Covenant --life. It was this perfect human life, with its right to live as the reward of obedience, which He gave as the ransom price for the recovery of the disobedient Adam and all affected by that disobedience; "For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous" (Rom. 5:19). That perfect human life was freely yielded up unto death once and for all, never to be recalled—to be accepted by justice as instead of Adam and his race. Jesus said, "My flesh (human nature)' I give for the life of the world." So we know Christ no more after the flesh (2 Cor. 5:16). He was "put to death flesh but raised—quickenened or made alive again—spirit" (1 Pet. 3:18).

The Tabernacle types are pictures sometimes large and more general, and then there are pictures also in these pictures. Our thought is that the High Priest on the Day of Atonement represented Christ, Head and Body. The bullock represented the perfect humanity of Jesus, the blood was taken into the Most Holy, and presented there for "Himself and His house." The fulfilment of this was when Jesus ascended into Heaven, "there to appear in the presence of God for us," that is, for the members of His Body, the "little flock" to whom it is the Father's good pleasure to give the Kingdom, and all the household of faith, which includes the Great Multitude of Revelation 7.

Then the further picture of the two goats, i.e., the Lord's goat and the scape goat, shows the two classes. The blood had been applied for both, so that they could both come to the veil of consecration. All for whom the blood of Jesus has been applied have the same privilege of presenting themselves in consecration into Christ's death. As is shown in the picture, one class, those who are to be joint heirs with Christ, because of their willing, faithful consecration, are represented by the Lord's goat, which is shown as going the same way as the bullock, walking "in His steps," followers of the Lamb, "whithersoever He may, lead"; the other class, after making consecration, are not so willing to perform. They are attracted 'by the things of the world and the flesh, and would draw back from the persecutions and necessary afflictions. They are shown in Revelation 7, as having come up through great tribulations and ultimately are saved "so as by fire" and receive palms of victory and serve before the throne, instead of having crowns of glory and being seated in the throne. So then our thought is that Aaron represented the "Man Christ Jesus," Head and Body. The Head needed no redemption, but the Body does, so the blood was 'for Himself, He identifies Himself so closely, so intimately with His body members, and for all believers during this Gospel Age.

In other pictures or features of the Tabernacle Shadows, Aaron's sons represent the sacrificing members in Christ, the Royal priesthood, but in this picture we think Aaron represents Christ the Head and the Church, which is His Body. Aaron's sons are not mentioned.

Question.—What is the antitypical significance of the priests wearing bonnets? (Exod. 28:40).

Answer.—In the services of the typical tabernacle it will be found that the high priest who typified Christ, the High Priest of our profession, alone went with uncovered head when in priestly attire; and that all of the under priests who typified the Church, "the Royal Priesthood," wore head coverings called "bonnets." The teaching of this type is in full accord with the words of the Apostle (1 Cor. 11:4-6), for in the gatherings of the Ecclesia of the New Creation, the Lord, the antitypical High Priest, is represented by the brethren, while the Church or Royal Priesthood is represented by the sisters, who, the Apostle declares, should likewise wear a head covering as indicating the same lesson—the subserviency of the Church to the Lord.

WAIT PATIENTLY FOR HIM.

IN Psalm 37:7 we have this expression of the Psalmist, "Rest in the Lord and wait patiently for Him." Even though evil-doers may seem to prosper, the true child of God must not allow his confidence in God to be shaken. In due time evil-doers will receive punishment for wrong-doing, while the righteous will be blessed and encouraged. It is surely then the part of wisdom to give earnest heed to the directions of God's Word. "Let none that wait on Thee be ashamed; let them be ashamed, which transgress without cause" (Psalm 25:3).

The marginal reading of our text is, "Be silent to the Lord, and wait patiently for Him." According to Strong's Concordance, the Hebrew word here translated, "wait patiently," has in it the thought of carefulness. It implies that we should be very careful to wait for the Lord. Wait attentively, wait carefully, wait patiently for Him. The pathway of the Christian is beset by many dangerous by-paths, and he is not a wise Christian who feels that he can walk that way in his own strength. The attitude of the true disciple is that expressed in the hymn which says, "Keep Thou my way () Lord, myself I cannot guide, nor dare I trust my faltering steps, one moment from Thy side."

The Lord has promised that He will guide His people. (Psalm 32:8), "I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go, I will guide thee with Mine eye." Again our Lord Jesus is likened to the Good Shepherd. (Jno.

10:4), "And when He putteth forth His own sheep, He goeth before them, and the sheep follow Him, for they know His voice." So, then, to understand clearly the Lord's will for us, we need to hearken carefully to His voice, that is, we need to become familiar with His Word, and additionally we need to study carefully the life of Christ, our Guide, our Shepherd, our Leader. In Psalm 119:105 we find these words, "Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." And so it is that when we are not quite sure which way the Lord would have us go, if we come to some place where we are not able to see the right pathway, we need to call to mind the Psalmist's words, "wait patiently for Him," that is, refrain from acting if the matter is one of importance and likely to involve us in difficulties. We are not wishing to convey the thought that the Christian should be slothful or inactive, but rather that we should 'at all times, and especially in matters of importance, "ponder the path of our feet, and let all our ways be established" (Prov. 4:26). To do this we will find that much careful searching of the Word will be necessary, as well as earnest prayer for promised grace and help to enable us to understand the will of God aright. This thought of waiting for the Lord is frequently mentioned in the Scriptures, and it is surely a lesson which every follower of Christ will need to keep, in mind. We must not run ahead of the Lord. We believe that many of the Lord's people have made mistakes along this line. Our attitude should be that expressed in the hymn.

"Take time to be holy, let Him be thy guide ;
And run not before Him, whatever betide,
In joy or in sorrow still follow thy Lord,
And, looking to Jesus, still trust in His Word."

In Psalm 27:14 we have another expression along the line of waiting for the Lord. It reads, "Wait on the Lord, he of good courage, and He shall strengthen thine heart, wait I say, on the Lord." Another scripture very similar to this one is found in Isa. 40:31, and reads, "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength, they shall mount up with wings as eagles, they shall run and not be weary, and they shall walk and not faint." In these two texts our attention is called to some of the blessings which will result from our waiting upon the Lord. It will mean that our strength of character in righteousness will be developed. But much will depend upon the manner in which we wait upon the Lord. •Our waiting for and upon the Lord must not be in a restless or fretful manner. In order to be pleasing to the Lord and to bring to us the fullness of His blessing, we must learn to wait patiently, heartily, uncomplainingly. There may come times when our efforts to make the truth of God's plan known to others may seem to meet with little or no success, and there may be the tendency to become somewhat discouraged. let us not grow weary in well-doing. Let us still wait patiently upon the Lord, and he of good courage, and He shall strengthen our hearts.

The Lord surely desires that all His people should wait patiently for Him; not seeking to please self in any of life's affairs. And surely this is what all consecrated Christians have covenanted to do. The attitude of our hearts is expressed in the words, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do"? Through His Word the Lord directs His people, saying, "My son give Me thine heart, and let thine eyes observe My ways" (Prov. 23:26). If our hearts be truly given to the Lord, we will delight in His ways, our eyes will attentively consider His ways, our ears will be open to hear and heed His instruction. "My son, attend to My words; incline thine ear unto My sayings, let them not depart from thine eyes; keep them in the midst of thine heart" (Prov. 4:20-21). The Heavenly Father wishes us to live in an attitude of constant regard for His will. He wishes us to understand clearly the underlying principles of His Word. Justice—righteousness—the Golden Rule—"treat others as you would be treated," must guide our conduct and all our dealings with our friends and neighbours. We will find that we need to wait patiently for the Lord while we seek to learn of Him the lesson of applying to our hearts the principles of truth and righteousness contained in His Word.

The patient and careful consideration of the life of our Saviour will also greatly assist us in understanding the will of God for us. The 30 years of Jesus' life, spent in the humble home at Nazareth, previous to His consecration at Jordan, all speaks of a heart fully submitted and patiently waiting for the Father's due time. And what a lovely life that must have been, and how blessed that home where the spotless lamb of God found shelter. "Patient waiting upon God" would seem to be the keynote of our Saviour's life. And then, when our Lord had reached manhood's estate, 30 years under the Law, He came to John at Jordan, and knowing that the time had come to present Himself to God as the ransom-price for man's sin, He came in the spirit of loving submission to His Father's will, and the language of His heart was. "Lo, I come to do Thy will, O God." He had waited patiently for the guidance of the Heavenly Father, and He had come to understand what God wished Him to do; as the Apostle tells us in Heb. 10:5-7, "When He cometh into the world He saith: sacrifice and offering Thou wouldst not, but a body hast Thou prepared me. In burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin Thou hast had no pleasure." Then said I. "Lo, I come to do Thy will, O God." Our Lord realised that the time for offering the real sacrifice for sin had arrived. God had prepared Him a body, and He came to lay down in sacrifice that perfect sinless body that thus He might provide the ransom-price, which in due time would take away the sin of the world.

We note our Lord's course at the time of His consecration when the Holy Spirit was poured out upon Him. Luke 4:

1 reads, "And Jesus being full of the Holy Spirit returned from Jordan, and was led by the spirit into the wilderness." He found it necessary to wait upon God before engaging actively in His ministry. The forty days of fasting in the wilderness would no doubt be spent in prayer and meditation. By the aid of the Holy Spirit just received at Jordan, our Lord sought to understand the best way to begin His ministry. Even the perfect mind of our Saviour needed special preparation for the work before Him. Surely He found wisdom and strength as the result of His patient waiting upon God, for we see how He was enabled to resist the temptations of the Devil, who sought to turn Him aside from the path marked out for Him by Divine wisdom and love. How glad we are that Jesus overcame all the wiles of Satan. Having faithfully withstood temptations, He is, therefore, qualified to be a merciful and faithful High Priest, able to assist us to overcome in all our temptations and trials. Our Lord was strengthened as the result of His having waited upon God. The temptations of Satan served only to establish Him the more completely in the doing of the Father's will. And so we read in Luke 4:14, "And Jesus returned (that is, from the wilderness experience) in the power of the Spirit into Galilee, and there went out a fame of Him through all the region round about, and He taught in their synagogues being glorified of all."

Let this be thy only joy, and thy only comfort, from one sociable kind action without intermission to pass into another, God being ever in thy mind.

WAIT PATIENTLY FOR HIM.

"Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him." (Psa. 37:7.)

We realise that not only at the time of our Lord's consecration, but also right throughout His earthly ministry, He waited continually upon God. That is, He did nothing, undertook nothing in His own name. "I came down from heaven not to do my own Will, but the will of My Father that sent I Me." (Jno. 6:38.) "Verily I say unto you, The Son can do nothing of Himself, but what He seeth the Father do." (Jno. 5:19.) My meat is to do the will of Him that sent me and to finish His work". Expressions like these from "the faithful and true witness," help us to see how Jesus waited patiently for God. His every thought and motive was fully submitted to the will of His Father. Every plan suggesting itself to His mind for consideration must be put to the test. What is the will of God? Is this matter in line with the principles of righteousness? Then, is it in harmony with my consecration vow to sacrifice earthly interests, hopes and ambitions, and faithfully Walk the narrow pathway of self-denial?

Thoughts such as these we believe would be in our Lord's mind as He would continually- be seeking to know and do the Father's will. It was because Christ had such a great love for His Heavenly Father that He sought to do what would be most pleasing in the sight of God. And we are assured that Jehovah appreciated very much the love and obedience of His faithful Son. "The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into His hand." (Jno. 3:35.) And, again—"This is My beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." (Matt. 3:17.) We, too, earnestly desire that Jehovah should be well pleased with us. We may be sure that those found worthy to be joint-heirs with Christ in His Kingdom will include only such as are pleasing in the Father's sight. We must all be purified from all iniquity in order to be made meet for the Master's use. God has pre-determined the characteristics of the Church. We must become at heart, copy-likenesses of Christ, and the effort to attain that degree of character will affect the whole life. The thoughts, the motives, the actions, will, as far as possible, be brought into line with God's will and His law of love.

This work of building character is a very important matter in God's sight. The Heavenly Father is very deeply interested in the progress and development of His children. "The Father himself loveth you," is our Master's assurance. So, when trials and difficulties or perplexities arise, we must not allow these to discourage us. Let us remember the Lord's instruction to wait patiently for Him, and endeavour to be rightly exercised by each lesson as it comes to us, that so we may develop More of the peaceable fruits of righteousness.

Let us not make the same mistake as the Israelites of old. In Psa. 106, we are told how God delivered them from Egypt at the Red Sea by His mighty power. At the time of their deliverance, Israel sang Jehovah's praises and believed in Him, yet they soon forgot His works, and verse 13 says "they waited not for His counsel." This was the point of their failure, they lacked faith, they hearkened not to the voice of the Lord's providences, they heeded not His counsel, but hurried along in the doing of their own will, pleasing themselves. Let us always remember that God's way is the best way; peace, contentment, and satisfaction of heart can be ours only so long as we maintain an earnest, patient and steady effort to do God's will. We are not wise enough to guide ourselves, we are not strong enough to cope with the forces of evil arrayed against us, but our Lord and Saviour, our Captain offers us His guidance and protection.

He invites us to draw near to Him in full assurance of faith, with unwavering confidence in His power and love and goodness. The Lord expects us to trust Him fully. "Without faith it is impossible to please God." Therefore, no matter what difficulty may confront us in the Christian way, let us remember His promise, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee," and again, "My grace is sufficient for thee, for My strength is made perfect in weakness." Thus, trusting and waiting patiently for Him, as we follow His steps in the narrow-way, we will find in Christ a true and unfailing source of strength, wisdom, mercy and grace. (1 Cor. 1:30.)

Truly, Jesus is mighty to save all who put their trust in Him. He saves us not only from the guilt and condemnation of sin, but also from its power. This deliverance or setting free from sin and its service, which, by the Lord's grace, we begin to experience in the present time, will have its complete fulfilment when the whole Body of Christ is changed to be with and like her Lord in the First Resurrection. (Rom. 8:23; Col. 3:4.) That is truly a glorious prospect to look forward to, and it does us good to think sometimes of the future inheritance of the Church, when, united with her Lord in Kingdom power, she shall reign over and bless all mankind.

But the thing that claims our attention now is our preparation for the Marriage of the Lamb. Does our Bridegroom occupy the important place in our hearts? Are we giving Him our best and fullest service? Are we carefully watching and guarding against the encroachments of fleshly or worldly affections or attractions? Are we "patiently waiting for Him"? Perhaps some of us may feel like saying that we have not, in every matter, been as faithful as we would like to have been. If that is so, let us not become discouraged, but rather let us make up our minds that by His grace we will strive to be more faithful in future than we have been in the past.

Let us heed the Apostle's words in Heb. 12:1-3. After reviewing the lives and example of some of God's faithful ones of the past, the Apostle says:—"Seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us; looking unto Jesus." Here we notice that the Apostle mentions four things which he regards as necessary to be observed by those running in the race toward the mark for the prize.

(1) . We should "lay aside every weight"—every hindrance; in the same way that a runner would divest himself of everything likely to hinder his speed, so the Christian should put aside all earthly encumbrances—all Unnecessary worldly cares, that he may make more consistent progress in walking after the spirit.

(2) . The Apostle directs that we lay aside "the sin that doth so easily beset us." What is the easily besetting sin? We believe he refers to the sin of unbelief—or lack of faith. One of the main objects in writing to the Hebrew Christians was to guard them against falling away from Christ through lack of faith, see chapters 3 and 4, 6:11-12; 10:19-23, 35-39; ch. 11; etc. In view of the example of the faithful ones of past ages, let us lay aside the sin that doth so easily beset us—the tendency to doubt or question

God's power and goodness. (Heb. 3:12-14; Eph. 6:16; Heb. 11:6.) How important that we have the right kind of faith—the faith that works by love ! (Gal. 5:6.)

(3) . The third point in this verse is that we run with patience (cheerful endurance, constancy) the race set before us; and as though to assist us in running the race with constant endurance, he points us to the example of our Lord Jesus, and tells us, (4) to look unto Jesus, and consider how He endured patiently the trials and difficulties of the narrow pathway. He did not grow weary in well-doing, but kept on patiently in the doing of the Father's will, even in the face of many oppositions and contradictions of sinners.

In the 12th chapter of Luke's gospel, verses 35-37, the Lord gives an illustration of the attitude He would wish to see manifested in His people. He says—"Let your loins be girded about and your lights burning, and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their lord, when he will return from the wedding, that when he cometh and knocketh they may open unto him immediately." We are to maintain our attitude of patient waiting upon the Lord, and "blessed are those servants whom the Lord when He cometh shall find watching, verily I say unto you, that He shall gird Himself, and make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them."

In writing to the Ephesians, the Apostle directs us to take and put on the whole armour of God that we may be enabled to withstand the trials and temptations of this evil day, and having done all to stand. "Stand, therefore, having your loins girt about with truth." (Eph. 6:14.) Here again we have the thought that we are to maintain our attitude as servants of the truth. We must let our light shine. (Matt. 5:16.) The Lord has given us the knowledge of His truth for the very purpose that we should let the light shine out for the benefit and 'blessing of others. We must not be like the man who hid his one talent in the earth. We must not permit earthly cares to hinder us or prevent us from studying-, God's Word, or from meeting together with others of like precious faith. Just as an earthly child needs food to nourish and strengthen it in body and mind, so we, as New Creatures in Christ Jesus, need to feed upon the Word, to refresh our minds with the promises; and what could be more helpful than the meeting together with those of like precious faith? So then, if we would maintain our attitude of patient waiting for the Lord, we must give careful attention to the directions of His Word.

Surely there are many blessings to be obtained by those who wait patiently for the Lord. In the midst of trial and perplexity, how good it is to draw near to our Heavenly Father and wait upon Him in prayer and seek counsel and guidance from His Word. "Truly my soul waiteth upon God, from Him cometh my salvation. He only is my Rock and my salvation. He is my defence; I shall not be greatly moved." (Psa. 62:1-2.) The Psalmist knew how vain it was to hope for deliverance to come from anyone else than Jehovah. and so he says in Psa. 62:5: "My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from Him," and then in verse 8—"Trust in Him at all times; ye people, pour out your heart before Him, God is a refuge for us." it is because God is all-wise, as well as all-powerful and just and merciful, that we learn to wait patiently for Him, knowing that He will cause all things to work together for our ultimate good and blessing. (Rom. 8:28.)

In Lam. 3:25-26 we have the expression of the prophet Jeremiah, who also had learned the wisdom of waiting patiently for the Lord; he says, "The Lord is good unto them that wait for Him, to the soul that seeketh Him. It is good that a man should both hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord." In the days that lie before us may we each one realise the Lord's rich blessing upon us as we seek to wait patiently for Him; hearkening to the instructions of His Word and following the leadings of His holy spirit. (Jno. 16:13; Rom. 8:14.) Let us remember the Apostle's words to "Set the affections on things above, not on things on the earth," (Col. 3:2), and to cultivate a love for righteousness and truth by thinking on the things that are pure, good, true, just and lovely. (Phil. 4:8). How grand and satisfying will be the ultimate outcome if we persevere in this way, and cease not to wait patiently for the Lord ! It will mean that He will own us as His Bride, His body members, and when He who is our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with Him in glory. (Col. 3:4). In view of that glorious hope, "let us lay aside every weight (every unnecessary worldly care), and the sin which cloth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race set before us, looking unto Jesus."

TRUE WORSHIP AND TRUE SERVICE.

"God is a spirit and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth." (John 4:24.)

THE disposition as expressed by the woman of Samaria still exists. How many different thoughts there are as to how and where, under what arrangements, and under what ministry God must be worshipped. How narrow is the conception of Christ and of the true worship of God. Selkirk seems to have better estimated the matter when he wrote, "Can the human eye contain the sphere of all the sky? God's truth is wider." When mankind comes to know God, to understand His wondrous purposes, and so voluntarily and wholeheartedly "turns to the Lord with one consent," there will be no waiting to consider the various manners, doctrines, and ceremonies of the Anglican or non-conformist churches; there will be just that full spontaneous hallelujah chorus sounding throughout the earth as they adore and "worship Him that liveth for ever and ever, and cast their crowns before the throne, saying, "Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honour and power, for Thou hast created all things, and for Thy pleasure they are and were created.' " Rev. 4:10, 11) "And every creature in heaven and on earth and such as are in the sea and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing and honour and glory and power be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne and unto the Lamb for ever and ever." (Rev. 5:12-13.)

Various sections still think their assembly the only church to worship God in, and that only their ministers are really ministers of Christ. In a previous Anglican Lambeth Conference there had been a disposition to recognise the validity of the ministry of the free churches, and those who have worked hard for the union of the churches had their hopes raised, and were looking for some further encouragement from the Lambeth Conference recently held. These hopes, however, were in vain. The Anglican Church would seem to have swung back to its old sacerdotalism, being evidently controlled by Anglo-Catholic influences. The various Eon-conformist churches are evidently beginning to think on better lines and to wonder whether all the time, thought and expense that have been used to bring about the union of the churches, would not have been better spent in the propagation of the Gospel, which is the real service of the church. After all, there is only one true church, and certainly that is neither Roman nor Anglican, nor any other of human foundation, but the one true Church, of which Christ is Head, the Church which is His Body, organised by Christ and established at Pentecost.

No doubt, it is a good intention that prompts so much effort towards bringing all the various churches to be one united whole, but it appears to be a wrong thought. The several denominations or sections in Christendom have never been Divinely recognised as the Church. They have been the attempts of earnest people, who have appreciated honoured servants of God, such as Luther, Knox, Wesley, Fox, Campbell, etc., to continue in the things taught by these leaders.

Instead of continuing to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ, they seemed to conclude that no more could be learned, and so settled down and put up their creed fence and church rules. Thus, instead of furthering the cause so ardently carried on by their leader, they rather "fettered reason with their rules," and stood in the way of advancing truth. Their organisations are, after all, but of human construction. They are bottles made to hold their own wine, but unable to contain the new wine, as truth unfolds and the Divine purposes become clearer. Those who claim that their section is the only place to worship God, that their humanly ordained clergy are the only ones properly authorised to serve God's people, are like the Samaritans of old, who thought the mount in Samaria where Jacob's well was situated was the right place to worship. The Lord's words are so plain and so full; no humanly constructed system can contain them—"Neither in this mountain nor at Jerusalem, but they that will worship God must worship Him in spirit and in truth." There is no occasion for one sect to condemn another, but let all seek as best they can conceive the Divine Word and Will, to serve God acceptably. And if they perceive that some other gathering of Christian people are having more fruit for their labours than they are, let there be rejoicing that the Word is going forward.

The only unity that Christ prayed for is a unity of Christian individuals, under one head—Christ. There is no thought in our Lord's prayer of forming one big earthly organisation. All true Christians are baptised into one body, into one faith, one hope, in one spirit, and where such meet, in so far as there is that one baptism, there will be found a fellowship, and kinship, a oneness.

The prophet Isaiah says, "When they say a confederacy, say ye not a confederacy." Respecting the union accomplished in Scotland, the "Christian World" says:—"There is no doubt that, in the United Church, the machinery will be better and the financial resources greater, but it does not necessarily follow that the religious life will be deeper and the spiritual power more intense. These things lie beyond machinery. And it may be said here that, so far, the tokens of spiritual quickening and of deepening life are to be found among those who refused to enter the Union."

The only true unity of spirit will be found in those who rise above the trivialities of form and ceremony, and appreciate the fulness and depth, yet simplicity of the teachings of Jesus and the Apostles. Those who come to "stand aile astonished with wonder and gaze on the ocean of love" manifested by God in the giving of His son to suffer and to die, and to perceive the rich provision of His Grace, first for the Church in the exceeding great and precious promises, and then for the world of mankind in the wider promises of His Word, need no human formula nor clergy to guide in worship. They simply find their hearts going out in adoration and praise, and, like the Psalmist, they sing, "I will praise Thee with my whole heart, before the gods will I sing praise unto Thee. I will worship toward Thy Holy Temple and praise Thy name for Thy loving kindness and for Thy truth." (Psalm 138.)

TRUE WORSHIP.

There can be no true worship apart from such a spirit—the spirit of reverential love. The Lord said the greatest command was, "Thou shalt love the Lord Thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul and with all thy mind." "

How much of formalism there has been and still is in connection with churchianity. How easy it seems for many to deceive themselves into thinking they are worshipping God, because they sing hymns and psalms and bow their heads while a minister reads or utters prayers. They have attended a service, they feel they have done what religion required; they have satisfied or appeased God. They have done it more because they were afraid not to do it than because they delighted in or rejoiced in the Lord. Such is not worship; only love of the heart, the soul, the mind, can express true worship. The atrocious teachings still contained in church creeds are so confusing and so dishonouring to God's name that it would be impossible to believe them and to render loving worship to God. It is only when we know God, when we "see the King in His beauty," recognise His wisdom in all His works and in all His requirements, and His love in all His purposes, and His justice in all His arrangements, when we understand His Word which reveals the great benevolent designs of selecting the Church to be joint-heirs with Christ, to share in the work of His Kingdom for "blessing all the families of the earth," and fulfilling the glad angelic message of "good news which shall he to all people," and of making this sin-cursed earth a happy, holy home for all Adam's race, that we can say in spirit and in truth. "O bless the Lord, oh my soul, and let all that is within me bless His holy name."

It matters not about temples made with hands, it matters not about pompous ceremonies or the offices of priests with robes, of printed prayers, of crosses, of bread and wine (falsely claimed, against all evidences and reason, to be changed into the actual flesh and blood of Christ), or of any other humanly circumscribed forms and regulations, if God's love is recognised. The heart will surely find its own expression of reciprocal love, and it is acceptable to God anywhere, everywhere, if in spirit and in truth.

The world is gradually learning how much the Christian religion has been corrupted. History reveals much wickedness among those who have been popes and priests and clergy, and no wonder such fulfilled Peter's prophecy that they would bring in "damnable heresies." What is needed to-day is a discarding of all these errors of churchianity and an enquiring for the old paths, a returning to the simple and beautiful teachings of Jesus and the Apostles. It is a personal matter, for each must get his own heart into a loving, reverential attitude towards God, his own mind satisfied respecting His wisdom, justice and love, and then his whole being will be quickened into service of Him who has a right to "every service I can pay."

True worship does not, then, consist in joining one or another class, but the heart longing to express its loving worship to God will surely seek others of like precious faith with whom to co-operate in fellowship, in worship and in service. Instead, then, of one community labouring to confederate with some other community, let there be more diligence in purifying the doctrine, in getting into true alignment with Christ, in attaining Christlikeness in character and in service, and all who come to love God with all their heart, soul and strength, in simple faith and earnest hope, find they are drawn to each other in bonds of unity, love, joy and peace.

TRUE RELIGION.

True religion is not the doing of mighty deeds of miracles, of healing, speaking with tongues, or even preaching in Christ's name. True religion and undefiled is to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep unspotted from the world. (James 1:27.) The service of Christ requires no great natural talent, the poor and uneducated can as truly serve Him as the cultured and great. A cup of cold water given to one of His disciples will not lose its reward, while some will say, "We have done great works in Thy name," but the Lord will answer, "I know you not."

True service must be prompted, as true worship, by love. "Though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries and all knowledge, and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains and have not love, I am nothing. And though I bestow all my goods to Feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not love, it profiteth me nothing.- (1 Con 13:2-3.)

Christian service, or the Christian way, is simple. If it is a hardship, then it is not true Christian service. It must be a loving desire to serve the Lord and His dear people; a pleasure to do good, to bring joy to the weary and sad, comfort to the sorrowing, light to them that are in gloom.

True, real service, like true worship, must spring spontaneously from a heart full of loving devotion. Real religion means a deep appreciation of the beauty, the excellence, the benevolence of the Lord, which produces a thorough devotion to the Divine will, a daily living to serve and please God. The Pharisee could stand in due form, in the recognised place of prayer, in the temple of God, but his prayer was a self recommendation, there was no love, but of self, in it, but, in another picture, we have true worship and real sacrificial service. The Pharisee had invited the Master to his home, for a feast in His honour. As they took their places at the table, a woman entered and stood at the Master's feet. She fairly bathed His feet with her tears, wiped them with her hair, and broke a very costly box of ointment which she poured upon His feet. What it cost her did not matter, she had been forgiven, lifted up by One who, instead of scorning her for her sins, had sympathetically restored her, given her the joys of restored favour of God, and put her on her feet, and made life worth living again. How could she express her feeling of gratitude? Oh, happy occasion, here was the opportunity ! Others could he-grudge the expense, and criticise her action, and say what she ought to have done with her money, but no expense, no, not life itself, would be too much to express properly her love for Him. He, so differently from everyone else, had looked upon her with pity and sympathy, instead of with scorn and insult, and had raised her out of her unhappy condition. Much had been forgiven, so she loved much, and there in that home at Bethany was a demonstration of true worship and true service, flowing from a heart overwhelmed with loving thankfulness and appreciation of the perfect and beautiful character of her Lord.

Such is the way to worship in spirit and in truth, never mind where or how, in this mountain, or at Jerusalem, or wherever two or three are gathered together in the Lord's name, or maybe in lonely and unseen service, or in the solitude of one's own room. True worship, real service, is not dependent upon one's being associated with any church or society; it depends upon how far one appreciates God's pardoning grace and wonderful love, how far one is living in full devotion to Him who so loved "the world of sinners lost and ruined by the Fall."

In full and glad surrender I give myself to Thee Thine utterly and only,
And evermore to be.
Son of God who lovest me,
will be Thine alone,
And all I have and all I am
Shall henceforth be Thine own,
My Lord hath met my longing
With word of golden tone,
That I shall serve forever
Himself, Himself alone.
'Shall serve Him'—and 'for ever !'
Oh hope, most sure, most fair!
The perfect love outpouring,
In perfect service there.

PEOPLE'S PAPER. April 1st, 1931

PEOPLES PAPER.

Published by the Berean Biblical Institute, at National Bank Chambers, 226 Glenferrie Rd., Hawthorn, Melbourne E 2. (Monthly) 2/6 per annum, post paid,

While it is our intention that these columns be used for teachings strictly in accord with the Lord's Word, we cannot accept responsibility for every expression used, either in the correspondence or in the sermons reported,

"KEEP THE DOOR OF MY LIPS."

ONE great mark of character development is demonstrated by the control of the words of our mouths. How much trouble, discord and disintegration of companies of the Lord's people has been brought about 'by word of mouth. The Apostle Paul admonishes, "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers." Viewing the Apostle's statement, we see clearly that this admonition is very applicable to many religious people to-day. How many there are who do injury to their fellow creatures with their words and use the same tongue in offering praise to God.

We know of no evil to which God's people are more exposed. than to the wrongful use of the tongue. With many it is as natural to gossip as it is to breathe; they do it unconsciously, and many are the peculiar methods which the fallen nature will use in its attempt to stifle conscience, and yet maintain the use of this channel. long after it has been driven from evil practices, which are less common, less popular, though more generally recognised as sinful. It will say, I do not mean any harm to anyone, but I must have something to talk about, and nothing is so interesting to friends and neighbours as something which has a gossipy flavour connected with it. Hence it is that the Scriptures instruct us, "Let your conversation be such as becometh saints." "Let your speech be with grace seasoned with salt, that ye may know how ye ought to answer every Man."

Those of the gossiping disposition. however refined their methods and words, well know that. so far from the gossip ministering grace to the hearer, it ministers evil; that the hearer is impelled by the forces of his fallen nature to go quickly and tell it further. Fallen natures feast on just such things, feeling the more liberty to do so, because they delude themselves that thus they are preaching against sin, and that in discussing and denouncing the said matters as being transgressions of another, they are mentioning subjects abhorrent to their righteous souls. How- defective are the reasonings of the weak human nature. when the counsels in righteousness of the Lord's Word are ignored. There is a wide scope for conversation among Christian people on the subject of the riches of God's grace in Christ Jesus expressed in His Word, and in these things we have that which not only ministers grace to the hearer, but which adds also grace to the speaker. Such conversation showers blessings on every hand, so far as the new creature. is concerned, and assists in deadening the old nature with its evil desires, tastes and appetites.

This is what the Apostle no doubt had in mind when he said that the Lord's people should "show forth the praises of Him. who called us out of darkness into His marvellous light." And a heart filled with the spirit of love, the spirit of God, the spirit of the truth and overflowing at the mouth, will be sure to overflow that which is within, for "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." A mouth, therefore, which does injury to others, either to fellow-members of "the Body of Christ," or to those that are without, indicates an evil heart, implies that the heart is not pure.

Another excuse for gossip about other men's matters is offered by some who say they can talk about religious matters to those who are religiously inclined, but when they are with worldly people or professors of religion who take no interest in Christian themes, they must be agreeable and accommodating. and must at least hear their gossip and and if they do not share in such conversation. they would be considered very peculiar, and their company would not be desired. But this is one of the peculiarities of the saints. They are not only to be different from the world, but different also from the nominal professors of religion. Their religion is not merely to be on the surface, and on one day of the week, and under a certain suit of clothes. but is to be of the heart, related to all the affairs of life, for every day and every moment. To follow strictly the Divine injunction will indeed separate them from some who are now their friends, and who love things of the world, forbidden to those who have become sons of God, and who have received of His spirit. That time Lord intended us to know this, is evident from the fact that He foretold that the way of discipleship would be a "narrow way." If, therefore, one's failure to be an entertaining visitor, neighbour or friend is because of one's fidelity as a new creature to the law of Christ - love which "worketh no ill to his neighbour," either in word or deed, and friendships are lost on this account, then, indeed, such have cause for rejoicing, because they are suffering a little, experiencing a loss for Christ and righteousness' sake. The loss may at first seem heavy, but if it is endured for Christ's sake in obedience to His righteous law of love, such will soon be able to say with the Apostle that such losses are "light afflictions" not worthy to be compared with the off-setting blessings..

It is in harmony with this that the Scriptures declare that the friendship of this world signifies enmity with (God).

Galatians 4:4.) God has purposely placed the matter in such a position that His people must take their choice, and lose either the Divine friendship and fellowship, or the worldly friendship, because those things the Lord loves are distasteful to the worldly, and those things the worldly love. evil deeds. evil thoughts. and evil speaking, are an abomination in the sight of the Lord. "For, as He which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation." (1 Pet. 1:15.)

CHRIST OUR PASSOVER.

By Rebecca Fair Doney.

In the dark night, when Egypt lay asleep,
Forth went the angel, God's command to keep:
Slay all the first-born, even from the throne,
Down through the realm to the humblest home.

Swift was his work; and on the midnight air,
Oh, what a cry of anguish and despair
Rose, from the hearts of those in every home:
God's word was sure; the last great plague had come.

But in the homes of Israel, what a sight!
Darkness without, in every dwelling, light.
Clad for a journey; shoes upon their feet;
With staff in hand, a solemn feast they eat.

Their father's God had heard their cries at last:
His time had come; their bondage now was past;
So in that night while Egypt mourned her dead,
They ate the lamb with bitter herbs and bread.

But why this blood we see on every door?
Why does the angel, seeing, pass it o'er?
Israel's first-born in Egypt's danger shared;
And only through that blood could they be spared.

Centuries passed; and still by God's command,
Each year they slew, and ate the paschal lamb.
Not that its blood could for their sins atone,
But as a type of One that yet should come.

That sinless One, who, hanging on a tree,
Bore all earth's sins, to set the prisoners free;
That righteous One, that perfect Lamb of God,
Who for the world gave His most precious blood.

Our blessed Lord, with those whom He loved best,
On that last night, sat down to keep the feast.
"With great desire," He told His chosen few,
"Have I desired to eat this feast with you."

"My heart is grieved; for I betrayed shall be "
By one of you, My chosen company."
"Lord, is it I"? each asked in trembling tone,
"Nay, Lord, we'll die with Thee!" cried everyone.

But in great sorrow, still our Lord did say,
"One shall deny; another shall betray;
All be offended, and flee unto their own—
But for My Father, I should be alone."

After the feast, He took the Cup, and said
"Drink ye of it, for you My blood was shed.
I drink no more, until I drink with you,
In that glad day, when we shall drink it new."

Then blessed the bread, and as each one did take,
"This is My body, broken for your sake."
Oft as ye drink this wine, and eat this bread
Ye do show forth the suffering of your Head.

Bearing the whole world's load of guilt and shame,
Knowing His own would soon deny His name;
Knowing, by God, He would forsaken be,
Thus our Lord went to His Gethsemane.

And still that sacred feast down through the years,
Thy saints commemorate with holy tears.
Keeping the words of Him, who said,
"This do In mem'ry of My dying love for you."

In this dark night, Lord, we Thy first-borns meet,
With staff in hand and shoes upon our feet.
Thy precious blood is sprinkled on our hearts;
Thy broken body life to us imparts.

Come, dearest Lord, and bless us while we feast;
Around this board, be Thou our honoured Guest.
We eat, and drink, and here our vows renew;
Oh to our vows, Lord, keep us ever true!

All earthly hopes and joys, behind us lay;
Lord, we would walk with Thee, the narrow way.
What is earth's joys and what its glittering dross?
We gladly leave it all for Thy dear cross.

Thy matchless sacrifice doth us afford,
A chance to share Thy sufferings, dearest Lord.
Broken with Thee, we claim this privilege rare,
That in Thy joys we may obtain a share.

On this Atonement Day, we would lay down
Upon the altar, Lord, beside Thine own,
Our sacrifice; it is so very small;
Take, Lord, and offer it; it is our all.

Day after day, our testings, Lord, increase:
This side the veil, we know they must not cease.
Scourging or sword, or flames, whate'er it be,
Help us, dear Lord, in our Gethsemane.

The bitter cup that to Thy lips was pressed,
We, too, would drain, nor shrink at bitterness.
These marks of sonship share with our dear Head;
To live with Thee, we must with Thee be dead.

We'll take the cup tho' filled with grief and pain;
Drink the last drop, and, dying, drink again;
Oh wondrous joy! this time, the cup shall be
The cup of life, and immortality.

Lord, we have had a blessed feast with Thee;
Now we go forth that we may tested be.
Help us, that we do not our Lord betray;
When .Satan tries to sift, Lord, for us pray.

Some solemn night, mid scenes of dread and woe,
While the fierce winds from every quarter blow;
While passions rage, and tempests onward sweep,
Their last memorial, Thy saints shall keep.

They may be few who gather round the board;
Many, be entered into their reward.
Praising the One who led them safely home;
Waiting, until the marriage hour shall come.

Some, weary grew, before the fight was o'er;
Some, through offence, would walk this way no more.
Zealous awhile, methinks, they did run well,
But at the test of Love, they stumbled—fell.

Those who are left, the last of Thy dear "feet,"
Keep the last feast before the mercy seat;
Gathering strength for what before them lies,
When they complete in death, their sacrifice.

Some glorious morn the angelic host shall sing!
Some glorious morn the bells of heaven ring!
The Church of Christ has passed her trial stage;
Eternal bliss is hers from Age to Age.

Before His Father's throne, with love and pride,
Christ shall present His perfect, spotless Bride.
The feast begins; the marriage hour has come;
Christ and His faithful, are forever One.

On that blest day, the Bridegroom shall sit down,
With His dear Bride beside Him, on the throne.
To share His joys; to see His blessed face;
In that blest throng, oh Lord, give us a place.

Correspondence

Queensland. Dear Brother,

I have been wanting to write to you for some time desiring to know of your welfare in that far-away land. There is one thing certain, being in the Lord's service you will be well cared for. We see very little of the brethren here except as we have fellowship through the mail.

It appears there is another new thought sprung up about the Tabernacle. It is stated that Bro. Russell made a great mistake over the two goats in the "Tabernacle Shadows." They say the Lord's goat in no sense represents the "little flock." The bullock offering was for the High Priest and his own house, i.e., the little flock. The goat was still the Lord offering Himself, one offering in two parts—first for our sins, then for the sins of the whole world of mankind. They quote Isa. 53 and John's Gospel, "Behold the Lamb of God," and in Heb., "For by one offering He hath put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself."

I would very much like to be with you over there, but will have to wait on the Lord, and do what little I can here. I would enjoy very much to have a few lines from you whenever you have the time to spare.

With Christian love,

Your fellow servant by the Lord's grace,

B.T.

[The teachings referred to as being new have been specially abroad for the past 20 years, but the views have been held by Christians for many years previously. It is true that. Isaiah 53 and John's expression, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world," both refer to Jesus, but we, as Christians, are exhorted to "follow the Lamb whithersoever He may lead," and Paul so clearly shows that we are baptised into Christ's death, and have the privilege of "walking in His steps," as it is written, "for Thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter." (Romans 8:36.)

Brother Russell, like all human writers, made some mistakes, "let him that is perfect cast the first stone." Few writing so voluminously on so many deep truths have made less mistakes. To us it is beautiful the way the types in Leviticus 16 are explained in his "Tabernacle Shadows."

We cannot see any reason for the two sacrifices, i.e., the bullock and the Lord's goat if they both refer to the same thing. When, however, we see the wonderful "mystery which had been hidden from ages," how the church-members become joint-heirs with Christ and, therefore, must first "suffer with Him"; "if we be dead with Him we shall also live with Him," then the picture is a beautiful prophecy in type. How clear it is that the precious blood of Christ is applied only for the Church during this Gospel age. "There is now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus" (Romans 8:1), but the "whole world still lieth in the wicked one." They are still under the condemnation to death on account of Adam's sin. Therefore, the blood of Jesus has not been applied for them; no, for Heb. 9:24 says "He appears in heaven for us."

Then the blood has bought us and the merit of Christ is applied to cover all our blemishes, so we have been able to yield up to God our justified lives, and have been begotten to the spirit nature; to be with Christ and to be like Him. (1 John 3:1-2.)

We simply yield up to God what Jesus purchased for us, we give back what we received—the purchase price for the life of the human race—and it is then applied during the next age (Christ's Kingdom Age) for all mankind.

The Church needed the redemption price first, so that they could have something to sacrifice, something to offer to God (Romans 12:1) that could be acceptable. Thus it is that Heb. 13:12-13 exhorts us to follow

Jesus ("to drink of His cup, as we are baptised with His baptism"), who suffered without the camp that He might sanctify the people ("by the which will we have been sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus." —Heb. 10:10). As the bullock was carried outside the gate, "let us, therefore, go forth unto Him without the camp, bearing His reproach, for here (in this human condition) we have no abiding city, but we seek one to come." "By Him, therefore, let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is the fruit of our lips giving thanks to His name."

So, then, while we surrender our human lives unto death, to be buried with Christ—to die with Him—it must not be done grudgingly as though we would rather not, but, gladly appreciating our privilege, we render thanks to God for the opportunity, and so our sacrifice will be accompanied with praise, just as the incense was offered with the blood in the Most Holy, in the Tabernacle Types.]

New South Wales. 10th March, 1931.

Dear Brethren,

Your letter, also tracts, came duly to hand. Thanks very much for same, and, although the night to me seems to be getting darker, and the grains of wheat getting scarce, I am not going to faint by the way. I have not the slightest doubt but that the work being done now will bear fruit later on, but there are so few who seem to grasp the high calling.

I find people who can quote Scripture from Genesis to Revelation and they know nothing about it. No doubt it would be encouraging to know if there was any response, and if I thought I was the cause of only one grain of wheat being gathered into the Master's barn, my joy would be full, but as all praise belongs to the Lord I am not looking for any. My field is a large one, meeting people in the trains from different parts of the State, and I never miss a chance, some of the people travelling seeming to be interested. Although -- is one of the largest suburbs in the State I am not expecting to do much here, but time will tell.

Hoping I have not encroached too much on your time, sincerely yours with much Christian love, M.G.

New South Wales. Dear Brother,

Enclosed postal note, kindly renew subscriptions to "Heralds" addressed to, and also to myself at above address; also for "People's Paper" for one year. Send "Daniel's Prophecy," for which I think you have some credit.

I would like some tracts if you have them to spare, especially the February 1st, "Upon the Earth Distress with Perplexity." I think that one is right up-to-date, and would like 50 of these. Place balance of money to Tract Fund or wherever you think best.

With Christian regards, yours in the Master's service, J.E.

Dear Friend,

No doubt you have been expecting to hear from me long since. I'm enclosing to meet my subscriptions, which are long overdue. Bad times have delayed me a little in sending it; however, I hope to send a little more shortly to help to spread the good tidings. What confusion in the world to-day! More division of opinion on current matters than ever I knew. What relief and peace of mind to know what is to follow. If you have them, please send half a dozen copies of "People's Paper" of February 1st. If not, anything in the pamphlet line hearing on "Distress with Perplexity."

Kindest regards, yours faithfully P.A.W.

[A good supply of the above-mentioned tract is on hand, and all who can use them to advantage and desire to cooperate in the work are invited to send for these or others on different topics. Let us work while it is yet day, for a night cometh when no man can work.—John 9:4.]

CHRIST'S LIFE ON EARTH.

REPLY TO PROFESSOR

London, 19th February.

Rev. Thomas Nightingale, on behalf of the National Council of Free Churches, has issued a dramatic denunciation of Professor Eisler's book, "Christ's Life on Earth," He says it is the work of a hostile Jew attempting to account for the Resurrection and putting the best face he can on the treatment of Jesus by his countrymen. Dr. Eisler, he adds, admits that the book contains nothing more than a hypothetical reconstruction. It starts by postulating a theory, and builds it up to suit his own purpose.

"I believe," Rev. T. Nightingale says, "experts will not find it difficult to reduce the theories to their proper value. Even supposing the text of Josephus is authentic, the whole of Dr. Eisler's work involves a reconstruction which is largely imaginary. This kind of thing is attempted again and again. and Christianity remains."

Dr. Mingana, of Ryland's Library, Manchester, the chief authority on Josephus, says there are only two references to Christ in the recognised edition of Josephus, and leading authorities are unanimous that both are medieval forgeries.

WHERE LIGHT IS NEEDED.

"I was speaking a little time ago," says Rev. M. E. Aubrey, M.A., Secretary of the Baptist Union, in a speech reported in the "London City Mission Magazine," "to a man who knows more, I think, of the lives of University students than any other man. He said that before the war any student who came from a Christian home was assumed to have a working knowledge of the Bible. Not long ago, after speaking to a class on a subject in which David was referred to, one student came up to him and said he was interested, 'but who was that chap, David, anyhow?'"

This recalls to the editor of the City Mission Magazine the story of an American visitor who heard a sermon from a lay preacher in this country. The subject had been "The Cities of the Plain." The grateful hearer went into the vestry to thank the preacher for telling him something he never knew before. "Before I heard you this morning, sir," he said, "I always understood that Sodom and Gomorrah were man and wife!"

HEBREW SPOKEN IN PALESTINE.

A well-known and learned Christian missionary in Palestine writes, us:—"Even Moslems are learning to speak Hebrew, and to speak it well. A good many Christians have during the past few years got enough for all business purposes. I once travelled beside a chauffeur for a whole half-hour speaking Hebrew, and did not know that he was not a Jew till he used an Arabic idiom,"—"British Weekly."

YOUR REDEMPTION DRAWETH NIGH.

“Come, My people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast. For, behold, the Lord cometh out of His place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity; the earth also shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain”—Isa.26:.20,

THERE is an affectionate tenderness about these words of our Heavenly Father which helps us to realise His great love for I His people, and His special care over them. But, while appreciating very gratefully this special love and care in the comfort, encouragement and protection afforded us by our Heavenly Father in the world's great tribulation, we would come far short of having His Spirit if we should regard the matter with self-complacency, forgetful of His great love for the world also. This love, veiled behind the clouds of His righteous indignation against their sins, in wisdom strikes the heavy blow which will shatter all their idols and humble their pride in the dust, so that the sore wounds of His wrath may prepare them for their everlasting healing.

If God so loved the world as to give His -Only Begotten Son, “that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish (eternally), hut have everlasting life,” He loves them still, and it is His love that wields the rod for their correction. He also would have His people so regard His judgments; and while they rejoice in the sunshine of His favor, -because by faith they have come into an attitude which can receive it, He would have them share His spirit toward the world; and while the blows of -His righteous indignation fall heavily upon the world, He would have us point them to the cause of their calamities and to the only remedy—”In returning (to God) and rest (in Him alone) shall ye he saved; in quietness and in confidence shall he your strength.” Be still,” saith the Lord, “and know that I am God; I will be exalted among the nations, I will be exalted in the earth.”—Isa. 30:15; Psa. 46:10.

But who are those whom the Lord is pleased to designate by the endearing name, “My people?” Does this class include every one upon whom His name is named? -No , for that would include a great number of false professors. as the Psalmist expresses it, it includes all those who have made a covenant with God by sacrifice (Psa. 50:5)—all the consecrated and faithful children of God, however young or weak they may be, whose hearts are fixed firmly and resolutely to be truly loyal and obedient children by His assisting grace.

To be numbered among the children of God is a great privilege; but it means much more than many seem to understand--much more both on their part and on God's part. On their part, it signifies, not merely a name to live in some great organisation which bears the Christian name, but that they have become sons and heirs of God through Christ; that they have fully consecrated themselves to God to follow in the footsteps of His dear Son; that they have renounced the vain pomp and glory of the world and have solemnly covenanted to live apart from its spirit, ambitions, hopes and aims; and not only so, but that in pursuance of that covenant, they are striving daily to be faithful, and meekly to take up their cross and follow their Leader and Head, Christ Jesus.

On God's part it signifies the fulfilment of all His gracious promises to such through Christ, both for the life that now is and for that which is to come. It signifies that in the present life we have His Fatherly love, care, discipline, counsel, teaching, protection and encouragement to the end; and that afterwards we shall be received into His glorious presence, and into everlasting rest, joy and peace. Oh, how blessed to be the people of God! even in the present life the reward of His favor is -beyond computation.

THE "SECRET PLACE" OF HIS SAINTS.

The place of hiding is "The secret place of the Most High," "under the shadow of the Almighty" (Psa. 91:1-9). This secret place of the Most High is the place of intimate communion and fellowship with God, through the blessed privilege of prayer and through faith in His precious Word and His promised providential care.

"When all around our souls give way,
He then is all our hope and stay."

Oh, how precious is this hiding place! What rest and refreshment we find in the midst of the commotion that is even now bestirring the whole world—rest from the pride and folly of men in their abortive efforts to readjust the present unsatisfactory social order; and rest from the strife of tongues in their equally vain attempt to evolve the clear principles of truth and righteousness from the present confusion of human traditions (Psa. 31:20). Here we find rest, peace, light and joy, which the world cannot give nor take away.

Few indeed are those who can understand our motives in thus withdrawing from the world and from the various organisations of the nominal Christian Church, to walk alone with God; and many are the reproaches which such must endure for His name's sake. But fear not; "shut thy doors (of faith) about thee," and heed not the reproaches; turn a deaf ear to them, and "Sanctify the Lord of Hosts Himself, and let Him be your fear, and let Him be your dread" (Isa.

8:13); and, "Above all, take (for the conflict before you) the shield of faith. wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked" (Eph. 6:16). "And this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."—1 John 5:4.

It is to inspire such a faith as this that the Lord has offered us, in addition to all His precious promises. so many encouragements to simple, childlike trust in Him, and that He has bidden us to turn a deaf ear to the reproaches of man, saying, "Hearken unto . ye that know righteousness, the people in whose heart My Law; fear ye not the reproach of men, neither be afraid of their revilings. . . even I, am He that comforted] you; who art thou, that thou shouldest ,he afraid of a man that shall die and of the son of man that shall be made as grass; and forgettest the Lord thy Maker, that has stretched forth the heavens, and laid the foundations of the earth; and hast feared continually every day because of the fury of the oppressor, as if he were ready to destroy? . . . I have put My Words in thy mouth, and I have covered thee in the shadow of Mine hand, that I may plant the Heavens [establish the new Heavens], and lay the foundations of the earth [the new earth], and say unto Zion [the people tried and proved by these afflictions to be the worthy heirs of the new Kingdom—the new Heavens and earth], Thou art My People."—Isa. 51:7, 12, 13, 16.

“While the storm of trouble which is to engulf the whole world will affect all men, both individually and collectively, the Lord’s people, who seek only to draw yet closer to Him, entering more fully into the secret place of communion and fellowship and rest in Him, and shutting the doors of faith about them, will be safely hidden from the alarm and fear and trembling that will take hold upon all other classes. And while they patiently endure its effects upon their temporal interests, they will rejoice not only in the knowledge of God’s overruling providence, in the whirlwind and in the storm as well as in the calms of life, but also in His blessed assurance that His wrath will be thus revealed only “for a little moment.” and then will His righteous Kingdom be manifested in power and great glory, and they “shall shine forth as the sun.”—Matt. 13:43.

RETRIBUTION FOR WILFUL SIN.

Verse 21 seems to refer to the operation of the principle of justice in God’s judgments upon the world. The Heavenly Father stands for justice, and He has appointed that all of His mercy shall be exercised through the Lord Jesus Christ. Our Lord will be specially identified with the trouble upon the nations, but it will not be so much His work as the Father’s. The time of trouble is called the Day of Jehovah. We read that “In that day His feet shall stand upon the Mount of Olives,” and that there shall be a great earthquake.— Zech. 14:4.

While God has done nothing for mankind during the past six thousand years, but has rested so far as any work of restitution is concerned, yet in some instances He has interfered to prevent the spread of evil, as in the case of the Amalekites and of the Sodomites. The Scriptures seem to indicate that in the end of this Age, He will intervene in the affairs of mankind. and execute justice in the time of trouble.

In the Scriptures, justice is represented as calling for retribution. The blood of the murderers’ victims is said to cry for vengeance. Whether the sin has been literal murder, or has been some injustice which has led to crime or suicide, justice will require of humanity this much of retribution on this score. Justice demands that the children of Adam shall suffer. The Church of Christ is a separate class, taken out from the world and having their sins forgiven: They are upholders of truth and righteousness.

But this time of trouble coming upon the world will be the time when justice will get its dues, so to speak. Justice will take its “pound of flesh.” It will requite for the more or less wilful sins of humanity. The class that has reaped the benefit of the spoliation of the poor in the past, will have to pay some of the toll to justice in squaring the accounts.

The Apostle James says, “Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for the miseries that shall come upon you.” We are not to think, however, that in this present time God is dealing with the rich. None are on trial now except the Church of Christ. ‘The others are merely the world of mankind, one part of which God will permit to wreak a measure of vengeance on the other part. But man’s extremity will be God’s opportunity. His appointed time for the establishment of His Kingdom will have come, and He will cause this wrath of man to work out good for humanity.

Those who are causing this trouble to come on are not aware of what they are doing. But when satisfaction shall have been made to justice, Messiah’s Kingdom will interpose. We read that “except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved.” This exacting of a penalty for such sins as we have enumerated is not at all in conflict with the Bible teaching that Christ died for sin. Jesus pays the sin-debt of the world.

The sin-debt of the world was a death penalty. Unless the Lord Jesus had met that penalty, the world would never be released. That death penalty would have remained upon the world, without any injustice in any way. The selfishness which has led to murder is, however, over and above the sin of Adam, the penalty of which was met by our Lord. Whoever has, through injustice, been responsible for murderous conditions is held responsible for those conditions.

We read that in the end of the Jewish Age our Lord said that God would require from that generation a reckoning for all the righteous blood shed from the time of Abel down (Mat. 23:35). And the trouble which came upon the Jewish nation in the end of their Age fully settled that account. They had light and knowledge, and thus were held responsible. They were obliged to suffer because of the injuries that were not only perpetrated by some, but endorsed or winked at by others.

LIGHT AND RESPONSIBILITY.

In the close of this Age, it would seem, the judgment of the Lord will be upon Christendom, which has had much light, although at times only a refracted light. But a measure of responsibility has come with it, and apparently the Lord's edict is that they shall not escape the penalty. From this generation He will require all the righteous blood shed during this Age, upon it, even as He did from the Jews in the end of their Age. This will cause the great time of trouble here, as it did there. So far as the world is concerned, they may not perceive the relationship between this time and the past. We know only from the Scriptures. God gives us this understanding, that we may have the greater poise and comfort of mind.

In thinking of the nature of the tribulation at the end of this Age, we are first of all to remember that it is a tribulation coining upon the world and the hypocrites. The Lord tells us that if we are faithful, we shall not come into the condemnation coining upon the world. The intimation is that those who are not faithful enough to be members of the Little Flock will come into this condemnation with the world. So the Lord tells us of some who will be appointed their portion with the hypocrites—Matt. 24:51.

Only the wheat class constitute the Church of Christ. Only they will be gathered into the 'barn (Matt. 13:30). The tare class will undergo this time of trouble coining upon the world. The hypocrite class will include the rich of this world. These are addressed by St. James, 5:1-6. In these verses the Apostle is turning aside from his line of thought. Then he addresses the Church again. The trouble will be especially hard on the rich, who are represented as weeping and howling for misery.

The Great Company class is typically represented by the scapegoat of Israel's Atonement lay ceremonies. The -bullock typifies our Lord Jesus, and the Lord's goat His faithful followers (Heb. 13:11-13). After the faithful ones have finished their course, then something will be done with the scapegoat—the Great Company. The account in Leviticus is very definite that the high priest will then lay upon the head of the scapegoat all the iniquities of all Israel (Lev. 16:21). All the sins of all the people were laid upon the head of the scapegoat, that it might bear them away—make full satisfaction. As has been declared, God has made provision for the cancellation of original sin through Christ, and has made arrangements for the satisfaction of justice, so far as all the other sins of the world are concerned, through the Great Company class.

There is a correspondency -between the end of the Jewish Age and the end of this Gospel Age in this way. As expiation for the taking of the life of Jesus was required of the Jewish nation, so at the end of the Gospel Age the sacrificed life of the Church will, in a measure, be required of nominal Spiritual Israel.

The Lord seems to give this suggestion, when He says that "The -blood of all the prophets, which was shed from the foundation of the world, may be required of this generation; from the blood of Abel unto the blood of Zacharias, which perished between the altar and the temple: verily, I say unto you, it shall be required of this generation." (Luke 11:50, 51). These words of our Lord were actually fulfilled at the close of the Jewish Age. So in the end of this Age there are certain things charged up against Christendom for their evil deeds. This will include all the persecutions of this Gospel Age, including also, presumably, all the persecutions against the Jews. Therefore, the Scriptures indicate that a great time of trouble similar to that which came upon the Jewish nation in the year 70 will now come upon all Christendom in the closing days of this Age.

Speaking of this trouble at the end of the Gospel Age, our Lord said, "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand - before the Son of Man." (Luke 21:36). Again (verse 28) He said, "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." "My people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors."

How much trouble there will be in our passing into the secret "chambers," in passing unto the Lord, we do not know. Whatever the experiences may be, all of the Lord's faithful people will 'be joyful in that they will have the thought of being so soon forever with the Lord. We can rejoice even as did St. Stephen.

"FEAR NOT."

Isa. 43:5.

Fearest thou the way before thee? Seemeth it to thee That the journey all untrodden Dark and rough must be?

Shrink not from the dread to-morrow; Take thy rest to-night- God may show a brighter pathway In the morning light.

CONVENTION NEWS FROM SOUTH AUSTRALIA

THE Easter Convention at Adelaide was again a season of spiritual refreshment and blessing. we believe, to all present. True to His promise the Lord's blessing was surely with us as we met around His Word with earliest desire to do His will and partake of His blessings.

On the Thursday evening we met to keep the memorial of our Saviour's death, and once again we were reminded of the great love of God which provided the Lamb that taketh away the sin of the world. We were also reminded again of the love of Christ, who willingly gave Himself to be man's Redeemer, and who for the joy set before Him endureth the cross, despising the shame. How full of deep and solemn meaning is this simple remembrance which our dear Lord has enjoined upon us to observe each year at the appropriate season. It reminds us again of our consecration vow to lead to self and to live unto God, for only if we suffer with Him can we hope to share in the glory of His Kingdom; only if we are dead with Him can we hope to live with Him. Then in the type the seven days' feast of unleavened bread shows how the consecrated Christian is to continually feed upon the pure unleavened bread of truth, as says the Apostle--"Christ our passover (Lamb) is slain for us, therefore let us keep the feast."

The Convention meetings commenced on the Good Friday with a Bible Study on Eph. 6:10-18. In these verses the Apostle reminds us that God has provided a protection for His people. and we need to put on the whole armour of God so that we may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. The line pieces of defensive armour are presented to us—the girdle of truth representing that we have pledged ourselves in our consecration to be servants of the truth, the girdle being an emblem of "servitude" or "diligence." The breastplate of righteousness represents our justification through the merit of the precious blood of Christ. Having the feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace suggests the necessity for careful preparation that our service for the truth may be rendered in a right spirit of love, meekness, gentleness and patience, and so minister a blessing to others. The shield of faith must not be forgo; our confidence must be in God and in His promises, and in His mighty power to help us. The helmet of salvation would represent that a clear understanding of the teachings of the Word is a necessary part of the Christian armour. We must understand the Word of God in order to have a proper hope. The sword of the spirit, which is the Word of God, being mentioned last, suggests that we need some experience in the Christian pathway, before we are prepared to use the sword aright. In conjunction with the armour, the Apostle urges the necessity for earnest persevering prayer.

On the Saturday and Sunday the study of Phil. 2:1-16 engaged our attention. Here the Apostle exhorts us to love and unity, and lowliness of mind, keeping before us the example of Christ who humbled Himself in order to become our Redeemer, and was obedient even unto the death of the cross. Because of such obedience God has highly exalted our Lord and given Him a name above every name, and so we should strive to work out our salvation with great carefulness, and to live the true Christian life as good examples in the midst of the twisted, perverse conditions of this present evil world.

The Bible Study on the Easter Monday was from Phil. 3:8-14. These verses give us a glimpse of the earnestness of Paul in his effort to follow in the steps of Jesus. He would count earthly gain but loss for Christ's sake. His one ambition was to win Christ to know Christ to experience the power of His resurrection, to share in His sufferings, to be dead with Him as a member of His body in sacrificial death, that he might also share in the likeness of His resurrection. Paul's singleness of purpose is worthy of imitation: he would forget the things of the world and earnestly press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling. This mark for the prize would be the mark of character-likeness, to Christ we are to be conformed to the image of Him. and to this end we, like Paul, should count all things else as loss and dross, and so run that we might, by the Lord's grace, reach the mark and gain the prize— the immortal crown, Addresses given by various brethren assisted toward the general helpfulness of the meetings. "Vigilance," and "Perilous Times," were the topics chosen by two brothers, who exhorted us to earnest watchfulness in view of the many snares and allurements of the Christian way. A discussion on "Christian Warfare." What? Where? When? also proved to be helpful, showing that the Christian warfare is a fight of the spiritual mind against the natural mind. and we must exercise perseverance and determination and a good strong faith if we would gain the victory. It is not by might nor by power, but be the Lord's spirit that we are enabled to overcome. When we are weak in our own strength then we may be strong in the Lord and in the power of this might. A symposium on the "Love, of God." the "Love of Christ." and "Love of the brethren" and an exhortation "Fear not Little Flock," as well as addresses from Ezek. 14:2)-)3. and Heb. 13:9: "Be not carried about with divers and strange doctrines," gave added interest to the meetings. In the closing address, our brother dwelt upon the Apostle's words. "It is a good thing that the heart be established with grace." We should not be carried about with new and fanciful teachings. but rather seek to be established in that which we know and have proved to be the truth. We should "grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

The Adelaide and Gawler Classes appreciated having with us some six or seven brothers and sisters from Victoria and New South Wales, as well as some from the nearby country districts; and our hearts were filled with gratitude to God for His goodness to us in granting so helpful and happy a season of Christian fellowship.

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

"THIS DO IN REMEMBRANCE OF ME."

It was with an air of deep appreciation, sincerity and reverence that the Melbourne brethren gladly met on the evening of Tuesday, March 31, to memorialise the death of our dear Lord.

We were reminded again of the rich symbolic meaning that must ever be attached to the tokens of bread and wine, as these would fitly represent the true "Bread from heaven" broken for us and the life poured out in sacrifice on our account.

The brethren were encouraged to more deeply view their own standing as Body members in true participation of a life willing to suffer with their Head, and to more and more deny themselves and to take up their cross and follow Christ along the same narrow way of love and sacrifice.

We viewed, too, the blessed realisation, that, in the partaking of the tokens, it pictured not only the glorious truth of salvation or "sparing alive" of the first-born antitypical Priestly class, but also our faith in the expected deliverance so soon we believe to be accomplished, and when we shall partake in the truest and richest sense of the cup of joy and blessing in the Kingdom of our Lord and Saviour.

We rejoiced also in the knowledge that when the Church's cup has been drunk to the full and the last member gathered out, then it will be that the "earnest expectation of the creature" will be realised, and the blessings and deliverance of the poor groaning creation come into operation, and all on account of the precious blood of Christ so freely shed that all might have life through Him. "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, Bless and praise His Holy Name.”

From our dear brethren in other parts comes reports of their grateful appreciation of the privilege of once again observing the Memorial of our loving Lord’s death, and the blessings received as they assembled for this purpose in little companies, ill twos and threes, and in many cases alone with the Lord Himself.

In Sydney the Class members were thankful that others of like precious faith from distant parts were able to be present with them on the evening of March 31st “to keep the feast.” They were solemnly reminded again of the significance of the occasion, and of the emblems partaken, representing our Lord’s ‘body broken for us, and life poured out on our account. All realised that the Lord’s spirit was with them according to His promise. and that we are indeed a favoured people to be reckoned as sons of our Heavenly Father, on account of the merit of our dear Redeemer, and our consecration vow to follow in His steps faithfully unto death. Amongst other accounts of this special season is one from our little company of faithful brethren at Digby, Victoria, who, with all fellow-members in Christ, realise that He alone is their hope, their salvation, their all. With all God’s people their thoughts were centred upon the gracious, willing sacrifice of Christ, our Passover Lamb, all that He suffered for our sakes, and with renewed desire to faithfully endure to the end of earth’s pilgrimage well pleasing in His sight.

We pray that this Memorial season may have been realised by all God’s consecrated people as a further manifestation of the Lord’s grace and strength, and that the days ahead will find all waiting patiently on God, as we seek to fulfil our covenant of sacrifice with the gracious prospect of so soon drinking anew in the Kingdom.

“Grant us Thy peace, as we
The heavenly pathway run Thy face to see.
Cause us to know and choose the way
In which Thou bid’st us—Watch and Pray,
Until Thy will be done.”

THE JEWISH DATE OF PASSOVER.

The question has been raised as to the reason why over two days elapsed this year between the observance of the Memorial of our Lord's death on the evening of March 31st (Nisan 14th) and the time of full moon in the early morning of Friday, April 3rd (Nisan 16th), seeing that each Jewish month begins with the new moon.

While we are not in any way in bondage to certain days and new moons, etc., this matter is of interest, for it is understood that the moon was about full at the time of Christ's crucifixion in the closing hours of Nisan 14th, and, taken to symbolise the Law Covenant, its waning after the Cross, well illustrates the passing away of the Law- arrangements, after their fulfilment by the Lord.

That the Jewish people have been particular in commencing their months at the first sight of the new moon is shown by statements that in olden times in some places they had watchers posted on elevated positions to inform the Sanhedrin. Proclamation was then made, "The feast of the new moon," and the beginning of the month was proclaimed by sound of trumpet. However, in the temple it is understood there was always a fixed calendar, or at least a 'fixed decision for festival days determined by the House of Judgment.

The Jewish Calendar of the present day seems to be as exact as in past times, for the new moon of Nisan this year came in about forty minutes before sundown on March 19th, and the 1st of Nisan was reckoned as commencing 011 the 18th at sundown. This seems to account for the moon not having reached its usual fullness this year on Wednesday afternoon, April 1st, the time corresponding to our Lord's crucifixion and death in the closing hours of Nisan 14th on that memorable day so many years ago, the previous evening of which He had instituted the Memorial observance to be kept each year at its anniversary in remembrance of Him.

CAST OUT THE BEAM.

Matt. 7:5.

THESE words are contained in Matthew's record of the Sermon on the Mount, in which the Lord seemed to give instructions concerning the principles which must operate in those who would be His disciples, and this matter of fault-finding and judging others is much emphasised. How well our Lord understood frail humanity and its weaknesses. He had been interested in man even prior to man's creation. He had superintended the work of the preparation of the earth and the production of such things as would supply every human necessity, and give scope for the pleasurable exercise of every faculty along righteous lines. "His delight was with the sons of men." He had seen the fall through disobedience, the entry of sin and its consequence—death. He had seen how soon the image of God had been impaired, how selfishness instead of love became the ruling passion, and how quickly envy, jealousy, pride and ambition had developed and lust, theft, murder, and all the abominable deeds of the fallen flesh resulted. It was such a "world of sinners lost and ruined by the fall" that the Saviour undertook to come and rescue. It was from such a world that the Church was to be taken. He came not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance.

The Apostle has put it, "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief." It would be well if every one who professes consecration to "walk in His steps"—to be "dead with Christ," would as truly realise as did the Apostle how utterly unworthy we are of being favoured by the call of God to enter this race for the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus. There seem to be many somewhat like the Pharisees. From a standpoint of respectable birth and good training they have been favoured more than others. They are outwardly the best living people, good, honest, moral, religious and perhaps liberal givers to the poor, interested in good works. They are well represented by the man that went to the temple to pray, "I thank Thee that I am not as other men are. . . I fast twice in the week,

I pay tithes of all I possess," etc. He was not like the poor sinner who was standing afar off behind him, saying,

"God be merciful to me a sinner." All! is it not just there that this miserable "holier than thou" spirit gets possession of one; instead of looking unto Jesus the Captain of our salvation, the perfect One, the One we must copy—whose character likeness is the "Mark for the prize," the critical eye rests on one whose faults are more open to view, and self satisfaction grows by comparing outward appearances. Without just uttering the words, the attitude is assumed, I do not drink, I do not smoke, I do not attend theatres, I abstain from worldly pleasures, I give my time to religious work,

I give to the church and to the poor, I read my Bible and am regular in prayer and in attendance at worship and study classes, and lead an honourable life, and so the Lord has called me to be a joint-heir with Christ. And there enters a spirit of judging, and, thinking of others, as, for example, that this one may possibly be of the "little flock" or that one of the great multitude, and another is not a consecrated Christian at all. There seems to be more pleasure for such people, in looking for faults in others, than in observing the brave fights that may be in course in their hearts and wills, battling against their inherited weaknesses and striving to reach the "mark."

The self-complacency and pride reminds one of the Laodicean Church condition. Sad, miserable condition, to think themselves so rich, in need of nothing when, in reality, they lack everything that matters most; and though the Laodicean Church of the present-day have seemed to think that they were the very gate of heaven they have been cast off by the Lord, who looks not on the outward appearance but on the heart. "Thou knowest not that thou art miserable and blind and naked."

It was the Pharisees, the best living—the holiness people, the self righteous, who despised the Lord because He went and did eat with publicans and sinners, who were so denounced by Christ that He said that the publicans and sinners would go into the Kingdom before them. It was these Pharisees who were the fault finders. They made long prayers to be seen and heard of men, but they made the word of God void by their own traditions and bye-laws.

There appears to be a similar class to-day who are well satisfied with their own attainment. They glory in their respectability; their outward appearances command the respect of others, and they seem to think that they can shine the brighter by holding up to view the deficiencies of others. Some glory in their sense of good order, and surely all should endeavour to have all done decently in order." All should try and so observe order, do the right thing at the right time in glad obedience to the arrangements of either the church, home, office or workshop. 'Those, however, who are the better balanced along this line should not expect others to find it so easy to comply. They must exercise patience and make allowances for such, and rejoice if they can observe any attempt to overcome the natural weakness; while at the same time trying to assist all towards a proper conduct. If, on the other hand, they should become impatient and by word or gesture they should wound or offend one of the Lord's little ones theirs would surely be the greater sill. They would be those represented as saying, "Let me take the mote out of your eye," while they had a beam (or splinter, as the word might be better translated) in their own. The Lord, who looks less upon the outer man than on the heart, may see the greater effort towards perfection in the one from a natural sense, the less perfect.

The fault-finding, judging spirit, is a mean, abominable thing. It is conceived in pride, selfishness, ambition, jealousy, envy and strife, and when the little "unruly member," the tongue, is once set going in the service of such a spirit, who can tell where it will end? It leads to destruction; as James says, "It is set on fire of Gehenna." How often is envy at the root of the matter, and the works of the flesh so quickly press the tongue into their service.

Some one aspires to a position for which he or she has little or no qualification, while another is seen to possess the required talent. Envy quickly seeks to defame by exposing some weakness, or seeming wrong transactions or connections; or anything to discredit the person who stands in envy's way. How small, how foolish, how wicked must such a course appear in the sight of Him who seeth not as man seeth, for the Lord looketh not On the outward appearance of a man but upon the heart:" "Take out the beam," take away these abominable defects—the works of the flesh—jealousy, envy, malice, bitterness, etc.; cleanse the heart from secret faults, make the inside of the platter clean, and out of the good treasure of the pure heart will proceed, not jealousies, envies, thefts, murders, fault-findings, slanders, imputations, evil surmisings and evil speaking, but words of grace, of sympathy, encouragement and helpfulness to all fellow travellers in the straight and narrow way, beset by so many foes. The obstacles are so great, the standard of the mark for the prize is' so high, that the most nearly perfect of all in the race would utterly fail if they depended only on their own ability. All need the office of our great Advocate, for all are so weak and sinful by nature, so that none can glory in his strength above others. Some who appear so strong and are looked up to as so respectable and good and zealous are, maybe, very weak on points not discernible to human eye, but manifest to Him with whom we have to do.

The Lord Jesus knew what was in man, and, therefore. how much there is, in His words, warning us against this evil of wanting to take out the mote from a brother's eye—"Take out the beam." That is, attend to Your own faults, look to your own conduct, purify your own vision.

Do we find ourselves apt to think evilly of others do we find that we seem to look more for their faults than for their virtues—are we paying more attention to the outward man than to the heart's intentions—the new creature in Christ? Then let us pray with the Psalmist, "Create in me a clean heart, oh God, and renew a right spirit within me."

We should be happy to put the best possible construction on the conduct of others. We should be anxious to find excuse and to defend each fellow member in Christ, or indeed any one even of the world. We should be glad that we are not required to judge others. The Lord is the Judge and He is a kinder Judge than man, so that David was wise when he: said, "Let me fall into the hands of the Lord, but not into the hands of man.

How solemn are the repeated words of Christ, "With what judgment ye judge ye shall be judged." With whatsoever measure we mete, it shall be measured to you again."

What sympathy and tenderness was expressed by the Master in all His contact with fallen humanity, even in their sins and weaknesses. The one thing more than another that called forth His indignation was hypocrisy and hard heartedness. "If ye from the heart forgive not those who grieve or hurt you, yes even your enemies, neither will your heavenly Father forgive you." Such instruction seems to run throughout His teaching in parable and example, as well as in plain language. How miserable does the prodigal's brother appear in his complaint regarding the welcome given his returned penitent brother, beside the father's pitying heart which took idol along the way to meet the erring son.

What indignation is pictured in the parable of the two debtors. The one who had been forgiven the great debt sought out a man who owed him a small sum. He pressed him and had him put in jail until he should receive his value So if we will remember how much we owed, the debt of sin, the penalty, death, and how God willingly forgave us all, on account of Christ's sacrifice, can we be hard on any even in the world who may have injured us, and could we withhold a free glad forgiveness from any who showed sorrow or regret for wrongs done? How often, says Peter, shall I forgive an offender in a day, "seven times?" Nay, saith the Master, I say not seven times, but if one shall offend seventy times seven and seventy times seven shall repent, thou shalt forgive.

How far is all this from the fault finding, busybodying, defaming disposition. The very fact of trying to belittle another by slander, evil speaking, evil imputations, or of holding up to view another's weakness for correction, generally indicates that the fault-finder has a similar fault himself, just as in the parable it was not the man with the small mote in his eye who wanted to take out the splinter from the other. It was the one with the greater defect who wanted to put the other right.

It would seem, then, that when we see faults in others. it would be the wisest thing to examine our own hearts and minds, words and actions, and see whether or not we are in a position to "cast the first stone." In most cases such a personal examination will reveal the fact that we have enough to do to mind our own concerns, to make straight paths for our feet, and cleanse our own hearts and minds, that we may be vessels prepared and sanctified and made meet for the Master's use.

We may depend upon it that the Master will not require a service of us other than to encourage every fellow member in the Body, and to carry the glad tidings of peace and salvation, bringing comfort to the sorrowing. binding up the broken hearted, bringing strength to the weak and weary, for "A broken and a contrite heart, oh God, Thou wilt not despise." Let us see that we have no beam in our own eye, before we begin to complain respecting another's fault or weakness.

The great Head of the Body will seek to assist each and all towards perfection, and we all need His advocacy, for if any man say he is without sin he deceiveth himself, but if any one sin we have an Advocate with the Father who does not hold up our weaknesses before the great white throne, but, on the other hand, He pleads with His own blood in the presence of God for us.. Surely, then, every member in Christ, immersed into His spirit, will also seek not to criticise and judge one another, but to have an overflowing love that will cover a multitude of sins. It is the great enemy of the Church. the "accuser," who would find fault and accuse and discourage. but "How happy are we who in Jesus agree." and rejoice in the glorious hope of being one day able to encourage the whole race of mankind to walk up the highway of holiness step by step. overcoming all inherited weakness. What patience will be needed, then, and it is needed now. Let patience have her perfect work that ye may be perfect and entire and wanting in nothing. The first essential is our personal progress towards the: nook for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. This is the will of God concerning you, even your sanctification—Cast out first the Beam.

"How shall we gauge the whole, who can only guess a part?
How can we read the life when we cannot spell the heart?
How can measure another, we who can never know
From the jutting:, above the surface the depth of the vein below?

"Even our present way is known to ourselves alone—
Height and abyss and torrent, flower and thorn and stone;
But we gaze on another's path as a far off mountain scene,
Scanning the outlined hills, but never the vales between.

“How shall we judge their present, we who have never seen
That which is past for ever, that which might have been?
Measuring by ourselves, unwise indeed are we;
Measuring what we know, by what we can hardly see.”

THE SECRET.

I went to Hampton Court the other day, and saw the great vine which is such an attraction to visitors, and is certainly one of the largest and most fruitful in the world. bearing hundreds of bunches of splendid fruit. They say the roots of this vine go clown to the Thames nearly a quarter of a mile away.

A few years ago the gardeners cut the great vine back to its withered-looking trunk. Had you seen it then you would have said: “The vine is dead. That is the end of it.” The gardeners did not think this. They knew that the true vine is the root, that the branches are hut its manifestation, the bearers of its foliage and fruit. These are sustained ‘by the root, and without the root they would not even be there.

So Jesus, using this as an illustration of the hidden, secret source of life in the souls of men and women, the spiritual life which is “life indeed.” said: “A branch cannot bear fruit of itself, unless it abide in the vine.” No, unless it draw its sustenance, its being, from the Root, it not only fails to bear fruit but it actually withers and dies. The gardener cuts it off and throws it away. It has ceased to be “in the vine.” It is a dead branch. The vitality of the Root, the secret source of its life, has ceased to flow through it.

One could imagine the great Root saying to the branches: “Be of good cheer, the pruning knife will cut you, the cold of winter will try you, many blights and devouring pests will attack you—but be of good cheer, in Me you have all you need, and without Me you have nothing, least of all life.”

So, when you are discouraged, look up and say: “I will be of good cheer, for my life is hid with Christ in God.” It is the secret not only of life, but of everlasting life.”—”Home Chat.”

EXCERPT.

THE necessity for highly figurative language is shown in such expressions as the ‘sun rises,’ and the ‘sun sets,’ for how otherwise could we make our meaning clear to the young and ignorant who are not acquainted with the occult fact that it is our earth that moves and not the sun.

“And just in this way God has found it absolutely necessary in revealing His Divine infinite nature to our feeble finite minds, to use those anthropomorphic (that is, manlike) representations of His personality and power, which we find throughout His word, and to which the atheist has raised such foolish objection. When we read of ‘the eyes,’ ‘the ears,’ ‘the nostrils,’ ‘the arms,’ ‘the hands,’ ‘the loins,’ ‘the feet,’ not to speak of ‘the shadow,’ ‘the wings,’ ‘the feathers,’ and ‘the roar’ of the Most High, we perceive on reflection that God, the Almighty, could not speak to man in any other way than by representing His actions in such figurative terms. This also applies with equal force to such descriptions of God where He is said ‘to rest,’ ‘to sit,’ ‘to laugh,’ ‘to shout,’ ‘to wake,’ ‘to smell,’ etc., as well as to the terms ‘anger,’ ‘jealousy,’ ‘repentance,’ ‘hatred,’ ‘fury,’ ‘revenge,’ and ‘grief,’ when applied to the emotions of the Divine Mind. All that is meant by these and such expressions is that, in the Divine mind and conduct, there is something analogous to and resembling the sensible objects and human affections on which these metaphorical expressions are founded.”—J. NEIL, M.A., in “Strange Figures.”

FOLLOW AFTER PEACE.

EVERY right-minded individual desires peace, rest, quietness, and concord. In the beginning of our Christian course “being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ,” and the prophet says that God “will keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Him.”

To have come into a condition of peace with God means that one has become reconciled to God. This implies a former condition of alienation, of “enmity through wicked works.” Peace with God, then, means that this estrangement is a thing of the past, that the sinner has turned his back upon sin and is seeking to walk in the path of righteousness. We may rejoice with all who have come thus far.

The Apostle elsewhere refers to those who have come further into possession of the “peace of God, which passeth all understanding.” This peace can come only to those who have given themselves unreservedly to God; their time, talents, influence, their all. These have a peace that none others can know. This peace of God rules the heart even amid turmoil and trouble; it is an inward tranquillity and rest which is the direct result of a close personal relationship of the soul with God. It is the peace of God, because it is a peace that only God can give, a peace which only His very own can know fully. What a precious legacy our Lord left with His disciples when He went away from them: He said, “Peace I leave with you; My peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you; let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid.” This was truly a legacy of priceless value, and it is the inheritance of the entire Church throughout the Age.

To the world it may seem that the course of the Christian is far from peaceful, for the Lord’s saints often have a stormy voyage. But if our hearts continue to be stayed on Christ by faith, and we do not let go our anchor, we shall be kept through all the tempests of life. The Lord does not bless His people with peace in an outward sense. The Apostles were buffeted, and so all

Christ’s followers have been. The Adversary does everything in his power to prevent peace and happiness. This is true of all who walk in Jesus’ footsteps. We have “fightings without and fears within.” We are to put forth our best efforts in fighting against the world, the flesh and the adversary, against all the things that Satan would put into our minds and hearts, and we are to get the better of these things. The Lord blesses His people with strength to surmount these difficulties. We are not to be at peace with the flesh, but always at warfare with it. Yet there is a peace in the Lord that is born of faith in Him and in His promises. He has promised us grace sufficient; He has promised that we shall not be overcome through having trials and difficulties that are too great for us. We are assured that we shall have the victory if we trust in His strength. This gives us a rest and peace in all our experiences: We are resting in all the Lord's promises, we are resting in His strength and in His ability to make good His promises; for we know that He who has called us is able to fulfil all His good Word.

This peace or rest is the special blessing of the Holy Spirit. Only in proportion as we receive the Holy Spirit can we have this peace fulfilled in us. As we grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord, in the knowledge of the truth, we shall have this to comfort and strengthen us; and we shall thus have more of the peace of God every day, and be able to abide in His love. It has been written for our instruction and comfort, "This is the victory that overcometh the world even our faith." "This faith is built upon the testimony of God's Word, a sure foundation. It is only through strong and unwavering faith that the peace of God will abide with His children. No good thing will He withhold from these. "All things shall work together for their good." He shall bear them up in His hands lest they dash their foot against a stone. "The eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and His ears are open to their cry."

This peace of God is not dependent upon the smile of fortune, nor upon physical health, nor upon a host of friends; but it is a peace which abides even when health fails or poverty comes, or death steals from us the treasures of our hearts. It is a peace which none of the changes or vicissitudes of this life can take from us, and which enemies are powerless to touch. How poor would be our inheritance to-day if we were without our anchorage in Christ; but with it we can endure all things which the Father's loving providence will permit. Then let us face the coming days with calmness and courage.

In order to enjoy this perfect peace we must unswervingly trust in our Father's love and abiding faithfulness. As we look out into the starry heavens we see a manifestation of God's mighty power and majesty, but our hearts and minds would not be stayed and sustained by this. But if we have the proper foundation for faith; if we learn to know our Father through His Word, we come to have confidence in Him. If we trusted to our own reasoning we would be in a very unsatisfactory condition, all would be uncertain, we would have no sure basis for faith or assurance. But when we see that the testimony of the Bible from Genesis to Revelation reveals to us a God of wisdom, justice, love and power, our minds and hearts have something reasonable and convincing to lay hold upon. This conviction deepens, and we can rejoice as we step out upon His promises and prove them for ourselves, thus learning their reality and realising their fulfilment.

We may rejoice that this loving God has called us to redemption through His Son, we may rejoice that He has offered us eternal life and has called us to a glorious joint-heirship with our Lord. We can also further rejoice in the knowledge of the wondrous provision for the whole world in the future. All these things form a firm basis for peace, joy and confidence in the Lord; But our peace is proportionate to our constancy, our staying qualities. No one can retain this peace of God whose mind is not stayed, fixed on God. It is not a peace of recklessness or sloth, but a peace begotten of God Himself through the promises, which we have made our own. It is dependent also upon our full obedience to the Lord. This peace and the faith that inspires it can look up through its tears with joyful expectancy for the glorious fruition of our hopes which God has promised, and of which our present peace and joy are but the foretaste.

Another way of keeping this peace and rest in the Lord is brought to our attention in the exhortation of the Apostle where he says, "Be careful for nothing"; but since our English word "careful" has lost its original meaning, there may be danger of error here with some. The word originally had the thought of being full of care, care-full, anxiety, trouble. The Apostle's words correspond exactly to our Lord's injunction: "Take no thought," and signify be not anxious, full of care, or Burdened. It is proper that the Lord's people should be careful in the meaning of the word as used to-day. We should not be careless, indifferent, lax in our conduct or words, but be circumspect. Anxiety and burdens are unavoidable to those who are depending on themselves, their own wisdom, their own strength, their own skill;_ but the members of the Body of Christ accepted in the Beloved, adopted into the divine family, are assured over and over again in the Word, that if they abide faithful all things shall work together for their highest welfare. Why should they be burdened? Why should they feel anxious? He who guards their interests slumbers not. When Christians find themselves anxious, fearful, burdened, the evidence is that they have either never grown to the point of having the proper faith in the Lord, or that they have allowed “earth horn clouds” and cares of this life to come between them and the Lord, so that they no longer have confidence that they are abiding in His love and in His care. All in such condition should go at once to the throne of heavenly grace and to the divine promises, and obtaining mercy at the former and feeding upon the latter, they should grow strong in the Lord and in confidence in Him, and their corroding care will give place to faith, confidence, peace of heart, whatever the outward conditions. Such is the counsel of the Apostle that, instead of continuing in the anxious condition, we should lay all of our affairs before the Lord, supplicating His promised providential care, acknowledging our own lack of wisdom, and gladly accepting His wisdom and the provisions of His love, we should make every request in a spirit of thanksgiving.

This spirit of thanksgiving implies a recognition that the circumstances and conditions in which we are, have been supervised of the Lord, and that we are appreciative of His care, and trust it for the future. Thanksgiving for what we have and a full appreciation of the Lord’s leadings hitherto and now will preclude any anxiety for the future; for the thankful heart will conclude that He who favoured us and redeemed us while we were yet sinners, will much more favour and do for us now that we are His through the adoption that is in Christ Jesus. The question may arise, Why will not God give us the things which He sees us to need, without our making petition to Him and claiming His promises? Undoubtedly because we need previously to come into the proper attitude of heart to receive His favours and be advantaged by them. If we have the spirit of rejoicing and trust in the Lord, and make all our requests, so far as we able to discern, in harmony with His promise, and accept with gratitude and thanksgiving, whatever His providence may send us, then the Apostle assures us, “The peace of God which passeth all understanding shall guard your hearts and your minds in Christ Jesus.”

THE LORD BLESS THEE AND KEEP THEE!

Numbers 6:24.

The Lord bless thee!
How shall He bless thee ?
With the gladness that knoweth no decay;
With the riches that cannot pass away;
With the sunshine that makes an endless day—
Thus may He bless thee!
And keep thee!
How shall He keep thee ?
With the all-covering shadow of His wings;
With the strong love that guards from evil things;
With the sure power that safe to glory brings
Thus may He keep thee!

Christ's Spirit of Comfort and His Second Presence.

THERE appears to be a difficulty with some to discern the difference between the Lord's being with His Church throughout the Gospel Age, and His presence as Lord of the Harvest at the end of the Age—His parousia—unseen by man and discerned only by the eye of faith, as the signs of His presence are observable.

The Lord Jesus has certainly been with His suffering saints ever since Pentecost. He has so closely identified Himself with the members of His Body that He said to the man who went "breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples," "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me? I am Jesus whom thou persecutest." "For by one spirit we are all baptised into one Body. All made to drink into one spirit" (1 Cor. 12) so that Christ is represented in His Body-members on earth, in whom the Holy Spirit operates. "He who received' you receiveth Me, and he who receiveth Me receiveth Him that sent Me." These have the privilege of suffering with Christ, of filling up the afflictions of Christ which are left over, so that we might be dead with Him and so might live with Him.

Our Lord is represented in Rev. 1:13. and 2:1, as "He that .walketh amidst the candlesticks" and as being thoroughly acquainted with the varied conditions and circumstances of His Church—"I know thy works." He is ever with His people in their trials, and renders aid by His Spirit, through the Word of God, and through His people, sending comfort and strength in time of need.

This was His promise when taking leave of the disciples—"I will not leave you comfortless. I will pray the Father and He shall give you another comforter that may abide with you for ever." "He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." "Rut the Comforter—the Holy Spirit which the Father will send in My name—he shall teach you all things and 'bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." "But when the comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, he shall testify of Me."—John 14:16-18, 26; 15:26.

It is in this way that the Lord has been with His people, sustaining them in trial, adversity, persecution and distress, by bringing to their remembrance His love, His care, His interest in their progress, and the many exceeding great and precious promises of grace to help.

As the young nobleman in the parable, our Lord went to a far country, to the heavenly courts, to receive the Kingdom, and then to return, to come again and receive His Church unto Himself, that where He is there they may be also. Then He will take His great power and order righteousness and peace in the earth.

Before dealing with mankind generally, the Scriptures clearly show that the first work of Christ on His return is in connection with His Church, and for this purpose He must be present for a season, "as a thief in the night," unknown to the world. Gradually His presence would be made known to the watching saints—those who, when they hear the "knock" indicating His presence, open their hearts to welcome their Lord and He enters and sups with them, and they with Him (Rev, 3:20), Those who do not hear the knock and those who hear, but fail to open, are left in ignorance of the second presence of the Lord.

The discourse in Matt. 24 shows that there is the work of harvest to He first attended to, a gathering of the elect.

The Lord of the Harvest will say to the reapers, "Tie the tares in bundles, but gather the wheat into the garner." True Christians are to be separated from the false and gathered home into the antitypical ark, into Christ, beyond the veil, before the burning up of the bundles of tares takes place in the "time of trouble such as never has been since there was a nation, nor ever shall be.”

The world will be in ignorance of the fact that Christ has returned until this preparatory work in connection with the Church and the closing of the Gospel Age has been accomplished. “As the days of Noah were, so shall also the days of the Son of Man be. For as in the days that were before the flood, they were eating, drinking, marrying and giving in marriage until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away, so shall also the presence of the Son of Man be” (Matt. 24:37-39). It would seem to be difficult to make it plainer that there would be “days of the Son of Man”—a time during which the Lord would be present, dealing with His people and preparing for their deliverance, but unrecognised by the world. He would come “as a thief,” unawares.

The parables in Matt. 25 illustrate the matters dealt with in the 24th chapter. The parable of the virgins shows that only the watchers would know of the Lord’s coming, and that even among them some should fail to be properly prepared. It shows a separating work, which is still in process. The varied experiences of the harvest period continue to separate the foolish virgins from the wise. When all the wise virgins are gathered the door will be shut.

The second parable shows the Lord dealing with His people respecting the use of opportunities and talents, and rewarding them accordingly. Not only are the living saints to be thus dealt with and rewarded on completing their course, but “the dead ill Christ are to rise first.” This all indicates that there will be quite a period similar to the “days that were -before the flood,” in the “days of the Son of Man,” His parousia, prior to His commencing His work with the world, indicated in the next parable.

All this preparatory work could not be accomplished if the old thought that Christ’s coming and going would be like a flash of lightning, if all living and dead saints were to be caught together at the moment of that coming. There is something more -beautiful and reasonable, more-Scripturally harmonious and more God-like, in the manner of our Lord’s return as presented by C. T. Russell in his book, “The Time is at Hand,” which we recommend all to read and study.

We see then that there is quite a difference between Christ being with the Church during the Age by the Holy Spirit in His people to comfort and sustain, and Ilia being present again in the earth in this day of His preparation. All the evidences of His “parousia” are with us to-day. He has surely come, and has prepared the promised feast of Luke 12:37. It is the blessedness promised to come at the end of the 1335 days (about 1874) of Daniel 12. Those who have experienced the joys of this feast, since the unfoldment of truth at that time, know that He has come. They have heard the “knock” and opened their hearts, and are feasting with their Lord (Rev. 3:20). The fact of seeing these things has refreshed the hearts of God’s people. They are strengthened against the scepticism and human philosophies, theories, delusions and deceptions of this sad day, by the clearer knowledge of the Divine plan of the Ages. They are thus enabled to stand the severe tests of faith in these “days of the Son of Man,” while those who fail to recognise the “knock” seem to prefer the dim light of the dark ages, or when the Church was just emerging from the gloom of Papal errors, to the bright shining of truth radiating from the rising Sun of righteousness. Let us “hold fast that which we have received.” “Continue in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them.”-2 Tim. 3:14.

Another year of witness

THE end of the month of April brought to a close % another year for the Berean Biblical Institute, and we desire to present the Tract Fund Account as usual, showing the work just completed in co-operation with the dear friends who realise the privilege and joy of service for the Lord and His cause of truth.

- The year past with its many changes in the existing order of things, while the Lord is judging amongst His people preparatory to the establishment of His Kingdom, has no doubt brought its trials and difficulties to all who are walking in the narrow way. We trust, however, that each one has realised that even the hardest experiences for the cause of Christ are evidences of sonship, which having been permitted of the Lord, shall work together for our good, yielding the peaceable fruits of righteousness unto all that are exercised thereby.

While the work accomplished is not large, we render grateful thanks to our Heavenly Father for His blessings in connection therewith, and that under His providential care; through the sacrifices of the friends generally, the various sections of the work have been enabled to continue as in previous years.

One encouraging feature has been the many reports of appreciation of the truth message contained in the "People's Paper," and truly, those who have received the truth into good and honest hearts, find that it satisfies their longings as nothing else could do. There will be no desire for some new theory every now and again with such, but as they continue to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the -Lord. the deeper truths open up in all their beauty, in harmony with the foundation doctrines of -God's plan of the ages. While the subscriptions to the "People's Paper" have been maintained, there is a deficiency to be made up each year from the Tract Fund toward its cost, as most of our readers know. It would assist the work generally if this extra cost could be relieved as much as possible, and so that all may encourage others to take the "People's Paper" regularly, extra copies are provided free on application, for distribution among likely cases. We wish to express sincere appreciation of all the willing assistance given, both in the preparation and circulation of the "Paper" in the service of the truth; and to remind all our readers that its future work and scope depends mainly upon their co-operation with us in this way.

There has been an increased supply of tracts provided during the year, and this is good evidence of many realising their responsibility and privilege of endeavouring to give to other hearts, something of the gracious hope set before the sacrificing saints of this Gospel Age; and of the glad tidings of the Kingdom that shall be to all people in the Millennial Age. Together with the distribution of the tracts to the homes of the people, free literature coupons in the newspapers have brought many earnest inquiries for further reading matter; good has been done by this means. To every enquirer for literature the "People's Paper" is sent free for three months by way of encouraging the interest, after which it is expected that there will be some further word from those desiring its continuation and who wish to cooperate with us in the service of the Master.

While we recognise that our most important work is respecting our own building up and standing in Christ, and assisting our dear fellow-members in the Body in the same, there will no doubt be many further good opportunities of service to others as the clouds of trouble gather more thickly. Earnest people with failing hearts, on account of the things coming to pass. are now to be found enquiring for some message of comfort, which only the true understanding of God's Word can bring. What a privilege then may still be ours to tell the comforting story of God's love, as the Prophet Isaiah expresses it: "To give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness."

A good supply of tracts is on hand for all willing workers. Let the sickle of truth be used at every opportunity, and with the return to the cheaper rates of postage on printed matter and books full advantage should be taken of this, wherever it would not be possible to receive parcels by boat. One method of receiving a supply of literature regularly would -be to make request for some to 'be enclosed each month with your "People's Paper."

In addition to the work covered by the Tract Fund Account shown below. there was the printing of a Zulu tract in South Africa from the fund specially contributed for that purpose. account of which was shown in October's "People's Paper" of last year. We fully realise that the contributions to the funds of the Institute represent much of sacrifice and self-denial on the part of the friends generally, and while the expense for the year was not quite covered, we have endeavoured to fulfil our part faithfully in the cause of the truth. We are pleased to hear from all our readers regularly, and ask that we may have their prayers on our behalf in the days ahead, that all may be done to the glory of the Lord and for His cause in this corner of His harvest-field.

THE END OF THE ROAD.

THE friends in Gawler, particularly Sister Kennewell and daughters, have our sympathy in the great loss to their fellowship and home by the death of our Brother M. Kennewell, who, after a prolonged illness, passed away a few days ago. Our brother was not, may be, very widely known, but he was one loved best by those who knew him best, and he has been a faithful brother gladly using his talents in the service of the truth and as leader of the happy little class in Gawler. Is it not wonderful to think of these who seem to successfully run the Christian race being of that class of whom it is written: "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth, they rest from their labours but their works follow them." "Caught away to be for ever with the Lord"

Correspondence

South Australia. 8/3/31. Dear Christian Brother,

I'm enclosing postal note for the "People's Paper," which I should not like to be without. Please forward me two copies each month; also send them as usual to and

The extra money may be used for the Tract Fund. Yours faithfully,

N.J.A.

New South Wales,

April, 1931. Dear Brother in the Master's Service,

You can imagine the joy I received when I got your letter recently. I was wondering if the Bible Students' office was removed from Temple Court, and was waiting patiently for a reply.

You know, brother, I am here alone, a single man, and not a soul to talk to on the Bible. People here are just following the man-made religion, and nothing seems to shift them from it.

I received a "People's Pulpit" here years ago, which first drew my attention to our Lord, but I could not grasp things very well then; still I sent for more of them, and just then the little "People's Paper" you sent was started at Temple Court; so I got Pastor Russell's six volumes and a Bible, also "Foregleams," "Heralds," and several other booklets.

I gave some to friends and kept some, and really at that time there were other religious books and papers sold to me, and among the lot of them I got confused; understand, I am not a learned man, but when I left here in I went to Victoria and carried my Bible with me, but I did not understand it nor the books I carried. I then carried all these from Victoria to Queensland, as I could not part with them, hoping that offered a simple little prayer to our Father through our Lord Jesus, and, brother, really, when I read the "Divine Plan of the Ages" again I saw its beauty still better, and the Bible also. So I came to the conclusion that I had to have many trials of earth first, and to be tired of all sin altogether, so that when I did start to serve the Lord, by His help I may not wish to turn back; and when I offered my simple little prayer I cried like a little child as I felt so small when I did know God truly.

So now I have consecrated my all to Him. Certainly, it is not much, but, still, I yield all with pleasure, for look at His love for those that obey Him—and the promises. Yes, brother, I have read the Bible day and night since I wrote you, and I have discovered wonderful things in it concerning God's children. I have read the Acts, Romans, Corinthians, all the New Testament, the Psalms, and the 23rd Psalm appealed to me, and many others. It is all beautiful when one does understand something of it by the Lord's guidance.

I seem to have entered in the Master's service at the eleventh hour, so I must not delay, but press on. How happy one feels when we know we have the Holy Spirit within our hearts, if when we shed a tear it is a tear of joy. How good it is of our Heavenly Father to confer such an honour to His little flock. We surely feel that we cannot thank Him enough for the light given us through our Lord Jesus.

I am sending you with this, for you to use as best you know. Thanks, brother, for the "Papers," which are very helpful.

I remain, your brother in the Lord, J.B.

New South Wales. Dear Brethren,

Re Will Jesus Come Again in the Flesh?

Some seem to think that Christ will come again in the flesh, in human form. While I do not wish to force my views on any one, for all must be allowed full liberty of thought, to prove the Scriptures for themselves, still we must not teach others what we do not know.

Jesus said, "My flesh I give for the life of the world," and, therefore, it seems to me that to teach that Christ is to come again in the flesh would be accusing both the Father and Son of a mean action, such as few of the fallen human race would be guilty of; that is, take back a gift once given.

I am 75 years of age, and can only recall one case of a gift being taken back. A father had given his son a horse that he could do no good with, but when he saw how the horse turned out he took him back from his son. The horse was taken to Sydney and ran a record race. Someone offered 1600 guineas for him, which was refused. However, as the owner was leading him over some slippery cement the horse fell and broke a leg and so had to be destroyed. So if the Lord takes back His gift it destroys all hope of both the Church and the world.—Yours, etc.,

M.G.

Dear Brother,

He Faileth Not—Zeph. 3:5.

Of our lives I often wonder whose is the most isolated. Here the bush is ever changing and pulsing with life, and radiant in beauty, and a certain peace and sweetness pervades the air, which is lacking in the city. The "wee paper" is to hand, and I think everyone enjoyed the Adelaide Convention. There has been work on every hand, and everyone enjoyed doing something for the Master; and it is just wonderful the joy and happiness it gives the heart in just doing something for the Lord, and for a better understanding of the brethren whom we love so dearly. O, how we should love to serve our Heavenly Father Who has provided such a store of good things for them that love Him (Luke 10:

27). How He has provided for us far exceeding our hopes; glories which even the wise men of old and the holy angels diligently inquired into. (1 Pet. 1:12). For whom were all these great and precious promises of love and bounty being provided for?—2 Pet. 1:4. What zeal and fire these promises should lend our flagging energies; what love they should inspire in our hearts; what fear and dread lest sin should stain our garments; what tenderness and kindness we should show to the ones who are running in the same race; what a plea should ascend to the throne of grace that God will guard, guide and bless all the brethren everywhere.

To-day prophecy is fading away, melting in the light of day; and there seems to be, as it were, a hush, just as it is before a great storm, and all nature seems to be expecting and waiting for the revealment of the sons of God; when every man who will may drink of the water of life freely. (Rev. 22:17).

Let us stir again the love fires in our hearts and plead and exhort one another to . greater deeds of love, and "lift up our heads and rejoice for our redemption draweth nigh" (Luke 21:28); for God is not slack as men count slackness, but He is the rewarder of all those who seek Him (2 Pet. 3:9).

Convey my warmest Christian love to the brethren; remembering, I ask and need the prayers and cooperation of the class at the throne of grace; “for the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much” (James 5:16).

I have chosen this verse for the class (Job 36:7): “He withdraweth not His eyes from the righteous, but with kings are they on the throne for ever, and they are exalted.”

May God’s peace and blessing attend you all,

Yours in the one precious hope, O.C.

Dear Brethren,

Many thanks for nice card received through Bro. —. Re subscriptions, we just meant anything over to go to the general fund, and which would amount to very little.

We do appreciate the little “Paper” very much, and also your kindness in sending the three. We will be very pleased for you to continue sending the three; they being passed round amongst the friends, then sent to someone whom we think will appreciate them.

We are looking forward to Bro. Hoskin’s visit on the 28th inst., and trust it may be a means of rich blessing to all.

Praying the Lord’s blessing upon you all in your labour of love. Your Bro. and Sister by His grace.

Convention Bible Study.

INTRODUCTION IN PHIL. 2:1-3.

THE Apostle is setting forth here, the unity of the Church and the conditions that promote it. His expressions contain loving affection. He poured out, as it were, his whole heart to them, whom, with all his heart he loved, and the object which he aimed at was union of spirit, of purpose, of principle and of love—movement toward the same goal—Phil. 1:27-30.

Verse 1 —“If there be therefore any consolation in Christ.” The thought seems to be, if there be such things as make Christian unity possible. The “if” is not an expression of doubt, but of strong affirmation. The Greek word for consolation has the two senses of “exhortation” and “consolation,” and is closely united to the word “Comforter” in John’s Gospel. Comforting, from two Latin words, means making strong together, and has in it the thought of invigorating, inspiring and filling the soul full of courage and strength: The Holy Spirit comforted the disciples after the death of Jesus by making frightened men bold as lions, by giving joy unspeakable When persecuted, imprisoned, tortured and scattered.

“If any comfort of love.” This is almost equivalent to the word consolation, but having a suggestion of tenderness involved. It springs from Christ’s love toward us, the Greek giving the thought that it is the incentive which love brings.

“If any fellowship of the Spirit.” The thought seems to be, communion of the Holy Spirit, which makes all Christians one, or, participation in the love, joy and peace which the Holy Spirit produces.

“If any bowels and mercies.” The thought is of “tender mercies and compassions”—warmth of love, mutual burden bearing and sympathy with one another in their various trials. The Apostle had suffered much to bring them into possession of these blessings, and it was his joy in seeing the Church he had founded and the Christians he loved fulfilling their mission, and so in verse 2 he urges them to complete his joy by being like minded with himself, having supreme love to God—His cause, and to himself, as he had to God, His cause, and to them —seeking at all times and especially in affliction to act so as to secure the highest possible happiness which their Saviour could impart to them.

“Being of one accord and one mind,” has the thought of being united together in the bond of union, zeal and humility always promoting the honour of their Lord and Master—2 Cor. 1:5; 2 Tim. 2:16, 17; Phil. 1:9, 10; 2 Cor. 13:14; 1 Cor. 3:16; Rom. 8:16; 12:16; 15:5, 6; 1 Cor. 12:4, 13, 14; Col. 3:12-17

On four occasions this Church helped to sustain the Apostle in his poverty and imprisonment—Phil. 4:16. Once at Corinth Paul was manacled in prison and could not support himself as he did in other places. The Philippian Church sent him gifts ‘by Epaphroditus.

Verse 3.—“Let nothing be done through strife or vainglory,” Calvin says, “Always in discord the door is open to Satan for spreading unholy teachings, for the repelling of which the chief defence is unity. Never act from separate interests. One of the greatest enemies of Christian unity or the mind of Christ is the party spirit, the spirit of contention—not amicable discussion which is wise and helpful, but personal parties and divisions. Let every member fear and labour for the welfare of the whole—do nothing so as to promote your own reputation. —Gal. 5:25, 26; Rom. 12:16; Phil. 1:1-17; James 3:14. Vainglory—personal advantage, wishing to be prominent rather than for the good of Christ’s cause. The victory comes by a character exactly opposite to the destroyer, ill lowliness of mind, not seeking personal honour, but only the cause.

FEAR NOT, LITTLE FLOCK.

WHAT endearing words, so sweet, so simple, so full of meaning and what comfort they bring to the heart in this day of fear! They remind us of a mother who hearing a cry in the night, rises swiftly to tend the one she loves. 'Faking the trembling one in her arms and telling it to fear not, while she rocks it to sleep on her breast.

How many times we are told in the Scriptures to fear not, and our Saviour must have realised the great power fear would have over the human mind when He told His little hand of faithful followers so many times to fear not

From whence comes fear, and what makes one fear? The first intimation we have of fear in the Bible is where Adam and his wife hid themselves in the Garden of Eden. So we see that fear comes from a knowledge of sin. Once sin enters the heart we fear. John, in ch. 11:14, 15, says: "Put iniquity away . . . and thou shalt not fear." When iniquity leaves the heart fear departs with it.

What a persistent and formidable foe fear is. It attacks from every direction. It is the imp and progeny of sin, and where it hides the child of God may he sure that the Adversary is working very hard to stumble the unsuspecting one: Nevertheless, a godly fear is necessary in the composition of a true Christian character, for the child of God must fear to do evil, to wound the feelings of a 'brother, and should reverence and fear God. Fear makes a splendid watchdog, which should warn if any evil approaches the heart, but it should never repose in the heart.

How strange that in a day of full and plenty, with garner of wheat overflowing, fat cattle and sheep by the million, fruit weighing the branches to the ground, grapes in abundance in a land flowing with milk and honey, and everything that should gladden the heart of man, that fear grips the heart, leaving a dreadful feeling of unrest and insecurity.

Never in our lives do we need faith and perfect trust in God more than we need it to-day. Men seem to have lost faith in God, and evil and vice abound. What a vivid picture St. Paul paints of the men of to-day, when he declares that they would wax worse and worse; that in the last days trying times should come, for men would be lovers of self, money-lovers, boasters, haughty, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, ungrateful, unholy, without natural affection, implacable, accusers, without self-control, ferocious, rash, self-conceited, lovers of pleasure rather than God, having a form of piety but denying the power thereof; and from all such he exhorts us to turn away.

O the blessedness and peace that reigns in the heart of the children of God, who look to the Father with the faith of a little child, never doubting that the Divine hand that has supplied the wants of to-day, will also provide the needs of to-morrow ! As the mother runs to the aid of her sick child, even so, God will come quickly to the aid of those who call upon Him, and His best gifts are to those who have perfect faith and implicit trust in Him. Our Saviour teaches this lesson. When He Was with His disciples on the lake of Galilee, a storm arose, lashing the waves to fury; and in the midst of the tempest the boat had sprung a leak and the disciples were in great peril. In fear and dismay they ran to our Saviour and found Him sleeping peacefully. 'n' 114 awakened Him, saying, "Master, Master, we perish." Then, arising, He rebuked the wind and the raging of the water, and there was a great calm. And He said unto them, "Where is your faith?" In this case the disciples' fear was caused by a want of faith. Had they had perfect faith in their Master, they, too, could have slept peacefully and would have known no fear.

The Psalmist gives us a splendid pen picture of that storm in the words, "They that go down to the sea in ships and occupy their business in great waters; these see the works of the Lord and His wonders in the deep. For He commandeth and raiseth the stormy wind which lifteth up the waves thereof; They mount up to the heaven, they go down again to the depths. They reel and stagger like a drunken man, and are at their wit's end. Then they cry unto the Lord in their trouble and He delivers them out of their distress. He maketh the storm a calm so that the waves thereof are still" (Psa. 107:23-29). It may be that our Saviour had previously been discussing these powerful words of the Psalmist, and to try the effect of His teachings and to test their faith had permitted the raising of the storm. Even so it is today, amid all the gathering gloom and the banking of the storm clouds, when men stagger and reel under the power of the Divine hand.

Although the storms are of a different character, they are purposely sent by God to try our faith, and to see if we have perfect faith and implicit trust in Him. O, if we could only have that sweet love and trust in God, which even little children teach us every day by their confiding faith in us.

We see many instances where our Lord tested His disciples and gave them warnings. After Peter had made his avowal of love, our Lord had warned him that he would deny Him, and we all know the result. Jesus, revealing Himself to St. Paul on the road to Damascus, told him plainly that he would suffer many things for His Name's sake. And as we follow the Apostle Paul in all his wanderings, we see him buffeted from pillar to post, and treated by some as the scum of the earth. We follow him to prison, and in depths oft, five times he received forty stripes save one, thrice he was beaten with rods, once stoned, thrice shipwrecked, in perils often, in perils among false brethren, in weariness and painfulness, in hunger and thirst, in cold and nakedness, and yet, in spite of all this formidable list of fears and sufferings he counts them all as light afflictions. So real was his faith, so great his love and loyalty to his Master, that fear could find no place in that noble heart. We realise that the many things he suffered acted as the chisel of persecution that shaped that noble character into a gem of loveliness, which has so endeared him to all believers.

As we look back over the mist of years and recall the wondrous words of the Apostle which have shed a halo of glory around the cross of Christ, reaching numberless hearts, stimulating and comforting, and leaving an impression which is the reflex of Christ's glorious character, let us step forward bravely and courageously into the future, and "fear not."

He Giveth Quietness.

When He giveth quietness, who then can make trouble? And who but He, the ‘God of all comfort,’ can give quietness in the midst of tumults which rise upon the soul like sudden storms upon the sea? like ocean mariners in peril, we cry unto Him, and He bringeth us to the desired haven—blessed haven— of quietness and peace in God.

“What is the cry Which brings this answer of peace? It is not a prayer that all occasion for disturbance shall 1:” remove,, for it is not always the divine will to bring peace to the human spirit in that way; it is not always the best way. But there is a cry which never fails to bring the quietness in which none can ‘make trouble.’ It is a prover for sweet, trustful, loving acquiescence in the will of God.

“‘May thy will, not mine, be done;
May thy will and mine be one;
Peace I ask—but peace must lie,
Lord, in being one with Thee.’

“What is it which disturbs my spirit? Is it anxiety about my work, my finances, my reputation, my friends? Suppose my Father in heaven should hear my prayer and remove every apparent cause for unrest in regard to one or all of these matters to-day. That would not give settled peace, for in a life so full of uncertainties as this, new occasions of anxiety would probably arise to-morrow.

“But if I say, ‘Lord, let each one of these matters which concern my peace of mind so closely fie under Thy control; order all entirely according to Thy will. for “Thou art my Father and my Friend; Thy will is that Thy children should have the very best in all things; and Thou knowest what is best for me,’ what a place of rest is that ! How the sense of too heavy responsibility rolls off; how the distracting care is shifted from the heart too weak to bear it to the strong shoulder upon which the government of all things rightfully and easily rests.

“If this experience of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price, is not realised at once, we must not be discouraged. It is not only of a great price as to value, but it often costs a great price to gain it.

“It follows successive battles. often repeated self-surrender. and multiplied trials in which the unfailing care and love of God have been clearly manifested. We were Watching the sea waters under the north-east wind; how disturbed and dark they were! Suddenly, with a fierceness that seemed cruel, the rain fell in torrents, and the unresisting waters grew perfectly calm as under an overwhelming surprises When the storm had passed, the setting sun shone gloriously, and the quieted waters were beautiful ill colors of rose and gold.

“Nature has its spiritual correspondences. Surprise comes upon surprise, sudden, overwhelming. The spirit which once tossed restlessly in chafing winds of lesser trials sinks in sweet submission under heavier griefs. We learn that even in the storm God was, and at last His conscious love. His abiding presence, His unvarying peace—the beauty of Godlikeness—glorify the character and life.”—Selected.

CONSIDER HIM LEST YE BE WEARY.

“Consider Him that endured such contradiction of sinners against Himself, lest ye be weary and faint in your minds.”—(Heb. 12:3.)

THERE is a natural tendency amongst people to tire of a thing When the novelty wears off. Even the hearing of the truth, strange as it may seem, causes weariness to some after a time. It is the same way with the soldier. It is easy for him to enlist and march forward when the drums are beating and the hands are playing, and enthusiasm runs high; but when the damp, cold weather comes, when ice forms in the trenches, and there is no martial music, he is liable to grow weary, and army life does not seem to be nearly so attractive as it appeared at first. This is true in our spiritual warfare—in fighting the good fight of faith. There are times when all around seem joyous, when the Christian soldiers are marching, and all are stimulated and encouraged; whereas there are times when the clouds hang low and are dark, chilliness surrounds us, ardour abates, and we are liable to get discouraged. It is partly for this reason that the Lord has directed us to “consider Him,” that thereby we might be stimulated and encouraged to press on and to inspire others. He knew just what we would need.

“Lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds.”

The Apostle Paul exhorts us not to forget the assembling of ourselves together, and so much the more as we see the day approaching. Why so? Because “this day” has its peculiar trials, its difficulties, its attractions in various directions, and the story of the Cross will likely seem old, not as new as some things, and consequently we shall need to bear each other up. Because there is danger of becoming lukewarm spiritually, it is generally recommended that the Lord’s people meet together, for to do so is stimulating. In proportion as we seek to stir up others in the Way by putting them in remembrance, we are thereby reviving our Own minds. we can, therefore, see a wisdom in all of God’s arrangements with respect to the truth. In every congregation there- is danger of growing weary in well-doing. Well-doing costs something. It means sacrificing. If you are serving the Lord’s cause you are denying yourself in someway. Unless we have some special love for the Lord and for the truth we might say, “This is a very tedious work; I am pressed in many directions.” So many things come to you and to us all, that we might consequently lie retarded, and slacken our efforts. The world, the flesh, and the adversary are pressing hard to draw us, not exactly from the prize, but from the narrow way that leads to the prize. They would slacken our zeal and heat our courage down; they would make us faint, and cause us to say, “O, I am so tired; I cannot do any more!” Doubtless we all have had such experiences. If we get faint in body we can rest ourselves, but if we get faint in mind it is more difficult to become refreshed.

WHAT SHALT, WE CONSIDER ABOUT HIM?

What then shall we do in case we get weary and faint in our minds? The Apostle tells, “Consider Him.” Whom? We all know that he is referring to our Lord Jesus, the one great “Him” in all the whole world. We are to consider how much He endured without getting faint or weary, without giving up the work which He undertook to do. He undertook to do a certain work, and so have we! In some respects we have undertaken to do the same work that Jesus did. Let us consider Him, lest we get weary and faint in following in His footsteps.

Of course, the world is not exhorted in this text, but merely those who have come into the Lord’s family, and have taken up their cross to follow Him; those who have consecrated themselves to Him; those who have made a covenant with the Lord by sacrifice, declaring that they will give all to Him. and His service—that they will follow Him at any cost. These are to consider what He endured without fainting in carrying out the Father’s will—what He endured in the way of contradiction of sinners against Himself. This is the very kind of difficulty which we have in our endeavour to carry out the Father’s will. If there were no devil, no sinners, and no trials, this would be a very pleasant world to go through. It is because we have to swim upstream, against the current, when almost everything is going in the opposite direction, that we have such a difficult work. Watch the swimmer: He must battle upstream against the down flowing current; a moment’s relaxation and the current carries him downward. With us there is a natural tendency, as well as in the currents of thought and activity about us in the world, to pull us back in the opposite direction to which we are trying to go.

OUR LORD’S LOYALTY AND OBEDIENCE.

Let us consider His example, His words, or else we may become faint. There are many reasons why we might become so. One of them is that we might consider that the opposition against us is too great. Jesus had the opposition of all those of national influence in His day. He was continually misrepresented, until finally the slanders culminated in His being called a profane person, one who had spoken blasphemies against God, who had said that He was like God, and was as great as God. This was a part of the charge against Him. Although the accusation was not true, nevertheless He endured it, even though He had power to stop it. If He could cast out demons and open the eyes of the blind, then surely He could have done something to change things in His own case. Why, then, did He not do it? Because He was doing the Father’s will, and it was the Father’s will that He should bear witness to the truth, and demonstrate His loyalty in connection with it. Is it not the same with us? But why does the Father care about our loyalty? Because He is seeking a certain class for a certain purpose. In Jesus’ case, He was seeking one to be the Head of the Church. In our case, He is selecting those who will be members of the Body. He has a great plan which contemplates the overthrow of sin and the blessing of all the families of the earth; and He is now looking for those who are in sympathy with all His plans and arrangements. He is seeking for those who would rather suffer death than violate His word or shrink from doing His will.

This is our glorious position, and we are considering One who never made a mistake in carrying out the Father’s will. Yet He suffered as though He had made a great many serious mistakes. He suffered as a disloyal person, although He had always been most loyal. The Jews declared that He had no patriotism at all, yet He was loyal to His own nation in every respect. As Jesus said, “They hated Me without a cause.”

HIS TEMPTATIONS SUBTLE.

Turn these things over in your mind! Consider Him ! This kind of suffering is necessary, for the Father would not be wise in exalting to such a high position anyone who was not thoroughly loyal. He could not give even His own Son the divine nature without a thorough testing. Our Lord, as a new creature, was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin. He was not tempted as a fallen man. The temptations which come to the new creature are different from those which come to the sinner.

Jesus was tempted to grow weary and faint in His mind. This was one of the ways through which special temptations from Satan were placed before Him. Satan told our Lord that He would get rid of these difficulties if He would cooperate with him, and would avoid those things which would necessarily come to Him if He should continue in the way marked out by Jehovah. Our Lord's answer was, "Get thee behind me, Satan!" Another temptation was to show what great power He had received as a spirit-begotten son, to use this power either to gratify His own natural appetite or to make a display before the people. So it is with those of us who may wish to do things in a showy way; instead of in the humble way marked out for us. We may expect to have the same temptations that our Lord had. Therefore we should be on guard that we may prove loyal to the Father.

CHRIST CALLED TO SACRIFICE—"THE BODY" ALSO TO SACRIFICE.

"If we suffer with Him we shall also reign with Him." The reason why the Father is so careful in making the selection of the Church Class is that they are to reign. He could not take hypocrites or any disloyal ones, or even careless ones, to be rulers and teachers of the people in the coming kingdom. He would not select those who had not resisted sin. He must select those who had first learned humility before He could use them to teach humility to others. God desires such a company of priests and judges to be associated with His Son for a thousand years, in ruling and blessing the world, as will prove faithful under all circumstances—those in whom He can place absolute confidence, who have been tested and found faithful. This is the reason that He tests and proves, during this Gospel Age, everyone whom He will receive for that future work.

The call of this Gospel Age is therefore one to sacrifice. God does not hide this fact from us. He does not call us to simply stand up and say that we wish to be followers of Jesus. No! Our Lord says, "If any man will be My disciple, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow Me." There is no deception about the matter. If we have been deceived it is our own fault. The Old Testament says the same thing: "Gather My saints together unto Me; those who have made a covenant with Me by sacrifice." Whoever would follow Jesus must prove his faithfulness by his willingness to sacrifice.

In the past false doctrines confused us, but now "we see Jesus," we see what He accomplished, and how He endured without growing weary or giving up. It makes our course plain when we consider Him. We sometimes say that we have not been careful enough in this or that matter, and have consequently made some mistakes. We can often find some fault in ourselves, thus demonstrating that we are partly to blame for our sufferings. In our Lord's case it was different. He received the slanders, the misrepresentations, and everything else that came against Him, without having any fault in Him at all. "He was holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners"; still, He endured. We, though following in His footsteps, have not as much to endure as had the Master.

THE OUTCOME OF OUR FAITHFUL ENDURANCE.

We are also to consider the outcome. While the Father let Jesus die on the cross as a malefactor, yet He did not let our Lord go permanently, but kept His promise to raise Him from the dead. We have the promise that, as the Father raised up Jesus from the dead, so also will He raise those up who are found worthy by being found faithful unto death. In raising up Jesus, the Father has given us a testimony to His faithfulness. In the case of Jesus, no one had set Him an example. It was all by faith with Him; none had gone before. With us it is different. Besides, we have not so much to lose as had our Lord. However, if we trust God, He is faithful to keep us and to do what He has promised—to raise us up with our Head.

Consider what great things God has done for His Son. Consider also that He has promised us a share in our Lord's glory if we be found faithful. It is amazing, almost beyond conception! Unless God had made it plain we would not have been able to receive it. It has, however, been stated over and over again in so many different ways, that there is no room for doubt. How wonderful it all is!

Consider Him! Consider that God has highly exalted Him! Consider what a great privilege has been afforded us of walking in His footsteps, especially as our lives are so imperfect, so unsatisfactory, even to ourselves, and as life is all that we have to give. What a thought that God will count our little sacrifice as a part of that which Jesus gave! We are to be heirs of God and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ, "to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed at the last time." "Then to think that we are in the last time now ! We 'are right at the close of the Age. The evidences of our day denote this, although the world in general does not understand these signs of changing dispensation. "None of the wicked shall understand, but the wise shall understand" (Dan. 12:10).

How carefully the people of God, therefore, should weigh their thoughts and deeds. "Seeing that these things are to be dissolved, what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy living and godliness, looking for and earnestly desiring the coming of the day of God? . . . According to His promise we look for a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for these things, give diligence that ye may be found of Him in peace, without spot and blameless in His sight. Ye, therefore, beloved, knowing these things beforehand, beware lest being carried away by the error of the wicked ye fall from your own steadfastness. But grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. To Him be the glory, both now and for ever. Amen." (2 Pet. 3:11-18.)

In view of what we see ahead of us as sharers with Jesus of His glory, honour, and immortality, we should be leading holy lives. We should be, living in the future rather than in the past. Do not think too much of the past. Let us not live in the past and dwell upon our mistakes and shortcomings, and thus be cast down, but let us believe that "if we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness" (1 John 1:9). And we should have such an appreciation of these mercies and blessings of forgiveness as to show it forth in our conduct.

Let us give heed more and more to the suggestion of our text, and consider Him whom the Father has so highly exalted. Let us remember that He has called us with the same high and heavenly calling, and has promised to help us all the way through. If we remember this we shall cease to be weary and faint, and shall become strong in the Lord and the power of His might; we shall go on from grace to grace, from glory to glory; we shall be transformed by the renewing of our minds, more and more proving what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God. Then, finally, we shall attain unto the glorious things which He has in reservation for those who love Him more than parents, or children, or self, or any other person or thing.

"Hold on thy way with hope unchilled,
By faith and not by sight;
And thou shalt own His word fulfilled—
At eve it shall be light."

KNOWING.

I know the crimson stain of sin,
Defiling all without, within;
But now rejoicingly I know

That He has washed me white as snow.
I praise Him for the cleansing tide,
Because I know that Jesus died.
I know the helpless, hopeless plaint,

“The whole head sick, the whole heart faint”;
But now I trust His touch of grace
That meets so perfectly my case,

So tenderly, so truly deals;
Because I know that Jesus heals.
I know the pang of forfeit breath,

When life in sin was life in death;
But now I know His life is mine,
And nothing shall that cord untwine,

Rejoicing in the life He gives
Because I know that Jesus lives.
I know how anxious thought can press,

I know the weight of carefulness;
But now I know the sweet reward
Of casting all upon the Lord,

No longer bearing what He bears,
Because I know that Jesus cares.
I know the sorrow that is known

To the tear burdened heart alone;
But now I know its full relief
Through Him who was acquaint with grief,

And peace through every trial flows
Because I know that Jesus knows.
I know the gloom amid the mirth,

The longing for the love of earth;
But now I know the Lord that fills,
That gladdens, blesses, crowns and stills,

That nothing mars and nothing moves—
I know, I know that Jesus loves.
I know the shrinking and the fear,

When all seems wrong and nothing clear;
But now I gaze upon His throne,
And faith sees all His foes o'erthrown,

And I can wait till He explains,
Because I know that Jesus reigns.

Times of perplexity

TIMES of perplexity prevail practically all over the world and the Scripture is being fulfilled which says, "Men's hearts failing them for what is coming on the earth." Those, however, who have respect to the Divine instructions and- warnings through the Lord, the prophets and the apostles, are not taken unawares, nor need they be afraid nor alarmed. Not that God's people are to be untouched by the troublous times. There is no promise that we are to escape all trouble or sorrow or pain; rather on the contrary we know that we must needs have tribulation, persecution, etc., so that our characters may be developed and established. Some of the Apostles and other Christians have "suffered the loss of all things," have been in shipwrecks and gone hungry and without proper clothing and yet have been able to rejoice in the Lord and in the end have received more than recompense, so that, as the Apostle has said of his trials, they also can say: "These light afflictions, which are but for a moment, will work out a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

If, then, we like others find the times hard and suffer loss through no fault of our own, let us remember that "all things shall work together for our (eternal) good." Our times, ourselves, our all are in our Father's care, and nothing can happen to us unless be permitted by Him. He can lift our load, and lighten our burden; He can provide all that we need, if we will trust Him and just seek to keep ourselves at rest and peace in His will. Surely those who understand the present truth and who not only are forewarned concerning the coming storms, but who can see the silver lining in the, clouds, and who know that He in whom they trust "neither slumbers nor sleeps," but will guard His people; and that "there is nothing too hard for Him," can beyond others courageously face the coming troubles in confidence and peace.

Men may still be able for a little while to patch up the crumbling systems, and it is good to see that there are some leading men who are seeking righteousness and equity in the necessary readjustment of conditions in this country.

The financial position has been brought about by improvidence and gross extravagance on the part of the governments and people generally. It was foretold that this would be a sign of the end of the age—Matt. 24:37-39, Luke 17:26-30 and 2 Tim. 3:1-5. Though it may seem unjust that those who have lived carefully should have to suffer with those who have brought about the trouble, yet, we should be glad to bear our share uncomplainingly. As the time of trouble prophesied by Daniel 12:1 and our Lord in Matt. 24 develops, those whose hearts are not set on the holding of or attaining earthly wealth will not feel the stress as others must, and such may find many opportunities of encouraging hope concerning the better day, so soon to follow the dark night preceding the rising of the sun of righteousness which will dispel the ignorance and superstition and false views of the Divine purpose and cause the light of truth to bring joy and gladness. Then Satan's dominion will be overthrown and Christ and His saints shall take the dominion and establish righteousness and peace in the earth. What good reasons we have as God's people, full of hope for humanity, and with the exceeding great and precious promises for ourselves, for rejoicing that the day of deliverance of the Church is so near and that it will be followed by the deliverance of all the poor groaning creation from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God.—Romans 8:19-22.

PALESTINE MANDATE.

JEWS' CLAIM TO CANAAN.

Mr. Lloyd George, whose name has been given to -a colony in Palestine in gratitude for his services to Zionism, was the guest of the Zionist Federation in Great Britain at the Savoy Hotel.

In referring to the mandate, Mr. Lloyd George declared it must be carried out not seriously or apologetically, but firmly and fearlessly as a policy in which they genuinely believed. The first duty of the Government was to protect the lives and properties of all citizens without respect to race or creed. The Jews had a special claim to Canaan, as they were -the only people who had made a success of it during the past 3000 years. Since the Jews had been enriched through contact with every civilisation on the earth, he was entitled to expect great things from the Palestine experiment, the progress of which since the mandate had been issued had been incredible. The people who had faced an age-long persecution would not turn back on account of a single squalid, cowardly riot.

Sir Herbert Samuel declared that if the Jews appreciated the Arab standpoint, the Arabs would in time appreciate the Jewish claims. In the meanwhile the Government must maintain peace and order, and proceed with the economic and educational development—Melbourne “Age.” -

BE OF GOOD COURAGE.

“To work fearlessly, to follow earnestly after truth, to rest with a child-like confidence in God’s guidance, to leave one’s lot willingly and heartily to Him—this is my sermon to myself. If we could live more within sight of heaven, we should care less for the turmoil of earth.” —J. R. Green.

A SOLDIER OF THE CROSS.

WAS there ever a nobler soldier of the Cross than St. Paul—the Redeemer alone excepted? Soldiers of fortune and patriots have indeed left their marks in the world and on the pages of history, but not one of them has left so indelible a mark as St. Paul. The motive power influencing others has generally been selfishness, but the motive power of the Christian is the reverse—love. Others hazarded and laid down their lives in self-interest, or in the interest of their kin or tongue. St. Paul, copying his Master, laid down his life for Jew and Gentile, bond and free, male and female, to assist in gathering the “elect” to be the Bride of Christ—that ultimately through the glorified King and His glorified Bride, all the families of the earth may receive the blessings which God waits to give through Abraham’s Seed.—Gal. 3:29.

St. Paul’s courageous life reminds us of the words of the poet

Be a hero in the strife.”

God is seeking only for heroes now. By and by He -will deal with the remainder, helpfully. The “elect” must all be courageous, “conformed to the image of His Son”—heroes. Hence the promise to the Church is “to him that overcometh.” And let us remember that scripturally considered this character Which the Lord seeks may be developed in very humble stations; no matter how low, all may develop the overcoming qualities which the Lord will reward. (1 Cor. 1:26-29.)

When writing the words of our study St. Paul realised that the close of his career was near—his course was finished.

He recognised as a Christian that he had certain lessons to learn in the School of Christ and this was a part of his course of preparation for joint-heirship with Christ in the glories of the Messianic Kingdom. The course included not merely theory, hut also practice. He not only theoretically learned about Christ, but experimentally. He became a partaker with Him in the sufferings of this present time. And sympathetically he was permitted to enter into a large degree of knowledge of the “mystery” of the Divine Plan hidden from the world.

Not only had his own course of instruction been a thorough one, but he had been given a post-graduate course as an ambassador for his Lord and Redeemer and as an apostle for the brethren, the Church. Moreover, he recognised the fact that all such as become members of the Body of Christ are so directly under the Divine supervision and regulations that their times are in God’s hand—all of their affairs of life, temporal and spiritual. As the Master’s death could not occur “until His hour was come,” so likewise it is with His consecrated members. •

He had kept the faith and the faith had kept him. Many do not realise how important are knowledge and a correct faith. ‘My people perish for lack of know-ledge’ is the Lord’s testimony. And their faith can keep pace only with their knowledge, for faith must have a basis. A correct life depends greatly upon a correct faith. Why did our forefathers burn one another at the stakes in a diabolical manner? Because they were governed by error. False doctrines, styled by the Apostle “doctrines of devils,” had been presented to them and they had believed them. And the legitimate outcome of the wrong belief, the wrong faith, was wrong doing. Believing that God purposed the torture of His creatures for centuries in purgatory or for countless millions of years in eternal torment, they copied the misconception of the Almighty in their lives, to our horror.

But St. Paul had kept the faith—the true faith once delivered unto the saints—faith in the Redeemer's sacrifice; faith in its application on our 'behalf faith in our justification by the Father on that account; faith in the glorious promises of God's Word; faith in the Lord and faith in the brethren. Surely it meant something to keep the faith especially when we realise that our great adversary, Satan, is on the alert continually to take it from us or turn or twist it to our loss or injury.

The crown mentioned, the Apostle had seen for many years, with the eye of his faith, as a part of the Lord's promise. He had absolute confidence in the Lord and in the promise he had received from Him. That crown had been his cause of rejoicing for many years, not because of pride or ambition, but because of love and benevolence. he would love to receive that crown because it would be the mark of Divine appreciation and love for him; and a mark of his faithfulness. He esteemed it because it would afford him untold opportunity Of blessing his fellowmen in association with his Lord and the brethren on the plane of glory during the Millennium.

He hoped for this crown, but did not hope to receive it at death, He knew the Bible teaching on the subject of the resurrection—that this was his God's provision for the communication of His blessing, first for the Church, and subsequently for the world. He knew and taught that there would be "a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust." (Acts 24:15.) he desired to have a share with his Redeemer in all of His glorious Kingdom work, and he knew that it could not begin until the completion of this Gospel Age, When all the elect Church, as members of the Bride of Christ, would share in "His resurrection," to glory, honour, immortality and glorious Kingdom privileges.— Phil. 3:10;11.

It was for this reason that he proceeded to declare that the crown was laid up for him—awaiting him—not at death, but at the time of his resurrection. That crown the Lord would give to him and to all others in the attitude of heart to appreciate His revelation at the Second Advent—"that day." True, not many - at the present time love His appearing. The majority, not only of the world, but also of Christians, seeking but not finding in pleasures, riches and honours of men, have certain ambitions along these lines which they would like to satisfy first, and then possibly they might be willing for the Lord to establish His Kingdom. But, no! by the time their lives have been spent in such pursuits they are usually thoroughly disappointed and bewildered and generally further than ever from seeking the Kingdom.

None but the faithful will receive this crown. Thank God, the remainder will not be tortured, but, on the contrary, will be blessed 'by their crowned brethren, from whom, as the Christ of God, will go the blessings of restitution through the agency of the Messianic Kingdom.. Eventually all the blind eyes of understanding will be opened— eventually all will see the great Messiah, though -invisible to the natural sight. Then every knee shall bow and every tongue confess to the glory of God.

St. Paul closes his exhortation by reciting that in his trial before Nero some in whom lie had full confidence had forsaken him, and he concludes that the Lord, nevertheless, stood with him and strengthened him, and that lie had every confidence in His care to the end of the way.

Am I a soldier of the Cross,
A follower of the Lamb ?
And shall I fear to own His cause,
Or blush to speak His name ?
Sure I must fight if I would reign;
Increase my courage, Lord;
I'll bear the toil, endure the pain,
Supported by Thy Word.

BAD TEMPER IN THE HOME.

“Bad-tempered people are always a nuisance,” writes Rev. G. D. Rosenthal in “The Saint in the Street.” “On committees, and boards of management, and church councils, they make business difficult to do, waste valuable time by unnecessary bickering, and impart a bitter flavour to the most ordinary differences of opinion. In clubs and offices and workshops they create an atmosphere of unpleasantness and discomfort, sow the seeds of discord, and ruin free and healthy social intercourse.”

“But,” he continues, “it is in the home that they usually hit their hardest, and do most injury, inflicting wounds on those who are nearest and dearest to them, for which occasional gifts and bursts of good nature do little to atone. No one whose lot it has been to live for a while with a thoroughly ill-tempered person would, I fancy, willingly repeat the experience. No other form of vice, not worldliness, nor avarice, nor lust, nor drunkenness does more to make life utterly intolerable than bad temper. For embittering existence, for breaking up friendships, for devastating homes, for withering up men and women, for taking the bloom off children, the sin of anger stands alone.”—’Christian World.”

Question Box.

Question.—To what time would the Sabbath 'Day refer in Matthew 24:20?

Answer.—First of all it would seem clear that this passage could not refer to the typical Sabbath, because the distress referred to is to come not upon the nations of Israel, so much as upon the nominal Christian world, and the Law Covenant with its commandments, the fourth of which relates to the Sabbath, has never been made binding upon any other people than Israel. It would make no difference to those not under the Law, Whether they fled on the Sabbath or not: it would be no more hardship to flee on that day than on any other. The passage had a preliminary instruction referring to the days of trouble and ultimate fall of Jerusalem in A.D. 70, but there was no limitation to a Sabbath for the inhabitants of Jerusalem to make good their escape. The Roman Army was simply withdrawn for a time and Christians, having respect to our Lord's instruction, took the opportunity to get out, so that Josephus remarks upon the matter and claims that no Christian perished in the utter destruction of the city or its terrible experiences during the renewed siege.

It is quite clear that the real fulfilment of this great prophecy is yet to be, and refers to the overthrow of Christendom in the time of trouble spoken of by Daniel 12:1 to take place at the second presence of Christ. The whole passage is in highly figurative language, in which it was customary for our Lord to speak. Were we to endeavour to take the passage in a literal way, how could they flee from Judea into the mountains, if they were not to come down from the housetops (vide verses 16 and 17)? But each expression has its own instruction to those who have "ears to hear."

So it is in the 20th verse, the Lord is not referring to the literal winter time nor the typical Jewish Sabbath. Day. The reference appears to be to the gathering out from the condemned systems, those who are truly the Lord's people.

When the Harvest is complete, the four winds of trouble will be let loose (Rev. 7:1) and those still clinging to the old associations of nominal Christendom will partake in her plagues in the winter time of trouble. Immediately following upon the great time of trouble, the great antitypical Sabbath will commence. A day when the poor groaning creation, which has been travailing in pain together for six one-thousand-year days of labour and sweat of face to earn a living, will cease from its heavy labour, and find that by complying with the righteous rule of Christ and His saints (Satan and the wicked spirits having been bound or restrained), all labouring under heavy burdens, under the bondage of sin, Satan and death, pain and sorrow, will cease. Rom. 8:19, 22.

The Church of Christ have by faith already entered into this rest in God's will, the rest of faith. Heb. 4:1-4.

The thought contained in our Lord's words of verse 20 seems to be, that some may delay coming away from the systems of error which have been "spued out" (Rev. 3:16) and be like the foolish virgins in the parable following.

They will be too late to enter the marriage chamber of the Bridegroom and Bride, for it will then be proclaimed "the marriage of the Lamb has come, and the Bride has made herself ready."

How necessary it is for those who come to a knowledge of present truth and of the second presence of Christ to take a positive stand against the grave errors that are being taught and to enter into the work of the harvest. The Lord being present, is surely controlling matters among His people and judging respecting the use of their talents and exercise in service, which is to “gather the elect from the four winds of heaven,” from the four quarters of Christendom. “Take heed that no man take thy crown.” “Take heed that thy flight be not on the Sabbath,” when the door will be found to have been shut.

The fact of the exhortation to avoid the winter time and the Sabbath for flight indicates the possibility of avoiding both. If, as some imagine, that Christ was coining and would accomplish the judgment all in twenty-four hours, then, however any might watch or “take heed,” they could not alter whatever day it might be, but as we are already living in “the days of the son of man” and the gathering of the elect is proceeding, the exhortation is most appropriate.

Question.—In Acts 3:19 Peter says that times of refreshing might come from the presence of the Lord. Does he refer to the second presence of Christ?

Answer.—The word rendered “presence” by the Authorised Version, in this text, is apt to mislead in the connection. It is not the Greek word “parousia,” meaning presence, but “prosopon,” which signifies “face” or “countenance.” The Lord hides His face, withdraws His favour from the disobedient or wicked, but lifts up the light of His countenance and grants His blessing of peace to the broken and contrite heart.

Peter boldly told the people that they had crucified the Lord of Glory—the long-promised Messiah. They could not have a continuation of Divine favour under such circumstances.

He says, however, that it was no doubt through ignorance they did it, as also did their rulers. Therefore, if they truly turned from their wickedness and repented, the Lord would blot out their sins and they would have some refreshing times of Divine favours, and Jehovah would send again their Messiah, the same Jesus who had been preached unto them, whom they had slain, but whom God had raised from the dead, who had ascended to heaven to wait until He would come again and bring about the “restitution” of all things which God had promised by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began!

The times of refreshing, however, were what might be immediately enjoyed by the repentants, their sins being forgiven through the blood of Jesus Christ, and would come from Jehovah who would send Jesus again in due time.

FOLLOW AFTER PEACE.

WE may by nature be more or less indisposed to peace, restless, dissatisfied, discontented, fearful, foreboding or quarrelsome, but following the course outlined, we learn to trust God in all our affairs, and it is the peace of God which comes to us from the realisation of God's power and goodness and willingness to guard us, which will keep us from worry and anxiety. It keeps the Christian's mind so that he at heart has peace with the Lord, fellowships communion; and it guards his mind also, instructing and assuring him respecting the Divine power, wisdom and love. But it does not assure him of anything respecting his own perfection or worthiness of acceptance before God. This proper peace merely assures us of our standing in Divine favour through Jesus Christ.

The Apostle points out that, the will having been consecrated to the Lord, faith having been exercised in rejoicing and thanksgiving in all of the Lord's providences, the peace of trust having come in, the further steps in the development of character will be through guarding the thoughts; and this means also the guarding of words and acts, because it is out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh and that the whole course of life is directed. What, then, should be the trend of the Christian's thoughts after he has reached the development already outlined by the Apostle? It should be towards things that are true, having no sympathy with anything that is false or exaggerated. 'Whoever sympathises with falsehood or exaggeration is more or less defiling himself. Nor is it sufficient that we are sure of the truth of anything; we must test them, further and discern to what extent they are honourable, for although the Lord has accepted us and has covered the unworthy features of our characters, and purposes to cover them to the end with the merit of Christ, nevertheless we cannot be in sympathy with the unworthy features of our fallen condition, but on the contrary must desire true nobility and the highest standard of honour in our hearts and in all our dealings. The thing might be true, but is it honourable to think about it, or to tell about it?

If we would think on good things, we must of necessity lift our mental vision to as high a point as possible, and as nearly as we are able, to discern the perfect character of our Lord and Saviour, and proportionately the loveliness manifested in one or another of the followers of Jesus, who walk closely in His footsteps. The mind that frequently calls up the lovely perfections of the Lord and the truth, and is well filled by these, is guarded greatly against intrusions of unlovely and unholy things contrary to the spirit of the Lord. How few can say what the Apostle says, "The things which ye both learned and received and heard and saw in me these things do." This should be the standard of all Christians because they each and all are representatives of the Lord. ambassadors for Him; hence, so far as lieth in them, their conduct and words should be such as would be living epistles read by the brethren and by the world to profit. No wonder the Apostle adds that doing this "the peace of God shall be with you."

The Apostle further says, "I rejoice in the Lord greatly, that now at length, ye have revived your thought for me." These words seem, to imply that their thoughtfulness for the Apostle and earnestness to improve opportunities to serve him, had to some extent relaxed for a time and then revived. Then, as though fearful that his words might be understood as a reproof, he adds, "ye did indeed take thought, but ye lacked opportunity." How careful he was not to unnecessarily wound the feelings of the brethren, and how careful we should all likewise be to let the love of God extend, not only to the degree of giving us liberal sentiments toward the brethren, but also to the extent of influencing our tongues and pens not to wound unnecessarily even the least of them. The Apostle points out that he is not complaining of want. He had learned to put into practice himself, the lesson which he was just communicating to them, to cast aside anxious thought and to approach the Lord in prayer and supplication, in thanksgiving, and he possessed the resultant peace. In this condition of heart, however many may have been his necessities, he was not in want, for he was satisfied that the Father would provide the things which he really needed, and more he did not want; for, as he explains, he had learned the lesson, "In whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content." We are not to be contented after the manner of the indolent and shiftless, who would prefer to live at the expense of others who "labour with their hands." We are not to be content to allow opportunities and talents, and privileges which the Lord has given us, to lie idly by, unused; but, while using these talents and Opportunities to the best of our ability and intelligence, and while seeking in prayer and thanksgiving to use them all as would please the Lord, we should be content with the result of such efforts. We should at all times conclude that our Heavenly Father is quite able to supply our needs in the manner and to the degree that would be for our highest welfare. "Be content with such things as ye have," does not ignore talents and opportunities, for these are part of the things which we have, the things which as stewards we are bound to use to the Best of our judgments.

Surely the Lord was fitting the Apostle for a grand place in the heavenly kingdom when He gave him such a variety of experiences. Surely as the Lord was touched with the feeling of our infirmities that He might be a faithful High Priest, so the Apostle by his experiences evidently was being fitted and prepared for a very honourable and prominent place in the Royal Priesthood of the same kingdom. And so with us: if we find our experiences in life very checkered, we may conclude that the Lord sees that we need both the heights and depths of prosperity and adversity properly to instruct us, and qualify us for the position He designs for us in the future. Let us, then, as the Apostle did, learn how to abound, not allowing the abundance of earthly good things to swerve us from our consecration vows; and learn also how to be in want and yet not want anything beyond what the Lord's wisdom and providences sees best to give. The secret of the Apostle's success is stated in Phil. 4:13. It was his close relationship to the Lord, his intimate union with Him, his reliance upon Him; he was abiding as a branch in the Vine, and was strengthened by the same spirit, and thus enabled to do all these things, to pass through all these experiences with gratitude, with thankfulness, rejoicing, and with that peace that passeth all understanding. Let us also learn from his example.

It is also written in Psa. 119:165, "Great peace have they that love Thy law and nothing shall offend them" — nothing shall cause them to stumble. It remains that there is only one sure, safe course to pursue for those who would gain the prize of our high calling, and that is a course of fidelity and loyalty to the truth, with a full determination to be obedient unto the true gospel, and not to give heed to any seducing spirits which might try to attract our attention and service away from the truth. The understanding here is that they that love the law have great peace. The Lord has been graciously leading into the knowledge of the deep things of His wisdom and grace. It is right that the prospective joint-heirs with Christ should be fully tested before the establishment of His kingdom, and consequently the Lord has permitted and will permit our great adversary to test severely all accounted worthy of the light of present truth. Strong delusions are being brought against the awakened children of God. Certain elements of truth are united with error in various forms to lead away such as do not truly love His law; and these delusions will, according to Scripture, become so strong that if it were possible the very elect would be deceived. God knoweth them that are His, who meekly abide under the wedding garment of Christ's imputed righteousness, and who are daily seeking to be more conformed to the image of our Lord. For such as go astray let us remember that a preparation for, thus leaving the foundation and getting ready for the deception is laid beforehand always. Instead of truth leading such to humble service, it leads to pride or to carelessness and worldliness. Let us remember the Master's words to the apostles, "Let not your hearts be troubled." (John 14:1.)

While still sharers in the trials we have the consolation of God's Holy Spirit, and the Word of "Truth to offset these troubles and to make them "light afflictions." As the Apostle says, so it should be with us all. "None of these things move me," none of these experiences in life cause anxious thought, "because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts.” “Thou shalt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee,. because he trusteth in Thee.”

THE HARVEST HOME.

“And I heard a voice from, heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them” (Rev. 14:13).

“We, the living, who are left over to the coming (Greek—parousia—presence) of the Lord, will by no means precede those who fell asleep. Because the Lord. Himself will come down from Heaven with a shout, with an Archangel’s voice, and with God’s Trumpet and the dead in Christ will be raised first; then the living who are ‘left over,’ shall at the same time (during His parousia) with them. be caught away in clouds, for a meeting of the Lord in the air; and so we shall be always with the Lord” (1 Thess. 4:1 5-1 7 Diaglott).

THE climax of the natural harvest is reached only when all the fruitage of the season’s labours having been safely gathered, both Husbandman and reapers, unite in celebrating the “harvest home.” It is the happiest and most joyful moment of the entire season, not only for the Master, but also for the servants, or reapers, as well. Strenuous labours and anxious care having come to an end, with the bringing home of the last sheaf, place is now given to unalloyed pleasure with sounds of merriment and joy.

All this is a very fitting figure of the Great Home-gathering beyond the veil, when, the last member of the overcoming Christ class having passed safely within, the “mystery of God” will be finished, in so far as the work of this Age is concerned (Rev. 10:7). Then, will be heard the great Hallelujah chorus, which will resound throughout the universe and myriads of Angelic beings will acclaim honour, glory and praise to Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever (Rev. 5:13).

OUR GATHERING UNTO HIM.

Reference has been made, repeatedly, to the fact that the gathering-time of the Church is during the Harvest period. and that this work of gathering beyond the veil began with the return of our Lord, or what is generally termed His “parousia.” Attention has also been called to the Scriptural signs of His presence, both in the world and amongst the Lord’s followers, which would be recognised by those who would be watching; further, that these signs are clearly evident to-day and have been so, for a considerable number of years. In this connection, it is much more important, we believe, for the Child of God to be able to recognise these signs and thus to know that He has come, rather than to attempt to discover, or define, the exact day and hour of the Master's arrival.

Since the Scriptures point out that the first work of our Lord, at His second presence, would be the raising out of death and gathering unto Himself of the sleeping saints, we must, therefore, conclude that this is an accomplished fact, since the beginning of the Harvest period—a matter now some years in the past (1 /less. 4:16; 1 Cor. 15:52). Nor need the fact that none of the risen Saints is visible to human sight, be any hindrance to faith, any more than that the Lord Himself, now a spirit being, cannot be seen by the natural eye. Some, through lack of spiritual understanding, do not appreciate the fact that spiritual and human natures are quite separate and distinct, and are not prepared therefore, to appreciate the full meaning of the Master's words when, in this connection, He declared, "That which is born of the flesh 'is flesh'; and that which is born of the Spirit 'is spirit' " (John 3:6).

Zion, as represented by the risen Saints joined with their Lord and Head, is now being established in spiritual control, and this accounts for the peculiar troubles coming upon the world to-day, together with the undermining and shaking of the present controlling powers (Matt. 24:30; Psalm 1:5). When the last members of the Body have finished their course and been gathered home, Zion will be complete. In authority and power it will then take control of all the world's affairs and thus the Millennial rule Will begin. Incidentally, this change of earth's rulership will mean a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation (Matt. 24:21).

WE SHALL BE CHANGED.

The period, between the resurrection of the sleeping saints and the passing beyond the veil of the last members of the Body, still alive upon the earth during the "parousia," is the most momentous, but at the same time, the most blessed of all the experiences of the Church in the flesh (Dan. 12:12). To those who are walking in the light, it is a time of great joy and blessing, in that they are privileged to co-operate with the Chief Reaper, in the work of the Harvest-time. On the other hand, it is a time of severe testing of faith so searching that only the elect, overcoming class, will be able to escape the snares and deceptions of the Adversary (Matt. 24:24).

It is clear, from the general teaching of the Scriptures, that every member of Christ must complete his sacrifice in death. Our consecration, as prefigured in the consecration of Israel's priesthood is unto death the giving up entirely of the human nature in sacrifice in order that we might receive, beyond the veil, the heavenly, Divine nature. Failure to appreciate this fact, and also the part which the members of Christ—the Lord's goat class—play in the world's atonement, has led many to suppose that the members of Christ living at the time of the Lord's second advent, would not require to die at all. These, misled by false ideas regarding the manner of the Lord's second coming, and misunderstanding the Apostle's teaching regarding this matter, in his letters to the Thessalonians and Corinthians, believe that the Lord will appear in a body of flesh and that all the living saints will be momentarily caught up, without dying, in their natural bodies. This, of course, is all wrong, very crude, and quite out of harmony with the true conception of spiritual things, as well as the Scriptural teaching on this matter.

John, the Revelator, gives us the correct setting of this glorious truth, when, recording the angel's words, he writes "Blessed are the dead (consecrated ones') which die in the Lord from henceforth"—from the time of the Lord's presence (Rev. 14:13). The thought, of course, would not be that death in itself would be a blessing, but that "from henceforth" it would not be the lot of those who died in the Lord, to sleep in death as those who died previous to the Lord's Second Coming. Blessed rather, would be their change at death, from the present mortal condition to that of immortality "That they may rest from their labours (this side, the veil); and their works do follow them."

Those who look for the Lord to appear again, in a body of flesh, and expect to be caught up without, dying, at the moment of His arrival, rely mainly upon the Apostle's words to the Thessalonians, as given in the authorised version -of our Bible (1 Thess. 4:17). From this, they gather that there will be a sudden and simultaneous "rapture" of the entire Church, living and dead, at the moment of the Lord's return. A little consideration, however, should reveal that this conception of the matter is quite out of harmony with the Apostle's teachings in the context. In verse 16, he tells us that when the Lord descends from Heaven, the "dead" in Christ will rise "first." Now, it is obvious that if the dead ones only, are taken to be with the Lord "first," then the living ones cannot "also" be taken "first," but must be taken "afterwards." Indeed, the Apostle then proceeds to tell us, in the following verse, that the being ones "remain" or, as the Diaglott renders it, "are left over."

The expressions "rise first" and "remain" are clearly placed in antithesis in the context—the one relating to the dead in Christ and the other to the living in Christ. So far as those alive are concerned, they are left over, or remain, but as regards the dead they do "not remain" any longer in death, but rise at once. Thus, the dead in Christ are gathered home first, while the living ones are gathered later in the Harvest-time.

It should be mentioned here, that some obscurity has gathered around the meaning of the Apostle's words in this verse, 'by a poor translation as given in the authorised version of our Bible, but the Diaglott translation of verse 17, is much clearer and more correct. The Greek word, "hama," which occurs in the original text of this verse, is improperly translated "together"- in the sense of "in contact with" each other. Professor Young tells us that this word has no reference to locality, but is purely an adverb of time, and it is, therefore, more correctly rendered in the Diaglott—"at the same time." The time period here referred to, is the "parousia" and the sense, as already indicated, is that while the dead saints are raised at the "commencement" of the "parousia" period, the living ones will be caught away "later during the same time" of His presence—for blessed are the dead who die in the Lord "from henceforth."

THE BRIDE HATH MADE HERSELF READY.

The marriage, or union, of the Bride and Bridegroom', takes place at the close of the Harvest-time. The figure illustrates the gathering and uniting of the members of the Body with their Head. This gathering began with the raising of the sleeping saints and will be complete when the last member of Christ has passed within, and the door has been shut (Matt. 25:10).

The marriage feast follows immediately after the completion of the marriage ceremony and symbolises the joy and gladness that will fill the universe when the Church is glorified in the Kingdom. Harvest home and the marriage Feast, both speak to us of the same glorious truth, that soon, when the sufferings of Christ in the flesh are over, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then not only will the Heavenly Courts resound with songs of triumph and victory to God and the Lamb, but the earth itself will begin to be filled with the glory of God, and eventually all tears shall be wiped away (Rev. 21:1-4).

THE HOUR OF TEMPTATION.

It is our hope, that very soon the last faithful over-comers will 'be joined with the Lord beyond the veil. Meantime, it behoves all true followers of the Master, to walk soberly, meekly and humbly—yet confidently—in the midst of present circumstances. Let us not lose faith nor be stumbled, as we realise that but few of all who profess to be following the Master in these latter days, give evidence of even discerning—far less overcoming—the snares and deceptions of the Adversary, now working in our midst (Psalm 91:7). Let us not be dismayed, if even like the Master Himself, it should be the portion of the last faithful remnant, in drinking of His cup, to be esteemed by professing fellow Christians as He was—"stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted"—as though He was really the sinner (Isa. 53:4).

Our Lord, in faithfully bearing witness to the truth, was put to death by God's professing people as a blasphemer, and surely "the disciple is not above his Master, nor the servant above his Lord" (Matt. 10:24).

—"The Old Paths."

KEPT IN PERFECT PEACE.

"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed in Thee" (Isa. 26:3).

This thought is very precious to us as New Creatures. "The peace of God, which passeth all understanding," is to rule and keep our minds and hearts (Phil. 4:7). We are to count the things of the present life as not worthy of comparison with the glories of eternity. And so the Apostle says, "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal" (2 Cor. 4:17-18). When our minds are stayed on the Lord, and we take the proper view of our experiences, we can sing with the poet:

"No storm can shake my inmost calm,
While to this Refuge clinging."

We have peace, no matter what the outward conditions may be. The trials and difficulties of life come to the Lord's people commingled with joys—the rain and storm, then the sunshine. They enjoy all righteous pleasures that are in harmony with their consecration. They learn to cultivate patience in trial, knowing that patience works out experience, and experience works out more and more that hope which maketh not ashamed (Rom. 5:3-5).

So, then, it is to the Christian that our text brings the assurance that when God gives quietness, none can make trouble. They_ "shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for My sake," said the Muster, but then we are to "rejoice and be exceeding glad." "Let not your heart be troubled" (Matt. 5:11; John 14:1).

TROUBLE NECESSARY TO OUR PROVING.

Our Heavenly Father designs that various kinds of trouble shall come upon us, that these may develop and prove our characters. It is a part of the Divine Plan to permit us to have experiences of affliction (Psalm 119:67, 71, 75; 34:19-20). So when we see God's people in trouble or trial to-day we are not to say that God is against them. We are each to demonstrate our willingness to suffer according to His will, and often to suffer unjustly. Our Lord set us an example of cheerful, patient, submission to God's will. We are to walk in His footsteps. We have the examples of the Apostles, when trials and difficulties and persecutions came upon them; and the example of other saints all down the Age.

Trouble is not necessarily a sign of the disfavor of God. On the contrary, we know that "many are the afflictions of the righteous," and that "All that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." The truth will cost them something. Faithfulness to the Lord will cost them much. As the Apostle says, "If ye be without chastisement (discipline, training), then are ye bastards and not sons" (HO). 12:8). If God gives peace of heart, who can upset the one who is thus in harmony with God, in whom this peace of heart is ruling? This, then, is the greatest blessing of all. And He grants this peace to those who are faithfully striving to walk in the footsteps of Jesus. We have a Refuge, which none but His own can know. No harm can reach us within this shelter; no storm can shake us from our moorings, for we are securely anchored to the Rock of Ages. "And we know that all things work together for good to those who love God, to the called according to His purpose" (Rom. 8:28).

"What though my joys and comfort die!
The Lord, my Saviour, liveth;
What though the darkness gather round!
Songs in the night He giveth.

No storm can shake my inmost calm,
While to that Refuge clinging;
Since Christ is Lord of Heaven and earth,
How can I keep from singing?"

Falling Away from Faith.

When the Son of Man cometh shall lie find faith on the earth.”
The following is clipped from the “Christian World”:

ST. PAUL AND THE FALL.

“St. Paul,” said Dr. Barnes, Bishop of Birmingham, in his Lloyd Roberts lecture before the Manchester University Medical School, “imagined that evil and death resulted from Adam’s fall. We have learned, on the contrary, that evil and good are equally likely to arise at every stage of the evolutionary process.” “The notion that evil is due to a fall, to some act of spiritual rebellion against God, must be abandoned,” he said. “We need not grieve over the loss of such a theory, as it cannot really relieve God of ultimate responsibility for His Creation.”

Dr. Barnes has been prominently before the Christian world, particularly in opposing the Anglo-Catholic movement in England; and while one could admire his noble stand for Christian liberty in opposing the encroachment of Rome, it seems to make it all the more deplorable to note his remarks about St. Paul. The evolution theory, of course, will not fit in with the Bible teaching of the fall and how’ death passed upon all through one man’s sin, and so the Bishop loses his faith in the Bible as God’s inspired Word, and in Paul as an inspired writer. He says Paul only “imagined” that sin and death resulted from Adam’s fall. Certainly Paul was no evolutionist; he did teach with no uncertain sound, that by one man, sin entered and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men. This not “imagination,” but is Bible teaching from Genesis to Revelation. Only because all were representatively condemned in Adam, being included in sin, could all be ransomed from the condemnation by the one 110111 Christ, the second Adam (Rom:5:12, 17-21). Thus; it is that, “As all in Adam die so all in Christ shall be made alive again” (1 Cor. 15:21-22).

The first three chapters of Genesis show the “Fall” and how sin and death passed upon all Adam’s posterity. The teaching runs throughout the Bible, and that the only way of salvation is by a ransom being paid, a man’s life for man’s life. So Jesus became flesh that He might “give His life a ransom for many.” The matter was prearranged, as the fall was fore-known to God, and thus we read of “the Lamb of God slain from the foundation of the world.” “The Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world.” Peter says, “He bore our sins on the tree”; and Isaiah speaks of Him as “Pouring out His soul unto death”— “bearing the sins of many”—“the iniquity of us all.” -Without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sin.

Because the ransom has been paid there is to be a resurrection of all, and opportunity of gaining life during the “times of restitution of all things which God has spoken by the mouths of all the holy prophets since the world began” (Acts 3:20-21). So Paul was not the only inspired writer who taught the doctrine of original sin and its remedy.

It is preposterous for one professing to be a minister of Christ to belittle the Apostle, who was more used than any other to propound the Gospel, and to whom we owe nearly all the New Testament. If St. Paul only “imagined” the wonderful philosophy of his epistles, particularly the one to the Romans, also the Hebrews, then surely what Moses and all the prophets have written was, also, only imaginations. Such would be an absurdity in view of the fact that the writings by different men cover a period of about 1500 years, and yet are so wonderfully in accord, and so much has had actual fulfilment. Attacks, from without, upon the Bible by infidels are much less likely to undermine faith in God’s Word written “by holy men of old as they were moved by the Holy Spirit.” than such statements from within, made by prominent leaders as ministers of the Gospel.

THE WAY TO ACCEPT A FAVOUR.

A young woman who was private secretary to the head of a college, when returning to her lodgings, slipped on the steps and sprained her ankle. She managed to reach her room, but was quite unable to go out and get something for her supper, and was delighted when the girl who had the room next to hers came in to see what she could do.

“Please let me go out and get you something to eat,” she begged.

“That is most kind of you,” said the secretary. “My purse is on the table.”

“No,” said her neighbour; “I want to get the things myself and come in and have supper with you here!”

“How delightful!” cried the secretary, “We will have a real party!”

So, instead of protesting, she let her friend give the “party.” She praised the food and thanked her for the jelly supper.

A few days later there was an afternoon tea at the college, to which the secretary invited her new friend. She explained why she came with a crutch, and told of the oilier girl’s kindness to her, and of the impromptu supper-party and how she had enjoyed it.

We should accept favours, not grudgingly, not awkwardly, but graciously and appreciatively; then watch for the first opportunity to bless the giver in return, with gratitude and love.

Question Box.

Question:—In what Way does the fourth watch in Mark. 6:48 typify the early dawn of the Millennial day, as per “Dawn Studies Comment,” by C. J. Woodworth?

Answer:—With reference to the comments on Mark 6:48, it seems that the event of Christ coming to the disciples in the fourth watch on the sea, was taken by Bro. Russell as a picture of Christ’s Second Advent (His Second Presence) , delivering His Church from the waves of trouble at the end of this Gospel Age, and bringing them safely to shore—to our heavenly shore.

This, we believe, is a beautiful picture, but our thoughts differ on the point of this taking place at the beginning of the Millennial Age. It will be remembered that Bro. Russell thought of the Millennial Age commencing about 1874, and that there was an overlapping period for the events closing one age and opening up another. No doubt most of the friends in the truth have seen for many years that the Millennial Age in no sense can begin until all the Lord’s people are gathered home, and the time of trouble over; then will be ushered in the glad day of restitution, the 1000 years of blessing and healing, and restoring, which is shown later on in the same chapter, where, when Jesus and His disciples reached the shore (the Church complete with Him), He healed the sick in all the villages and country round about (verses, 53-56).

The fourth watch, according to the Roman division of the night, which the Jews had adopted, would be from 3 a.m. to 6 a.m., and would fitly represent in the picture the closing period of this dark night of storm and trouble, sin and death, during which our Lord has come, and soon, with all His faithful saints, to arise as the morning light, at the end of the fourth watch—the Sun of righteousness with healing in His beams. Still there is yet a period of darkness for the world to go through, which will make the morning all the more beautiful, and appreciated by all when delivered from this present evil world (Psalm 30:5).

Question:—For what reason does God, the Father, give His only begotten Son, Jesus Christ, the right to become our everlasting Father?

Answer:—The Scripture referring to Christ being the “Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace,” etc., as mentioned by the prophet (Isaiah 9:6-7); seems to apply to our Lord in connection with His Millennial Kingdom reign, when “the government shall be upon His shoulders,” when He shall reign, “whose right it is” (Ezek. 21:27; Dan. 2:44). Our Lord said that His kingdom was not- of this world (age) (John 18:36); but soon He is to bind Satan and establish His kingdom of righteousness for the blessing of the poor groaning creation. That will be the glad time when He will be the “Everlasting Father” (life-giver), in the fullest sense to all man-kind, both living ,and dead; for during that 1000 year day, all in the death condition will be awakened, and the obedient uplifted and restored to the condition of human perfection, from which father Adam fell, (Acts 3:20-21; Isa. 35th ch.; Micah. 4:1-5).

Our Lord, however, is not referred to in the Scriptures as the Father of His faithful disciples of this Gospel Age, but rather that they are recognised as sons of God, on account of the merit of Christ’s sacrifice (I John 3:1); Eph. 1:3-6). It is from this standpoint of being accepted in Christ, branches in the vine, members of His Body, and partakers of His glory and honor (Rom. 8:16-17), that the Apostle could say in Heb. 2:11, “for both He that sanctifieth (Jesus), and they that are sanctified (the Church), are all of one, for which cause He is not ashamed to call them brethren.”

Correspondence

Dear Brother,

Yours of the 4th inst. duly to hand, and we can rejoice in the privilege of service for the Lord and His truth. Surely the Lord has richly blessed us in revealing to us something of His wonderful plan of salvation for the Church in this age, and for all mankind in the age to come. The evidences are many which go to show that we are living in the harvest time of the age—the end of the age. True to His promise the Lord has come forth to serve His people; and blessed indeed are those servants whom the Lord has found watching and maintaining the attitude of humble servants (Luke 12:37). How we need to heed the Master's words—"Hold fast that which thou hast, that no man take thy crown." (Rev. 3:11.)

We surely need very much the wisdom from above to guide us aright, that our conduct toward others may be such as will be helpful. The prayer of the Psalmist is appropriate for all: "Let the words of my mouth, and the mediation of my heart, be acceptable in Thy sight, O. Lord, my strength, and my redeemer." (Psa. 19:14.)

As you say, it is indeed a privilege to meet with others of like precious faith; we need surely to remind each other of the truths pertaining to our salvation; we need to exhort and encourage each other.

I would be glad to have a few extra copies of the "P.P." each month, about five or six would, I think, be enough, as we have a good supply of various issues of the "Voice."

With Christian love,
Yours in the service of Christ, Mg.R.

New South Wales,
5th July, 1931. Dear Brother,—

I have just received yesterday and read to-day the July "People's Paper" and notice a cross on the wrapper which reminded me my sub. is overdue, so herewith please. find , which will keep it going and the balance to be used as your wisdom dictates. I am sorry I cannot afford to make it more at the present.

The articles in these papers are good and very much appreciated, the convention paper, "Fear Not, Little Flock," being especially appropriate and opportune at this time.

In this state the trend of events are brought more forcibly to our attention by those who have control of state affairs, showing and impressing upon our hearts the truth of dear Bro. Russell's faithful expositions of the Scriptures. Truly are men's hearts failing them, for those things they see coming on the earth. With Christian love to all the dear brethren of the Melbourne Ecclesia and yourself, Yours in Him,

When Thou Wast Little in Thine Own Sight.

I Sam. 15:17

THE history of Saul, the son of Kish, who was selected to be king over Israel, is one of the extremely sad stories of the Bible. He is introduced to us as a noble young man, choice and goodly and tall, a head above all his fellows. He was honourable, upright, and possessed of noble qualities and abilities, and was of humble disposition. When Samuel announced to him that the Lord had indicated that he should be the king of Israel, he seemed unable to believe it. He said, "Am not I a Benjamite, of the smallest of the tribes of Israel, and my family the least of all the families of the tribe of Benjamin, wherefore, then, speakest thou so to me." Then when Samuel came to present Saul as king, Saul had hid himself in modesty.

How strange that such a character could so soon lose his virtue and become a despot and a gruesome murderer of innocent men. Not all at once, however, for sin generally has its small beginnings.

His first mistake was to presume to offer the sacrifice to God instead of waiting in trust and patience for the coining of Samuel to do so. For this he had his own excuse, "Because I saw that the people were scattered from me and that thou (Samuel) came not within the days appointed, and that the Philistines gathered together at Michmash. Therefore,

I said the Philistines will come down upon me and I have not made supplication to the Lord. I forced myself, therefore, and offered a burnt offering."

What a change had already taken place; where was the modesty that would hide from being made king? Now he assumes an office for which he had no authority. How plausible seemed the excuse, the emergency called for it, then it was an offering unto the Lord. He no doubt persuaded himself that as king he could officiate, and that he was doing the right thing. How easy it is to err, to take a wrong course if we trust to our own judgment—"a man's ways seem right in his own eyes"—but it is better to trust in the Lord and wait upon Him. He will never fail those who trust in Him. He will "not slumber or sleep" but guard His people, even though sometimes He sees it good to test their patience and faithfulness to principle and truth. "Wait on the Lord and keep His way."

King Saul had evidently lost some of the beauty of his character, and had become a sorrowful example of such as go before the Lord instead of, as the Psalmist expresses it, "My soul wait thou only upon God for my expectation is from Him (Psa. 62:5). He only is my rock and my salvation, He is my defence, I shall not be moved."

Then a little later, and a more serious fault occurs, a further disobedience against clear definite instructions. Samuel giving the message said, "Now hearken thou unto the voice of the words of the Lord . . . go and smite Amalek and utterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not, but slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox, sheep, camel and ass." Samuel seemed to know that it was necessary to emphasise, "Hearken to the voice of the message."

It was very plain, and there could be no misunderstanding and no excuse. Nevertheless, Saul leaned again to his own understanding and spared king Agag, and the best of the sheep and oxen, etc. He seemed to 'have persuaded himself that he had done better, perhaps more mercifully than what the Lord had commanded. He met Samuel with, the words, "Blessed be thou of the Lord, I have performed the commandment of the Lord." And Samuel said, "What meaneth then the bleating of sheep and lowing of oxen which I hear." Saul had satisfied his own mind by the thought of sacrificing these animals to the Lord. In both cases he erred respecting worship. As though something he could do would be pleasing to God. "To obey is better than sacrifice and to hearken than the fat of rams." It is a sad condition to get into, and yet probably many who ought to know the truth have, like Saul, taken their own way, trusted to their own understanding instead of seeking to know the Divine will and way, and such will—as surely as Saul did, lose God's favour and lose the spirit of the truth.

How serious is the lesson in this connection. God can do without our aid; it is but a privilege He may grant if we can serve Him, but anything we do, must be done rightly, must be done in His way and in His spirit. Let us never think we can improve on Divine instructions. Let us be careful of the Word of God as it stands, and not think to add to or take from it. What God requires of us is simple, earnest faith, implicit obedience, and then such sacrifice that a grateful heart may offer. Surely it was a great privilege God had granted Saul when he was little in his own eyes, to make him king of Israel, and it is a greater privilege He has granted us, to anoint us as kings and priests unto our God, joint heirs with Christ in His kingdom. Let us keep small in our own sight.

The spirit of the Lord departed from Saul, and an evil spirit troubled him, and so he went from bad to worse until all honour was lost. and he became a jealous murderer and inquired of evil spirits. His action in slaying Ahimelek and eighty priests, because Ahimelek had given David bread, although the priest did so under the impression that David was on the king's errand, showed that he had no sense of honour or justice, and to what degradation he had fallen; and so it is with those who have known the truth, if they fall away after having tasted of the good things of the Age to come, and having been partakers of the Holy Spirit. How terrible is their condition, and one is surprised at the things they do, still thinking they do God service.

Samuel's words give the reason for the fall. It was the same reason. that brought about the fall of the great Adversary—he was no longer, “little in his own sight.” “Pride was found in thee.” That a foolish thing pride is; in fact, it is a feature of insanity; the inmates of the asylums seem, mostly to imagine they are some very important personage.

The important lesson of our text is the preserving of an humble mind and heart. “Every one that is proud in heart is an abomination to the Lord” (Prov. 16:5); and so St. Peter exhorts, “Yea, all of you be subject one to another, for God resisteth the proud but giveth grace to the humble” (1 Pet. 5:5). It is so easy to be puffed up if we have any little ability, and to think more highly of ourselves than we ought to. It is even possible to have an outward appearance of humility and yet to have a proud heart, and some seem to deceive themselves as well as others. How important it is to keep “little in our own sight.” The greatest characters have always been founded on humility, and no character will stand the fiery trials which a Christian must go through, if it has not a strong ground work of humility.

The histories of Saul and of Satan are similar in many respects. Satan, like Saul; had been given a high position; He had evidently been appointed to rule or guide the human family, and by the aid of angels to instruct them. Both were beautiful in their early days, “until pride was found in thee.” Then Christ was to be the prince of righteousness and peace, to reign over, to instruct and lift up mankind, and David was anointed to be the king of Israel. As Satan has ever fought against the truth and sought to slay Christ, and all who are chosen in Him to be joint-heirs with Him in the kingdom, so Saul inherited a jealous hatred of David and sought to kill him.

As Saul could not kill David, neither could the Adversary kill Christ or His followers. While Satan appeared to have succeeded in killing our Lord, he had no power but such as was permitted of God, and what seemed a success of Satan was really but carrying out a feature of the Divine plan, and Christ arose triumphant over death. The purpose of His having been made flesh was accomplished. He had laid down the price of sin, and had now the right to make application of the ransom-price as He wished, as He declared, He had the right “to give life to whomsoever He would.”

In Satan we have exemplified, "He that exalteth himself be abased"; and in Christ we have the opposite, "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

Saul seemed so beautiful as a young man, and some have been inclined to sympathise with him in the penalty he incurred by his failures, and wonder how it was that David did not receive similar punishment for his misdeeds. We may, however, rest assured that "The judge of all the earth will do right." Saul's errors were different from David's. David was ever loyal to the Lord in his heart; his sin was terrible, but it was not deliberate disobedience; he was deceived by the deceitfulness of sin, his mind had evidently become befogged by his lust and he did not realise the awfulness of his crime. Then there was no attempt to justify himself, but a contrite heart sought forgiveness. He was punished and restored to Divine favor.

With Saul there was the high mind, which assumed to know better than the Divine commands and deliberate disobedience which lost him the continuation of the crown for his family. Then, instead of a broken and contrite heart seeking for pardon, he took on a terrible, jealous, murderous spirit, and would kill David, whom he knew the Lord intended should be king after him. He stands as a terrible example of how it is possible for a noble character to fall, and fall so low. "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall."

Knowing, as Saul did, that God had appointed David to succeed him as king, his action in seeking to slay David was deliberate rebellion against God, and an attempt to frustrate His purpose. How clearly Saul's course illustrates the course of Satan, and shows from what heights and to what depths one may fall who once loses the spirit of humble loyal faithfulness to God.

The way God dealt with David shows that He looked upon the heart, and, while the heart is true, He is ready to restore to His favor even though serious mistakes may be made through misjudgment, or because of the frailty of human nature and present environments.

The important lesson then for us all is to preserve the earnest desire to do God's will, to thus keep ourselves in God's love. The power to enable us to do so is our love for God. Our love for God will be preserved and strengthened by considering His love for us, "What great things He hath done," and what wonderful purposes He has revealed in His Word, not only for the Church, but for all the willing and obedient in due time. When we consider His mighty works and His acts of wisdom, justice and love, in dealing with Israel of old, we shall find our love for God is a reverential love. We recognise how little we are, how great He is, and our wonder is, that He is mindful of us. If we thus keep ourselves in such attitude of humble faithfulness to God there will not be much danger of "thinking of ourselves more highly than we ought to think." One may have a little more intellect than another, one may occupy a little better social position, another have had better advantages of home education, etc., but what is the shade of difference in the Divine sight? Besides, though we may be a shade better in some respects than some one else, we may be some shades worse in others. What is it that the Lord requires of us; is it, education, money, social influence, intellect, or such things? Is it clever people that the Lord is to-day selecting? On the contrary we read (1 Cor. 1:26-28) (Diaglott), "Behold your invitation brethren that not many wise ones according to the flesh, not many strong ones, not many well born, but God selected the foolish things of the world, that He may shame the wise, and God selected the weak things of the world that He may shame the powerful, and the ignoble things of the world with things that are despised God selected, and things not existing that He may bring to nought the existing things, so no flesh may boast in His presence."

The Lord uses the weak things that His strength may be the more apparent. When He would deliver Israel under Gideon, He chose only 300 men and sent the thousands to their homes so that Israel might know that it was not by their own might that the Midianites were discomfited.

The Lord will not use the proud to do His work. Moses, the meekest man on earth, was most wonderfully used to deliver Israel and lead them forty years, and to mediate the Law Covenant. Saul was chosen to be king of Israel “when he was little in his own sight”; but he was rejected when he lost that disposition. “Come unto Me all ye that are weary and I will give you rest, for I am meek and lowly of heart” (Matt. 11:29). So says the Apostle, “Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus, who, though being in the form of God, did not meditate an usurpation to be like God, but took on Himself the form of a servant, having been made in the likeness of man, humbled Himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Therefore, God hath highly exalted Him and given Him a name above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow.”

If we will know the riches of Divine grace we must learn to be humble, keep little in our own sight. Selfishness and pride are twins, and they are at the bottom of all sin and wickedness and troubles, and how often are these seeds of evil seen even among God’s people. We are all born in sin and inherit some taint of these abominable things, but we have received the mind of Christ and the power of the Holy Spirit, which can overcome the natural disposition. This is not done without a struggle; the flesh warreth against the spirit and the spirit against the flesh. We could not of ourselves win the fight, but it is God that will give us strength to do so, and will also work in us to will and do His good pleasure even our sanctification.

What dangers we shall avoid, what errors we shall escape, if we will keep “little in our own sight.” It will keep us from selfishly wanting our own ways. It will keep us from being self-opinionated. It will help us to rely only on God’s Word, and not trust to our own understanding. It will help us to tread the way appointed instead of wandering in search of “new light,” or something by way of a change. It will help us to give patient hearing to the earnest expressions of others’ thoughts, even though feebly expressed. It will prevent us from being critical of others, from judging, from being censorious and interfering, or trying to arrange others’ concerns. It will help us to put the best constructions on the actions of others, and to be sympathetic with the weak. It will help us to be like the Master, ready to wash one another’s feet, willing to serve in any possible way so long as it is the Lord’s way.

Had the Church as a whole preserved the disposition, “little in thine own sight,” the servants of the Church, called elders, deacons, or bishops, would never have assumed these designations of service as titles; and such things as Lord Bishops and Reverends, or holy Popes and Fathers, would have never been heard. There would have simply been a band of true followers of the meek and lowly One who said, “Be ye not called Rabbi, for one is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren.” And, “he that is greatest among you let him be your servant” (Matt. 23:8, 11).

How much depends upon keeping “little in our own sight.” It means success or failure in our Christian course. Only if we humble ourselves under the mighty hand of God will we be exalted in due time, to reign with Christ.

Oh, what am I that Thou should’st think
To offer me a throne,
So graciously to make me drink
Of truth and love, Thine own.

Oh, may I ever feel
The favour Thou dost grant,
In lifting me from miry clay
And on the Rock to plant.

I know if Thou dost call
To grace so wondrous kind,
I need not fear my being small,
My lack in Christ, Thou'lt find.

'Tis only if I still remain
In mine own eyes so small,
That I God's favour may retain
And thus make sure my call.

By grace I would keep little, Lord,
Faithful and meek and true,
Ever love Thy will and work,
Do humbly what I do.

Sermons We See.

I'd rather see a sermon than hear one any day,
I'd rather one walk with me, than merely show the way.
The eye is a better pupil and more willing than the ear,
Good counsel is confusing but examples always clear.

And the best of all the preachers are the men who live their creeds,
To see good put in action is what everybody needs.
I can soon learn how to do it if you'll let me see it done,
I can see your hands in action; your tongue too fast may run.

And lectures you deliver may be very wise and true,
But I'd rather get my lectures by observing what you do.
For I may misunderstand you and the high advice you give,
But there's no misunderstanding how you act and how you live.

When I see a deed of kindness I am eager to be kind,
When a weaker brother stumbles a strong man stays behind;
Just to see if he can help him, and a wish grows strong in me
To be as big and thoughtful as I know that friend to be.

And all travellers can witness that the best of guides to-day
Is not the one that tells them but the one that shows the way.
One good man teaches many, they believe what they behold;
One deed of kindness done is worth forty that are told.

Who stands with men of honour learns to hold his honour dear,
For right living speaks a language that to everyone is clear.
Though an able speaker charms with his eloquence,
I say I'd rather see a sermon than hear one any day.

It may be thou art entered into the cloud which will bring a gentle shower to refresh thy sorrows. —J.T.

IF YE DO THESE THINGS.

“For if ye do these things, ye shall never fall; for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.”-2 Pet. 1:10, 11.

THIS statement of the Apostle Peter is suggestive of several important thoughts. It indicates the possibility to the class addressed, of “an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.” This is the prize of the high calling of the overcoming saints of the Gospel Age. True, when we consider its exceeding glory, faith is prone to stagger at the promise that, poor and imperfect though we be, God proposes in the ages to come to how the exceeding riches of His grace in His kindness toward us through Christ Jesus. (Eph. 2:7.) Nevertheless, such is the case: “unto us are given the exceeding great and precious promises, that by these we might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust”—through the worldly desires, “the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life.” (2 Pet. 1:4; 1 John 2:16).

These exceeding great and precious promises contemplate the adoption of these called ones by the great Sovereign of the whole universe as His sons and heirs; as joint-heirs with His only begotten Son, the heir of all things; they shall be with Him where He is, and behold His glory; and they shall put off this mortality, and, like Him, who is “the express image of the Father’s person,” they shall be clothed with immortality. So shall they be forever with the Lord, and see Him as He is; for they shall be like Him. Having overcome the world, they shall sit with Him in His throne, even as He overcame and sat down with the Father in His throne (Rev. 3:21).

“Fear not, little flock,” says the prospective Bridegroom of the church, “for it is your Father’s good pleasure to give you the kingdom” (Luke 12:32), “for the Father Himself loveth you, ‘because ye have loved Me and have believed that I came out from God.’” Nor will He give the kingdom to His beloved grudgingly, for Peter says, “an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly”; there will be a glorious welcome, a joyous greeting, and a coronation jubilee among all the heavenly hosts when the laurels of victory are placed upon the heads of all the overcoming soldiers of the cross—the heroes who nobly fought the good fight of faith—who kept the faith, fought the fight against the world, the flesh and the devil, and finished their course in faithfulness even unto death.

All this abundance of grace and glory is the possible inheritance of even the weakest saint, who, trusting not to his own ability to make his calling and election sure, humbly looks to God for strength from day to day to endure hardness as a good soldier. If any man attempts to do this in his own strength, he must surely fail; for the fiery trial that is to try everyone will prove too much for the mind of the flesh; but God who worketh in the consecrated to will and to do His good pleasure, will so fortify and equip those who depend upon His grace, that, with the Psalmist, they can say, "It is God that girdeth me with strength . . . By Thee I have run through a troop, and by my God have I leaped over a wall"; and with Paul, "I can do all things through Christ, who strengtheneth me." (Psa. 18:32, 29; Phil. 4:13.)

Let us not fear, then, to lay hold upon the exceeding great and precious promises when we are so fully assured that He who has begun the good work in us will finish it, if we let Him. (Phil. 1:6.) "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even your faith" (1 John 5:4); not faith in ourselves; for we can have no confidence in the flesh. The poor, weak and faltering flesh does not warrant us in reposing confidence in its ability to fulfil the great responsibilities of soldiers of the cross. We must draw our supplies of wisdom and strength from above: they are not within us except as implanted there by the Spirit of God.

We next notice that while Peter's words encouragingly indicate the possibility of the glorious inheritance to all who are called, there is also the implied possibility of failure to enter into it. There an "if," a contingency, upon which the scales of Divine Judgment as to our worthiness or unworthiness of the inheritance, must turn. And it is in view of this contingency that Paul urges all the called ones to great sobriety of mind and carefulness of conduct, saying, "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall" (1 Cor. 10:12), and again, "Let us, therefore, fear lest, a promise being left us of entering into His rest, any of you should seem to come short of it" (Heb. 4:1). It is not enough, therefore, that we have consecrated ourselves to God as living sacrifices; that we have covenanted to follow in the footsteps of Jesus; for the consecration, the covenant, the promise, will avail nothing if we prove unfaithful to it, except to rise up in judgment against us. "Better is it that thou shouldest not vow, than that thou shouldest vow and not pay" (Eccl. 5:4, 5). See also (Deut. 23:21, 23; Prov. 20:25; Heb. 10:38, 39; Psa. 15; Luke 9:62).

Our attention is next drawn to what is implied in this expressed contingency, "If ye do these things." What things? The reference is to the things mentioned in the preceding verses, viz., that with all diligence, we add to our faith, fortitude; and to fortitude, knowledge; and to knowledge, self-control; and to self-control, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, love.

It is important to observe here, that while all of these virtues are essential requirements of those who would be esteemed of God as faithful, they are only of value as they are added to, or built upon a foundation of faith—"Giving all diligence, add to your faith"—your "precious faith," as described in verse 1. This faith is our abiding confidence in the Divine Plan of Salvation, which centres in the redemption accomplished through the precious blood of Christ, who freely gave Himself a ransom. for all. No righteousness of our own, without this foundation of faith, can avail anything to commend us to God. All our works of righteousness must be built upon this faith.

But is not faith in Christ sufficient unto salvation without the subsequent doing of anything? To this, the Scriptures plainly answer that a faith that Christ will save us in our sins, while we still love sin and do the works of sin, is a misplaced faith; for Christ never proposed to save us in our sins, but from our sins.

God is faithful to forgive sins and to cleanse from all unrighteousness those who come unto Him by Christ, through faith in His shed blood (sacrificed life), as the propitiation or satisfaction for our sins, and in His cleansing power.

“He that saith, I know Him (Christ, as my Lord and Saviour), and keepeth not His commandments (to do the works of righteousness, and to bring forth the fruits of repentance from sins), is a liar,” says the Apostle John, “and the truth is not in him.” (1 John 2:4.) Therefore, the Apostle Paul also exhorts believers, saying: “Beloved, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God who worketh in you both to will and do of His good pleasure” (Phil. 2:12, 13).

It was God that provided for us the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, and it is God who has drawn us unto Himself, and who has promised us all needed grace to walk in the paths of righteousness; end more, even to follow in the footprints of Jesus in the way of self-sacrifice. While, therefore, with fear and trembling—with great carefulness—we endeavour to work out our salvation, it is our privilege always to realise the promised grace to help in every time of need, and to be confident that our best efforts toward righteousness are acceptable to God when presented through the merit of the righteousness of Christ, imputed to us by faith.

Having this foundation, then, and "having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust"—through the desires of the flesh—and having by faith - - bold also on the "exceeding great and precious promises" of being made partakers of the divine nature and joint-heirs with Christ in His kingdom and glorified being anxious to make our "calling and election sure" let us consider these additions to our faith, which, possessed and continuously cultivated, are the assurance that we shall never fall, and that an abundant entrance into the kingdom shall be granted to us.

The first addition (virtue) is fortitude or strength of character in righteousness. This implies the cultivation of the strictest integrity in our dealings, both with God and our fellow men, scrupulous honesty, justice, and truth being the only standard. The Psalmist clearly defines it thus, saying, "He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart. He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbour, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbour; in whose eyes a vile person is contemned; but he honoreth them that fear the Lord. He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not (i.e., who will not violate a contract found to be unfavourable to himself), He that putteth not out his money to usury (taking unjust advantage of the necessities of others), nor taketh reward against the innocent, He that doeth these things shall never be moved." (Psa. 15.) Such a one is a virtuous man, a man of fortified or strong character.

The second addition is knowledge—the knowledge of God and of His righteous will concerning us, revealed through His Word, by the Holy Spirit. Neglect of this divinely appointed means of knowledge is equivalent to setting up our own imperfect standard of righteousness and ignoring the divine standard. It is, therefore, important that we give all diligence to the study of the divine oracles that we may be fortified in faith and works accordingly.

The third addition, self-control, is one of the most important elements of good character. "He that ruleth his own spirit is greater than he that taketh a city." is the counsel of the wise man; and many a victorious general has yet to learn to conquer and control himself. Self-control has to do with all our sentiments, thoughts, tastes, appetites, labours, pleasures, sorrows, and hopes. Its cultivation, therefore, means a high order of character development. Self-control, accompanied by faith, fortitude, knowledge from on high, implies increased zeal and activity in divine things, and increased moderation in earthly things, in judgment, in conduct, in the regulation of temporal affairs, etc. "Let your moderation be known unto all men." (Phil. 4:5.)

The fourth addition is patience. Time is a very necessary element in the process of perfecting every good thing.

The fruit too soon plucked is the unripe, hard, bitter fruit. Time, as well as pruning and fertilising and cultivating, and shower and sunshine, is necessary to develop the ripe and luscious fruitage that delights the taste. So it is also with the development of plans and purposes, of education and of grace. God's deep designs work out slowly, not only in His great universal government, but also in the hearts and minds of His intelligent creatures. God is operating all things according to His own will, along the- lines of the fixed principles of His wise and righteous laws—physical, moral and intellectual. To be impatient in any case is foolishly to insist upon having the unripe, bitter fruitage, which, if the Lord grant it, will prove a sickening penalty for the impatience that demanded it. "Let patience have her perfect work" (James 1:4). "Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him" (Psa. 37:7). Wait the Lord's time and way and the indications of His will in every case, both with regard to ourselves and others, and "they that put their trust in Him shall never be confounded."

Faith, fortitude and knowledge prepare God's people to have patience with every effort toward good, however weak—patience with the poor blinded world, with the "babes in Christ," with the slow and stupid, with the excitable and blundering, with the over-confident Peters and the skeptical Thomases. But to have patience or fellowship with the "unfruitful works of darkness" and sin, is a perversion of this grace; for these, wherever found, should be promptly and sharply reprov'd, and rebuked according to their evil intent, with patience, nevertheless, toward the repentant prodigals, and always with meekness.

It is noticeable that the Lord seems to forewarn His people of the great need of patience in the "harvest" or end of this age, patience toward fellow-men, and patience in the warfare against evil, and in waiting for the Lord's time and method of setting right the wrongs of "the present world." The poor world, lacking faith, fortitude, -knowledge of the Divine Plan, and patience, will fall a ready prey to unrest and anarchy in the near future. The Word of the Lord to His people is, "Ye have need of patience" (Heb. 10:36).

The fifth addition is godliness, god-likeness, piety—that devout, controlling reverence for God which yields a hearty, cheerful, loving conformity to His will—fervency of spirit in serving the Lord. This is a later development and a vital element in the Christian character. Piety, godliness, springs spontaneously from appreciative and grateful hearts, whose delight is in the law of the Lord, in meditation upon His precepts and promises, and in secret communion with God in prayer and praise. Loving, cheerful activity must result from such an inner life for "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh," and the whole being is quickened to new life. Only those who have a living faith in God, and who are fortifying their characters against evil, and growing in knowledge and self-control and patience, are prepared to appreciate the grandeur of the divine character; and only such are really energised by a desire for God-likeness.

The sixth addition is brotherly kindness which, of necessity, grows out of godliness. As god-likeness presupposes the other graces mentioned, so its development implies an appreciation of divine justice and beneficence and will broaden and deepen our sentiments toward all the well-disposed, however imperfect, and especially will it enlarge our hearts to all who are of the household of faith—"the brethren."

The seventh addition is charity, love—the bond of perfectness which unites all the other graces, and, as a name, stands for them all.

Love to God alone is not the full manifestation of this grace; nor can there be, according to the teachings of God's Word, a sincere love for God, without a corresponding love to man: "If a man say, I love God," says the Apostle John, "and hateth his brother, he is a liar, for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" (1 Jno. 4:20). And Jesus said, "By this shall all men know that ye are My disciples, if ye have love one for another" (John 13:35).

It is the abounding of these graces of character added to our faith in Christ as our Redeemer and Saviour that insures the soul against the possibility of falling: "If ye do these things, ye shall never fall." The contingency is not in the doing of these things perfectly, and regardless of the righteousness of Christ to cover our transgressions and compensate for our daily shortcomings; but if, added to our faith in the imputed righteousness of Christ, we have cultivated all these graces to the extent of our ability, we shall not fall. When we have done all that we can do, we are still unprofitable servants, not daring to trust in our own righteousness, but in the ample robe which is ours by faith in Christ, while, with consistent "diligence," we work out our own salvation with fear and trembling, knowing that the righteousness of Christ is only applied to such as desire to forsake sin and to pursue that "holiness without which no man shall see the Lord" (Heb. 12:14) .

A PRAYER OF FAITH AND LOVE,

Father, I lay my hand in Thine to-clay,
Thou knowest all my need.
Thy power will keep me through the unknown way,
Thy loving hand will lead,

And there is One beside me when I pray
Who lives to intercede.
Father, I bring my work for Thee to bless,
My thoughts for Thee to guide,

Trusting Thy love and Thy great tenderness,
Whatever may betide,
Fearing no longer loss or loneliness

Since Thou art by my side.
Father, I dedicate my life to Thee,
Cleanse it from every ill,
Help me to be what

Thou would'st have me be,
Teach me to do Thy will,
And in love's confidence, from sin set free,
To trust Thee, and be still.

SHAKING THE HEAVENS.

WHILE there is undoubtedly a general shaking of the religious systems that has been in progress for many years, there is just as certainly a general testing of those who have learned the present truth. "Every man's work shall be made manifest, for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire."

It is evidently possible to build upon the true foundation, Jesus Christ, wood, hay, and stubble; wrong teachings and wrong methods. but only if our faith structure be the gold, silver and precious stones, will it stand the fire (1 Cor. 3. 10-14).

Some are apt to think we take too narrow a view in respect of our privilege of knowledge of the present truth. They perceive that there are many good people still associated with the churches of Christendom, and seem to long after old fellowship and so be willing to compromise the truth.

It would seem that many forget the joy which the present truth brought them.; also the responsibility of holding forth the word of life, and preserving the pureness of doctrine.

When we heard the "knock" (Rev. 3:20) of our Lord's presence, how glad we were; when we tasted of the feast to which He invited us (Luke 12:37), how sweet it was. No wonder we are admonished to "buy the truth and sell it not."

The church of God is to be the pillar and ground of the truth, the preserver of the light. What kind of a light keeper would he be who did not keep the lens clear, so that the light should shine in all its power and beauty to guide the mariner on the ocean and guard from dangerous reefs?

There are, no doubt, many good people still bound in church associations, and even in such delusions as Christian Science or Theosophy, etc. There were many good living Pharisees in our Lord's day connected with the Synagogues, but those who clung to the "old bottles" could not enjoy the "new wine." The "wheat" had to come away or else be 'burned up with the "chaff."

Those who prefer to remain with Christendom, compromising (the Laodicean spirit) truth and principle, are to be taken as partaking in her sins and to receive of her plagues (Rev. 18:4).

It is not for us to judge who is who, or to decide whether or not there are true Christians here or there. If we have heard the call to "come out of her my people." we should come out and stay out and "Be ye separate." If the Lord says, "come out," it means that He is out, and we wish to be where He is—though "despised and rejected."

If He has "spued out Christendom" (Rev. 3:16), which, we may say, daily shows evidence of having been "cast off," are we going to be like Lot's wife, looking back and longing for old associations?

No, let us flee to the mountain (kingdom), for He who is with us, is able to direct us and care for us "though all the world forsake."

Some who have "let slip the things we have heard," have been 'busy spreading errors, and besides having reached the position of those who say, "the Lord delayeth His coming"—denying the parousia or presence of Christ, prior to His manifestation—they teach that He is to come again in human form, to be visible to all the world, though Jesus said, "The world seeth Me no more." They also deny that there is ally personal devil, and teach the anti-ransom and anti-Christian theory _of Universalism.

This condition seems to illustrate the statement, "If the light that is in thee become darkness, how great is that darkness."

While some let slip the things we have received, the truth remains as clear and beautiful as ever. One cannot add anything to the Divine Plan to make it any better, or take anything from it to make it more beautiful.

The circumstances of our day portend the coming climax. Soon the number of God's elect will be complete. The Bride will be made ready, the wise virgins will have entered the feast chamber and the door will be shut. The question is, shall we be inside or outside among these who had no reserve of "oil" !! Whose light had gone out—to whom the light of truth respecting the Bridegroom's coming had dimmed.

Let us realise our responsibility of preserving the present truth in its purity and beauty, in all wisdom, gentleness, patience and sympathy, seeking to assist all who may be feeling after the "old paths."

SUBMISSION.

"O! teach me, Lord, the art
With Wisdom to remove
The errors that deceive the heart
And Truth to clearly prove.

"O! arm me with the mind,
Meek Lamb, that was in Thee;
And let my fervent zeal be joined
With grace and charity."

When loneliness steals o'er you
"a coldness chills the air, "
"Aloof" seem friends and "distant,"
"I'm forsaken" you declare:—

Then clasp that Friend the closer,
the faithful saving friend,
To everyone who's trusting
He loves them to the end.

John 13:1. Psalm 125:1, 2.

The Love of Christ.

It is difficult to define the love of Christ. How different is love, as interpreted and practised by man, to the love in the life and sacrifice of Christ. There was no selfish thought of personal gain mingling in the love that led our Lord to leave the glory which He had with the Father to come and suffer and die, or, as the Apostle has beautifully stated the matter, "He who was rich for our sakes became poor, that we, through His poverty, might be made rich." His was a loving interest in mankind, and a thorough devotion to the Father's will. He sought nothing in return, and His love and kindness were ever supreme under all circumstances.

In 1 Cor. 13, the Apostle describes love, and states how essential it is; without it whatever good works might be done would be of no account. "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels and have not love I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal." Again, in Gal. 5:22, he shows that the spirit of love has the fruitage of joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness and faith. So, "love suffereth long and is kind; love envieth not; love vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up. Doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil. Rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth, beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things—love never faileth." Love is the fulfilling of the Law, and so the Psalmist represents Christ as saying, "I delight to do Thy will O my God, Thy Law is written in My heart." The Poet has beautifully said,

"As every lovely hue is light
So every grace is love."

Our Lord's life certainly exemplified the graces of the spirit.

In early life, we read of Him being seated with Doctors of the Law, listening to their discussions and asking them questions. Apparently, He would have been pleased to have found something in the Law that would justify Him entering upon His Father's business at that time; not finding anything, He returned with His parents to Nazareth, and was subject to them, and increased in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and man.

At the age of thirty, He was baptised in Jordan and received the holy spirit which appeared upon Him in the form of a dove, and a voice from heaven said, "Thou art My beloved Son in whom I am well pleased."

From His knowledge of the Law and prophecy, He knew the Father's will concerning Himself. He said, "I came down from heaven not to do My own will but the will of Him that sent Me." "Therefore (loth My Father love Me because I lay down My life that I might take it again. No man taketh it from Me, I lay it down of Myself." His was a voluntary laying down of His life. He needed not to be admonished or ex-ported respecting the meaning of His consecration covenant. Within His heart there burned such a fire of consuming love that the sweet incense of His devotion ascended continually as a sweet perfume to God. He knew that He was the good Shepherd that was to lay down His life for the sheep. He knew, also, all the conditions. if faithful in His mission, He would be raised from the dead by Divine power and be received again in the heavenly courts, to a station still more glorious, even than the glory which He had "with the Father before the world was." All this, as well as the salvation of mankind, depended upon His perfectly fulfilling the Law and laying down His life according to the pattern in the typical sacrifice of the Day of Atonement. What a stupendous task it was, even for a perfect man, yet He said, "For this cause came I into the world." "He who was rich for our sakes became poor." His wealth consisted of heavenly glory, and, subsequently, of human perfection and every good possession. Could He lay it all down and be wounded for the transgressions of the whole world as "The Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world?" (John 1:29). He knew that the flesh, however perfect, was unequal to the task without Divine aid, and, therefore, we read that "He offered up prayers and supplications with strong cryings and tears unto Him who was able to save Him out of death, and was heard in that He feared." "Though He were a Son yet learned He obedience by the things which He suffered." He who was the author and finisher of our faith, and who was the perfect pattern, lifted up to die for all men, was "tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin." "For the joy that was set before Him, He endured the cross despising the shame." It was the Father's will that by His suffering He should be made perfect.

Truly, God's ways are not as our ways. Christ suffered in the flesh, showing that affliction is a purifying furnace, a means of disciplining, of strength and ennoblement of character, and such is the heritage of all who will walk in Christ's steps (1 Pet. 4:1).

In our Lord's case, He suffered not for His own sins, but for the sin of the whole human race. Yet though He was tempted in all points, like as we are, He remained sinless, He was touched with a feeling of our infirmities. "He bore our griefs and carried our sorrows." His quick sympathy was with man in his anguish, which sin had brought on all.

He saw how the weak were oppressed, heard the cry of little children, sighed over the deaf and dumb, had compassion on the lepers, and wept at the graveside. He felt keenly the rejection by His own people whom He "would have gathered as a hen Both gather her chickens, but they would not." His love and consideration were so often met by abuse and insult. These elements of grief and pain were not to be compared with that more awful sorrow which He experienced as He took the place of sinful man and paid the sacrifice of human guilt. "He tasted death for every man," was so identified with sin, its shame, suffering and penalty, that He felt Himself forsaken by God.

By that one act of the cross He suffered "the just for the unjust," and could wipe out the guilt and lay the foundation of a redemption which includes the whole family of mankind. With and for us He died; for us He has met the demands of a broken law.

Why, then, we ask, did men gather around Him with unbounded devotion and look to Him as their legislator and their judge? Was it because of the miracles which He performed, or was it because of the beauty and divinity of the great law of love which He manifested? Certainly, that great law of love deserved that all men should accept it, but it was neither His miracles nor for the beauty of His doctrines that Christ was worshipped so much as the fact of having such power and greatness and denying Himself the use of that power for selfish purposes. He walked among men as though one with them, relieved them in distress, taught them to love one another, and bore with undisturbed patience all the vile accusations. When His enemies grew fiercer He still endured in silence, until in astonishment they saw Him arrested and put to the cruel death of the cross, steadfastly refusing to use, on His own behalf, the power He had so beautifully demonstrated for the benefit of others. It was a combination of greatness and self-sacrifice that won their hearts. The mighty power held under mighty control—the unspeakable condescension, the cross of Christ. The cross is the heavenly prism that enables us to distinguish the constituents of the Divine character. There, all may learn for themselves the power of Divine love, which could stoop to such humiliation and suffering. There, we will recognise the victory of the Son of God over all the malice and power of the enemy. Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us.

The enemies accused our Lord of being the friend of publicans and sinners. God has justified Him by showing that if He associated with such it was to lift them up and make them martyrs and saints. They said He was mad. God has justified Him by making His teaching the illumination of the noblest and wisest of the race. They said He had a devil. God has justified Him by giving Him power to cast out the devil and bind him with a mighty chain. They said that He blasphemed when He said He was the Son of God. God has justified Him by raising Him to the right hand of power and His second presence is to be in power and great glory. God's wisdom is shown to us in allowing His dear Son to suffer for the sin of the world, and in first saving and selecting the Church. This is spoken of as a great mystery, ordained before the world unto our glory, which none of the princes of this world knew, for "had they known they would not have crucified the Lord of glory."

'The Apostle has pointed out that all the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him, have been revealed to them by His Spirit. It is this class that are exhorted by Peter not to think it strange concerning the fiery trials that are to try them, but to rejoice in as much as they are made partakers of Christ's sufferings, that when His glory shall be revealed, they may be glad also with exceeding joy.

There is no promise of an easy way to glory. Thorns and thistles aptly represent a pathway of sorrow and trial, but it is the way the Master went. The sign of the curse became on the cross of our Saviour the insignia of Royalty. The lesson to the follower of Jesus is just this. The trials and experiences of life which are trying us so, and often are so hard to bear, are really the chipping and polishing of our characters. If we are exercised thereby, and with patience and fortitude, endure suffering for Christ's sake, we have the words of hope and comfort of the Apostle Paul. (Rom.

8:17, 18), "If we suffer with Him, we shall also reign with Him, and the sufferings of this present time are not to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."

The life of Christ is the perfect pattern to which we are to compare ourselves, lest we become weary and faint in our minds. Greater love hath no man than that he lay down his life for his friends, but while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.

At the present time, "the love of Jesus, what it is, none but His loved ones know," but we rejoice in the knowledge that the time draweth near when, at the name of Jesus, every knee shall bow, of things in heaven, and things on the earth, and things under the earth, and that every tongue shall confess that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father.

I have just read your little paper, “The Voice,” and note you are prepared to forward copies of free literature. I am deeply interested in such works and would be delighted if you would forward a copy of those mentioned in “The Voice.”

Enclosed is postal note for 2/6; subscription for the "People's Paper," now being posted to me. I may say I like the "Paper" very much, and if my health improves may later get some of the other publications. At present I am unable to see to read for long.

Dear Brethren,

I am enclosing 5/- for renewal of my subscription to "People's Paper," and would like what you can spare of "The Voice" (Humanity's Only Hope), to distribute. I have not done any tracting for some time, as the I.B.S.A. are continually doing the town and the people seem to confound one with the other. After the "Indictments" were put round, they were thrown out of letter-boxes into the street, and I thought it best to wait till the people got over their annoyance. As time goes on, and the trouble deepens, the people may be glad to read any solution offering.

Yours in the blessed Hope, FJ.A.

[The above reference serves to impress the necessity of wisdom in this, as in all other methods' of service for the cause of the truth. Many of the friends find that it is more profitable and carries more respect and influence to not place tracts in the letter-boxes, which often contain so much of advertising matter, but to either place them under the doors, or knock at the homes of the people and ask if they would like to accept the paper on the Scriptural teachings with a kindly word of encouragement to read.

All interested in the Lord's work will be pleased to know that good results are in evidence from tract distribution, and also from coupons in the newspapers. Those desiring to co-operate in this work are invited to communicate with us.]

Question Box.

• Question.—Under what covenant is the Church being called?

Answer.—Peter, in Act 3:25, says, “Ye are the children of the prophets and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, saying unto Abraham, ‘And in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed.’” Paul also gives the same instruction (Gal. 3:16, 17). “To Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not and to seeds as of many; but as of one, and to thy seed which is Christ. •And this I say that the covenant which was confirmed of God in Christ, the Law which was 430 years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect.” See also verses 26-29. “For ye are all children of God by faith in Jesus Christ, and if ye be Christ’s then are ye Abraham’s seed and heirs according to the promise,” not according to either the works of the old Law Covenant or of the works of the New Covenant, which will come into force after this age has ended; for Romans 11:25-27 tells us that it is specially for the natural seed of Abraham, after the full number has been selected from the nations, to compose the Church of the first born. This is very plain, and a reference to Jer. 31:27-34, where the New Covenant is first and most particularly spoken of, will thoroughly confirm this statement. The promise is to those whose fathers had been brought up out of Egypt, and with whom the old Law Covenant had been made. Jeremiah is foretelling the long punishment of the Jewish people because of their failure to keep their covenant, and then comforts them with the wonderful promise that the Lord will make a new covenant, which will accomplish what the old Law Covenant had failed to do. It will write God’s Laws in their hearts and in their minds, so that they will love righteousness and hate iniquity. We would notice that there is no promise of a heavenly inheritance, nor of any spiritual life or blessing, but the promises are like they were under the Law Covenant, all concerning earthly blessings. How different this is to the operation of God’s grace during this Gospel Age, when all the promises are spiritual—nothing of an earthly nature is promised, no earthly inheritance, all the hopes of the Church are heavenly. Again, under the New Covenant, they will be rewarded according to their works, under the Gospel Age arrangement, it is according to your faith. When the New Covenant operates then all shall know the Lord from the least to the greatest. No one will need any more to preach or say to his neighbour know the Lord, for all shall know Him.

So then the Church are not under the New Covenant, but are chosen as the “seed of Abraham under the Abrahamic covenant, which is an everlasting unconditional covenant which Heb. 6:13-19 states is our hope sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil.” That great covenant existed 430 years before the Law Covenant. The apostle says the Law Covenant did not disannul the original Abrahamic Covenant, so that when Christ made an end of the Law Covenant, nailing it to the cross, it was simply taken out of the way and left the original glorious promise to Abraham still there, and it is under this promise concerning the selection of the seed that we are being chosen, and are thus privileged to become joint-heirs with Christ—the bride of Christ, just as Rebekah became joint heir with Isaac by becoming his bride, and so shared in the Abrahamic inheritance.

It is so that the apostle explains the matter in the allegory of Galatians 4, Sarah represents the Abrahamic covenant. Hagar, the bondwoman, is the Law Covenant, and “the brethren as Isaac was, are the children of promise.” The apostle makes no mention of the New Covenant here at all, for it has no operation until the Abrahamic seed is complete, then, as already stated (Rom. 11:25-27) all Israel shall be saved, for this is my covenant with them. See also Ezek. 37:24-28; Acts 15:14-17.

(A full explanation of the covenants, their purpose and operations throughout the various ages past, present and future, is contained in the booklet, “God’s Covenants,” which is recommended to all the interested. The price is just 8d., post paid.)

Holding Fast at the Mark.

There is no doubt that in the divine schooling there is a mark or standard of fitness for graduation to the Church in glory. When first we surrendered our wills to the Lord it was necessary that the consecration should be a whole or perfect sacrifice of our wills to the Lord's will; but our wills were not at the mark or standard of perfect love.

And if our experiences could be imagined as cut short in death immediately after our consecration, we could not think of ourselves as "fit for the Kingdom," because the rewards are not promised to consecrators, but to "him that overcometh." Thus in the case of the Master Himself, our forerunner, it was necessary that He should suffer and thus be proven worthy of entering into His glory. In a word, as the child cannot be graduated the day he enters school, no more can we who enter the school of Christ.

The rapidity of progress in learning the lessons depends greatly on our temperament and our zeal. Some evidently make as much progress in one year as others do in twenty, and very many never graduate at all—never reach the mark or standard which God demands, perfect love. The Word of God, our text book, informs us that "Love is the fulfilling of the law," (Rom. 13:10) that "the end or purpose of the divine commandment is love out of a pure heart and a good conscience" (1 Tim. 1:5). "As many, therefore, as be perfect [willed, at the mark of perfect love] should be of this mind." (Phil. 3:15-17.)

Those who have "thus learned Christ" He has taught the meaning of (1) perfected love toward God, which would prompt them to do and _to dare anything in his service; (2) of perfected love for the "brethren," which would prompt the laying down of life itself in their service; (3) of perfected love for the world, yea, even for enemies, which would lead to do good to them that hate us and despitefully use us, and say all manner of evil against us falsely.

Alas! we cannot suppose that many of the consecrated have reached this standard or mark, hence we must expect that few have graduated as "fit for the Kingdom"; hence also the intimation of Scripture that the left-overs—nongraduates—will be "a great company" as compared with the Little Flock of overcomers who do attain to the mark, the fixed standard. Here, however, it is well to remember that this "mark" or standard of love is not of the flesh, but of the mind or heart. As the Apostle says, "We cannot do the things that we would." Our blemishes of the flesh sometimes momentarily stumble us into an unloving word or act, which if repented of will not be reckoned against us nor put us away from the mark and the loving acceptableness of our Lord, which the mark represents.

"LET NO MAN TAKE THY CROWN."

"Hold fast that which thou hast; let no man take thy crown," seems logically to refer specially to those who have reached the mark or standard of perfect love, and not merely to those who have taken the first step of consecration, entrance into the school of Christ. The words "Hold fast that which thou hast" implies a previous effort and attainment, and that the attainment has had something to do with the right to the crown; and that the position attained must be held if the crown would be ultimately possessed. The intimation is also clear that the holding fast will be at the cost of a severe struggle.

This may be a new and somewhat startling thought to some who have erroneously supposed either that consecration alone was necessary, or that to attain the mark or standard of perfect love would end the struggle. Apparently, the severest struggles, tests, temptations assail those who are at that mark, and this is in accord with our Master's promise that we shall "not be tempted above that we are able to bear." The stalwarts at the mark should be able to bear most and they will be most severely tried. Mark the exhortations to these: "Watch ye, stand fast, quit you like men." No longer "babes in Christ," "no longer children,” their special test is as men, strong in the Lord and panoplied in the whole armour of God. Harken again to the Word, “Having done all, stand!” These words do not fit one entering the school or entering the race; they are most appropriate to those who have reached the standard of perfect love. Those who have “done all,” who have attained the mark of character and “put on the whole armour” are the ones who are cautioned, warned to “hold fast” and “stand fast” and “fight a good fight.”

“WHO SHALL BE ABLE TO STAND?”

“These fundamental truths have been true and applicable to the Lord’s people throughout this Gospel Age, and hence the narrowness of the way and the few there be who have found and walked therein—in all a little flock. But now, more ‘particularly than ever before, this warning applies, and probably to a larger number of the Lord’s people than ever at any time in the past. It is doubtless for this reason that so many Scriptures seem to specify our time in connection with these warnings. For instance, we read; “Take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand in the evil day, and having done all to stand.” (Eph. 6:13.)

The logic of this situation implies that during the last years of the Gospel Age will come the severest of trials and the most subtle tests of our love. (1) For God as represented by our love for His Truth and the honor of His name;

(2) our love for the Lord’s brethren; (3) our love for our enemies. And whenever the “brethren (of whom so much might be expected) become our enemies, the test of our love will be the severer. In view of these things, “what manner of person ought we to be, in all holy living and God-likeness?” In view of the solemnity of the situation, how “circumspect” we all should be! How we should scrutinise our every act and word and thought! And our thoughts require our special care, because by the thoughts and intents of the heart we are being judged. And words and acts proceed therefrom. How often ambition hides its envious desires under the cloak of duty. How many of the fires of the “Holy Inquisition” were lighted by the torch of “duty”! Let us each be on guard. Ourselves or others we might deceive, but not God, Who says, “Be not deceived. God is not mocked; he that doeth unrighteousness is unrighteous”—not merely he who professes. He whose acts and words are loving, gentle, kind, considerate under trying conditions give evidence of being begotten of the God of love and of having developed much Christ-likeness. Consider our Lord’s love for His enemies and His forbearance for them when railed at, “Come down from the cross!” Consider how, when reviled and slandered, he reviled and slandered not in return! Consider how gentle was His reproof of the perfidious Judas, and how He merely hinted a reproof to Peter, who denied Him with cursings! In his case surely Love was ready to cover a multitude of faults. Let us not be easily offended nor of implacable spirit. Let us with generous and forgiving spirit say with the Apostle, “None of these things move me” from my stand at perfect love; it shall grow more rooted and grounded in proportion as it is tested. Let us be on guard against the spirit which is envious of the honours, privileges and blessings granted to another. Contrariwise, let us have so much of the spirit of love that we will rejoice with all who rejoice in the Lord and will mourn with all in distress. To feel even a coolness of sentiment in connection with the prosperity of a brother or a lack of interest in His welfare is a sign of serious danger—that we have slipped from the mark. This should alarm us and lead us to fresh energy.

As St. Paul says, “Ye were called to liberty, but use not that liberty for an occasion to the flesh.” Our real liberty which brings us blessing and Divine favour and peace of soul is a liberty from error and superstition, and a liberty from the bondage of selfishness—a liberty to sacrifice, to serve, to lay down our lives for the brethren and for all men as we have opportunity—and particularly the liberty or privilege of showing to those of earthly relationship that we are copies of the Master and have His Spirit of self-denial, love, sympathy, good fruits.

COMMUNION WITH THE LORD.

THE privilege of prayer which God has provided for His people is one of the greatest boons imaginable. "Let us therefore come boldly to the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy and find grace to help in time of need." (Heb. 4:16.)

The mercy has been provided by God in the great sacrifice of Christ, sufficient to cover all "the sins that are past, through the forbearance of God"; but we must by faith approach the throne of grace in order to obtain this mercy. So, also, with all of our necessities as new creatures in Christ; grace to help for every time of need lies waiting for us to claim it—at the throne of grace. Although our heavenly Father knoweth what we need, and has made so abundant a provision for us, yet He will be inquired of, solicited, by His people for these mercies which He assures us He is far more pleased to give than are earthly parents to do good unto their children.

God's appointment that His people should approach Him in prayer is, therefore, not for the purpose of informing Him of our needs, for these He knows far better than we do, but for our spiritual profit, that we may be kept in close touch with Him, that we may continually realise His love and care and grace toward all who have come into the divine family through Christ. For this reason, while sending rain and sunshine upon the world in general, God holds in His hand many favours, great and small, for "His people," which He will 'bestow only in answer to their faith and prayers.

Prayer is not a privilege merely, but also a necessity —commanded as indispensable to our Christian growth. (Rom. 12:9-13; 1 Thes. 5:17.) Whoever loses the desire to thank and worship and commune with the Father of mercies may rest assured that he is losing the very spirit of sonship, and should promptly seek and remove the barrier the world, the flesh, or the devil. Every additional evidence of the Lord's confidence in us by the revealing to us of His character and plan, so far from diminishing our worship and prayers, should multiply them. If our hearts are good soil they will bring forth the more abundantly.

THE MODEL PRAYER.

All of our Lord's recorded prayers are beautiful in their simplicity, trustfulness and unselfishness; but the one usually termed "The Lord's Prayer," 'given as an. example of a proper prayer, is certainly in every way a model, which we do well to follow closely in all our petitions. (Luke 11:2-4; Matt. 6:9-13.)

(1) Its opening address is full of filial reverence and trust--"Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name!" What could be more sweet and childlike? What could be more reverent than this bold approach, direct to the throne of the heavenly grace?

(2) It does not proceed hastily to the lesser things of a personal character, but, recognising that God takes knowledge of all of earth's affairs, and has a gracious and sufficient remedy already provided, the model prayer acknowledges this, and thus expresses faith and interest in God's plan as revealed in His Word, saying: "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." Yes, indeed, it is not only fitting that all who approach God in prayer should previously have searched to know something of what He has revealed concerning His will and plan, but also that after learning of it they should thus confess faith in God, that His plan, when fully executed, will 'more than meet all the necessities of our case. This is not a petition that God would bring in His Kingdom before His appointed time, nor an expression of an impatient longing for it, but an expression of hope and trust and patient waiting for that which we know will more than meet all proper expectations, and fulfil all the promises of God's Word. It also signifies our allegiance to the Kingdom and its laws and spirit, and hence implies that so far as we are concerned, we will do all in our power to conform our lives to its precepts even now.

(3) Then, coming to personal desires, it requests only the necessities—the "bread and water," which God assures us shall be sure to all who are truly His. It asks, "Give us this day our daily bread." The request is not for wealth, nor luxuries, nor overplus, nor dainties and delicacies. It is simply an acknowledgment of God as the great Provider, and of our reliance upon Him and His promises, leaving quantity and quality and everything else to divine wisdom and love, to be ordered to our highest good.

(4) Although our sins have been forgiven, and we have been received into the family of God as sons before we have any right to pray "Our Father," yet we are very humbly to feel that we stand as "sons" by grace in Christ, and not in merit of our own. We therefore appropriately acknowledge that we are trespassers, daily, who do not and cannot do the will of God perfectly, praying, "Forgive us our trespasses," our shortcomings.

(5) Next we acknowledge a principle of God's justice, that mercy will be extended through Christ only in proportion as we realise the spirit of divine mercy, and are willing to exercise it toward others who come short of perfection in their dealings with us; hence we add, "as we forgive those who trespass against us." This is equivalent to a bargain with God, that we accept His terms of mercy, and will expect none, except as we ourselves exercise it toward others. What a thought ! If fully appreciated, how it would influence all of God's sons to be kind and generous toward each other and toward all men in thought as well as in word and deed. —See Matt. 5:24; 6:15.

(6) "And lead us not into temptation"; or, rather, since chastisements and temptations (or trials) are necessary to our discipline and preparation for the Kingdom (James 1:2-12) , we must understand this as the "Emphatic Diaglott" renders it, "Abandon us not to trial." Since the trial of our faith worketh patience, experience and hope (I Pet. 4:12; Rom. 5:3-5) , and is needful for our perfecting in holiness (I Pet. 1:6, 7), the Father will not hinder us from having temptations, even though He Himself tempteth no man. (James 1:13.) A man is tempted when he is led astray and enticed by his own selfish, fallen desires; he sins when he yields to those desires. (James 1:14.) But in the hour of trial, temptation, who could come off conqueror without the promised "grace sufficient for every time of need," which will succour us and not permit us to be tempted above what we are able to bear, but will with the temptation provide also a way of escape?—1 Cor. 10:13.

(7) "But deliver us from evil," or, as some prefer it, "Deliver us from the Evil One."* The great Adversary is as much on the alert to entrap us through the weaknesses of the flesh as our Lord is ready to deliver us and give us victory. We are not sufficient of ourselves for such a contest against the powers of darkness, and hence have need frequently of this petition to the throne of grace, for, as the Apostle declares, "our sufficiency is of God."—2 Cor. 3:5.

[*The remaining sentence with which this prayer is usually closed is spurious--not found in the ancient Greek MSS. It would appear to have been added at the time when an earthly exaltation of the Church had led some to believe that the Papal glory was the glory of God's Kingdom.]

ASK IN FAITH, NOTHING DOUBTING.

Our prayers are not to be "vain repetitions," formal requests for what we do not expect. We are to "ask in faith, nothing wavering." (James 1:6.) And whatsoever things ye ask "believe that ye (shall) receive them," for whatsoever is not of faith is sin, hypocrisy.— Mark 1 1:24; Rom. 14:23.

The child of God must, therefore, be a close student of his Father's Word; because he is expected to ask that he may receive, that his joy may be full; and he is cautioned to ask only for such things as his Father has expressed a willingness to grant; and he must ask in faith or not at all.

There can be no doubt that in this matter of prayer, as in other matters, our heavenly Father designs to cultivate faith in His people. He tells us that "without faith it is impossible to please God," and that "this is the victory that overcometh the world, even your faith." Hence, only those who exercise faith and ask in prayer for the promised favours, are really ready to receive them according to God's judgment and arrangement. This being the case, it should be the prayer of God's people to-day, as amongst the Apostles, "Lord, increase our faith." And thus praying, and labouring to this end, each would be more and more helped in overcoming the world and its faithless influences.

True faith is not credulity. It is critical, and believes only upon good evidence. It criticises closely and distinguishes clearly between the teachings of men and the substantiated Word of God. But, having found the Word of God, it trusts it implicitly, knowing that its Author cannot lie, and that all His purposes and promises will be accomplished.

True, faith, then, makes sure of its ground by giving careful heed to the Lord's Word; and then, asking according to the Word, it has confidence in the results, and waits and prays and watches, perseveringly and patiently. "Watch and pray," and "believe that ye shall receive," were our Lord's frequent injunctions. He spake a parable about an unjust judge, who was moved by the importunities of a poor widow to do her justice, and then inquired whether God, the true Judge, would not in due time hear His elect Church, and avenge their cause justly, though He wait a long time—until His own "due time." And we are told that He uttered this parable to the purport that God's people ought to pray continuously, and "not to faint (yield)." (Luke 18:1.) So all who are thus in close communion with their dear Lord, continually looking unto Jesus, realise His grace and strength sufficient for every time of need, whatever be the way, and, resting in His providential care. can pray

"I thank Thee more that all our joy
Is touched with pain ;
That shadows fall on brightest hours,
That thorns remain;
So that earth's bliss may be our guide,
And not our chain."

Question Box.

Question.—Does God forgive our wilful sins, and does the forgiveness of our sins depend upon our forgiving those who may injure or offend us?

Answer.—While the Scriptures abound in many beautiful expressions of God's readiness to pardon, yet "these is a sin which is unto death."

When the Lord passed by Moses and declared His name, it was a God of love that was revealed. (Exod. 34:5-7.) "The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering and abundant in goodness and truth, and by no means clearing the guilty"; or, as Dr. Young has translated the last phrase, "and not entirely acquiting." So God's love and mercy cannot operate aside from the principle of justice. Love and justice are directed by wisdom.

In Numbers 15 we find instructions respecting the typical atonement for sins of ignorance, and verses 30 and 31 conclude the matter, saving, "But the soul that doeth ought presumptuously . . . the same reproacheth the Lord and that soul shall be cut off from among his people." The earnest prayer of the Psalmist was: • "Keep back thy servant from presumptuous sins; let them not have dominion over me, then shall I be upright and I shall be innocent from the great transgression." (Psa. 19:13.)

Presumptuous sin would appear to be the same to which the Lord referred as "sin against the holy spirit," which is not forgiveable either in this age, or in the next. Such would be sin against clear understanding and ability to avoid, so that there would be no excuse as to environment or inherited weaknesses.

There is no doubt a great deal of sin which, though not intentionally defiant of the Divine will or law, yet has some measure of wilfulness in it. On account of such sins we believe the Lord will permit some punishment to 'be inflicted and will restore the penitent heart. "A broken and a contrite heart, 'O God, thou wilt not despise."

The fact that we find someone in true penitent sorrow for sin and desiring reconciliation to God would assuredly indicate that such an one had not altogether contracted the "sin unto death," for Hebrews 6:4-6, and 10:26, 27, declare that it would be impossible to renew unto repentance those who had deliberately, wilfully sinned • against full knowledge. after having been made partaker of the holy spirit.

How ready the Lord is to pardon. "Let the wicked forsake his way and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and He will have mercy upon him; and to our God and He will abundantly pardon." (Isa. 55:7.) Again, in Isaiah 1 is shown how God waits to pardon and restore even those so steeped in sin, represented as being polluted from head to foot: "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow, though they be red like crimson they shall be as wool." In the parable, too, of the prodigal son, the other is shown as freely forgiving and restoring the son who had so grossly sinned against him and wasted his goods. There must, however, be a godly sorrow working repentance, a "broken and a contrite heart," in order to have the Divine forgiveness.

There must also be on our part a readiness to freely forgive those who may have done us wrong. Our Lord showed this in the parable of the two debtors. One owed a great sum and was freely forgiven the debt. He then seized another man who owed him a small amount and had him cast into gaol. Then the man who had forgiven him the large sum, hearing of his action, withdrew his mercy and had the debtor who showed no mercy put into prison. If we act unmercifully with others, we need not look 'for mercy from the Lord. "Blessed are the merciful for they shall obtain mercy." "With whatsoever measure yet mete, it shall be measured; to you again.”

The answer to the latter part of the question is. in Mark 11:25, 26, “If ye do not forgive neither will your Heavenly Father forgive you ;” also Luke 17:3, 4, and Matt. 18:21, 22. Here the Lord tells us that even if our brother sin against us seventy times a day and repents we must forgive. How dare we do otherwise as we realise how much we need Divine forgiveness and pray “forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us.”

The Lord thy God led thee . . . in the wilderness to humble thee and to prove thee. Deut. 8, 2.

Question.—How is it possible to harmonise verses 20 and 22, in Numbers 22nd chapter?

Answer.—As the matter of Balaam is related in Numbers, the sin of Balaam is not very plainly shown. There was no doubt that he would have liked to curse Israel, yet he said that no reward would induce him to say anything but what God had told him. He seemed willing not to go to Balak, but the Lord gave him permission, maybe because He saw that Balaam in heart longed to go. Then the angel of the Lord intercepted him in the way, not to turn him back, but to warn him against doing what God foresaw he would do, i.e., giving wicked advice to Balak as to how to bring trouble on Israel. The angel did not find fault with him for going, but said, “I went out to withstand thee because thy way (which your heart is longing for and your mind probably planning how to gain) is perverse before me.” He came to warn him against what he was about to do, and that he was to say nothing but what he was divinely instructed to say. “Only the word that I shall speak unto thee shalt thou speak.” Balaam evidently failed to be guided by the admonition, but gave his own wicked advice to Balak for the sake of reward, and died fighting against the Lord’s people.

In the incident of Balaam we find the lesson that we must faithfully speak the Lord’s Word, and avoid speaking anything of our own which may conflict with the Divine Word: as well as the lesson that we must serve the Lord with a pure motive, a single eye to His glory and without respect to any earthly reward. “Not for filthy lucre,” as the Apostle Peter says, “but with a ready, willing mind.” (1 Pet. 5:2.)

Present social order, is being shaken

THE whole world is to-day in a trying time. The nations seem to be before the judgment and are found wanting. The various theories of government by different parties have proved to be failures where tried. It is becoming more and more evident that man of his own efforts, however good the intentions may be, cannot bring in any system of economy that can approach the “perfect day.” The only hope for humanity is in the coming of the “Desire of all nations.” Only by the setting up of Messiah’s Kingdom, which will mean the dethronement of the present “Prince of this world,” will “justice be laid to the line and righteousness to the plummet,” and peace and goodwill prevail. Only when the spirit of the great Adversary of mankind, which is exhibited in all malice, envy, strife, selfishness, ambition and lust, has been destroyed and the spirit of Christ, the spirit of love, gentleness, kindness and consideration takes its place, can there be peace and goodwill towards all, or the Golden Age of prophecy be ushered in.

The earth, the present social order, is being shaken and must be removed to make way for the new earth. the new arrangement under Messiah, when the Jewish nation will once more represent God’s Kingdom.

The “heavens,” the religious systems, are also to be shaken and taken out of the way, and the “new heavens” controlled by Christ and the Church will restrain Satan and his wicked spirits (Ephes. 6:12) and all false systems, and bring about the promised blessing of all the families of the earth. The shaking of; the “heavens” has been progressing for some time. The great Papal system has received severe shocks even lately in her strongholds of Italy, Spain and Mexico. The Church of England, too, is all but torn asunder striving about things which neither side properly understands—what they call the Sacrament. The one side claims the foolish Roman belief that the bread and wine actually become the flesh and blood of Christ, and fall down and worship these elements just as the Pagan falls down and worships the wood and stone.

The following newspaper reference comes to us under the heading, “Reservation of the Sacrament,” London, 22nd July:—

“The Bishop of Birmingham (Dr. Barnes), in replying to the statement by the Archbishop of Canterbury regarding the reservation of the Sacrament, said it was the most seriously disquieting of any statement made by an Archbishop of Canterbury since the Reformation.

“Bishop Barnes continues:—The assertion that a priest by the act of consecration can cause Christ to come and dwell within the bread and wine, which is the so-called miracle of the mass, was the crucial issue of the Reformation.

It is exactly analogous to the belief held by the Hindu that his priest can by consecration cause God to dwell within an image. The cultured Hindu protests that he does not worship the image, but the God within. if that fact be granted, the worship of the consecrated elements can be justified. The true Anglican doctrine of Holy Communion surely is that the bread and wine are, so to speak, the miraculous vehicles or channels of spiritual grace, and that through their use Christ comes to devout worshippers. I beg your Grace to withdraw the dangerous implication in your statement, or the people of England will not heed us when we proclaim the gospel, for they will deem us disloyal to the truth.’ “

Further, it would seem that all sects and parties have their difficulties. What is termed the “Liberal School” has undermined faith in the Bible to a great extent, so that apparently there are few ministers to-day who recognise the authority of the Bible as God’s inspired Word. One wonders how many of them can still profess to ‘be ministers of the Gospel while disbelieving in original sin, or the necessity of Christ’s death as a ransom price for that sin; denying that the tomb of Christ was left empty by His resurrection on the third day, denying the virgin birth, also the miracles of our Lord.

Ernest H. Jeffs, in his introduction to “Princes of the Modern Pulpit,” says:—“If a student of preaching were to visit, say, twelve churches of each of the chief British denominations during the coming year, I doubt whether he would hear more than once or twice any more orthodox doctrine of the Cross than this: That it is the supreme revelation of the sacrificial nature of love, a sort of parable or drama of love, loving to the uttermost. The old ‘plan of salvation’ is scarcely known by name to the occupants of the modern pew. Thirty years ago this gospel would scarcely have been considered a gospel at all.”

He says. “There is a difficulty in speaking of the Cross. The central emphasis is laid on the life and teachings of Jesus, where for centuries it had been placed on His atoning death.”

So they “deny the Lord that bought them.” not by His example which He left us “that we should walk in His steps,” “but with the precious blood of Christ as of a lamb without blemish” (1 Pet. 1:19); “Who His own self bare our sins in His body on the tree.” (1 Pet, 2:24.) “The Lamb of God who taketh away the sins of the world,” “Who gave Himself a ransom for all.” But such Bible truths do not fit in with the theories of evolution. etc., and so faith is lost in the “only name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved.”

Serve Him with all thine heart.

“Only fear the Lord and serve Him in truth with all thine heart; for consider ho great things He hath done for you.”-1 Sam. 12:24.

THESE are the words of the prophet Samuel. who had served the Lord and His people Israel all his days, even from childhood. The people had asked that they might have a king like other nations, and the faithful Samuel was much grieved. He not only felt that the people were making a great mistake and showing a lack of appreciation of the Lord’s favour and arrangement for them, but also that they failed to appreciate his services. It was no doubt hard for him, yet the people did appreciate him, but they feared the time when he should die and they should have trouble with his sons, who did not walk as Samuel did in the fear of the Lord. They evidently thought that if they had a king he would guard them against these wicked men.

However. while the Lord said, “They have not rejected thee, but they have rejected Me, that I should reign over them,” yet He hearkened to the petition and told Samuel to arrange the matter; at the same time that he should protest against their action and intimate to them what their experience with these kings would be.

The life of Samuel is a beautiful one. It seems strange that such a man should have such wicked sons; also that if Samuel was to ‘blame in the training of his children, that he had not learned the lesson of the necessity of discipline, by the sad experience of Eli, whose sons had turned out so wickedlv.

Samuel now realised that the sin was deeper than he had at first thought. He had thought only that the king would supplant him as judge ill Israel, but the Lord showed him that it was a rejection of Himself as their King as well as Samuel as their judge.

ONLY FEAR THE LORD.

It was on account of this lack of reverence of the Lord on the part of Samuel's sons, that the elders in Israel desired a king. No doubt Samuel was greatly grieved at his sons' conduct, and would impress the needed lesson for all God's people.

"Only fear the Lord": "The reverence of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." Those who deal lightly, carelessly, indifferently in the things of God can never retain the blessings of Divine favour nor prosper in the things that matter most.

God is the fountain of life; in Him we live and move and have our being. God is so wise and good and just. He has manifested His love and benevolent purpose in regard to man in the sacrifice of Christ and in His Word by which His gracious purpose is revealed. To know God and understand His will is certain to have the effect in every reasonable heart and mind of leading to a true, loving reverence, to "worship Him in spirit and in truth." No lesson is more needed to-day, not only in the world, but among Christian people, even among those who have come to some knowledge of present truth than this "only fear the Lord."

"Is the general influence around us to-day is against reverence for anything. Even reverence for parents and for the parental home is lacking. Men and women are wanton and seem to care for nothing but selfish gratification, and it behoves us to guard our own hearts, that we do not drift with the tide but maintain a true, holy, reverence for God and for everything at all connected with His service, His people.

We should seek so to live that others, anyway all in Christ, may recognise that we are striving to be holy, and to be transformed into the likeness of God's dear Son, by daily building up a character like Christ. Let us seek so to walk amongst each other that others may have no difficulty in recognising our heart's desires, and so hold us in holy loving reverence as sons of God, Let us look for the fruits of the Holy Spirit in others, with a loving heart, overlooking humanly inherited weaknesses and quick to see the real heart's desires, that we may hold our brethren in Christ in holy, loving reverence, 'because they are "sons of God." "The reverence of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom."

Only fear the Lord and we shall not be fault-finders, grumblers at the faults and weaknesses of our brethren, or at their endeavours to serve and follow Christ. We shall be content with Apostolic arrangements. If we have a proper reverence for the Lord, it will pain us to listen to, let alone to speak of our brethren, God's children, in an evil way, slanderous way, or to hold up their faults to view. Love covereth a multitude of sins.

SERVE HIM IN TRUTH.

That would mean true service, not lip service, not service to be seen and to have its reward by men, but to serve God because we love Him and desire to please Him and demonstrate to Him how much we love Him. It will not matter at all what others think; they may think our action all wrong; they may think we are hindering God's cause, but if God who reads the heart can see that our intentions are simply to serve Him with a single eye, then "your Father which seeth in secret shall reward you openly."

HIM ONLY SHALT THOU SERVE.

How can we serve the Lord and Him only? Most of God's people are so situated that they have to work for masters and mistresses. Does this conflict with those words of the Lord, "Him only shalt thou serve?" No, our lives, our all, are devoted to God, yielded to Him, and He is able to arrange our course. If He opens the way to relieve us from the necessity of working for an earthly master, well and good; but if He sees it wiser and better for us to still continue in that condition then our work can be done “as unto Him,” and true Christians will therefore be the ‘best of servants. Also, if a Christian be a master, he will no longer reckon his ‘business as his own, for his own selfish gain and pleasure, but the Lord’s, to whom he has consecrated his life and his all. He will then conduct his business for the Lord and in the spirit of the Lord as a servant of the Lord, serving Him in truth. Let us then serve the Lord in all things, day by day, in the home, in business and in the church, in the service of the truth, with all our heart. How few there are who have wholeheartedly yielded themselves to God. Few, even churchgoers, give evidence of having given their hearts in any degree to the Lord, and the Lord will not accept any division of our hearts’ affections: it must be the whole or nothing. A luke-warm, half-hearted condition is not acceptable, and on this account we find the Laodicean church is cast off, or, as stated in Rev. 3. “spewed out.”

When the Lord had inclined us to seek righteousness and led us to justification by faith through our Lord Jesus ‘Christ; when thus we had been brought nigh, and came to be at peace with God, it ‘vas then that the Lord invited us in the words of the Scripture. “My son, give Me thine heart.” The heart represents the will, the affections, and so if we give our hearts, it means our all, all our strength, our minds, our being. That means all our time, all we have and all we hope for.

If we would follow Christ we must be willing to leave all and follow Him. “He who loveth father or mother more than Me, is not worthy of Me.” In Christ we are called to be sons of God, His Church, or the Bride of Christ. While all are called to be members in that “little flock to whom the Father will give the Kingdom,” yet how many fail, because their hearts, their desires, their affections, are attracted by things of the world or the flesh. They offered themselves to the Lord, but to some extent have failed to keep their hearts pure. They would like to lay hold of the Lord with one hand and still cling to the things of earth with the other. The Lord permits afflictions, tribulations which may help them to let go the world or the flesh so that ultimately they yield the heart wholly to Him, and finally become overcomers, ‘but have failed to make their calling and election sure as joint-heirs with Christ in His throne. They serve before the throne. Rev. 7.

The heart is deceitful above all things. The tongue and lips may be called deceitful; they may speak evil and tell lies, but it is the heart that directs. “Keep thine heart with all diligence for out of it is the issue of life.” It is the condition of our hearts that will decide our destiny. But the heart may deceive itself, so some are described as being deceived themselves and then deceiving others. How easy it may ‘be that the heart begins to long for something which is aside from the narrow way of sacrifice and the Divine will, and almost unconsciously at first we may find ourselves approaching the coveted way or desired thing and excuses may be suggested as to there being no sin, no wrong and the thing is pleasant, and maybe that we are too strict and that there is no harm in perhaps allowing this or that. It is only a little permitting of the heart’s selfish desire, but we had said, self should be dead. We had probably symbolised our death, death of our wills, and that henceforth for me to live would be Christ. It is just, maybe, a slight thing. but where will it end? The heart is deceitful: the more it wins the more it desires; and if we will win the prize of the high-calling of God in Christ Jesus, we must cling to the way the Master went. If we judge ourselves and correct our steps it is well; if not, then God will judge us. We promised Him our hearts, our wills, and He has accepted them, and we cannot take them back. Because we consecrated ourselves to God, He gave us the holy spirit, a new life, a spiritual life, and we have no right to desire to take back what we have given up to God.

Our service, our sacrifice, must ‘be with all our heart and mind, soul .and strength. After all, it is the happiest condition possible to have thus yielded all earth’s gilded toys, all life’s hopes and ambitions to the Divine Will and to rest peacefully, trustfully, happy and content in the realisation of our Heavenly Father’s love and care.

“FOR CONSIDER WHAT GREAT THINGS HE HATH DONE FOR YOU.”

The Lord had indeed done great things for Israel. The great Passover deliverance from Egyptian bondage, the overthrow of Pharaoh in the Red Sea, the safe landing of Israel. about a million people, on the Canaan side, the ‘providing and protecting them during forty years, during which time He proved to them His mercy and long- suffering. Then there was the crossing of the Jordan, the overthrow of Jericho, and the victories through Joshua and the judges, of which Samuel was the last. Yet how easily Israel forgot, how often they failed and were led into heathen religions, yet the Lord speaks through the prophet, “Can a woman forget her babe”—why, yes, maybe there are cases of such—”yet will I not forget thee. I have loved thee with an everlasting love,” etc.

Maybe we have often wondered at the waywardness of Israel with such a history of Divine providence and pondered at the Divine love and mercy displayed, but how has it been in our own cases? Have we not had many demonstrations of Divine love, care, protection and providence notwithstanding our many failures? “Consider how great things He hath done for thee.”

“God so loved the world that He gave His only Son to suffer and die that whosoever believeth in Him might not perish but have everlasting life.” “While we were Yet sinners Christ died for the ungodly”; that the “world through Him might have life.” That is surely reason sufficient that all should love God with all their hearts, minds, souls and strength, but “behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed on us that we should be invited to be joint-heirs with Christ. to sit with Him in His throne, and with Him rule in righteousness to bless all the families of the earth. So He has given us the exceeding great and precious promises, that by these we might be made partakers of the Divine nature, to receive spiritual nature and a heavenly inheritance. “We know not what we shall be like but we know that when we shall see Him (Christ) we shall be like Him.”

Consider then our experiences, lifted from the miry clay. we set our feet upon the Rock and has been permitting experiences, sometimes so happy and joyful and again so hard and full of sorrow and pain, in order that by these we may be schooled and trained, that our characters may be developed and strengthened, transformed into the image of God’s dear Son and thus to reign with Christ. Thus God is working in us. to will and do His good pleasure. Surely if we continually realised this, we should never be discouraged by adversity. Though ,possibly sometimes “cast down,” we would not be in despair.

It would seem that it is in the days of joy and prosperity, when our table overflows with the abundance of things necessary, that the heart is often deflected, and the first-love is left. The affections are not only for the Lord any more—the heart is divided. Our Lord’s words, Luke 21:34, seem specially for us of this day—the end of the Age. It is of this time the Lord was speaking. He knew that it would be then that the Laodicean condition of the Church would prevail, and how many would lose their crowns through being “rich and increased in goods,” having need of nothing as far as this world’s good things go, and so this warning from His own lips: “Take heed to yourselves lest at any time your hearts ‘be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness and the cares of this life.”

Flow strange it seems that there should be such danger of us losing our wholehearted love for the Lord, that such vigilant watchfulness of our hearts should be necessary. It is because the human heart naturally likes human things. It is against nature for us to become “dead to the world” and all it can offer so that when earth’s good things are thrown in our way the natural inclinations may be aroused and the heart be found still clinging to the things of earth.

It requires diligence to make our calling and election sure. Some who have seemed so self-confident of winning the prize, some who have denounced others for falling, have at last fallen out of the race themselves. He that thinketh he standeth let him take heed lest he fall.

Our trust is not in self but in the Lord, and we do well to earnestly pray the prayer of David, “Search me ‘Oh God, and know my heart and see if there be any evil way in me and lead me in the way everlasting.” (Psalm 139:23-24)

The heart is deceitful above all things, but it cannot deceive the Lord: it may deceive ourselves. We may be led to think because we do some good works, something that others speak of as good works, some works of charity or of zeal in the service of the truth, that our hearts are true to the Lord. The Apostle seems to see the possibility of “though I give my body to be burned, though I have faith to remove mountains, though I have all knowledge and have not love (love to God and His creatures) I am nothing.”

The Lord has said, “Many shall come to Him in that day and say, we have done many wonderful works in Thy name. and He shall say, depart from Me ye workers of iniquity I never knew you.”

The safe way is to continually remind ourselves what great things the Lord has done for us and that will keep our hearts true to the Lord. It will keep our faith strong and our hope securely anchored, and the things of earth will be kept in their proper place and relationship, and the things of our eternal hope will be seen in their true value, and that the light afflictions which are but for a moment are but working out a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

Consider what great things the Lord hath done for us, and it will be the easier for us to fear the Lord and serve Him in truth with all our hearts. They that worship God must worship Him in spirit and in truth.

INCREASE OUR FAITH.

Increase our faith, beloved Lord,
For Thou alone canst give
The faith that takes Thee at Thy Word,

The faith by which we live.
Increase our faith! So weak are we,
That we both may and must Commit our very faith to Thee,

Entrust to Thee our trust.
Increase our faith, for there is yet
Much land to be possessed;
And by no other strength we get

Our heritage of rest.
Increase our faith! On this broad shield
All fiery darts be caught;
We must be victors in the field

Where Thou for us hast fought.
Increase our faith that we may claim
Each starry promise sure,
And always triumph in Thy name,

And to the end endure.
Increase our faith, O Lord, we pray,
That we may not depart
From Thy commands, but all obey

With free and loyal heart.
Increase our faith—increase it still—
From heavenward hour to hour,
And in us gloriously fulfil

The work of faith with power.
Increase our faith that never dim
Or trembling it may be,
Crowned with the ‘perfect peace’ of Him

Whose mind is stayed on Thee.
Increase our faith, for Thou hast prayed
That it should never fail;
Our steadfast anchorage is made

With Thee within the veil.
Increase our faith that unto Thee
More fruit may still abound;
That it may grow exceedingly,

And to Thy praise be found.
Increase our faith, O Saviour dear,
By Thy sweet sovereign grace,
Till, changing faith for vision clear,
We see Thee face to face!

PROVED.

There is never a trial that comes to you but what is ordered by the loving hand of thy Father. It is sent to thee to prove thy faith, not to try thee. Accept it of His hand as a cherished gem, realising that when your faith is perfected you shall come forth as gold, made meet to adorn the Kingdom of thy Lord.

Berean Biblical Institute, Melbourne,

Dear Brethren in the Lord Jesus,

Many thanks for books and papers you so kindly sent me. I much enjoyed them. The papers on “What Say the Scriptures about Hell ?” “Some of the Parables” and “Where Are the Dead ?” being very interesting and refreshing.

I feel so much strengthened since I have been refreshing my mind with these helpful Bible truths. They do help so much, especially when one goes with a clear mind to the Scriptures to see if those things are true.

I enclose herewith P.N. to cover the cost of subscription to “People’s Paper” for twelve months, and please use the rest to cover the cost of the little books you so kindly sent me. I very much regret not being able to send a larger amount to be used in the spreading of those glorious Gospel truths for the glory and honour of our clear Lord.

Wishing you every success in your work for our Saviour Jesus,—Yours faithfully, P.C.D., 11/9/31.

Dear Brethren in the Lord,—

I am enclosing herewith P.N. for 2/6. It seems such a long time since I sent my last subscription that I really do not know how I stand, so would be very pleased if you would advise me concerning this matter.

I must take this opportunity of thanking you very much for still sending the “Paper” along in spite of my seeming neglect, and I feel I owe you the explanation that, owing to times being so bad, I have been waiting until I had the necessary funds to send for same, and have put off writing for the same reason. I am still enjoying the little “Paper,” and still rejoicing in the Lord. My greatest pleasure is to study His precious Word, and the “Herald” and your “P.P.” come as a wonderful refreshment along the way.

May God bless your efforts in spreading His truth.—

Your Sister by His Grace,— W.V.

[Realising the trying times of the present and that some of our readers find it difficult to subscribe for their “People’s Papers,” we request that all such should write, stating their position. It is our desire that all who appreciate the Lord’s message contained in the “Paper,” and are not able to provide the subscription, should not be without its monthly visit, and so shall have it posted free while our funds allow.

One way in which the friends could assist toward the postage expense would be for those living near each other to have their papers sent together. This has been the method adopted by some of the classes and others for years, but maybe there are more who would like to do the same.]

GOD’S WILL IS BEST.

“God’s will is best; faith’s vision may be darkened,
And tangling influence our feet arrest;
Yet to our cry for guidance One has hearkened;
God’s will is best.

“We raise our tear-dimmed eyes with eager longing,
To pierce the clouds that crown the mountain’s crest;
And watch the chill mists round the pathway thronging,
With hearts distrest.

“God’s will is best—oh! tired heart and weary;
Each footfall finds you nearer to your rest;
And God prints on your pathway, lone and dreary,
‘God’s will is best.’

“Why seek to know the secrets of the morrow;
Or what new dangers may your way infest ?
‘Tis Providence apportions joy or sorrow To be your guest.
“God’s will is best—seek not to do God’s planning;

Nor of the future make untrusting quest;
He only of your whole life has the scanning;
God’s will is best.

“Enough for mortal feet the step before them;
Enough, for mortal hands, life’s next behest;
Enough to know Immortal Love is o’er them;
God’s will is best.

“God’s will is best—your first dawn may be over;
Life’s noon be past, its sun low in the west,
And night full nigh; but Heaven’s morn will discover God’s will is best.”

When a man is told that the whole of religion and morality is summed up in the two commandments—to love God and to love our neighbour—he is ready to cry. like Charoba in Gehir, at the first sight of the ,ca-
-”Is this the mighty ocean? Is this all?” Yes, all. but how small a part of it do your eyes survey! Only trust yourself to it—launch out upon it; sail abroad over it—you will find it has no end. It will carry you around the world.

A SURE FUTURE.

How blessed in these times of stress and uncertainty, and of fear of what the future may hold, to be assured of all things “by the eternal purpose of our God.” What a foundation for trust.

“Father, I will, that they also whom Thou hast given me be with me where I am” (John 17:24).

Could the soul conceive a greater hope? Assured, eternal, if we be but faithful.

“Peace I leave with you, My peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid” (John 14:27).

What a legacy! What comfort on our way to the sure haven! should we fear though the earth be removed, while underneath are the Everlasting Arms. Truly. most blessed are we.

HIS WAY IS PERFECT.

“As for God, His way is perfect: the Word of the Lord is tried; He is a buckler to all those that For who is God, save the Lord ? or who is a Rock, save our God ?”—Psa. 18:30. 31.

GOD’S way is His plan or purpose, that which He purposes to accomplish and which He is steadily working out according to the counsel of His own will. Men also have various plans and purposes of their own which they try to work out as nearly as possible. Some men purpose to amass a fortune; some to acquire a liberal education and vastly to increase their mental capacity and power; others to gain fame and popular applause, or social or political preferment, etc., etc. But to most men the way they choose proves unsatisfactory after a brief trial, and they turn restlessly from one way to another; and even when they pursue one way to the end they realise that it has been an unprofitable way—that the end was not worthy of the strife necessary to gain it.

Then again, men have their various ways or theories as to how God will or ought to accomplish the world’s salvation.

Some claim that it will be accomplished by a process of evolution, and that it is due - to the race by right. Some of these blasphemously claim that the present degradation of the world is directly chargeable to God, who, they say, is the real author of all the sin and wickedness we see in the world—that He made men so, and is therefore bound in justice to bring them up to a better condition. There are others who claim that God has predestinated the vast majority of mankind to eternal torment without any will or choice of their own, their doom having been unalterably sealed before they were born, while a small minority were likewise unalterably elected to eternal salvation and happiness.

But these and various other incongruous theories are only the ways of men, and have no foundation in the Word of God, except as men pervert that Word. It is a serious matter for any of God’s children to accept or entertain such views of His character and plan when they are so clearly stated in His inspired Word; and any one who can hear our Heavenly Father’s character thus traduced without feeling or expressing indignation is disloyal to God and unworthy to bear the name of Christ. If we have so much regard for the friendship of those who advocate such views of God’s character that we cannot reprove their course, we also rank ourselves with the enemies of the Lord, and He will surely so regard us. Such indifference to God and His truth shows clearly that there is something wrong at heart; and sooner or later such will drift into the outer darkness unless they promptly repent and resolutely determine to make no compromise with error, and to cultivate no friendships

But, “as for God, His way is perfect,” and His Word clearly sets forth His way to all the simple-minded ones who take Him at His word and who have no fine-spun theories of their own to establish. In coming to God’s Word it is always important to remember that our attitude should be that of the disciple and not of the teacher. Such an attitude is itself a long step in the direction of a knowledge of the truth; for it is written that God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble.. (James 4:6.) If we come to His Word as reverent students, expecting to find therein the delineation of the pure and righteous character and plan of our God, that plan and character will be revealed to us; but if we come to it in a captious spirit and with impure and unholy thoughts and ambitions, we have just the kind of poor, imperfect brains that can warp and twist the Scriptures to suit our own ideas. If we put on the coloured glasses of prejudice, we can read God’s Word as seen through them only.

And this is what the Psalmist implied when he said, “With the merciful Thou wilt show Thyself merciful; with an upright man Thou wilt show Thyself upright; with the pure Thou wilt show Thyself pure; and with the froward Thou wilt show Thyself froward. For Thou wilt save the humble people, but wilt bring down high looks.” (Psa. 18:25, 27.) And again we read, “A scorner seeketh wisdom and findeth it not, but knowledge is easy unto him that understandeth ;” and “There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death.” (Prov. 14:6, 12.)

Oh, how we need to beware of “high looks” and of the pride that goeth before destruction and of the haughty spirit that precedeth a fall! (Prov. 16:18.) For if in pride we go about to establish our own ways, and do not fully submit ourselves to the right ways of the Lord, we will surely deceive ourselves and be led away by “the error of the wicked, so that God’s way or plan, as viewed through the coloured glasses of our ambitions and prejudices, will seem to our obscured vision as the Psalmist describes—unmerciful, impure and perverse, instead of what it really is—merciful and holy and righteous altogether. There is nothing more dangerous than pride, whether it be manifested in a love of display or in ambitions to be great or to be thought well of by others. If we are ambitious to be more generous than God, and go about to establish the idea of the absolute certainty of the everlasting salvation of every individual, when God plainly speaks to the contrary; or if we ignore God’s appointed means of salvation, which is by faith in the precious blood of Christ shed for the remission of sins, and endeavour to climb up to life by some other way, and to teach others to make the same effort; or if we repudiate the doctrine of the original perfection of man, who was created in the image of God, and also that of his own free will he fell into sin and thereby incurred its just penalty—death, and not eternal torment; or if we seek out any other human invention contrary to the Word of God, and go about to establish it, it is pride that is asserting itself; and if it be not promptly humbled it will surely and shortly end in complete alienation from God.

Let us fear lest a promise being left us of entering into God’s rest—into the rest of abiding faith in His way, His glorious plan—any of us should come short of it. and instead of calmly and confidently resting in God’s way and in the blessed hope of its glorious outcome, we left in confusion and doubt upon the whole subject.

But if you have thus far stood firmly in the faith of God’s way we are persuaded ‘better things of you; and if, with the Psalmist, you can say. “My heart is fixed. O God, my heart is fixed” (Psa. 57:7); if your heart is established in love and reverence and faith in the sure Word of God, then you may also say, “For Thou wilt light my candle; the Lord my God will enlighten my darkness.” (Psa. 18:28.) Yea, has it not been even so? Surely hitherto the Lord hath led us. The language of the prophet applies to all those humble and faithful ones whom the Lord has been leading. “For by thee I have run through a troop (of opposing enemies). and by my God have I leaped over a wall” (of bondage, into the glorious liberty of a son of God).—Psa. 18:29.

Beloved, have we been thus overcoming? Have we been following the Lord's leading? Have we found, and are we still abiding in the sweet rest of faith in His plan, in His way, and not our own? "As for God, His way is perfect." It is just and merciful and benevolent and wise and practicable and sure of a glorious termination. "The Word of the Lord is tried": when fully understood it will stand the test of every argument that could be formed against it as to its justice. its wisdom. or benevolence.

Of this we are fully assured by our Lord, who prophetically declared that the testimony of those who come to a full knowledge of God's plan will be—"Great; and marvellous are Thy works. Lord God Almighty; just and true are Thy ways, Thou King of saints."—Rev. 15:3.

"The Lord is a buckler (a defence) to all those that trust in Him, for who is God (is mighty) save the Lord? or who is a rock (a safe anchorage to our souls) save our God." There is no other one to whom we may anchor our faith and hope; but securely anchored to Him we may trust and not be afraid, and may sweetly rest under the shadow of His wings. "The Lord liveth; and blessed be our Rock; and let the Lord of our salvation be exalted." —Psa. 18:46.

THOU KNOWEST.

Master, I am so glad Thou knowest all 't
Outspoken joys, and sorrow's hidden pain.
I am so glad my path is known to Thee,
And that Thou wilt my wayward steps restrain.

I place my hand in Thine. Oh, hold it fast!
Nor heed my cry whene'er I ask amiss.
Thou knowest what is best, my loving Lord,
From out my heart all wilfulness dismiss,

Lord, when the thorns of earth pierce sharp and deep,
And I instead would choose the scented rose,
Let me recall Thy tender, watchful love,
And that mine inmost need Thy wisdom knows.

Ah, who can tell how far our feet might stray ? -
We are so prone to wander from Thy side,
If not hedged in by Thine eternal arms,
And made within Thy sheepfold to abide.

I am so glad Thou knowest all, dear Lord!
My life but poorly proves what lips confess,
And well I know none but a Father could
So frail an offering with such mercy bless.

Thou knowest all! This is my cradle, Lord,
Thou shadow of Thy wings, 'neath which I sleep,
Not for my goodness, but Thine own great love,
Thou wilt in peace Thy child securely keep.

A NEW REJECTION.

“The years that have intervened since the Great War, which brought ruin and confusion to the Western world, have,” writes Mr. C. F. Andrews in “The Federal Council Bulletin,” “revealed how superficial the acceptance of Christ’s teaching has been in the West “

“Just as the Jews rejected His message two thousand years ago,” Mr. Andrews continues, “so to-day it would seem as if a new rejection had taken place in the countries which are called ‘Christian.’ Such has been more and more the conclusion to which my own thoughts have driven me. I have often found Christ more truly in Africa and Asia than in Europe. . . . To put it in another way, the East has shown me almost every day, while I have lived there, the essential meaning of Christ’s teaching, while the West, which professes His name, seems to have lost touch with that essential meaning and to have evolved a new philosophy of life of its own in which the greater number of the Beatitudes have little place. It has blandly ignored Christ and denied Him. It becomes, therefore, absurd to make these old crude distinctions and to divide mankind into compartments, which are only misleading.”—’British Weekly.”

Extracts from “Strange Figures

by J. Neil. M.A.

Scripture abounds in metaphors.. Take an instance from Isaiah, “All flesh is grass.” The prophet does not mean that “all flesh,” that is, “all inch,” are actually members of the vegetable kingdom. He only means to say they are “like grass” in some particulars. Yet he says -”all flesh is grass,” and thus he uses a metaphor.

When Jesus says “I am the door,” He implies that He bears the same relation to the kingdom of heaven that a door does to a house, namely, that He is the one way by which men enter into it. No matter how utterly different- in their natures are the things thus compared, so that they bear resembling relations in some one single point to certain other objects When Christ says to His disciples, “You are the salt of the earth” (Matt. 5:13) we know at once that He does not mean that they are literal salt, but that they are like salt, in that they preserve and influence the world in which they are placed. When He says, “I am the vine, ye are the branches,” we equally know that lie is only using a figure to show the saints intimate union by faith with Himself and that He is the secret source of their life and fruitfulness.

In the same way “flesh and blood” stand for the whole human nature. Thus the Apostle says of Christ that He has consecrated for us a new and living way through the veil, that is say, His flesh (Heb. 10:20.) So, too, in the case of the Saviour speaking of giving “His ‘flesh’ as meat, where He means His human nature in and by which He has made the atonement as the man Christ Jesus. (John 6:53-56.) And again, when the Lord says to Peter, “Flesh and blood has not revealed it unto thee” (Matt. 16:17), and when Paul says, “I conferred not with flesh and blood” (Gal. .1:16), we know that “flesh and blood” stands in each of these instances for “men,” the whole.

THE NATURE OF COMMUNION.

“Take, eat, this is My body” is shown conclusively to be the powerful figure of metaphor and to mean “this resembles My body.” To take the words “this is My body” literally to mean “this is changed into My body” would be absurd, contrary to the evidence our senses, contrary to reason, and would, more, clearly contradict a number of the plainest statements of Scripture....But if we take the words as a metaphor to mean “This resembles or represents My body then all difficulties disappear and all becomes consistent with our Saviour's highly spiritual teaching. It is then seen to tell, under a beautiful figure, that our souls are, as it were, fed and strengthened by a believing reception of the Lord Jesus Christ, in His Word and spirit, just as our bodies are fed and strengthened by bread and wine.

COMMUNION WITH THE LORD.

WHATEVER might be our natural inclinations with reference to definiteness and persistency in prayer, we must take our instructions from the Scriptures; and, overcoming our natural predilections, we must as "little children" and as "dear children" conform our views and conduct to the instruction which is from above. Let us all, therefore, remember the words, "Ask (in My name) and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full"—(John 16:24). The heavenly Father has multiplied mercies, blessings and providences in store for His obedient and faithful children who will ask for them.

True, some of these proper and authorised and much-desired requests are long delayed; for instance, the Church for more than eighteen centuries has prayed, "Thy, Kingdom come ! Thy will be done on earth, as it is done in Heaven" God has heard, but has not answered. Nevertheless all who have thus prayed for and desired the Millennial Kingdom have been blessed by their faith in that Kingdom not seen as yet—but evidently now very near. However, other requests—for daily food and for succour in temptation and deliverance from the Evil One—have been promptly answered.

In this connection notice specially that the privilege of prayer, or any other favour of God, is not granted for selfish purposes. A thing which might be properly desired and asked for in one case, might be improper if asked for from some other motive. To desire and ask for something good in itself, in order that we might be glorified before our fellows, is a wrong request, because of a wrong motive.

The desire for a good thing, simply for ease and convenience, is an improper, selfish motive. The Apostle refers to such cases, saying, "Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, to consume it upon your desires" —i.e., for inglorious purposes or other selfish reasons. (Jas. 4:3.) To ask for some good thing simply to make a test of it, thereby to establish our faith, is seemingly an improper request, for none but the faithful are promised anything.

Besides, God's plan is that we should walk by faith, and not by sight. Hence, we not only should not ask anything unauthorised, but as we grow in spirituality our petitions will be chiefly for spiritual favours; and even in asking for these we should be particular not to specify how they are to come. And we should look for the answers to our prayers in natural rather than supernatural channels, since God's usual method is to use supernatural means only where the natural means are inadequate.

The graces of the Holy Spirit are specially stated to lie open to our requests and corresponding efforts. Your Heavenly Father is more willing to give the Holy Spirit to them that ask it, than earthly parents are to give good (earthly) gifts to their children.—Luke 11:11-13.

"YE HAVE NOT, BECAUSE YE ASK NOT"

The trouble with many is that they do not avail themselves of the great stock of divine grace set apart for the benefit of those who, abiding in Christ, and His Word abiding in them, do ask, do seek and do find. Let no one suppose that all prayer must be selfish. Quite to the contrary, we have a wide field of prayer-liberty in full accord with the Lord's Word and will.

Every trial of faith and patience is an occasion for prayer for the promised succour. Every failure to gain victory is an occasion for a prayer for forgiveness, and as well for divine 'blessing, that the lesson of our own weakness may be deeply impressed, so that in the next similar trial we may promptly apply for and lay hold upon the "grace to help" promised. Every victory over self is an occasion for prayer that we be not high-minded and puffed up, but kept humble and watchful for the next attack from the Great Adversary. Every service for the truth becomes an occasion for a prayer of thanks for the privilege of serving the great King and maybe to have suffered something for cause; and a cause for supplication for further opportunities of service and grace to use them wisely.

If you have trials and temptations which you are able to overcome, and which are working out in your character patience, experience, brotherly-kindness, sympathy and love, rejoice and offer the prayer of thanksgiving and acknowledgment of divine mercy and help. If your trials seem heavier than you can bear, and likely to crush you, take the matter to the great Burden-bearer and ask His help in bearing whatever would do you good and release from all that would not do you good, but which would injure 'you. If your heart is full of a desire to obey the Lord's injunction and "forget not the assembling," and you are unreasonably hindered in a way that you have tried to overcome but cannot, take the matter to the Lord in prayer, and watch and wait and strive according to your prayers, and you will soon see a manifestation of divine power on your behalf, if you see a true brother, a true "soldier" faltering and in danger, let 'your heart be so full of love for all of the Lord's "brethren" that you will not only run to his relief, but also supplicate the throne of the heavenly grace unceasingly, until you have regained him, or until in his wilfulness he has renounced the "narrow way" entirely. And should the fault be your own, your prayers and efforts will surely be blessed and over-ruled to your own profit. If you have no burning zeal to preach the good tidings of great joy, pray earnestly and faithfully and persistently for it, and strive for it, and you will soon have it. If you have a zeal and love for the gospel, and lack ability to present it, pray for the ability while you make full use of what you have. If you have the zeal and the ability and lack an opportunity, take it to the Lord in prayer as soon as you can, telling Him that you are faithfully using all the opportunities you have. Then watch for more opportunities without slacking your hand to use the very humblest and smallest within your reach.

Have you a quarrelsome disposition, or other bad habits, which you realise are a 'burden to your home and family, and to your brethren in the Lord's household? Take it to the Lord in prayer, asking grace and help to overcome, and meantime using your best diligence and effort in harmony with your prayer.

Do you lack wisdom, so that your efforts to serve the Lord and the truth are usually failures? Take it to the Lord in prayer, remembering the promise, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all liberally and upbraideth not."—James 1:5.

Have you business complications brought about by your lack of judgment, or the dishonesty of others, or your generosity to the poor, etc.? And do these perplex you and hinder your progress in spiritual matters, and thus threaten your welfare as a "new creature"? This surely is a proper matter to lay before the Lord at the throne of heavenly grace; and although it would not be right for you to attempt to dictate how your relief shall come, and you should not expect the Lord to work a miracle to prosper your imprudent venture, yet you can ask His wisdom to guide and over-rule in the results, better than your wisdom could do it.

Here is a wide range of subjects (and it might be widely expanded) upon which we may go to the throne boldly in the name of Jesus and ask and receive, seek and find, God's grace sufficient.

Distrust thyself, but trust His grace;
It is enough for thee!
In every trial thou shalt trace Its all-sufficiency.
Distrust thyself, but trust His strength;

In Him thou shalt be strong:
His weakest ones may learn at length
A daily triumph song.
Distrust thyself, but trust His love;

Rest in its changeless glow:
And life or death shall only prove Its everlasting flow.
Distrust thyself, but trust alone In Him, for all—for ever!
And joyously thy heart shall own that Jesus faileth never. —F.R.H.

“The wisdom of this world is foolishness with God.”

—1 Cor. 3:19.

SIR OLIVER LODGE, the noted scientist who some years ago undertook to inquire into the phenomenon of spiritism and who became a spiritualist, has said that he hopes to communicate with this world after his death. He intends to establish his identity by detailing a “preposterous and absurdly childish peculiarity,” which would be described in a sealed envelope placed in a fireproof safe by the Society of Psychical Research. He says he hopes to remember after his death the details of that document of which no living soul had any idea. He claims to have personally received a great deal of guidance from his wife and son, Raymond, both of whom, according to Sir Oliver Lodge, are “on the other side”—we would say both of whom are dead.

Well had it been if Sir Oliver Lodge and many others had. placed more confidence in God’s Word instead of trusting to their own understanding.

Spiritualists generally admit that there are evil spirits as well as good spirits, and this is a fact according to the Scriptures, but good spirits will not work contrary to the Divine will as it is revealed in the Bible, and therefore they are all evil spirits who communicate with mankind, though they may, like Satan, appear as angels of light. The Scriptures forbidding any such communication are quite positive and plain—Lev. 19:31; bent. 18:10-12; Isa. 8:19.

The following newspaper report from London on the subject of spiritism appeared recently under the heading, “Spurious Mediums”:

“Disclosures made in a book entitled ‘And After,’ to be published shortly by Herbert Bradley, will in all probability shake the faith of spiritualists all over the world.

“Mr. Bradley openly accuses some of the chief spiritualistic mediums of fraud. After a seance held in his house with a noted American medium, whom he names, “spirit impressions” of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, Lord Dewar and Sir Henry Segrave were discovered to have been produced by the medium himself. An alleged thumb, print of Conan Doyle corresponded exactly with the print of one of the medium’s toes. The same trickery was used in ‘spirit impressions’ of other famous persons now dead. “Scotland Yard has verified the author’s records. Mr. Bradley expresses the opinion that the majority of professional mediums are at times guilty of the grossest frauds.”

While. as the above states, there has been and is a great deal of fake in connection with spiritism, yet there is no need to doubt that very strange things are done at seances, such as messages received by rappings, writings, etc., and that sometimes materialisation takes place and a body appears assuming the form and speaking with a voice similar to some deceased person, and things supposed to be known only to the deceased person are revealed. Yet all this can be done and undoubtedly is done by evil spirits personating the departed and cruelly deceiving the remaining relatives.

The Bible clearly shows that these wicked spirits have been mischievously operating in wizards, witches and the false religions and oracles of Pagan priests, and in spiritualism, etc., of our day and ever since the time before the great deluge.

Evidently prior to the fall into sin the angelic host was permitted to assist in the preparation of this world for the habitation of mankind, and even after man’s fall into sin they were doubtless permitted to materialise and communicate certain necessary knowledge to our ancestors. On account of many of these spirits leaving their own estate and preferring to assume human form and marrying the daughters of men.

God brought that world or age to an end. saving only Noah and his family, who 4 alone seem to have been left uncontaminated and therefore purely of Adamic stock. We read "Noah was perfect in his generation."

Since the flood the angelic hosts have not been permitted to freely materialise and appear to men, and those who had been so wicked were "restrained in chains of darkness." Ever since that time their operations have had to be through mediums or witches and in darkness. (Compare Jude 6; 2 Pet. 2:4, 5; Gen. 6:1, 2, 5, 9.)

The only hope held out in the Scriptures for any future life is in the sure hope of the resurrection and this hope is based on the fact that "Christ died for our sills according to the Scriptures." "By one man's sin death passed upon all men." so that all might be included in the ransom procured by the death of Christ. "The wages of sin is death." so Christ "tasted death for every man." "He gave Himself a ransom for all." Rom. 5; Heb. 2:9; 1 Tim. 2:3-6; 1 Cor.

The Bible states that until the resurrection "the dead know not anything," "there is no remembrance of thee in the grave." The death condition is spoken of as a sleep, because the morning will come when the dead in Christ shall rise first "Them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him."

Sir Oliver Lodge says that no living soul knows the contents of the sealed envelope by which he hopes to prove his identity, but these evil spirits, able even to read thoughts, no doubt are well informed and will undoubtedly soon personate him to his friends when he is dead and tell them the details contained in the envelope, yet nothing will be proved. To those who are guided by the Word of God. there are so many infallible proofs that spiritualism is simply demonism.

Has the Bible a Message for To-day ?

That Bible prophecy of two thousand and more years ago is being fulfilled in this our day no reasonable thinker can deny. It may suffice to quote Daniel 12:4, also verse 1, and our Lord's words of Matt. 24:21, Luke 21:26-33: "Men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth, for the powers of heaven shall be shaken." The Apostle in Heb. 12:26, 27, quotes the prophet Haggai 2:6, 7, "For thus saith the Lord of Hosts, yet once it is a little while and I will shake the heavens and the earth, and the sea and the dry land, and I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come"; and adds in verse 27, "that those things which cannot be shaken may remain."

Notwithstanding the increase of knowledge of our day and that it is recognised that the writings and expressions of the people of Palestine and Syria are full of picturesque and figurative language, and that the sayings and writings of our Saviour, the apostles and the prophets were no exceptions to this rule, there are still many who teach that in the day of trouble foretold as the climax of this dispensation, the literal earth is to be burned up and the actual heavens to be destroyed. By this means the Bible message for our time has been beclouded and distorted and the silver lining of good promises has been altogether obscured.

The word "earth" is used in the Scriptures as signifying the social and national arrangements of the people—the earthly institutions. The word "heavens" indicates the spiritual controlling powers—the religious institutions. The Apostle Peter (2 Peter 3:1-14) speaks of the "world which then was" in Noah's day having perished in the deluge. Noah and his family, however, were carried over and began a new "earth" with a new "heavens," and the Apostle says that this present "heavens and earth" are reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. It is no more the literal earth or heavens which are to be destroyed by fire at the end of this age than it was the literal earth and heavens which were destroyed by the flood. That is very clear, for God has promised that He will "never again destroy every living thing," as He had done in the flood—Gen. 8:21. Then, also, our Lord speaking of this day says that unless the days of trouble were shortened no flesh would see through them, but that for the elect's sake the days are to be shortened. Thus it is clear that all will not perish from the earth "(Matt. 24:22). As mentioned above. Paul intimates that "those things which cannot be shaken will remain." That will be such institutions as are founded on justice, truth and righteousness, and the Lord has said, "Seek meekness that ye may be hid in the day of the Lord's wrath."—Zeph. 2:3. In the following chapter. Zeph. 3:8, 9, it will be seen that the fire is figurative.. "for all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of my jealousy, for then will I turn to the people with a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord to serve Him with one consent." Haggai also states that when all nations are shaken "the desire of all nations shall come."

Thus it is that while the Bible shows that there is to be a day of thick darkness, clouds of distress and trouble, yet there is a silver lining. There will be the overturning of the Prince of Darkness of this present evil world and then a new world will be ushered in a new dispensation with "new heavens," when Christ shall reign instead of Satan and make a "new earth" with justice and righteousness its foundation. Then peace and goodwill among men will abound in every land.

The earth is surely being shaken to-day to the very foundations; nothing is secure, no one knows what is to happen next. One kingdom after another has been overthrown; governments have led the way in extravagance and the people have given themselves over to self-gratification, selfish pleasure and greed, fulfilling the words of the Lord and the Apostle, that "as in the days of Noah which were before the flood, so also shall be the days of the Son of Man," preceding the overthrow of the existing order of things—Luke 17:26, 27; Matt. 24:37-39; 2 Tim. 3:1-5. They have sown to the wind and are already reaping something of the whirlwind. The consequence is, the money holders have lost confidence in the controlling powers, 'financial conditions are strained and unemployment increases have reached unprecedented conditions. There is abundance of supply, yet the people are in need, and "men's hearts are failing them for fear of what is coming on the earth."

'There is hardly need that we longer emphasise the Bible warning of coming storm; most people are now alarmed. Our message is a message of comfort to all who love righteousness and who will seek meekness.

The Bible reveals a Divine purpose in respect of this earth and mankind. That purpose cannot be frustrated (Isa.

45:18-23; 46:10; 14:24-27), having been progressing from age to age, each dispensation having accomplished a particular feature in the Divine arrangement. All God's acts are consistent with His attributes of wisdom, justice, love and power. It is because men do not understand God and His plan that they sometimes very unwisely charge God as being responsible for the evil in the world, and the many terrible calamities and sorrows. They forget that because mankind represented in the first parent chose to disobey God, that man was sent out of Eden and the Divine providence and protection was removed. Since that time God has "suffered all nations to walk in their own ways, winking at their ignorance" (Acts 14:16), interfering only when such iniquity abounded that it was kinder to destroy, such as Sodom and Gomorrah and the Canaanites, than to permit them to live on under such horrible conditions. God made choice of Abraham to reveal His good purpose, first of selecting a special class called the "seed of Abraham," through which all the nations of the world are to be blessed. It was not God's purpose to convert the world in Abraham's day, nor in the Jewish Age, during which He dealt only with Abraham's natural seed and gave them the Law and sent the prophets. all for our instruction. (I Pet. 1:10-12.)

Up to the time of our Lord's first advent there had no opportunity for any man to run the Christian race for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. (Phil. 3:14.) All reward up to that time had been A* an earthly kind, no hopes of a heavenly borne had teen held out. Abraham and others are promised to return to earth in the resurrection. (Acts 7:2-7; Psalm 15:16.)

When the Jewish Age ended, the Gospel Age began. Our Lord said, "The Law and the prophets were until John, since then the kingdom. of heaven is preached" and again, "Of all that have been born of women there has not arisen a greater than John, yet he that is least He kingdom is greater than he." "The Law came by Moses but grace and truth by Jesus Christ." It has not been the Divine intention to convert the world during the Gospel Age, but just to select a little flock to whom it is the Father's good pleasure to give the Kingdom." "Such as the Lord our God should call."

The Church of Christ, or the Bride of Christ. are being chosen to be joint-heirs with Christ in the Kingdom: which is to follow this dispensation. The hope of a heavenly home in the resurrection is only to this class and that is why the Apostle in Heb., 11:39, 40, altar having mentioned so many worthies of the previous age. These all died in faith not having received the promise. God having provided some better thing for us (the Church). When the number of God's elect is complete. and there are strong evidences that this will very shortly be accomplished. then the great time of trouble will sweep over the world, to humble men's hearts and prepare them to receive the blessings of Christ's Kingdom which will then he established.

The Scriptures indicate that the blessing of Divine protection and providence will conic to the Jew first, and they are evidently being gathered once more to their own land in preparation for that time.

Paul tells us that when the full number has been taken from the Gentiles to complete the Church, then all Israel:hall be saved, for this is the Divine covenant with them, . Rom. 11:25-27.) He. refers to the new covenant mentioned in Jeremiah 31, containing the promise to regather them in Palestine and bless them as of old. Amos 9:14, 15 declares that “never again will they be driven out of their land.”

It would seem from the Scriptures that while the world generally becomes more and more involved in trouble and distress through the breaking down of the present systems, that Israel, after the Church is completed and taken to be with Christ—to reign with Him—(2 Tim. 2:11, 12; Rom. 8:17; Rev. 3:21; Luke 12:32), will be found rejoicing in restored Divine favour. It is surely time to “speak comfortably to Jerusalem and say unto her that her warfare is ended.” (Isa. 40:1, 2.) Other nations will begin to recognise that while they are in such turmoil and distress that matters are quite different with Israel in their own land, that somehow they have learned how to govern and arrange matters properly so that justice and righteousness prevails, -and therefore peace and joy and goodwill and life and health abounds. How beautifully is this foretold by Isaiah 2:1-4, also Micah 4:1-7. How that God’s Kingdom will be represented by Israel_ and the other nations having utterly failed to govern themselves, every attempt, every form of government having only resulted in failure. will appeal to Israel to send someone to put their affairs in order.

The happy result will be no more war or strife, but every man shall dwell under his own vine and fig tree and none shall make them afraid. There seems to-day a general movement among the Hindus, Muhammadans and others in appreciating the teachings of Christ, though not appreciating what they have seen of what is called Christianity in practise. This seems also a preparation for the glad day when Christ shall set up His Kingdom and when the promise to Abraham will be fulfilled—(Gal. 3:8, 9)—and the message of the angels also, that “Behold I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people.” Peace and goodwill towards:1 and man. Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as in heaven.

Much more could be said did space permit, but it is hoped that the earliest reader will enquire for further literature on these subjects, which will I be supplied free while funds permit.

Question Box.

Question.—What spirit led our Lord into the wilderness? (Matt. 4:1.)

Answer.—Without doubt it was the same holy spirit that came upon our Lord at His baptism, that led Him to go apart into the wilderness. From the rendering in Matthew 4:1, it might be assumed that the purpose of going into the wilderness was to be tempted of the devil, but it is not necessary to take such a meaning from the passage. The rendering of Mark 1:12, 13, and Luke 4:1-13, seem to put the matter more plainly. Our thought is that almost immediately after His baptism, which signified His consecration to death, when the holy spirit came upon Him, Jesus was led by this holy spirit to feel the great responsibility of the ministry upon which He was entering and the necessity of quiet thought and meditation alone with God. He evidently desired to get away from all the ordinary environments of life and to consider quietly the matter of His consecration and how to proceed in respect of His service and the laying down of His life in accordance with the Divine will.

We may be sure that no wrong or evil spirit led our Lord into the wilderness to seek for grace and Strength in meditation and communion with God. We are assured in this, for it is stated that the angels ministered to Him. Many of the Lord's people have somewhat similar experience following their consecration to walk in the steps of Jesus; to be baptised into His death. As with Christ, so with His followers, the great Adversary is prompt to attempt to lead astray right at the beginning of the new life and destroy the very purpose of our consecration. Severe trials of one kind or another quite often, if not generally, follow the act of consecration. The same source of succour and grace which sustained our Lord and brought Him off more than conqueror is available to uphold all who faithfully trust in God, rely upon His Word, and seek to conform to His will. These are exhorted to "think it not strange, concerning the fiery trials that shall try you," "But the God of all grace who hath called us unto His eternal glory after that ye have suffered awhile make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you." (1 Pet. 5:10.) So our Lord came forth strengthened and fortified by His experience and prepared for His great ministry.

Question.—Why did God make such a distinction between the offerings of Cain and Abel (Gen. 4:3-5) ?

Answer.—It would appear that both Cain and Abel had a reverence towards God and it was a proper act of worship that led them to bring their offerings. The Lord, in having respect to Abel's offering and not to Cain's, would teach a lesson, namely, that the only way back to harmony with God was by the shedding of blood. "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins," or, as the little hymn has it, nothing in my hands I bring, Simply to Thy cross I cling."

Cain's offering had nothing in it to indicate that he, a sinner needed redemption, while Abel's was in line with what had been shown after Adam's transgression, when God showed them how to make coats of the skins of the animals; thus, to provide them with a covering, the blood of animals was shed. The same lesson runs right through the Bible—in the offering of Isaac, in the ram as his substitute, in the Passover lamb in Egypt and in the blood of bulls and goats, which, as the Apostle says, could never take away sin; but they were types and shadows pointing to the precious blood of Christ, which was offered once for all. "Neither by the blood of goats and calves but by His own blood He entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us."—Heb. 9:11-28.

Many people would have thought Cain's offering the more beautiful, being the beautiful fruits of the earth, but it contained no recognition of the fact that he as a sinner needed the redeeming blood, while Abel's slain lamb pointed to the only hope for mankind, "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world."—John:29.

The Ministry of John the Baptist.

Luke 3:15, 22.

“Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.”—John 1:29.

SEVERAL points in this familiar narrative are worthy of special notice—

(1) The deep and wide influence of John’s preaching. The prepared instruments of the Lord are powerful in His hand. The whole nation was aroused, the multitudes were baptised with the baptism of repentance (Mark 1:4, 5) and the expectation of the immediate advent of the Messiah was everywhere manifest.

(2) The humility and sincerity of John, which was not changed in the least by the popular favour, is seen in his denial of the suggestion that he might be the Messiah. Had he made the claim, how readily would the people have accepted it ! But this prepared vessel of the Lord was so established in righteousness as to be superior to any such temptation.

(3) In disclaiming this honour for himself, John compared his own work and the work of the coming Messiah, and showed them the difference. Referring to himself, he claimed great inferiority. And his own work he described as only a preparatory work: “I indeed baptise you with water, but . . . He shall baptise you with the holy spirit and with fire.” It is very manifest that all of the multitudes who were baptised with water were not baptised with the Holy Spirit. The ‘baptism of the Holy Spirit came at Pentecost after the Lord was glorified, but only upon a small minority of the Jewish nation. The baptism of fire came later—in the end of the Jewish harvest (A.D. 70), when Jerusalem was destroyed and their national existence terminated in the midst of a great time of trouble. Verse 17 is in reference to the great separating work of the Jewish harvest, and the gathering of the worthy remnant into the garner of the Gospel Age. and the fiery judgments upon the unworthy chaff.

(4) In the baptism of Jesus we see that the ordinance received a new significance. His baptism was not unto repentance; for he had no sins to repent of. “He was holy, harmless, undefiled, separate, from sinners” (Heb. 7:26). With the accustomed view of baptism, John declined to baptise Jesus in Whom there was no sin, nevertheless, though he could not understand why He should desire it. John complied with His request—“Suffer it to be so now for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness.”—Matt. 3:15.

The righteousness of God’s law which could by no means clear the guilty (Exod. 34:7) without a satisfaction of the claims of justice by the sacrifice of a life for a life (Exod. 21:23; Lev. 24:17-21; Dent. 19:21). He was about to fulfil by the sacrifice of Himself. He was about to give His flesh for the life of the world—giving His life for the life of Adam, in whom we were all condemned, that as all his posterity were included in the condemnation, so they might likewise have a share in the redemption. And all who desire to follow in the footsteps of Christ must likewise present their bodies living sacrifices, holy and acceptable through Christ. Thus it becometh us (the Christ, Head and Body) to fulfil all righteousness.

With the baptism of Christ, then, the ordinance received the new signification of entire consecration to God as living sacrifices, even unto death. And in this new view of the matter some of the Jewish converts were baptised again. See the baptism of John and the baptism of Christ and His Body, the Church, contrasted in Acts 19:3, 5.

WHEN CHRIST IS KING !

THE HOPE FOR HUMANITY.

MANY have thought that Christ is King of Earth to-day, and that He has been trying to gain control of His Kingdom through the activities of His people. People have been urged to “win the world for Christ,” and evangelists have taught that the more conversions that were made the more Christ’s Kingdom was extending, and that when all the world had become Christianised then Christ’s Kingdom would have come.

As we view the world in comparison with even fifty years ago, we have to confess that it is less Christian to-day than then. Not only is there a larger percentage of heathen and avowed agnostics and atheists, but we have to deplore the fact that there is less real earnestness among professing Christians. There are fewer real, consecrated Christians understanding what it means to take up the cross and to follow Christ in the churches to-day than there were. We realise that if all the heathen of India, Africa, China and Japan were converted to the present condition of Christendom they would need still to be converted to be Christians, for there is probably more evil and wickedness in what are called the Christian nations than among the heathen.

In view of this condition of things, it should be evident to all who will consider the matter that if we were to wait for the coming Kingdom of Christ until the churches should “win the world for Christ,” we should wait in vain, for it would never come at all.

Yet all men have a hope of a better day coming, and socialists and others have a hope of establishing such a system of national economy that will mete out justice to all and recognise that every man should have a good opportunity of providing for the necessities for himself and his family without so much worry and anxiety and sweat of face — that there must be less of class distinction and luxury and waste on the one side, and less of poverty and need on the other.

Leaders of such thought may not be Christians at all, yet no doubt it is with good purpose they think to bring in a better day. While some alleviation of those who have been oppressed has taken place, yet the results of their schemes only demonstrate that man by his own effort cannot establish an arrangement that will mete out justice to all and make the world a happy brotherhood. Even if that could be done, there is still the fact of calamities, sickness and death, which only the lifting of the Divine curse on account of sin can stop.

It is to the Bible that we must turn to learn of the sure hope for the poor “groaning creation.” Here we find a clear plan for ultimately releasing mankind from the death sentence and leading all the willing and obedient up the highway of holiness (Isaiah 35) back again to the perfection and happy condition enjoyed by our first parents prior to the fall.

We see that in God’s wisdom mankind was represented in Adam, on trial in Eden, and therefore all were condemned by that one man’s offence (Romans 5:12-19), so that in due time, when all shall have tasted of the baneful results of that disobedience to Divine Law, they might be released from that penalty of death by one man’s righteousness and death (Heb. 2:9; 1 Tim. 2:3-6).

In this way, justice, which is the foundation of God’s throne, could be satisfied—life for life—so God provided a way that, while still being just, He might be the Justifier of him who believeth in Jesus (Romans 3:23-26).

Nineteen hundred years ago the great sacrifice was; Jesus “bore our sins on the tree”; He bought us with His blood; His flesh He gave for the life of the world, as “the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world.” “Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures.” Thus, “He is the propitiation for our sins (the Church’s sins) and not for ours only, but for the sins of the whole world” (1 John 2:2).

Without the cross of Christ there was no hope for humanity; death would simply have swept us all away. There would have been no resurrection and no hope beyond the tomb. ‘Thus the mission of Christ at His first advent was to lay the foundation for His intended work at His second coming. The effect of the cross of Christ would have been no use to mankind generally without the work to be done at the second coming. To have released man from the condemnation to death, while so weak and erring through hereditary taint, would only have meant that he would soon have sinned again and so each would have personally incurred the second death penalty.

It is on this account that God has arranged to leave the World in the hands of His Son during the Kingdom Age of 1000 years, so that He may lead them step by step towards righteousness (Psalm 72; John 5:22-29; 1 Cor. 15:22-28).

As steps towards holiness and righteousness are taken there will be rewards of life and health and prosperity, while wickedness and disobedience will have corresponding punishments. This course is termed in John 5:29 a “resurrection (raising up again) by judgment.” (R.V.)

The seeming delay since the first advent has been on account of the Divine purpose to select the Church, the Body of Christ, or the Bride Class, to be “joint heirs” with Christ in the Kingdom, to reign with Him, to bless all the families of the earth (Gal. 3, 9, 16, 29).

Soon now the Gospel Age will close, its purpose being accomplished, and then “the kingdoms of this world nil: become the Kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ” (Rev. 11:15).

Our Lord foretold, as did also the prophets, particularly Daniel 12:1-3; Matt. 24:21-22; Luke 17:20-30, that just such days as we see about us at this time should come at the end of this dispensation and precede the establishment of Christ’s Kingdom on earth.

HOW CHRIST COMES.

Many people expect our Lord to reappear in human form, but such is not in accord with the apostles' teachings, for 1 John 3:2 informs us that we do not know what our Lord's glorious body is like (since His ascension) and we are to see him "as He is." When He came to earth as a babe, He changed from the spiritual body to the human "for the suffering of death"; "made a little lower than the angels." Jesus said, "My flesh (human nature) I give for the life of the world," and again, "The world seeth Me no more, but ye shall see Me because where I am shall ye be also" (that is the Church) (John 14:19, 3). Paul said, "Though we have known Christ after the flesh, henceforth know we Him (so) no more." No one ever saw Jesus in human form after His ascension. Paul, in order that, as an apostle, he should be a witness of His resurrection, was granted a sight of Christ in His glorious spiritual body. ("There is a natural (human) body, and there is a spiritual body.")

Prior to His ascension Jesus appeared in different forms to His disciples in order to converse with them, but never after His ascension.

So now we do not look for Him to return circumvented by a human body, but in His glorious spirit body, "in the express image of the Father's person," "in all His glory and all the holy angels with Him."

Thus He comes to dethrone Satan and all the wicked spirits that have been so long deluding mankind through witches, necromancers, medicine men, mediums of spiritism, and the oracles of paganism. Satan has been the prince of this world (age) and so selfishness, lust, strife, wickedness, superstition, and error have prevailed to ruin and deceive mankind.

What a relief it will be when Christ, instead of Satan, is King, when all the evil influences are restrained, when all inducements to sin are taken out of the way, when error and superstition are exposed and when evil and wickedness are quickly detected and justly punished.

Then, "when the Kingdom is the Lord's and He is Governor among the nations will the people learn righteousness (Psalm 22:27, 28; Isaiah 26:9).

Instead of selfishness, ambition and greed, the spirit of the new King will prevail, the spirit of love and care for one another, a spirit of brotherhood among men. No more will false teachings deceive men, for when the fiery time of trouble is over the high-minded, the proud and hard-hearted will have been humbled and melted, and the pure teachings of God's Word, showing His great and good purpose respecting mankind, will be made known and "all with one consent will turn to the Lord" (Zeph. 3:8, 9).

Just prior to His crucifixion our Lord had cursed the fig tree, a symbol of the curse on the Jewish nation, "Your house is left unto you desolate." In Matt. 24:32, 33. He tells us that when we see this fig tree (the Jewish nation) budding again, then know that the time is near for the accomplishment of the matter connected with the questions of verse 3, which He was answering—"When shall these things be? What shall be the sign of thy presence (Greek), and of the end of the world (Age)? He adds that the generation living when these things are discernable will not pass away until all be fulfilled.

The Jews are to be restored to their own land, and will be the visible earthly representatives of the invisible heavenly kingdom of Christ. We read that the Law shall go forth out of Zion, the spiritual phase of the kingdom, and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem. The prophets are full of rich promises of that time of blessing when evil and wickedness will be stamped out and the way of righteousness will be made so easy. The stones of temptation will be taken out of the way, and there will be no lion in the path. For Satan as a roaring lion will no longer be at liberty, but is to be restrained (Psa. 35; 25:6-9; 62:10-12 • Micah. 4:1-5).

There will be no more war, no more strife, no more the innocent suffering for the guilty, no more oppression. no more injustice. There will be full opportunity for every man and woman to do all that is right and kind and good, and “the willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land,” while the proud, the arrogant and evil doer shall be destroyed in the second death (Psa. 72).

Finally there shall be no more curse, and no more death, “God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain. for the former things are passed away” (Rev. 21:4).

Micah 4:1-5 very ‘beautifully describes the happy condition in the earth. when Christ, instead of Satan. is King, when justice and love prevail instead of hatred. jealousy, strife and iniquity. “In the last days it shall come to pass, the mountain (kingdom) of the Lord’= house shall be established in the top of the mountains (kingdoms—Israel will again represent God’s kingdom on earth) , it shall be exalted above the hills (lesser nations) , and people shall flow unto it; and many nations shall say, “Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord and to the house of the God of Jacob; and He will teach us of His ways and we will walk in His paths; for the law shall go forth out of Zion (Christ and the Church, the heavenly phase of the kingdom) and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem (the earthly capital.) And He shall judge among many people and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree. and none shall make them afraid, for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it.”

Not only are those who are fortunate to be living at that time to enjoy this happy condition, but “all that are in the graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God and come forth” (John 5:28, 29; R.V). This is particularly promised regarding Israel in Ezekiel 37:12-14; “O, My people, I will open your graves and cause you to come up out of your graves and bring you into the land of Israel.” Jeremiah 31 beautifully describes the joys of returning favor to Israel and the establishing with them of the New Covenant under which they, and all who will, may find Divine favor, blessing and life.

The Apostle Peter speaks of the same matter in Acts 3:20-22; “He shall send Jesus Christ, who before was preached unto you, whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His holy prophets since the world began. For Moses truly said unto the fathers. A prophet shall the Lord God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me, him shall ye hear (obey) in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you; and it shall come to pass that every soul which will not hear that prophet shall be destroyed from among the people.”

Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that He loved us.-1 John 4:10.

The love of God is. like Himself, equal, constant, not capable of augmentation or diminution; our love is like ourselves, unequal, increasing, waning, growing, declining. His, like the sun, is always the same in its light, though a cloud may sometimes interpose; ours, as the moon, hath its enlargements and straightenings. The love of God in itself is the eternal purpose and act of His will. This is no more changeable than God Himself; if it were, no flesh could be saved; but He changeth not and we are not consumed.—John Owen, D.D.

Correspondence,

Victoria, November 16, 1931.

Dear Brother,

Surely you will be wondering why I have not written lately. We were very pleased to learn (while reading the last "People's Paper") that it has been decided to hold another convention at Christmas time. It was my intention to ask if you were going to do so. You may depend some of us will be there (D.V.). We have been very busy lately, but can put on a casual hand or two so that some of us can come to the convention.

I am enclosing —, please see that my subscriptions for the "People's Paper" and "Herald" are alright, and use the rest as you think best. I would like a few more of the last "People's Paper" if you have any to spare. We enjoy reading these two papers very much, and we can see that the Holy Spirit runs through their pages.

Dear brother, we realise that our Heavenly Father has been very good to us during these perilous times, fulfilling His promise that "verily thou shalt be fed" (Psa. 37:3), while so many in the world are in want, and things are fast working up to the battle of the great day. May our Heavenly Father grant that we may hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering. And let us consider one another to provoke unto love and good works, not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching (Heb. 10:23-25). The night is far spent, the day is at hand, so let us cast off all works of darkness; and let us put on the armour of light (Rom. 13:12); God grant that we may be able to stand fast in the faith (1 Cor. 16:13).

Dear brother, I often think of the Adelaide and Gawler classes and remember them and you all in my prayers before the Throne of Grace. Your brother in the narrow way.—H.J.W.

Berean Biblical Institute,

Dear Sirs,—

Thank you so very much for kindly sending me your splendid book, "Foregleams of the Golden Age." I have read some of it and really think it splendid, also I thank you for your kind letter received some time back. It gives one heart to realise that someone wishes us well.

I have been greatly helped through the "People's Paper," a; it teaches us so much of His Divine Law and it keeps my heart refreshed and happy and helps lighten the burden of life and all its cares and difficulties. I have just finished reading the last one, "Has the Bible a Message for To-day?" which is very beautiful to read; I was very sorry when it ended. They are especially grand for me, for it is the only reading matter I get, for, as I told you before, we are very poor respecting this world's goods, and have a large family to keep, and oft times have to live on just potatoes and salt, as we are doing at present, but later on, with our Father's help, I hope for things a little better.

I will accept "Foregleams of the Golden Age" from you for the present, and later on, when I can do so, I will send the 2s. 9d. on to you, with my grateful thanks for all your kindness. I had a visitor last week, and was showing him "Foregleams" and he looked at it for some little time and I asked him what he thought of it. He said he had not got a Bible with him, so I lent him mine, and he found the answers to the first 3 questions on page 17, and said that it was not as he had been taught. I knew that, for we had all been taught that if we died before we were converted, we would go to torment. It is grand to know and understand the Bible better and praise God for all His love and kindness, for indeed it's wonderful.

Now, my dear Christian friends, I trust all is well with you, and that God will bless you abundantly, and keep you always near Him. Ever yours in Christian love and faith.—A.E.K.

Dear Brethren in our most Blessed Hope,

Grace, mercy and peace be multiplied unto you! Enclosed find my subscription to the "People's Paper," which we enjoy reading and which keeps us in touch with the dear friends in far-off Australia. We are "bound by invisible bonds" to every fully consecrated child of God, "whom not having seen we love" with "a pure heart fervently," and pray for every one, daily. As our dear Bro. Russell used to say, ours is the most wonderful "secret society" in all the world, and yet wholly unknown or recognised by it. "The world knoweth us not, even as it knew Him not," and how surprised they will be when, in the by and by, the Church "will appear with Him in glory," and they come to an understanding of the very important work which was accomplished in this Gospel Age.

I note the article in August number from "Old Paths" publication and I am glad that you read and enjoy those little leaflets as we do. I have wondered that I have not seen "Desolation of the Sanctuary," translated from the German, mentioned in the "People's Paper," as this book has been a means in the Lord's hands of helping many of the Lord's dear little ones to discern the great test of recent years and its purpose.

We take other publications and enjoy them, and read a great deal in the dear old Word itself, and also the reprints. I wish the friends would all read two articles in the 1897 "Tower," September 1st issue, entitled "Lending to the Lord" and "The New Life in Christ," for they remind us of our privileges in connection with service for fellow members of the Body of Christ, which so many have lost sight of in recent years since a witnessing service has been stressed out of all proportion to everything else.

May all you dear ones be kept closely "under His wings" in all the trying days before us. We remain,
Yours in Heavenly bonds,

M.M.L.

[Reference was made to the book, "Desolations of the Sanctuary," in a previous issue, and we are pleased to obtain this work for all desiring it.]

THE SPIRIT OF CHRISTMAS.

While the followers of Christ are ever mindful of the life and sacrifice of our Lord while on earth, and desire to have His spirit actuating their every thought, word and deed, the Christmas season, drawing near again, will be profitable and an added time of blessing for all if it serves to further impress the spirit of love and faithful obedience to the heavenly Father's will, exhibited by our Lord Jesus in taking upon Himself "the form of a servant." His loving sympathy and devotion to "His own," and compassion on the multitudes, as He laid down His life "for every man," commencing thirty years after that first Christmas morn. so long ago.

How good it is to think of the days when Jesus came to earth and was proclaimed by the angel as a Saviour, Christ the Lord; how that throughout His ministry He "spoke as never man spake," "words of grace and truth," which drew to Himself a little band of loyal disciples, and which shall yet be indeed "good tidings of great joy to all people!"

The following extracts from an address on "Taking Jesus Seriously." by H. R. S. Sheppard, C. H.D.I., late Dean of Canterbury, serve to impress upon us the privilege of serving the Lord, in spirit and truth, through His people, as truly as did the early disciples, though the nominal church and state are in much the same condition now as when Christ came in the flesh:

"What, in fact, should we do if Jesus appeared in our society with any claim to anything but the right to console us, to heal our personal ills, and to make us all comfortable again? I wonder. As a revealer of the art of actual living, as the master of the craft of life—for that is what He is and was—should we recognise Him, or would Church and State combine against Him as a dangerous fellow, one to be dealt with in the old Judean way, to be bullied, to be betrayed, to be crucified? I wonder.

"I suggest that for many of us who are here there is, after all, only one thing that actually makes known the Gospel, and that is the goodness of the individual. If only when we got home to-night they knew at home, because we were rather different, that we had been trying to draw near to our Lord, if only they could see that we were a little more thoughtful, courteous, kindly and understanding, then, 'O My father': they would say, 'there is something in this more than we thought there was.'"

I think it might well be the ambition of all our lives that one day, possibly, most lovely of all, wife, or brother, or sister, or mother, or grannie, might say after we had left, it seems as if Jesus of Nazareth had passed by.' So when we talk, as we often do, a great deal about Church reform, and all the rest, things that sometimes mean little to some of the people, let them please remember that they will count in an amazing way if 'how can take Jesus Christ back to their homes or their places of business.'"

Such is the happy position of all who seek to cultivate the graces and fruits of the spirit in their own lives—of being used of the Lord to impart His sweet spirit of comfort, hope and encouragement to others. Who can estimate the joy, the uplifting influence from those "Where only Christ is heard to speak, When, Jesus reigns alone."

Many will be the opportunities for all to demonstrate their love for the Lord and their brethren, in the little acts of service and encouragement along the narrow way in all the days ahead, at the convention gatherings, at the regular class meetings, and more often in the homes.

“As sonic rare perfume in a vase of clay,
Pervades it with a perfume not its own,
So when Thou dwellest in a mortal soul,
All heaven’s own sweetness seems around it thrown.”

And so, as another has said, “Our alabaster boxes are our hearts. which should be full of the richest and sweetest perfumes of good wishes. kindness and love ;;)ward all. but especially toward the Christ— toward the Head. our Lord Jesus, and toward all the members of His Body. the Church; and especially on our part toward the feet members who are now with us, and on whom we now have the privilege of pouring out the sweet odours of love and devotion in the name of the Lord, because we are His.”

CHRISTMAS CONVENTION.

The Annual Convention of the Melbourne Class will take place at Molesworth Chambers, 450 Little Collins Street, Melbourne, on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, December 25, 26 and 27, with afternoon and evening sessions.

The local friends will be pleased to hear from brethren intending to be present, and, should accommodation be desired, would be glad to make all necessary arrangements.

A baptism service will be available should any of the friends wish to symbolise.

A syllabus of the meetings is now in preparation, and will be completed as soon as advice is received respecting brethren contemplating being in attendance.

Meanwhile, the prayers of all the friends are requested, that God’s richest blessing may attend our meetings, as all would gather in sweet Christian fellowship for exhortation, encouragement and growth in grace, knowledge and love. A hearty invitation is extended to all truly Consecrated believers in Christ.

FREE TRACTS, CARDS, WALL TEXTS, ETC.

A good supply of the tract, “Has the Bible a Message for To-day,” is now in from the printers and ready for general distribution where there may be indications of doing good. All willing workers are invited to send for these, and are requested to state how many could be used to advantage.

Wall texts, cards and bookmarks, etc., with appropriate texts and verses, are on hand for Christmas greetings and general use.

Communion with God.

THE PRAYER OF CHRIST UNSELFISH.

OUR Lord's prayers, like all His acts and teachings, are models of unselfishness. Therefore, before we ask anything of the Father, one question should be carefully considered; viz.—Why do I want this ? If the petitioner is consecrated and desires the healing of any that are sick, it should not be for his Own glory, nor -for his own comfort, nor in any manner for himself , for such requests are selfish and out of harmony with his covenant of sacrifice—"even unto death." Remember the course of our Lord and the Apostles. Our Lord used Divine power in feeding the Multitude because of their necessity, and to glorify the Father; but when He Himself was forty days without food He would not use the same power to feed Himself by commanding the stones to become bread, because this would have been contrary to His mission not to preserve His own life, but to sacrifice it, to lay it down in the service of others.

He created food for the multitudes, but not for Himself or the disciples, though He referred to the miracle as an evidence that if ever necessary the same power would create bread for them. But it seems to have been the Father's plan to provide for His people by natural means, for there is no- record of necessity for such a miracle on their behalf. Doubtless the Lord and His disciples partook of the bread and fish after they were made, and probably of the remaining fragments, but note that the object of their creation was the relief of the multitude and not their own refreshment (Matt. 15:32; 16:5-12). He healed the lame and the palsied miraculously when it would glorify God, but when He Himself was weary, He "sat on the well" to rest or used other natural means. Though He prayed often to the Father, and knew that He was heard always, and although sometimes heavy and sorrowful, as in Gethsemane, yet His prayers were requests for grace and strength to do the Father's will, and to finish the work He had come to do. And though He tells us that by asking He could have had "twelve legions of angels" to protect His person and His life, yet He would not ask—preferring to have the Father's will accomplished, which He had come to perform.. namely, to give Himself a "ransom for all." -So notably was this a characteristic of His, that even His enemies noticed it, and said, "He saved others (from sickness, etc.), Himself He cannot save." They could not appreciate the self-sacrifice which He was performing. And so, too, we may reasonably expect that many nominal Christians to-day will not understand the same motives and conduct in those who prefer to share in Christ's sufferings, to join with Him in sacrifice in order that they may share also in His coming glorious work of blessing and re-storing "that which was lost."

APOSTOLIC GIFTS USED UNSELFISHLY

Notice also the Apostle-. They, too, had the gift of healing as well as privilege of prayer, but they did not use these selfishly. In all the records we find no instance of the exercise of the gift of healing on behalf of any of the Apostles, or any of the church; nor have we any record of prayer for health, or other earthly luxuries. offered by any of them for themselves or each other, except in one case—that of Paul (2 Cor. 12:7-9) , and his request was not granted; but he was told that instead he should have a sufficiency of grace to compensate and enable him to bear his infirmity patiently. This should command the attention of all.

Although Paul's request for himself was refused—God seeing that his affliction of weak eyes could be made to work to divine glory and his own advantage--yet his gift to heal others was marvellous: "And God wrought special miracles by the hands of Paul, so that from his body were brought unto the sick, handkerchiefs or aprons, and the diseases departed from them" (Acts 19:12). Mark, also, the fact that though there is no account of the healing of the sick among the early disciples, it was not because they were never sick, for several instances of sickness are recorded. Paul write-; to Timothy. "Trophimus have

I left at Miletum sick"; and again he writes to Timothy, who was evidently often troubled with indigestion or dyspepsia, to use wine as a medicine; saying, "Use no longer water (exclusively), but take a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and for thine often infirmities" (1 Tim. 5:23). In neither of these cases did Paul send handkerchiefs or aprons from his person, nor did he mention praying for their recovery, or advise them so to pray. Evidently these cases should teach us that the gifts of healing, and prayer for the recovery of the sick were used, not upon the saints, but rather through them upon others, for the purpose of calling attention to the apostles and their gospel as being approved by God.

A special reason why the saints cannot properly ask for physical health and earthly luxuries is, as we have already intimated, that they, like their Lord, have consecrated themselves, and pledged to God the exchange of all earthly favors and privileges for the heavenly favors and glories to come, a foretaste of which they now enjoy through the exceeding great and heavenly promises which cheer and refresh and comfort and bless more than earthly blessings could. Who, that understands the matter, would renounce his heirship in the future heavenly glories, together with present hopes and spiritual joys, or re-exchange them, if he could, for future earthly restitution, and present occasional foretastes of it?

THREE CAUSES OF SICKNESS.

But some will enquire. If it is not proper for the consecrated to pray for the healing of themselves, what does the Apostle James mean when he says, "The prayer of faith shall save the sick"?

Accidents may and do occur so far as the world is concerned, but the saints are God's peculiar care; nothing can come upon them except as specially permitted. While God could take all the world under such special supervision, He pleases rather to let them be subject to the ordinary vicissitudes of the present condemned state—accidents, sickness, etc. 'Only the Church (the consecrated) are comforted with the assurances of special care: "Your Father knoweth that Ye have need of all these things." and "like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him, those that respect and love Him. those consecrated to His service. of such it is written. "All the steps of the righteous are ordered of the Lord": and "the very hairs of your head are all numbered" (Matt. 10:30; 6:3 1-34).

While, therefore, sickness may in a general way be considered, at least indirectly, the work of Satan, who deceived mankind into sin, and hence into sickness and death, yet in view of what we see of God's special care of the saints, we know that, in their case at least, sickness could not come without the Lord's special permission; and hence it should be regarded in their case as from Him, and not directly from Satan, who could have no power over us except it were given him of the Father.

Accordingly, the causes of afflictions, including sickness, as applying to the consecrated Church, are classed as follows. First—Those which have been either produced or aggravated by our activity in the Lord's service. Second—Inherited weaknesses and those brought on ourselves by violations of the laws of nature previous to our entrance into the family of God as sons. Third—Such as come upon us as discipline or chastisement from the Lord for sins or wanderings, or coldness, or for the sin of failing to fulfil our covenant of sacrifice; or as needed discipline to prevent these.

SUFFERINGS FOR CHRIST'S SAKE

Of the first class were the sufferings of Christ—His weariness, weakness, bloody sweat, ignominious buffeting, and all the reproaches and sneers, and bitter words, to which He meekly and quietly submitted until the sufferings of Calvary terminated His human existence. Of this first class were also the wounds of Paul and Silas, when scourged for preaching Christ, when stoned, beaten and imprisoned, and when in perils by sea and by land, among the Jews and among false brethren. Of this class was also the dyspepsia of Timothy, who, probably not naturally strong, studied and labored for the Lord, and in the interest of the Church; and such we are distinctly told was the cause of the sickness of Epaphroditus, of whose sickness Paul writes, saying, "Receive him therefore in the Lord with all gladness; and hold such in reputation: because for the work of Christ he was nigh unto death. not regarding (sparing) his life, to supply your deficiency" (Phil. 2:29, 30).

Yes, indeed, these and all such sicknesses and scars and wounds are honorable marks of distinction, which each soldier of the cross should be ambitious to bear, as Paul said referring to injuries endured in the service of the truth, "I bear about in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus." These he had received. not in money-seeking or fame-seeking. nor in self-indulgence. nor in quarrelling and disputing about the loss and dross of earth, but in the good fight of faith; in contending earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. against error amongst Jewish friends, and against philosophies and sciences, falsely so called. He gladly endured hi; wounds and tribulations while telling the glad tidings of the gospel of Christ, of which Ire was not ashamed, and holding up the cross of Christ—to the Jews a stumbling block, and to the Greeks foolishness, but to us who believe, the power of God and the wisdom of God.

All the "overcomers." all the faithful in Christ Jesus. are likely to have some such scars as proofs of their faithful endurance.' There is no escape in this war. It is war to the death with all, as well as with our Head and Captain, and the first loyal soldiers in our army. And it is in this view that Rev. 20:4 represents all those who shall be accounted worthy of the first resurrection as being "beheaded." (The beheading is symbolic; for neither our Lord nor the apostles were literally beheaded. It signifies that all must suffer earthly disadvantages, and lay down their lives in the defence and service of the truth. if they shall be worthy to share Christ's; glory.) All suffering for righteousness' sake is suffering for the truth. .Our daily lives are to be "living epistles known and read of all men"; and if we suffer because we refuse to be conformed to this world, or because we give the testimony of our lives against sill and for holiness, we suffer for the truth's sake. If your talents and opportunities permit no more active service for the truth than such godly living and suffering, therefore, rejoice: and reckon that yours are among the sufferings of the first class, and let patience do her perfect work of moulding your character by this means to our Lord's likeness.

The Apostle tells us also of a "fellowship of suffering" which may be experienced through mental sympathy. Those who cannot suffer personally and physically for the truth can sympathise with those who have such sufferings and can thus become "partakers," sustaining. encouraging and upholding those who are in the "great fight of afflictions" for the Lord's cause, by their words, faith and prayers. Notice the promise to such in the Apostle's words in Heb. 6:10.

Sickness and discomfort of any sort, incurred by our energy in the service of the truth, are permitted by our Father as evidences of our fidelity and love; because if not liable to such tribulations, or if relieved of them instantly by a miracle, tile Lord's service would cost us no sacrifice, and the test of our willingness to endure for the truth's sake would be wanting. As it is, however. every ache and pain, or wound of person, or of feelings, and beheading socially, or literally, for the truth's sake, becomes a witness of the spirit, testifying to our faithfulness. and in all such tribulations we should rejoice greatly—as say our Lord and the Apostle Peter (Luke 6:22 23; 1 Pet. 4:1 3-1 6).

"I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify Me."—Psa. 50:15.

"Call upon Me. . . I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify Me." What a cluster ofjewels does this verse contain; and "the day of trouble" is like some dark stone in the centre that makes the others shine brighter "O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted, behold, I will lay thy stones with fair colours, and lay thy foundations with sapphires. And I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders ofpleasant stones" (Isa. 54:11, 12). In this way God will be glorified.—Russell Elliott.

QUESTION BOX.

Question.—What is the thought in Matt. 24:35: “Heaven and earth will pass away but my words will not pass away”?,

Answer—The Lord could not mean that the literal heavens consisting of sun, moon, stars, etc., nor the literal earth would pass away, for the word declares “The earth abideth for ever” (Eccles. 1:4). “Who laid the foundations of the earth that it should not be removed for ever” (Psa. 24:1, 2; Psa. 104:5). “The world also is established that it cannot be moved” (Psa. 93:1). Besides, there is the oathbound covenant with Abraham that he shall possess the land of Canaan and his seed after him, which Stephen said remained to be fulfilled when Abraham comes back in the resurrection—Gen. 23:4; Acts 7:5. Isaiah (45:17, 18) also declares that “Israel shall be saved in the Lord . . . world without end. For thus saith the Lord that formed the earth and made it, He hath established it, He created it not in vain, He formed it to be inhabited.” “The heaven of heavens is the Lord’s, the earth hath He given to the children of men.” What we understand the Lord to have meant was that the heavens (symbolic expression) referring to the scriptural controlling powers, and the earth symbolising organised society of this world, would pass away, as did the first world will be its a “new world, an a d new “earth” “ (2 Pet. and 3) , a when there “earth”—a new order of things controlled by a new heavenly power which will be Christ’s Kingdom. Though such great changes will come and the present powers that be. go down,—fail.—yet His words would never fail of accomplishment. The -great prophecy of Matt. 24 and Matt. 25 is still running out in fulfilment to-day.

Question.—Do you believe that the earth was created in six literal days?

Answer.—The Bible does not inform us concerning the length of time this earth was in process of creation. The matter is introduced to us in the words, “In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth, and the earth was without form and void.” Some Scriptures speak of the time prior to this, such as (Proverbs 8:24-30), “when there were no depths I was brought forth.” “I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning or ever the earth was.” “When He prepared the heavens, I was there, when he set a compass upon the face of the earth,” etc., etc. There would seem no reason to doubt the conclusions of scientists regarding the long period of time that was taken for the earth to cool off and consolidate, and. to be brought into a condition to produce such things as would be necessary for animal life.

The first chapter of the Bible deals with the preparation of the earth, after it had become ready for such preparation, as- the home of mankind.

There is no reason, whatever, to suppose that the six days of creation were simply 24 hour days. We notice that it was not until the fourth day (or period): that the sun and moon began to shine on the earth sufficiently to rule the day,” “to rule the night,” and to divide the day from the night. That was the time then when the 24 hour days began. These creative days were undoubtedly long periods, with their “evening and mornings.” each beginning with the necessary work to be done and ending with its accomplishment, like the first evening and morning, beginning with “darkness upon the face of the deep.” and ending with light. It is well to remember in this connection that the word “day” is often used in the Scripture to mean a long period of time. Such, for instance, as (2 Peter 3:8) “One day is with the Lord as a. thousand years” (Psalm 90:4.) (Heb 3:7) “To-day” is used for the gospel age (see also Heb 3:13), exhort one another daily while it is called to-day.” The 8th verse speaks of the “day of temptation in. the wilderness,” a period of forty Years. and many such Scriptures might be quoted, proving that it is quite unnecessary to limit the use of the word day to the 24 hour day.

Further proof is in the fact that the Lord said to Adam. "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Now Adam did not die in 24 hours, but continued to live for 930 years. He died within the Lord's day of 10(10 years. So it was that the first Adam brought mankind into sin and death in his day of 100:) years. and the second Adam is going to bring back mankind from. the tomb and lift them up by a course of training, teachings and disciplines, or judgments, back again into the image and likeness of God during His is day of 1000 years—His Millennial reign of righteousness (1 (or. 15:21-28; Acts 3:20-221.

Question.--Is it taught that in the resurrection, mankind when awakened from the sleep) of death will have memory of their past life on earth?

Answer.—The resurrection is so little understood by most Christians. yet it is, next to the great ransom sacrifice of Christ, the most important and the most comforting doctrine of the Bible. The Apostle assures us that if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is our preaching vain and even those who have fallen asleep in Christ have perished (1 Cor. 15:13-23.) In this beautiful chapter the Apostle speaks of the general resurrection, which the death of Christ secures, and then goes on to show that there is a first resurrection, that of the Church. which is. to a heavenly, spiritual nature (celestial); but it is concerning the general resurrection —restoration to human nature (terrestrial) that the question has been raised. The general resurrection day is to be 1000 years long, and is the time when Christ shall reign and the Church of the first resurrection will reign with Him for the purpose of raising the dead from the tomb and gradually helping them to overcome all their weaknesses and failings of character, and thus restoring the whole race to the image of God. which has become more and more defaced ever since the first man sinned.

The purpose of God in permitting mankind to be "born in sin and shapen in iniquity" is that all should. have experience of the baneful, sorrowful result of disobedience; so that unless there was memory of the past no good could result, and the Divine purpose would not be accomplished.

Daniel 1 2:2 informs us that some shall rise "to shame and lasting contempt," and (Ezekiel 16:54) indicates such a class. It will not be so .much those who have been degraded through ignorance and weakness that will rise to shame and contempt, so much as those who have been privileged by a knowledge of God and opportunities of serving Him and His cause. and who have lived luxuriously and sought their own selfish pleasures, making to themselves idols of wealth and power, and using these to oppress others, seeking honor of men, like the Scribes and Pharisees of our Lord's day, and similar classes of this day. Thus our Lord said of Bethsaida and Chorazin that it would be more tolerable in the day of judgment (the 1000 year resurrection day) for Tyre and, Sidon than for them. Again of Capernaum, where He had done so many mighty works, He said, it would "be more tolerable for Sodom" (Matt 10:21-24.) Some will be beaten with many stripes, and some with fewer stripes; not literal whippings. but punishments in some way to help them to a better state of heart and mind and to overcome their sinful propensities. We are assured that as a tree falls so it lies, "there is no knowledge, nor device in the grave," each will rise with character and memory, just as when his eyes were closed in death, and it is that memory that will make the shame and lasting contempt. The shame and contempt of themselves will last until they have made a clean breast of their evil deeds. and if possible sought forgiveness of those they had wronged. Thus it is, "what a man sows, that shall he also reap." According- as a man now lives. will he rise to more or less of shame, or of 'joy. We form our own judgment day. happiness or sorrow. It is not the being "overtaken in a fault" or the failure perhaps under great stress of temptation, as when Peter. for instance. denied his Lord.. but it is the \Oiling. continued course of evil that degrades the heart and mind. forming an evil character, which will require the judgment of the Lord in that day, to correct and lead to higher ideals of holiness and righteousness.

When the Lord says (John 5:28, 29) that there shall be a resurrection of all that are in the graves, He does not mean just simply that they are to be awakened, but they are to be awakened or “come forth unto the resurrection of life”—a resurrection by judgment—by course of instruction. with rewards for righteousness and punishment for evil doing. and not until the end of Christ’s reign of 1000 years will the resurrection be completed. “When the judgments of the Lord are abroad in the earth then will the inhabitants of the world learn righteousness” (Isaiah 26:9.) Then it will be that “the rest of the dead” will be made alive again in the fullest sense. perfectly, towards God (Rev. 20:5), for Christ will then hand over the Kingdom to God, that God may be all in all (1 Cor. 15:24-28.) “And there shall be no more curse”

(Rev. 22:3); “And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death. neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain for the former things are passed away” (Rev. 21; 3.) Then all the painful memories, with all sin will not need to be remembered any more. but will be put away as far as the east is from the west.

THE TIME, MY SOUL, IS SHORT.

No time to linger by the way,
No time for ease, no time for play;
No time for earthly loves and joys,
No time for worldly cares or toys
The time, my soul, is short!

No time to murmur or complain,
No time to heed the heart’s dull pain;
No time for tears or mournful song,
No time to ask, How far ? How long ?—
The time, my soul, is short!

Ah, yes! ‘tis short—yet time enough
To run thy course, so steep and rough;
Just time to reap “the fields,” so white,
Before the coming of “the night”
Just time, my soul, just time!

Just; time to make thy heart more pure
Just time to make thy “calling sure,”
Just time to enter through “the door,
To reign with Christ for evermore
Just time, my soul, just time!

JOY COMETH IN THE MORNING.

“Sing unto the Lord, (ye saints of His, and give thanks at the remembrance of His holiness : for His anger is momentary ; in His favour is life: weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning . ”
Psa. 30:4, 5.

THE watchman said, “The morning cometh.” (Isa. 21:12.) Through making this answer, he forewarns us of night, but assures us of the morning. There is a morning, says he, therefore, do not give way to faintness of spirit, but there is a night between; therefore, take warning that you may not be surprised nor dismayed, as if the promise were broken, or some strange thing allowed to befall you.

There may be delay. he intimates, before the morning —a dark delay, for which we should be prepared. During this he calls for watchfulness, for the length of the night is hidden, the time of daybreak is uncertain. We must be on the outlook, with our eyes fixed on the eastern hills. We have nothing wherewith to measure the hours, save the sorrows of the Church and the failing of hearts.

During this delay the watchman encourages us to “inquire,” to “return,” to “come.” He expects us to ask “how long?” and say, “when will the night be clone?” He takes for granted that such will be the proceeding of men ‘ - .:- really long for the morning. To the hills of Seir thy will again and again return, to learn of the watchman what is the promise of the day; for no familiarity with the night can ever reconcile them to darkness, or make morning less desirable.

It is right for us to desire the morning, to hope for it, to inquire as to the signs of it hour after hour. God has set this joy before us, and it were strange indeed if, when compassed about with so many sorrows, we should forget it, or be heedless as to its arrival, for the coming of the morning is the coming of Him whom we long to see. It is the coming of Him “who turneth the shadow of death into the morning.” (Amos 5:8.) It is the return of Him whose absence has been night, and whose presence will be day. It is the return of Him who is the resurrection and the life, and who brings resurrection with Him, the return of Him who is creation’s

Lord, and who brings with Him deliverance to creation, the return of Him who is the Church’s Head, and who brings with Him triumph and gladness to His Church.

All the joy, the calm, the revivifying freshness of the morning, are wrapt up in Him. When He appears clay appears, life appears, fruitfulness appears. The curse departs. The “bondage of corruption” is no more. Clouds, storms, troubles, sorrows vanish. The face of nature reassumes the smile of unfallen times. It is earth’s festival, the world’s jubilee.

“The heavens rejoice, the earth is glad, the sea roars and the fulness thereof, the fields are joyful and all that is therein; the trees of the wood rejoice, the floods clap their hands, and the hills are joyful together before the Lord, for He has come, for He has come to judge the earth, with righteousness shall He judge the world, and the people with his truth.”—Psa. 96:11 ; 98:7.

This morning has been long anticipated. Age after age has attracted the Church’s eye, and fixed her hope. On the promise of it her faith has been resting, and towards the hastening of it her prayers have gone forth. Though afar off, it has been described and rejoiced in as the sure consummation towards which all things are moving forward according to the Father’s purpose. “There is a morning,” has been the word of consolation brought home to the burdened heart of many a saint when ready to say with David, “I am desolate,” or with Jeremiah, “He hath set me in dark places as they that be dead of old.”

Let us dwell for a little time on some of these Old Testament allusions to the morning, beginning with the Psalm from which our text is taken.

David had been in sorrow, and in coming out of it he makes known to the saints his consolations : “Sing unto the Lord, (1 ye saints of His, and give thanks at the remembrance of His holiness. For there is but a moment in His anger; in His favour is life; weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning.”— Psa. 30:4, 5.

The earnest of that morning he hath tasted, but the morning itself he anticipates. Then joy has come. Then he can say (verse 11), “Thou hast turned for me my mourning into dancing; Thou hast put off my sackcloth and girded me with gladness.” But it is the voice of a greater than David that is heard in this Psalm. It is, like the 16th and 18th, one of Christ’s resurrection Psalms. He was “lifted up,” so that His foes were not made to rejoice over Him. He cried and was “healed.” His “soul was brought up from the grave.” There was anger against Him “for a Moment,” when He bore the sinner’s curse. But in Jehovah’s favor there was “life.” He had a night of weeping, a night of “strong crying and tears,” when His soul was sorrowful “even unto death,” and when beneath the waves of that sorrow He sunk, commending His spirit into the Father’s hands. But it was a night no more. Morning came, and with morning, joy. Coming forth from the tomb, He left all His sorrow behind; His sackcloth was put off, and He arose “girded with gladness.” He found morning and joy; and He is “the first fruits of them that slept.” There was a morning for Him, therefore there shall be one for us—a morning bright with resurrection glory.

Let us next take Psalm forty-ninth. These are Christ’s words, as is proved in Matt. 13:35. from the quotation of verse 4. He summons the whole world to listen. He “speaks of wisdom,” for He is Wisdom. He points to the vanity of riches, and their insufficiency to redeem a soul ; and who knew so well as He what a ransom was needed? He sees men going on in their wickedness, self-confidence, and vain-glory. He contrasts the wicked and the righteous. “Over the wicked the righteous shall have dominion in the morning.” The morning then brings dominion to the righteous— redemption from the power of the grave. In this Jesus rejoiced, in this let us rejoice. This joy of the morning was set before Him : it is the same joy that is set before us. Dominion in the morning is that to which we look forward—a share in the first resurrection of which those who partake live and reign with Christ.

Look again at the forty-sixth Psalm. It is the utterance of the faith of Israel’s faithful ones. The earth is shaken (verse 2, compare with Haggai 2:6 and Heb. 12:26, 27), the sea and the waves roar (verse 3, compare with Luke 21:25), but there is a river whose streams gladden them. God is in the midst of her.

Nay, “God helps her when the morning appeareth” (verse 5, margin), just as in the morning watch He looked out from the fiery cloud and troubled the Egyptians. Then the heathen are scattered at His voice—He sweeps off every enemy, He makes wars to cease, and sits Himself on high over the nations, as King of kings, “exalted in the earth.” From which we gather that the morning brings with it deliverance from danger—victory over enemies, the renewal of the earth, peace to the nations, the establishment of Messiah’s glorious throne. What a morning of joy that must be, for the Church, for Israel, for the whole earth—resurrection for the Church, restoration for Israel, restitution for the earth !

Look at the 110th Psalm. We see Jesus at Jehovah’s right hand, waiting till His enemies be made His footstool; and then He who said unto Him “Sit,” shall say, “Arise” (Psa. 82:8.) He is yet to have dominion on earth, and to sit upon the throne of his father David. Willingness, beauty, holiness, brightness shall mark His people in that morning of joy which His coming shall produce.

Read also “the last words of David” (II. Sam. 22:1-4), in which, as in the 72nd Psalm, “the prayers of David are ended,” or summed up. “There shall be a just one ruling in the fear of God; as the light of the morning shall He arise, the Sun of an unclouded morning, shining after a rain upon the tender grass of the earth.” Not till that Just One comes is that morning to dawn, for He is its light, and from His countenance is to break forth that light in which all earth is to rejoice. Then the darkness of the long night shall disappear, and the tribulation tasted in the time of absence be forgotten in the abounding blessedness of His everlasting presence.

Let us hear how in “the Song,” the bride refers to this same morning. She rejoices in the bridegroom’s assured love, and her desires and longings are not questionings as to the relationship in which she stands to him. This is with her a settled thing, for she has tasted that the Lord is gracious. “I am my beloved’s and my beloved is mine.” What directions do her longings take? Her “eyes are toward the hills,” over which she expects to behold him coming like a roe. Thus she pleads with him not to tarry, “Make haste, my beloved; and be thou like a roe, or to a young hart on the mountain of spices” (8:14). Thus she also anticipates the morning of fuller joy, even while enjoying present fellowship. “He feedeth among the lilies until the day breaks and the shadows flee away” (2:16, 17). And thus the bridegroom himself, feeling if one may so speak, the loneliness of the night, and that it is “not good to be alone,” longs like herself, for the day, and resolves to climb the hills, where he may not only be regaled with freshest odors, but may catch the earliest • gleams of dawn. “Until the day break, and the shadows flee away, I will get me to the mountain of myrrh, and to the hill of frankincense” (4:6). On that hill let us meet Him in faith, and watch with Him in hope, yet ever remembering that though His joy which faith gives here, is unspeakably comforting, it is not the gladness of the marriage supper—it is not the blessedness of the bridal day. For He Himself, while telling His disciples, “Lo, I am with you always,” says also this, “I will not henceforth drink of this fruit of the vine until the day that I drink it new with you in My Father’s Kingdom” (Matt. 26:29).

There is the joy of deliverance from overwhelming danger. This was the joy of the Jews when their adversary perished and Mordecai was exalted :—”The Jews had light, and gladness and joy, and honor . . . the Jews had joy and gladness, a feast, and a good day” Esther ; 16). Such shall be the Church’s joy in the.; morning of her great deliverance. There is the joy of escape from captivity and return from exile, such as made Israel feel as men that dream. Such shall be the Church’s joy when her long captivity is done. Then shall her mouth be filled with laughter, and her tongue with singing; having sowed in tears she reaps in joy (Psa. 66:2). There is the joy of harvest (Isa. 9 :

3), and such shall be the Church’s joy. There is the mother’s joy when her pangs are over, and the child is born into the world (John 16:20). With such joy shall we rejoice, and our joy no man taketh from us. The joy in reserve for us is manifold and large; it will abide and satisfy; it is the joy of the morning—a long glad day before us; no evening with its lengthening shadows, no night with its chills and darkness. “There shall be no night there, and they need no candles, neither light of the sun, for the Lord God giveth them light, and they shall reign for ever and ever” (Rev. 22:5).

The prospect of this morning—this “morning of joy” --nerves and cheers us under all our tribulation. Were this morning an uncertainty, how dark would the night seem! How difficult for us to fight against faintness and despair ! But the thought of morning invigorates and braces us. We can set out faces to the storm, for behind it lies the calm. We can ‘bear the parting, for the meeting is not distant. We can afford to weep, for the tears shall soon be wiped away. We can watch the tedious sick bed, for soon “the inhabitants shall not say, I am sick.” We can, look quietly into the grave of buried love and cherished hope, for resurrection shines behind it. Things may be against us here, but they are for us hereafter. The here is but an hour; the hereafter is a whole eternity.

A TOKEN OF MY COVENANT.

What shall I render unto Thee ?
What praise sufficient could there be
For all Thy benefits toward me,
O Thou Most High ?

I’ll drink Salvation’s cup to-day
Which Thou hast poured.
Be Thou my stay! Assist me as Thy saint to pay My vows to Thee.

Remembering Thy Heavenly call,
I’ll strive to be sincere to all.
I pray for grace lest I should fall
From simple Truth.

In thought, in word, in all my ways
Thy holy standard I would raise,
Nor please, nor honor self, but praise,
My worthy King.

To-day in matters small or great,
I’ll serve with faithfulness and wait
For further joys. Oh, blessed state,
Thus serving Thee!

I’ll strive to “choose things that excel”;
All anxious care I’ll seek to quell,
And all discouragements repel,
And be content.

I’ll neither murmur nor repine!
I’ll trust my heart to care Divine,
To make of it a sacred shrine
Where Thou canst dwell.

THE NEW YEAR.

THE opening of a new year is a most favorable time for special circumspection—for reviewing the year past, for the looking forward to the things coming upon the earth, and for a general survey of present conditions in the world, amongst the Lord's people, and particularly in our own hearts. This circumspection should be taken with a view to our continual growth in knowledge and in grace, that we may hold fast to our hope in Christ, and wait patiently for Him.

Never before in the history of the human race has there been such momentous happenings in the world as have been witnessed during the past twelve months. Thinkers in all walks of life regard the outlook with doubt, if not with anxiety; but just here it is the position of the Lord's people and the provision for their welfare that we have in mind.

It is because the Lord has called us out of the world to constitute the New Creation, His "Body," His "Bride," to share with Him His spiritual, heavenly glories and honors, therefore we should ever keep this in mind and strive for these things, for "even hereunto were ye called."—1 Pet. 2:21. Called to "glory, honor and immortality," it remains for us to make this calling and election sure. (Rom. 2:7; 2 Pet. 1:10.) Again, we are reminded, "Let us fear lest a promise having been left us of entering into His rest (the heavenly rest) tiny of you should seem to come short of it."—Heb. 4:1.

In the 91st Psalm the prophet tells who will stand, namely, those whose habitation is the Lord; those who abide under His shadow; those who trust under His wings for protection. The picture is that of a mother hen, who, when the hawk is about, clucks for her brood, calling them under her shadow, under her wings, under her special protection.

When considering the matter of the trials and testings of all the spirit-begotten New 'Creatures in the truth, we need to continually remember that they will surely be on three main points—(1) Faith, (2) humility, (3) love.

To fail in any of these will mean disaster. To come off conqueror in all three of them will mean energy and devotion to know and to do the Father's will. The time is short, and the tests will be severe. But He who is on our part is greater than all that he against us, and ready to render every assistance needful if our hearts be but loyal along the points mentioned; and if not loyal, then it would not be the will of God that we should be numbered amongst the Elect, because we would not be of the fore-ordained class, "Copies of His Son."

These thoughts lead us up to the propriety of good resolutions, holy vows, and the opening of the new year is an excellent opportunity for these. Whoever is of a really and properly thankful heart will feel at this season particularly like saying with the Psalmist, "What shall I render unto the Lord, my God, for all His benefits to- me?" For the gracious favor and blessings received 'throughout all the days of our lives, and particularly during the past year, with its many changing scenes that have shaken the whole world. Then comes the response, "I will take the cup of salvation (which is the cup of sacrifice), calling upon the name of the Lord (for grace to help me). I will pay my vows unto the Most High, in the presence of all the people." And the more Fully we comply with these intentions and heart desires, the more complete will be our blessing and keeping, under whatever circumstances may be permitted of the Lord, and the greater our progress toward the Heavenly Inheritance. 4

Life and Death.

So he died for his faith; that is fine—
More than most of us do.
But, stay, can you add to that line
That he lived for it, too ?

In his death he bore witness at last
As a martyr to truth;
Did his life do the same in the past
From the days of his youth ?

It is easy to die; men have died
For a wish or a whim—
From bravado or passion or pride—
Was it harder for him ?

But to live—every day to live out
All the truth that he dreamt,
While his friends met his conduct with doubt,
And the world with contempt;—

Was it thus that he plodded ahead,
Never turning aside?
Then we'll talk of the life that he led—
Never mind how he died.

Communion with God.

IN continuation of this subject respecting the privilege and benefits of communion with our Heavenly Father, and the causes and reasons for the permission of affliction, including sickness, as applying to tin: consecrated Church, further consideration is now given to the words of the Apostle James : “The prayer of faith shall save the sick.”(James 5:15.)

Three main classes of sufferings were brought to mind in our previous number, attention being directed to the first class—all the sufferings of Christ, and those of His Body members that are brought about directly by their zeal for the Lord’s cause in “filling up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ.”

Of the second class of sickness and afflictions are poverty constitutional weaknesses, etc., which, like Paul’s sore , , the Heavenly Father sees will be really advantageous to us. For He doubtless often sees better than we how weak we are, and how a little adversity is necessary. These weaknesses God sees best to leave us under, but assures us. through Paul, of “grace sufficient” to counterbalance such weaknesses. A realisation of such care for our real interests, while humiliating, in that it forces conviction of our weakness, is refreshing and inspiring, in that it proves our Father’s love and care.

The third class includes chiefly such afflictions as God visits upon His children as special chastisements for special transgressions. These are mentioned in Heb. 12:5-11. “Son, despise not thou the discipline of the Lord, nor faint when thou art reproved by Him ; for whom the Lord loveth He disciplineth, and scourgeth every son whom He receiveth. If ye endure discipline, God dealeth with You as with sons; for what son is he whom the Father disciplineth not? But if ye be without discipline whereof all are partakers, then are ye spurious and not (real) sons Now, no discipline for the present seemeth joyous, hut grievous ; nevertheless, it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness unto them which are (properly) exercised (or trained) thereby.” This description, it will be observed, covers not merely the reproofs or rebukes of the Lord (verse 5), of the unfaithful and wanderers and transgressors, but also the disciplinary trials which come to us in well doing, and are permitted for the developing and strengthening of character ;— hence both second and third class sufferings.

It is only the rebukes and reproofs of the Lord for sin and unfaithfulness that we are examining in this third class of afflictions. We remark, too, that probably every son, except the one perfect one, our Lord Jesus, has at times needed and received rebukes by afflictions for unfaithfulness. And it is well that we should learn to recognise these rebukes and to wisely apply their lessons. Rightly dividing, We shall neither err with some in crediting every affliction to the devil—receiving none as rebukes from our Father, nor will we err on the other hand and suppose every calamity and accident which occurs to the world in general and to the nominal church to be a divine rebuke. We should see clearly that only the consecrated “sons” are under God’s special supervision, which includes rebukes by the Lord for sins and shortcomings, as well as afflictions in well-doing, permitted to test and perfect us. If therefore the saints experience serious afflictions, they should at once examine themselves conscientiously before God, to see whether their afflictions arise in any sense from: faithfulness to the Lord and the truth. If they find that they do, they should rejoice in them, and wait patiently for recovery, which without our asking sometimes comes speedily; praying meantime with thanksgiving for blessings enjoyed and with supplications for further usefulness in the Lord’s due time.

The Apostle Peter mentions some who suffered, not for righteousness’ sake, but as evildoers and as busybodies in other men’s matters. Such, as he shows, have no right to rejoice in such sufferings, but contrariwise to be ashamed,— to lay the lesson to heart and by God’s grace reform their methods.

While some, humble minded, do not readily recognise any sufferings as endured for the Lord's sake, and need to be encouraged along this line, others who do little and suffer little from any cause, imagine themselves martyrs for the truth. Let us avoid both extremes and think of ourselves soberly, underestimating rather than overestimating our little services and sacrifices.

But if we see no evidence that our afflictions have resulted either directly or indirectly from our zeal in the Lord's service, we should at once seek for a cause of the afflictions as a rebuke from the Lord, remembering that nothing could happen to us aside from our Father's permission, and that He never permits them except for a wise purpose.

:Of the rebuking afflictions, Paul wrote to the Church at Corinth (1 Cor. 11:21, 22, 27, 29, 30-34). After recounting how careless and unappreciative of their covenant many of them were, failing to recognise their proper participation with Christ, to be broken with Him and share His cup of suffering for the truth's sake, he says : "For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep." This may refer to spiritual lethargy and sickness only but not improbably also to the physical.

The general object of many such afflictions is our discipline and reformation ; and happy is the son who shall speedily note a rebuke of the Father, and repent and come back quickly into full harmony; and who, exercised thereby, shall seldom need the rebuking rod of affliction. The Apostle refers to this also (1 Cor. 11:31-34), saying, "If we would judge ourselves we should not be judged (by the Lord)." If we would critically watch ourselves and correct our own faults, disciplining ourselves, we should not need to be taken in hand and disciplined :by afflictions. "But when we are judged by the Lord we are corrected, (in order) that we should not be condemned with the world." The consecrated are tried now, in order that they may not need any further trial in the future, during the Millennial Age, when the world shall be on trial.

"Is any among you suffering (afflicted), let him pray," says the Apostle (James 5:13). This counsel will apply to all the trials and afflictions of God's people, mental and physical, especially such as are of the first class or the second class. Such :sufferers may take all their troubles of every kind to the Lord direct, and be assured of His sympathy and grace to help and sustain. Such need no elders to pray for the forgiveness of their sins, and in the following verses (14, 15), where, evidently, the third class afflictions are referred to,—sicknesses, the result of rebukes from God for sins, and not sicknesses of the class first described, in which we may rejoice. James says: "Is any sick among you? Let him call for the elders of the Church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and though he have committed sins they shall be forgiven him. Therefore confess your sins one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed." The prayer, as we understand it, should be for the forgiveness of the sins of which the sickness is a punishment or rebuke, rather than for release from the deserved punishment. But if the sickness was a judgment or discipline for sin, we should expect that when the sin had been confessed and truly repented of, the Lord would remove the chastisement and raise up the penitent son from the affliction, either partially or wholly.—Compare Matt. 9:2-6; John 5:14; 1 John 5:16. -

But let us remember that this statement does not refer to the various small aches and annoyances to which we, in common with the world in general, are subject; and Which serve us a good purpose in the development of patience and sympathy for others. We know this, first of all, by the calling in of the elders of the Church (the senior, or chief, or official members) to pray over and anoint the sick with oil : because such extreme measures would be quite improper for a slight ailment. We know it, secondly, by the Greek word used for "sick," in verse 14, which has the significance of helpless or impotent.

OUR PRESENT STANDPOINT.

We see, then, that promiscuous praying for healing during the Gospel Age would have been improper, and that only by means of the gift of healing were the early cures of the age performed : that it ceased with the death of the apostles after accomplishing its object : and that the proper prayers relating to sickness, on the part of the saints, have been those offered for the forgiveness of sins—as a result of which healing followed.

The saints cannot properly pray for their own health now, any more than could their Master. They cannot properly ask the restitution privileges which they have consecrated, nor can they ask that their sacrifices be nullified by having all the cost of weariness, exhaustion, stripes or sickness miraculously removed. But when they realise their afflictions to be punishments for sins, they can still feel at liberty to confess their sins one to another, and pray to God for forgiveness, and thus they may, as a result, be healed.

The saints who abide in Christ, and in whom His Word abides, may pray for others than themselves; namely, in cases where they are sure their object is not self-exaltation; where their desires for the recovery of the sick are not selfish; where they have reason to believe that the restored health would be consecrated to good works and to the glory of God. In such cases we may upon request pray for the recovery of the afflicted or imbecile, not of the consecrated little flock—the sacrificers, the Royal Priesthood. Yet even in such cases, though our faith must necessarily be strong, because confident of asking from right motives, and at a time when the Lord is pleased to grant a beginning of restitution blessings, we should always say, as the Master did in His prayers, “Nevertheless, not My will but Thine be done.”

However, it is not time yet to expect general healing or restitution work, as that evidently will not be due until the entire Priesthood shall have finished sacrificing and entered with their Head and Chief Priest, Jesus, into the glories and perfections of the heavenly state or condition, typified by the Most Holy of the Tabernacle and Temple.

In view of the Scripture teaching, all the consecrated will surely desire to walk in the footsteps of our Lord Jesus and those who followed Him most closely ; ignoring in this as in other things their own preferences as to how they would like to think about it, and how they would like to do and have God do in such matters. Let us fully submit our wills and methods to God’s plan and arrangement as expressed and illustrated in His Word. As “new creatures” we may ask freely and persistently for all spiritual blessings and graces and unselfishly for all our necessities promised. Then, sure that such will come, we should seek for them, and acknowledge them with thankfulness, by whatever agency or channel sent.

But in earthly matters we must be very careful : let us ask for nothing beyond our actual needs, as God (not we) sees the necessity and expediency—thankful always for the “bread and water” promised, as well as for every additional comfort. Realising always God’s superior wisdom and boundless love for us, we should fear to take our interests in any degree out of His hand. Thus we may always live rejoicing, realising that, whatever may befall us, all is working out for our good.

“Take Thine own way with me, dear Lord,
Thou canst not otherwise than bless;
I launch me forth upon a sea
Of boundless love and tenderness.

“I could not choose a larger bliss
Than to be wholly Thine; and mine
A will whose highest joy in this
To ceaselessly unclasp in Thine.

“I will not fear Thee, O my God !
The clays to come can only bring
Their perfect sequences of love,
Thy larger, deeper comforting.”
(Concluded.)

Sons and Daughters of Comfort.

“For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope.”—Rom. 15:4.

COMFORT! Consolation! What rest and refreshment, peace and joy these words imply! All the true people of God are represented as His children—sons and daughters ! Some of these are sons of comfort and daughters of comfort, while others are sons and daughters of pain, continually causing more or less of distress and discomfort to others and to themselves. We want to see this subject in its true light, in order that we may each act accordingly ;—that a larger and an increasing number of the children of Zion shall be sons and daughters of comfort to all with whom they come in contact, and thus in a general way comforters to the Church as a whole. Some may be inclined to query : Does the true Church need comfort? Are not the majority too comfortable already? Do they not rather need to be stirred up, to be reminded of their sins, to be chided and made generally as uncomfortable as possible, to the intent that they may thus be helped onward and upward?

We would not ignore the fact that there are occasions when reproofs and corrections in righteousness are proper, as the Apostle advised. But we have no sympathy at all with the thought so common with some good people, viz., that they should always be feeling miserable, by continually nagging and fault-finding, upbraiding and terrorising.

We believe that such well-meant but mistaken efforts have done much harm, have driven many away from the family circle of Zion.

Those needing reproof, rebuke, etc., are such as are walking after the flesh and not after the Spirit—in violation of their covenant. Those who should be warned to flee from the wrath to come are such as have never yet fled for refuge to the hope set before them in the Gospel, —such as are without God, and have no hope in the world, no relationship to Christ,—through faith and obedience. But the true “wheat,” the true members of the Body of Christ, the consecrated, are, however imperfectly, continually seeking to walk after the spirit; though they are well aware that because of imperfections of the flesh they do not and cannot walk up to the spirit. These, instead of needing reproofs and rebukes and smitings and upbraidings for their shortcomings, which they admit and deplore and strive against, need sympathy, assistance, comfort.

Few probably have noticed to what extent the Scriptures administer this very “balm of Gilead” to the true children of Zion; but the Scriptures are full of comfort, and there is great need that all who are truly the Lord’s people should see to it that they are more and more sons and daughters of comfort in the Church, administering to one another the helpfulness and encouragement and refreshment which the Lord intended. Our Lord spoke of the Holy Spirit as the Comforter, saying, “I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another Comforter.” (John 14:16.) To what extent our Lord Jesus was a Comforter we may judge as we look back to the three and a half years of His ministry, and at its close hear Him say to His faithful ones, “I will not leave you comfortless”—orphans, bereaved of a caretaker. And as respects His care over the apostles while with them, we have a suggestion from His prayer to the Father, “Of those whom Thou hast given Me, I have lost none, save the son of perdition,” as the Scriptures foretold.—John 17:12.

It had been foretold of our Lord in advance, through the prophets, that He would be a Comforter, as we read, “The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because Jehovah hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek ; He hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted; . . . to comfort all that mourn ; to appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, to give them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness.”—Isa.- 61:1-3.

All this means that our Lord Jesus was a Comforter in Zion above and beyond all other comforters. He entered into sympathy with the meek and lowly and right-intentioned in all of their weaknesses and trials and difficulties ; and this is the hold that the character and words of Jesus have to-day upon our hearts, and also upon the hearts of many who are not His people in the full consecrated sense. It was not by continually chiding the apostles, and accusing them, but because, instead, our Lord sympathised with them, assisted them, and interpreted their heart-intentions liberally, generously, that they became more and more His faithful followers, even unto death. Notice His dealing with the Apostle Peter, after he had denied Him, cursing and swearing. Many of the Lord’s followers, if in His stead, would have felt it their bounden duty to rebuke Peter publicly before all the apostles, and to have required public confession and some sort of penance ; and on every possible occasion afterward to have thrown in his face his weakness and disloyalty.

Such have not rightly interpreted and copied the Lord’s spirit, and hence are not sons and daughters of consolation in the Church. They are, on the contrary, strife-breeders, vexatious hinderers of the work they desire to forward. They should hear the Master’s voice, “Take My yoke upon you and learn of Me.” In proportion as we learn of the Lord we become, not mouthpieces for the Law merely, but mouthpieces specially for mercy and love and helpfulness and comfort.

So lay as the record shows, our Lord did not once mention to Peter either his profanity or his disloyalty. Peter knew about these without being told ; he had wept over them; a mere word from the Lord in chiding, reproof, might have discouraged him,—perhaps hopelessly. The nearest thing to a reproof in our Lord’s conduct and language was the inquiry, “Lovest thou Me?” Let all who would be true sons and daughters of consolation in Zion learn this lesson from the great Teacher—not to strive to punish and correct and reprove and rebuke, but to avoid these so far as possible, and to inquire, not so much about the past as about the present. What is the offender’s present attitude toward the Lord and toward His flock?

COMFORT AND COMFORTING NEEDFUL

It was with the full appreciation of the fact that the Church would need comfort rather than chiding and reproof that our Lord said, “If I go not away the Comforter (the Holy Spirit) cannot come.” The ransom must be paid, must be presented in the “Most Holy,” to the Heavenly Father, before His blessing could be bestowed. That blessing would yield the comfort of the begetting of the Spirit and comfort of the exceeding great and precious promises to those who had accepted Jesus,—and to those who would believe on Him through their word. True, our Lord spoke of the Holy Spirit as reproving, but not as reproving the Church. He said, “He shall reprove the world of sin, of righteousness, and of a coming judgment.” The nearest suggestion to reproof in respect of the Holy Spirit’s dealing with the Church is that given by the Apostle when he says, “Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption.” And again he says, “Quench not the Spirit.”—Eph. 4:30 ; I Thess. 5:19.

The grand provision made for the comfort of the Lord's people clearly indicates a necessity for such comfort ; nor is this necessity difficult to find. The Lord's people are beset on every hand with adverse condition';, —the world, the flesh and the adversary—seeking to intimidate or discourage or entrap the new creature, so as to hinder its development in grace, knowledge and love, and ultimately to hinder it from the attainment of the perfection and glory to follow, which God has promised to the faithful only. What we need, in order to make us sons and daughters of consolation in the Church, is a larger measure of love and sympathy in our hearts. In proportion as sympathy and love come in, they will crowd out the spirit of strife and contention and judging and fault-finding ; even as they crowded out at first the spirit of the flesh,—anger, malice, hatred, strife and vainglory.

As a rule (there probably are exceptions to all rules) those who have the spirit of helpfulness, of comfort, of consolation, and who are able to pour this balm into the wounded hearts of others most liberally, are those who themselves have passed through severe trials, difficulties, disciplines, and who have thus been touched with a feeling of the infirmities of our race, and, more than this, have been touched with a feeling of sympathy for the weaknesses and oppositions which assail the “brethren” in their endeavour to walk after the Spirit—not after the flesh.

Those who have not “bowels of compassion,” who have little of sympathy, little of desire to lend a helping hand to the weak or the stumbling or those who are out of the way, have much yet to learn respecting the real meaning of the word love, in its higher senses—perfect love, love for the brethren, yea, love that extends to all mankind, even to enemies, as it has opportunity, but “especially to the household of faith.”

O teach me, Lord, that I may teach
The precious things Thou dost impart;
And wing my words that they may reach
The hidden depths of many a heart.

O give Thine own sweet rest to me,
That I may speak with soothing power
A word in season, as from Thee,
To weary ones in needful hour.

O fill me with Thy fullness, Lord,
Until my very heart o'erflow,
In kindling thought and glowing word,
Thy love to tell, Thy praise to show.
(To be continued.)

Faith Encouraged.

“Thy faith hath made thee whole : go in peace.” (Luke 8:48.)

NO essential element of Christian character is given greater prominence in the Scriptures than faith. “Without faith it is impossible to please God.” In this requirement we see the condescending grace of our Heavenly Father, who, though so far above us, yet, like a tender parent, desires the reciprocal love and implicit confidence of His intelligent creatures. Since Christ is the appointed Agent of God in His dealings with men, whom God bids all men to honor, even as they honor the Father, and since He is the appointed way of access to God, faith in Christ is necessarily a part of our faith in God. Those who believe in Christ believe the testimony which God gave of His son through the prophets and, through Christ’s own teachings, and the mighty works which God wrought by Him, to the end that men might believe, have a sure and abundant ground for confidence, so that faith might not be mere credulity, but a reasonable thing.

To believe in Jesus in those days, when His mighty works astonished the people, and the beauty of His holiness impressed every beholder, was most reasonable to those of simple hearts, who desired only to know the truth of God and to obey it, and who, therefore, had no crossgrained will or prejudice of their own to oppose it. Nor are the evidences, the foundation of faith in Christ, any less reliable to-day than they were then. On the contrary, they are still more abundant and strong—a firm foundation that can never be moved. In simple faith, reliance upon the testimony of Christ, the sick woman came to Jesus, so fully assured of His power that she did not wait even to call His attention to herself when the multitudes thronged about Him; “for she said, If I may touch but His clothes, I shall be whole” ; and she was instantly healed. And Jesus, perceiving her faith, said unto her. “Daughter, be of good comfort: thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace.”

This miracle was immediately followed by another, still more wonderful—the raising of the dead to life. Faith had brought an anxious father to Jesus to request the healing of his daughter. But while he was making the request, a messenger came to him saying, “Thy daughter is dead, trouble not the Master.” The messenger evidently knew nothing of Jesus’ power to raise the dead, and the anxious father would probably have abandoned all hope except for the Lord’s reassurance of his faith, “Fear not : believe only, and she shall be made whole.”

In the former instance the faith was exercised by the patient; but in this case it was exercised by another on behalf of the patient, who, being dead, had no ability to exercise faith. Yet the faith in the power of Jesus of those who had requested the healing was a very weak faith, and when they saw the child was dead all hope departed. They had considerable faith in Christ, but they did not believe that His power extended to the raising of the dead and were quite incredulous at the suggestion of the Lord’s words—”Weep not; she is not dead, but sleepeth”—knowing that she was dead. As in the case of Lazarus,, our Lord here referred to death as a sleep, in view of the fact of the resurrection. The term is similarly applicable to the whole human family in the death that came upon all through Adam ; because there shall be an awakening, a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust. The second death, from which there shall be no resurrection, is never called “sleep” in the Bible.

It is worthy of note, that while our Lord took with Him the parents and three of His disciples into the chamber of death, that they might witness the awakening, when they manifested their lack of faith, He put them all out, and then recalled the dead to life, and permitted them afterward to come in and minister to her. Thus, while He rewarded their faith, weak though it was, He reproved them also, and gave them overwhelming evidence of His mighty power. The statement of verse 55. when relieved of the mists of a false theology, is very clear. “And her spirit came again,” simply signifies, “and her breath returned,” and is so rendered in the Emphatic Diaglott, the Greek word “pneuma,” translated “spirit” in the common version, signifying breath, wind, or the spirit or breath of life. With the reinstituting of the breathing process and the healing of the physical organism came reanimation, restored intelligence, and the dead lived again. Thus the Lord rewarded even the weak faith, and gave them additional and overwhelming evidence to strengthen and establish their faith. The Lord did not expect or desire the people to have faith without good substantial evidence upon which to base it, but He did desire and reward the faith that was exercised to the extent of the evidence. A faith without substantial evidence upon which to base it, is mere credulity, and generally degenerates into gross superstition, unworthy of the intelligence which God has given us.

REST.

“Upon Thy Word I rest,
So strong, so sweet, so sure;
So full of comfort blest,
So wonderful, so pure
The Word that changeth not, that faileth never!
My King, I rest upon Thy Word forever!”

Christ and Him Crucified.

“I am determined to make known nothing among you save Christ and Him crucified.”-1 Cor 2:2 (Diaglott).

Here we have a definite statement by the Apostle, which, when fully analysed, presents to us another of his many direct and forcible remarks, beautifully exemplifying his whole manner of life. Harken to St. Paul’s expressions of deliberation and positiveness borne of true Christian fortitude and disciple-hip, and as-praiseworthy as they are commendable: “I am persuaded that nothing shall separate me from, the love of God in Christ Jesus, my Lord” .

-I know in whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is aide to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that day.” “This one thing I do.” “I shunned not to declare the whole counsel of God”—and many other similar utterances manifested a complete reliance upon and rest in Jehovah through our Lord and Saviour.

Viewing our sacrificial covenant in the light of our Christian life and experience, dear brethren. what is your attitude, and mine, respecting this highly desirable characteristic, representing as it does fidelity to God, .fixity of purpose, and a determination to will through! Unless this requisite quality of heart and mind is being developed, and based upon that one foundation truth of “Christ and Him crucified,” you and I can never hope to gain an abundant entrance into the kingdom.

To-day we see very much the spirit of determination, fortitude and sacrifice in the world, some of it more or less praiseworthy. much sadly misdirected, because borne of selfishness. error, deceit and pride. This is not the determination the Apostle verified in his life, and stimulated in others. No, because it was wholly and solely exercised and demonstrated through the power of the Spirit, by which he was begotten as a member of the once crucified but now risen Lord.

Call to mind the time ‘when we made our consecration to the Lord. How decided we were; how loyally and wholeheartedly we entered into the race; how zealous and active in the dissemination of the truth. What determination was ours as expressed by word and conduct. Alas, the words of the Apostle again come to our ears : “he did run well, who did hinder you?”—and as we trace hack the years over the intervening period unto now, what do we find, not hearsay, but from actual happenings and experience d any have lost their first love; a goodly number have wilted under the trying- vet needful experiences sent to test that avowed determination and solemn promise. Brethren, no need to scan the years in the past—what about the present! Are we each and all honestly living up to our vow and covenant with Jehovah?

Do we love the truth with a greater love than formerly. and are we active and alert in its service and promulgation? Do we by word and act shun not to declare the whole counsel of God? Can we be sure that this determination of the Apostle is ours also to the fullest extent, or do we regret a laxity over the twelve months since last we met in happy convention! We are reminded time and again that the time is short and the night far spent. Have we heeded the Scriptural injunction to redeem the time and to so number our days and secure the season for ourselves and so act according to true heavenly wisdom; to preach the word, instant in or out of season to ourselves, to walk circumspectly; that it is high time to awake out of sleep, and to realise that “the Judge standeth at the door”? If so, brethren, what heed are we giving to the warnings as they ring out with no uncertain sound in these last times. Are we not enjoined to be doers of the Word, and not merely hearers, and thus becoming deceived?

So then, rightly viewing this determination as set out in the words of our text. let us try and gain a little insight into the reason for this commendable quality being exercised by St. Paul. The latter portion of our text reminds us of the Apostle’s unswerving faith in the Anointed One, and the great atoning work to be accomplished through our Saviour.

It is the same beloved Apostle who has written so fully in all his epistles with respect to the only means of salvation through a “resurrected Lord.” and His high station on account of loyalty and obedience even unto death.

No wonder St. Paul, in his appreciation and determination to know no other Name under heaven, expressed himself with such telling significance and effect—“I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me, and the life I now live, yes, this life of devotion, determination, and sacrifice. I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me.” And again, “That I may know Him, and the power of His resurrection, the fellowship of His sufferings, being made conformable unto His death, if by any means I might attain the fruition of my hope in Christ, even a partaker of the chief or first resurrection in power and great glory.” Consequently, realising he was anointed to preach the Gospel, and make known the mystery hid from ages and from generations. the Apostle set himself resolutely and determinedly to fulfil his course without offence until the day of Christ, notwithstanding the fact ‘that he was well aware that bonds and afflictions awaited him in every city, and that as a chosen vessel he must bear his Lord’s name before kings and rulers, amid opposition, persecution, hardship and distresses on account of the cross of Christ, which he was determined to witness to and uphold. “God forbid,” says this loved Apostle, “that I should glory, save in the cross of Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world.”

Brethren, do we grip the Apostle’s faithfulness and zeal, with his sincere heart’s yearning and fervent spirit and desire, that his life might ever be a pattern to the believers! St. Paul did not pin his faith in that which was not real, nor did he ever seek to demonstrate his determination through the arm of flesh. No he had learned what true baptism into Christ that He could do all things through Christ who strengthened him, and he was ever desirous that the same energising spirit of power that raised the Lord from the tomb, might so quicken his earthen vessel that thus this same disposition of loyalty and determination, exhibited by our Saviour, might ever be his lot also. The Apostle gloried in the cross of Christ, because he knew it was the power of God unto salvation, and so He preached Christ at every opportunity, and gladly witnessed, by his whole manner of life, the truth of his words when he said, “Christ liveth in me.”

Only, dear brethren, as we intelligently understand and grasp the import of this expression, “Christ liveth in me,” can we truly revel in our blessed hope and glorious prospect concerning this revelation or mystery which St. Paul was determined at all costs to preach and to give witness to.

Do we feel we are fruitful ‘branches in the “One true vine”? Does the spirit witness to us of our oneness in Him, whose life was broken for us! Is there a greater depth of sincerity, and a more fervent zeal toward the cause We profess to value so highly, than there was twelve months ago, or have we been standing comparatively still, or even taken a retrograde step! As we examine ourselves, what room for earnest thought and meditation there is when we compare our lives with the “one true standard,” and the staunch, commendable life of our dear brother, St. Paul. Is it not a fact that he who seeks to water shall be abundantly watered himself — he that soweth bountifully shall also reap bountifully—that the liberal soul shall be made fat, and that there is he that scattereth and yet increaseth? Surely we are enjoined to let our liberality be known to all, for the Lord loveth a cheerful giver, and “it is more blessed to give than to receive.” “To him that bath shall be given” is the Bible record, but what about the counterpart which reads,

“He that soweth sparingly shall also reap sparingly”; “There is he who withholdeth more than is good and it tendeth to poverty” : “Take away the talent from him, and give to him that hath ten talents,” is the striking lesson of our Lord’s parable of the talents in their use or misuse.

When the Apostle uttered the words of our text he did not merely mean that he was determined to preach the fact that his Lord came into the world to save sinners, and subsequently died on Calvary’s cross. That was certainly the basis of Jehovah’s atoning work ; but we remember that in his epistle he was addressing the Corinthian brethren, who were well instructed and versed in this great foundation truth respecting the cross of Christ. No, our text suggests a far greater depth of meaning as it would relate to the mystery which the Apostle desired to reveal to these brethren, with its relative, essential, and vital importance to every prospective member of the Body of Christ. “Save Christ (the Anointed One) and Him crucified,” 372 years of faithfulness, loyalty, obedience, humility, meekness, gentleness, patience, kindness, longsuffering, tenderness, sympathy, love and compassion, from Jordan’s river to Calvary’s hill, and for what purpose! Yes, dear friends, “for what purpose?” we ask. Was it not that this testing to the full, in the exercise of all the fruits and graces of the spirit, might prove Him a faithful High Priest in things pertaining to God, and to make reconciliation for the sins of the people? Was not this the deeper viewpoint which the Apostle shunned not to declare as he realised that the anointing which came upon our Lord as an earnest of the spirit of sonship, with its attendant hardships, testings and sufferings, was the only means of fulfilling Jehovah’s purpose respecting the Messiah, and a class called to joint-heirship through the same spirit begetting and narrow road of obedience and sacrifice? This was the mystery or testimony which St. Paul longed to preach to those having heard the “glad tidings” amongst the Corinthians, and also to those who subsequently would believe through his word; but with the hearing ear, he well knew that there was to be the understanding heart if that preaching was to have the desired effect.

How very many to-day, like the Corinthians of old, having heard the Gospel of salvation through Christ, and having entered into covenant relationship, seemingly fail to manifest the power of the Gospel in themselves and towards others. They outwardly appear to be living consecrated, God-fearing lives, but somehow or other seem to lack that keenness and alertness, that propelling and compelling influence which savors of a quickened life, energised and moved by the power of the Gospel, and as living stones desirous of being built up unto Him, our “living Head.” This class appear to receive the truth in the love of it, but the same carnal tendencies of the Corinth brethren more or less retard the progress, and so make applicable to them the words of this same Apostle where he says : “And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ.” “

In the light of our text it is apparent that if we value our standing in the Anointed ()ne, if we highly esteem God’s wondrous grace showered upon us, and have tasted of the heavenly gift and the power of the Age to come, then, too, our witness must, like the Apostle’s, be in demonstration of the spirit. and with power, and based not upon a mere mental knowledge that Christ lived and died, but, on the contrary, “Christ and Him crucified,” and in all the details that constituted Him the Anointed, in a life which revealed this testimony of God, and as a basis for the fulfilling of the mystery, made known only to the saints.

We must feel, dear brethren, that the subject is all important, and just as the Apostle “preached Christ,” and Christ only, as his constant theme, hope and joy, so his whole manner of life was a living witness to the fact of a life centred in the crucified, and subsequently risen, Lord of Glory. While we sometimes sing, “All for Jesus, all for Jesus crucified.” can we grasp the measure of love of Him who framed the plan! Does the cross of Christ move us to greater depths. as we would long to show, by word and action, our gratitude in return for that great love? Can we, too, say, “For me to live is Christ,” or are we measuring our esteem by more or less indifferent and luke-warm tendencies?

While our subject relates to St. Paul’s determination to preach the Gospel, we can enlarge with equal propriety on the matter of what constitutes preaching, respecting every earnest disciple of the cross of Christ. We may be sure that the life of St. Paul was not merely set apart to orally proclaim the truth, but in a deeper sense, surely, in the Anointed One, he ever lived, moved, and had his being.—”Though I speak with the tongues of men or of angels, and have not love, I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal.” Yes, unless our words are mixed with a strong faith and fraught with the Spirit’s power, backed by a life in conformity therewith, we will be constituted empty vessels, like unto that great Babylonish system, from whose mouth proceeded unclean spirits, designated “frogs” by the revelator, speaking loud, swelling words, having men’s persons in admiration because of advantage, and vainly puffed up by imaginations, pride, hypocrisy, and deceit.

Brethren, let us during the year 1932 be awake and alive, not only to our privileges, but also our responsibilities as prospective fellow-heirs in the Body—”Woe is unto me if I preach not the Gospel,” was the beloved Apostle’s realisation of his position, and just so with us. He named the name of Christ, and well knew just what this confession signified. He had covenanted to live for Christ. “Baptism unto death” to St. Paul was no fanciful undertaking, but a stern reality. :He found no comparison whatever with the richness of the inheritance to that of this world’s vain, en:, show, to which formerly he had been so largely associated. Do we feel likewise, and can we say in so many words, “Since my eyes were fixed on Jesus, I’ve lost sight of all beside”? If so, let us all resolve during the coming year to manifest that appreciation by a fuller Christian life, in all its characteristics, as displayed by this faithful and loved Apostle, and thus living nearer to our God, and expressing a closer walk with Him. as we journey along side by side with our great “Burden Bearer” and sympathetic High Priest, and Elder Brother, we shall steadily, but no less surely, he found reflecting the “true light,” and thus he changed from glory to glory even unto the likeness of our Lord and Head. Let us, then, make our boast ever and only in the cross of Christ, boasting in His finished work, glorying in our standing of justification through Him, glorying in the rich provision and lot of the saintly class, called and chosen in our great High Priest, rejoicing in every opportunity of spending and being spent, that our covenant be not only carried into effect, but finally consummated in and through our Head.

Yes, brethren, let us rightly and earnestly make our boast as it is written—”He that glorieth let him glory in the Lord,” and again, “God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of Christ. my Lord, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world.” (See Jer. 9:23, 24.) To natural Israel, Jehovah said, “Prove Me now herewith.” If any feel themselves spiritually lean, and not enjoying such fellowship with the Lord as they would desire, that they are unable to_ draw as closely to Him as they would like, to all: such the Lord says, “You have neglected your covenant; here are My words, Prove Me’; fulfil the terms of your covenant, and see if I will not be faithful, and do for you exceedingly and abundantly more than you could have asked or thought.”

It behoves us to look about us to note to what extent we have been faithful to our vow of sacrifice, and to remember that it is not a sacrifice for a day or a year, but “even unto death.” A little while the trials will be over, but until that little while is past we are in the trial time, and it is proving us either worthy or unworthy of the glorious favours which we seek, the chief blessing, “joint heirship.” If we appreciate it, let us seek it in the Lord’s way, let us see to what extent there are other things in our lives that we might render unto the Lord, and which He will accept, not through any worthiness of the deeds or the sacrifice, but through the merit of Christ. Let us see if the days and hours as they pass are spent in a consecrated manner, let us note to what extent moments and days are spent in some selfish manner, or visited upon others beyond the reasonable requirements of duty as marked out in the Divine Word. Let us see to what extent we perform our vows unto the Lord ; let us take note of what time, or influence, or money we are using in the Divine service, and what proportion this bears to the whole.

Of the Jews the Lord required a tenth, “ a tithe.” Of the spiritual Israelites He makes no positive requirements, hut leaves it for us, that by the degree of •our sacrifices, according to our abilities, we may demonstrate the measure of our love ; but who would say that one-tenth of time, influence and talent would be enough for the spiritual Israelite to render to Jehovah for all His benefits’ Surely all would agree that one-fourth, even, would be a very small measure, indeed, as compared with our true obligation.

All should feel that the sacrifice is a “whole” burnt offering, a complete sacrifice of every item and element of our talents, power and privileges, all should feel that they may keep for use upon themselves, and for use upon those dependent upon them, only such measure as would seem to be necessary to decency mid reasonable comfort, and not for what might be termed luxury or waste. Those who accept the Lord’s proposition heartily, and render to Him their all to the extent of their ability, will find their leanness departing and their joy of heart increasing more and more. “I am determined to know nothing among you but Christ and Him crucified.”

“He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord.”

EASTER CONVENTION,

A preliminary message is to hand from the Secretary of the Adelaide Class intimating that it is their intention to arrange for the usual Convention in that City at Easter time. Further particulars relating to the days of meetings and other arrangements will appear in our next issue, and may also be obtained from Miss H. E. Copping, 70 Fairford St., Unley, South Australia.

GOD WORKETH IN YOU.

“Not yet thou knowest what I do
Within thine own weak breast;
To mould thee to my image true,
And fit thee for my rest;

But yield thee to my loving skill,
The veiled work of grace,
From day to day progressing still,
It is not thine to trace.”

“Yet walk by faith and not by sight
Fast clinging to my hand;
Content to feel my love and might
Not yet to understand.

A little while thy course pursue,
Till grace to glory grow;
Then what I am and what I do
Hereafter thou shalt know.”

Convention News

IT is with grateful hearts and thanksgiving to our Heavenly Father that the Melbourne Ecclesia report the very encouraging, happy and helpful occasion of their Christmas Convention, extending over three days, and terminating on the Sunday evening with the usual farewell, "Love-feast" and appropriate hymns.

We desire to express our deep gratitude and appreciation of the loving services of the dear brethren who travelled long distances in order that our assembling together might prove profitable, and thus it surely proved to be. Many beneficial thoughts were given that indeed were a stimulus and an incentive to more earnest endeavour in running for the great prize held out only to the truly faithful. We were constantly reminded and enjoined, as we viewed the life and experience of our Lord and the Apostles, and examined their attitude and oneness of purpose, of the increasing narrowness of the way, and the great necessity of touching lightly the things of this earth, and to have a deeper and yet truer sense of our rich and blessed inheritance as prospective members of the Body of Christ.

The theme selected for our Convention was a most important one, and was taken from Romans 12:11, relating to the fervency of spirit which must characterise the life of every true follower of Christ. All present desired that throughout the coming year, this needful quality would more and more be manifested in themselves and toward the brethren.

The studies in Psalm 46, Isaiah 53, and 2 Cor. 6:1-10, gave rich variety and diversity of thought, and reminded us forcibly in the first instance of the unstable and chaotic condition of the world to-day with the governments and people in that restless, discontented attitude which gives strong evidence of the near approach to the setting up of God's righteous Kingdom, according to the many prophecies cited, showing that the world at that time will have to learn righteousness and submit to the requirements of Jehovah as His law of love and truth would gradually extend world wide.

The study in Isaiah proved the wealth of meaning in the prophetic truth contained respecting the Head of the Church and His humiliating experiences necessary in order to provide for man's redemption, and as the basis of the great atonement work. We noted, too, the rich assurance that, on account of our Leader's sacrificial death and subsequent resurrection through the power of Jehovah, a special class, invited to walk in the same narrow road of self-denial and obedience, would, if faithful to their Covenant, share the wonderful blessings of joint-heirship with their Lord as Jehovah would "divide the spoil with the strong"—the overcoming Church. It was good to note again in this chapter that our Lord, on account of His loyalty, obedience, suffering and death, would eventually see of the travail of His soul and be satisfied the whole world of mankind brought into subjection through Jehovah's reconciling work, by the medium of our Lord and Saviour, together with the earth restored to Edenic perfection to be again the glorious habitation of a perfected race through Christ.

In our final study we were again reminded of the Apostle Paul's love and faithfulness amidst severe persecution, suffering and hardships, borne so commendably and with fixity of purpose on account of the cause of truth and the brethren, and were encouraged and exhorted as he would beseech the justified believer not to receive the grace or favour of God in vain, to count it a wonderful privilege to suffer for the cross of Christ, and to esteem the rich inheritance as surpassing wonderful and our fondest hope.

Addresses by visiting brethren and others were much appreciated as the various topics relating to the great "Shepherd of the sheep," and His loving watchcare over the "Flock" in needful experiences, that His people might be led to enjoy the rich pastures and to drink deeply of the "water of life" provided for His "little ones," who attentively and meekly hearken to the good Shepherd's voice and seek ever to have a closer relationship under His protecting care. Another encouraging address was along the line of what constitutes an “immovable Christian life.” We were exhorted not to be moved away from the “hope of the Gospel,” and to exercise those characteristics of fortitude and determination exhibited by the Apostle Paul as he “shunned not to declare the whole counsel of God.” Emphasis was given to the great need of energising ourselves in the Christian way, and just as an athlete would strain nerve and muscle in an earnest endeavour to gain his objective, so in the Christian race, we were reminded that there must be no relaxation, but that every possible effort must be put forth if we would obtain the prize held out to those who earnestly and zealously seek the desired goal.

All present much appreciated other subjects of importance and interest brought forward by four brethren who spoke respectively on the necessity for greater “fervency of spirit”; a fuller sense and realisation of our great inheritance, exhorting us to “constancy of hope”; the desirability of understanding just what is represented by the fruit of patience in the Christian life, that each member of the Body of Christ must not only merely endure patiently, but that it must be a cheerful, willing submission, as each and all would be found possessing their souls in patience, as it is written--“Let patience have her perfect work that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing; for ye have need of patience, that, after having done the will of God ye might receive the promise.” Last of all, yet by no means least, we were reminded of the greatest asset the Christian has, as he journeys along the “pilgrim way”—and that was the blessed privilege and power of prayer. We were made to realise again that without prayer the Christian could never hope to succeed, that full advantage must at all times be exercised in our daily need to supplicate the “Throne of Grace,” and to seek Divine assistance for our every hour of necessity.

Appreciating the studies and discourses as we did, the friends were not unmindful of the love and zeal displayed by the sisters, who so faithfully attended to the many necessary little details which go to make convention arrangements complete, and spared no effort in seeing that the temporal as well as the spiritual interests of the brethren were served.

The Melbourne friends greatly appreciated the messages of Christian love sent along from our South Australian and other brethren, and in their desire to reciprocate unanimously agreed to convey to the various classes represented by the gathering, their warmest Christian love and greetings, together with verses I-1(1 in 2 Cor. 6.

We pray that God’s richest blessing may be with the dear ‘brethren who so gladly journeyed to our city in order to help and encourage the friends here, and our fervent desire is that the good lessons received may bear rich fruitage as all would strive to put the valued instructions into practice, in an earnest endeavour to do all things with a single eye to the praise and glory of our loving Heavenly Father.

Dear Brother, 17/1/32.

Greetings in the Lord's name. I have been procrastinative for some days regarding writing you re the Christmas Convention. I may say that we had a very prosperous time spiritually, there being about 25 present, although some of our brethren were absent for various reasons. We invited other friends, and some availed themselves of the opportunity, and the number was very encouraging for our class at Rawson Chambers.

We held a praise and testimony in the afternoon; such meetings always seem very spiritual, bringing all in close touch with each other. At the evening service a discourse was given by a brother on the evidences of the Lord's presence, and although he had nothing new to give us, nevertheless, he stirred up our pure minds, and one felt it was a special blessing to God's children to have the privilege to be living in the end of the age.

The world seems to be in a morass, men's hearts failing them for fear; our wise men all suggesting what has brought us to our present trouble, and some pointing to a way out, as they think; but alas! the wisdom of our -wise men will perish. May we keep our hearts in love for the Lord and the brethren and our sympathies warm for the world of mankind.

I sincerely trust you had a blessed time at your convention. I was with you in spirit, and it would have taken very little persuasion to have sent me over to you. If the Lord spares us another year I may avail myself of that privilege and see the dear faces of the brothers and sisters of the Melbourne class.

I now close with Christian love to all the dear friends at your end from sister and myself, not forgetting the Rawson Chambers class friends included.

Remaining in the one hope. J.H.T.

Dear Brother,

Your welcome letter to hand the other day, also the books and "Herald." I was going to answer before but kept putting it off, being too much taken up with the books, and I thank you very much for them, as they are great helps.

Since reading Brother Russell's works I often wondered how he knew that some words were not in the early MSS., but now it is all clear to me, not that I doubted him, but you see I did not know about those three early MSS., and used to wonder how he knew that he had the early manuscripts.

You see the Scriptures are something I have only taken up lately, in fact early last year, although it is about eight or nine years since I got the Studies and tried to read them, but somehow I could not understand them until early last year; so after putting them aside all those years it seems hard to understand now why I could not see through them then.

I wish to sincerely thank you for all your kindness to me in letting me know about these secondhand Helps, for I now have more wonderful Helps than I thought I would ever have, and it is due to you being so thoughtful that I was able to get them. So hoping you receive no end of rich blessings from the Lord for all your trouble and work. With much Christian love,

Yours in the one hope.B.C.M.

Dear Brethren,
17th January, 1932.

I am enclosing in this letter , and I would like you to send a Manna Text Book to an address I will give you. To the same address you may also send one copy of "Hopes Beyond the Tomb," and you may send two copies of the same .to me, and the balance you may use for the Lord's work in the way you think best.

I went to Sydney at Christmas time and met with the brethren there at Rawson Chambers, and all at that meeting seemed to have the Lord's Spirit, and it seemed good to be among them. I was sorry when it all ended and had to return home to these lonely parts, where I never hear anyone praise the Lord or sing a spiritual song. Some of the brethren are better situated, so that they can meet together, than others who are on the lonely outposts.

I called at the doctor's as I was on my way to Sydney, having not been too well for some time. My eyes have been tired and weary; at times I could scarcely see to read. But when we know the Lord we can rejoice in every experience of life. How cheering is this morning's Manna Text and comments, and as we have the knowledge of God and Jesus our Lord, how grace and peace is multiplied unto us. There is nothing can comfort our hearts more than the words of the glorious Gospel of Christ, which it has pleased our Heavenly Father to reveal unto us by His spirit, for the spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. Wishing you continued blessing from our Father.

Your brother in Christ. B.J.

Sons and Daughters of Comfort.

“For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope.” (Rom.15:4.)

THE holy Spirit comforts the Church in various ways.

(1) It comforts us by enabling us to come into such unity with the truth and with the Lord, that we can, to a considerable extent, see matters not only from the divine standpoint, but also can appreciate and feel from the same standpoint. For, although the spirit of the truth is in the Word of Truth, there is, nevertheless, a necessity that the eyes of our understanding should be opened to comprehend the Word of Truth; and this double comfort is ours through the possession of the holy Spirit, in proportion as it abounds and is shed abroad in our hearts. It, of course, abounds and is shed abroad in the Word, but this is not sufficient. It must also be in our hearts, a living power. Thus we read in Acts 9:31, of the early church “Walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the holy Spirit.”

2. It comforts us through the Scriptures, and through the promises of God. The Word of God as the channel of the truth is to comfort us in proportion as the holy Spirit guides us into an understanding of it, as our text reads.

3. The Church, the brethren, in proportion as they become imbued with the holy Spirit and with the knowledge of Truth, which it brings to their appreciation and comprehension, thereby become representatives of the spirit in the Church—comforters. This is the thought of the Apostle when he says: “Now the God of patience and consolation grant you to be like minded one toward another according to Christ Jesus.”

Reversing the foregoing order and considering the way in which the brethren are to comfort the Church, we note that it is as the channels of the Spirit and as the mouthpieces of the Word. No one is competent to be a comforter unless such a one has received comfort from God. So to speak, the Lord’s people begin receiving their comfort from the time they accept the assurances of God’s Word respecting His mercy and love as exhibited in Christ Jesus. In their appropriation of this Divine favour to themselves by faith, they had their first taste of comfort, peace and joy. As they then proceeded and learned the way of the Lord more perfectly, the door of access into a still further grace was opened unto them, the grace of invitation to joint-heirship with Christ in the Kingdom and its glorious work of comforting and uplifting mankind in general; and as the door of favour was entered, additional comfort, peace and blessings were added and understood and appreciated. And then, as the favoured ones progressed under the ministries of the Truth, supplied by the holy Spirit, and became more and more able to rightly divide the Word of Truth, and to appreciate the different features of it, in the same proportion, their faith grown stronger, and their comforts and joys multiplied through increasing and deepening knowledge of His plan.

As His people behold in the glass of the Lord’s Word His glory, the reflected light of His glorious character illuminating their hearts and enabling them to comprehend with all saints the lengths and breadths, heights and depths of the divine love, it brings still increasing confidence and comfort. Every one of these steps of progress rightly received and every additional element of character developed prepares the favoured one for the exercise of his privilege of being a comforter to others. It was his duty and privilege to begin, to comfort others as soon as he received the first element of comfort himself, and to continue distributing the comforts as they came to him. Indeed, we know both from experience and from the Word that unless he thus made use of the favours and blessings, and showed his appreciation of the Grace of God by shining it forth upon others. his light thus being obscured would grow dim and eventually lie extinguished. But the point we need to impress is that ability to be a comforter depends upon growth in grace and knowledge, for none but those who themselves are comforted dispense this grace to others.

Notice the Apostle's exhortation on this subject, and along the lines marked out. In 2 Cor. 1:3-7 he says "Blessed be God even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort, who comforteth us in all our tribulations that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God. For as the sufferings of Christ abound in us, so our consolation also aboundeth by Christ, and whether we be afflicted it is for your consolation and salvation. and our hope of you is steadfast, knowing that as ye are partakers of the sufferings, so shall ye be also of the consolation (comfort)."

Ten times in these verses does the Apostle use this word "comfort." He evidently had a keen appreciation of how much the Church needed such consolation, and how much the God of all comfort wished to have His faithful ones comforted, and how even the strongest in the Church needed comfort. What better evidence could we ask than that the Spirit of comfort which the Heavenly Father manifested, which the Lord Jesus manifested, which the Apostles manifested, and which all the faithful are called upon to exercise is indeed the very spirit of the truth. Consequently, those who are making greatest progress in this direction as comforters in Zion are growing most in grace, and so, we may be sure, will lie best able to grow also in knowledge and to nut helpful to the Church in every sense of the Word. and to lie used of the Lord as mouthpieces in the ministry of His Truth.

A little further along in the same epistle (2 Cor. 7:4-13), the Apostle uses this word "comfort" seven times, saying. "I am filled with comfort. I am exceedingly joyful in all our tribulation, for when we came into Macedonia our flesh had no rest, but we were troubled on every side ; without were fightings, within were fears. Nevertheless, God that comforteth those that arc cast down, comforted us by the coming of Titus; and not by his coming; only, but by the consolation wherewith he was comforted of you, when lie told US your earnest desire, your mourning, your fervent mind toward me; so that I rejoice the more. Therefore, we were comforted in your comfort." Here we see illustrated in the Apostle's language the mutual helpfulness of the Church in this matter of comfort. Titus had a part in it ; Paul had a part in it; the Church at Corinth had a part in it; every member possessing the holy Spirit and exercised by it had a share; and the Apostle declares that all this comfort was of God. And he expresses it as though this were God's general disposition. in every such circumstance of His people when he speaks of Him as "the God of all comfort," and "the God that comforteth them that are cast down." We may safely understand, therefore, that wherever we find one of the Lord's followers, however great his weakness, however much cast down, we have, in his case, presented to us an opportunity of serving the Lord, of being channels of His mercy, and carrying to the downcast one, something of comfort. consolation and helpfulness.

Speaking respecting his own course, the Apostle, in his first letter to the Thessalonians (2:11), gives us a little insight to his methods, and shows us that he neither domineered nor tyrannised over the Church, nor continually harassed, threatened and upbraided them. On the contrary, he says, "We know how we exhorted and comforted and charged every one of you as a. (proper) father cloth his children." This familiar spirit in the Apostles, which enabled them, as fathers and brethren in the Church, to comfort and assist, should be a guide now to all who would be servants of the Lord, and helpful children of comfort—sons of consolation.

It is those who enter into this real spirit of God who are thereby proportionately prepared to comprehend the meaning of the prophecies and revelations of the Lord. which are hidden to the worldly wise—hidden to all who have not the spirit of Christ, of sympathy and love. Possibly, this is one reason why so few of the professed expounders of the Word of God meet with any success in interpreting it; probably this is one reason why so many are in darkness. They have not received the spirit of comfort and love, and, therefore, cannot appreciate the loving, gracious plan which God's Word upholds. Perhaps it was not by accident that the Apostle, when stating that we are to "grow in grace and in knowledge," put the grace first.

We have seen what it is to have the comfort of the brethren through the holy Spirit; let us now inquire what it is to have "the comfort of the Scriptures." which we are enabled to comprehend by the possession of the holy Spirit of comfort. We note again the prophetic statement of (Isa 61:1). and that while this applied primarily to our Lord, the Head Of the Body. it must. therefore, necessarily also apply to every member of the anointed. The Spirit of the Lord God is upon all the members coming down to them from the Head.

As it is not our commission to break men's hearts, even the worldly, hard hearted ones. but to leave them for the Lord to break through various disciplines and judgments; so likewise it is not appointed unto His to comfort those who do not mourn; nor is it our commission to specially cause mourning that we may comfort it. Our commission is to seek out the meek and the mourning ones, who have appreciated their own 'shortcomings and weaknesses, and who are looking for refuge and deliverance.

It is the wrong thought which some get that the Lord's people in this present time should be gloomy, morose, sad—mourners for sin. Whoever has heard the Gospel message has cause for rejoicing. When the Lord said "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted," He said it in the Jewish age—under the Law which condemned all imperfection, on account of which, therefore, all who were hungering and thirsting after righteousness and seeking to walk uprightly were necessarily in mourning for their sins, because of their inability to come up to the grand standard of the perfect law of God, and hence their inability to gain everlasting life under the conditions of that Law. The Apostle represented not only himself, but all sincere Israelites groaning under the when he cried out, "O wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me from this dead body?" - (Rom. 7:24.) He was mourning, and the Lord appointed that all mourners in Zion should lie comforted—comforted with the assurance that, while they were sinners and imperfect and could never justify themselves before God under the Law, nevertheless, God himself had found a ransom, had redeemed His people. It is in view of this comforting assurance of the Gospel that the Apostle, after representing himself as the Christian, has found the deliverance, and exclaims, "'Planks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

The Lord's people, having embraced the Truth, find themselves beset on every hand with oppositions from the Evil One and his servants; and were it not that they have the comfort and consolation of the Scriptures and the joy and peace which the world can neither give nor take away, theirs would be a sad lot indeed. But, under conditions as the Lord has arranged them, it is their privilege, even while suffering the loss of earthly things for righteousness' sake, to rejoice in tribulation, and in everything give thanks.

What is the secret of this rejoicing in tribulation? Whence comes so great comfort as this? It comes through the comfort of the Scriptures, made luminous by the holy Spirit. For instance, take the inspired prophecy respecting Rachel weeping for her children, refusing to be comforted, because they are not. (Jer. 31:15-17.) The Lord's message of comfort to Rachel and to all who have suffered loss through the great penalty of death is, "Refrain thy voice from weeping and thine eyes from tears; for thy little ones shall come again from the land of the enemy." Does this speak peace and comfort to the wounded heart? Yes, it brings a consolation, a comfort, with which no error can compare. There are, indeed, various delusive fancies which picture themselves before the minds of the bereaved, in which they fain would trust and hope; but they are weak. are intangible they have no foundation in the Word of God. 'Hence, they cannot give real rest or peace in such a time of trial.

We notice that the Apostle implies in some of his statements, that the comfort and peace of the Church are dependent largely upon unity of the Spirit of the Lord in the various members : and that we, from experience, should note that this is the case. He says, Finally, brethren. farewell. lie perfect, be of good comfort. be of one mind, live in peace, and the God of love and peace shall lie with you” (2 Cor. 13:11), and again (Phil. 2:1-2). “If there be any consolation (comfort) in Christ. if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of spirit, if any bowels and mercies, fulfil ye my joy, that ye be like minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind. What exhortations these are to unity, peace, brotherly kindness! How they suggest to us patience, forbearance, gentleness. helpfulness and comfort. one to another in the Church ; that thus the Spirit of the Lord may abound in all, that each may make the greatest possible progress in the right way. It is for us all to strive more and more to be Worthy of the name of Comforters of the brethren. Let us have the holy Spirit abounding in us more and more. for this is the Lord’s good pleasure, that with it dwelling in us richly we may be all sons and daughters of comfort in Zion. representatives of our Father, and channels of the holy Spirit. as well as of the Truth.

OUR SUFFICIENCY IS OF CHRIST.

Where’s the day that I’ll call dreary While His favor shines so bright?
Where’s the time in which I’ll weary Of His loving words of light ?
Where’s the test of faith that’s greater Than the measure of His grace ?
Where’s the loss of goods more precious Than what’s given in its place ?
Where’s the stone on which I’ll stumble While I trust to Him my hand ?
Where’s the fear to make me tremble When His words the winds command. ?
Where’s the cross that is too heavy When His strength cloth lend me aid ?
Where’s the crowned head I’d envy While He’s having my crown made.

A man’s pride shall bring him low: but honour shall uphold the humble in spirit.—Prov. 29:23.

A humble heart is a vessel of all graces. It cloth better the soul and make it holy, for the soul is never fitter for God than when it is humbled. It is a fundamental grace that gives strength to all other graces. So much humility, so much grace; for, according to the measure of humiliation is the measure of other grace, because a humble heart hath in it a spiritual emptiness. Humility emptieth the heart for God to fill it. If the heart be emptied of temporal things, then it must needs be filled with spiritual things; for nature abhorreth emptiness, grace much more.—Sibbes.

THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD.

Psalm 23.

(Convention Address)

WE will notice in regard to our text that throughout the Old Testament the word rendered “Lord” is, in the Hebrew, “Jehovah,” and therefore applies to the Heavenly Father. The thought is that the great Over-Shepherd appointed His Son as the “Good Shepherd,” even as His Son also has appointed under-shepherds in the Church, subject to Him.

The work of shepherding is not exercised toward the world, as the Good Shepherd does not shepherd goats or wolves. The only ones who are shepherded are the „sheep, and special care is taken of these. If we would inquire, who are these sheep, we find that the Scriptures give us good evidence that originally the Jewish nation constituted the Lord’s flock and that King David recognised himself as one of the sheep. Israel was not chosen by the Lord because they were better than the rest of mankind, hut God made an exception of that people on account of Abraham, for whose sake lie became the Shepherd of Israel.

In this Psalm we have the picture of an “Eastern shepherd,” as they were termed in Palestine, tending his sheep, which differs from most of the present day styles of keeping sheep in this land. Here, we have our sheep enclosed by fences so that they cannot get away. and in some cases, where necessary, secure enough to prevent wild animals .getting in to molest them. The sheep of Palestine, grazing in a country where there were no boundaries, always needed a shepherd to protect them from wolves and various wild beasts, to keep them guarded in general, and to lead them to good pastures.

The Eastern shepherd, with his love and care for the sheep, is given as an illustration of our Heavenly Father’s care over His “sheep.” Our Redeemer was sent forth as the Good Shepherd, who gave His life for the sheep, and by His death opened the door of the sheepfold of divine love, favour, rest and peace. This was a favourite picture which our Lord gave of Himself, “I know My sheep and am known of mine,” “My sheep hear My voice and they follow Me, a stranger they will not follow, for they know not the voice of :Arangers.”

Our Shepherd speaks to His flock in a language which they understand and seek to Obey; it is a language which goats and wolves cannot comprehend. To His sheep, His written Word, treasured up in the heart, marks the way of truth, His special providences further shape the peculiar course of each individual, and the abiding presence of His Holy Spirit makes manifest every intrusion of any other spirit, which seeks to beguile and lead astray. The true sheep will cultivate that communion and personal fellowship with the Lord which is their privilege.

While it is refreshing for us to take a comprehensive view of the divine favour and care manifested in provisions made for our welfare as His sheep, it is well that we should ever keep in mind that the Lord has appointed undershepherds; and that their value as overseers consists in their faithfulness in making known to the sheep the great Shepherd's message, and to the extent of their ability, communicating His tone and Spirit with His Word. The faithful of these, like the Apostle, may urge, And ye became followers of us and of the Lord."-1 'I'hess. 1:6.

On the other hand these sheep are called upon to mark the spirit of the under shepherds, whether or not it comports with that of the Chief Shepherd, so that they be not led astray. They are to try the spirits of those who pose as undershepherds, to note whether they be of God or whether they speak of themselves; whether their words or deeds are according to love or according to selfishness.

Our Lord Jesus declared, "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold, them also I must bring, . . . and there shall be one fold and one shepherd"—ultimately. These other sheep we would understand to be the restitution flock, which, during the Millennial Age, the Lord will shepherd, gathering the willing to His right hand of favour, and who will ultimately be ushered into the blessings He has provided for them on the earth. The wayward goat class of that same age will be destroyed in the second death.

We may be glad indeed that the many heathen who have gone down into the great prison-house of death are to be awakened and granted full opportunity to come to a knowledge of the Good Shepherd, and to be guided by Him into the path of life, in the following of which, with His assistance, they may be fully recovered from all the imperfections entailed upon them by the fall. We rejoice, however, to know of the "little flock" which the Lord is now selecting for a place in His spiritual kingdom, and we may specially rejoice to be privileged to join its numbers now through our Redeemer and Shepherd, following whithersoever He may lead us in the narrow way.

Our Lord says, "My sheep follow Me," and this relates not to the flock of the future but to the "little flock" of the present, which He is now gathering out of every nation, people, kindred and tongue during this Gospel Age. It is the Father's flock, and our Redeemer represents Him as He informs "As I hear, I speak," "I came to do the will of Father in heaven." Thus He fully represents the Great Shepherd, saying, "All mine are thine and thine are mine." In another place He says, "Thine they were and Thou gayest them Me." The value of our relationship to the Great Shepherd and His Son increases in our appreciation, in proportion as we grow in knowledge. As our Lord said, "This is life eternal that they might know Thee, and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent."

Then what consolation is the declaration. "I shall not want." Our Lord assures us that the Heavenly Father will withhold from us nothing that will be for our good. It is not the merely justified believer that is a member of this "little flock" at the present time, but the sanctified believer, fully consecrated to walk in the footsteps of the Good Shepherd, to hear His voice and follow Him. Our Redeemer informed us at the start, that following Him as His disciples, as His sheep, must signify to us, as to Him, worldly disfavour and opposition, not only from the Adversary, but also from those deluded by him and under the sway of his spirit of evil. In addition, we are to contend with our own blemishes and weaknesses. Such a picture of the narrow way would no doubt have terrified us, had it not been for our Shepherd's comforting promise of succour in every time of need, and His assurance that these trials to the flesh, rightly received, would constitute a part of our development in the spirit and preparation for the rest that remaineth for the people of God.

“I shall not want” may be applied in general to the necessities of the present life, for He will grant us whatsoever would be good for us according to His will; but He also specially means that, in another sense, we shall not lack the disciplines, the trials, the instructions, the encouragements, the reproofs and the assistance necessary for our attainment to “the glorious things that God hath in reservation for those that love Him,” supremely. The only condition connected with this promise is that we shall abide in His love, abide in His flock, continue to hearken to His voice and to follow His directions. How dangerous, then, to all of the true sheep would be any measure of worldly ambition, pride or self-esteem. How necessary that the heart should be right, desirous of knowing and obeying the Shepherd’s voice. With what care should the sheep scrutinise the motives which actuate their daily conduct, their words and the thoughts of their hearts.

As new creatures we are learning to realise more and more the barrenness of worldly hopes, ambitions and knowledge. More and more we should be giving heed to the leadings of the Good Shepherd, who is guiding His flock of new creatures for their spiritual refreshment through the winding paths of the “present evil world.” Those sheep which keep nearest to the Shepherd secure the fattest and richest experiences and refreshments. On the contrary, those which stray, looking for pastures green on their own account, or following the voice of false shepherds, are the ones that are likely to eat of the poisonous growths, and fall into the pitfalls of sin and thereby be devoured by the ravenous beasts of passion and worldliness. Happy are the sheep who learn to know the voice of the true Shepherd, and whose faith is such that they follow closely and not afar off.

“To lie down” means to be resting, to be contented. This is the privilege of all the true sheep. Outwardly they may be distressed and “on the run,” assailed by the world, the flesh, and the Adversary; but as new creatures they may be at rest, at peace, because of their nearness to the Lord, and because of their faith in His overruling providence, under which all things work together for their good. “Great peace have they that love thy law, and nothing shall stumble them.” These let the peace of God rule in their hearts and are thankful. It is to these that our Lord’s words apply.

“My peace I give unto you, let not your hearts be troubled, neither let them be afraid.” This rest, this peace of heart, is absolutely essential to our development as new creatures, even as the crystals are deposited from the liquids when they are still and not when they are agitated. So the character which God is developing in us absolutely demands that a condition of rest, peace, quietness of heart shall be attained ; and to the attainment of this condition, patience, faith and love, the chief graces of the spirit, are necessary.

A very important lesson for every sheep to learn is the need of the Shepherd’s care and guidance through all the intricate passages of life. The Apostle asks, “Who is sufficient for these things?” Then he declares, “Our sufficiency is of God,” in Christ. He who redeemed us has gone the way before and directed that we walk in His steps. Those who become so wise in their own conceits that they fancy there are nearer ways and shorter cuts and more flowery paths to paradise, are deceiving themselves. If those who recognise the message and necessity of walking circumspectly in the Master’s footsteps neglect these, and become overcharged with the world and earthly ambitions, joys and toys, they are surely unwisely selling the glorious heavenly birthright for a mess of earthly pottage.

He who carefully follows the Master experiences the truth of the declaration, “He restoreth my soul.” How many find their spiritual strength refreshed as they walk in the paths of righteousness, because He leads them “for His name’s sake.”

His shepherding care is further realised where it says, “Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me.” This valley was entered by our race at the beginning through disobedience.

We have been in this valley for a long period. The shadow of death has been over the human family, and its accompaniments of sickness and sorrow have extended to every creature, so that the Apostle rightly said, “The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together, waiting for the manifestation of the sons of .God,” waiting for the uplifting power of the reign of Christ and His Church, the sons of glory, to bring the promised restitution and, help out of the “valley of the shadow of death” back to the heights of light and love and divine likeness.

Our text represents the true sheep as saying, “I will fear no evil.” How appropriate! Weak and poor and insufficient of ourselves, and surrounded by foes, we nevertheless need not fear, for the developed sheep are not fearful of what the demons may seek to do, knowing that “all power in heaven and earth” is in the hands of our Shepherd King, and that He is directing our ways, and we can rest assured while He is at the helm that every experience shall work out a blessing, to the intent that, by the first resurrection change, He may take us to Himself and give us a share in His heavenly Kingdom. We have no need to fear, we have His promise, “Lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the age.”

“Thy rod and Thy staff comfort me.” The shepherd’s rod or club was, according to record, one of hard wood, and with it the shepherd was prepared to defend the flock by combating every foe. The staff was lighter and longer; and more like a cane with a crook at the end. With it, it is stated, the point was used at times by the shepherd to prod the sheep that were careless, and with the hook he sometimes helped out any that had stumbled into rough places. Our Shepherd has a rod for enemies, and the staff for His sheep: the one for their protection, the other for their relief and assistance and correction. How comforting to know that all power is committed unto Him in heaven and in earth, and that under His protecting care nothing shall by any means harm us. No wonder that under such circumstances the sheep may enjoy “the peace of God which passeth all understanding,” having the assurance that all things shall be overruled for their eternal welfare.

We might take an instance when the Apostle Paul was brought before the governor Felix, and reasoned concerning a judgment to come which made the governor tremble. The Apostle did not attack the governor’s character, but he did better by lifting the mirror of the perfect law of love and liberty before the governor and let him see for himself how far short he came of the standard which alone God can approve. The courage of the Apostle in holding up the truth before one who so largely had to do with the decision of his own case is remarkable and commendable. Those who are on the Lord’s side and who, therefore have the Lord on their side in all of life’s affairs need fear no evil. The absence of fear, however, should not in us, any more than in the Apostle, lead to bravado or discourteous manner or language. The divine rule is, as expressed by the Apostle, that we should speak the truth in love.

“Thou preparest a table before me, in the presence of mine enemies.” The picture of the shepherd and the sheep has been gradually fading, and is now in the past. Instead of pastures and water brooks we now have the table and the cup. We hear the under shepherds say, “This is the bread which came down from heaven and this cup is the blood of the new covenant.” Our Lord sacrificed His earthly interests that we might partake of them through faith and be justified thereby and appropriate to ourselves more and more the ‘benefits of His sacrifice. He passes to us the cup of His sufferings and death, saying, “Drink ye all of it.” By thus appropriating the merits of His sacrifice and participating with Him in His sufferings we are His sheep, we are the branches of the true Vine, we are members of His Body. This provision is made for us in the presence of our enemies. “Marvel not if the world hate_ you,” said our Master. Yet even in the presence of the opposition of the world, and with the Adversary using all manner of besetments, we are privileged to partake of these blessings ; and we can feast with our Lord and none can make us afraid.

In harmony with this promise of the Scriptures to all who open their hearts to receive Him, He comes in and sympathises with them. He girds Himself as a servant and comes in and serves us, setting before us rich things from His store house, things new and old. Under this service all the old truths become fresh and appetising, refreshing and strengthening, and new truths are ours fitting to the peculiar time in which we are living.

“Thou anointest my head with oil, my cup runneth over.” Let us realise first that our Lord Jesus is the Anointed, and that His anointing was typified by the anointing of Aaron with precious oil (typifying the holy Spirit) which ran down unto the skirts of his garment. Let us think of this as the holy Spirit which, since Pentecost, has anointed all the sheep that have come into the fold, for the Body of Christ. Let us appreciate this anointing and abide under it, allowing it more and more to be what the Apostle terms an unction from the Holy One, affecting our every talent and power, bringing them all into subjection to the divine law of love.

“My cup runneth over.” Our Master’s cup was one of suffering and ignominy. It ‘becomes our cup also; hut He promises us a new cup of joy and rejoicing which He will share with us fully in the Kingdom. By faith we can enjoy it now and realise that it is full to overflowing. “Surely goodness and mercy shall pursue me all the days of my life.” Surely this is so ; looking back we can praise the way in which goodness and mercy have pursued us, and the conclusion of the whole matter, the end of the journey, is to occupy a place in the heavenly mansion, our Father’s house. . What a glorious consummation to all our hopes. Why should we murmur or complain at the roughness of the journey which will bring us to such a glorious goal. “Therefore let us dwell in the house of the Lord forever.”

Birth of a New Era

The Marquess of Lothian, discussing the question whether our civilisation is declining, expresses the opinion that we are witnessing the birth of a new era, and that “the ultimate result of the doubts and dilemmas which so distract and disturb the human mind to-day will be the gradual birth of a type of human society in which -international unity and economic brotherhood will be added to the political and religious freedom we now enjoy”

It is over fifty years ago since Mr. C. T. Russell pointed out that the “present evil world” had reached its closing years and would soon pass away as predicted by the prophets, the apostles and our Lord Jesus Christ. Not that the literal “earth” or literal “heavens” were to be destroyed as so many have erroneously taught, but that the controlling powers in both social and religious spheres would be displaced by a “new heavens” spiritual arrangements and a “new earth” social arrangements. Mr. Russell’s works were not received by the clergy generally; indeed, he was very bitterly persecuted by ministers of various denominations and his works were denounced. That, however, has ever been the lot of the reformer, or one who lived ahead of the times. Now, the teachings which he proclaimed and made so plain that the “wayfaring man” could read and understand, are being declared by others. The influence of his works has told upon the public thought, and developments in the breaking up of the present systems, social and religious, clearly vindicate his forecasts. His work, “The Divine Plan of the Ages,” though published so long ago, is still the best exposition of the Bible. In fact, we know of no other publication that can harmonise the Scriptures and reveal so wonderful a Divine purpose regarding the human race. The closing chapters, such as the “Day of Jehovah,” so accurately depict the present day worldwide conditions, and while indicating the great trouble which is developing, also show the silver lining and that the outcome will be that the kingdoms of this world are to become the kingdom of Christ. Satan has been the ruler of the present evil world, but Christ will be King over all the earth in that “world to come wherein dwelleth righteousness.” (2 Pet. 3:3-13.) We recommend to all the reading of the “Divine Plan .of the Ages,” and if any have difficulty in obtaining a copy we shall be glad to hear from them. The Marquess appears to expect the better day to be gradually established by a sort of evolutionary process under human leadership and the present day systems. The Scriptures, however, clearly state that the present systems will break down altogether in “a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation.” The new age will be established in righteousness—a “new heavens”, i.e., instead of Satan being the prince of the world, Christ will be King, and instead of wicked spirits (fallen angels) co-operating with Satan and operating in spiritualism and all the false religions and superstitions which to-day delude so many in heathen and also in so-called Christian lands, the Church glorified (the sons of God) will co-operate with Christ in guiding the poor groaning creation into ways of righteousness and peace —thus making a new earth. (Romans 8:22, 19.)

Life power! That is what we all need, is it not ?— power to rise “far above all” the earthly things that seek to drag us down. “It must needs be that offences come,” said the Master; but there is no “needs be” that we should be crushed and conquered by them. And is it not blessed to know that the Lord’s restraining hand .is over all, that nothing can touch us but His will ?—that He knows our circumstances, disposition, weakness, and surrounds and rules over all ?—L. Constancy of Hope,

CONSTANCY signifies being constant or steadfast —fixedness or firmness of mind. Hope signifies a desire for some good, accompanied by expectation of obtaining that which gives hope, or furnishes ground for hope.

On the surface of the Scriptures there would seem to be many different hopes mentioned, or different things to be hoped for. There is the hope for those who are running in the race for the high calling of God. There is the hope of the resurrection of the dead (Acts 23:6). The Scriptures tell us that we are saved by hope (Rom. 8:24). They refer to the hope of righteousness (Gal. 5:5), the hope of His (Christ's) calling (Eph. 1:18). the hope of glory (Col. 1:27), the hope of salvation (1 Thes. 5:8), the hope of eternal life (Tit. 3:7). The hope of the world and the hope of the Church are shown in the Scriptures, but all these hopes are centred in our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ (1 John 2:2), who gave Himself a ransom for all to be testified in due time (1 Tim, 2:4-6).

THE CHURCH'S HOPE.

A clearer knowledge of the world's hope should, and does, increase the Church's appreciation of God's loving arrangement for His creatures. And it adds new lustre to the Church's hope when we realise that the glorious object of the call and discipline of the Church in this_ Gospel Age is for the development of characters which, being proved loyal to God and to righteousness and truth, will be associated with Christ in the Millennial Age in the great and grand work of uplifting whosoever will of men from ignorance and sin and degradation, to God's likeness and favor and love. The Apostle declares, "He that hath this hope in him purifieth himself" (1 John 3:3) ; it is a hope that helps onward to God and holiness.

We who are running in the race for the " high calling of God" are constantly looking forward to the Church's hope that is invested in our Saviour, when we shall see Him as He is, and know as we are known. He gave His life for the Church on the cross, and also for the world (1 John 2:2). He endured the cross, the shame and suffering for the joy that was set before Him in bringing many sons to glory. (See Heb. 12:2.)

So our hope is in Him who is our joy, our crown, and if we are in Him and He in us, we see "the mystery which has been hid from ages and generations but now is made manifest to His saints: To whom: God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles which is Christ in you, the hope of glory" (Col. 1:26, 27).

This is the great mystery of God which has been hidden from all previous ages, and is still hidden from all except a special class—the saints, or consecrated believers. But what is meant by "Christ in you"? We have learned that Jesus was anointed with the holy Spirit (Acts 10:38). Thus we recognise Him to be the Christ — the Anointed — for the word Christ signifies anointed. And the Apostle John says that the anointing which we (consecrated believers) have received abideth in us (.1 John 2:27). Thus the saints of this Gospel Age are an anointed company, anointed to be kings and priests unto God (2 Cor..1:21; 1 Pet. 2:9), and together with Jesus, their Chief and Lord, they constitute Jehovah's Anointed—the Christ ; what a hope! We realise then that the reward promised to those who walk the narrow way is the divine nature, life in the superlative degree, which only those with the divine nature can possess— immortality. Dare we aspire to such a height of glory? Surely not, without positive and explicit invitation.

We do not realise the consummation of our hopes now while we are on this side of the veil, but it will be something we are constantly hoping for, or looking forward to ; something we through patience might have by looking unto Jesus who is the author and finisher of our faith. “We through the Spirit wait for the hope of righteousness by faith” (Gal. 5:5) ; “that we may know what is the hope of His calling” (Eph. 4:4).. And “we know whom we have believed, and are persuaded that He is able to keep that which we have committed- unto Him against that day.” Every man that has this hope in him endeavors to purify himself, even as He is pure; he endeavors to shun all sin and to be perfecting holiness with the assistance of God’s holy Spirit.

Christ is called our hope; that is, He is the only foundation we have to build our hopes upon (I Tim. 1:1), and hope is taken for the eternal salvation which is the object and end of our hopes. Yes, our Lord is called the hope of His people (Jer. 14:8). He is the one in whom they hope for help, and their hopes shall not be in vain. On the contrary, the hope of the ungodly shall perish (Prov. 10:28).

Hope deferred maketh the heart sick, but when the desire cometh it is a tree of life (Prov.13:12). Abraham against hope believed in hope, when being advanced in years God promised him a son (Rom. 4:18). He confidently believed God’s promise that he should have a son against all grounds of hope, when it was unlikely in a way of nature and human reason, and God rewarded him because he believed Him. So may we receive the things we ask for if we ask in faith, not wavering, and ask those things that are according to His will.

Constancy of hope will also mean to keep on hoping until our Lord makes- up His jewels, to receive His Church; hoping on until the end of our sojourn here, building our hopes on Christ, who is our firm foundation.

Again, hope is a kind of faith we have; in exhortations and promises it is a sister to faith and charity, the three being the chief graces of the spirit. In 2 Thes. 2:16, it is said to be a gift of God.

Hope inspires clean living.

It is a helmet for the Christian (Rom. 5:2), that is. a defensive armour for the head, mentally.

An anchor for the soul (Heb. 6:19).

Gives assurance of immortality (Acts 24:15).

Anticipates Christ’s coming (Tit. 2:13).

Shall we not even more earnestly long for the time of Christ’s second advent than the less-informed Jew looked and longed for His first advent? Seeing that the time of evil and injustice and death is to be brought to an end ‘by the dominion of power which He will then exercise, and righteousness, truth and grace will be universal, who should not rejoice to see His day? And who that is now suffering with Christ, inspired by the precious promises that if we suffer with Him, we shall also reign with Him, will not lift up his head and rejoice at any evidence of the Master, knowing thereby that our deliverance and glorification with Him draweth nigh? Surely all in sympathy with His mission of blessing, and His spirit of love will hail every evidence of His presence as the approach of the great joy that shall be to all people.

So, dear brethren, let us continue to hope on until the end of our sojourn here, which we believe is not far distant; looking unto Jesus who is the author and finisher of our faith. Let us seek with prayer and supplication to walk closely in His footsteps, and from our hearts endeavour to do the will of our Father which is in heaven.

Correspondence,

Western Australia,

4th February, 1932 Dear Brother,

Greeting in the name of our dear Redeemer!

I am again writing to you, trusting you are well, feeling that you would like to hear our little class is progressing along the narrow way. Well, our meetings continue to be a source of comfort and strength, and different brethren come along from time to time, all of them very earnest. Fifteen have come out from bondage, and while all are not able to attend all meetings together, yet they are rejoicing to be back in the "old paths," As the different brethren come along they have many experiences to relate. We can hardly imagine it possible that any who have once had a knowledge of the truth, could fall away from it to such an extent. How good to know that the dear Lord has promised to guide the feet of His saints, those who worship Him in spirit and in truth. Pride goeth before a fall—we pray earnestly to be kept humble. We have a usual attendance of 14 or 15. On Wednesday evening we study Vol. 5, "The Atonement," and though we have studied it before we still find it intensely new and interesting.

On Sunday evening, we have a sermon by Brother Russell; and appropriate hymns. The meetings are very impressive, and the Brethren go away, feeling greatly strengthened by the fellowship.

It is our', conviction more and more, as we see different events transpiring all over the world, that we surely are very near the end of this order, and hence our change. The Lord gave us certain signs, and told us to watch, and we are striving to be watchers.

I have just read an article by Brother Russell in 1910, page 392, called "Perilous Times Shall Come." It is wonderful really; it seems that the Lord used Brother Russell to write admonition, that would be of more importance after his death; nothing could be more apt for to-day than that article. It says:—"We cannot espouse the cause of truth, and the cause of error as well, nor can we retain the friendship of God and of the advocate of error also. Who is on the Lord's side ? Let us rally around His standard. All told there will be only a little flock, like Gideon's band, the company now gathered by the harvest message of truth, must be tested and sifted until the loyal, faithful, true-hearted, soldiers of the Cross remain, and to these, though their number be small, will the laurels of victory belong, when truth and righteousness finally prevail. Let none boast of numbers now, when the highest interests of the elect of God are all bound up with the faithful few, to whom it will be the Father's good pleasure to give the Kingdom."

As we look back over the years, and think of the earnest, zealous service of many, even in our midst, in teaching the present truth, and now see them just as zealously tearing down what they had so earnestly built up in years past, we wonder how can it be possible; how can they cast aside the message that they so sincerely loved ? Well, the Lord knows all about it. He alone is able to read the heart, and He is too wise to err, too loving to be unkind, so we leave it all to Him.

We are all pleased with the "P.P's.," and they are passed all round to brethren even yet in bondage. It is pleasing to get the exhortations, at different times, in them, to hold fast to present truths, and showing what present truth is, a development of knowledge over, or added to, the Ransom, which is the first principle, or milk of the word. We are told not to remain "babes," requiring or desiring the milk only of the word, but to grow in grace and knowledge to a full man in Christ Jesus.

Now I will close, sending to you from each of our class warmest Christian love,

Your sister in the one glorious hope, I.M.

16th January, 1932. Berean Biblical Institute,

Dear Friends,

I wish to thank you very much for sendings me those books and pamphlets. I received them all and they are very interesting and are a great help to me, as everything is so easy to understand. I have not finished them yet, as I am studying them very carefully. As I finish them I am loaning them to a friend, and have given her your address, so she may be writing to you herself.

Again thanking you, I am,

Yours very sincerely, H.H.

South Australia, 18th January, 1932. Dear Sirs and Brothers,

I received your papers, and many thanks for same. I thoroughly enjoyed them. I think that it is a pity that there were not more of them read. Please send me prices of Bibles, cards, etc. I will also take the "Peoples Paper" later on by subscription. I would like if you could give me a description of the Bereans, as this is the first knowledge I have had of them. Thanking you once again. I wish you success in the work of the Lord. I must now conclude with best regards.

Yours in His name. C.H.D.

We also joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ.—Rom. 5:11.

There is nothing in common between the life of Heaven and that of the world. It is not a question of prohibitions as to, using this or that, but of having altogether other tastes, desires, joys; and it is on that account people imagine Christians are sad, as if they were absorbed by only one thought. It is that our joys are altogether different from those of the world; the world knows not our joys. No unrenewed person can comprehend what renders the Christian happy.—J. N. Darby.

Patient Endurance.

(Convention Address)

THERE are two words in the Greek, which are translated by our English word “patience,” in the New Testament. Makrothuma is one, which, in a general way, corresponds to the common thought of patience as we use it in the affairs of our life. It means long • suffering, and is so used in the New Testament in Rom. 2:4, 2 Pet. 3:15.

The other word we are to consider, and which has also been translated “patience” in the New Testament, is Hupomonee. This word has a much deeper and fuller significance than has our English word patience. It signifies rather, constancy, the thought being an endurance of evil in a cheerful, willing, patient manner, and thus represents an element of character and not merely a temporary condition or restraint of feeling or action. It signifies such a condition of heart and character as manifests itself in an endurance of wrong or affliction with contentment, without rebellion of will, with full submission to the divine wisdom and love, which, while permitting present evils, has promised to overthrow them in due time.

Let us look to God’s Word to examine this element of Christian character. In Rev. 3:10 it reads, “Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I will also keep thee from the hour of temptation which shall come upon all the world to try them that dwell upon the earth.” In Luke 8: 15, in the parable of the sower, we read, “That (sown) on the good ground are they which in an honest and good heart, having heard the word, keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience” (with cheerful endurance, constancy). There we have the thought that to be of the fruit-bearing class it is necessary to do more than receive the word of His testimony, even though we receive it with joy, for those who do not continue in His Word are represented in the parable by the stony ground which at first gave promise of much fruit, but when the sun of persecution arose, and the hard winds, bitter experiences, came, the grain withered because of lack of depth of soil. Our Lord explains that the stony shallow soil represents a class of hearers who rejoice greatly in the truth but do not endure, cannot withstand opposition, but wither under it and become discouraged.

This parable goes to show that patient endurance, or constancy, is the final test following after the seed has been received and has sprouted, and love and hope and joy and faith have caused it to spring forth and give fruitage. Patient endurance, then, is necessary in order that the grain may be developed and thoroughly ripened and made fit for the garner. Our Lord- Jesus made no mistake when He used the growing wheat to symbolise or picture the pathway of the Christian. During the growing stage wheat often needs checking, to sweeten and harden the plant and grain, and if the natural elements, such as hard winds and heavy frost, are absent the husbandman resorts to rolling or feeding down to check the rank growth, but develop and bring the fruit, “the golden grain,” to maturity—that for which the husbandman has long waited.

The other instance in which our Lord used the word is recorded in Luke 21:19. He had just been telling His followers what they must expect as the result of being His disciples during the present time, when sin abounds with Satan “the prince of this world.” They must expect tribulation, opposition from various quarters, but He assures them that they would nevertheless be fully and completely under divine care and protection, even though the persecutions would be permitted to reach them. Then follow the words, “In your patience (patient endurance, cheerful constancy) possess ye your souls.”

The Apostle Paul in .Heb. 12:1 exhorts, “Let us run with patience (cheerful constancy, patient endurance) the race set before us,” in the Gospel. The race must be run with consistency if we would reach the mark, and after reaching the mark, the position can only be maintained by the grace of constancy, patient endurance, that having done all we may stand.

Why is it necessary that the Christian should possess this quality of character? The answer is: It is one of the conditions which God has attached to the call to joint-heirship in the kingdom. The wisdom of this is manifest when we consider the work to which we are called—the work of blessing all the families of the earth. The importance of patient endurance in the Christian character is also borne out by the Apostle Paul's use of the word, for on more than one occasion he places this characteristic above and beyond love (the mark for which we are to run). In Titus 2:

2, enumerating the characteristics of the advanced Christian, the Apostle uses the following order, “vigilant, grave, temperate, sound in faith, in charity, (love) in patience (patient, cheerful endurance).” Though we have all the other qualities, the final test of patient, cheerful endurance must be passed before we could be accepted of the Lord as members of the very elect.

Again, in 2 Tim. 3:10, respecting himself, the Apostle again puts this quality of character in place beyond love. “Thou hast fully known my doctrine, manner of life, purpose, faith, long-suffering, love, patient endurance.” If love is the fulfilling of the Law and the mark of the prize of our “high calling,” how can this quality of patient endurance rank higher than love? The answer would be that patient endurance does not merely come in at the close of the race, but is required all along the way. The spirit of cheerful endurance should be growing, and to maintain that spirit of love and devotion and growth in grace and knowledge means that we must place our all entirely in the keeping of our Lord.

The Scriptures tell us that God's ways are not our ways, “For whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth. and scourgeth every son whom He receiveth.” Thus the trials and experiences we meet along the way are not joyous but grievous. They were grievous to our Lord, in His Gethsemane experiences. The truth has a refining effect for the followers of Jesus and they are therefore more sensitive to pain and ignominy than the worldly, who delight in witnessing contests of physical torture and endurance, and are quite willing to idolise and honour those who achieve success by showing a Stoic-like indifference to pain. Therefore the Apostle has pointed out that we need the whole armour of God that we may grow in faith and love and patient endurance, strengthened by the lessons of experience which He has allowed incidental to the passing away of the old order of things and the introduction of the new. The Apostle Peter has written to encourage and help us, “Think it not strange concerning the fiery trials which are to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you. But rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings, that when His glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy..-1 Pet. 4:12, 13.

THE FIND.

“Mother, I’ve found an old dusty thing
High on the shelf—just look!”
“Why, that’s a Bible, Tommy dear,
Be careful, that’s God’s book.”

“God’s book,” the child exclaimed,
“Then, mother, before we lose it,
We’d better send it back to God,
For you know we never use it.”

—The “Churchman.”

Memorial Service.

In announcing the 19th April as the date, according to Jewish reckoning, upon which the Melbourne Ecclesia hope to celebrate the memorial of our Lord's Death, as the "Antitypical Passover Lamb," it is with due solemnity and yet with joyous heartfelt appreciation that we view ahead this precious privilege of assembling in order that we might partake of the Emblems, so deeply significant, and which symbolise our Lord's broken body and shed blood.

At this season of the year we are forcibly reminded again of our standing in Christ, our participation in His sufferings, and our constant desire to be broken with Him. We have brought to our attention, also, the fuller meaning of our Vow of Consecration and Covenant of Sacrifice, as we note the sacrificial life of Him who learned obedience by the things which He suffered, yea, a willing, voluntary yielding of His all to Jehovah, in order to fulfil the antitype and become the greater Passover Lamb, by and through Whom we might, as members of His Body, be spared during the present dark night and only acceptable time, this Gospel Age or Dispensation.

Realising then our privilege and, additionally, our responsibility, we would urge among our brethren a more earnest and fervent desire to gather where they can, in joyful realisation of their wondrous standing and favour through Christ, and in fond anticipation of the consummation of their hope of joint heirship in the Kingdom, if so be they delight in their trial road, and faithfully seek by God's grace to "enter in," notwithstanding the hardships which must be experienced ere that Kingdom hope can be realised.

Let us ever remember that we are enjoined to "show forth the Lord's death till He come," and not until the last members of His Body, the Church, have finished this course, obediently unto death, will the Kingdom be established, and each then glorified member of the Body be accounted worthy to drink of the cup of joy and blessing anew with their Lord in that Kingdom.

The Melbourne friends extend a hearty invitation to all fellow members in Christ, and beseech that as many as possible endeavour to assemble as a manifestation of their hearty appreciation of this, another opportunity ere the Gospel Age closes, of demonstrating that oneness of purpose and aim to be participants to the full of our Lord's broken Body and sharers also in the cup of suffering. whereby we may eventually reign at His appearing and Kingdom.

The Service will take place (D.V.) in Molesworth Chambers (3rd floor), 450 little Collins Street, Melbourne, on the Tuesday evening, April 19th, at 7.30.

The Hidden Life with Christ.

THE more the child of God searches the Scriptures. the more firmly is he convinced, that of all those who have been called of God throughout this Gospel Age, and given a knowledge. of the plan of salvation, those who shall make up the class of chosen ones will be those who have in the complete sense hidden their lives in Christ. In other words, they will have given up all inheritance in the land, realising they have .110 continuing city here. but seek one to come. .

This by no means must be understood to indicate that the Christian must hide himself away from the world in which he lives, for every figure employed in the Scriptures to describe a follower of Christ teaches that it is impossible for him to live unto himself. If one is a true Christian, it will soon be known; his or her influence will be felt by others with whom there is association daily. Furthermore, these same figures teach that a Christian will at least be desirous that others will become followers of the one Master whom he is serving and seeking to please. No man can possibly be a Christian and enjoy a monopoly of its blessedness for himself. He will of necessity be more or less aggressive. And so we cannot be surprised that the worldly people with whom we come in contact should think us peculiar; it has been so with Christians all down the Gospel Age. When the Apostle Paul received the holy Spirit, inspiring him to newness of life, converting him from his former ways, his friends thought him beside himself. This, as we know, is because the worldly-minded cannot understand the things of God—they are foolishness to them.

We will remember our Lord's words to Nicodemus when he inquired concerning spiritual things. He said, "If I have told you earthly things, and you believe not, how shall you believe if I tell you of heavenly things?" The trouble with Nicodemus was that he did not have faith in Jesus; he was not in the proper condition to be taught concerning the spiritual riches. So it is with the vast majority of Christians to-day. There are so many who have accepted Jesus as their Saviour—have reached the condition of justification—but are content to go no further. They have never entered into the secret presence, and there alone with God given themselves to Him through Christ; by which means alone can the hidden riches of the spiritual life be received and understood.

So it is apparent that there are two acts of faith—the faith of justification and the faith of consecration. Our Lord Jesus did not require to take the first step, because He was never anything but just, or righteous. but He consecrated Himself by faith. He had such faith in His Father in heaven that He delighted to do His will. even though He knew that this meant the surrender of all His life rights as a human being; that He would be blotted out of existence, and that the mighty power of God would be required to raise Him from the dead to a new nature, the Divine nature. (Eph. 1:19, 20.) This does not require so much faith on our part, because Christ was the first to rise from the dead. (Acts 26:23.) He led the way, and we know that what our Heavenly Father has done for Him He is abundantly .-able and willing to do for us.

The two acts of faith are shown in the fifth chapter of Romans. In the first verse we are told that it is by faith that we are justified and so have peace with God; and then in the next verse we are told further that it is by faith also that we have access into this grace wherein we stand, the grace or favour of sanctification, and so have hope of the glory of God. The first act of faith by which we are justified is the preparation of the ground, the heart. If the seed, the word or glad tidings of the .Kingdom is properly received into such a heart and takes root there, the New- Creature is 'begotten. The root is the faith of the New Creature, the second act of faith, the faith of consecration. It is the small beginning which eventually, if permitted to grow, will develop into the mature fruit-tree, the man of God, the New Creature in Christ Jesus.

In the first Psalm, verses one to three, the man of God is described ; "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful. But his delight is in the law- of the Lord; and in His law doth he meditate day and night. And he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season ; his leaf also shall not wither ; and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper."

A tree planted by rivers of water, as a rule, has plenty-of life, because it has access to and absorbs plenty of water. The same tree, if transplanted to a desert, would soon die from lack of water. So it is with the man of God. It is only when he has access to the rivers of water of truth, the books of the Bible, that he can grow spiritually, and the more of the truth he absorbs and uses the more vitality he gets.

Before there can be a tree there must first be a seed, and when it is sown and takes root, no one is at first aware of the fact. It is not until the little root adds to itself a stem and the stem appears above the ground that we can say a seed has 'been planted there, and it has taken root.

When we present our bodies a living sacrifice to the Lord, the root of faith, the first step in the development of the " Creature is in our hearts, but at first no one knows it except ourselves. It is at this stage that our hidden life with Christ 'begins; but it is not until we add to our faith, fortitude, that others come to know that the Word of Truth has taken root. Fortitude is the first visible manifestation of the New Creature. If we do not develop fortitude our faith will die, just as in the case of the natural seed ; if a stem fails to appear the root will die.

Virtue or fortitude is that grace which enables us to give the truth to others, and to model our own lives by it, and to persevere in both in spite of opposition, and also in spite of repeated failures. At first, when we are only young plants, we bend at every blast of adversity; but, by and by, when we grow more mature. we are able to withstand any storm which may assail our faith in God and His truth. But we realise that anything we may accomplish in our own lives or in rendering assistance to others in the same Christian way is clone so by the holy spirit of God, the hidden influence, the illuminating power, without which no one can know the Lord. It has been truly said that there are a great number of people to-day who are religious, but of this number only a comparatively small portion live a spiritual life. And of those to whom the Lord has been pleased to bestow His spirit, all will agree that the Lord's power must continually dwell in us if we are to grow up strongly as New Creatures in Christ. ,Our Lord's own words are encouraging in this respect. He says: "The Heavenly Father is pleased to give the holy spirit to them that ask Him."

The Apostle Paul freely acknowledged that all that he and others had accomplished was through the influence of the power from on high. He writes encouragingly to the Hebrews, chapter 10, verses 32-34 : "Call to remembrance the former days, in which, after ye were illuminated, ye endured a great fight of afflictions ; partly whilst ye were made a gazing-stock both by reproaches and afflictions; and partly while ye became companions of them that were so used. For ye had compassion of me in my bonds, and took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing in yourselves that ye have in heaven a better and an enduring substance.” The first impression that is conveyed by these words is that those to whom the Apostle is writing had received the Lord’s seal of sonship ; they had received the earnest of the spirit; they had been illuminated, and were thus able to endure a fight of afflictions ; they took joyfully the spoiling of their goods because, by the Lord’s spirit, they had their treasure in heaven. That sure hope was theirs, which all in the same condition have as an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast.

Having reached this condition, and endured faithfully to the present time, how much of fortitude, the courage of our faith all will need to hold fast to our home and also to be able to assist others.

To illustrate what is expected of the Christian we take the ‘figure employed by our Lord in the words, “Ye are the salt of the earth.” What is the nature of salt? Is it not to improve or give a beneficial savour to the substance with which it is mixed, or, as in one of its uses, to preserve that substance from corruption? As one has said, “An idea sometimes connected with salt is that it is transmissive of virtue; and if you, therefore, are the salt of the world, your part of the world will be touched by the savour of what you are, and so be benefited and blessed.” The figure of “salt” is used to show the silent, hidden, savoury influence or preservative qualities that go out from the Christian’s life, to a greater or less extent affecting others. That which produces this savoury influence may not always be known, and for this reason, if for no other, testimony for Christ and confession of Him will always be required and given.

The average Christian’s world, however, is very small. It is in this little world that his silent, hidden influence, like that of the salt, will be felt. However, the One who produces this influence will be confessed, otherwise the salt will have lost its savour, and is fit only to be thrown outside and trodden under the feet of men. (Matt. 5:13.)

Our Lord said also: “Ye are the light of the world.” A Christian, figuratively speaking, is a lamp lighted by the blessed truths of the Gospel. Is not a lamp lighted to diffuse light? If a man becomes a ‘Christian, the light of truth which has made him one will shine out to those around him. “For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ.” (2 Cor. 4:6.)

The Christian’s world may be in the workshop, in the warehouse, the ‘bank, the farm or wherever he finds himself in God’s providence. It is in these places that the Lord designs his Christian profession to count. His home, however, is often the place where he needs to watch specially his influence. An English writer has said, “Some who are very ‘benevolent abroad, seem to have so expended their stores upon all mankind that they have not one ‘flash of sunshine for their own firesides. Some’ who are the greatest advocates in parliament for liberty to all are the greatest tyrants in their own homes.” The Christian needs to keep ever before his mind that, wherever and whenever he mingles with his fellowmen, his words, his conduct and even his manner are having an influence for good or bad on the cause of Christ. For this reason he should cultivate the spirit of watchfulness and prayerfulness. It is in the little world in which we move six days in a week from morning to evening that our influence as Christians is felt. True Christianity does not lay aside its beautiful robe on Sunday night lest it should get soiled or become wrinkled by the rough wear and tear of the week day. The true Christian recognises that it is his personal duty to do well the work that is assigned him in the “little world” in which God in His providence has placed him, and not to think that to do better it is necessary that his “little world” be enlarged. Our duty as bearers of the heavenly light is to let it shine in the sphere in which we find ourselves ; and when we have done this well, if the Master sees it best that we have wider sphere, He will also make provision for that.

On the other hand there are those who profess to be followers of our Lord and Saviour, who have obtained the impression that the more sanctity they possess the more they should keep by themselves and avoid the society of the world altogether. There can be no question that there are scenes and places, many, in this world, that we are to avoid. Most of these are well known; a few are not so well known. The latter may only be discovered as we grow more spiritual, so that our consciences may be exercised to discern those things that do or do not exert an influence for our spiritual good and development. The very fact that there are in this world professed Christians—monks and nuns—who shun the world and live in monasteries and convents, away from the world altogether, shows that there is a tendency, a temptation, at least, to go to extremes in that direction as well as in the other.

We should ever remember that our calling requires that we remain in the world, but not of it. Those who go into convents, if they are of those who be lights of the world, by so doing hide their light under a bushel, instead of letting it shine out in a world that is sadly in need of it. Those who have received the true light, and whose lives have been changed by it, are the very ones of whom the world has the greatest need.

How many people who can be generous with their money have yet to learn that the causes they would serve need something more powerful and less dangerous than their large donations—a humble spirit and a serving love?—Norman Goodall, M.A.

“What cloth it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?” How terrible is the thought that it is possible for one to exchange the “exceeding great and precious promises” of the eternal heavenly inheritance for the attainment of temporal earthly possessions and fleeting joys.

Guided by God's Eye.

"I will guide thee with Mine eye."—Psa. 32 : S.

THE eye is one of the most important organs of the body with which to give expression to the feelings. Either anger or pleasure are usually expressed by this means. One thought which we may take from the text is that one may be so desirous of doing the Divine will that he will be continually on the alert to please, just as a dutiful child, being on the alert to do the will of the parent, would look at the parent's eye, not waiting for the rod. So all of God's dear children of the Church should be looking unto Jesus for the expression of the Father's will concerning them. They look to Jesus as the Author of their faith and the One who shall be the Finisher of it. They look to Him as the great Counsellor and Guide of life. As we sometimes sing:

"Oh, let no earth-born cloud arise To hide Thee from Thy servant's eyes"

Another thought is that as the eye is the symbol of wisdom, so God guides all things in wisdom. He sees to it that His children receive the necessary counsel, the necessary aid. Since He is the All ' One, nothing can escape His attention. Still another, thought is that as we recognise the Divine purpose, the Divine will, the Divine outworking of that will, we see that in the present time God is not trying to save the world, but only "the called." "the elect." who are obedient in sacrifice. All who are of the First-born should seek to follow the same course as God. to be co-workers with Him. They should have no will of their own, but do the Father's will.

One of the most important lessons for the spiritual Israelite to learn is to look to the Lord for leading in all of life's affairs—never to attempt any undertaking, either temporal or spiritual, without seeking to note the will of the Lord concerning it. We are marching toward the antitypical Canaan and know that other experiences are due us and must be undergone ere we can inherit the promises. 'Hie lesson for us is prompt and thorough obedience to the Lord's leadings without murmurings—with joyfulness ; and this can be expected only on the part of those who have learned the lessons previously given them, and above all, the lesson of faith—confidence in the Lord's power and goodness and faithfulness.

HEART PURITY.

“Thou must be true thyself If thou the truth would’st teach
Thy soul must overflow, if thou Another soul would’st reach;
It needs the overflow of heart To give the lips full speech.

“Think truly, and thy thoughts Shall the world’s famine feed;
Speak truly, and each word of thine Shall be a faithful seed;
Live truly, and thy life shall be A great and noble creed.”

“The Christian World”

The following are cuttings from “The Christian World” :—

The topsy-turvydom of the economic-world has surely never before reached so ridiculous a position.
Delegate after delegate made the same point. The cry of every country was, “We have plenty to sell; we are ready and anxious to buy the things we want for the things we possess in plenty.” Persia and Greece, Haiti and Roumania, China, Japan, and the South American States, equally with the Great Powers, proclaimed that in each of their lands was plenty of the good things of life, and that at the same time each of their lands was hungry for the good things of other nations. Two things prevent a transfer—first, want of confidence that credit is good; secondly, the tariff walls over which it is impossible to pass goods out and receive goods back in exchange.—J. H. Harris, re League of Nations Assembly at Geneva.

Canon Raven, addressing the Modern Churchmen’s Conference at Oxford recently, said that “everywhere mankind is aware that its development has reached a critical stage, everywhere it feels the restlessness and excitement of the times, then with a certain exhilaration, then with an increasing perplexity, finally with a dangerous conviction of its helplessness—a sense of impotence not far from despair, which is liable to find expression rather in random grumbling or in sadder acceptance of wild and irrational remedies.” . . . But Canon Raven, going deeper, discovers three features in the world crisis() The necessity to secure world unity, (2) the necessity to exalt human personality above machinery and possessions, and (3) the necessity to achieve a wider fellowship. which correspond to the three chief tenets of the Christian faith—(1) The universal Fatherhood of God with its corollary that mankind is one family, (2) belief in Jesus as embodying in His personality the revelation of God and demonstrating the supremacy of personality, and (3) belief in the Holy Spirit, whose first-fruits, love, joy, and peace, are made evident in fellowship binding humanity into an organic unity.

The Lord's words are being fulfilled in these days. "Men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; for these be the days of vengeance that all things that are written may be fulfilled."—Luke 21:26, 22.

This fulfilment was noted in "The Age" editorial, February 17th, 1932 :—"While as a people we grapple with internal problems, it is essential, and may -be somewhat helpful, to reflect that these problems are but a microcosm of the wider world. Statesmen of all countries are palpably bewildered; there is inure than tacit agreement among them that the crisis has got beyond them."

All can now see the extremity to which mankind is being driven, and many of the best minds are being exercised to devise means to avoid if possible the breakdown of the present civilisation.

The human race is, however, too much steeped in sin, selfishness, greed, avarice, and ambition for wealth and position for any scheme of human invention to save it from wreck. It will be found that no human arm can bring the deliverance and inaugurate a state of equity and peace. That will be the work of "One that is mighty," One who will put "judgment to the line and righteousness to the plummet." The selfish, greedy workers of iniquity will no longer be able to operate things.

All evil influences will be restrained, and instead of Satanic spirit of strife and wrong there will be the holy spirit of Christ, the new Prince—the Prince of Peace. The influences will be to encourage righteousness and brotherhood, "peace and goodwill toward God and man."

Students of prophecy have seen for many years that we were very near the close of this dispensation—we are living - in the end of the world or age—and that soon the new age would be ushered in, "the world to come wherein dwelleth righteousness." (2 Pet. 3:13.)

While we long to see this earth made a happy home for the human family, we recognise that the "day of vengeance" must first break down the pride of man and bring him to know that there can be no life or peace apart from God. Man's heart must be changed before peace and goodwill prevail. So it is that the Scriptures indicate the great time of trouble which we see approaching. It must prepare mankind for the new age, it being represented as a fiery time of trouble.

The end of the Jewish Age was also referred to in prophecy as a time when the "chaff" should be burned with fire -and the vine (Israel) be burned up. (Ezek. 15.)

When the present systems of unrighteousness have 'been destroyed in this fiery indignation that is to devour the whole earth (human society), then the people will turn to the Lord with one consent. The Kingdom of 'grist will be established and it will be just what every good heart longs for—"the desire of all nations." "He shall judge the people with righteousness and thy poor with judgment. The mountains shall bring peace to the people and the little hills by righteousness. He shall save the children of the needy and break in pieces the oppressor" (Psa. 72.)

MEMORIAL OF OUR LORD'S DEATH.

All the Lord's consecrated people truly desire to memorialise His death with "unleavened bread" and "fruit of the vine," as emblems of His broken body and shed blood; and mention is made again, that, according to the Jewish date, the evening of Tuesday, April 19th, will be the appropriate time this year.

Some ecclesias may have chosen an earlier date, but, in any case, there is a special blessing in observing this annual privilege which none should neglect for any reason. If any feel discouraged there is special need to partake of the broken loaf, asking the Lord for a fresh realisation of justification and a fresh appreciation of our consecration to be broken (sacrificed) with Him, as reckoned members of the one loaf—His Church, His Body. Then as we taste of "this cup" remember that it speaks of our Lord's sufferings on our behalf—His tasting death for every man. Remember, also, that this is "our high calling "to suffer with Him that we may also reign with Him." This is the significance of His words, "Drink ye all of it."

Let nothing hinder us in deep and solemn, yet joyful appreciation—neither sins, nor coldness, nor feelings of unworthiness. Go to the Lord and make a clean breast of all shortcomings, also to any brethren whom we may have wronged, making full acknowledgment, whether they acknowledge faults toward us or not. Thus, getting right with the Lord, and so far as possible with every man, we may eat—feast upon the rich provision the Lord has made for all who accept, now, or in a later "due time,"

“AND SITTING DOWN THEY WATCHED HIM THERE.”

Sitting down, they watched Him there,
Watched Him, fairest of the fair,
Gazed with cold, un pitying eye,
While the jeering crowd passed by;

For His vesture cast a lot
(Seamless robe, without a spot);
Watched the "Man of Sorrows" there,
Who the world's great sin must bear;

Watched while darkness veiled the sun,
Watched until He cried, " 'Tis done!"
God of heaven! forbid that I
Thus should gaze with pitiless eye

On a suffering child of Thine,
Watch him while his foes malign,
Watch him while his life-blood flows,
Watch until the dark day's close;

Grant me, Lord, a heart of love,
Make me like a tender dove;
Let me bring him strength and peace,
Until death shall send release!

Dear Brother,—Please find enclosed P. Note, in payment for another year of the “Peoples Paper.” Sorry have become over-due with my subscription.

However. I hope that you may have a very successful year with your work, strengthened by God’s good grace, and the helpful prayers of all the brethren. The surplus money please devote to whatsoever you deem most needful.

I remain, Yours in Christ, S.G M.,

New South Wales.

Dear Sirs and Brothers,—I am desirous of supplying a copy of “The Divine Plan of the Ages” to a friend, and should be pleased if you would send a copy to the address.

I am not much more than a child, but I have recently come to some knowledge of our dear Lord’s will. I have already read part of the book myself, and found it more helpful than words can express. I feel that God’s kingdom is very, very near to us at present.

With earnest Christian love and earnest hopes for the future. A.C.

New Zealand. Berean Biblical Institute.

Dear Sirs,—In your paper, “The Voice,” which I have read with a very great deal of pleasure, and received great help therefrom, you announce the free gift of literature on subjects of great interest to me, and I would, therefore, request that you, in your goodness, would please send me the complete set mentioned if you can spare them. If not able to spare the set, would you please send the following:—”Our Lord’s Return,” “Do the Dead Know Anything: Where are They ?” “The Bible Teaching on Hell and Spiritism.” These are subjects I am genuinely interested in, and would be glad if you would let me have what you can spare. I know you will think I am very greedy, but I plead the honest desire to help my fellows to the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus Christ; that being so, if you can spare two copies of each I will promise to see that they are given to people who will read them and who are deeply interested in everything which tends to spread the Gospel. Thanking you in anticipation and praying that God’s blessing may be upon your efforts.

I am, yours in Christian Service (Mrs.) H. L.

Show Me Thy Face_

Show me Thy face—one transient gleam
Of loveliness Divine,
And I shall never think or dream
Of other love than Thine;

All lesser lights will darken quite,
All lower glories wane,
The beautiful of earth will scarce
Seem beautiful again.

Show me Thy face—my faith and love
Shall henceforth fixed be,
And nothing here have power to move
My soul's serenity.

My life shall seem a trance, a dream,
And all I feel and see,
Illusive, visionary—
Thou The one reality.

Show me Thy face—I shall forget
The weary days of yore;
The fretting ghosts of vain regret
Shall haunt my soul no more.

All doubts and fears for future years
In quiet trust subside;
And naught but blest content and calm
Within my breast abide.

Show me Thy face—the heaviest cross
Will then seem light to bear;
There will be gain in every loss,
And peace with every care.

With such light feet the years will fleet,
Life will seem brief as blest,
Till I have laid by burden clown
And entered into rest.

To work fearlessly, to follow earnestly after truth, to rest with a childlike confidence in Gods guidance, to leave ones lot willingly and heartily to Him—this is my sermon to myself. If we could live more within sight of heaven, we should care less for the turmoil of earth. -

To the Law and the Testimony.

(Extract from “Old Paths.”)

PERHAPS the most subtle of the various false prophet systems which have arisen amongst the Lord’s people to-day are those whose chief burden from the Lord is to the effect that doctrine is more or less unnecessary, if not indeed harmful, to the interests of the Lord’s people. Surely such teaching is the climax of ingenuity on the part of the great Adversary, and who but the arch-enemy himself would attempt to foist such a paradoxical theory upon the intelligence of the Lord’s people?

After all, what do we understand by doctrine? Many of the Lord’s followers seem to think that they can dispense with doctrine and still retain the truth. Such reasoning is all wrong, and this should be evident when we realise that the term doctrine is; merely descriptive of the truths which we have heard and believed and without which we would know nothing whatever of the will of God. Apart from the doctrines as set forth by our Lord and His Apostles and in the Scriptures generally. we have no truth concerning either God Himself, His character, His plan, or what His purpose is in this day.

The Adversary’s tactics, however, through these modern false prophets, are more subtle than bluntly to deny outright the importance and need of sound doctrine. In proclaiming their vision of the Lord, in regard to this matter, they are artful enough to state it both ways, that is, both for and against—in one breath seeming to affirm the importance of doctrine and in the next stating that it is non-essential. The result is that since their negative attitude towards the Christian doctrines cancels out their lukewarm support thereof, their hearers are left astonished at their marvellous wisdom. Should, however, any of the Lord’s sheep within hearing detect the sound of a strange voice, their fears may at once be allayed by the suggestion that it was their hearing and not the voice of the false shepherd which was at fault.

Why not demand from all such prophets, however, some Scriptural warrant for the vision which they proclaim, in the Lord’s name? Why not invite them to point to a single suggestion, or expression. either from the Lord Himself or from the Apostles, in support of their “no doctrine” gospel? This they will be unable to do, because the idea is entirely foreign to the teachings of the Word of God.

WHO IS ON THE LORD’S SIDE?

Included also amongst the false prophet systems of this day are those which belittle and undermine faith in the present truth. Such apparently either forget or did not properly grasp that it was the message of present truth which came to us through the writings of Brother Russell, that was the means used by the Lord in the deliverance of His people from Babylon. They overlook, too, the fact that the present truth concerning the Lord’s presence and work of harvest is the sickle which the Lord has placed in the hands of those who would become co-labourers with Him, in reaping and gathering home the wheat into the barn of safety—the Kingdom. Here, again, the Adversary’s methods are very subtle, for instead of denying, or openly attacking the harvest vision of truth, he relies mainly upon suggestions and witticisms which would belittle and discredit such teachings and those who uphold them.

Another method is to keep silent about the subject, and instead of sounding the trumpet of present truth, to direct the attention of the Lord’s people into other channels of activity, which appeal more to the general mass rather than to the few. Suggestions are made that in the past we have been too narrow and that we need to show a more broadminded spirit, which really means a lowering of the standard of truth. Why not break this conspiracy of silence and demand from all who profess to be prophets of the Lord, what is the vision of the present truth for this day?

Why not demand from all who take upon their lips the prophets’ formula “thus saith the Lord”—that they set forth without any sleight of hand tactics and in simple language, what is the vision of the Lord concerning the work of harvest? If they will not do so, or cannot do so, you will then understand that their claims to be a prophet of the Lord are false and their vision of His will misleading.

WHERE IS THEN THE BLESSEDNESS YE SPARE, OF?

Surely if we realise that it was through the message of present truth that we were intelligently sealed in the forehead 'by the Angel from the sun-rising, we ought to know why we should lightly value it to-day, or hide this light under a bushel. Surely most will agree that it was the eating of the "little book" open in the hand of the mighty Angel (Christ), who came down from heaven at His second advent, that gave us sufficient 'strength and faith, as well as the necessary understanding to flee out of Babylon, and like the discerning eagles, to gather around the special food provided by the Lord for this day. (Luke 17:34-37.) Has all this changed, or is it that the light we then received and for a time rejoiced in, is now becoming darkness? 'Of one thing we can be assured, and that is that the Lord never changes, nor will the truth which He has so freely provided for our guidance in this evil day ever become error, or lead us in a direction contrary to the pathway along which it has led us heretofore.

If we find ourselves travelling in the opposite direction or on a different pathway from that upon which we set out when 'first we were illuminated by the present truth, we may be assured that it is neither the truth nor the same spirit that is leading us. The spirit of truth never leads in contrary or different directions, but always onward, along the same pathway, brighter and brighter towards the perfect day. (Prov. 4:18.)

Many seem to have forgotten that they were once delivered from Babylon's errors and bondage, and not a few, like the Israelites of old, after experiencing a little of the wilderness journey, are turning again with longing eyes towards the land from which they were delivered and the varied creed-'beds upon which they once reclined.

GO YE OUT TO MEET HIM.

The parable of the virgins is, we believe, being enacted to-day before our eyes. As conditions in the world become more turbulent and the end of the present order of things draws obviously near, we may expect, in accordance with the parable, a general awakening of the virgin class. The awakening will lead to a fresh trimming of lamps and involve a renewed searching of the Scriptures, with the endeavour to understand the significance of passing events and the outlook for the Lord's people. Those who, despite their slumbering, still retain the spirit of the truth (oil in their vessels) will quickly regain the full light and joy of harvest time, and in preparation to meet the Bridegroom beyond the veil, will at once "go out" from the various forms of bondage and error into which they have been gradually led. These are the wise virgins of the parable.

The other class, described in the parable as foolish virgins, also awaken and realise the need for a fresh trimming of their lamps. In the case of these, however, the oil (spirit of the truth) in their lamps has become exhausted during the hours of slumber, and having no reserve of oil in their vessels, they apparently fail to appreciate the light they once rejoiced in and are therefore allured into by-paths by the various deceptions of the Adversary, permitted of the Lord for the very purpose. (Matt. 24:24.)

This crucial hour of testing upon the virgin class is, we believe, at the door, and never before was there greater need for a clear understanding of sound doctrine and a large measure of its spirit in the heart, as a protection to faith in this evil time. Do not therefore be misled by those teachers who would rob you of the clear vision of the truth, by suggesting that doctrines are non-essential and of minor importance to the Lord's people.

The Apostle John sums the position up in a few words when he declares : “Whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ bath not God ; but he that abideth in the doctrine of Christ bath both the Father and the Son.” (2 John 9.)

Church History Repeats Itself During the Gospel Age.

The following is quoted from Milner’s Church History and refers to the Church at Galatia :—

SOON after Paul left them with the most pleasing hopes of their spiritual growth, he was astonished to hear of a change for the worse, which took place among them. Some Jews who were either their own countrymen or had recently arrived at Galatia . . . took pains to pervert them. They made no attempts, indeed, to unsettle their minds in the views of the unity of the Godhead and the principle facts of Christianity ; nor did they endeavour to draw them hack to the worship of idols. They neither formerly denied the atonement of Christ nor persuaded the people to desist from Christian worship. Vet was it another gospel, though it deserved not the name of gospel, to the love of which they seduced them. They assured them that they could not be saved without circumcision and prevailed on them to Judaize so far as to observe the rites of Moses in various instances. They took pains to estrange them, from Paul and to draw them over to themselves and to a worldly spirit of conformity. loving to appear fair in the eyes of men and pretending to be zealous of good works while their real view was to avoid the persecution which attended the cross of Christ. To give better effect to their insinuations they instilled into them disrespectful ideas of Paul, as though he were far inferior to the other Apostles ; and, as it seems, they represented the Mother Church of Jerusalem, with the college of apostles there, as coinciding with themselves in doctrine . . .

“These false teachers still called themselves Christians, and the mischief which they introduced may he decried at first sight no great one. So I doubt not that some fashionable perversions of evangelical truth at this day, of a similar kind, appear to many to be of no great consequence. The great evil lurking under all this art and zeal was the adulteration of the faith of Jesus, the sole author of our salvation. In no epistle does the Apostle speak so sharply or express himself so vehemently. His exhortation and rebuke came from a charitable heart just after the reception of the disagreeable tidings. He professes himself astonished at the defection of the Galatians from Christ, and execrates any man or even angel who shall preach any other way of salvation . . . He marks the merely worldly nature of the doctrine they were embracing ; it would make them bigotted Jews indeed, proud. self-righteous, void of the love of God and man, and no better in their spiritual state than they were while idolators . . . He informs them that the persecution, which he himself endured, was on account of this very doctrine. That it was that which stirred up the enmity of the human heart ; and this doctrine being lost, the gospel becomes a mere name, and ‘Christianity is lost in the group of common religions. It will be proper for us to bear in mind the Apostle’s reasonings on this subject, and to apply them to every period of church history.’”

So it surely is that the great Adversary has ever attacked any new unfolding of gospel truth. He seeks to “snatch away” the good seed, or to choke it by weeds. There is such an attempt being made to-day respecting the “present truth”; to belittle • its message, to put the light under a bushel, to persuade believers that after all, “it does not matter about doctrine,” that peace at any price should be attained even if it means that we keep silence on the joys of the harvest message and the feast of good things which the present Lord has provide;1; that we fail to be witnesses of the truths now due. We would indeed be foolish virgins to be so lulled into the easier, pleasanter way, where the cross may seem lighter. “Hold fast . . . that good thing which was committed unto thee.”-2 Tim. 1:13-14.

QUESTION BOX.

Question.—Do you think that there is any parallel between the 120 years of Noah's preaching and the second presence of Christ?

Answer—While there is nothing definitely indicating that the time of probation for the old world during which Noah preached of the coming flood is to have its parallel at the end of this “present evil world,” it certainly is not unreasonable to think that there may be a corresponding period “in the days of the Son of Man.” The Lord Himself has stated that there would be a parallel as far as conditions were concerned. Both Matthew and Luke record the statement that while Noah was preaching of the coming doom, the people went on in carelessness, following their own pursuits and pleasures.

It is quite clear, then, that as Noah was there present during that period of 120 years (Genesis 6:3) (these were “the days of Noah”), so also there were to be “the days of the Son of Man,” during which time there would also be preaching, warning of the impending doom—the destruction of the present order of things, religious (heavens) and social (the earth). (2 Pet. 3.) It is clear from this Scripture that the Son of Man was to be present for some time prior to the collapse of the present civilisation, although not recognised by the world, and it seems a reasonable conjecture that the period of time would be the same; yet it is but a conjecture, and therefore we do well not to dogmatise upon it. The Second Advent movement appears to have had its beginning about 1825-1829 with the Millerites, and it is possible that the “days of the Son of Man” commenced there. The fulfilment of the parable of the ten virgins appears to have been in course since about that date. “He that hath ears to hear let him hear.”

Question.—What is the explanation of Mark 4:12: “That seeing they may see and not perceive and hearing they may hear and not understand lest at any time they should be converted and their sins be forgiven”?

Answer.—To those who know only the usual church teachings, i.e., that this life is a trial time for all mankind, that when death comes the eternal condition is sealed for each and all, either for eternal life or otherwise, this passage would surely be beyond understanding. How out of accord with the gentleness and kindness of Christ to think that He would deliberately speak in parables so that sinners could not understand the way of salvation—so that they would not be converted. What is the Gospel for if not to convert the world! Ah, that is just where the mistake has been. We had failed to understand the great Divine plan of the ages in the past; but now that we can see that God's plan covers various ages during which certain features of His purpose are accomplished, the preceding verse (11) explains the matter. The Lord's intention was to select only a particular class during the present age: the rest of humanity would be dealt with later, during the Millennial Age.

The gospel message was therefore delivered in parables and dark sayings which only those of suitable disposition and aided by the holy Spirit could comprehend; “Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God, but unto them that are without all these things are done in parables.”

Thus by the gradual unfolding of Divine truths, God's purposes are accomplished, “No man cometh unto the Son except the Father draw him”; “No man can come unto Me, except it were given him of My Father”; “My sheep hear my voice”; and to the Scribes and Pharisees Jesus said. “Ye believe not because ye are not of my sheep.”

It is only those to whom God has granted “ears to hear” and “eyes to see” that can at present enjoy the Gospel ; but when “God’s elect”—the Church class—is complete, then “the residue of men will seek the Lord.”¹ (Acts 15:14-17.) Then it is that Christ “will draw all men unto Him,” when the “light shall lighten every man that cometh into the world,” for God has promised that the pure language will be turned to the people and all will call upon the name of the Lord. (Zeph. 3:8-9.) The way shall be made so plain that “the wayfaring man though a fool shall not err therein.” (Isa. 35:8-10.)

The difficulty has been that men generally do not see the purpose of revealed truth. The Word is God’s instrument in working out His purposes and selecting certain classes in preparation for the setting up of the Kingdom of Christ. The Bible unfolds its secrets in due time, and when necessary, in the progressive steps of the great Divine plan of blessing the poor groaning creation.

It is nothing for a man to hold up his head in a calm; but to maintain his post when all others have quitted theirs, and there to stand upright when other men are beaten down—this is praiseworthy.—Seneca,

Honour to the true man ever, who takes his life in his hands, and at all hazards speaks the word which is given to him to utter, whether men will bear or forbear; -whether the end thereof is to be praise or censure, gratitude or hatred.— Whittier.

“Be still my heart, these foolish fears,
These constant grumbles, and these tears,
All cast dishonour on thy Lord,
And contradict His gracious word,

Brought safely by His hand thus far,
He’ll pilot thee across the bar.
How can you want, if He provide,
Or lose the way with such a Guide?”

The Second Advent and Parousia of Christ.

Convention Address).

THE Second Advent of our Lord occupies 1 place of primary importance in the teachings of the Scriptures, especially in the New Testament. How eagerly and expectantly the Apostles and others of the early Church looked forward to that important event. The glorious appearing of our Saviour and Lord was truly a blessed hope, earnestly to be desired, and patiently to be waited for.

Describing the attitude of the early Church toward the return of our Lord, another has said: "They believed with 111 their hearts in Jesus Christ; in His wondrous life of miracle and grace, and in His sacrificial death on Calvary's sad tree. They believed that He had triumphed o'er the grave, and had come forth to resurrection life. They remembered the words of the Lord Jesus, how He said unto them, "I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto Myself, that where I am, there ye may lie also." They had heard "two men in white apparel" say, "This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven." With simple faith they all accepted these great promises. The authority appeared to them sufficient, the meaning transparent. The Lord had gone; the Lord would come. He had disappeared from view, but only for "a little while," until "the times of restitution." When these times come He would come again, and each one seemed to say, "Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another." This was to them the one important Divine event to which the whole creation moves. It was the lodestar of their life, the goal and climax of their being, and round it their communion with each other, like their testimony to the world, continually revolved.

While the Second Advent of Christ may be said to be the chief theme of the New Testament, we find that the Old Testament, too, abounds in references to this most important event. Enoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of the coming of our Lord to execute His judgments. The Kingly-priesthood of Melchisedec pointed forward to the time when Christ would take up His power and establish His Kingdom at His Second Advent. Aaron also, the high priest of the Levitical order, when clothed in his garments of glory and 'beauty typified the 'glorified Christ, whose work of blessing and restoration awaits the Second Coming of our Lord. Moses also prophesied that God would raise up unto the people a prophet like unto himself. Referring to this prophecy, the Apostle Peter says (Acts 3:22), "Him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass that every soul which will not hear that prophet shall be destroyed from among the people."

Throughout the Prophets and the Psalms we find numerous references descriptive of the work to lie accomplished by our Lord at His Second Coming. In Acts 3:21 the Apostle Peter tells us that “by the mouth of all His holy prophets since the world began,” God has spoken of the “times of restitution of all things,” and we are assured that these blessed times are not due until Christ comes the second time.

When thinking of this matter of the Second Advent of Our Lord, it is well to hold in mind the fact that God’s plan is one harmonious whole, which is being wrought out through Christ, and that the Second Advent stands related to the work of the First as effect to cause. That is, that the great work of Restitution at the second advent follows the work of Redemption accomplished at the first advent as a logical sequence, according to the Divine Plan.

The Lord’s return is, therefore, the dawn of hope for the world, the time for the bestowment of the favours secured by the redemption—the Gospel Age being an intervening space, during which the Bride of Christ is being selected, to lie associated with her Lord in the great work of restitution which He comes to accomplish.

When rightly understood, the Object of our Lord’s Second Advent is truly a glorious one. He comes to bring in the long-promised times of restitution, when the whole world shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of God. The Scriptures tell us that when Christ comes the second time Satan will be bound and all evil will be restrained.

“The ransomed of the Lord (i.e., all mankind) shall return (from the sleep of death) and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads.” At that time God will pour out His spirit upon all flesh, and shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall lie no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying. neither shall there be any more pain. The Scriptures clearly teach that when Christ comes the second time He comes to reign, and that He must reign until He has put down all enemies—all opponents, all things in the way of the great restitution which He comes to accomplish—the last to be overthrown being death—1 Cor. 15:25-26—and that He will reign for a thousand years.

What a great change will be brought about when Christ begins to reign ; everyone shall know about it, and see that it is indeed the Lord’s Kingdom which has come at last. Instead of the wicked prospering as they do to-day, then shall the righteous flourish. Instead of war, strife, commotion, unrest and strikes, there shall be “abundance of peace.” “He shall judge thy people with righteousness, and thy poor with judgment. He shall judge the poor of the people and save the children of the needy, and break in pieces the oppressor.”—Psa. 72.

We see, then, that the Second Coming of our Lord is indeed a greater matter altogether than that of the First Advent. It is not confined to the one nation of Israel; He is not even to occupy a literal throne like the kings of earth, but Christ shall be King over all the earth, “King of kings and Lord of lords,” and much more powerful than if He were once more changed to the limitations of the human body.

Seeing clearly the object of our Lord’s Return, that it is to take up His great power and reign, it becomes a matter of intense interest to His people to know how or in what manner He is to be expected. Some Christian people think that when Christ comes the second time He will come again as a man. It would seem that this conclusion is based upon a too literal interpretation of some Scriptures. In 1 Thess. 4:16 we read, “The Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, and with the trump of God.” The voice and the trumpet mentioned here correspond with the same figures used in Rev. 11:15-19. “The seventh angel sounded ; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord, and of His Christ, and He shall reign for ever and ever And the nations were angry, and Thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged.” This expression agrees also with the statement of the prophet Daniel, “And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great Prince 'And there shall be a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation. . . and many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake.'— Dan. 12:1-2. It seems clear that Daniel and John both refer to the same time of which the Apostle Paul speaks in 1 Thess. 4:16. It is the time of our Lord's appearing, and the establishment of His kingdom in the midst of a great time of trouble. The "shout," the "voice of the Archangel," and "the trump of God" are all symbols. We would not expect that the Second Coming of our Lord would be announced by a literal, audible sound on the air. It seems clear that Paul is here referring to what the Revelator terms "the seventh trumpet," the "last trump," in a series of symbolic trumpets. We note also the Apostle Paul's reference to the same trump in 1 Cor. 15:51-52. "Behold I show you a mystery, we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed.

In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump, for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." The proof that these references are to the same trumpet is found in the record of the events connected with each. Paul mentions the resurrection, and the establishment of the Lord's Kingdom, as connected with "the trump of God," and the Revelator mentions the same with even greater minuteness. The sounding of the "seventh" or "last trump" is an indication of the presence of our Lord; the events due to take place at the sounding of the "last" or "seventh trump" are visible to the eye of faith. There can be no doubt that we are living in the day of His preparation—the period which precedes the actual reign of Christ and His Church. On every hand there is evidence of the fulfilment of Daniel's prophecy (Ch. 12) in which he states that when Michael shall stand up there shall be a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation. The name Michael signifies "who as God," or one representing God—a fit name for Him who is the express image of the Father's person. The Scriptures show that it is the setting up of Christ's Kingdom in the earth that causes the dissolution of the kingdoms of this world, of which Satan is the ruler.

Another text which is sometimes taken to show that Christ will come in human form, is found in Acts 1:11. It reads :—"This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come, in like manner, as ye have seen Him go into heaven." Some think the meaning of this passage is : As you see the Lord ascend into heaven, so, in like manner, you shall see Him come again. A little careful consideration of this text, however, reveals that it does not say that those who saw Him go will see him come, nor that any one else will see him come. What is stated in this Scripture is that the manner of His coming will be like the Manner of His going. And what was the manner of His going? Was it with great spectacular demonstration? Was it with trumpet sound and voices and a great shout rending the air? If so, we should expect that His coming again would be in like manner. On the other hand, was it not quietly and secretly quite unknown to the world, and known only to the little band of His footstep followers? His statement (Jno. 14:19), "Yet a little while and the world seeth Me no more," has never yet been disproved ; for none but the brethren saw even His manifestations after His resurrection, and no others witnessed His ascension. And in like manner as He went away (quietly, secretly, so far as the world was concerned, and unknown except to His followers), so in this manner He comes again. And as when He went away He lifted up His hands and blessed them, so, when He comes again it is that their joy may be full, as He said, "I will come again, and receive you unto Myself," "I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you."—Jno. 14:3 ; 16:22.

Describing His Second Advent, our Lord said : "Behold I come as a thief" ; and when He was questioned of the Pharisees when the kingdom of God should come, He answered them and said, "The Kingdom of God cometh 'not with observation'" (marginal reading—not with outward show—Luke 17:20). The Scriptures show that the Lord will be present, unseen, doing a work of which the world for a time will be entirely unaware. His arrival must, therefore, be in a quiet manner, unobserved, and unknown to the world, just "as a thief" would come, without noise or other demonstration to attract attention.

The Scriptures assure us that the Lord would not leave His people in ignorance concerning the fact of His presence. His instruction to His disciples when about to leave them was "Watch, therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord cloth come." Again He said, "Let your loins be girded about, and your lights 'burning, and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their lord. . . . that when He cometh and knocketh, they may open unto Him immediately. Blessed are those servants whom the Lord, when He cometh, shall find watching; verily I say unto you, that He shall gird Himself and make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them."

Surely the Lord's consecrated people in these last days have realised the fulfilment of this promise. The light, the knowledge and understanding which God's people now have concerning the Plan of the Ages, together with its times and seasons, surpasses anything which the Church has had since the times of the Apostles. According to His promise, the Lord has indeed come forth to serve His people, and what a blessing has come to us as we have feasted our minds upon the rich treasures of His grace as now revealed to us through His Word. The world of mankind around us cannot appreciate the light of truth which now shines out from the pages of God's Word. The natural man perceiveth not the things of the spirit ; they are foolishness unto him, therefore we need not wonder that the worldly minded are unable to see the signs which indicate the presence of our Lord.

When wrongs are thrust upon you, and things look dark and drear,
You ponder o'er the future with strange foreboding fear ;
Just pierce the clouds of heaven, true faith will surely bring Rays of welcome sunshine from the presence of the King.
James 1:2-4; Matt. 7:7-11.

CONVENTION NEWS FROM SOUTH AUSTRALIA

It is a pleasure once again to report a helpful season of fellowship enjoyed by those who attended the Easter Convention at Adelaide. The Memorial of our Lord's death held on the Thursday evening, reminded us again of our dear Redeemer's sacrifice as being the only basis of hope for everlasting life, both for the Church and the world of mankind. In partaking of the bread and wine, we were reminded again of our consecration vow to be dead with Christ, and our pledge to be broken together as members of His Body. The typical Passover of the Jews being followed by the seven days' feast of unleavened bread, represents how our whole life is to be devoted to the Lord's service—the service of holiness. Christ our Passover (Lamb) being slain for us, the Apostle directs that we keep the feast, not with old leaven, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth. We kept the Memorial with grateful hearts, appreciating something of the great favour God has bestowed upon us in calling us to the fellowship of His Son, Jesus Christ.

The Convention meetings commenced on the Good Friday, and on that day the attendance numbered about 33.

At Gawler, on the Easter Monday, the last day of the Convention, the attendance would be about 36. "The Second Presence of Christ" was the general theme of the Convention, and some of the addresses and studies were chosen in harmony therewith. The Bible studies were taken from 1 Peter 4th chapter, and 1 Thess. 5th chapter, and many interesting and helpful thoughts were expressed in the course of these studies, which occupied the afternoon of each of the four Convention days.

Some good thoughts were expressed by three brethren in a symposium, the topics being. "Grace," "Faith," "Works." We were also reminded of our precious privileges in Christ by a brother who spoke to us on "Christian Fellowship."

It was pointed out that our fellowship depends upon our obedience to God's Word, and how we must keep our hearts free from bitterness -by allowing the spirit of Christ to dwell in us. In order to continue fellowship we must maintain the spirit of consecration ; also keep a good, steady faith, and make progress in the way ; we must walk in the light-1 Jno. 1:7. In his address on "Christian Experience," our brother showed how God is preparing His New Creation by allowing His consecrated people to pass through certain experiences of trial and suffering designed to develop and perfect us in character-likeness to Christ. We must not faint under the trying process; we must not grow weary, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not. The example of our Lord will help us if we consider Him, and the way He met the trials of the way. The attainment of perfect love is the goal before us—the mark for the prize, and it is only by the Lord's grace that we can hope to reach it and stand fast thereat.

Further addresses were: "The Second Advent and Parousia of Christ," and "Watch and Pray" (Luke 2 1:3 4-3 6).

Our attention is called to the necessity of watchfulness in connection with Our Lord's Return. It was the failure to watch that led to the falling away from the true faith. Only those who watch will know of the Lord's presence. It was also pointed out that watchfulness is necessary to keep us in the right attitude toward our consecration, and to protect us from the influences of the world and the flesh and the devil. "Those who watch carefully have the comforting assurances of all God's precious promises.

In the closing address our brother spoke on 2 Tim. 3:14, and showed the necessity for continuing in the things we have learned and been assured of. We should be steadfast—not shaken from things that we have proved to be right. Thoroughness is essential in the matter of the cleansing of our hearts. We must be careful in respect of the small things in our daily lives. We must not compromise the truth or cover up wrong for the sake of unity. We must have our senses exercised to discern between good and evil. Unity at the expense of Truth is not desirable; and we must be prepared to fearlessly declare the whole counsel of God, regardless of the consequences-1 Tim. 3:1-5. We must let our light shine- 1 Tim. 6:20; Heb. 2:1-3; 2 Pet. 3:1-7-18.

The Adelaide and Gawler classes are indebted to those brethren and sisters who visited us from other States: and we feel that the success of our Convention, humanly speaking, was largely due to the line spirit of co-operation existing amongst the friends. Conscious of our many imperfections we do not look for perfection in the flesh; but we can thank God for the provision He has made for us in Christ, to cover our unwilling blemishes and make us acceptable in the Beloved. "If we confess our sins He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." —1 John 1:9.

MEMORIAL SERVICE.

The Melbourne brethren gathered in solemn, yet joyous, heartfelt love and appreciation on the occasion of the anniversary of our Lord's death as the "Passover Lamb," slain for us.

All present (21 in all), we feel sure, realised the deep significance of the emblems, symbolising as they do our Lord's "broken body" and "shed blood."

It was indeed encouraging to witness such earnestness of spirit, as in quietness and confidence all reverently and deeply appreciated this special occasion, and gladly partook of the blessed tokens which not only symbolically signified our standing of justification through the merit of our Redeemer's sinless sacrifice, but, additionally, our participation in His sufferings.

We were reminded, as prospective members of the Church of the "First-horns," that we have our standing only on account of our Saviour's loving sacrifice, and that during this acceptable time of God's favour we must realise that all have participated of the "blood of sprinkling," and that there is now no condemnation to those who have had their hearts sprinkled from a consciousness of evil, and who are earnestly striving to maintain their standing in consequence, during this "dark night of weeping."

While viewing particularly the "passing over" or "sparing alive" of the "first-horn" class this Gospel Age, on account of their entering into a covenant by sacrifice, and having the merit of Christ's sacrificial death imputed to them, we rejoiced as we were reminded also that while a special invitation is granted to these, the merit of our Lord's "broken body" and "shed blood" will, in God's due time, be applied on behalf of all the world of mankind after the full number of the "anti-typical first-horns" have finished their course, and entered into their reward at the close of this acceptable period, designated the "Gospel Age." Then the Bride of Christ will have made herself ready, and be privileged to partake of the promised cup of joy and blessing in the Kingdom, in association with her dear Lord and Bridegroom.

"Weeping may endure for a night,
But joy cometh in the morning."

And so we pray that God's righteous Kingdom may soon be established, in order that the world's blessings may become operative, and the Millennial Age usher in the reign of Christ with its attendant uplift, the close of which shall see the gracious benefits of Jehovah's atoning work through Christ, and when our Lord shall see of the travail of His soul and be satisfied.

The Sacrificial Loaf and Cup.

A broken loaf—a cup of crimson wine,
On snowy table laid,
Ah! emblems these of wondrous sacrifice—
The costly price He paid!

That precious body, broken once for me,
That precious blood once split
For me, that I through Him, might be made free,
Aye, free—from death and guilt!

And has this broken loaf, this crimson wine,
A further meaning still?
Ah, yes! thro' grace I am a part of Him,
His sufferings to fulfil.

My body to be broken with my Lord,
My blood with His be shed,
And as I die with Him, with Him I live,
My ever- glorious Head!

O wondrous mystery! O glorious thought!
Thro' death with Him I rise!
Suffering with Him, I with Him too shall reign,
Triumphant in the skies!

Yet on this night—before this snowy board,
Spread with this bread and wine,
Canst thou say truly, O my soul, my soul,
“These promises are mine”?

Is all thy will completely blent with His,
Whate'er may be that will?
Art willing to be crushed, that thy life's wine
May thus flow out to fill

And bless and nourish other lives than thine,
That they may bud and flower ?
Art glad and thankful that thy broken life
Shall have vicarious power ?

And canst thou to His precious will say “Yes,”
E'en tho' with tear-dimmed eyes
And quivering lips of pain and throbbing heart?
And when His love denies

What thy poor heart had thought its very own,
And brings to thee instead
Experiences thou canst not understand—
A pathway hard to tread

Wilt thou still say, “Amen,” and trust Him still,
And wait in patient love,
Till He shall say, “It is enough, My child,
Come to Thy Home above”?

And when His truth is ridiculed and scorned,
And His dear “Servant,” like his blessed Lord,
Is spat upon, and crowned with thorns, dost thou
Rejoice yet more to own His Word ?

“Yes, yes,” my glad heart answers.
“I rejoice This privilege sweet to own!
And I will kiss my cross, and wait Thy time,
Dear Lord, to share Thy Throne.”

Then, oh! my soul, these emblems are for thee—
This broken loaf, this wine
And thou may’st claim His precious promises,
For they are truly thine.

The hour is late—the end is drawing nigh—
And as we gather here,
Brethren beloved, to share this holy feast,
We know the time is near

When all His loved ones shall be gathered Home, Our tears all wiped away,
And all the shadows that oppress us here
Shall yield to perfect day,

Then with rejoicing let us now partake,
Our journey’s almost o’er;
The -light is breaking o’er the Heavenly hills!
Our King is at the door!

—A. G. James.

Correspondence,

New South Wales. Dear Brethren,

Your good letter arrived a week ago, together with your little paper, which I enjoyed very much reading of our Father, the great Over Shepherd, and our Lord Jesus, the Good Shepherd. I was only reading of the Good Shepherd (John 10) just before your paper arrived. It is nice to be able to follow the Good Shepherd as we hear His voice—the voice of Truth;—all that the Father gave Him _commandment, so He spake. We hear our Father's voice as He speaks to the three Apostles concerning our beloved Lord, to "hear ye Him" (Matt. 17:5), which the Apostle Peter confirms (2 Pet. 1:17), and says that they are not cunningly devised fables. The Apostle Paul certifies that the Gospel which he preached is very reliable, and not man's doctrine; that he was taught it by the revelation of our Lord Jesus, and -we have proof of his apostleship (Acts 9).

As we follow our Lord closely, we notice His prayer to our Heavenly Father, to sanctify the Apostles and the Church through the truth (the knowledge and spirit of truth). We believe all Scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works. Since the Lord has revealed this unto me by His Holy Spirit, I find that there is another step for me to take, thus making my full consecration to Him by water baptism. Can you dear brethen have this arranged for me, as there is no one here to perform this symbol? I must thank you very much for your kind invitation for the Memorial season, and I would love to be able to assemble with you in our Lord's name and spirit, but I had partly arranged to meet in Sydney. Wherever we assemble we are in unity of spirit serving and praising the Lord who has called us out of darkness into His marvellous light. With warm Christian love. Your brother by His grace. B.J.

Dear Friends,—I received your papers from January 1st; they are very interesting, and a help to me, and so easy to understand. I am sending 2/6 for subscription to the "People's Paper," 2/9 for "Divine Plan of the Ages," 3d. for "Do the Dead Know Anything?" and also 2/3 for "Foregleams of the Golden Age."—I remain, yours truly, A.A.

West Australia. Berean Biblical Institute.

Dear Brethren,—I received the pamphlets and book you sent me in January (which I applied for with the "Adelaide Chronicle" advertisement), also letter. I am a long time answering you again. They give one great enlightenment, as the Bible is indeed very hard to understand properly. Would you please forward me "Fore-gleams of the Golden Age"?

2/6 enclosed by postal note.

--Yours sincerely, A.M.F.

Sydney, 22/4/32. Dear Brother,—

I write to inform you that we held our Memorial in Rawson Chambers, at our usual class rooms, on 19th inst., and had invited other friends to join in with us, but they had made other arrangements.

We had a very good number present, although several of our friends were absent and too far away to join us here, but feel confident they celebrated where the Lord would at that time find them.

The number present was twenty-six; one brother took the chair, and another brother gave the address, as the Apostle says, “to refresh our pure minds.” As usual at such gatherings, the spirit of the Lord was very near. Sometimes we sing heartily, “Oh, for a thousand tongues to sing our great Redeemer’s praise,” but on these occasions the tear duct is too full when we think of the loneliness of the Saviour when they all leave Him, and the suffering He endured.- We think of His statement, “the foxes have holes and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay His head,” all this to redeem us to God; our thoughts go to the poet’s words:

“Oh for such love let rocks and hills
Their lasting silence break,
And all harmonious human tongues
Forever sing His praise.

With- much Christian love, I remain, yours in the one hope, --(Bro.) J.H.T.

P.S.--Brother — came down for the Memorial, on the 16th, and stayed with us as our guest till yesterday.

We went over yesterday afternoon to Manly to Bro. and there Brother commemorated his consecration by immersion in the Pacific. I pray and have every confidence that he will prove faithful.

The Hidden Life with Christ.

AS we view again the verses in Heb. 10, 32-34, under consideration in this article in our previous issue, it will be clearly seen that the Apostle is writing to the same class spoken of by our Lord when He said, "Ye are the salt of the earth" ; "Ye are the light of the world," and in a most encouraging way he seems to say, "After you were illuminated, you saw the matter clearly, and endured a great fight of afflictions." This was well ; but he goes on to show in the context that some, after having demonstrated their zeal for a certain time, become cold become weary in well doing. There is a tendency to become discouraged, to think that there may have been unfaithfulness, and thus the peace of mind 'is lost. In some instances this feeling of discouragement leads to such fear and distress that the second death is apprehended. The Apostle seems to have in mind this condition. We are surrounded with imperfection of both judgment and conduct ; and those who have a proper estimate of themselves must know that they come far short of the Divine standard and of their own vow of consecration, This knowledge should tend to make all very humble, and very generous in considering others, but not to discourage us. St. Paul exhorts all such, saying, "Cast not away your confidence." Let all remember that the fact that they have received this Divine favour is an indication that their offering has had Divine acceptance. Faith, or confidence in God and in the "great and precious promises" is the very basis of all Christian endeavour. Without this faith one cannot fight a good fight. In proportion as the promises are before our minds, so we have strength and courage to run the narrow- way.

If a follower of the Lord has been thus discouraged, or has felt that his expectations have not been realised, he should not be weary in well doing. He should go to the Lord in prayer and renew his vow of consecration; he should rise from the ashes of discouragement and lift the cross with renewed zeal. He should endeavour to walk on a higher plane than ever. If he lose confidence, lose faith, he will easily be overcome by the Adversary. The very ones whom God will approve are those who walk by faith. The rewards are for those who hold the faith even unto death. We must beware of everything that tends to weaken or destroy our faith. "The Lord deals graciously and generously with us and will do for us what He has promised. Knowing this, we can have confidence in Him. The Lord wants us to have a faith that will continue in sorrow and in sunshine ; that will trust where it cannot see, that will continue under all the leadings of Divine providence. So, if any are apt to become weary in the way, let us think of all those who have gone before, like the Apostle himself, and take courage in the Lord's strength through all trials and sufferings.

In these verses the Apostle clearly shows two ways of enduring the afflictions of Christ ; 'first, to be made a gazing stock both by affliction and reproaches ; and secondly, by avowing our sympathy for the reproached ones and thus sharing their reproaches and afflictions. For if one member suffer, all the members of the Body of Christ suffer with it.-1 Cor. 12:26. So the Apostle says, "Call to remembrance the former days." There is of ten something to be gained in casting the mind backward. The things close at hand are too near to be seen in their proper light. By so doing you will realise that your afflictions and trials came principally after you had been illuminated with the light of the knowledge of God, and that they have increased as the light of Present Truth has increased with you. It is not difficult to discern the reason for this. The great Adversary is not interested in disturbing those who are "asleep in Zion," but he is ever on the alert to mislead and entangle those who are awake. The more active we become in the service of the Lord and the Truth, and, consequently, the more actively opposed to Satan and error, the more he will fight against us. And the more faithfully and vigorously we fight the good fight, as good soldiers of the Lord Jesus Christ, the more we shall have of the Master's approval now-, and the greater will be our reward in the Kingdom. But such reflections, such looking back, should bring us no sadness, no fear for He that is on our part is more than all that can be against us.-1 John 4:4; Rom. 8:31. His promises, as well as His providences, are walls of salvation and protection on every hand.

How beautifully the course of the Christian life is depicted in the tabernacle, and also the temple constructed so long ago by the children of Israel. It is clearly shown that ‘both these structures, built by Divine direction and supervision, and thus honoured with the visible, typical manifestations of the Divine presence and glory, were types of that grander tabernacle not made with hands, of which fleshly Israel could have no conception ; and of that Holy Temple which should by and by eclipse the grandeur of the earthly temple, adorned with oil the gold and precious stones.

We like to think of the tabernacle in the wilderness, as typifying the pilgrimage of each Christian through the wilderness of sin, during this antitypical Atonement Day ; and the temple, the permanent structure, in a fuller sense representing the glorified condition of the Temple-class beyond the veil. It has been a matter of surprise to some that the glory and beauty of the tabernacle—its golden walls, its golden and beautifully engraved furniture, and its wails of curious work—were so completely covered and hidden from the view of the people, even the sunlight from without being excluded—its only light being the lamp in the Holy, and the Shekinah glory in the Most Holy. But this is perfectly in keeping with what we have previously seen respecting the spiritual riches hidden in Christ. which were typified in the two compartments of the tabernacle proper. As God covered the type and hid its beauty under curtains and rough unsightly skins, so the glories and beauties of spiritual things are seen only by those who enter the consecrated condition. These enter a hidden but glorious state, which the world and all outside fail to appreciate. The “Holy,” the first compartment in the tabernacle, represents so clearly this condition of those begotten of God through the Word of Truth. These, as heavenly minded “new creatures,” though still “in the flesh,” have their real (inner) life and walk with God within the first veil of consecration, and beyond the intellectual sight of the world and the unconsecrated believers. These enjoy the inner light of the golden candlestick, they eat of the special spiritual food represented in the unleavened “bread of presence,” and offer incense at the golden altar, acceptable through Christ Jesus.

In the “Most Holy” we have represented the perfected condition of those new creatures who, faithful unto death, gain the great prize of our high calling through a share in the first resurrection. Then, beyond both veils—the fleshly mind and the fleshly body—they will possess glorious spiritual bodies as well as spiritual minds, even the Divine nature.

The Ark of the Covenant and its contents, the only furniture in the “Most Holy,” represents so beautifully this ultimate condition of the Church in glory. In full, it represented the eternal purpose of God—His foreordained arrangement of riches of grace for mankind in the Christ (Head and Body), the “hidden mystery.” It, therefore, represents Christ Jesus and His Bride, the “little flock,” to be partakers of the Divine nature, and to be imbued with the power and great glory—the prize of our high calling—the joy set before our Lord, and all the members of His Body.

The contents of the Ark also help us to realise what a privileged people we are. just as the budding of Aaron’s rod showed Jehovah’s acceptance of him and his sons as the typical priesthood shown in Numbers 17th chapter, so the rod represents the acceptableness of the “Royal Priesthood”—the Christ, Head and Body. The budding and bringing forth of almonds, shows also that the chosen priesthood during the Gospel Age will bring forth much fruit. The almond unlike most fruit, does not perish, it is lasting, and so it is with all God’s people, their fruits remain, and continue beyond the veil of death. The Golden Pot of Manna represented immortality, which is promised by the Lord to the faithful priests of this Age. In Rev. 2:17, the Lord’s promise of the hidden manna is to those who overcome and endure to the end. The two tables of the Law we would understand to represent the righteous Judge, whose laws of justice, love, mercy and power are all in harmony and endure for ever. Respecting the budded rod and bowl of manna, their omission from the Ark is noted at the dedication of the temple.

In 1 Kings 8:9 it is stated that there was nothing in the Ark save the two tables of stone ; and it seems that the omission of the other articles points out that Solomon's temple, in its fuller significance, typified the glory and grandeur of the Christ, Head and Body complete, when the fruitage will be fully developed and carried over into that immortal condition which will then be actually attained by the overcomers, and would no longer need tone typified by the budded rod and bowl of manna. The tables of the Law still in the Ark show, however, that God's righteous laws abide for ever, for with Him there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning.

The child of God, then, while still in the tabernacle condition, desires that his whole being may be bid with our great High-priest continually, and by faith looks forward through the rent "vail" into the "Most Holy," catching glimpses of the glory, honour and immortality beyond the flesh ; which hope is as an anchor to the soul, sure and steadfast, entering into that which is beyond the vail.-Heb. 6:19:10:20.

O sacred union with the Perfect Mind!
Transcendent bliss which Thou alone canst give,
How blest are they this Pearl of price who find,
And, dead to earth, have learned in Thee to live.

And thus, while dead to human hopes we lie,
Lost, and forever lost, to all but Thee,
Our happy soul, since it has learned to die,
Has found new life in Thine infinity.

With joy we learn this lesson of the cross,
And tread the toilsome way which Jesus trod;
And counting present life and all things loss,
We find in death to self, the life of God.

Our Pilgrimage.

A scorching wind, a withering blast,
A desert stern and bare,
A journey long, with scarce a song;
But still my Lord is there.

A sky of blue—no clouds in sight,
A pleasant garden fair
With birds, and flowers, and happy hours;
My Lord is also there.

Then teach us Lord in want, in pain,
In happiness, in rest
To trust in Thee, whate'er our lot,
And teach us Lord to murmur not For what Thou doest is best.
Phil. 4:11-13.

QUESTION BOX.

Question.—Would it be correct to think that the Lord would give us instructions or warnings respecting the end of the age, and the marriage of the Lamb, by dreams or visions of our own or others?

Answer.—From the Scriptural record of inspired dreams of the past, it would be folly to denounce them and to declare them unworthy of any consideration. We remember such miraculous dreams that Joseph interpreted, also Jacob's, Peter's, Paul's, etc. On the other hand, we need to guard ourselves lest dreams should be given undue importance. We are to remember that there was an appropriate necessity for dreams in the olden days which does not exist at the present time, because the Gospel Church is expected to walk by faith and not by sight.

The Apostle Peter, in his Second Epistle, 1:19, after referring to the vision in the mount (Matt. 17:1-9) says, "We have also a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shined) in a dark :place until the day dawns." Thus we realise that the path beyond us is shown by the Divine Word, and we are to cultivate the ears of our hearts that we may have the proper direction. In harmony with this the Scriptures say,

"He that hath a dream let him tell a dream, but he that hath My Word let him speak My Word." (Jer. 23:28.) Here the Lord indicates that a dream might be told if we have nothing better to tell —nothing more direct, nothing more authoritative; but that the Lord's Word, His revelation, His inspired testimony is to be put far above all dreams of our own and of others.

It would seem that there has always been some who are anxious to know more respecting the end of the Gospel Age than the Lord sees fit to reveal, and these would need to be especially on guard against being carried away by fanciful ideas or dreams. We need to have a strong faith in the Lord, that all things are being accomplished according to His will and for our good throughout the trying times of these last days; and to realise that "those things which are revealed belong unto us, but the secret things belong unto the Lord our God." Let us hold fast to our hope in Christ, let us be strong in faith and wait patiently upon the Lord.

Question.—There are many words in the Old and New Testament in italic letters ; win this, and why are there less of these in the Revise Version than the Authorised?

Answer.—All the words in the Bible printed in italics have been supplied by the translators, and are not found in the original. In translating it is sometimes necessary to supply additional words to convey the sense or proper meaning of the thought expressed by the original. These additions make a considerable difference : some helpful, emphasising the thought, but some the reverse, obscuring the real sense, and giving the thought in the mind of the translator, which was not always the correct one.

It has been claimed that the Authorised Version has over 20,000 mistranslations.

The Revised Version was prepared under greater religious liberty, and with the aid of 700 manuscripts compared with only eight (and none of these earlier than the tenth century) when the Authorised Version was prepared. This, no doubt, would help to explain why the Revised Version has fewer italicised words than the Authorised Version.

Question. Do you think the prepared questions on the “Scripture Studies” are good to use in the Bible Classes?

Answer.—While possibly some have found these questions helpful in preparing the lessons, we are inclined to think that the use of them at the meetings has been quite detrimental. One cannot but notice that in classes where the questions are used, there is really very little turning to the Bible, and so it would seem that the effect is to discourage individual thinking.

It should never be that we accept just what is served up to us by any writer or speaker without applying the test of God’s Word. Our minds must be exercised to discern good and evil, truth or error. If the questions referred to were followed with Scriptural references for the answers they would be good helps, but not otherwise. The Bible is our guide and a “Thus saith the Lord “ should be sought on every occasion, so that we may be able to give an answer to every man that asketh concerning the hope we entertain, as the Apostle Peter exhorts.

“There is a story of a noted actor and an aged minister who were at a social gathering. Someone suggested that the actor he asked to repeat the twenty-third Psalm, the request being voiced by the venerable man of God. Obliging the actor consented, and with mellifluous voice, thoroughly disciplined by the most perfect elocution, he rendered that heavenliest of nightingales singing from the various branches of the goodly tree named the Psalter. All the shades of tone, all the delicate accents and meaningful inflections were goldenly evident in the actor’s voice as he repeated. ‘The Lord is my shepherd.’ Then, after the actor had finished, someone asked the old minister if he would not also repeat the Psalm. Naturally timid under the spell of the actor’s elocution, the minister hesitated for a time, but finally consented. And lo ! as he finished, the faces of the company were not a glory with admiration, but hushed and rapt and washed with something richly akin to tears. Taking the preacher’s hand in his, the magnanimous actor said to him : “I know the Psalm ; you know the Shepherd.”—Ex. “Christian World.”

When you would take it easy—you slacken in the race;
Unmindful of that wondrous goal—immortal—by His grace:—
Then remember the good Master and all who’ve gone before,
With zeal and loving ardour, seek life forevermore.

The Second Presence of Christ.

OUR LORD'S presence will be manifested to the world by exhibitions of "power and great glory," not, however, merely to the natural sight, but to the eyes of their understanding, as they shall open to an appreciation of the great changes which the new Ruler shall effect. His presence and righteous authority will be recognised in both the punishments and the blessings that will flow to mankind from His reign.

In that Day, evil powers are to be overthrown and righteousness, established by a gradual process, shall speedily work out a corresponding retribution to evildoers and blessings to them that do good—

"Tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doeth evil, . . . but glory, honour and peace to every man that worketh good",—in that day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God, who will render to every man according to his deeds (Rom.

2:9, 5, 6). And, since there is so much that is wrong now, the retribution will be very severe at first, making a "time of trouble such as was not since there was a nation." Thus, in vengeance and trouble, and wrath upon the nations, will the Lord reveal to the world the fact of the change of dispensation, and the change of rulers. And thus, "when the judgments of the Lord are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness" (Isa. 26:5-11) .

Our King will thus reveal Himself gradually—some will discern the new Ruler sooner than others, but ultimately "every eye shall see (discern)' Him" (Rev. 1:7). But "He cometh with clouds," and while the clouds of trouble are heavy and dark, when the mountains (kingdoms of this world) are trembling and falling, and the earth (organised society) is being shaken, disintegrated, melted, some will begin to realise that the great day of Jehovah has come ; that the foretold day of trouble and wrath upon the nations is beginning, and that Jehovah's Anointed is taking to Himself His great power and beginning His work of laying justice to the line and righteousness to the plummet (Isa. 28:17). And He must reign until He shall have put down all authorities and laws on earth, contrary to those which control in heaven.

While the Lord's presence will be revealed to the world by means of the judgments of the great time of trouble, yet a different method is used to make known to His footstep followers the fact that that important event has taken place. Our Lord repeatedly urged upon His followers the necessity for earnest watchfulness respecting His second advent.

His words are, "Watch, therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come." And when His disciples inquired what would be the sign of His presence and the end of the Age, the Lord gave them certain signs or indications which would enable us to know of the fact of His presence after it had occurred. In our Authorised Version the Greek word "Parousia" is incorrectly rendered "coming." In the Emphatic Diaglott and in Prof. Young's translation it is rendered "presence," and in the marginal reading of the Revised Version "presence" is acknowledged to be the true definition of the word. The Greek word "parousia" invariably signifies personal presence, as having come, having arrived, and it should never be understood as signifying to be on the way, as the English word "coming" is generally used.

In the 24th chapter of Matthew's Gospel we have what has been termed our Lord's great prophecy, and when we remember that it was given in answer to the question "What shall be the sign of Thy presence and of the end of the Age?" it assists us to identify the divinely provided signs. Coming down to verse 27 in this chapter, our Lord furnished us a most beautiful illustration of the manner in which His presence will be revealed. His words are, "As the bright- shining emerges from the east, and illuminates even unto the west, so will be the presence of the Son of Man." That most translations of this verse are faulty in using the word lightning, where sunlight is meant, is evident, for lightning flashes do not come out of the east and shine unto the west.

They just as frequently come from other quarters, and rarely, if ever, flash clear across the heavens. The Lord's illustration, and the only one which will comport with His words, is the sun's brightness. which: does invariably- emerge from the east and shine even unto the west. The Greek word "Astrape," here used, is thus shown to be improperly translated in this text, and also in the account of the same words by Luke (Ch. 17:24). Another instance of the use of the word "Astrape" by our Lord is found in Luke 11:36, where it applies to the brightness of a candle, and in the common version is rendered "bright-shining"—"As the bright-shining of a candle cloth give thee light." Incorrect ideas of the manner of our Lord's coming and revealing, firmly fixed in the minds of the translators, led them into this error of translating "astrape" by the word "lightning." They supposed that He would be revealed suddenly, like a flash of lightning, and not gradually, like the dawning sunlight. But how beautiful is the figure of sunrise, as illustrating the gradual dawning of truth and blessing in the day of His presence. The Lord associates the over-comers with Himself in this figure, saying, "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." And the Prophet, using the same figure, says, "The sun of righteousness shall arise with healing in his beams." The dawning is gradual, but finally the full, clear brightness shall thoroughly banish the darkness of evil, ignorance, superstition and sin.

In Matt. 24:30 our Lord refers again to the sign of His presence among His professing people. "Then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven." The sign or proof of His "parousia" will be given in heaven. Not in the heaven of the Father's presence, and before the holy angels, but in the symbolic heaven, the ecclesiastical heaven—the professedly spiritual class—that the sign or evidence of our Lord's presence will first be apparent. Some will "see" the fulfilment of the prophetic declarations respecting this day of the second presence in the marvellous unfolding of the divine plan of the ages, and will recognise it as one of the signs of His presence (Luke 12:37). The judgment of Babylon, Christendom, social and ecclesiastical, is another sign that the Judge has come, and is reckoning first of all with those to whom, as stewards, He committed His goods (Matt. 25:19; Luke 19:15). Judgment must begin with the house of God. It is to Laodicea, the last or seventh period of the church's history, that the announcement is made, "because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of My mouth."

The gathering together of God's elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other, referred to in verse 31 is also a sign of our Lord's presence. It is a sign in the heavens—amongst the professedly spiritual class. Have we not all seen that during the past sixty years particularly there has been a work of separation going on amongst the Lord's people. And have we not heard and responded to the call, "Come out of her, My people, that ye be not partakers of her sins and receive not of her plagues.” The harvest work in progress is probably one of the clearest proofs of our Lord’s presence. The parable of the wheat and tares illustrates the special work which marks the closing period of the Gospel Age. We are all familiar with the parable which pictures the man who sowed good seed in his field, and how later his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat. When the servants of the householder noticed the growth of the tares they became alarmed and said to their lord, “Wilt thou -that we go and gather them up?” But the lord says. lest while ye gather up the tares ye root up also ...e wheat with them. Let both grow together until the harvest, and in the time of harvest I will say to the reapers, ‘Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them, but gather the wheat into my barn.’ “ In explaining this parable our Lord said, “The harvest is the end of the age.” The tares, or imitation Christians, are to be gathered in bundles for the burning, while the wheat, which represents God’s true people, the “little flock” of overcomers, is to be gathered into the barn of safety. Just as our Lord was present during the Harvest of the Jewish age in the gathering of the wheat from the chaff of that nation, so also He is present during the Harvest period of the Gospel Age gathering the wheat from the tares. His presence as chief Reaper during this Harvest period is shown in Rev. 14:14. 16, “And I looked, and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like unto the Son of Man, having on His head a golden crown and in His hand a sharp sickle.” And he that sat upon the cloud thrust in His sickle on the earth ; and the earth was reaped.” The parable of the fig-tree putting forth its leaves is another sign. In Luke 13:6-9 we have another parable of a fig-tree which was fruitless and the owner threatened to cut it down, but afterwards spared it in order to give it a further opportunity to bear fruit. It would seem to illustrate the unfruitful condition of the Jewish nation and the Lord’s long-suffering with that people. Also in Matt. 21:19 there is the incident of the unfruitful fig-tree which Jesus cursed and immediately it withered away. Both these references seem. to point to the Jewish nation as represented by the fig-tree. So in verse 32 of the 24th of Matthew we believe our Lord is referring to the Jewish nation under the figure of the fig-tree. The fig-tree putting forth its leaves would, we believe, illustrate the revival of the Jewish national hopes. God had promised that He would restore them again to their own land and establish them, there, and as the time of the Gentile dominion over Israel draws to a close we can see the indications of God’s returning favour to His people. The fact that we can see these indications is proof that we are living in the time of the Lord’s presence. According to the Diaglott rendering, Matt. 24:33 reads, “Thus also when you shall see all these things know that He is nigh at the doors.” Our Lord’s words in verse 34 indicate that the generation which would be living at the time when these signs could be recognised would not pass away until all be fulfilled.

In verses 37-39 our Lord refers again to the disciples’ question regarding His presence. He says, “As the days of ,Noah, so shall also the “parousia” (presence) of the Son of Man be.” The comparison we notice is not between the coming of _Noah and the coming of our Lord, nor between the coming of the flood and the coming of our Lord. The coming of Noah is not referred to at all; neither is the coming of our Lord referred to; for, as we have seen, “parousia” does not mean coming, but “presence.” The contrast, then, is between the time of the presence of Noah among the people “before the flood,” and the time of the “presence” of Christ in the world, at His second advent, ‘before the fire of trouble which marks the full end of the present dispensation.

And though the people were wicked in Noah’s day, before the flood, and will be wicked in the time of our Lord’s presence, before the hot fire of trouble comes upon them, yet this is not the point of comparison or likeness to which our Lord refers; for wickedness has abounded in every age. The point of comparison is stated clearly, and is readily seen if we read the passage carefully. The people, except the members of Noah’s family, were ignorant of the coming flood and unbelieving as to the testimony of Noah and his family, and hence they “knew not” ; and this is the point of comparison. So shall also the “presence” of the Son of man be. None but those of the family of God will believe here; others will “know not,” until society, as at present organised, ‘begins to melt with the fervent heat of the great time of trouble now impending. This is illustrated by the words, “As in the days that were before the flood, they were eating, drinking and marrying (Luke 17:28 adds, “Planting and building”) until the day Noah entered into the ark, and knew not . . . so shall also the “parousia” (the, presence) of the Son of man be.” In the time of the presence of the Son of man, therefore, the world will go on with its eating, drinking, planting, building and marrying—not mentioned as sinful doings, but as indicative of their ignorance of His presence, and of the trouble that will prevail in the world. This, then, is our Lord’s answer to the question of the disciples : What shall be the sign (or indication) of Thy presence and of the end of the Age? It is as though the Lord said : There will be no sign for the worldly masses they will not know of My presence and the new dispensational changes. Only a few will know, and they will be taught of God before there is any sign which the worldly could discern.

The closing verses, from verse 42 on, are full of meaning. In verse 37 our Lord had shown that the world would not know of the “parousia” of the Son of man; and now He cautions His professed disciples that, unless on their guard, they will be similarly in darkness relative to His parousia. His words are, “Watch, therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord cometh.” If one expected a thief to come at a definite time, he would stay awake so as not to be taken unawares; so the Lord urges upon us to be ever awake, always ready, and watching for the first evidence of His presence.

“Who, then, is a faithful and wise servant, whom his Lord hath made ruler over His household, to give them meat in due season? Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord when He cometh shall find so doing. Verily I say unto you, that he shall make him ruler over all His goods” all the storehouse of precious truth shall be opened to such faithful servants, to supply and feed the household of faith.

But if the servant’s heart is not right, he will say: My Master tarries (He has not arrived) and may smite his fellow-servants (who are declaring that the Lord has arrived). Such may eat and drink with the intemperate (become intoxicated with the spirit of the world), but the Master of that servant will come (will have arrived) in a day not expected, and in an hour in which that servant is not aware, and will cut him off and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites.

Thus we see that the period of the Lord’s presence among His people during the Harvest-time of the Age is a time of separating His faithful people and gathering them together unto Himself in harmony with the Prophet’s statement : “Gather my saints together unto Me, those that have made a covenant with Me by sacrifice.”

In the Lord’s sight it is evidently an important matter that His church—His prospective Bride—should continue to maintain an attitude of watchfulness. If we fail to watch we will not discern His presence, and even after being made acquainted with the fact of His presence we must still keep on the alert. In this connection how appropriate are the Master’s words in Luke 21:34-36: “Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares. For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth. Watch ye, therefore, and pray always that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass and to stand before the Son of man.”

It would seem that the parable of the virgins was given to encourage us to watchfulness. While the whole Church from Pentecost until the present day has had occasion to observe and be’ profited by the lesson along this line, yet it seems clear that this parable has a special application to the times we are now living in—the days of the Lord’s presence. “Then (at that time—the time when the Lord is present among His people) shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins.” The -ten virgins would represent collectively the Lord’s true people seeking to know and do His will. However, there is a difference in these virgins, as shown by the fact that five were wise and five foolish. All had lamps which would represent the Word of God, and their minds were stirred up in expectation of the second coming of Christ. It would seem that the going forth of the virgins to meet the bridegroom very fittingly represents the Second Advent movement which had its ‘beginning in the early part of the nineteenth century. The Lord’s people at that time, represented by the virgins of the parable, were right in looking for the Lord to come again, 'but having an imperfect understanding of the object and manner of His return, and expecting Him to come in human form, they were disappointed when their expectations were not realised. It seemed as though the Bride- groom had tarried, and the virgins slumbered and slept. A little later, however, the cry is made, "Behold the Bridegroom" the word "cometh)" is not retained in the old -MS S. The announcement is : "Behold the Bridegroom." What is it that is represented by the midnight cry of the parable? We believe it can refer to nothing else than the publication of the truths concerning our Lord's presence and the Harvest work in progress, as presented by Bro. Russell in Vols. 2 and 3 of his "Scripture Studies." These valuable helps have been the means of calling the attention of the Lord's people to the divinely- provided signs which indicate that we are now living in the days of the Son of man—the days of His presence. What an effect this knowledge has had upon the virgin class. How they all stir themselves and trim their lamps, and go forth to meet the Bridegroom in glad expectancy. And here we find that the wise virgins have a decided advantage in having a plentiful supply of oil in their vessels. The oil seems fittingly to represent the holy Spirit of Christ—the spirit of our consecration. The foolish virgins are lacking in that respect, and so while they go away to secure the needed oil, the wise ones enter, in to the Bridegroom's presence and. the door of opportunity is closed. It would surely be a disappointment to the foolish ones to find that all opportunity to gain the prize of our heavenly calling had passed. The Lord's reply to their entreaty to open the door again is, "I know you not." They had not made themselves acquainted with the Lord sufficiently, they had not partaken fully enough of His spirit ; they could not, therefore, be members of His Bride—His joint-heirs in the Father's Kingdom. The most they could receive would be to be made members of the great company class by coming up through great tribulation to a lower place as servants 'before His throne. In verse 13 the Lord again reminds us of the need for watchfulness. His words are: "Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh."

In His message to the church of Philadelphia our Lord's words (Rev. 3:11) indicate that He would soon be present. "Behold, I come quickly; hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown" ; but to Laodicea, the period in the church's history which follows the Philadelphian, and the period in which we are now living, His message is (verse 20), "Behold, I stand at the door and knock (as one present) ; if any man hear My voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with Me." (Concluded.)

THE HYSSOP.

Not to the cedar on the mountain height,
But to the hyssop springing from the wall;
Not to a monarch tree broad-branched and tall,
But to a lowly herb, fragile and slight,
Is faith compared. Yet hyssop on that night
When death o'er Egypt settled like a pall,
Shone as the sceptre of the Lord of all,
Outstretched to guard His own with saving might.
Lord, with that sacred hyssop which could give
A moment's solace to Thy mortal woe,
Purge me from all my sin, and bid me live,
And guard and comfort me where'er I go ;
I seek not high things like the cedar tree,
The blood-stained hyssop is enough for me.

Correspondence.

New South Wales, 15/5/32. Dear Brother,

Again I write to thank you for the help I receive through the little "P.P.," and it is a great joy to read the correspondence therein, and to find that others are feasting on the great truths we hold so clear; and which are made plain in your little paper. The insertion of the Convention addresses has enabled the isolated ones to join in spirit though absent in body, and to feel we are each one of that great Body, being built up together, and inspires one to keep closer to the Giver of every good gift, and to "cast not away the confidence," but to continue in the old paths—unto the end. I have not been able to get to the Sydney class for a long time, owing to my wife's health, and so the printed page is indeed a welcome guest. I am enclosing for the tract fund, and pray that God will bless you and all the clear ones who are colabouring with you. Please remember me in your prayers.

Your Brother in Christ,
A.P.

Queensland.
Dear Brother in Christian Service.

As though God directed, I received by post to-day a supply of Biblical literature, for which I thank you very much. Being a student and fellow-worker for the furtherance of the Kingdom of God on earth, I have, on receiving much help from your papers become very interested in your Institute. I would like you to forward me a supply of your free Tracts and other literature such as "Our Lord's Return: the Object and Manner," "Perplexed Humanity's Only Hope," "Do the Dead Know Anything: Where are They?" "God's Great Plan of Salvation and Restoration," "The Bible Teaching on Hell and Spiritism," and "Our Lord's Parables," as advertised in "The Voice." I am in a position to hand such literature on if you care to forward such.

I found the pages of the "Peoples Paper" and "The Voice" very spiritual and helpful; the sunshine of the Holy Spirit shines radiantly through and through their pages and bring their readers face to face with Jesus of Nazareth, "Whom to know is life eternal."

I remain,
Your fellow worker in Christ, A.B.G.

New South Wales,
May 12th. To the Berean Biblical Institute,

Would you kindly post to me the two following papers, and if the free copies are not available, name the price? "Do the Dead Know Anything?" "The Bible Teaching on Hell and Spiritism." I have read the pamphlet called "The Voice," and found it most interesting and comforting.. Enclosed are stamps for postage.

Yours truly,
Mrs. T. L.

ROLLING AWAY THE STONES.

O Saviour Christ, who by Thy word of power
Didst call beloved Lazarus from the tomb,
And turn'dst, for those who mourned, in that glad hour
To glorious day the night of sorrow's gloom,

The power to break Death's bonds was Thine alone,
Yet aid Thou sought'st—Roll ye away the stone.'
So still Thy power dead souls to life (lost call,
No other voice than Thine the word can speak,

But that the word of life may come to all,
The service of Thine own Thou still dost seek;
Our fellowship in toil Thou still (lost ask,
To roll away the stones is our blest task.”

ANOTHER YEAR

WITH the close of April, another year's work of the Berean Biblical Institute has been covered, and the opportunity is taken at this time to present the Tract Fund Account and to include a brief review of the work of the twelve months, 1931-32, to the above mentioned time. In relating the certain features, it is with the feeling that all the dear friends, both old and new, are fully interested in what has been our privilege to undertake, together with their good assistance and encouragement rendered in so many ways throughout the past year.

At the outset we desire to express that much blessing has been realised in connection with the service, and trust that the same has been the experience of each one associated with us, or others, in the cause of truth; and so- we render grateful thanks to our loving heavenly Father for all His goodness and favour at all times.

The printing of quantities of free literature suitable for distribution to the public- who may be feeling after the Lord and His message of hope and salvation; the publishing of the monthly "People's Paper"; and providing such additional Bible Helps as may be profitable and encouraging to the brethren enjoying the light of present truth are still the main features of the efforts to serve the Lord's cause from the Institute in Melbourne.

Correspondence received from our readers from time to time to the effect that the "People's Paper" is appreciated with its message of truth, and is found to be of assistance in their Christian pathway, has been encouraging, and is accepted as an indication of the Lord's will for its publication to continue, though the subscriptions fall far short of covering its cost. It was hoped that the subscription list may have increased, but, while a number of new readers have subscribed in recent times, others have discontinued, some being unable to provide the cost are supplied free, so the subscriptions received remain much the same. The action of those friends, who, in addition to forwarding their own subscriptions and assisting the Tract Fund, have enclosed amounts to go towards supplying those unable to subscribe, is very much appreciated, and we are hoping to be able to continue sending the "Paper" to all who desire it. Will. all the brethren who have assisted with the "People's Paper" accept sincere thanks-, and kindly realise that we desire and are looking forward to their co-operation, and that of all others who may be desirous of helping even more during the days ahead, so that the truth may be proclaimed to the glory of God.

The provision of free literature from the Tract Fund has again been sufficient to meet fully all the calls made upon it, and though the printing and providing gratis of tracts is costly, yet we do not like to depart from the principle of supplying them free so that all who desire may share in the work, but of course cannot go beyond the means provided. It is recommended that all literature be used very wisely so that the best possible good may be attained.

The results from the tracts, while small in comparison with the quantity distributed, are really satisfactory and encouraging, especially when used in response to enquiries from the coupons in the newspapers. This method of witnessing is found to be much more effective and not so costly as that of distributing large quantities of tracts broadcast. Some of our brethren in Tasmania and South Australia have co-operated in this way during the past year by inserting the coupons for free literature in suitable newspapers, with the result that a nice number have been led to an appreciation of the truth after reading the papers and books, and in one district a class has been formed for study. Several of the interested have since expressed how thankful they are for having answered the coupon, and so we rejoice with them in this evidence of the Lord's leadings and favours bestowed. Maybe some of our friends in other parts may like to co-operate in their own districts by the same method, and we shall be pleased to hear from all who desire to do so,

Other avenues of assisting are always open, such as the colporteur work, or loaning of the studies, and a good supply of tracts is on hand for all willing workers. While always recognising that our main efforts must be towards our own sanctification and that of our brethren in Christ, what could be more pleasing^ to our heavenly Father in harmony with this, than our whole-hearted desire to proclaim at every opportunity the “glad tidings of great joy,” of which the poor world is so much in need at the present time; not with the object of merely proclaiming the restitution of all things in due time, but to find those who may yet be led to see the wondrous invitation of the Lord to follow in His steps by a willing and loving sacrifice at this present time, and henceforth to attain to the heavenly inheritance by faithfulness unto death.

From the account shown below it will be seen that a deficit of £9/6/6 has been incurred in the work during the last twelve months, but we are trusting that this may be made up this coming year, realising that the Lord’s provision through His people shall be for the carrying on of the work that may yet be our privilege to engage in, together with all those who delight in serving the Lord and His cause. More could be attained, maybe, if the present work could be extended, but we are doing our best with the means provided, realising that the contributions for the work represent the willing sacrifices and self-denials of the brethren generally.

It is always a pleasure to hear from all dear friends regularly, and we trust that, notwithstanding the difficult times we are living in, this year ahead may be one of really good progress on the part of all in the narrow way, by the Lord’s grace. May all the Lord’s people fully appreciate the wondrous hope of our high calling, and run with patience the race set before us, looking unto Jesus. We desire that the prayers of the brethren may ascend to the Lord on our account, that all may be done to the glory of His name.

Investigation of Spiritualism.

SPIRITUALISM TESTED BY A COMMITTEE APPOINTED BY THE "SUNDAY SUN SYDNEY.

THE committee consisted of five members—Dr. A. H. Martin, Mr. C. P. Breckenridge, Mr. Robert Sproule, 1\11..

C., Mr. E. T. Fisk, eminent radio expert, and Dr. E. Haslett Frazer, specialist in nervous disorders.

An open invitation was given to all interested to present any evidences. Several mediums and psychics responded, and in each case one or more seances were held. The purpose was to secure evidence, if possible, in support of the claims made respecting communication with persons who have died.

The first three of the committee concurred in the following report, while the other two, who had not been able to attend all the seances, agreed that no proofs had been demonstrated :- TEST No.1 ;FIRST FAILURE.

"The first medium who sat with the committee was Mrs. A. Speaking 'under control,' or in a light trance, Mrs. A. said, 'There is wonderful power in this room. You can get a materialisation. You can get spirit photographs as long as you have proper conditions. You can lift that table.'

"Under the mediumship of Mrs. A. none of these things happened.

"The art known as psychometry was tested with Mrs. A., who claimed that with the aid of departed spirits she could usually read the contents of a sealed letter. This was tried, but—without success.

"No 'spirit' which manifested through this medium could be identified by any member of the committee, although the Christian names of no fewer than 18 'spirits' were mentioned. One name was known to a member of the committee as that of a deceased friend, but the 'spirit's' replies to questions did not lead to any identity being established.

"Mrs. B., the second medium who appeared before the committee, spoke in a condition of 'deep trance.' Nothing said under her mediumship gave evidence that the communications emanated from the spirits of deceased persons, and it appeared to the committee that the medium's condition might have been due to a state of self-hypnotism.

"Inquiries of this medium showed that she became interested in spiritualism after a personal bereavement, which, with the attendant circumstances, must have involved a severe mental shock. In such a condition it would be easy for her to develop trance conditions quite independent of spirit control.

"In the case of Miss C.. the committee observed nothing to make them believe that this medium was preaching under the control of Rev. John Ferguson, the late minister of St. Stephen's Presbyterian Church, nor indeed that she was under spirit control at all.

"The 'spirit' showed no knowledge of the life history of Rev. John Ferguson. The latter's son, Rev. E. A. Ferguson, who was present at the seance, afterwards pointed out characteristics of the speech of Miss C. under control materially differing from those of the late Rev. John Ferguson.

"This medium was also allegedly controlled by a Chinese and a Japanese spirit, but again the committee was not satisfied that such was the case.

“Miss C., in reply to the committee’s inquiries, stated that as a child she had had opportunity of hearing Chinese speech, and the vision which she described in trance corresponded with her childish memories.

“She stated also that as a little girl she had a fondness for impersonating the part of a Japanese girl in a play. This fact, the committee thinks, would be sufficient to account for what she believed to be a Japanese spirit controlling her when probably she was only in a state of auto-hypnosis.

CEMETERY EXPERIENCE.

“As regards the medium D., who attempted to demonstrate clairvoyance and mind reading, the committee saw nothing which they considered worthy of serious consideration.

“The evening spent in a cemetery yielded no experience which the committee could regard as evidence of the possibility of spirit communication. While Mrs. E., who escorted the committee, declared that spirits were visible, the committee could see nothing satisfying them that such was the case.

“Perhaps the most interesting phase of the inquiry was the demonstration of ‘spirits speaking with direct voice’ per medium of Mrs. F. at the seance of a suburban society. The messages received appeared satisfactory to the members of the club, but those messages directed to members of the committee showed no real knowledge of the committee’s personality, or of their deceased relatives.

“The seance was held in complete darkness, and as the sitters did not hold hands it would have been quite possible for any person to leave his seat and speak through one of the trumpets.

“The committee later suggested to this club that another seance be held under test conditions, and that instead of darkness a dim red light’ might be used, red being said to be favourable to spirit phenomena ; or that the trumpets be covered with soot so that they could not be touched without fingerprints being left.

“This proposal was considered by the club and the committee was informed that the club would have nothing to do with such a test. In the circumstances, the committee states that the voices heard cannot be said to be those of disembodied spirits.

“NOT PROVED.”

“The committee is of opinion that the demonstrations given have failed to supply any positive evidence of communication with deceased persons. Those who believe in spirit communications have been publicly invited to ‘bring ‘before the committee evidence in support of their faith.

“Such evidence as was adduced the committee considered in a fair-minded and open spirit, every facility being given to those concerned to produce their phenomena.

“The claim that the spirits of deceased human beings do communicate with the living may or may not be true, but the committee considers that it has not been proved by the evidence brought forward in this inquiry.

“The committee is of opinion that indiscriminate incursions into this field of investigation constitute a danger to emotional persons, who are likely to find that such inquiries result in mental impairment or a distorted mental outlook.”

MR. SPROULE'S IDEAS.

Mr. Sproule added to the report the following personal observation :-

“As an observer, confining myself to the presentations, I say that no conclusion could be drawn that personality survives the destruction of the body.

“I emphasise the fact that my consideration was confined to the presentations before the committee, and, on these,

I find that not only could no conclusion be drawn that personality persists after the destruction of the body, but that one could not say there was even a reasoned probability of it. In other words, no inference could be drawn from the presentations that there is such a thing as discordant intelligence.”

Dr. Frazer added :—”In all the ‘mental’ phenomena which I have seen during this investigation there was not one which. could not ‘be entirely and satisfactorily explained in the light of modern psychology.

“At no stage of this investigation did I see or hear anything—physical or mental—,which I could accept as proof of human survival or communication.

“I agree with the committee in its note as to the inadvisability of inexpert incursions into the realms of the Occult.

“I know that it has a peculiar fascination for discontented souls, but it is the most dangerous of all ‘penchants.’ Drug-addiction is child’s play by comparison.

“It must be realised that the vast majority of humanity is ignorant, feebly developed, the slave of its latent emotions and existing in a state of nervous unbalance and potential disruption. Emotional sanity is the very rarest of all human achievements.

“The unconscious anxiety about death, the refusal of the unconscious to believe in its ultimate disintegration, and the stupid and illogical exhortations of the prevailing religious systems, all tend to give the question of immortality an enhanced interest.

“None the less there is Truth somewhere hidden in all these complexities. ‘It cannot be bought. As ever, it is extraordinarily difficult and hazardous of attainment.”

On the other hand, there is Sir ‘Oliver Lodge, who has said, “It was a phenomenon that must be recognised that a person could leave his body to be manipulated by another intelligence.”

It seems strange that inquiry should be made respecting this subject without reference to the Bible. It is there alone that we find the solution. The Scriptures do not ignore spiritualistic manifestations, but supply records of them and also the explanation. There is the witch of Endor, also the intimation that such witches existed when the Law of Moses was written, for we read in Dent. 18:10, 11: “There shall not be found among you anyone that maketh his son or his daughter to pass through the fire, or that, useth, divination, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch, or a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard, or a necromancer ; for all that do these things are an abomination unto the Lord.” Isaiah 8:19 also warns against the same things.

The witch at Endor saw what Saul believed was Samuel, but Samuel was dead, and “the dead know not anything.” “There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave.”—Eccles. 9:5, 10; Psa. 6:5 ; 146:4, etc. The only hope of future life and consciousness is in the resurrection-1 Uor. 15:17-22. Even had it been possible to awaken Samuel, he was too loyal to God to obey a witch acting in defiance of the Divine Law.

If we turn to Jude 6 and 2 Pet. 2:4, we may see who these intelligences are that so deceive humanity, not only in the seances of spiritism ‘but in all the false religions of the world, in the many delusions and errors in doctrine as well as through the oracles of the mythological religions.

These angels ‘began their mischievous work among mankind prior to the flood and are referred to in Gen. 6 as the sons of God who fell into sin. To such an extent had they contaminated the human race that evidently Noah and his family were the only ones left of pure Adamic stock. (Gen. 6:9.) . In order that the human race should ‘be preserved as of pure Adamic stock, all others were destroyed in the deluge.

These “wicked spirits” were then restrained in “chains of darkness,” so that they could no longer materialise as formerly. They can now only operate through mediums, and that in darkness. However, where there is an enfeebled mind or a person willing to yield himself or herself (it is more generally through women), they can operate and deceive the unwary into believing that they ere in communication with their departed friends. The communications are of no help to anyone, and are often so foolish and fickle that even spiritualists acknowledge that they are not all good spirits with which they come in contact.

In the days of our Lord they possessed those who were of weak mind, etc., and they recognised Jesus of Nazareth as the Son of God, crying out, “What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God? Art Thou come hither to torment us before the time?” (Matt. 8:29.) No doubt spiritualists are sincere, but they are nevertheless deceived into this abominable practice which so often leads into insanity.

The basis of Spiritualism, Theosophy and Christian Science is the Satanic lie spoken to our first parents: “Thou shalt not surely die.” It seems so easy to tempt man along that line. The thought of death is abominable, and so any suggestion as to escaping cessation of being attracts. So the thought of inherent immortality was propagated in the heathen religions ever since the days of Nimrod and became incorporated in church teachings from Pagan Rome. How plainly the Bible declares to the contrary, “Thou shalt surely die.” “The soul that sinneth it shall die.” “The dead know not anything.” “There is no knowledge, nor wisdom, nor device in the grave,” etc. Then, again. is not immortality held out as the hope of the overcomers in the Church of Christ? Why should we be exhorted to so run as to obtain “glory, honour and immortality” if we inherently possessed a never dying soul?

Spiritualism is really demonism and can bring no real good to anyone. It is an example of how far one can be led astray into superstition and error if we neglect the guidance of the Divine Word.

True Love to One's Neighbour.

Luke 10:25-37.

"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart. and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind. and thy neighbour as thyself ."— Luke 1(1:27.

THE insincerity and evil disposition toward Jesus on the part of the Jewish teachers (doctors of the law, scribes and Pharisees) was very manifest in the question, they publicly propounded to Him, for the evident purpose of trapping Him in His words, and thus hindering His influence among the people. It was for this purpose that they mingled with the multitudes who wits

His miracles and attended His preaching. But Jess-more than a match for, their cunning craftiness; and we Annie the adroitness with which He ever thwarted their purposes.

The question on this occasion was, "Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?" The questioner probably thought He would say. "Von must believe that I am the Son of (hod, the promised Messiah," Then they would have said, "He repudiates the law. The law says that the man that doeth the things contained therein shall live by them." This, to the people, would have seemed a strong argument against Jesus, before they had become sufficiently acquainted with Him and His teachings. While such a claim on the part of Jesus would have been the truth, the people were not yet prepared to understand and receive it. They needed continued and repeated evidences, nut assertions, to convince them; and the Lord modestly and wisely gave them what they needed. and with great tact and skill avoided the interference with His purpose on. the part of His enemies.

- - Jesus' answer referred the questioner to the law, saying, "What is written in the law : how readeest thou?" They gave the answer from the Law—Thou shalt love the Lord with all thy heart, etc., and thy neighbour as thyself—and Jesus said they had answered correctly, and that if they would do that they should have eternal life.

The answer, however, was not satisfactory to anyone, not even to the questioner, who was doubtless anxious to make a show of his zeal for the law ; but the thoughts now revolving in every mind must have been the disconsolate remembrance of the fact that though thousands had endeavoured to merit life through the keeping of the law, not one had ever yet succeeded in retaining life 'beyond the usual allotment. And so they understood the Lord's words to imply that if they could keep the law perfectly, then they should receive the; life; but that "if" was insurmountable: they could not keep it, and there seemed to be no hope of life unless this great Teacher might have something else to suggest.

Even the questioner betrayed some anxiety in the matter. as though he felt that his own conduct toward God and his fellow-men might not stand the scrutiny of the law, even as judged by those about him. Possibly some were present who, by their incredulous faces, indicated that they did not think this man always acted as if he loved his neighbour as himself, and God supremely. So, to justify himself ill the estimation of such, this doctor of the law endeavoured to give the impression that the word "neighbour" had some restricted meaning which permitted the exercise of a good deal of selfishness.

The illustration which followed forced from the questioner himself the admission of the truth that every man is neighbour to every other man ; that our common humanity is the neighbourly-bond, and that only those who recognise the bond of human brotherhood, and act accordingly, are worthy of the name "neighbour." To ignore the claims of human brotherhood is meanly, selfish and inhuman, yet that was just what the proud, boastful, hypocritical teachers of that day were doing (Matt. 23:14, they were scrupulously tithing their mint and anise cummin, and omitting the weightier matters of the law—judgment, mercy and faith.

The truth thus wisely put, and by logical argument forced home to the hearts of all, exposed the hypocrisy of the caviling questioner, and drew from himself the admission of the truth. "Then, said Jesus unto him, Go, and do thou likewise." Thus the evil designs of the unbeliever were frustrated and the truth was triumphant.

ATTRACTIVE HOLINESS.

I have a good deal of sympathy with that prayer so often quoted of the little child: "O Lord, make the bad people good, and the good people nice!" That is the proof of our Christianity. We do not always stop to think that holiness is one of the most attractive traits a person can possibly have, and that God's command to be holy, even as He is holy, is a command to show forth His own super-natural loving-kindness continually.

Walk as Children of Light.

Eph. 5:6-21.

THE Epistle to the Ephesians is one of the grandest books in the Bible. Deeply spiritual, it appeals thoroughly only to the consecrated. Its central thought is the New Creation; that- the justified, by a consecration of their justified humanity, when accepted of the Lord, are begotten of the Holy Spirit to be New Creatures in Christ.

For such, old things have passed away—earthly hopes, earthly aims and ambitions; their earthly rights have been surrendered, and instead of them, heavenly prospects have been received by faith and are waited for, with the expectation that they will be received in the first resurrection.

As children of light we are no longer to walk in darkness as others—in sin, in rioting, in drunkenness, in debauchery of various kinds ; the Christian course is the very reverse of this, for he has turned his back on all these experiences and is walking in the light of the Lamp, toward the things that are perfect, toward the things set before him in the Divine Word and plan.

The first part of the Book of Ephesians relates to the theory, the philosophy of the change from human to spiritual, from earthly nature to membership in the new creation; the -last chapters of the book point out to us the effect of this change, not only upon the sentiments of the new creature, the new will, but also the effect of the change upon the mortal body, which the new mind is supposed thereafter to hold in check, to govern, to control with more and more decision and ability as it grows stronger in the Lord and in the power of His might. The new creature is to keep the old creature, the body, under ; to keep it dead. Our lesson relates particularly to this phase of the subject—the new creature's battle and victory and its preservation, which is dependent upon the maintenance of its rule over the flesh.

The words of verse 6, "Let no man deceive you with vain words, for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience," should not be understood to signify that God's wrath comes because of vain words. The things which bring the wrath are mentioned in the preceding verses (3-5), fornication, uncleanness, covetousness, filthiness, foolish talking, ribaldry ; for, as the Apostle explains, those in whom these qualities are dominant, or those in whom these qualities are sympathised with, can have no inheritance in the Kingdom of Christ and of God. Let no man deceive you with vain words on this subject, telling you that such things are natural, proper, excusable. They have indeed become second nature to many of the fallen race, but if any who have become new creatures in Christ love the unclean things, sympathise with them, they are far from the condition which is becoming to saints. Such a mental attitude on their part would imply that they had either never been begotten of the spirit of holiness or else they were returning, like a sow that was washed, to wallow in the mire. These things are characteristic of the children of disobedience, but not characteristic of the children of obedience. The Apostle says elsewhere, "Such were some of you, but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the spirit of our God." (1 Cor. 6:11.) In our lesson he exhorts, "Be ye not, therefore, partakers with them," with the children of disobedience, "for ye were once in darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord."

WALK AS CHILDREN OF LIGHT.

He proceeds to show how the children of light should walk, saying :

The fruit of the spirit, wherever it is found, is goodness and righteousness and truth—therefore, the Holy Spirit never prompts to badness, unrighteousness, untruthfulness. And whoever has received the Holy Spirit, whoever has been begotten of the Lord as His child, will want to ascertain thoroughly, to prove, to demonstrate, what is acceptable unto the Lord; what the Lord will be pleased with, not merely what would not merit severe punishment from the Lord, not merely what the Lord would wink at and not take serious offence from, but far beyond. all this! Whoever properly has the spirit of a son must desire to know the Father's will and delight to do it, and that will is in all purity, goodness, righteousness, truth, honesty. The influence of this determination of the new creature to please God, to do His will, will signify that his life, that his heart and so far as possible every act and word of his, will be in accord with goodie . in accord with the principles of righteousness which God represents—in accord with truth.

"HAVE NO FELLOWSHIP WITH THE UNFRUITFUL WORKS OF DARKNESS, BUT RATHER REPROVE THEM."

We are responsible not only for what we ourselves may do and think as New Creatures, hut our responsibility goes out beyond ourselves to the brethren, to all who in any sense of the word come under our influence. Obscene jesting certainly is to receive no encouragement, to provoke no laughter, but rather to call forth a gentle, loving rebuke.

Let us set our affections on things above —let us walk in the light, let us think of and discuss whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good repute. Let us put away from our conversation and from our thoughts everything that would be defiling, and ensnaring to ourselves or to others. Failure to reprove is a measurable endorsement of the wrong. A word in season—how good it is. how helpful! But it is equally important that the word of reproof be wisely and lovingly given, otherwise it may do harm where we intended good ; as the Scriptures say, "Speak the truth in love."

The Apostle speaks of the "things which are done in secret." "It is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret"—that are done in the dark. The Apostle's intimation is that the whole world lieth in darkness, and in the wicked one and in sin, and that the Lord's people of the new creation have accepted His leadership in the opposite direction; that they are children of the light and should walk accordingly in the light, and that they should lift up the light of truth ; that they should allow the Holy Spirit to shine forth for the reproofing of the world, for the reproofing of darkness and evil, and for the setting up of a standard of righteousness in harmony with the Lord's example.

The Apostle here reminds us of the prophetic statement, "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." This should be our attitude toward all who are still unregenerated. The world lieth in the wicked one, in sin, in darkness. Instead of having fellowship with them in the works of darkness, instead of sharing in their foul jesting, we are rather to reprove them, and to direct them according to the above Scripture, to awake from their stupor, from their sleep, to recognise conditions from their true standpoint, so that, awakening, they should realise that they are sinners, that the wage of sin is death, and that the 'tendency of sin is downward—and that they should rise from the dead, should separate themselves from the world, not only so far as their conduct is concerned, but as their conversation and their sympathies are concerned, that all these should be turned toward the Lord, toward the truth, toward the light. It is to those who thus separate themselves from the world and its spirit that the Lord has premised to give light, a little, a little more, and a little more, for the path of the justified, the path of those following in the footsteps of Jesus, will shine more- and (lore unto the perfect day.

THE CHRISTIAN'S SEVEN WALKS.

In verse 15 the Apostle says, "See that ye walk circumspectly."

The Christian's walk, of course, means his course of conduct; including thoughts and words and acts. The Apostle indicates very clearly what this walk or course of the Christian should be, outlining it in seven different ways.

(1) The new creature should walk not according to the course of this world, not according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit which now worketh in the children of disobedience (Eph. 2:2). This is the walk of the world, the walk of evildoers, the walk of the children of wrath ; it is the very opposite of the walk of the children of the light.

(2) The new creation should walk in good works: "For we are God's workmanship, created, in Christ unto good works, which God has before ordained that we :should walk in them.'—Eph. 2:10.

(3) The new creation should "walk worthy of the vocation wherewith they are called." (Eph. 4:1.) Their vocation is the very highest of all ; they are the representatives of the Lord and, Master ; they bear His name, and should seek in everything to glorify it and never to dishonour it. What we do, what we say, what we think—in fact, even general appearance and deportment, and where here we are seen, all reflect more or less upon the great King whose ambassadors we are. Our vocation is that of servants of God, and no earthly vocation should be permitted in any degree to hinder or abridge the influence or the service which we have undertaken as children of God, as joint-heirs with Jesus Christ our Lord, prospective members of His Bride class, His Kingdom class.

(4) The new creation are to "walk not as other Gentiles walk." (Eph. 4:1 7.) We are not merely to refrain from the sins and gross immoralities of the natural man, but we are to allow this principle or spirit to pervade all of life's interests. We are to refrain from following foolish, worldly fashions, from being influenced by a worldly spirit ; we are to have the spirit of the Lord, the spirit of a sound mind to direct us in our joys, in our sorrows, in all of our undertakings—in fact, whatsoever we do we are to do to the glory of God, and are not to be influenced by the spirit of the world, but contrariwise, are to set a proper example for the world in all matters—in gentleness, kindness, patience, faithfulness to the Lord and to duty. The walk of the world is on the broad road; the walk of the Church is on the narrow path. As we progress in Christian experience, we find this path getting farther and farther away from the broad road which the world is travelling, and whoever tries to keep pace with the world will in many respects be apt to find himself leaving the narrow path or otherwise disadvantaging himself as a new creature.

(5) The new creation is to "walk in love." (Eph, 5:2.) Their words, their deeds, everything with which they are connected, is to be governed by this law of the new creation—love. "Love is the fulfilling of the law." "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another, as I have loved you." In compliance with this law of love and our Lord's glorious example, the Apostle says we ought to so love one another as to be willing to lay down our lives for the brethren. We should be ready to lay down a few months, a few years ; we should be ready at any time we can find an opportunity of service for a brother, especially along the lines of his spiritual or higher interests as a new creature. This spirit of love is to control our conduct with all ; we are to love our neighbours and seek to do them good, to serve their interests. "Love worketh no ill to his neighbour," would not take advantage of his neighbour to cheat him. to injure him in any manner. Love would not prompt its possessor to speak evil of his neighbour, but would lead to a remembrance of the Scriptural injunction, "Speak evil of no man." Love would do this from principle, because it is right ; but more than this, love ultimately takes such an interest that the one exercising it does not wish to do anything that would be harmful to another's interests, to his welfare, but rather to do something to his honour and blessing. Love, progressing as we walk in it, ultimately brings us to that blessed condition where we can love our enemies and be glad of the privilege of doing good to those who spitefully use us, and persecute us.

(6) The members of the new creation are also instructed to walk as children of light ; their course in life is always to be with respect to the things that are just, pure, loving, noble, kind, the things that are in harmony with the Divine character and Word, the things that prove to be of greatest blessing to neighbours and to friends. As children of the light, every day and year will see progress; their light will be shining more and more clearly and accomplishing the greatest good; they will not be ashamed of it, but will set it on a candlestick, where it may give light to all in the house, to every member of the household of faith. "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven."— Matt. 5:16.

(7) The new creation should walk circumspectly. (Eph. 5:15.) This word "circumspectly" signifies to look carefully all around at every step. The Christian cannot afford to live carelessly, and as he looks around him and realises the various pitfalls and snares, not only will he seek to make straight paths for his feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way, but additionally he will seek Divine aid and counsel and guidance that he make no mistakes, that every step in life's pathway will be such as will have Divine approval and glorify God in his body and spirit, which are God's. This circumspection of our walk as new creatures is, the more necessary because our adversary, the devil, is specially on the alert to ensnare us; and our tests are permitted to be the severer as we come; nearer the goal of character.

We should walk circumspectly also because we profess to be of the new creation, begotten of the Holy Spirit and not of the world. but separate from it; and because our lights so shining more or less reprove the world. Therefore the world, instead of sympathising with us, may hate us, and will often watch to see what fault can be found with our walk, or to stumble and trip us. To walk circumspectly is to take note of the various hindrances and stumbling-stones and pitfalls; to hearken to the instructions of the Lord's Word and to the leadings of the Holy Spirit; and thus to walk carefully; and in so doing to develop the character which most pleases to our Lord and Head. The Apostle says this circumspection is necessary in order to our walking "not as unwise but as wise." There is a wisdom of the world which is foolishness with God, and there is a wisdom with God which is foolishness to the world. The wisdom of God is to be ours, and we are to exemplify it in the affairs of life. Hence the faithful, the new creatures in Christ, should be the most exemplary people in the world. the wisest in the management of their faiths, the wisest in their eating, drinking and dressing. Not that the world will always approve but that the end will justify the course which the Lord's Word directs, and which the wise of the new creation, walking circumspectly, will take.

"REDEEMING THE TIME."

This signifies buying back the time, as though the time were already in., mortgaged. And this is so; the cares of this life, its necessities, the customs of the world, our fallen tendencies all would absorb every hour of life in the things pertaining to this life, whereas as new creatures our new hopes and aims and efforts are properly centred upon things above, the heavenly, the King's matters. Where may we obtain the necessary time wherewith to study and to refresh ourselves in rehearsing the blessings, the promises and favours which are ours as new creatures? And where may we obtain the time for telling these good things to others? If we allow the spirit of the world to direct us we shall have no time for any of these things and shall fail ; but as wise and not as foolish children of the Lord, we will see and appreciate the greater importance of the heavenly things and be ready to sacrifice our earthly interests and customs and ambitions in favour of the heavenly. Thus we may redeem or buy back the time that we had previously spent for worldly things, that we may henceforth spend such time in the interest of ourselves and others of the new creation and in the service of our Lord and Master, to whom we have consecrated our all. which we find to lie so little over and above the things necessary to provide honestly for the life that now is.

“WHEREFORE, BE YE NOT UNWISE, BUT UNDERSTAND WHAT THE WILL OF THE LORD IS.”

How many of the Lord's people allow the spirit of the world so to enter in as to hinder them from appreciating the true wisdom and the proper course, the proper walk in life! If we have to any extent been walking unwisely or conforming in any degree to the ways of the world we should take ourselves in hand, we should examine ourselves and no longer walk unwisely, but walk circumspectly, walk wisely, understanding what the will of the Lord is. Let us determine that by the grace of God we will have the approval of our Father in heaven, whether or not it makes us unpopular with everybody else in the world! It will be sweeter far eventually to hear His voice saying, “Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord,” than to have the well done of the world and its applause, and to come short of the glorious blessing to which we have been called!

Instead of intoxication with the spirit of the world and its ambitions, its craze for money and for show and outward adornment, we are to be so filled with the Spirit of the Lord, that our chiefest joy, our chiefest blessing, will be in giving thanks to the Lord for His goodness, in maintaining a fellowship of heart with Him. and then, additionally, having fellowship one with another, with those who are in the truth, in the Lord. are to speak one to another in psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs, thus making melody in our hearts to the Lord. The Lord's people are not to be morose, sullen, unhappy, always in tears. This is not the will of God concerning them ; they are, on the contrary, to be continually rejoicing, full of gladness; the basis for this to be their faith in the Word of God, which they all continually eat and are nourished by, together with their fellowship with the Lord, which will continually be a ground for praise and thanksgiving; and, additionally, their fellowship with one another which will be sweeter than any earthly or selfish fellowship; the exhilaration of the new mind continually growing stronger and more Godlike, and seeking to build up one another in the most holy faith and character-likeness of our Redeemer. The Apostle says that we are to give to God, even the Father, thanks always for all things in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ; thanks for trials, thanks for the clouds as well as for the blessings and the sunshine ; thanks for matters that seem to be adversities, knowing that God is able to make all things work together for our good, having promised to do so, and that the entire matter of needs and welfare are in the hands of our Redeemer, who is too wise to err and too loving to be unkind. and who will not suffer us to be tempted above that we are able. Well, then, may we rejoice!

We are exhorted also to submit ourselves one to another in the reverence of the Lord, not to be dictatorial, not to be too self-assertive, not to be anxious that our will should be done on earth or in heaven, but rather desirous that the will of the Lord should thus be done. and that we may be looking to note His leadings and providences in and through others as well as through ourselves, and specially to note the instructions in His Word.

Let us each one endeavour that by the Lord's grace we will give more earnest heed to the things which pertain to our heavenly salvation, and that we will seek to walk as children of the light and show a good example to those around us.

Let us endeavour to be examples in the matter of patience and forbearance, in self-control, in meekness and in brotherly-kindness and love. if we do this, then, we will be walking as children of the light should walk, we will be walking as Christ walked, walking in the Tint and not fulfilling the desire of the flesh.

What a great reward will be ours in heaven if we patiently continue in well-doing—walking in the light. “Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee the crown of life.” is the Master's promise. “Hold fast that which thou hast, that no man take thy crown.”

Lord, for to-morrow and its needs I do not pray, Keep me from every stain of sin, just for to-day. Let me both diligently work and duly pray; Let me be kind in word and deed just for to-day. Let me be slow to do my will, prompt to obey; Help me to sacrifice myself, just for to-day. Let me no wrong nor idle word unthinking say; Let Thou Thy seal upon my lips just for to-day. So for to-morrow and its needs I do not pray,

But keep me, guide me, hold me, Lord, just for to-day.

Christianity and Colour.

“Nor is the Church above criticism in her attitude towards the coloured race,” writes E. N. Jones, in a letter to “The Spectator.” “After Christianity has been in the world for nearly two thousands years, it was only last year that a body of Bishops made the startling discovery that all communicants without distinction of race or colour should have access to the Holy Table of the Lord, and none should be excluded from worship in any church on account of colour or race.” “Some years ago your correspondent studied at Oxford for the ministry of the Church. After completing his studies the Principal of his Hall wrote to the Bishop of a: king his lordship whether he would be willing to ordain him should he succeed in securing a curacy in his lordship's diocese. His lordship replied that on no account would he lay his hand on a black man's head! Another Bishop preached at the University Church and told his audience that there were about thirty parishes in his diocese which were being run single-handed; if any student was contemplating taking Orders, he should think of his diocese. After the service the writer approached his lordship and told him that he would like to work in one of these parishes in order to gain some knowledge of parochial work before returning home. The Bishop took his name and address. Within a fortnight he received a letter stating that, owing to the colour of his race, his lordship could not ordain him! In fairness to the Church, your correspondent must say that after two years he at last found a Bishop who was Christian enough to ordain him. However conditions were made that the ordination would hold good only ‘for the Colonies.’ So much for ‘The Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man.’”

A time to work, a time to pray And then a quiet night.

PEOPLES PAPER.

This ulcer of confusion

THE fact that we are living in a changing time has now been brought home to most thinking minds. This is seen not only in addresses and writings in leading religious journals, but also in our secular papers. One of these, dealing with the matter, said, "What is meant is that all religious conceptions are under examination, every belief is being rigidly investigated, and many venerable opinions are being questioned or scrapped."

Until recent years there was generally such veneration for any creed, church, or institution, which had existed for centuries, that it was thought impossible to overthrow them. The tendency is referred to by St. Peter (2 Pet. 3:

4), saying "Since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were from the beginning of creation." We have, however, reached the end of this dispensation; everything is being questioned, and since the war, particularly, reverence has become a scarce quality among even professing Christians. Everything is being brought before the bar of criticism; doctrines which have for centuries been held as Divinely taught have been found without such authority, and institutions old and hoary have been overthrown, while others are gradually being overhauled.

Honest criticism in earnest desire to find the truth is certainly good and should be welcomed by all who are anxious to know real facts; but there is, however, a destructive criticism which appears only to aim at 'finding fault with what is, and does not attempt to show what ought to be. All man's Work is apt to be imperfect and it is not difficult for a small mind to criticise ; but it takes a wiser, bigger mind to show the better way, the truer thought or wiser arrangement.

As one reads the religious journals to-day with sermons and articles from the leaders of the various churches, one is bound to conclude that the inferred prophecy of our Lord, "When the Son of man cometh shall He find faith on the earth?" is very definitely fulfilled.

We quote from H. B. Storr in the "Christian World" : "Sacred books were subjected to critical scrutiny, religious dogmas were summoned to the bar of reason. For two centuries or more that process has been going on in scholarly circles, but it is only quite recently that its effect has reached the masses. During the last half century there has been, A general unsettlement of beliefs . . .

"It is easy to feel in this intellectual upheaval that everything has become uncertain . . .

"So in the present chaos it is worth asking, is there anything of which we can be sure?

"Can faith find solid ground anywhere amid the waste of waters?"

So it is that while the open sarcasm and criticism of a Paine or a Bradlaugh failed to weaken the Church's faith in the Bible, the insidious higher criticism of professing Christian ministers working from within has produced this ulcer of confusion ; the blind leaders are fast leading their blind followers into the ditch of unbelief.

The strange part is that while these critics are ready to destroy faith in the sacred records, in the virgin birth, and in the miracles of Christ, yet they cling to doctrines which have their origin not in the Scriptures at all, but in Paganism.

While such darkness abounds among church attenders, whether in pulpit or in the pew, how happy is the condition of those who through God's grace and by His Holy Spirit can understand the Divine plan and purpose, and so perceive the harmony and beauty of (.kid's Word, .and have no reason to doubt the Apostle's words that "Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit," and that "God who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, bath in these last days spoken unto us by His Son."

That such a sad state should have come to the nominal Church is further evidence of the fact that we are in the "end of the age" and that these systems of error along with the great antichristian system (Papacy) will seen go down "like a millstone in the sea" of the world's trouble. After this the true Church triumphant will reign with her Lord ; Satan will be restrained and truth and righteousness will begin to abound and peace and !goodwill shall cover the earth.

HE CARES FOR THEE!

1 Pet. 5:7. Matt. 6:28, 29.

How good and kind our Father's care!
The words like music in the air
Come answering to our whispered prayer,
He cares for thee.

The thought great comfort with it brings,
Our cares are all such little things
When to this truth a glad faith clings,
He cares for thee.

The pure white lilies know no care,
And yet they grow so grand and fair,
Shedding sweet fragrance here and there,
God cares for these.

Great is God's care for His dear child,
Guarding from foe and danger wild,
With love so strong and undefiled,
He cares for thee.

And that sweet love will on thee shine,
Making His home for ever thine;
O! the rich depths of Love Divine,
He shares with thee.

CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCES.

NOT all who enter the Christian race will come off more than conquerors, as mentioned by the Apostle in Rom. 8:37.

There will be a secondary class who, while failing to become members of the body of Christ in glory on account of not being wholly faithful to their covenant of sacrifice, will come out of great tribulation and, having washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, will stand before the throne of God and serve Him day and night in His temple.

During the Gospel' Age God is dealing with all who enter the Christian race. He does not deal with the world in general, but with those who have come to Him in consecration, for it is the new creature, not the flesh, that is on trial for life.

The spirit begotten class receive, as it were, a new hearing and a new sight, so that as new creatures they can understand spiritual things and learn to look to the Word of God for all things needful for their preparation and testing for the prize of the high calling.

Though we may sing, "I would rather walk in the dark with God than go alone in the light," it might be but an empty boast unless we had the experiences which would develop such faith and trust as would hold to the Lord's hand and trust Divine Providence in the darkest hour. We are to learn to walk by faith and not by sight. to trust our Lord where we cannot trace Him.

When we first became Christians we looked for God's favour in reference to earthly prosperity, but we found by experience that the, good things of this life were not usually the best way to develop Christian character. We received unexpected experiences which, while at first causing bewilderment and doubt, worked out for our highest welfare.

God was caring for us all the time and we were led to the knowledge of the great Plan of Salvation and "the mystery" which God had ordained before the world was, "Which none of the princes of this world knew, for had they known they would not have crucified the Lord of Glory" ; neither would they have persecuted the Church Class. The Apostle Paul has further stated, in Eph. 6:12, "We wrestle not against flesh and blood but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." The followers of Christ would be filled with dismay at the thought of this great opposition, were it not for the knowledge that "the Lord knoweth them that are His" and careth for them.

Adversity always has been and still is the school in which the chief lessons in character-building are to be learned— in which the correct ideals of life are to be formed and ultimately crystallised into fixed character. So the true Christian gradually learns to look at all experiences as stepping-stones—helps along the way—of the Lord's provision. The world, the flesh, and the adversary are the assailants of the Christian, therefore the protection of the Lord must be continually invoked. The world of humanity, depraved and under the control of the spirit of selfishness, is largely, though unconsciously, the tool of Satan, who now "worketh in the hearts of the children of disobedience," and is an enemy and tempter by reason of the fact that the Church is composed of those who have entered upon a new life—the life of faith and fellowship with God.

Yet it is only the hearts of God's people that are thus changed ; their flesh is still much more in harmony with the world than with the new order of things established in their hearts by grace and truth.

Consequently when the world, through any of its children, by their words or writing or general spirit, comes in contact with the Lord's people, the latter may find that, although their hearts are loyal to the Lord, to, the spirit of righteousness, love and truth, nevertheless their flesh has an affinity for the world, its things, its views, its arguments, its pleasures, and so must be kept under by the new mind.

The third assailant—the adversary—seeks to use every opportunity against the Lord's people, to discourage, to destroy, to ensnare and deceive, thus separating them from the Good Shepherd and making them more and more deaf to the spiritual advice of His Holy Word. The Apostle Paul has also told us that Satan presents himself in temptation as an angel, a messenger of God and not a messenger of darkness, of error, of gross sin; for he knows that these qualities would alarm and repel all the children of light.

The mighty power which Satan is able to exercise would fill Christians with horror and alarm were it not for the thought that He that is for us is mightier than all that be against us. Our Heavenly Father sees best to permit Satan to have this liberty and will not take it from him until the ushering in of the new dispensation, when he shall be bound and deceive the nations no more.

At present it is profitable to the Lord's people that the Adversary be granted liberty against them, but they need not be in ignorance of his devices any more to-day than in the past. The Apostle Peter has written : "Think it not strange concerning the fiery trials which are to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you." Yet we have thought it strange; doubts and fears have assailed us and we have found it difficult to keep our sacrifice continually on the altar. But when we recall how the Lord Jesus and all who have followed Him have suffered persecution and tribulation, we also remember that God has promised to keep us, for are we not sons by adoption and factors in His great plan? Let us not yield to doubts or fears, for "whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth and scourgeth every son whom He receiveth."

We see that the body of Christ has required 2000 Years for its selection, and that much that has taken place in the world's history during that time stands more or less related to this purpose of selecting and testing those Who are to compose that body. All are having experiences which will fit them- for the purpose which God has in view, i.e., of being united with their Head—the Lord Jesus—the seed of Abraham which will "bless all the families of the earth!"

As a rule, those who have the spirit of helpfulness, the ability to impart joy and comfort, and who are able to pour this balm into the wounded hearts of others, have themselves passed through severe trials, reverses, disciplines, and have been touched with a feeling of the infirmities of our race; and more than this, have been touched with a feeling of sympathy for the weaknesses and oppositions which assail the brethren in their endeavour to walk after the spirit and not after the flesh.

It was a happy day when it was revealed to us that we, by faith in Christ, could be released from the condemnation that came upon us through original sin, and that we might follow Jesus, taking up the cross to tread the new and living way He opened for us.

What a revelation this meant. What a joy it was. How delightedly we entered upon it. The heart filled with gratitude to God for the privilege and honour it brought us at the time we made our covenant of sacrifice with God. There was nothing wearisome about it, but a joy and privilege indeed. Does the joy increase as we draw nearer to the goal? Or are we, growing weary of it all?

Looking to the Word of God for instruction we read : "Many have been the afflictions of the righteous, but God hath delivered them out of them all." "Before I was afflicted I went astray, but now have I kept Thy word." "Our light afflictions which are but for a moment worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." So, then, let us not be weary in well-doing, knowing what results will follow if we are faithful; "for in due season we shall reap if we faint not." "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap.” Naturally, we all desire to reap something good, consequently so much depends on what we sow ; the thing reaped will not be better than the thing sown. This thought appears to be one of the important matters of which we should take hold. If we would reap something good at the resurrection we ‘must sow something good at death. This something is character ; therefore let us not be weary in developing a desirable character, one like unto the Lord.

It would appear that the answer to the question, What shall we reap? depends entirely upon whether we become weary or not in the difficult undertaking of building an acceptable character. To build no character, as nearly as possible conformed to that of Jesus Christ, is to perform the one thing God has given us all to do. It involves so much and is the work of a lifetime. For this growth in Christian character God supplies all that is needful in the way. It is our part to make use of all the helps He sends, whether it be joyous or grievous to the natural man. It is Our one way of showing forth the praises of God and of gaining His approval and blessing, It is the way by which we can demonstrate that we are the disciples of Jesus, members of the body of Christ, and thus make “our calling and election sure” and gain an entrance into the Kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

In this way we hope to make ourselves ready to become “the Bride of Christ” and thus co-operate in the blessing of mankind. Therefore the Apostle says, “Let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not.” There is so much that the flesh is called upon to suffer, that it is a weary way for the flesh if the will of God is fully being done. Jesus found it so, and all who have striven to faithfully follow Him have likewise found it the same. Though there be much weariness of the flesh let us not, as New Creatures, be weary in well doing—doing well the will of God that in due season we may reap if we faint not.

We are not ignorant of the condition of the days in which we live, neither are we ignorant of the devices of the enemy. It is a question whether the Church of God has at any time been called upon to pass through a more serious and subtle testing time; and we are not astonished, therefore, at the falling away on the part of some who have been followers- of the Lord, nor at the weariness in well doing to be observed in others.

One of the chief tests is love for the brethren. “We know we have passed from death unto life -because we love the brethren.” We all have an influence more or less over others ; how careful we should be that it is for good and not for evil.

Another great test is love for our enemies. “God commendeth His love toward us in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us.” Love is the fulfilling of the law.

What are the distinguishing marks of a ripe character? One writer has given a very ‘beautiful illustration. One mark is beauty. Ripe fruit has its own perfect beauty. As the fruit ripens the sun tints it with unsurpassing loveliness, and the colours deepen till the beauty is equal to the beauty of the ‘blossom and in some respects superior. There is in ripe Christians the beauty of realised sanctification which the Word of God knows by the name of “Beauty of Holiness.” Another mark of ripe fruit is tenderness. The young green fruit is hard and stonelike. The mature Christian is noted for tenderness of spirit.

Another mark of ripeness is sweetness. The unripe fruit is sour. As we grow- in grace we are sure to grow in charity. sympathy, love ; and we shall, as we ripen in grace, have sweetness toward our fellow Christians. Bitter-spirited Christians may know a great deal, but they are immature. Another, and very sure, mark of ripeness is a loose hold upon earthly things ; ripe fruit easily parts from the stem.

ONLY FOR JESUS.

Only for Jesus! Lord: keen it for ever Sealed on the heart and engraved on the life!

Pulse of all gladness and nerve of endeavour,

Secret of rest, and the strength of our strife.

Correspondence.

Tasmania,

June 7th, 1932. Dear Brother,

I am enclosing P/N. for "Herald" and "People's Paper." Will you send me half-dozen copies of "P.P." May and June, as I would like them to send to certain ones to enlighten them on the Lord's return, for they give a most clear and spiritual teaching. I intend copying into my notebook the two articles on our Lord's Second Coming, finding it a most useful practice having notes, also writ-jog down-one's own learning of the Scriptures. It freshens the mind re-reading them. Our Lord commended the Scribe, and it is true we can take out of the store-house things new and old,

We can see the signs more and more clearly proving that our Lord is exercising more power in the binding of the strong man, and how perplexity is increasing. I believe that the time is very close at hand which will end this Gospel Age, when the Church, the Lamb's Bride, will be taken to Himself.

With Christian love.

A.K.

South Australia, Dear Brethren,

Your letter to my mother is just full of Christian love and a desire to help her.

Perhaps when I tell you that I have just come out from the I.B.S.A. you will understand why I write like this, and really it is coming out from bondage to liberty. I was very miserable for a long time; I used to go to the meetings and come away more miserable than I went, because things were said there that I thought was far from like Christ.

I do not want you to think that I feel bitter toward them. If only I could open their eyes, but one does not dare to ask Questions that would make the "Watch Tower" look as if it was wrong, or any the books—if you do, well you are in disgrace.

I have been going to the B.B S. class, and the difference is like the difference between light and darkness; there is liberty of thought, of conscience; it is lovely:

We are told the Bible says: "Prove all things." Yes, that is quite right, but the Society has proved all things for us, and we were not to question what it puts out, but to take it as from the Lord, and, as for building character, that is scoffed at.

Well I cannot thank God enough for leading me away from them, and into the B.B.S. I went to Sister — in real distress, but I came away comforted, and with an invitation to go to Class next evening, and Sister came the same night. We are very happy now in the love of God, and cannot praise Him enough,

The spirit of the class is altogether different, and we can worship in spirit and in truth,
I remain, yours in the one hope, R.M.E.

N.S.W., June 12th. Dear Brother,—

I received your kind letter a few days ago, also the nice card and paper. Also received the book of sermons by Brother Russell, and have read some of them since it arrived. They are beautiful so far. I am reading “The True Church,” which is grand, and I would like to own one of these books.

The -- change you may keep for the good work, and which will help to make up the deficiency. I will also enclose a few stamps, which will all help in the grand work.

I also would like to co-operate with you, dear Brother, by inserting the coupon for free literature in our local newspaper. Just send me what you wish to be advertised and I will have it inserted in our best paper.

Would you kindly send me the Revelation Volumes by Bro. Streeter, as I would like to study them. Please state the price when you write, and I will send the money next time. I would rather buy them than have them loaned, because such books take much study, and when we own our books we have them always to refer to. I remember you in my prayers that you always may be kept by the Lord’s spirit. With warm Christian love to you and the brethren,

Your brother in Christ,
J.B,

Watch and Wait and Pray.

It is much easier to trust the Lord while busy in His work and, may be, able to comprehend the why, the wherefor, the purpose of what we are engaged in and able to see how it is all working out. It is easier to be faithful even unto death in the company of others who are fighting the same great fight of faith. Sometimes, however, our King requires a service apart from others, a special message perhaps unappreciated by those around us ; we are to stand alone, maybe as a sentry on watch. It is then that we shall be proved, it is then that our faith will be tested. Have we been leaning on others for our courage, or has our faith been trusting implicitly in the Lord? Nansen, when waiting in the Polar regions for the current to carry him along on his way to the Pole, said : “It wants ten times more strength of mind to sit still and trust in your theories and let Nature work, without your being able to lay as much as one stick across another to help, than it does to trust in working them out by your own energy.” It all depends upon the quality of our faith, whether in the times of crisis, which are sure to be permitted, we shall with perfect trust be able to resign our all to the Good Shepherd, and enjoy the “peace amidst the commotion” which is the privilege of footstep followers of the Master.

“There is an arm that never tires When human strength gives way;

There is a love that never fails When earthly loves decay.”

Faith Healing, Miracles, Unknown Tongues.

The Purposes They Served, Counterfeits Foretold— Strong Delusions.

WHAT is termed the Pentecostal movement among “holiness people” of various sects and parties— “Missions” as their meetings are often called, claims to have continuous pentecostal outpouring of the Holy Spirit, resulting in gifts of “Faith” healing, miracles and unknown tongues. We doubt not the sincerity of these people, some of whom possess, anyway, a superficial knowledge of the Bible. Generally, however, they are more swift to speak than to hear, and seem to neglect any systematic study of the Word of God and thus appear to come under the heading mentioned by the prophet (Hosea 4:6), “My people perish for lack of knowledge,” being deceived by the snares of the great fowler, who “puts light for darkness and darkness for light.” We are living in the days, of which our Lord forewarned, that great deceptions would be permitted so that “if it were possible they would deceive the very elect.” How necessary then it is that we should not put our trust in anything that will not stand the test of the Word of God.

“I dare not trust the sweetest frame
But wholly lean on Jesus’ name.”

Reports of the movement in various directions are so absurd that they seem unbelievable. However, those who have had ocular demonstration of this delusion can verify the statements.

What we see here corresponds well with the general reports from elsewhere. The meetings are “bedlam;” everything is confusion, prayers to God are yelled or groaned. Now and then someone “gets the blessing,” and falls in a trance-like condition on the floor, to remain rigid, perhaps, for hours. Another begins to talk some sort of gibberish, interspersed with English. Another, in a different guttural, mumbles, and then gives an interpretation in English. These are said to have the “unknown tongues”: of Pentecost; but we remember that foreigners present did recognise those tongues as bona fide, and got a gospel message from them (Acts 2:8).

The people in attendance pay little heed to what is uttered by these “tongues” or their interpretations. Some, are simply curious; others are too engrossed with their desire to have a trance or an “unknown tongue”- to do anything else than groan their prayers to God for those “gifts,” as evidence of His favor. Frenzied rolling on the floor are amongst the evidences that these poor people are surely under some spirit influence. And it certainly- is not “the spirit of a sound mind” (2 Tim, 1:7) .

EVIL WORDS FROM. EVIL SOURCE.

It is quite true that there was wonderment at Pentecost, caused by so many speaking at once in foreign languages; but nothing in the record implies insanity or fanaticism ; nor could we expect either from such sound,, logicians as their writings show the apostles to have been,. On the contrary, our experiences corroborate the declaration of St. Paul, that the operation of the Holy Spirit of God in our hearts and minds has been favourable to the development of greater soundness of mind, by reason of our heed to the Word and its wisdom, which cometh from above. A correspondent in Los Angeles, California, wrote at one time that a neighbour woman got this so: called gift of tongues, and that a reputable Chinaman, hearing her, said that he understood her quite well—that she spoke his dialect of Chinese. Pressed for an interpretation he declined, saying that the utterance was the vilest of the vile.

In our judgment, the facts justify the conclusion that these “flames” are of an unholy spirit, of Satan; that he is now producing a poor counterfeit for the deception of a class whom he cannot reach through Spiritism:, Christian Science, Hypnotic New Thought, nor Higher Critic Evolution theories.

It is asked, “Why would the Lord permit Satan ,to delude honest souls?” We reply, that He has permitted “doctrines of devils” these many centuries amongst the heathen (1 Tim. 4:1) , some of whom doubtless are also sincere. The time for the binding of .Satan ‘is not yet—though we believe it is very near (Rev. 20:2). Doubtless Satan realises better than we can how the binding or restraining is coming, and is actively manoeuvring to avoid it ; while God, on the other hand, is willing to permit his activity because it can now serve a purpose—a sifting work—which must reach and touch every class and condition of professed Christians everywhere—to test and prove them. Thus we consider this one of the many delusions of our day. Mark the Apostle’s forceful words respecting this day of trial with which this age ends, and the next is ushered in. He says : For this cause “God shall send them strong delusions that they should believe a lie.” Why? “That they (who fall) all might be (thus) condemned”—be manifested as not right, as out of harmony with ,God—as unfit to be of the “Bride” class. But why so? “Because they received not the truth in the love of it,” but “had pleasure in untruth” (2 Thess. 2:10, 12).

In other words, the “Present Truth” has been sent hither and, thither throughout Christendom that, like as a magnet would attract all the particles of steel within the radius of its influence, the Truth might attract all the Israelites indeed, for further schooling and ripening, preparatory to their “change” to Kingdom glory, Meantime, the Lord allows Satan to organise various human agencies, those not of His “very elect,” that such may fall farther and farther from the Truth, until finally none will “stand” except the elect, and they “on the sea of glass mingled with fire” (Rev. 15:2). All others are to fall more or less, though some will subsequently be rescued from the catastrophe—”saved so as by fire” (1 Cor. 3:15).

AN UNINSPIRED RECORD.

“These signs shall follow them that believe : in My name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them ; they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover” (Mark 16:17, 18).

We refer to this special text for two reasons : (1) Because it is the one most frequently quoted by ,those who advocate the thought that all Christians should be known by the peculiar gifts it specifies, and able to speak with unknown tongues, to cast out devils, to heal the sick, etc.. (2) Because we wish the more pointedly to call attention to the fact that these words are not a part of the original Gospel by St. Mark. It is well known to all critical students that St. Mark’s Gospel closed with the sixteenth chapter and eighth verse. From the ninth verse to the conclusion, as shown in our common version, was an addition to the original manuscript. This is demonstrated by the fact that these verses are not found in the original MSS. of the New Testament. The oldest Greek MSS. and the most authentic every way, are known as the Vatican MSS 1209, and the Sinaitic MS.—'both written somewhere near the year 350. Neither of these contains verses nine to twenty, including this text. The earliest Greek MS. containing these verses is the Alexandrian, the date of which is credited to the fifth century. It seems rather remarkable, therefore, that there should be amongst scholars any who would use the words of this text as though they were of divine inspiration or apostolic authority.

However, the conclusions based upon these words deserve our consideration every way, because of the fact that the Scriptures clearly show that our Lord and the apostles and some members of the early Church did possess many of these gifts of the Holy Spirit, and did exercise them somewhat after the manner described in these interpolated words. We, therefore, invite your attention to what we believe to be the Bible teaching on the subject of the "gifts of the Holy Spirit" and the "fruits of the Spirit."

THE "GIFTS" IN THE EARLY CHURCH.

That our Lord ever spoke in unknown tongues is not stated; but that He did cast out demons and heal the sick and awaken the dead is recorded, and the fact that He sent forth His disciples clothed with power and authority to do the same things is also declared. We are to notice, however, that although Jesus did many wonderful works, they are expressly stated to have been for signs "These things did Jesus, and manifested forth (beforehand) His glory"—the glorious work of His Kingdom, which is to completely liberate mankind from the thralldom of sin, sickness, demons and death, in proportion as the laws of the Kingdom shall be obeyed. We are not, then, to understand that it was the divine will in our Lord's day, nor since, that all sickness should be cured by divine power, that all demons were to be cast out, etc., but rather that just a sufficiency of this kind of work was to be accomplished to give evidence of the change of dispensation—to testify of Jesus and His disciples—to authenticate their ministry and teachings as divine.

Nor were these healings merely 'performed upon those who were converts to the Lord—upon those who had accepted Him as the Messiah, had believed in Him, and had become His disciples. On the contrary, the miracles recorded came not to those who were the Lord's disciples, but to those who were pronounced sinners. As an illustration, take the case of the impotent man at the Pool of Bethesda. Its five porches were continually crowded with the sick, as we read: "In these lay a great multitude of impotent folk, the blind, the halt, the withered." Yet, to only one of these did the Lord address Himself, saying, "Rise, take up thy bed and walk, and immediately he was made whole, and took up his bed and walked." And that this man was not a believer in Jesus is evidenced also by the narrative, for we read: "He that was healed wist not who it was that had healed him." That he was not a saint is also testified by the narrative, for we read that Jesus later said to him: "Behold, thou art made whole: sin no more, lest a worse thing come upon thee" (John 5:3, 13, 14). Other evidences in the same line might be given, but are unnecessary.

After our Lord's death, resurrection and ascension came the Pentecostal blessing, the baptism of the Holy Spirit. As an evidence or witness to this baptism, but not a part of it, were gifts similar to those which Jesus had exercised, and these were generally distributed amongst all believers at that time, as we read that a measure of the Spirit was granted to every man in the Church 'to profit withal—for his profit and for the general advantage of the cause with which all were identified—the establishment of the Church. The Apostle Paul, in writing to the Corinthians (1 Cor. 12:4-31), clearly indicates that the Holy Spirit operated in the early Church. Some had the gifts of tongues, others a gift of healing, others a gift of interpreting tongues, etc., while some had several tongues or languages at their command, and some, notably the apostles, apparently enjoyed all of these gifts. The Apostle exhorted the Church in general to not only covet and desire these gifts, but to recognise a distinction between them—that some were preferable to others. The Apostle says, "Are all apostles? Are all prophets? Are all teachers? Are all workers of miracles? Have all the gifts of healing? Do all speak with tongues? Do all interpret?" "Covet earnestly the best gifts." The Apostle suggests, further, that one who had the gift of tongues should pray that he might also receive the gift of interpretation of tongues (1 Cor. 12:29-31; 13:13).

THE USE AND. VALUE OF THOSE “GIFTS.”

The Apostle distinctly foretells the discontinuance of these “gifts,” saying. “Whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away” (1 Cor. 13:8). He clearly intimates the reason for the discontinuance to be that the Church would gradually come into a more developed condition, in which these gifts would no longer be necessary, but give place to a higher, nobler and more certain manifestation of the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. He says, We know in part and we prophesy in part, but when that which is perfect is come, that which is in part shall be done away.” He illustrates this by saying, “When I was a child I spake as a child, and understood as a child, but when I became a man I put away childish things” (1 Cor. 13:9-11). We have not yet reached the standard of perfection and full membership in Christ, and shall not reach it until our change in the First Resurrection; but as members of the Lord’s body, His Church, His Ecclesia, we properly have made progress from the infantile condition at the beginning of this age. This is in harmony with the Apostle’s injunction that milk is for babes and strong meat for those more developed, and that it is our duty, as the Lord’s followers in the School of Christ, to grow in grace and knowledge and love.

These “gifts” in the Church had prevailed for several years at the time the Apostle addressed the saints at Corinth, whom He exhorted that they should desire the best gifts. He found them, like children; interested chiefly in speaking with unknown tongues, and gently reproveth them for considering these a high attainment and evidence of great favour with God. Not that He discouraged the speaking with tongues. for, as He explained, he could thankfully say that He could speak with more tongues than they all ; but He did wish them to realise that they might have these gifts, and yet come very far short of being acceptable to the Lord. He would have them understand that the “fruits” of the Spirit were a higher manifestation and better testimony than the “gifts.” The “gifts” were miracles, tongues, interpretations, etc.; the “fruits” were faith, hope, joy, love. When exhorting them to desire the best “gifts” he added the suggestion respecting the “fruits” of the Spirit as still better, saying, “Yet show I unto you a more excellent way”—an evidence of divine favor far beyond that of the “gifts.”

To demonstrate the better value of the fruit of the Spirit, love in the heart and in the life (with its concomitants of joy, peace, kindness, etc.), he gave an illustration, saying, “Though I could speak with the tongues of men, and with the angelic tongues also, if I were devoid of love, it would indicate that I had become like sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal.” The power to work miracles might be there, and operate through them, and yet they might have no more relationship to it than the cymbals have to the power which strikes them. Taking the still higher gifts of prophecy and understanding of mysteries and knowledge, and even rising in the scale of attainment to the position of mountain-moving faith, all these, as the Apostle declares, would amount to nothing unless the fruit of the Spirit were developed, namely, Love. These various gifts might serve a purpose, but without Love the purpose would only be for others, and not a blessing to the individual himself.

Progressing still further in his comparison, the Apostle shows that even generosity is not sufficient, for though he were generous and self-sacrificing to the extent of giving all his goods to feed the poor, and yielding up his body to be burned in his faithfulness to the Lord, yet should he not develop the great fruit of the Spirit, Love, he could have neither part nor lot with the Lord in His Kingdom, and all these other gifts would profit him nothing as respects membership in the Heavenly Kingdom, as a member of the body of Christ. Therefore, he concludes that love, the greatest of the graces, is far beyond all gifts, however honorable and useful they may be. Progressing in his argument, he shows that while the gifts would depart, this grace, this fruit of the Spirit, would continue—continue down to the end of the age—yea, and go far beyond into the eternal future. Referring to the “fruits” of the Spirit, which he desired them to cultivate and to esteem as preferable to the “gifts,” he says: Now abideth, faith, hope, love, but the greatest of these (the most important of all) is love, for love never faileth. It will not only be the essential quality without which we cannot gain an entrance to the life eternal and the Heavenly state, but it will continue throughout all eternity to be the quality or characteristic of all that shall enjoy divine favor forever.

The fact that one may speak with tongues, or be able to heal the sick, or do any such works, does not necessarily indicate a true Christian. We are reminded again of the words of Jesus. "Many will say unto Me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy name and in Thy name have cast out devils, and in Thy name have done many wonderful works. Then will I profess unto them, 'I never knew you, depart from Me ye that work iniquity.' Not every one that saith unto Me, Lord, Lord, shall enter the Kingdom of Heaven, but he that doeth the will of My Father, which is in Heaven" (Matt. 7:22, 23, 21).

THE VALUE OF "GIFTS" IN THE CHURCH.

A little reflection will make clear to us the value, almost the necessity, of the gifts to the Church in its infantile : stage. The Apostle explains the character of ;their religious gatherings; they met, and One had a psalm, another a prayer, another an exhortation, another a hymn, another an unknown tongue, another an interpretation of that: tongue, another a gift of prophecy. 'Their meetings were thus made interesting, entertaining profitable. The prospect of messages coming from Lord through unknown tongues, and the prospect of getting an interpretation of these also, would draw the believers together and maintain their interest and to give them food for thought and discussion. They had no Bibles at first: the New Testament was not yet written the old Testament, written on parchments, was not only clumsy to handle, but very expensive, and the synagogue which could afford a complete copy were considered fortunate, and these copies were kept and merely read from on the Sabbath of the people who attended. The early church cast out of the synagogues, were really without any particular source of instruction, except as to mind the preaching of the Lord and the prophets as they had heard them in early life; and hence' this provision of the Lord for the gifts of prophecy and understanding of mysteries and communicating through unknown tongues and the interpretation of same, were all designed to teach them their dependence upon the Lord and to draw them together for mutual -instruction. and show them that the Gospel message was not given to them individually, but collectively as a Church. All these good offices were well served by the gifts, and in due time the believers were taught to look beyond the gifts and to cultivate the fruits of the Spirit.

Gradually the New Testament grew—the four Gospels, the Epistles of Paul, Peter, John, James, etc.—and with this growth of written instruction the necessity for the gifts proportionately died away. They were not necessary as at first for the establishment of the Church nor for its instruction. It is quite in harmony with this that in general the Apostolic epistles of the New Testament make comparatively little reference to the "gifts" of the Spirit, but persistently counsel the putting away of the filth of the flesh and the cultivation of the fruits of the Holy Spirit. No intimation is given anywhere that the Lord's^ people were to expect a repetition or continuance Of the Pentecostal gifts, tongues, etc., but rather that they were to go on toward perfection—the perfection Which will only be attained in the resurrection, but for which resurrection they were to be prepared by the cultivation of the fruits and graces of the Spirit. We are to notice carefully that the one baptism of the Holy Spirit which came upon the believers at the first was DO-where promised to be repeated, and that it was separate and distinct from the "gifts" which at first accompanied, but which subsequently were to give place to, the fruits and graces of the Spirit, and did give place to these.

"OPPRESSED OF THE DEVIL."

The Scriptures do clearly, teach that Satan had much to do with the bringing in of mother Eve's temptation which led up to father Adam's disobedience. He is justly in the Scriptures - d a "murderer from the beginning." Indirectly the murderer of our race. Indirectly. at least, all sickness, pain and sorrow may be thus traced back to him. He had still more to do with us through beguilements and temptations of our weakening flesh. He has led the majority of our race from had to worse, mentally, and physically. For it should he recognised that sin in its very form is death dealing—every sinful and impure thought has its reactionary effect upon our minds and bodies, tending to produce therein weakness and disease—dying conditions.

Naturally and quite properly the inquiry comes, Is not the Lord Jesus still interested in releasing all those "oppressed by the devil"? Like the Heavenly Father, He surely "changes not"; hence He is still interested in the release of our race from the power of sin and death, and of "him who bath the dominion of death, that is, the devil" (Heb. 2:14). And if so, should not we expect that the healing of disease and expelling of demons would be still the Lord's work throughout this age—irrespective of the fact that now His Church has been established in the world upon a good footing, and has no need of the "gifts" for instruction, having instead in the hands of all, the Bible of both the Old and New Testament? We answer, Yes—undoubtedly all this is true. 'Why, then, is it asked, should not the same healing of the sick progress now? Why should not this be one of the main duties and privileges of all believers, after the manner of their Lord and the apostles?

We reply that while the lord proposes a great work as the Good Physician in the healing of the diseases of the world, mental, moral and physical—while He proposes that ultimately this shall be accomplished on a much larger scale than anything which He did at the first advent the time for this is not yet. What Jesus and His apostles did in the beginning of the age we have already seen, affected only a very small fraction of the world—only a very small fraction indeed of those with whom they were in contact. The real healing and restitution, according to the Scriptures to the future age, to that epoch which will the second advent of our Lord to His work as the Prophet, Priest and King in the lifting up and blessing of all whom He redeemed with His precious blood. The work of this age is not a restitution work.

'The times of restitution will be, as the Apostle points out, at the second advent of our Lord (Acts 3:20, 21). Now we are in the time when work the very reverse of this is in operation a sacrificing work. All will admit that our Lord did not use His healing powers on His own behalf, but that, on the contrary, He sacrificed, laid down. His life in the service of truth and righteousness.

Apostle wrote him respecting his diet, "for thy stomach's sake, and thy often infirmities" (1 Tim. 5:23). All must admit, then, that the healings were done upon those outside the Church, and evidently were for a time only, and would constitute no basis that the Church should expect miraculous intervention on behalf of its members. Quite to the contrary, these were all exhorted to lay down their lives, to seek not to spare them, save them, which implied not praying for their deliverance from those diseases or ailments, which came to them as the result of their self-denials, services, self-sacrifices. Rather they were to delight in these, while exercising a reasonable prudence and care, which would make the most of all earthly advantages as a part of the stewardship to be used in the service of the Master.

"LOVED NOT THEIR LIVES."

Not only are believers exhorted to present their bodies "a living sacrifice" in, the service of the Lord, and to lay down their lives daily, hourly, on behalf of the brethren in their interest, in carrying blessings to them—but additionally we are told that the ones who will gain the prize, those who will make their calling and election sure, will not be those who prayed for and gained restitution of the things they had consecrated to the Lord's service, but those who spared not their lives even unto death. These overcomers shall inherit all things, sit with their Lord in His throne, in the Kingdom, for they are followers in His footsteps. He prayed not for Himself, healed not Himself, and was not healed by others, but, on the contrary, said, “The cup which My Father hath poured for Me, shall I not drink it?” and who also invited His followers, saying, “This is cup, drink ye all of it.”

We see, then, that in the Lord’s order, restitution to physical health and strength was not intended either for Jesus, the Head of the Church, nor for the Church, His body, but for the world. We see also that the time is not yet come for the bestowment of this blessing upon the world, but that it delays until the sacrificing of the Church with her Lord shall be accomplished—until the Church glorified, sharers of the Heavenly Kingdom with the Redeemer, shall shower the blessings of restitution, health, mental, moral and physical, everywhere throughout the earth, granting to all the fullest opportunities to come back, to be released from the power of sin and death, and from all the dominion of the great adversary, who will then be bound for a thousand years that he may deceive the nations no more until the thousand years be finished (Rev. 20:2, 3).

CAN THE SYNAGOGUE CLAIM JESUS?

FOR six reasons,” says Rabbi Ferdinand M. Isserman, of St. Louis, in an article in “the Christian Union Quarterly,” “the synagogue should claim Jesus. First, He lived as a Jew. Second, He died as a Jew. Third, His religion was the religion of His people, the religion of the synagogue. Fourth, His criticism of _His people was Jewish and in line with the prophetic tradition. Fifth, He glorified Jewish history. And, sixth, His influence on civilisation has been moral and spiritual in keeping with the Jewish genius.”

“I think the time has come when we Jews can acclaim one of our greatest sons, through whom we have suffered but through whom also we have been glorified. Even if the (mobs begin to howl and to clamour against us, even if the tide of hatred were to rise, even if pogroms and massacres were to be re-enacted, even if the Christian world should continue to heap its injustice upon the people of Jesus, I would yet plead with my people, because of their religious and moral passions and because of their distinctive spiritual genius, not to yield to prejudice or to passion but calmly to essay the Jewishness and the glory of Jesus, and to recognise Him as a noble product of the religious culture of Israel.”—’Christian World.”

Thus we have further evidence that the “Blindness in part which happened to Israel until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in” (Rom. 11:25) is beginning to pass away. This confirms the fact that we are living at the end of this dispensation and that soon the Divine favour will again be upon the favoured nation, for the promise is clear that a New Covenant is to be established with Israel (vide verse 27, also Jer. 31:3134).

This is a further sign that we are living “in the days of the Son of Man.” It means that the full number of the elect body of Christ is about complete and that within the life time of this generation, the Church will have all been delivered and he joined to those members who have been raised and are with the Lord. Then there will be no further opportunity of “suffering with Christ,” of sharing in the afflictions of Christ (Col. 1:24). Every member of the Body will have been prepared so as unitedly to compose the “Bride of the Lamb.” Then the Bride and Bridegroom will be made one. The Church will sit with Christ in His throne (Rev. 3:21), and the age of blessing will commence, for this is the promised seed of Abraham, which is to bless all the families of the earth.

As we view events before us, how our hearts are stirred to press along the narrow way, which, while it is no less narrow, certainly grows shorter, and also to bring the comfort of the present truth to all who are hungry for the Word of God. So while there is so much to discourage and hinder the Christian to-day, the hope grows brighter, and as we draw nearer the goal, “let us press with vigour on.” “Thine arduous task will not be done till thou ‘last gained thy crown.”

Correspondence,

20/7/'32. Dear Christian Brother,

In reply to your note re monthly paper, I often wondered why I was receiving them, so you can thank my kind friend for his kindness in supplying them. There is some very nice reading in them, so I am! enclosing p.n. foT:2/6 for you to continue them.

If you have any secondhand books, entitled "The Battle of Armageddon" and "The New Creation," let me know the price. I have the others, namely "The Time is at Hand" "Thy Kingdom Come" and "The Atonement Between God and Man" "I have enjoyed reading them. They have opened my understanding on many subjects, and I can assure you the future has a more pleasing look than what I was taught 50 years ago.

Wishing you every success,

Yours in truth, W.K.M.

Dear, Friends,—

I feel that the least one can do to those of you who labour for others, is to pass along a few words of encouragement now and again, knowing that such stimulant is helpful to those who most love Jesus. So often we neglect our duty in this direction, failing to give thanks for good things received spiritually. Now I want to be an exception, for once at least, so that I may express genuine thanks to the writer of that article recently appearing in the "People's Paper," viz., "Walk as Children of Light." Before I had read it all, I found myself invoking a blessing, by saying aloud: "Well done, good servant," and was surprised to notice that further along these same words were used in a different manner and with a desire to hear them uttered from the lips of the Master Himself in that day. And so, in conclusion, let those who are weary at times in writing and teaching the brethren what they believe true, take courage that it is not always in vain, even though there is little to show otherwise at present.

With Christian love to you all,

I am, yours in Him, J.W.A.

[The articles and addresses, etc., in the "People's Paper" are contributed by various brethren from time to time, and this co-operation in the work is very helpful and encouraging, and much appreciated. The article, "Walk as Children of Light," was contributed by a brother in another State.]

How much trouble he avoids who does not look to see what his neighbour says or does or thinks, but only to what he does himself, that it may be just and pure!

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP.

“That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you that ye may have fellowship with us, and truly our fellowship is with the Father and with His Son Jesus Christ.” “If we say we, have fellowship with Him and walk in darkness we lie and do not the truth; but if We walk in the light as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another and the blood of Jesus Christ, His Son, cleanseth us from all sin” (1 John 1:3, 6, 7).

HERE it is stated that our fellowship as Christians is with the Father, with the Son and with the brethren. There is also fellowship in prayer and praise, in knowledge, in study and in purpose, in service, in joy, in sympathy, in hope, etc.

According to Strong's concordance, the word fellowship means—participation, partnership. A dictionary meaning is—communion, intimacy, joint feeling or interest, joint participation. In the Bible, distribution of worldly goods or substance for the benefit of others is also spoken of as fellowship (Rom. 12:13; 15:26; Phil. 4:15). All are familiar with the fact that fellowship implies kindred qualities of mind and heart. For instance, the generous love the generous, the noble and upright love the noble and upright, the honest love the honest, and the meek the meek, etc.

But among the Lord's people there are not many wise or great or pure from the natural view point. Yet God's love goes out to those who are not naturally noble and pure, but who are, however, rich in faith. Is this a Contradiction of the general rule of fellowship; can God fellowship those who are so far below His own purity and goodness? God's love to us as sinners was that of pity love, compassion and desire to lift us up to His fellowship.

We can only enter this Divine fellowship by accepting Christ as the sacrifice for our sins and ceasing to be sinners. 'Him lye realise that God is our friend and we also become friends of others similarly regenerated, and as we grow by partaking of God's Holy Spirit, we begin to love the brethren.

There are two planes of fellowship, a natural plane on which men of like qualities are drawn together, and a spiritual plane on which those who may be unlike in natural qualities, but alike in spiritual hopes, aims and ambitions are drawn still more closely together by a new tie and a fellowship that binds not by fleshly ties but their hearts in Christian love and unity.

What then is the basis of Christian fellowship? The term Christian, from a Biblical viewpoint, is quite an exclusive one. What is necessary in order to become a Christian is clearly taught. A Christian is one who not only believes that Christ is the Saviour, but has gone further than that and shows his faith by offering himself full surrender in consecration to God. He dies to self and takes up his cross and walks, - even as Christ walked, in a new [life.

‘The basis of Christian fellowship is a mutual relationship with Christ and through Christ with all who are in sympathy with Him, joined together as fellow members of His Body. There is at once a joint interest and feeling, a partnership, a participation in Christ.

In 1 Cor. 1:9, it is stated that God has called us unto the fellowship of His Son. This is not something reserved only for the future, it begins already now. St. Paul in his letter to the Philippians desired to know Christ, to realise deeply the power of His resurrection, and comprehend the fellowship of His sufferings (Phil. 3:10); not a mere superficial knowledge of Him, but an intimate acquaintance through deep knowledge and experience.

This same thought of fellowship is mentioned in 1 Cor. 10:16, 17, a fellowship, a participation in the drinking of the cup and breaking of the bread.

Christian fellowship then is something deeper and stronger than mere fellowship of belief, because our Heavenly Father gives us to partake of things beyond our own nature. We fellowship with Him in His plan, for He has made known unto us secrets that were hidden from generations in past ages. He promises us fellowship in His own Divine nature, meanwhile working in us to do His good pleasure as we work with Him to do His will. We might have a degree of fellowship with all believers, but it would not be Christian fellowship, which is “fellowship in the mystery.” This is illustrated in the tabernacle services. It is a fellowship of priests in the Holy, not with the Levites in the Court, who can come no further.

The Christian fellowship is a family fellowship, “For in love God has predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ” (Eph. 1:5). “They are all of one (Father) , for which cause Jesus is not ashamed to call them brethren” (Heb. 2:11). Jesus did not need to grow into this fellowship, for He was always in fellowship with the Father, and there is only one way we can come into this family fellowship, i.e., by accepting the terms laid down by Jesus—faith and obedience.

In John 14:23, it is stated that both Father and Son will come to us and “take up their abode with us” if we keep His commandments. This is a very precious thought—a partaking of food together—lodging together. The same thought is given in Rev. 3:20; also Luke 12:37, which is especially applicable at the end of this age. Jesus will, if we respond, come in and sup with us, and will also spread a feast for us. Truly our fellowship is with the Father and with the Son.

Seeing then that Christian fellowship is the portion of all consecrated believers, are there any further requirements for a permanent, workable and beneficial fellowship? How can we best answer this, seeing there are so many individuals and classes of persons who would all say they are consecrated Christians and yet if asked what they believed we would [find quite ‘a variety of doctrines and practices. Is fellowship under such conditions likely to be either possible or profitable ? We think it would be possible if all recognise certain essentials. (1) There would need to be uniformity of faith, not in a humanly prescribed creed nor recognition of any earthly authority or control whose word must be obeyed as the voice • of the Lord, not a seeing eye to eye on mysterious parts of Scripture, types or symbols, but a unity of faith—one faith. (2) A recognition of the clear and essential teachings of the Word of God would also be necessary. Unity on essentials must be maintained, but liberty on nonessentials be granted to all. We would, of course, have fuller fellowship with those who see many points of truth as we do, than we would with those who see only the fundamentals, but we must receive in fellowship those who have taken the necessary steps in harmony with the first essentials and have as much fellowship with them, as possible. We do not fellowship with each other because of non-essentials, nor because of personalities, but because of each being justified and consecrated and living lives in harmony with the fundamentals of the Word. “If we walk in the light we have fellowship one with another” (1 John 1:7).

There is another essential without which there could be no profitable fellowship. The Christian is to have no fellowship with darkness or error ; he is to do more, “rather reprove them” (Eph. 5:11) ; also (2 Cor. 6:14), “What fellowship has light with darkness.”

A further essential necessary to helpful fellowship would be as stated in Rom. 8:9, “If any man has not the spirit of Christ, he is none of His.” Those not having the spirit of -Christ have nothing in common with the consecrated Christian, there is no fellowship of love.

In Eph. 4:1-3, it is stated that each should walk worthy of His calling, but also endeavour to keep the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace. Christian fellowship is thus spoken of as a unity of spirit, a participation in Christ's anointing—a fellowship of love. The Spirit of Christ will manifest itself prominently in brotherly love, and must be a special feature of Christian fellowship. NV lien mutual love becomes established among brethren, there comes a sense of rest and naturalness in each other's company, which is the very essence of fellowship. A Christian writer has expressed this thought as follows :—"O the comfort, the inexpressible comfort ,of feeling safe with a person, having neither to weigh thoughts nor measure words, but pour them all right out, just as- they are, chaff and grain together, knowing that a faithful hand will take and sift them, keep what is worth keeping, and then with the breath of kindness blow the rest away."

That is the abiding condition of friends of Jesus, no necessity for reserve or hiding in this absolute confidence borne by the certainty of high unselfish love. Let us then endeavour to keep the unity of the spirit, then there will be much building up of each other, rejoicing with them that rejoice, and weeping with them that weep.

We believe all will agree then, that these four essentials are necessary

- (1) That all be consecrated to God.
- (2) That there be a uniformity of faith in the Word of God.
- (3) That all are aiming to walk in the light.
- (4) That all possess the spirit of Christ and brotherly love.

HOW IS CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP MAINTAINED?

In the maintenance of Christian fellowship there is, as already stated, a call for effort of each and all. All should endeavour to keep the unity of the spirit, and follow after things that make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another (Rom. 14:19; Heb. 10:24, 25). Fellowship cannot be maintained, except self and self-will be kept under, and in its place be developed the mind of Christ, as pointed out in Phil. 2:1-5, "How good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." Nevertheless there will be tests also in connection with fellowship, as stated in 1 Pet. 4:12, "Think it not strange of the fire among you" (Diaglott).

Trials will come among us because of our inherent weaknesses, conflict with other members' viewpoints or lack of judgment ; but fellowship is not a theory, it is a condition which no amount of discussion can bring about or hinder. In nature, birds of a feather will flock together ; so it is with the Lord's people (Matt. 24:28). Creed fences or obstacles are no barriers to those who desire and will have fellowship.

Satan, however, will attack the spirit of fellowship and misconstrue that which is good and beautiful. What shall we do then ? Be rightly exercised by it and stand up to our experiences. We remember how Peter disfellowshipped himself from Jesus, denied that he knew Him, but it was turned to good account by Jesus, who had prayed for him.

We learn by experiences not to flee from difficulties, but seek the Lord's help and guidance. Think of those who have stood their tests, the steadfast, patient, plodding Christians, through good report and through evil report, so different to those who have not stood their test and have been discouraged and lost fellowship.

If we are sure what God's way is, then we get His blessing in His way. If we take a way that is not His way then we are the losers.

What helpfulness is derived from Christian fellowship ? We might answer this by another question. What benefit does a person get in the gathering of live coals together in the fireplace? He soon gets comfort and warmth out of the glowing coals. So in the gathering together in Christian fellowship there is that comfort of love and fellowship of hope, a sympathy in suffering, a strengthening of faith, patience and humility, a stimulating joy, a lightening of care, and a sharing of spiritual food. just as a live coal separated from the mass would soon grow cold, so those straying from the fellowship of Christians would be in danger of growing cold or lukewarm, missing much of development and instructions and stimulation.

Neither should fellowship be regarded as a duty merely, which we owe to other fellow-members, but should be regarded as a precious privilege, not with the thought only, "How much can I get there," but also, "How much can I help in the giving." Why should we meet together? That we might have spiritual fellowship. Why should we consider the Word of God? That we might grow in grace and knowledge and love, grow in preparation for the fellowship in the everlasting future. May the Lord help us to appreciate, more and more His Divine fellowship.

LIFE ABUNDANT.

O God, in restless living
We lose our spirits' peace.
Calm our unwise confusion,
Bid Thou our clamour cease.

Let anxious hearts grow quiet,
Like pools at evening still,
Till Thy reflected heavens
All our spirits fill.

Teach us, beyond our striving,
The rich rewards of rest.
Who does not live serenely
Is never deeply blest.

O tranquil, radiant Sunlight,
Bring Thou our lives to flower,
Less wearied with our effort,
More aware of power.

Receptive make our spirits,
Our need is to be still;
As dawn fades flickering candle
So dim our anxious will.

Reveal Thy radiance through us,
Thine ample strength release.
Not ours but Thine the triumph,
In the power of peace.

We grow not wise by struggling,
We gain not things by strain.
We cease to water gardens,
When comes Thy plenteous rain.

Oh, beautify our spirits
In restfulness from strife;
Enrich our souls in secret
With abundant life.

PATIENCE.

Patience teaches humility; bridles the tongue; restrains the hand; tramples on temptation; endures persecutions; consummates martyrdom. She comforts the poor; moderates the rich; makes us humble in prosperity; cheerful in adversity; unmoved by calumny and reproach. She teaches us to forgive those who have injured us, and to be first in asking forgiveness of those whom we have injured. She delights the faithful; invites the unbelieving; and is beautiful in every sex and age.

THE GRACE OF GOD.

“By grace are ye saved. . . is the gift of God” (Eph. 2:8).

GRACE is the unmerited favor and love of God toward mankind in Christ. Of all the graces that God has bestowed and is bestowing On His children, the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ surpasses all, “Jesus by the ‘grace of God tasted death for everyman.” “For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.” “In the beginning the Lord created heaven and earth” ; then man was created in the Father’s likeness to inhabit the earth. By man’s sinning toward God he was cursed with death, and for 4000 years man had to wait for the Lord to make some manifestation, that in Abraham would all the families of the earth be blessed. Then our Lord and Saviour descended from on high, was made flesh “to give Himself a ransom for all.” “Forasmuch, then,, as the children are made partakers of flesh’ and blood, He also Himself likewise took part of the same, that through death He might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil ; and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage.” Until Christ came it was a favor of God toward Abraham and his seed that God showed consideration, for He said, “You only have I known of all the families of the earth,” but here in Christ was God’s abounding grace shown to all, that “He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever should ‘believe on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life.” “He sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through Him might be saved.”

It is God’s grace toward us that gives to all the opportunity to learn more of the Saviour, and of all the works He did, and the words He spoke, for it is common history how the Bible has been ridiculed and banished down the Ages, but we still have it in our midst, and can read more clearly than ever of the Divine purpose in regard to the world since its formation, reaching unto that glorious time in the future, when we are assured that—”God will wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there ‘be any more pain, for the former things are passed, away.” We can see clearly by way of the Word, that, the restitution of all things is an act of free grace on God’s part, for in the sentence on man there was no mention made of a resurrection. “For in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die.” And as all mankind was in Adam when he was condemned, and thereby forfeit life through him, so in Christ was paid the corresponding price for mankind. “As by the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation, even so by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life. For, as by one man’s disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous.”

The Word also teaches us why sin and evil have been permitted to reign for so long, when in the end all will be perfect. It is by His grace that all have the opportunity to bear witness to Him in the face of adversity that He is the One and true, living God, and we should say, "though He slay me, yet will I trust Him."

In the selection of a class, together with Christ, to bless the families of the earth in the ages to come, God gives to each individual, who will compose the class, the opportunity to conquer the evils of the world with the help of Christ's covering robe of righteousness. To all who recognise this, the opportunities abound to "rejoice in suffering," and "when made weak then to be strong." "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust"! As we wish to be followers of the Lord in this time of trouble, we must, with His help, employ our talents in the carrying of the cross. "Whosoever cloth not bear his cross and come after Me, cannot be My disciple." Jesus carried His cross under unfavourable conditions, and if we would walk after Him, now is the opportunity to heed the call, to take up our cross and follow Him, in the face of adversity, believing on Him at all times. The cross of Jesus was truly the sin and sorrow of the world, and just how we can best carry our cross is the question every Christian must ask himself. Part of our cross would be the forgiving of trespasses against us. If we are to walk anew we must keep this ever before us, and not resort to the law of an eye for an eye, and tooth for tooth. Imperfect man asks Perfect man how many times are we to forgive those who sin toward us. Peter asks, would seven times be sufficient? No! but 70 times 7 is the reply of our Lord. This would surely imply the completeness of forgiveness, 7 being the symbol of perfection, and 10 of completeness; 7 times 10, 10 times 7. This forgiveness has been given to us, and to be as He would have us we must pass on the grace in our forgiving our enemies. We can forgive no one on account of another, but when to ourselves the task is laid, we pray not to be found wanting. This is grace unbounded—being forgiven for sin while we were yet to enter in. But to grasp the full importance of this grace it is necessary to feel and respond to the call that we sin no more, and walk as New Creatures indeed. Since we have cast all our burdens and cares on the Lord, we must "lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the Author and finisher of our faith, who for the joy that was set before Him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of God."

As Christ, by the grace of God, died for all, it is by the grace of the Lord that He is calling out during this Age a class to share with Him in the blessing to all. "Blessed is the man whom Thou chooseth and causeth to approach unto Thee, that he may dwell in Thy courts." "I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore, with loving-kindness have I drawn thee." We might ask ourselves now, that having been called by God's grace to the high calling, what do we do next? Paul tells us that "by the mercies of God, to present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." Since it is grace that abounds to us so freely, shall we continue in sin that grace may abound more? This has been asked all down the Ages, but with the enlightenment of present-day Christians, all should have no hesitation in saying, like the Apostle of grace, "God forbid—how shall we that are dead to sin live any longer therein?" Again, as God hates sin and defilement in sinners, how much more repelling it must be to find sin in any who have taken the name of Christ. We must settle down to the thought that Jesus came to save us in this life from the power and dominion of sin, and make us more than conquerors through His power. When Peter was preaching in the porch of the temple to the wondering Jews, he said, "Unto you first, God, having raised up His Son Jesus, sent Him to bless you in turning away every one of you from his iniquities."

When Paul was telling the Ephesian church of the wondrous truth that Christ had so loved them as to give Himself for them, he went on to declare that His purpose in thus doing was "That He might sanctify and cleanse it by the washing of water by the Word, that He might present it to Himself a glorious Church, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing, but that it should be holy and without blemish." And likewise Paul instructing Titus concerning the grace of God, declared that the object of that grace was to teach us

“that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world,” and adds as a reason for this, that Christ “gave Himself for us that He might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto Himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works.” When Peter exhorted Christians to walk as Christ, he tells them that “even hereunto were ye called, because Christ also suffered for us,- leaving us an example that ye should follow His steps ; who did no sin, neither was guile found in His mouth,” and adds, “Who His own self bare our sins in His own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sin, should live unto righteousness, by whose stripes ye were healed.” Paul, contrasting the walk suitable for a

Christian with the walk of an unbeliever, sets forth the truth in Jesus as being this. “That ye put off concerning the former conversation, the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts; and be renewed in the’ spirit of your mind, and that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness,” and when writing to the Romans said, “Know ye not that so many of us as were baptised into Jesus Christ were baptised into His death”? Therefore, we are buried with Him by baptism into death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness. of life” ; and adds, “Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with Him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that, henceforth, we should not serve sin.” Realising, then, that if our redemption through Christ is to be verified by grace, we must discipline ourselves that we may be counted worthy to overcome sin. “For the grace of God bringing salvation for all men,” teaches us discipline that we in all things show ourselves a pattern of good works, and to “study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman, that needeth not to be ashamed.” We are to be transformed by the renewing of our minds, that we may prove what is that good and acceptable, and perfect will of God.” Besetting sins are to be conquered, evil habits overcome, wrong dispositions and feelings to be rooted out, and all by the grace of God, since man is powerless in himself, and a captive of sin. But Jesus, by His grace, sets the captives of sin free. We are to be fashioned- according to the will of God, so that we become meet for the Master’s use, and prepared unto every good work. It is in the fashioning process that the Christian has the opportunity of submitting entirely to the Lord’s will. Doubts and fears for our earthly existence too easily creep in, “For the good that I would E do not, but the evil which I would not, that I do.” And doubtless to all, the experience of Paul, in that the bode was at war with the mind, is not new, for the body “bringeth me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members.” Adam’s sin was that of disobedience, and through Christ it now becomes our testing to learn obedience, “till we all come into the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.” And so we, yielding ourselves unto God, and our members as instruments of righteousness unto Him, find that He works in us to will and to do of His good pleasure, and we can say with Paul, “I laboured ; yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me.” Then the lives we live at present, and the outlook, is not an attainment, but an obtainment. We did not earn it or win it ; all we can do is to ask, and receive of God of His grace in Christ Jesus, and thereby we “receive abundance of grace and of the gift of righteousness.” The grace is given of God to all who will hear, and to those who do hear the Word, the Lord says to’ “grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.” In order to “grow in grace,” therefore, we must recognise opposition to all growth in self-dependence of self-effort of every nature. We must put our growing in to the hands of the Lord and leave it there. Devoting our wills to His, grace will grow in us without care and without anxiety, and continue to grow, since He who has planted us planted a growing thing, and has made us on purpose to grow. “Consider the lilies, how they grow,—they toil not, neither do they spin.”

And our growing in grace brings to us unspeakable joy, both now and for the future, since we know that Christ is to put “all enemies under His feet.” The joy then, is spiritual, stored away in our hearts, and ready to be looked at in the face of all opposition. Paul said in the midst of his ,sorrows, “We arcs troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair ; persecuted, but not forsaken, cast down, but not destroyed.” “For which cause we faint not, but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day. For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look, not at the things which are seen, . . . for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal.' The Christian's joy is simply his gladness in knowing Christ, and in his possession of such a God and Saviour. We do not on an earthly plane rejoice in our joy, but in the thing that causes our joy. And on the heavenly plane it is the same. We are to "rejoice" not in our joy, but in the Lord, and joy in the God of our salvation." This joy no man can take from, us, and no earthly sorrows can touch, for "God is able to make all grace abound toward you, that ye always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work."

"God hath saved us and called us . with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to His own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus, before the world began." "The Lord God is a Sun and Shield; the Lord will give grace and glory ; no good thing will He withhold from them that walk uprightly." What grace: What peace of mind and comfort in our Lord we have, "the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort, who comforteth us in all our tribulations." And there is no tribulation, either of sin or sorrow, that has not the assurance of God's all- pardoning grace to us, "that all things work together for good to them that love God." "Grace be with you, mercy and peace from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Father, in truth and love."

The Christ Head and Body.

The philosophy of the sin offering and the Church's association with it is frequently misunderstood, and must never be confused with the redemptive work of Jesus Christ.

Whatever blessing ultimately shall come to every man must result from the death of Jesus however others may be subsequently associated with Him in the work.

The grand truth that none can ever have eternal life except by relationship with Jesus in no way hinders the Lord from using the Church as His assistant and agent in bringing the world into that blessed state.

Truly, our Lord is already the propitiation for the Church's sins, because He appeared in the presence of God for us. It is also true that the satisfaction of justice which He effects will ultimately be extended to all mankind at the close of this Age, but this does not hinder our Lord from accepting the Church as members of His body and sacrificing them as such during this antitypical atonement day.

Our Lord truly gave Himself a ransom for all eighteen centuries ago, but evidently He has not applied the benefits to any but the household of faith . . . By the Father's Plan our Redeemer reckons to adopt the Church as members of His body, and allows these to participate in the sufferings of Christ in this present time, and thus also to share coming glories.

We believers have no personal standing before God, nor share in the sacrifice of the sin offering. It is only those who are "beheaded," and thus cease to be themselves and are accepted as members of the Anointed One, of Christ.

All the under priests are represented in the High Priest The Christ, that participate in the suffering or glory as His members. They all are associated, but the Head is the recognised representative of all.

NAZARETH.

Here dwelt with glory veiled the Son of God,
For thirty years in this enclosure green
Of Galilean Hills, the power serene
Who framed the universe, and with a nod
Sent planets on their courses, meekly trod
The village streets and lanes; and might be seen
Over His humble handicraft to lean,
Or pace in prayer the dewy mountain sod
O mystery of godliness how great;
Obedience of a lifetime how complete ;
Who now can murmur at his low estate,
Or who but feel the humblest duty sweet;
When “Is not this the carpenter ?” was heard
Of Him who built all things with a word.

The doctrine of the Trinity.

EVIDENTLY some of the leading Christian ministers are beginning to exercise their minds concerning the doctrine of the Trinity. Only a very short time ago to have questioned the doctrine would have meant expulsion from the ministry, and such would have been looked upon as outside the pale of salvation. In fact, the Prayer Book condemns to eternal torture all who do not believe that there are three Gods, yet not three but one, three almighties, yet not three but one almighty, three incomprehensibles, yet not three but one incomprehensible.

Augustine evidently realised the statement as being confusing when he said, "We say three persons, not that it may be so, but that we may not keep silence ;" but silence would have been golden rather than the uttering of such meaningless nonsense.

We are living in a day when everything takes its turn to come before the bar of reason, and surely every doctrine claiming to be Christian must have Biblical foundation.

Dr. Selbie, of Mansfield College. Oxford, writing in the "Christian World," admits that "There is no such doctrine in the New Testament, though there are there recorded experiences and materials, out of which the doctrine grew," yet he still refers to the teaching as a "Christian" doctrine in spite of the plain statements of our Lord and the Apostles to the contrary. Jesus said, "I can do nothing of Myself ; it is My Father that doeth the works." My Father is greater than I," and cried out in His agony, "My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken Me," and in Gethsemane He prayed, "Not My will but thine 'be done.'" Paul states the matter very plainly (1 Cor. 8 ; 6), "To us there is one God, the Father of whom are all things, and we in Him, and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things and we by Him." This agrees with the statement rightly translated in John I:1-3, "In the beginning was the Word and the Word (Logos) was with the God and the Word was a God." (The word god means a mighty one and is used, not only for angels, but also for the judges in Israel).

Dr. Selbie certainly makes a mistake in terming the Trinity a Christian doctrine, for it is entirely anti-Christian and the whole tenor of Scripture is antagonistic to it from Moses' "Hear O Israel the Lord our God is one," to John's Rev. 1:1 or Paul's 1 Cor. 15:25-28, which speaks of the Son having accomplished

His work of "restoration of all things" (Acts 3:19-22), and handing over the Kingdom to God, and the Son as being subject to the Father.

Dr. Adam Clark has pointed out a thing that is so palpable to anyone who will consider that the Father must have existed prior to the Son, and, therefore, could not be in that sense co-existent from everlasting.

The doctrine of the Trinity came into Church teaching in the Dark Ages, when pagan teachings became mixed with Christian teachings and men spent time in formulating creeds and prayers and formulas of worship. instead of studying the Scriptures.

REGARDING UNITARIANISM.

It seems that when one questions the doctrine of the Trinity, it is hastily assumed that he is an Unitarian or something worse, and, therefore, it is necessary to say that to us Unitarianism appears possibly worse than Trinitarianism, for while the doctrine of the Trinity makes the Cross of Christ seem like a sham, for if Christ were God in the Trinity sense, he could not have died ; the Unitarian denies any efficacy in the Cross other than as a noble example of sacrifice, as a martyr, not perceiving the truth that the precious blood of Christ bought us, by paying the penalty of death, which was against mankind (Rom. 5:12-19 ; Rom. 14:9) . “Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures” (1 Con 15:3; 1 Thes. 5:10 ; 1 Pet. 2:24, etc.).

What we would like, Dr, Selbie and others to do is, first to recognise that belief in the Trinity is no mark of a Christian, that there are many earnest believers in Christ as the great atoning Lamb of God who died for all, who are earnestly endeavouring to live true Christian lives, and who do not recognise the doctrine of the Trinity as Christian, but rather as a relic of paganism. Secondly, that they should search the Scriptures and note that nowhere does Christ claim equality with God, but always to the contrary and in agreement with Paul’s statement (1 Cor. 11:3), “The head of every man is Christ and the head of the woman is the man, and the head of Christ is God.”

We must remember in our search that our Bible has been translated by men who believed in the doctrine of the Trinity, -and, however noble was their work and sincere their motive, certain passages have ‘been affected by their belief. Take, for instance, Phil. 2:5-9, in saying he “thought it not robbery to be equal with God,” an exactly opposite statement is given to that intended by the Apostle. How strange it would be for the Apostle (in Verse 5) to say, “Let this mind, be in you which was also in Christ,” not to think it robbery to be equal with God. But no ; the R.V. gives a better rendering and the Wilson Diaglott one clearer still, “Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus, who did not meditate an usurpation to be like God, but made Himself of no reputation,” etc.

It is said that the worthy John Wesley asserted that the only verse in the Bible to support the doctrine of the Trinity was 1 John 5:7, and this is acknowledged to be an interpolation as not being in the most ancient MSS., and is, therefore, left out of the Revised Version Bible.

DAVID'S GRATITUDE TO GOD.

"The Lord is my rock and my fortress, and my deliverer" (2 Sam. 22:2) .

THIS entire chapter is one of David's songs of praise and gratitude to God for His goodness and His loving providences, which had been so manifest toward Him ever since His anointing by Samuel, the prophet, and doubtless, before that as well. It calls to mind another expression of one of his psalms, "Rejoice in the Lord, O ye righteous ; for praise is comely for the upright" (Psa. 33:1) . Indeed, the writings of David, and all the Prophets and Apostles as well, abound in fervent expressions of praise and thanksgiving to God. They not only praise the Lord themselves, lovingly and gratefully recounting all His mercies, but, with impassioned eloquence and holy enthusiasm, they call upon all the sons of men, and everything that hath breath, and even inanimate nature, to laud and magnify His holy name. The worshippers are also bidden to bring with them to the concert of praise every musical instrument of human device ; and grateful reverence exclaims, "Blessed be His glorious name forever, and let the whole earth be filled with His glory. Amen and Amen" (Psa. 33:2, 3 ; 50:1-6 ; 72:19 ; see also Exod. 15:1-21) .

As we thus consider that, by the voice of inspiration, the whole human race is called to praise and worship and thanksgiving, we are led to consider further the relationship, which the spirit of praise has to the Christian or godly character. David - . it is "comely for the upright." But why so ? It is because loving gratitude is one of the divinely implanted instincts of a soul bearing the image of God, and one which should therefore be cultivated. It is this element of the intelligent creature that is designed to be responsive to the divine goodness and benevolence ; and it is this element of character in man which makes fellowship and communion with God possible.. If the goodness of God could awaken in us no sense of grateful appreciation ; if we were wholly dead to such sentiments, there could be no pleasure on God's part in manifesting His goodness to us, and there would be nothing in us to call out His love ; and so also nothing. of all His goodness and grace, would awaken love in us. But since for the divine pleasure we are and were created (Rev. 4:11) , God endowed' His intelligent creatures with this element of character which, being responsive to His own goodness, institutes a lively and delightful fellowship with himself, , which is the chief end of human existence, both on the side of the creature and of the Creator (Psa. 16:11 ; Prov. 11:20; 15:8) .

Rejoicing and the spirit of praise are thus seen to be indissolubly linked together in the divine economy ; and so David links them, saving, "Rejoice in the Lord, for praise is comely," thus making the two almost synonymous. To see this principle illustrated, take as examples, the dog and the hog. Neither can have any appreciation of the divine goodness, neither being created in the mental moral likeness of God, and hence being utterly incapable of knowing or thinking of .111 an is the highest being that they can know in any sense or degree ; and that is first, because man is visible and tangible to them ; and second, because they have some similar faculties, though very inferior and exercised within a much narrower sphere. The dog has in him to a considerable degree, the sense of gratitude : feed and caress him, and he shows signs of gratitude and affection, and a desire to reward you with a manifestation of appreciation. He wags his tail, looks kindly into your face, licks your hand, caresses you with his head and watches to see what errand he can do for you. But the hog, on the contrary, makes no demonstration of appreciation : he takes all he can get without even so much as a look of recognition ; his eyes are always downward, and his snout continually rooting in the earth for more ; and a grunt is the only sound to which he gives expression. A hog, therefore, can have no pleasure in man; nor can man find any pleasure in the hog. There is no bond of fellowship whatever, and man, therefore, tolerates his existence only until his flesh is fit for the slaughter and the market, while between the dog and his master there is strong friendship, which, when cultivated, gives pleasure to both, and they become life-long friends, irrespective of any commercial value.

It is plain, therefore, that in the cultivation of the spirit of praise, thanksgiving and loving appreciation of all the manifest goodness of God, is the Christian's secret of a happy life. And in order to the cultivation of such a spirit it is necessary that we continually call to mind His acts of mercy and of grace ; that in our prayers we frequently tell Him how all His goodness is remembered, how every fresh evidence of His love and care causes faith to take deeper root and makes the sense of His presence and favor more fully realised ; and how through such experiences our love and joy are made to abound more and more. We love Him because He first loved us ; and every time we see some new mark of His love, our love, if we have truly appreciative hearts, is called out more and more, and we are made to rejoice in God, in whose presence is fulness of joy. It is to this end that our Lord encourages our frequent coming to God in prayer with large requests for His favor, saying, "Ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full" (John 16:24).

We observe that in Israel the spirit of praise was cultivated by calling to mind and recounting what the Lord had done for them. "If I do not remember thee," says David. "let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth" (Psa. 137:6 ; see also Exod. 15:1-21 ; Dent.:17, 18; 8:2 ; 15:15; 32:7 ; 1 Chron. 16:12 ; Psa. 20 : ; 63:5-7 ; 143:5, 6; 77:10-12) .

So must the Christian continually call to mind the works of the Lord.. especially his own individual experience of the Lord's leading and care and 'deliverances from dangers and snares, and the wiles of the adversary. If we keep these things in mind and meditate upon them, our appreciation of God and His goodness grows, and the spirit of love and praise takes possession of the heart, and thus we are made to rejoice in the Lord always, and in everything to give thanks. So also the soul is made to hunger and thirst after God and to realise that God alone is its satisfying portion, and to desire more and more of His fulness. Thus, as the Psalmist suggests, our prayer will be, "As, the hart panteth after the water-brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God" (Psa. 42:1).

This same principle of gratitude and praise, which reciprocates loving kindness and generosity,, is that which also makes human friendship and fellowship possible and delightful. In our intercourse one with another, if the kindnesses we show awaken no sense of appreciation, receive no acknowledgment, and their repetition is expected as a matter of course, there can, in the very nature of things, be no such thing as fellowship. True, as Christians, we may not relax kindness and generosity on this account ; for we, like our heavenly Father, are to be kind to the unthankful as well as to the thankful (Matt. 5:44-48) ; but when this goodness awakens no appreciation, no love, fellowship becomes impossible.

In David's thanksgiving for victories over his enemies we observe that those enemies were the enemies of the Lord and His people, whom David was commissioned of God to conquer. These battles he undertook in the strength which God supplied, and the victories he properly ascribes to God, the rock of his salvation. The words, regarded from the standpoint of the future, are also prophetic of the victories of Christ, of whom David was a type, and to whom. Jehovah will grant victory full and complete over all His enemies—the enemies of God, the enemies of truth and righteousness. The whole strain of thanksgiving, thus viewed in its wider application to the conquests of Christ, is eloquent in its prophecy of His glorious victory, as well as in praise to Jehovah (1 Cor. 15:27, 28). The prophecy of a future wider dominion, contained in verses 44-46, can only be considered as fully applicable to the wider dominion of Christ Jesus as earth's future King.

The text is a blessed assurance, applicable to all of the Lord's people, and it is amply verified to all those who delight themselves in the Lord, who meditate upon His goodness and render to Him the praise that is due to His holy name.—"The Lord is my rock (upon which I may safely build my hopes), and my fortress (in which I may safely hide), and my deliverer" (in every time of trouble).

Necessity of Appreciating God's Favours.

God's favors to Spiritual Israel and His protection are along spiritual lines, against spiritual enemies and spiritual difficulties; and yet how few spiritual Israelites, when they get into spiritual difficulties, realise that it must, in some sense of the word, 'be traceable to the Lord's providences ! how few of them. properly look to see to what extent their spiritual adversities, weaknesses, coldness, alienation from the Lord, etc., are due to the permission of some kind of idolatry in their hearts! ,Not an idolatry, probably, that entirely ignores the Lord ; but one which, while thinking favorably of His spiritual blessings and victories of the past, simply wonders at His disfavor of the present, and fails to recognise that it is impossible to serve at the same time both God and Mammon; that God's favor and close communion_ and protection can not be expected while we permit in our hearts a rival reverence for wealth or fame or human institutions and creeds, or self or family to any degree or extent.

Why There is Diversity Amongst God's People.

"Who maketh thee to differ from another ? And what hast thou that thou didst not receive ?"—1 Cor. -I:7.

WHILE it is true that all men are born with inalienable rights and privileges, yet no man is born without sin. The Scriptures very properly declare that the race in Adam was sold under sin six thousand years ago. In this sense then we are not born free, but slaves of sin. Neither are we born equal. No two persons are exactly alike in opportunity, talent and ability. We differ from one another. God did not create some better and some worse—some more richly endowed and some less richly endowed.

We are to take the Bible statement of the origin of humanity, and understand that God made Adam perfect. All the imperfections which encumber the human race are the results of the dying process. Sin has made us all to differ, then, from the original image and likeness of God. Satan brought that difference through Mother Eve.

In our text, however, the Apostle Paul has in mind a New Creation in Jesus Christ—a new order—amongst whose members there is a difference. Some in the Church have many talents, others few talents; some have special talents, others ordinary talent. The Apostle says that it is God who has set the various members in the Body as it has pleased Him ; and that both this setting, or apportioning, of the different members of the Body and the bringing forth of the different degrees of fruitage are manifestations of God's grace in our hearts. Thus we are made to differ from each other.

CAUSE OF DIVERSITY OF ATTAINMENTS.

The matter of growth in the Holy Spirit is one that is dependent in large measure upon each one's zeal to know, to do the will of God. We are put into the school of Christ to learn of Him. Some learn more rapidly, others less rapidly. In proportion as they learn they have greater opportunities and blessings. All are granted a measure of the Holy Spirit— all granted some blessing. Those who are anxious to know the will of the Lord and to study it grow the more rapidly, and thus have more of the Holy Spirit. These are zealous to do the Lord's will. Their progress is not attributable wholly to themselves, but especially to the favour of God.

The Apostle goes on to say, Ye are God's workmanship. "It is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of His good pleasure." We could not do this work ourselves. The power that is working in us is of God. He is preparing a glorious Temple. He has provided who shall be the chief corner-stone of this Temple, and who shall be the members of this Temple class. We could not choose the place for ourselves.

But in God's providence we each responded to the call to be a living stone. The stones were first cut out of the dark quarry, and now are being shaped and prepared for places in the glorious building.

DIVERSITY OF ANOTHER KIND.

The great Master-Workman is doing a work upon us. He is chiselling and fashioning us. He is making us what we are. Consequently there is to be no boasting. There is a certain amount of personality connected with each one, however, and if there is too much cross-grain in the stone it will be abandoned. As the Apostle Peter exhorts, we are to humble ourselves under the mighty hand of God, that He may exalt us in due time. The same Apostle also reminds us that we should look up to God and give Him praise for all that we have and are.-1 Pet. 5:6; 4:11.

We are co-labourers with God. We give God the praise that He has made us to differ from our former selves, that He is making us thus to differ more every day, and that He will continue the good work as the days go by and as we seek to do His will. What have we of ourselves? Nothing! We were wholly dead through Adam's disobedience; we were born in this condition, having no right to everlasting life. But God has a plan which is world-wide in its scheme of blessing. He has proffered the blessings of the highest feature of this Plan to us, and invited us to come to Him in advance of the world. And this we receive through His grace.

DAILY SERVICE.

THE Lord's business is His people's vocation. "Vocation" is the term that describes the special business of any person, while the word "avocation" describes an occasional business. The Apostle Paul's vocation was that of a minister of the truth, while his avocation or occasional employment, when necessary to provide things honest and decent in the sight of God and men, was tent-making. Similarly all of the Lord's people should consider that their vocation or calling is of God, and relates to the special or spiritual ministry in which He privileges us to engage as fellow-servants of our Lord Jesus Christ. In order to provide the necessities of life it is necessary that we should also have some earthly employment ; but this we should always regard, not as our vocation, not as our chief business in life, but merely as our avocation or temporary engagement incidentally necessary to our chief or principal business.

The question should now properly be in the minds' of all who realise themselves as consecrated to the Lord, members of the Royal Priesthood : To what extent am fulfilling my present priestly office, and performing daily as I have opportunity my appointed work of sacrifice?

Too many, under the false teachings of Babylon, both in word and custom have come to consider that worldly gain, honour, ease and general self-preservation constitute the reasonable service of the Lord's people. Sacrificers are looked upon as deluded fanatics, especially in proportion as the sacrificing is done for the truth's sake, in the interest of spiritual things. We are, however, not to be taught of the world, nor by a cold worldly-wise churchianity ; but we are to hearken to the voice of the good Shepherd, to hear His Word, to learn of Him, if we would be prepared by Him, in the school of Christ, for the glorious things promised us as His joint-heirs in the future. "If we suffer with Him, we shall also reign with Him."

We can see how the Apostle, even though finding it necessary at times to engage in the business of tent-making, might be considered as a priest, whose time, energy and talents were all sacrificed to the Lord, and given freely in serving His people, in doing good unto all men as he had opportunity, especially unto the household of faith ; but how can others who have not the opportunity, not the talents, nor the open door for such special service as his, be sacrificing priests, when as a matter of necessity nearly all of their time must be given to their various employments, which Providence seems to have opened before them as their avocations? When it is necessary to spend nearly all of eight to twelve hours per day in the service of our avocations, how can such consider or serve the interests of their vocation, the priesthood?

The Lord has very graciously made arrangements for this very condition. He assures us in His Word that it is not the amount we shall accomplish in His cause, but the spirit, the desire and the effort which is manifested, that in His estimation would indicate the degree of self-sacrifice. He graciously declares that if our hearts be given to Him, whatsoever we may have need to do, may be done as unto the Lord, and will be accepted by Him. From this standpoint we can see that the work which the Apostle Paul did in his avocation passed to his credit as a part of his vocation, just as much as the other part of his time which he spent in more congenial methods of proclaiming the Gospel. Similarly, we can see that those working at their different occupations, if at heart fully consecrated, would be seeking to do their work as unto the Lord. If they are careful to use all other opportunities for proclaiming the truth, for serving the brethren, for doing good unto all men, the improvement of the few opportunities coming to them and their willingness to sacrifice personal taste and convenience for the service of the truth and for the brethren, would be counted by the Lord as a full sacrifice, because such a disposition in respect of little things would imply an equal faithfulness in the presence of larger opportunities.

Endurance is nobler than strength, and patience than beauty.—Ruskin.

“God be Merciful to Me, a Sinner.”

Luke 18:9-17.

“The publican, standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, .Clod be merciful to me, a sinner.”—Luke 18:13.

WHILE the Pharisee presents to our minds the extremes of conceit, selfishness and hypocrisy, it is always well to remember that there are many approaches to that disposition which give sure signs that those who have and who are cultivating them will by and by mature the same kind of fruit unless they, change their course. The spirit of meekness, which is the spirit of all true children of God, is the very opposite of the spirit of proud, boastful self-righteousness. It is only this spirit that can gain the ear of the Lord and bear away the answers of peace, as illustrated in the case of the publican so strikingly in contrast with that of the Pharisee.

How this calls to mind the words of wisdom and of warning to guard against every approach to a spirit of pride and vainglory. “Be sober, and watch unto pray” ; “Be sober, be vigilant” against “your adversary, the devil; I say . .

. to ‘every man . . . not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think, but to think soberly’; “In simplicity and godly sincerity” have your “conversation in the world.” (1 Pet. 4:7; 5:8; Rom. 12:3 ; 2 Cor. I:12.) It is the intoxication that comes from imbibing the spirit of the world that leads to that foolish boasting of which a man in his sober senses would be ashamed, and such intoxication is an abomination in God’s sight and is unworthy of the least of His children ; for every sober man must realise that he is far, very far, short of perfection. Boasting, therefore, is only an evidence of intoxication with the worldly spirit.

To further enforce this teaching, our Lord calls attention to the beautiful, artless simplicity of childhood as a pattern, in this respect, of what all must be who would enter the Kingdom of God. To be a child in guilelessness and simplicity, however, is one thing, while to be a child in understanding and development of character is another ; and it is in the former, and not in the latter respect, that we are to be children. And it is in this respect that the people of God are spoken of as His “little ones” (Luke 17:2) ; and by the beloved John as “my little children.” They may be old, in years and grey-headed, but their hearts are young and preserve the sweet simplicity of childhood. On the other hand, they may be ripe in character and learned in the wisdom of God, as was the Apostle Paul, who said, “When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child, but when I became a man I put away childish things.” And the same Apostle also says, “Brethren, be not children in understanding ; howbeit in malice be ye children, but in understanding be men.” “Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong.”-1 COT. 13 ; 11; 14 ; 20; 16; 13,

The simplicity of childhood, realising its need, confesses it and asks mercy, instead of attempting to deceive itself by philosophising. In this respect we must continue “children” ; we must continue to admit our own imperfection, continue to admit our need of mercy, continue to trust in the precious blood provided to cleanse us from all sin, if we would continue to have the Heavenly Father’s care and favour, and if we would continue to be “justified” in His sight.

We urge upon all the importance of sincere prayer—private or “closet” prayers, “family” or “household” prayer, and “social” prayer with fellow-Christians. Each has its special importance to everyone who is running the heavenly race, and each has Scripture sanction. They need not be lengthy ; indeed, few of the Scriptural examples of prayer were so; but they must be sincere, from the heart and not a lip service. Heart prayers are always accompanied by efforts of life in harmony with the prayers ; while lip prayers are usually in contradiction of the living epistle. Prayer without corresponding endeavour is like faith without works : it is a dead, worse than useless, thing.

Prayer is required, not to change God’s plans, but to ‘bring our hearts into such a condition as will ‘prepare us to receive and appreciate the blessings which God has freely promised and which He delights to grant to His children.

Hence our requests should be such only as God has authorised us to ask and expect. Our requests should be unselfish. The Apostle remarks that some ask and receive not, because they ask amiss (not in harmony with the Lord’s arrangements), to consume the things asked for upon selfish desires.—James 4:3.

COMMUNION WITH OUR FATHER.

Oft when alone in prayer I kneel
Before my Father's throne;
I cannot tell Him all I feel,
Nor make my wishes known.

With heart subdued, and head bowed low,
I lean upon His breast,
And while the tears unbidden flow,
My love for Him, confess.

I have no boon to ask of Him,
Save that His will be done,
To make me holy, pure within
An image of His Son.

But as He smiles and draws me near—
His Spirit from above
Floods all my soul with peace so clear,
And fills my heart with love.

Though from my gaze He hides His face,
My soul, from self apart,
Has found its happy resting-place
Close to His loving heart.

WATCH AND PRAY.

“Watch ye, therefore, and pray ,always, that ye may lie accounted worthy’ to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man.”—Luke 21:36.

The thought in this passage of Scripture is that we should be awake and vigilant. Why are we to e awake? and what are we to be vigilant about? The previous verses of this chapter ref the signs of the times and also state: “Take heed to yourselves that your heart be not overcharged with drunkenness and cares of this life, and so that day should not come upon you unawares.”

In Matt. 24:42 we have the statement, “Watch therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord cloth come.” To make sure that the Church may feel this exhortation as a necessity upon them to the end of the age our Lord added, “And what I say unto you I say unto all, watch!”—Mark 13:37. Again He said, “Blessed are those servants whom the Lord when He cometh shall find watching ; verily I say unto you that He shall gird Himself and make them to sit clown to meat and will come forth and serve them. And if He shall come in the second watch or come in the third watch, and find them so, blessed are those servants. Be ye therefore, ready also, for the Son of Man cometh an hour when ye think not. Let your loins be girded about and your lights burning.” That the primitive congregation lived in great anticipation of this event is manifest from many Scriptures-1 John 2:18; 2 Thes. 2:1-5.

The Apostle Paul, when he had almost finished his course, looked forward to this event as the culmination of his hopes and those of all the saints when he said, “Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord the righteous Judge. shall give me at that clay; and not to me only but to all them also that love His appearing.”- 2 Tim. 4:8. To him the appearing of the Lord was the crowning point of his existence, and his one concern was to be found approved of Him.

Some professed Christians give it no thought and do not trouble to watch for His appearing. The object of the establishment -of the Kingdom, the exaltation of the Church and the blessing of the world has been overlooked and also nullified by erroneous doctrines which have been accepted and have subverted the truth. In this state of mind and under the delusions of various errors, it has been concluded by others that it is no use trying to discover the time of our Lord’s;,, return for that cannot be known, and to support this thought quote His words, “It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath! put in His own power” (Acts 1:7) ; also “-Of that day and hour knoweth no man, no not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father.” Is it reasonable to conclude from these’ words that neither the Lord's people, nor even the Son, would ever know the times and seasons of God's appointment? Decidedly not. Because the time was long according to human reckoning and a knowledge of it would therefore have been discouraging, it was kept secret, not only from the Church, but also for the same reason from angels and even from our Lord Jesus while in the flesh .and must continue so until the proximity of the event renders the knowledge of the time no longer ally cause of discouragement, hut, on the contrary, the revival of hope and anticipation.

Our Lord's own words after His resurrection were, "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth." There was, then, no need to keep from Him the truths that were previously hidden to a large extent, for His cross-bearing had ended and His glory begun. Our Lord must have also known much of many events when their time drew near, because He knew when His hour was come ; and no doubt those truly living in close communion with Him will know very near the time when the final events are about to be fulfilled.

As it is shown that the disciples received power and enlightenment after the Holy 'Spirit came upon them, so the same influence of the Lord dwelling in His true feet members will enable them to closely discern the realities; and it was to the intent that the Lord's people might know when God would see fit to reveal His times and seasons that the waiting Church was told to watch.

The injunction to watch implies not only some advantages in watching, but also that the manner of the Lord's second advent would be so contrary to the general expectation as to require some discernment on the part of the watchers. The advantages of watching have been to keep fresh in mind the inspiring hope of the Church, the reunion with Christ in glory, the reign with Him in His Kingdom and the privileges of co-operating in the blessing of all the world, thus keeping the heart in love and harmony with the Lord and His work.

Thus at our Lord's coming those who were watching would have revealed to them the secret of His presence, and he found in readiness to sit down to meat and be served by the Lord Himself. As at the 'first advent He was present some time before His presence was declared and recognised, so at His second advent. His presence only 'began to be known as' He drew the attention of the watchers to it by the developing signs recorded in His Word. 'Of course it is only the truly spiritually-minded who will 'believe and act upon it. Was it not so at His first advent? When it was declared then, how few there were that believed. The opportunity to doubt His declaration was permitted to sift out the true followers, the same as at His second advent. At that time some that followed for a time took exception to some of His words and said, "This is a hard saying, who can understand it?" and they followed no more with Him. We have the same conditions to-day, some who have previously accepted the thought of His presence no longer believe it; the thought comes in, that as wickedness still prevails there must 'be some mistake.

To their minds things continue as they were. The thought is : "Where is the promise of His presence." It has become a hard saying to these and is no longer appreciated or approved. Then there are some who think that methods must now be changed, and the old truths, he taught no more. 'Others, again, make the mistake of thinking that they must watch for the appearing of our Lord again in the flesh, in the body of humiliation; to see Him. descend from heaven in the literal clouds and to hear a literal trumpet announcing His presence. Have these been watching and praying as the Lord directed? No; it would seem that such have 'been watching for events to transpire according to their own ideas, and have failed to appreciate the special signs the Lord has given to mark His presence at the end of this age. How necessary that all sincere believers need to "watch and pray, lest they enter into temptation," the temptations of the adversary who is ever ready to make suggestions and becloud the truth from the spiritual understanding of the Lord's people. Those who watch unto "the sure word of prophecy" which shineth as a light in a dark place know that "though we have known Christ after the flesh yet now henceforth know we Him (so) no more."

Those who have 'been watching unto prayer, and thus keeping their hearts in a humble, teachable attitude, are able to realise His presence, and in His light to read with_ unclouded vision the wonderful working of the Divine plan of the ages, and to see the duties and privileges of the hour. To do these duties we are advised to watch and pray always that we may be accounted worthy to escape all these things, the snares, false reasonings and misunderstandings of the sure word, and thus be able to stand 'before Him.

Is it not written respecting these perilous times developing more and more, "who shall be able to stand?" And the answer, "He that bath clean hands and a pure heart." Those who have abided in Him as a 'branch of the true vine will be able to bring forth fruit, acceptable to the Lord, and may therefore be accounted worthy to stand. Those who will meet the Master's approval in this day of His presence must not only believe into Him, but also manifest their faith and love in proper service. These must be wise and faithful servants, who study to show themselves approved unto God, rightly dividing the Word of truth ; servants who are anxious not only about the amount of service, but also that it shall be exactly in co-operation with God, directed by His Word, controlled by His principles, and faithfully performed with an eye single to His glory.

The Scriptures say, "Blessed is that servant whom his Lord at His coming shall find so doing, verily He shall appoint him over all His possessions." The whole storehouse of Divine truth shall be open to such to, be ministered by them to others of the household of faith. This is the present reward of the wise and faithful servants in the time of His presence, and thus they begin to enter into the joys of their Lord now, of being taken into full confidence with God, of comprehending His deep and wise designs and co-operating in them. But the fullness of joy will be when they pass beyond the wail of death, and are made like Him and see Him as He is.

We need to watch and pray always that, though being thus blessed, we take heed against a possible falling away from such a favoured condition. As long as we are in the flesh we will have to war against its sinful propensities. With an increase of knowledge of these things, pride may assert itself, or arrogate to self the honour of finding out God, and by losing sight of the great reward of faithfulness at the end of the present pathway of humiliation and sacrifice, seek to gratify fleshly ambition with the prestige gained by the knowledge of truth. Such may begin to eat and drink with the drunken, to imbibe fanciful ideas developing more and more the spirit of selfishness, and to become more or less intoxicated with it ; they are apt to smite their fellow-servants and act tyrannically over those who are faithful. The only proper course for the Lord's people at any time is to have no confidence in the flesh and to watch against its old ambitions under all circumstances, watching and praying lest we enter into temptation.

How thankful we can be that we have received and been blessed with the high privileges of Divine grace in the knowledge of spiritual truths. What a consolation and pleasure it affords when we can realise that God's leadings and counsel have been with us this far all the way, and His promises are that He will never leave or forsake such as walk humbly and sincerely watch for His guidance and do not lean upon the understanding of man. How appropriate are the words of the Psalmist, "Delight thyself also in the Lord and He shall give thee the desires of thine heart. Commit thy way unto the Lord, trust also in Him and He shall bring it to pass."

The comforting assurance for God's people is that the great Watchman of spiritual Israel changes not. His exceeding great and precious promises are all yea and amen to those who obey Him.; to all who by faith abide in Him, trusting in the all-prevailing power of His merit, and who, possessing His spirit of love, are seeking to walk circumspectly' in His footsteps.

The Apostle, seeking to encourage the hope and faith of God's people in His time, and to buoy them up in the midst of the tests and trying conditions which tended to beat their courage down, said, "Now is our salvation nearer than when we believed." In harmony with this same thought he continues, "The night is far spent, the day is at hand, let us therefore cast off the works of darkness and let us put on the armour of light.” In consideration of the fact that more than four thousand years were then in the past, and less than two thousand remained, he could well say, “the night is far spent”—the day of Christ is approaching. With what greater emphasis may the Church now realise that her salvation is nearer, as it is observed that these remaining two thousand years of man’s history are almost accomplished. Yet, however near we may be to the full dawning, the full sunlight of the morning, however much we may long for the promised deliverance, the fact must be acknowledged by the evidences all around, that we are still living in the dark time of the prevalence of evil, still living in the enemy’s land. We should remember that the resources and agencies of the Adversary are numerous and powerful, and that all need to guard well their Christian walk, the armour entrusted to them, taking heed to their ways that they be not ensnared by any of the sophistries and deceptions of this evil day.

As we move forward toward the goal it is well to have clearly before the mind the important necessities of the Christian life. Surely they are much the same for God’s people at the present time as they have ‘been all along. in the past. It is still the lesson of faith, of obedience, of loyalty to the will of God, and the consecration vow; these all need to be kept prominently and constantly ‘before the mind of every follower of Christ who would live the victorious life. Patient endurance, waiting upon the Lord, and watching unto prayer are amongst the important lessons of our day. The Psalmist (2 7:14) says : “Wait on the Lord, be of good courage and He shall strengthen thine heart : wait I say on the Lord.” Let us watch and pray and wait upon the Lord to bring in the great consummation.

In the meantime may we endure patiently the various conditions and circumstances incident to the passing away of the old order and the-introduction of the new ; let us make as straight a path for our feet as Possible, with what privileges we have at our disposal, and lean only upon Him, irrespective of what others may think, say, or do. To our own Master we stand or fall. The true servants of God to-day take their position with those of past ages who sought to understand and diligently searched “to know what or what manner of time the spirit of Christ did signify when it testified beforehand the suffering of Christ and the glory that should follow.”

While the Lord has generally not granted full information regarding the times and seasons for one or another of His operations, He has. never rebuked any of His devoted servants for desiring and seeking such information. Faithful children of God are exhorted to give heed to the more sure word of prophecy that they might be in possession of important information, long ago foretold by the prophets. Let us be careful that it is the sure word of prophecy to which we are giving heed, and not any fancied interpretations claimed to be of the Word, which, however, are not according to true knowledge. Here is the need for true meekness and humble-mindedness that we may discern the Lord’s guidance, for only the meek will He guide in judgment and teach His ways.

While therefore the sober and reverent watching and study of the prophetic page in connection with the signs of the times is to be commended, the disposition on the other hand to launch out into certain speculations is to be discouraged. We have no authority to assume the role of time prophets, to declare the date when this or that will come to pass, but should ever realise that our walk is of faith and use such means as will best help us to fulfil our covenant of sacrifice. The solemn lesson before the Lord’s children to-day is that it is only the foundation of God “that standeth sure.” Our Lord admonished His disciples to watch, to give heed in order that they might not be in ignorance of what was coming to pass, and thus be found prepared to receive the blessings that He would bring. May we watch and pray that we be not led into the temptation of formulating new theories, but may we continue by faith in the things of which we have been fully assured.

How important it is for the Lord’s followers to be faithful in doing His will, in rendering their service according to the instructions of His Word. All grateful and obedient children of God will desire to let their light shine and in so doing they will be careful that the message they announce is thoroughly established as the truth. Let us therefore watch and pray that we give diligence to make our calling and election sure ; for so an entrance shall be ministered unto us abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

You are greatly mistaken if you think that to be a Christian is merely to have certain views and convictions and spiritual delights. This is all well; but if it leads not to a devoted life, I fear it is a delusion. "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature."—McCheyne.

“Though ye know and be established in the present truth.”--2 Pet. 1:12.,

While the matter of being able to appreciate that we are living “in the days of the Son of Man” or the second presence of Christ, also of how we understand the “changed in a moment,” is not so fundamental as the decidedly anti-ransom theory of “Universalism,” yet it is good to know the present truth, and there is the ‘blessing promised in the appreciation of the second presence of our Lord, as a glorious spirit ‘being, in the “express image of the Father’s person.” The gathering of His elect from, the four winds of heaven and dealing with His people—the Church—is in accord with the two parables—the Ten Virgins, which indicates the condition of the watchers at the time of arrival, and the Talents, showing the work of Christ among His people, prior to the time when He will manifest His great power and control the poor “groaning creation.”—Rom. 8:19-22.

The Greek word “parousia” occurs in the following references :—Matt. 24:3, 27, 37, 39 ; 1 Cor. 15:23; 1 Cor. 16:17; 2 Cor. 7:6, 7; 2 Cor. 10:10; Phil. 1:26; Phil. 2:12 ; 1 Thess. 2:19; 1 Thess. 3:13; 1 Thess. 4 : 1 5 ; 1 Thess. 5:23 ; 2 Thess. 2:1, 8, 9; Jas. 5:7, 8; 2 Pet. 1:16; 2 Pet. 3:4,12; 1 John 2:28. It is badly translated “coming” in the King James’ Version, in all but two instances (2 Cor. 10:10 and Phil. 2:12), where it is translated “presence” where it could hardly be translated by any other English word. In fact, every occurrence of the word parousia can be reasonably rendered “presence,” which seems to be the only English word that will express the meaning. All Greek scholars seem to agree that “presence” is the English equivalent of the Greek word “parousia.”

Then read Matt. 24:37-39 : “As the days of Noah were so shall also the ‘presence’ of the Son of Man be.” “For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying; and giving in marriage until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away ; so shall also the presence of the Son of Man be.”

In the preceding verses our Lord said it would not be possible to locate Him in any one place, for His presence would not be like that of a man to be seen face to face, but like the sunshine, the rising of the “Sun of Righteousness with healing in His wings.” It is unreasonable to say that the “bright shining” out of the east unto the west refers to lightning and “so shall the presence of the Son of Man be.” How could a flash of lightning symbolise “presence” or “the days of the Son of Man”?

After the breaking of the persecuting powers of Papal Rome there was to occur just what has taken place—the darkening of the sun, the dimming of the Gospel message by Evolution and Higher Criticism, in the pulpits; and the “moon”—the Law—does not give its light. Its ceremonies are not understood and its sacrifices, “shadows of good things to come,” are referred to as old pagan institutions. Then comes the “sign of the Son of Man in the heavens.” Satan is referred to as the “prince of the power of the air”; he has been ruling in the religious or ecclesiastical heavens. Now Christ has come to take control of religious matters, first dealing with those who look for His appearing and kingdom. He is surely judging among His people and rewarding them according to the use of talents entrusted to them.

If Christ were to be visible to all, there would be no need of a “sign” that He had come, that He was there “in the heavens.” The sign in the heavens appears to ‘be the gathering of the elect from, the four winds of heaven. a harvesting work, in the Christian world. For He shall send His angels (messengers) with a great sound of a trumpet (not for the world to hear) to attract, to gather His elect. The voice of the trumpet is the present truth proclamation. “One shall be taken, one shall be left,” and in Luke 17:34-37 the disciples asked, “Where, Lord?” And He said unto them, “Wheresoever the body is, will the eagles be gathered together.” (See also 24:28.) So it is, “blessed are they that hunger after righteousness for they shall be ‘filled.’” It is the feast of Luke 12:37 and Rev. 3:20 to which the messengers have invited those who are watching for Him.

So the trumpet sounds “in the days of the Son of Man,” and in Rev. 10:7 we read “in the days of the voice of the seventh (trumpet) messenger, when he shall begin to sound.” It is not just a ‘blast of a trumpet, any more than it is a flash of lightning, that symbolises the Lord’s presence; it is, “in the days” of the sounding of this trumpet by the seventh messenger that the mystery is to be finished. The plan is to be made plain and the Church completed, for during this time when the trumpet of God shall sound the dead in Christ shall rise first. and during the same time those that still remain in the flesh shall be caught away as they finish their course to be together with the Lord in the air.

All who are baptised into Christ are baptised into His death. just as the first veil to enter the Tabernacle signified our consecration to death as human beings, he passing under the second veil indicated the actual death of the human being. The “New creature,” like the great High Priest, Christ, must leave behind the human nature. Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom, and the bodies of those beasts, whose blood was brought into the sanctuary by the high priest for sin, are burned without the camp. “. . . Let us go forth therefore unto him without the camp.” “As many as are baptised into Jesus Christ are baptised into His death.” “But blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from, henceforth . . .”—Rev. 14:13.

But “behold I show you a mystery, we shall not all sleep (be in a state of sleep, though we must all die), but we shall all be changed in a moment, in a twinkling of the eye at the last trumpet, for the trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised incorruptible and we shall be changed”—1 Cor. 15:52, 54. In verse 54 “corruptible” seems to refer to the dead who are raised “incorruptible,” and mortal to those still alive who are to be changed to be immortal.

Biblical Plants.

Jerusalem’s Botanical Garden.

(By PG.G.)

Cedars of Lebanon, oaks of the same species as the mighty tree called “Abraham’s oak.” and many other species of trees are to grow in the new botanical garden of the Hebrew University in Jerusalem, to play a part in an ambitious programme sponsored by the University, aiming at the re-establishment of forests in ‘Palestine.

Besides the trees, according to a statement in the New York weekly journal, “Science,” there will be an abundance of smaller plants, many of them famous in Biblical literature; “the hyssop that groweth on the wall,” the “lilies of the field,” the “mustard tree” that grows from “the least of seeds.” The aim of Dr. A. Big is to assemble in this garden as complete a collection as possible of all the floras of Near Eastern countries, from Iraq to Sinai, and out into the desert beyond the Jordan. It is necessary to act quickly in some localities, for the western methods of cultivation introduced by the new colonists are destroying many species spared by the “scratchy” agriculture of the Arabs, and the necessary draining of malaria marshes is depriving other native plants of their old rootholds

The garden occupies the summit and part of the slopes of Mount Scopus, a high hill whence Roman conquerors once looked on the city they had beaten down. For all its historic associations, however, Mount Scopus is not an ideal spot for a botanical garden, for, like most of the hill land in Palestine, it is thin-soiled and lacks water. These considerations helped to determine Dr. Eig’s decision to plant the resistant native plants first, and let the costlier, more exacting foreign species wait until more funds are available.

One section of the garden is to be left with its native vegetation untouched, to see whether some of the stunted trees of the “maqui” will not develop into useful specimens if left for some years unpersecuted by necessitous peasants, who dig up even insignificant shrubs for fuel. “Maqui” is the vegetation natural to a considerable part of Palestine and the Near East ; it is a tangled mass of mixed shrubs, very much like the “chaparral” of the American south-west.

Reminiscent, too, of the American south-west, the paper mentions, is one tree that is proving a great success in Palestine—the eucalyptus. This tree from the Antipodes has become so usual a landmark of the new settlements of Zionists that the Arabs call it “Sejeret el Jahud,” which means “the Jewish tree.”

The new garden will be, known as the Lamport Botanical Garden. The land was donated to the Hebrew University by Solomon Lamport, of New York City, in memory of his young son Montague.—”Sydney Herald.”

Correspondence,

Berean Biblical Institute,

Dear Christian Friend,

Yours received in due time. I was pleased to have your helpful, cheering letter, also enclosed papers, and thank you for them. I enjoy all Berean literature, and have read some “Heralds” which Sister recently sent me and which gave me much pleasure. I have many happy hours study among my books and papers and can say with the poet, “Praise God from whom all blessings flow.”

I am sending you by this snail two books, “The New Creation” and “The Atonement.” I have given several other volumes to friends. God bless you and help you with the great work. With Christian love,

Your sister in Christ, R.H.

Tasmania,

13th September, 1932.

Dear Brother,

Loving Christian greetings in our dear Saviour's name. It was indeed kind of you to write us such a nice letter when we lost our little girl. It is hard, indeed, to part with those that are dear to us, but we realise it is all in our Heavenly Father's hands; He knows what is best, and we know "that all things work together for good," and so we humbly bow to His will. "Thy will be done." It is such a loss, but we would not call our little one back again even if we could, but rejoice now to know that our little one will escape the great time of trouble that is even now overtaking the poor world. What a crash there will be when law and order are gone and anarchy is in full force. We can only thank our Heavenly Father that our dear little one sleeps in Jesus until the resurrection morn, and to think of her coming again from the land of the enemy in that clay. What a grand thought it is, dear brother, to think that if we are faithful unto death it may be our lot as members of The Christ, "the seed of Abraham," to awaken those who are near and dear to us, and bring them again to their own border with a new body such as it pleases our Lord to give. How sustaining and helpful it is in our time of trial and difficulty to place our every burden on the great Burden-bearer, and to rest secure in the knowledge that "The Lord is our shepherd, and we shall not want."

As perhaps you know, Bro, — is coming to stay with us, and, of course, we are pleased to have him. We will do all we can to make our dear Bro. comfortable and happy, and he will be a great help to our little class. We are looking forward to having a real feast of fat things around the Word.

The text for to-day is lovely—Psa. 133:1.

We are confident, dear Bro., the love of Christ will hold us together, and that we shall dwell together in real unity. Enclosed, please find P/N for —, being payment of books received, which I believe is the amount owing by me. Re book, "Bro. Russell's Sermons," yes, Sister — would like one, so you may send one along just when it suits you. Have you any "Desolations of the Sanctuary," by the two German Bros.? If so, would you send me one.

Will close now, dear Bro., with much Christian love from your Bro. and Sister, by His Grace, CAPERNAUM.

How blest the city which was called “His own,”
The home of Jesus Christ; happy the street

Which knew the echo of His sandalled feet,
The light of His familiar face, the tone

Of His most gentle voice; happy each stone
And timber of that dwelling, which His sweet

“Peace to this house” was daily wont to greet,
When His clear shadow on the door was thrown.

Jesus, who standeth knocking at my door
Seeking a home in this poor heart of mine,

Oh! lift the latch—enter for evermore;
Here let Thy voice be heard, make Thy face to shine,

And breathe Thy peace, while gratefully I sing
The love and condescension of my King.

—R.W. (M.A.)

Buy up the moments as they go;
Sow love, and taste its fruitage pure;
Sow peace, and reap its harvest bright;
Sow sunbeams on the rock and moor,
And find the harvest-home of light.
Deeply rooted, Lord, in Three,
Now and ever let me be;
Let my roots still deeper grow
‘Neath the surface far below.
Thus, while founded on the Rock,
I need fear no tempest’s shock;
I would be built up in Thee
Hither rise—till God I see.

”ARE YE ABLE.”

WE recall the circumstances under which these words were uttered by our Saviour. It was just a few days before His crucifixion. Jesus had promised His disciples that they should sit with Him in 1-1 is throne in His Kingdom. So confident were they that this would be as the Lord had said, that they were discussing the positions they might occupy. The mother of the two disciples, James and John, came to Him and asked whether her two sons might sit, the one on His right hand and the other on His left in the Kingdom. And Jesus, turning to the two disciples, replied by asking them,: “Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of, and be baptised with the baptism that I am baptised with?”

We know, that Jesus’ baptism in water took place at the beginning of His ministry. In harmony with the Divine plan, He was to die as the Saviour’ of men, and He symbolised this death as soon as He was thirty years of age—as soon as was possible under the Law. During the three and a half years of His ministry He was accomplishing this baptism, He was pouring out His soul unto death, and this death He finished at Calvary. Jesus said, “The baptism that I am (being) baptised with”—now—not a baptism which was either future or past.

But He spoke differently of the cup—”the cup that I shall drink of.” He thus implied that the cup was future—not in the present nor in the past. He had told. His disciples that He would go up to Jerusalem. and that there He would be crucified, and on the third day He would rise again. And He said on another occasion, “Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink His blood, ye have no life in you.” What the Master said about His being crucified the disciples did not understand ; but Jesus understood the situation, and knew that this cup was about to be poured for Haim. And so He spoke of it again, saying of Himself, “The cup that My Father hath poured for Me, shall I not drink it?”

OUR LORD’S SPECIAL TRIAL.

We might think of the word cup as representing various experiences of life—that everybody has his cup of mingled joy and sorrow. But Jesus used the word in a different sense. When He was in the Garden of Gethsemane He prayed,

“() \ I y Father, if it be possible, let this. cup pass from me Nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt.” And again, the same night He prayed, saving, “O My Father, if this cup may not pass away from Me except I drink it, Thy will be done!” In the matter of His baptism into death, there was no hesitation on our Lord’s part ; on the contrary, from the very beginning He voluntarily participated in it. The ignominious death was the thing that He prayed might pass, if it were possible. But this was what He learned was the Father’s will for Him, and He was content to have it so.

There was nothing in the Law to indicate that our Lord should be executed as a blasphemer of the Divine Law, yet blasphemy was the charge preferred against Him. The Sanhedrin decided that He was a blasphemer in, that He had said, “Destroy this Temple, and in three days I will raise it again,” and also in claiming that He was the Son of God. Apparently, then, the thing which was specially weighing on His mind and from which He would have liked to be relieved was the ignominy and shame of being crucified as a criminal. as a blasphemer of the Father He loved so well.

Jesus knew that He had come into the world to die, and that He must suffer, but this part of His experience He had not fully understood. Evidently He knew that “as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up,” for comparatively early in His ministry He had stated this in His conversation with Nicodemus. But as He came down nearer and nearer to the time of

His humiliation, His degradation, and realised all that it meant, He felt a great shrinking from it and poured out His heart in the cry, "If it be possible, let this cup pass from Me!" lint immediately—proving that His declaration at the time of His consecration, "Lo, I come to do Thy will, O God," was not empty words—He added, "Nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt !"—Matt. 26:39.

ARE WE WILLING TO SHARE HIS IGNOMINY ?

And so to His disciples our Saviour said: Are you able to lay down your lives completely, even though this shall mean to you injustice in the taking away of Your lives? Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of ? There will be disgrace and ignominy connected with it all. Are ye willing to share with Me in this, My cup? They answered ::

"We are able." They were willing.

This, we see, is the same cup represented in the Communion Service. The bread represents the body and the wine the blood of our Lord. The cup especially represented the shame and ignominy connected with His death ; and the two disciples said that they were willing to share His cup—they had no hesitancy. At any cost they would be faithful. They would comply with any conditions He would make. They did not, of course, yet know the full import of the word baptism or of the word cup. These were things all His disciples were feeling after. When Pentecost should come, these things that Jesus had spoken to them would come to their remembrance, as He had foretold. (John 16:4; 13:19.) But they were willing and anxious. And that is all that we can have. Jesus guaranteed that being willing, they should reign with Him in His Throne. But as to the particular place for each in the Throne, that would not be for Him to say, but for the Father.

The courage, the fortitude, of our dear Redeemer in walking the narrow way 'fills us with admiration. How strong and brave was His character' He had no thought of looking back ; His whole being was intent upon accomplishing the will of His Father in Heaven—upon sacrificing Himself in the interest of the world. What a noble example was set before the Apostles !—greatness in humility, victory through entire self-surrender!

DRINKING OF THE LORD'S CUP BY THE CHURCH.

The drinking of the Lord's cup by the Church represents our participation in the sufferings of Christ in the present time. None shall be a member of the Body of the great Mediator of the New Covenant unless he come in now under the proper terms. The drinking of the blood, then, is the sharing of the cup. For if we drink not of His cup, neither shall we share with Him in His glory. He said, "Drink ye all of it." All must drink, and the entire cup must be drained during this age.

It is a very great privilege that we are permitted to have a share in the sufferings of Christ. "If we suffer (with Him), we shall also reign with Him." We shall participate in the inauguration of the New Dispensation, and in dispensing its blessings. The -Anti-type of Moses, who will do the sprinkling, is Christ the Head and the Church His Body, glorified, of whom we read in Acts 3:22: "For Moses truly said unto the fathers, a Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me."—that is, Moses was His type, on a smaller scale. The Body is now being raised up. Jesus was first raised up, then all the Apostles; and following after, the remaining members of His Body.

As Moses sprinkled all the people, so this antitypical Moses, when completed, will "sprinkle" the world of mankind; -and this will mean the 'bringing of them into harmony with the Divine Law. It will require the thousand years to "sprinkle" mankind. So there is a great difference between the drinking of the cup and the sprinkling of the blood.

The sprinkling with the blood represents justification, while the drinking of the cup by the Church represents, not only justification, but sanctification.

OUR LORD'S RECOGNITION OF THE DIVINE PURPOSES.

Our Lord, in His memorable words to St. Peter: "The cup which My Father hath given Me, shall I not drink it?"—referred, evidently, to His dying experiences, which were severe in the extreme. He was dishonoured of men and reckoned as an enemy of God—a blasphemer. His physical sufferings He knew would be intense, but to His perfect mind the shame and disesteem added greatly to the poignancy of His anguish. Yet this was the cup the Father had given Him; it was the Divine purpose respecting Him.

Our Lord had all the experiences necessary for proving and testing His loyalty; for it was necessary that He manifest

His loyalty before both angels and men. The whole matter had been divinely arranged from before the creation of man. He was "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." (Rev. 13:8.) Everything pertaining to that slain Lamb was foreknown by the Father. Jesus was to drink the cup which belonged to the sinner in order that He might redeem man and might thus be a faithful and merciful High Priest.

This was the cup of suffering and death. It was necessary that Jesus should suffer the death of the cross, in order that He might redeem the Jew.

. LOVE AND LOYALTY MANIFESTED BY SUBMISSION.

All His sufferings were foretold in the Scriptures. The crucifixion was pictured by the lifting up of the brazen serpent in the wilderness. All of His experiences were foreknown, forearranged and necessary. When He came to earth to do the Father's will. He did not know of all that was to come. But He learned obedience by the things which He suffered, the things which were "written in the Book." He submitted Himself to all the Father's will, and thus He proved His loyalty. As He Himself declared, "I came not to do Mine own will, but the will of My Father which sent Me!" As the hour of the consummation of His sacrifice drew near, in the lonely shades of Gethsemane, the Master prayed, "My Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from Me!" We are not to suppose that He prayed for the cup of death to pass away; but He wondered whether or not the ignominious experiences of the crucifixion might pass. Yet we find that He did not murmur or rebel, but said, "Not My will, but Thine, be done!"

SPECIAL SUPERVISION OF OUR CUP.

We see that our beloved Lord drank of the bitter cup to its dregs, and did so thankfully. And we are to remember that He gave the cup to us, that we should all drink of, it not that we should all have exactly the same experiences that He had, but that we must all drink of the cup of suffering and death in the Father's own way. Jesus was the Perfect One, and the Father dealt with Him in a very particular manner.

In our cases the experiences would be different; because of our imperfection we could not be dealt with from the standpoint of perfection. We are, therefore, not to think of our cup as a definite, fixed programme as was the Master's, but rather that the Father permitted us to have a share in the cup of death with His Son. Our cup is supervised by our Saviour, although it is the cup poured by the Father; for it is the Father's programme.

In the Master's case the cup was necessary for the sins of the whole world. In our case it is not necessary, but it has pleased the Father to grant us a share in the sufferings and glory of our Lord. Jesus makes good our deficiencies and develops our characters, fashioning us into His own glorious image. Without this supervision of our cup by our Lord, we might be very poorly developed in many qualities ; therefore our cup needs to be specially supervised. And so He assures us that, while the necessary experiences are coming to us, at the same time His grace will be sufficient, and His strength will be made perfect in our weakness, and all things will be made to work together for our good.

Let us never forget that unless we partake of His cup, unless we are immersed into death with Him, we can have no share in His Kingdom of glory, we can never sit with Him in His Throne, Let us then count all the things of this earth as loss and dross that we may attain this Pearl of Great Price. As the experiences of suffering come to us; let us not be afraid, nor “think it strange concerning the fiery trials that shall try us, as though some strange thing happened unto us” ; for even “hereunto were we called,” to suffer with our beloved Master now, and by and by be glorified together with Him in the Kingdom eternal!

“Are ye able to walk in the narrow, strait way,
With no friend by your side, no arm for your stay?
Can ye bravely go on through the darkening night?
Can ye patiently wait ‘till the Lord sends the light ?

“Ah, if thus ye can drink of the Cup He shall pour,
And if never the banner of Truth ye would lower,
His beloved ye are, and His crown ye shall wear,
In His Throne ye shall sit, and His glory shall share!”

IN MY NAME.

“There were only two or three of us
Who came to the place of prayer—
Came in the teeth of a driving storm;
But for that we did not care,

Since after our hymns of praise had risen,
And our earnest prayers were said,
The Master Himself was present there
And gave us the living bread.

“We noted His look in each other’s face,
So loving, and glad, and free:
We felt His touch when our heads were bowed,
We heard His ‘Come to Me!’

Nobody saw Him lift the latch,
And none unbarred the door;
But ‘Peace’ was His token in every heart,
And how could we ask for more ?

“Each of us felt the relief from sin,
Christ’s purchase for one and all;
Each of us dropped his load of care,
And heard the heavenly call;

And over our spirits a blessed calm
Swept in from the Jasper Sea.
And strength was ours for the toil of life
In the days that were yet to be.

“It was only a handful gathered in
To that little place of prayer.
Outside were struggle and strife and sin,
But the Lord Himself was there.

He came to redeem the pledge
He gave Wherever His loved ones be,
To give His comfort and joy to them
Though they count but two or three.”

Why Sorrow, Sin, Death and Evil are Permitted.

No difficulty, perhaps, more frequently presents itself to the inquiring mind than the question. Why did God permit the present reign of evil? .Why did He permit Satan to present the temptation to our first parents, after having created them perfect .and upright? Or why did He allow the forbidden tree to have a place among the frond ? Despite all attempts to turn it aside, the question will obtrude itself—Could not God have prevented all possibility of man's fall? ‘

The difficulty undoubtedly arises from a failure to comprehend the plan of God. God could have prevented the entrance of sin, hut the fact that lie did not should be sufficient proof to us that its present permission is designed ultimately to work out some greater good. God's plans, seen in their completeness, will prove the wisdom of the course pursued. Some inquire, Could not God, with whom all things are possible, have interfered in season to prevent the full accomplishment of Satan's design? Doubtless, He could; hut such interference would have prevented the accomplishment of His own purposes. His purpose was to make manifest the perfection, majesty and righteous authority of His law, and to prove both to men and to angels the evil consequences resulting from its violation.

Besides, in their very nature, some things are impossible even with God, as the Scriptures state. It is “impossible for God to lie” (Heb. 6:18). “He cannot deny Himself” (2 Tim. 2:13). He cannot do wrong, and therefore He could not choose any but the wisest and best plan for introducing His creatures into life, even though our short-sighted vision might for a time fail to discern the hidden springs of infinite wisdom.

The Scriptures declare that all things were created for the Lord's pleasure (Rom. 4:11)—without doubt, for the pleasure of dispensing His blessings, and of exercising the attributes of His glorious being. And though, in the working out of His benevolent design permits evil and evil doers for a time to play an active part, yet it is not for evil's sake, nor because He is in league with sin; for He declares that He is “not a God that bath pleasure in wickedness.” (Psa. is 4). Though opposed to evil in every sense, God permits (i.e., does not hinder) it for a time, because His wisdom sees a way in which it may be made a lasting and valuable lesson to His creatures.

God could have made mankind devoid of ability to discern between right and wrong, or able only to discern a do right ; but to have made him so would have been to make merely a living machine, and certainly not a mental image of his Creator. Or He might have made man perfect and a free agent, as He did, and have guarded him from Satan's temptation. In that case, man's experience being limited to good, he would have been continually liable to suggestions of evil from without, or to ambitions from within, which would have made the everlasting future uncertain, and an outbreak of disobedience and disorder might always have been a possibility, besides which, good would never have been so highly appreciated except by its contrast with evil.

God first made His creatures acquainted with good, surrounding them with it in Eden; and afterward, as a penalty for disobedience, He gave them a severe knowledge of evil. Expelled from Eden and deprived of fellowship with Himself, God let them experience sickness, pain and death, that they might thus forever know evil and the inexpediency and exceeding sinfulness of sin.

By a comparison of results they came to an appreciation and proper estimate of both; "And the Lord said, Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil." (Gen. 3:22). In this their posterity share, except that they first obtain their knowledge of evil, and cannot fully realise what good is until they experience it in the Times of Restitution, as a result of their redemption by Him who will then be their judge and King.

The moral sense, or judgment of right and wrong, and the liberty to use it, which Adam possessed, were important features of his likeness to God. The law of right and wrong was written in his natural constitution. It was part of his nature, just as it is a part of the divine nature. . But let us not forget that this image or likeness of God, this originally law-inscribed nature of man, has lost much of its clear outline through the erasing, degrading influence of sin; hence it is not now what it was in the first man. Ability to love implies ability to hate; hence we may reason that the Creator could not make man in His own likeness, with power to love and to do right, without the corresponding ability to hate and to do wrong. This liberty of choice, termed free moral agency, or free will, is a part of man's original endowment; and this, together with the full measure of his mental and moral faculties, constituted him an image of his Creator. To-day, after six thousand years of degradation, so much of the original likeness has been erased by sin that we are not free, being bound, to a greater or less extent, by sin and its entailments, so that sin is now more easy and therefore more agreeable to the fallen race than is righteousness.

That God could have given Adam such a vivid impression of the many evil results of sin as would have deterred him from it we need not question, but we believe that God foresaw that an actual experience of the evil would be the surest and most lasting lesson to serve man eternally; and for that reason God did not prevent but permitted man to take his choice, and to feel the consequences of evil. Had opportunity to sin never been permitted, man could not have resisted it, consequently there would have been neither virtue nor merit in his right doing. God seeketh such to worship Him as worship in spirit and in truth. He desires intelligent and willing obedience, rather than ignorant, mechanical service. He already had in operation inanimate mechanical agencies accomplishing His will, but His design was to make a nobler thing, an intelligent creature in His own likeness, a lord for earth, whose loyalty and righteousness would be based upon appreciation of right and wrong, of good and evil.

The principles of right and wrong, as principles, have always existed, and must always exist; and all perfect, intelligent creatures in God's likeness must be free to choose either, though the right principle only will forever continue to be active. The Scriptures inform us that when the activity of the evil principle has been permitted long enough to accomplish God's purpose, it will forever cease to be active, and that all who continue to submit to its control shall forever cease to exist. (1 Cor. 15:25, 26; Heb. 2:14). Right-doing and right-doers, only, shall continue forever.

But the question recurs in another form: Could not man have been made acquainted with evil in some other way than by experience? There are four ways of knowing things, namely, by intuition, by observation, by experience, and by information received through sources accepted as positively truthful. An intuitive knowledge would be a direct apprehension, without the process of reasoning, or the necessity_ for proof. Such knowledge belongs only to the divine Jehovah, the eternal fountain of all wisdom and truth, who, of necessity and in the very nature of things, is superior to all His creatures. Therefore, man's knowledge of good and evil could not be intuitive. Man's knowledge might have come by observation, but in that event there must needs have been some exhibition of evil and its results for man to observe. This would imply the permission of evil somewhere, among some beings, and why not as well among men, and upon the earth, as among others elsewhere?

Why should not man be the illustration, and get his knowledge by practical experience? It is so: man is gaining a practical experience, and is furnishing an illustration to others as well, being "made a spectacle to angels."

The severity of the penalty was not a display of hatred and malice on God's part, but the necessary and inevitable, final result of evil, which God thus allowed man to see and feel. God can sustain life as long as He sees fit, even against the destructive power of actual evil; but it would be as impossible for God to sustain such a life everlasting, as it is for God to lie. That is, it is morally impossible. Such a life could only become more and more a source of unhappiness to itself and others; therefore, God is too good to sustain an existence so useless and injurious to itself and others, and, His sustaining power being withdrawn, destruction, the natural result of evil, would ensue. Life is a favour, a gift of God, and it will be continued everlastingly only to the obedient.

:No injustice has been clone to Adam's posterity in not affording them each an individual trial. Jehovah was in no sense bound to bring us into existence; and, having brought us into being, no law -of equity or justice binds Him to perpetuate our being ever-lastingly, nor even to grant us a trial under promise of everlasting life if obedient. Mark this point well : The present life, which from the cradle to the tomb is but a process of dying, is, notwithstanding all its evils and disappointments, a boon, a favour, even if there were no hereafter.

Many have imbibed the erroneous idea that God placed our race on trial for life with the alternative of eternal torture, whereas nothing of the kind is even hinted at in the penalty. The favour or blessing of God to His obedient children is life—;continuous life—free from pain, sickness and every other element of decay and death. Adam was given this blessing in the full measure, but warned that he would be deprived of this "gift" if he failed to render obedience to God—"in the day that thou eatest thereof, dying, thou shalt die." He knew nothing of a life in torment as the penalty of sin. Life everlasting is nowhere promised to any it the obedient. Life is God's gift, and death, the opposite of life, is the penalty He prescribes.

Eternal torture is nowhere suggested in the Old Testament Scriptures, and only a few statements in the New Testament can be so misconstrued as to appear to teach it:. and these are found either among the symbolism of Revelation, or -among the parables and dark sayings of our Lord. which were not understood by the people who heard them (Luke 8:10), and which seem to lie but little better comprehended to-day. "The wages of sin is death." (Ruin. 6:23). "The soul that sinned), it shall die."—Ezek. 18:4.

Many have supposed God unjust in allowing Adam's condemnation to be shared by his posterity, instead of granting each one a trial and chance for everlasting life similar to that which Adam enjoyed. But what will such say if it now be shown that the world's opportunity and trial for life will be much more favorable than was Adam's; and that, too, because God adopted this plan of permitting Adam's race to share his penalty in a natural way? We believe this to be the case, and will endeavour to make it plain.

God assures us that as condemnation passed upon all in Adam, so He has arranged for a new head, father, or life- giver for the race into whom all may be transferred by faith ; and that as all in Adam shared the curse of death, so all in Christ will share the blessing of life, being justified by faith in His blood. (Rom. 5:12, 18, 19). Thus seen, the death of Jesus, the undefiled, the sinless one, was a complete settlement toward God of the sin of Adam. As one man had sinned, and all in him had shared his curse, his penalty, so Jesus, having paid the penalty of that one sinner, bought not only Adam but all of his posterity—all men—who by heredity shared his weaknesses and sins and the penalty of these—death. •Our Lord, “the man -Christ Jesus,” Himself unblemished, approved, and with a perfect seed or race in Him, unborn, likewise untainted with sin, gave His all of human life and title as the full ransom-price for Adam and the race or seed in him when sentenced. Having thus fully purchased the lives of Adam and his race, Christ offers to adopt as His seed. His children, all of Adam’s race who will accept the terms of His New Covenant and thus by faith come into His family—the family of God—and receive everlasting life. Thus the Redeemer will “see His seed [as many of Adam’s seed as will accept adoption, upon His conditions] and prolong His days [resurrection to a higher than human plane, being granted Him by the Father as a reward for His obedience],” and all in the most unlikely way ; by the sacrifice of life and posterity. And thus it is written: “As all in Adam die. even so all in Christ shall be made alive.”—Corrected translation, 1 Cor. 15:22.

The injury we received through Adam’s fall (we suffered no injustice) is, by God’s favour, to be more than offset with favour through Christ; and all will sooner or later (in God’s “due time”) have a full opportunity to be restored to the same standing that Adam enjoyed before he sinned. Those who do not receive a full knowledge and, by faith, an enjoyment of this favour of God in the present time (and such are the great majority, including children and heathen) will assuredly have these privileges in the next age, or “world to come,” the dispensation or age to follow the present. To this end, “all that are in their graves . . . shall come forth.” As each one (whether in this age or the next) becomes fully aware of the ransom-price given by our Lord Jesus, and of His subsequent privileges, he is considered as on trial, as Adam was; and obedience brings lasting life, and disobedience lasting death—the “second death.” Perfect obedience, however, without perfect ability to render it, is not required of any. The members of the Church during the Gospel age, have had the righteousness of Christ imputed to them by faith, to make up their unavoidable deficiencies through the weaknesses of the flesh ; and this same grace will operate toward “whosoever will” of the world during the Messianic age. Not until physical perfection is reached will absolute moral perfection be expected. This new trial, the result of the ransom and the New Covenant, will differ from the trial in Eden, in that in it the acts of each one will affect only his own future.

But would not this be giving some of the race a second chance to gain everlasting life? We answer—The first chance for everlasting life was lost for himself and all of his race, “yet in his loins,” by father Adam’s disobedience. Under that original trial, “condemnation passed upon all men”; and God’s plan was that through Christ’s redemption- sacrifice Adam, and all who lost life in his failure, should, after having tasted of the exceeding sinfulness of sin and felt the weight of sin’s penalty, be given the opportunity to turn unto God through faith in the Redeemer. If anyone choose to call this a “second chance,” let him do so; it must certainly be Adam’s second chance, and in a sense at least it is the same for all of the redeemed race, but it will be the first individual opportunity of his descendants, who, when born, were already under condemnation to death. Call it what we please, the facts are the same; viz., All were sentenced to death ‘because of Adam’s disobedience, and all will enjoy (in this life or the next) a full opportunity to gain everlasting life. This, as the angels declared, is “Good tidings of great joy which shall be unto all people.”

And, as the Apostle declared, this grace of God—that our Lord Jesus “gave Himself a ransom for all”—must be “testified” to all “in due time.” (Rom. 5:17-19 ; 1 Tim. 2:4-6). Men, not God, have limited to the Gospel age this chance or opportunity of attaining life. God, on the contrary, tells us that the Gospel age is merely for the selection of the Church, the royal priesthood through whom, during a succeeding age, all others shall be brought to an accurate knowledge of the Truth and granted full opportunity to secure everlasting life under the New Covenant.

But what advantage is there in the method pursued ? Why not give all men an individual chance •for life now, at once, without the long process of Adam's trial and condemnation, the share by his offspring in his condemnation, the redemption of all by Christ's sacrifice and the new offer to all of everlasting life? If evil must be permitted because of man's free moral agency. why is its extermination accomplished by such a peculiar and circuitous method? Why allow so much misery to intervene, and to come upon many who will ultimately receive the gift of life as obedient children of God?

All! that is the point on which interest in this subject centres. Had God ordered differently, the propagation of our species, so that children would not partake of the results of parental sins—weakness, mental, moral and physical—and had the Creators arranged that all should have a favourable Edenic condition for their testing, and that transgressors only should be condemned and “cut off,” how man might we presume-would, under all those favourable conditions, be found worthy, and how many unworthy of life?

If the one instance of Adam be taken as a criterion and he certainly was in respect a sample of perfect manhood), the conclusion would be that none would have been found perfectly obedient and worthy; because none ‘ would possess that clear knowledge of and experience with God, which would develop in them full confidence in His laws, beyond their personal judgment.

We are assured that it is Christ's knowledge of the Father that enabled Him to trust and obey implicitly. (Isa. 53:11). But let us suppose that one-fourth would gain life ; or even more, suppose that one-half were found worthy, and that the other half would suffer the wages of sin—death. Then what? Let us suppose the other half, the obedient, had neither experienced nor witnessed sin: might they not forever feel a curiosity towards things forbidden, only restrained through fear of God and of the penalty? Their service could not be so hearty as though they knew good and evil; and hence had a full appreciation of the benevolent designs of the Creator in making the laws which govern His own course as well as the course of His creatures.

Then too, consider the half that would thus go into death as the result of their own wilful sin. They would be lastingly cut .of from life, and their only hope would be that God would in love remember them as His creatures, the work of His hands, and provide another trial for them. But why do so? The only reason would be a hope that if they were re-awakened and tried again, some of them, by reason of their larger experience, might then choose obedience and live.

But even if such a plan were as good in its results as the one God has adopted, there would be serious objections to it.

How much more like the wisdom of God to confine sin to certain limits, as His plan does. How much better even our finite minds can discern it to be, to have but one perfect and impartial law, which declares the wages of wilful sin to be death—destruction—cutting off from life. God thus limits the evil which He permits, by providing that the Messianic reign of Christ shall accomplish the full extinction of evil and also of wilful evil-doers, and usher in an eternity of righteousness based upon full knowledge and perfect free-will obedience by perfect beings.

Those who can appreciate this feature of God's plan, which, in condemning all in one representative. opened the way for the ransom and restitution of all by one Redeemer, will find in it the solution of many perplexities. They will see that the condemnation of all in one was the reverse of an injury ; it was a great favour to all when taken in connection with God's plan .for providing justification for all through another one's sacrifice. Evil will be forever extinguished when God's purpose in permitting it shall have been accomplished, and when the benefits of the ransom are as extensive as has been the penalty of sin. It is impossible, however, to appreciate rightly this feature of the plan of God, without a full recognition of the sinfulness of sin, the nature of its penalty-death, the importance and value of the ransom which our Lord Jesus gave, .and the positive and complete restoration of the individual to favourable. conditions, conditions under which he will have full and ample trial, before being adjudged worthy of the reward (lasting life), or of the penalty (lasting death).

In view of the great plan of redemption, and the consequent "restitution of all things," through Christ, we can see that blessings result .through the permission of evil which, probably. could not otherwise have been so fully realised.

Not only are men •benefitted to all eternity by the experience gained, and angels by their observation of man's experiences, but all are further advantaged by a fuller acquaintance with God's character as manifested in His plan. When His plan is fully accomplished, all will be able to read clearly His wisdom, justice. love and power. They will see the justice which could not violate the divine decree, nor save the justly condemned race without a full cancellation of their penalty by a willing Redeemer. They will see the love which provided this noble sacrifice and which highly exalted the Redeemer to God's own right hand, giving Him power and authority thereby to restore to life those whom lie had purchased with His precious blood. They will also see the power and wisdom which were able to work out a glorious destiny for His creatures, and so to overrule every opposing influence as to make them either the willing or the unwilling agents for the advancement and final accomplishment of His grand designs. Hid evil not been Permitted and thus overruled by divine providence, we cannot see how these results could have 'been attained. The permission of evil for a time among men thus displays a far-seeing wisdom, which grasped all the attendant circumstances, devised the remedy, and marked the final outcome through His power and grace.

Lord, Increase Our Faith !

Luke 17:5-19.

OUR Lord's teachings were contrary to the spirit of this world, and so adverse to its policy that His disciples felt that to adopt His methods and principles and discard their own really involved a revolution of their former ideas. And in yielding themselves as true disciples, they felt the need of a stronger, firmer faith than they had yet been called upon to exercise. They were quite persuaded from the purity and nobility of His character and from His miracles and His teachings, that He was indeed a teacher sent from God; yet, remembering the requirement of discipleship, "Whoso forsaketh not all that he hath (all his own ideas and will and possessions and earthly prospects), he cannot be My disciple," they felt that to continue in this attitude of acceptable discipleship would require a growing faith which would rise to every emergency of His requirements. Hence their request, "Lord, increase our faith."

And they were quite right in their reasoning; for the Lord also clearly shows that the true disciples make progress in the school of Christ toward the full overcoming of the spirit of the world. And this progress can be achieved by faith only—by such full, implicit confidence in His teachings and training as will keep them continually as earnest, diligent pupils under His guidance and instruction. "This is the victory that overcometh the world even our faith."

(1 John 5:4.) This, by the way, is very suggestive of what it signifies to be an "overcomer," to whom pertains all the exceeding great and precious promises of the Gospel of Christ. It is simply this: That day by day we attentively heed and patiently carry out the instructions of our infallible Teacher and Guide in full, unquestioning faith in His wisdom and love; no matter how heavy will be the daily cross or how severe the discipline. It is indeed a tedious, life-long process, but the end will be glorious, and even the daily discipline, patiently and meekly borne, will bring the present rewards of conscious progress in the great work of overcoming and of a nearer approach to the goal of a ripened Christian character. All of this is implied in the beautiful words, so expressive of the faith and fervent devotion of true discipleship

"Nearer, my God, to Thee, nearer to Thee, E'en though it be a cross that raiseth me."

We observe that the Lord made no direct answer to this request of His disciples, but that He dwelt upon the power and desirability of faith. He showed that even a weak, but genuine, faith could so lay hold upon the power of God as to instantly root up and replant a tree, and on another occasion He said it could remove mountains into the midst of the sea. Is the suggestion preposterous? No, not to faith; for, bear in mind, faith is not imagination, nor self-will, nor ignorance, but it is a reasonable thing, founded upon good and sustainable evidence ; so that our Lord's teaching here implied what on another occasion

While the Lord made no direct answer to this request for an increase of faith, His whole subsequent course with the disciples was a fulfilment of it. And so it will be with us if, in a similarly true spirit of discipleship, we pray, "Lord, increase our faith." The increase of faith will come, not by a miraculous infusion, but in the natural process of the Lord's leading and training. In the school of experience, in following His leadings, and in the 'blessed results of each step of the way, faith develops and grows.

Verses 7-10 show that it is in the Lord's service we are to look for the rewards of faith, the special manifestations of Divine favour, in the removal of obstacles and difficulties, found to be in the way of our progress in His service by cultivating Christian character in ourselves and others, and in ministering generally to the furtherance of the Divine plans. We may not expect these rewards of Divine favour, except as we prosecute the service. And when they are received we are not to regard them as evidences that we have done any more than it was our duty to do. As servants of God we owe Him the full measure of our ability; hence we may not feel that we have merited or earned the great blessings of heavenly inheritance and joint-heirship with Christ. we have merely done our duty ;. but God, with exceeding riches of grace, has prepared, for those who lovingly serve Him, rewards far beyond what they. could have asked or hoped for. We can do no meritorious works; even at our best our service is marred by many imperfections, and could never find acceptance with God except as supplemented by the perfect and finished work. of Christ.

Verses 11-16 show how the rewards of faith, which are of God's free grace, and by no means earned by our faith. should lie gratefully received. The examples given illustrate the fact that the rewards of faith are not always gratefully received. Here were ten lepers cleansed, and only one returned to give thanks and worship. So also of the many who receive justification by faith, the forgiveness of sins and reconciliation with God through Christ, how few return to present themselves living sacrifices, thank-offerings, to God, their reasonable service.

Get the habit—a glorious one—of referring 'oil to Christ. How did He feel? Think? Act ? So then must I feel, and think, and act. Should I please myself? "For even Christ pleased not Himself."—F. W. Robertson.

DR. BEVAN, on being asked why God allowed such terrible disasters as earthquakes, which suddenly destroyed good and bad, quite frankly acknowledges that he cannot solve the question. He said "If I were you I would give up the problem as in-soluble," and quotes Dean Inge as saying: "Apropos the monstrous injustice and wrong everywhere, I can not answer these questions satisfactorily." Yet the matter is quite easily understood if we will learn from God's Word. The trouble is that as far as Dr. Bevan is concerned, he appears to have lost faith in the inspiration of the Bible. In answer to a question as to the way in which the Prophets received their messages, he replied : "The ways by which God has revealed His will in past ages are the ways by which He reveals it now. "There was nothing unique in the Prophets' intercourse with God, nor was there anything preferential in God's revelation to them. There is only one way by which any man, prophet or other. receives divine messages, and that is by the medium of his ordinary senses of thought and feeling and will. It is true that the .old prophets had a degree of ecstasy in their prophetic experience, and it was probably this that made them feel that what they had to say possessed divine authority and made them speak out so definitely and boldly. 'Thus said the Lord.' Although the fact that the prophets were 'Oriental may be held to explain at least partly their ecstasy, it seems to me that such ecstasy may not be essentially different^ from the emotion men and women experience when their thought, feeling and will are raised to their highest pitch of discipline during some intense concentration upon some aspect of religion."

With such loose views regarding God's Word, it is not surprising that a man, however otherwise learned, should be unable to answer the question as to why evil is permitted. The Bible, as the Divine revelation concerning the great purpose in creation respecting humanity, is the only means of explaining this problem.

If Dr. Bevan's suggestion respecting the prophets was true, then they should be discarded altogether, for not only would there be no certainty of truth in their messages, but we should have to conclude that they were either deluded men or deceivers, for they distinctly claim Divine instructions to deliver their messages. We should also have to consider that our Lord was deceived, for He so often quoted the prophets; indeed on the one occasion we read that He showed how Moses and all the prophets had written of the things that had taken place in Jerusalem, i.e., His crucifixion, etc. The Apostles also must have been deceived, for Peter says: "Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the holy Spirit," and Paul says: "God who at sundry times and in divers manners spake unto the fathers by the prophets hath in these last days spoken unto us by His Son." If Moses' and all the prophets were either deluded or deceived. then we have no Word of God for our guidance, and we could not understand anything regarding the permission of evil nor of the origin or destiny of mankind. When, however, apart from such leaders, we enquire in earnestness and faith of God's Word, we find that it reveals a plan, a purpose which is, and has been gradually working out, and which gives us the reason for the permission of evil, without conflicting with the declared attributes of God—Wisdom, Justice, Love and Power.

Had there been no remedy already arranged mankind would never have been allowed to be represented in the one man, Adam, and condemned to death on account of his disobedience. The Divine design was to fill this earth with a race of beings in the likeness of God, i.e.. having reasoning and moral qualities like God, having a conscience regarding right and wrong, having a free will, yet, so loving righteousness and hating iniquity that that free-will should always operate along right lines. To this end a knowledge of both good and evil was necessary, and (It'd foresaw that in most cases men would fall if given a trial for life without any experience of sill and its consequences. Had everyone been brought forth in perfection and given an individual trial or opportunity, upon their failures each would have required a separate Saviour, a perfect human life to die to ransom them from the sentence of death. It was in wisdom and in love that God included all in the one man's sin that He might have mercy on all in the one man's (the 2nd Adam's) righteousness and ransom sacrifice, so that "as all in Adam die so all in Christ shall be made alive again."-1 Cor. 15:21-22 ; Rom. 5:12, 21. The harmony and beauty of the Bible is only seen in the light of this great Plan of Salvation. The first three chapters of Genesis show the fall of man into sin, and its dread consequence the last three chapters of Revelation show the recovery and completion of the creation of the human race—the whole earth made like the garden in Eden. Then, through the whole Book runs like a golden cord the thought that “without the shedding of blood is no remission of sin,” and all the holy prophets speak of the “restitution of all things,” through the sufferings of Christ. “the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world,” “Who tasted death for every man.”

Mankind, in its head and representative, wilfully dis-obeyed God and chose to take his own course at the instance of Satan. and was, therefore, driven from the presence of Jehovah. The gracious providence of God was withdrawn. Justice could have inflicted immediate death—the penalty, but Wisdom and love had found the way—a ransom would be provided—”The Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.” In view of this, man was allowed to continue and bring forth the family, all born in sin—condemned already—and away from God. They must get experience of the way of the transgressor. God has thus allowed mankind to take the consequences; even the earth was cursed, left in its unfinished, imperfect condition, so that man may have an experience of evil and disasters, a history of what it means to be left without Divine protection and providence. So then God is not responsible in these matters; these calamities occur as the natural out workings of nature, such as earthquakes, cyclones, shipwrecks, explosions. etc., and wars, murders and sorrows, even worse, are all the result of the depravity of man left to himself on the broad road to destruction.

One may ask why all this still continues, since Christ died to pay the price of sin? The Scriptures show the reason to be that the Divine arrangement was that mankind should have six thousand years of this experience during which the race should continue to increase, and that then on the seventh day—the seventh thousand years —Christ’s kingdom will be established. Satan and his wicked spirits will be restrained that they will not be able further to tempt or hinder. The truth God’s gracious purpose will be made plain to all, and the highway of holiness leading back to God and perfect manhood will be opened up. It will be an easy way, no stones of stumbling in the pathway, no lion on the road (Satan being bound), (Isaiah 35 so different from the present “narrow way.”

The reason why Christ came to earth so long .before the 6000 years of sin’s experience were over was in order to select a “ little Hock “ (Luke 12:32), the Church, the Abrahamic seed (Gal. 3:16. 29), to lie joint heir with Him in His kingdom. This was explained by James in Acts 15:14-17. and now the time is very near when this elect class shall be complete and be glorified with Christ. The Bride must shortly be made ready, then the marriage of the Lamb takes place and the wider message will then go forth—Rev..22:17. “The spirit and the Bride 11) say come. And let him that heareth say come. . let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will let him take the water of life freely.”

When God’s providence is again over mankind there will be no more disasters, no more sorrows and sighing. there shall be no more cur—. “And God shall wipe away all tears from their there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying. neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away.” —Rev. 21:4.

Those who have gone down through disasters of all kinds will come again, and have the opportunity of that happy time, “for all that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God and come forth.”

CORRECTIONS.

Attention has been drawn to the wrong expression used in the opening remarks under the heading, "To put you in Remembrance," which appeared in the last issue of the "People's Paper." While those fully conversant with the truth have probably discerned what was intended, we desire to make the matter clear, so that no one may be misled.

As the statement appeared it would convey the thought that the anti-ransom theory of Universalism was more fundamental than' - an appreciation of the fact that we are living "in the days of the Son of Man." The passage should have read: While the matter of being able to appreciate that we are living "in the days of the Son of Man." . . . is not so fundamental as is a clear knowledge of the ransom-sacrifice of Jesus Christ [embracing an understanding of how decidedly anti-ransom is the theory of Universalism], yet it is good to know the present truth, etc.

On page 78 of the same issue, a line of a poem reads: "Deeply rooted, Lord, in Three." The last word was a misprint for "Thee," and we trust no one has concluded that the thought of the Trinity was intended.

DARWINISM DISCREDITED.

New School of Biologists.

LONDON.

“A new school of biologists has arisen whose conclusions are easier to reconcile with the Genesis narrative than the teachings of Darwin, Huxley, Haeckel, and others,” said Dr. Arthur Short, the famous British surgeon, when lecturing on the differences between man and the ape.

“The majority of scientists,” Dr. Short continued, “probably still hang on to the grimly orthodox Darwinism, but the tendency among active minds is adverse to it.” He expressed the opinion that blood tests were unsatisfactory. There was only a slight resemblance in the blood of man and the ape. Besides, no sane physician would dare to transfuse an ape’s blood into a living man. One would expect frequent “throw-backs.” recalling simian ancestry. but congenital human defects, for example, the hare lip, the cleft palate. and the club foot were not characteristic all: nian. it was dangerous to deduce the gradual evolution of the human brain from increasing skill in the manufacture of implements. ‘because that was equivalent to arguing that the improver was always more intelligent than the originator, as if the designer of the latest locomotive had a finer brain than Stephenson’s.—

QUESTION BOX

Question.—Kindly explain Luke 14:26. How would you regard a person who hated his or her parents?

Answer.—We would regard a person who hated his ,or her parent (from the standpoint of the present use if the word “hate”) as one in a very wrong condition heart, and the Scriptures also state that he who hates his brother is a murderer. Our thought cannot be fixed on the mere use of a word, but by observing also the context, and comparing scripture with scripture. A comparative meaning of the original word is given in Strong’s Concordance—viz., love less. We should say that in the verse quoted the expression “hate” is given to indicate that the love for the Lord must predominate be first—and all other loves be secondary. Thus for the true followers of the Lord they must learn to love less father, mother, wife, etc., and love fully and chiefly the Lord.

Question.—Some who think that Christ will be seen by every one at His second presence, while acknowledging that the word “see” in Rev. 1:7 might, in other instances refer to mental discernment, claim that because the “eye” is mentioned here that it must mean that every human eye shall behold Christ when He returns as King of Earth. What is your thought?

Answer.—The fact that this passage has reference not to the literal eye or physical sight, but to the eye of faith, the mental perception, should be clearly seen when reference is made to Rev. 3:17-18. The Lord counsels the Laodicean Church (the Church of our own time) to “anoint thine eyes with eye salve that thou mayst see.” No one can reasonably think that the Lord here means literal ointment or physical eyes, or natural sight. So, then, the “every eye” of Rev. 1:7 must also consistently be understood to mean the faculty of mental or spiritual sight. “Every eye shall see him” means that all the world will recognise Christ as the new Prince of ,the World, just as they now see or recognise Satan as the present “prince of this world.” Numerous passages could be quoted in which “see” is used in this way. Heb. 2:9, “We see Jesus who was made a little lower than angels.” John 12:45: “He that seeth Me seeth Him that sent Me.” Yet we read, “No man hath seen God,” nor “Seen His shape.” Again Jesus said, “Abraham saw My day,” etc., etc.

The Book of Revelations is a book of symbols, and chapter 1, verse 7 is no exception, “Behold He cometh with clouds (symbols of troubles on earth), and every eye shall see Him.” Not literally riding on literal clouds, but as the clouds of trouble envelop the earth men will come to recognise that a new ruler has taken control. They will come to see that Satan has been dethroned, the unrighteous systems are being overturned, and a reign of righteousness is being inaugurated with the new King. Christ, in full control. Every eye will recognise Him, and unto Him every knee shall bow and every tongue confess.

ADA ME Jeanne De La Motile Guyon

ADA ME Jeanne De La Motile Guyon was educated in convents, saved at the foot of the Cross in 1668. sanctified in Notre Dame, witnessed for Jesus in the Court of Louis XIV., in France, Switzerland and Italy, to bishops and priests, nuns and common people: was imprisoned seven years, and died. Of her conversion day she said: "I bade farewell forever to assemblies which I had visited, to plays and diversions, dancing, unprofitable walks and parties of pleasure. The pleasures and amusements so much prized and esteemed by the world now appeared to me dull and insipid—so much so that I wondered how I ever could have enjoyed them."

After making a full consecration, she Wrote: "I hence-forth take Jesus Christ to be mine. I promise to receive him as a husband to me. And I give myself to Him, in this marriage of spirit, that I may be of the same mind with Him—meek, pure, nothing in myself, and united in God's will. And, pledged as I am to be. His, I accept, as a part of my marriage portion, the temptations and sorrows, the crosses and contempt which fell to Him." Concerning her imprisonment, she wrote as follows: "I passed my time in great peace, content to spend the remainder of my life there, if such should be the will of God. I employed part of my time in writing religious songs. I and my maid, La Gautiere, who was with me in prison, committed them to heart as fast as I made them. Together we sang praises to Thee, O, our (hod! It sometimes seemed to me as if I were a little bird whom the Lord had placed in a cage, and that I had nothing to do now but to sing. The joy of my heart gave a brightness to the objects around me. The stones of my prison looked in my eyes like rubies. I esteemed them more than all the gaudy brilliancies of a vain world. My heart was full of that joy which thou givest to them who love Thee in the midst of their greatest crosses."

Little Opportunities.

"We all might do good where we often do ill;
There is always a way, if we have but the will:
For even a word, kindly breathed or suppressed,
May guard off some pain, or give peace to some breast.
"We all might do good in a thousand small ways;
Forbearing to flatter, yet giving due praise: •
In spurning ill rumour, reproving wrong done,
And treating but kindly the heart we have won.
"We all might do good, whether lowly or great—
A deed is not judged by the purse or estate;
If only a cup of cold water is giv'n,
Like the mite of the widow, 'tis something for heav'n."

The true Christian is like the sun, which pursues his noiseless track, and everywhere leaves the effects of his beams in blessing upon the world around him.—Luther.

It requires character to hold back as a means to progress; to restrain one's impulses to speak, or to write, or to act hastily in an emergency. And character is developed by its exercise in personal constraint. It is often a great deal easier to speak out than to refrain from speaking, to write at once than to delay writing, to press forward than to remain inactive; and then it is that the true man's character is tested, and that it triumphs in the testing. In this light it is that the inspired declaration has its practical bearing—"He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city."—"S.S. Our Gathering unto Him.

(Reprint from "Old Paths.")

"Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." (Psalm 50:5.)

"Now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming (parousia—presence) of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto Him. that ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled. neither by spirit. nor by word, nor by letter as from - that the day of Christ is at hand (2 Thess. 2:1

It would appear from the context of the Apostle's -, cowl epistle to the Thessalonians that the brethren at Thessalonica had 'become somewhat confused regarding the matter of the Lord's second coming. Certain teachers. in their midst. had misled them, apparently. into the idea that the second advent of the Lord had already taken place and they that were then living in the day of His presence.

This is not clear, however, from the Authorised Version the Bible. the reading .of which suggests. rather, that the Apostle was objecting to the' teaching that the second Advent of Christ was near. A comparison, nevertheless. with other versions of the Bible, together with the understanding that the word "coming" in verse is a mistranslation of the Greek word parousia—presence, makes clear what the Apostle had in mind. In this connection, lie undoubtedly takes strong exception to the new teaching which had come amongst them, claiming that they were already living in the Day of Christ. In confirmation of this view. we quote from the following translations :

Diaglott.—"That the day of Christ was present."

Moffat.—"That the day of the Lord is already here."

Conybeare and Howson.—"That the day of the Lord is come."

Their view, of course, was not that the Lord could be scot amongst them, as a man in the flesh. but 'that He was present as a spirit being, unseen and invisible to the- natural eye.

The Apostle, in taking exception to this teaching, did not characterise it as extremely foolish and ludicrous to believe that the Lord had returned and yet had not been seen by any of them ; nor did he suggest that, if He were present, as they were teaching, they would all be able to recognise Him in human form. such arguments were used by the Apostle, nor would they have been in accordance. with the Scriptural teaching concerning the changed nature of our Lord and His ability. as a spirit being. to be present, yet invisible to human sight. (John 3:6-8.)

So far as the manner of the Lord's appearing was concerned. therefore. the Apostle had no objection to find with their teaching ; but he demonstrated their error as to the time of the appearing, for apparently they had either overlooked or forgotten certain features of prophetic truth, which- he had previously brought to their attention, and which unless already evident, entirely disproved this new teaching which they were setting forth as advanced light.

THE WICKED ONE REVEALED FIRST

In the first place, the Apostle reminds them that while he was present with them. he had made it clear that before the second Advent could take place, there would first come a great falling away from the faith, and the of sin would be revealed. 'The Apostle understood doubtless. from Daniel's prophecy, in which is described the rising of the "little horn" and its plucking up of three other horns. (Dan. 7:8.)

'There was no evidence of such a falling away having taken place, however, in the Apostle's day, and consequently, he points out to them that their claims regarding the Lord's presence were contrary to the prophetic word and therefore false and Misleading, in his estimation.

Another matter, which they had also overlooked, was the object of the Lord's return. Throughout the Scriptures. the thought of the Lord's return is always closely associated with that of its object—the gathering unto Himself of the bride class. The Lord said to the disciples before He left them: "If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto Myself. (John 14:3.)

Similarly, in our text, these two thoughts are associated in the Apostle's exhortation, when he writes, "We beseech you, brethren, with the coming (parousia—presence) of our Lord Jesus Christ and by our gathering together unto Him"—as a consequence. (2 Thess. 2:1.)

If, then, their teaching was true and the Lord had indeed returned, surely there would be some evidence that their gathering unto Him had in some sense already begun. There was no evidence, however, of any gathering work in their midst. and the only reasonable conclusion to be drawn was that they had been deceived by their teachers, while that which they had accepted as new light was in reality only darkness. Briefly, then, the position was, that they had been misled regarding the matter of the time of the Lord's return, though their conception of the manner of His return was the correct and scriptural one.

Strange to say, many are making a similar mistake today, but in exactly the opposite direction—their mistake being in regard to the manner of the Lord's return. They recognise that the signs of the times, both in the world and amongst the Lord's people, indicate that we are living in the end of the Age, and that therefore the time for the Lord's return is close, but they are looking for Him to appear in a human - body, and thus visible to the natural eye

Not understanding spiritual things, they think that the Lord is still a human being in heaven and thus are unprepared to appreciate the presence of the Lord as a spirit being—unseen by the natural eye. The position of such is that whilst appreciating that it is the due time for the Lord to appear, they are looking for the wrong thing at the right time.

THE MAN OF SIN HAS COME.

In our midst, to-day, there are some who are making the same claim as that made amongst the brethren at Thessalonica, namely, that the Day of Christ is here, and that the second Advent has already taken place; furthermore, it is claimed by such, that the “gathering unto Him” of the Lord’s people is now in progress.

What have we to say to these claims? If they are true, then it is the most momentous thing that has happened since the beginning of the world, not only from the standpoint of the Lord’s people, but also so far as the world of mankind are concerned. If it is not true, our responsibility still remains, and it is our duty to expose it. If it is not true it is the greatest delusion that has come amongst the Lord’s people in these latter days, since iU has resulted in influencing the faith and hope of thousands of the Lord’s sincerest followers. What would the Apostle say to such claims if he were in our midst to-day? Would he urge the same objections as recorded in our text and tell us

- (1) That the whole idea must be a snare, because the Man of Sin has not yet been revealed.
- (2) That since there is no evidence of any gathering work amongst the Lord’s people to-day, any such claims must be a delusion?

In regard to point one, we are quite certain that the Apostle would not urge any such objections to-day, because not only does history reveal that the Man of Sin has come and played his part, as outlined in the prophetic word, but to such an extent has he left his mark upon the records of history, that the period of his power and greatness is described as the Dark Ages.

As to the signs of His presence, all who are awake and watching to-day recognise that these signs are foretold by the Lord and the Apostles, are everywhere evident, not only in the world, but amongst the Lord’s people themselves.

GATHER MY SAINTS UNTO ME.

In reference to point two, most of us would agree that about 50 years ago a movement began amongst the Lord’s people, claiming for its very inception and inspiration

- (1) That the Lord had returned and that the day of His presence had arrived.
- (2) That the harvesting, or gathering home of the Lord’s people, had already begun.

No such movement had ever before taken place amongst the Lord’s people, unto that time. It is true that there had been, in other days, divisions and separations of a sectarian kind, sections following leaders, and divisions over doctrine, such as election and free grace but the movement to which we have just referred was of an entirely different character. The gathering of this day, which had its beginning a matter of 50 years ago, was not to any leader or sectarian cause, nor even around any particular doctrine. It was a call through the truth, to come out from every form of error and bondage and be gathered unto the Lord Himself, for, since the truth represents the unseen Lord, coming unto the truth implies, therefore, coming unto the Lord. Like all previous movements, the call of this day has been an individual one and from every sect and denomination of Christendom. It was, in fact, the proclamation of a most momentous truth—“there standeth one among whom you know not,” or as expressed in the symbols of the Revelation, it was the sounding of the seventh trumpet. (Rev. 11:15.)

FOR THE TRUMPET SHALL SOUND.

The key to the present outlook and harmony of the Divine Plan is, we believe, found in the seventh trumpet. If the seventh trumpet has not sounded, then the Lord has not returned, and all our talk about a harvest-work and the present truth is merely a delusion and a snare. Why do we say so? Because the Apostle, in the most precise and unmistakable language, tells us that the second Advent takes place at the sounding of the seventh trumpet. "For the Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God. (1 Thess. 4:16.) The last, or seventh trumpet, is here designated the "trump of God": just as, in the same way, the last, or seventh seal, is called the "seal of the living God." (Rev. 7:2.)

If, on the other hand, as we shall hope to show, the seventh trumpet has sounded, it proves several things.

(1) That the day of Christ is here and that the second Advent has already taken place. This will be clearly seen when, later, we refer to various texts which describe the events said to transpire during the sounding of the seventh trumpet.

(2) That the dead in Christ are already gathered. It will be seen from the various references to the seventh trumpet that the first thing which takes place when the Lord descends from heaven, is the raising of the sleep- in,, saints—"The dead in Christ shall rise first." (1 Thess. 4:16.)

(3) That the living in Christ, at the present time, are being gathered. This 'becomes very evident also from the Apostle's statement, when he declares that "after" the dead are raised "first," then we, the living, who remain, are to be caught up together with them, to "meet the Lord in the air." (1 Thess. 4:17, Diaglott.) . (4) That the Kingdom, in some sense, is now being set up. This is in harmony with the prophet Daniel's testimony, when he declares, "in the days of those kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed . . . it shall break in pieces and consume all those kingdoms and it shall stand for ever." (Dan. 2:44.)

(5) That the sowing time of this Age is already in the past and that the reaping and gathering work is now in progress.

THE SEVENTH ANGEL SOUNDED.

We would now call attention to the following texts, each one of which, we believe, refers to the sounding of the seventh trumpet. It will be noted that in each instance, although the events transpiring are described from different angles, yet the general harmony and similarity of these events prove conclusively that they all occur during the same period of time, namely, the sounding of the seventh trumpet.

1 Cor. 15:52—"The trumpet shall sound and the .dead (in Christ) shall 'be raised incorruptible and we (the living in Christ) shall be changed."

Rev. 10:7—"In the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished"—the "mystery of God" to which reference is here made, is the call and development of the church, during the present Age. This mystery class will be 'finished and completed, when, during the Lord's second presence, the sleeping saints have been raised and the living ones changed and taken to be with Him beyond the veil.

Rev. 11:15—"The seventh angel sounded ; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, the kingdoms of this world are become the .kingdom of our Lord, and of his Christ." This, in effect, expresses the object of the Lord's second Advent.

1 Thess. 4:16—"For the Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then, we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together (hama--during the same time) with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air.”

Matt. 24:31--He shall send His angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect, from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other.” The reference here is clearly to the harvest work and the gathering of the living saints, through the proclamation of the present truth, by the Lord’s followers—his angels, or messengers.

Summarising the above texts, and comparing the events described in each, we can come to no other conclusion but that the trumpets spoken of in all of them refer to one and the same, namely, the seventh trumpet.

IN THE FIRST RESURRECTION.

We have already noted that abundant signs of the Lord’s presence have been clearly recognised by His . followers during the past 50 years; and since, as we have already seen, it is the seventh trumpet that announces His presence, it clearly follows, then, that if we accept the Lord’s presence as an established truth, we must at the same time be prepared to agree that the sounding of the seventh trumpet commenced a considerable number of years in the past. (1 .Cor. 15:51, 52.)

It will be noted, too, that in all the texts quoted above, having reference to the sounding of the seventh trumpet, the second presence of the Lord and the raising of the sleeping saints are inseparably intertwined. All three events are related and either stand, or fall, together. Consequently, if the sleeping saints have not been raised, then the Lord has not yet returned, and if the Lord has not returned, it follows that the seventh trumpet has not yet sounded. In the light of the Apostle’s statements, however, and the signs of the times, we can come to no other conclusion than that all three events must be regarded as accomplished facts.

The fact that none of the resurrected saints can be seen by the natural eye should be no obstacle to faith, and all who are spiritually minded can readily appreciate that spirit beings, in their normal state, are invisible to human sight. (John 3:8.) Only such as recognise the Lord’s presence and that already the saints have been raised and are with Him, can fully appreciate the cause of the present trouble upon the world. It is clearly the fulfilment of Daniel’s prophecy, which foretold that- a “stone cut out without hands” would smite the image of Gentile power and break it to pieces. (Dan. 2:34.)

WE SHALL BE CHANGED.

Not only do the Scriptures indicate that the gathering of the sleeping saints from death would be the first event resulting from the presence of the Lord, as heralded by the sounding of the seventh trumpet, but they also tell us that the gathering of the living saints would immediately follow—”for the trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised incorruptible and we shall be changed.” (1 Cor. 15:52.)

While the gathering of the sleeping saints is but a momentary matter, we learn from the Scriptures that the gathering of the living would occupy a period of years, which our Lord terms the harvest time. (Matt. 13:30.) The harvest work implies not only their call out of Babylon and out of every form of bondage and error, in which they are found, through the message of present truth, but also their change from human to spiritual conditions, beyond the veil. This change takes place at the moment of death, and thus, from the time of the Lord’s second presence, the saints who die, no longer sleep in death, but are changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye. (1 Cor. 15:51, 52.) Speaking of this class at the Lord’s return, the Revelator was instructed to write, “Blessed are the dead (the consecrated to death) who die in the Lord from henceforth.” (Rev. 14:13.)

Many of the Lord's people, not fully enlightened regarding spiritual things and the Apostle's teaching on this subject, have concluded that, at the Lord's return, 'they would not need to die at all, but that they would all be caught away bodily, at the same moment. This crude conception of the matter is partly due to the poor translation of the Apostle's words, which read: "Then we which are alive and remain (after the dead are taken) shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air." (Thess. 4:17.)

The Greek word here translated together with, as shown in the Emphatic Diaglott, literally means at, or during the same time. The time under discussion, in the context, is the seventh trumpet, or parousia time, and the true meaning which the Apostle's language would convey is that, while the dead saints are raised at the beginning of the trumpet sound, the living ones who are left over would be changed and caught away at the moment of death, during the same trumpet period.

THE DAY OF CHRIST IS HERE.

Many who profess to believe that the Lord has returned the second time, give little evidence of having any clear conception of its object, and with not a few, this belief is of a very superficial kind. A true faith in the Lord's presence is much more than merely a belief in something we have heard. It must rest upon some reasonable grounds, which would thus become a basis for our belief. The Scriptural grounds for our faith in the Lord's presence embrace not only the chronological aspects of the present truth, but also the prophetic signs, which our Lord indicated would be recognised by the watchers as taking place, both in the world and amongst the Lord's people. (Matt. 24:30, 31.)

The attitude of many brethren towards this very important doctrine is more or less of a negative character. They "would not deny" it and would ever be "prepared to admit" its possibility. A true faith in the Lord's presence, however, is not merely an admission of its possibility, or a hesitation of denial. Such an attitude is not faith at all and counts for nothing in the Lord's sight. True faith arises from a positive conviction, based upon a reasonable foundation—the illumination of the mind by the spirit of truth. A true faith, moreover, is always followed by works or activities on the part of the believer, along the lines of his faith, for "faith without works is dead." (James 2:20.)

An intelligent faith in the Lord's presence would lead the consecrated and enquiring mind very quickly into further aspects of the harvest truth. A mind illuminated by the spirit of truth would naturally be prompted to enquire regarding the objects of His coming, and this, in turn, would lead not only to an understanding of the harvest work generally, but additionally, to an appreciation of the work of God amongst His people to-day. In this connection, the promise is that the spirit of truth would guide the child of God into all truth, as well as show him things to come. (John 16:13.)

HOW, then, shall we regard an attitude which professes faith in the Lord's presence and yet fails to appreciate either the general character or work of the harvest time? Surely such can be regarded only as a "faith without works," and which the Apostle James indicates is not a living faith at all.

Judging from the conditions prevailing generally amongst the brethren to-day, one might be inclined to think that the harvest work had completely failed and ended in confusion. This apparent failure, however, is not real, nor can it be so, since we are assured by the Scriptures that all God's purposes shall be accomplished. His Word shall not fail. (Isa. 55:11.)

Carrying our minds back to the first Advent, in the end of the Jewish Age, we find that similarly the Lord permitted the Shepherd to be smitten and the sheep of the flock to be scattered. So literally was this fulfilled in the closing experiences of our Lord, that the record tells us His followers "all forsook Him and fled." (Mark 14:50.)

To the Scribes and Pharisees of that day it doubtless seemed that the Lord had made a failure of things and that all His teaching and propaganda had ended in a fiasco. This was but one side of the picture, however—the one as viewed by the natural mind. The other side, as viewed by the Heavenly Father, was indicated by the Master Himself when, before His death, He was enabled to say, “I have finished the work which Thou gavest Me to do.” (John 17:4.)

All that could be said in regard to the apparent failure of the Lord’s work, at the close of the Jewish harvest, might be repeated with tenfold emphasis to-day, at the close of the present harvest ; and yet, who that is spiritually minded and understands the work of God to-day would doubt that when the last member of the body has been gathered, it will be proclaimed by the victorious Christ complete, not only regarding the work of this day, but of the entire Age,—I have finished the work which the Heavenly Father gave me to do. That work was to call and prepare and gather home into the Kingdom the loyal and faithful Bride. Let all the Lord’s true followers clearly recognize that appearances count for little, so far ‘as the Divine will is concerned, and that out of all the apparent failures of the Lord’s work and despite the many delusions of this day, He will surely bring forth in due time the instrument of His will, for the blessing of all the human race.

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST.

Luke 2:8-20.

“Behold, I bring you good tidings of great (Luke 2:10.)

THE story of our Lord's birth is one so familiar :IS to require no special comment, and yet in its simple details lies the hope of the whole world. Four thousand years previous the birth of this child was promised, and all the way along during those forty centuries sonic faithful souls continued to trust in the promises and to look for the salvation to be brought about through Him. We may surely take for granted that the humble shepherds to whom the message of the Lord's advent first came were men who thus hoped in the promise of God; for to such, and to such only, the Lord disclosed His purposes.

These men were quietly tending their flocks by night when suddenly the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone around about them ; and they were sore afraid (verse 9). But their fear was soon overcome by the message. of the angel, contained in our text, but which, strange to say, so many only partially quote, leaving out one of the grandest features of the message—viz., that it was to be to all people.

The message reads, “Fear not; for, behold I bring you good tidings of GREAT JOY which shall be to ALL PEOPLE.” It will be observed that the blessedness of these tidings is cumulative; first, it is “good tidings.” then it is “great joy,” and then the crowning feature of it is that it is “to all people”—not only to those shepherds who were that night looking for the hope of Israel, but for all their friends and relations and all mankind far and near, both to those who now live and to those who shall live, as well as to those now in death.

Blessed tidings! Harken to the gladsome sound : “For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour. which is Christ the Lord.” (Verse 11.) Then He was to be a saviour to all people : so the Scriptures clearly affirm, saying that, by the grace of God, He tasted death for every man, and that He gave Himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time—to all. (T legs 2:9: I Tim. 2:6.) The testimony. however. is quite as necessary to the salvation of the sinner as the fact that Christ gave Himself a ransom for all. The favour of salvation will not be forced upon any; but the testimony that it has been provided for every man, on condition of his acceptance of the favour upon God's terms, is to be given to every man, for his acceptance or rejection. And though millions of the race for whom. Christ died have gone down to the grave without such testimony. still the fact remains that the testimony shall be given in due time—which due time, to all such, must be after their awakening from death.

And to this agree the words of Lord: “The hour is coming in which all that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of man and shall come forth; they that have done good (who during the present life have, gone into judgment and who have passed their trial successfully, unto the resurrection of life, the full reward of the faithful; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of judgment.” (John 5:25-29.) That is, the latter class will come forth from the grave to have the truth testified to them then, for their acceptance or. rejection; and their final judgment of worthiness or unworthiness of life will be based upon their course under trial after the truth has been testified to them—in the Millennium! Thus the angel of the Lord preached the good tidings of the restitution of all things to the shepherds on the plain of Bethlehem.

Verse 12. Then they were told where and how they should find this bud of promise, so that when they would see Him they might feel doubly assured that this was He.

Verses 13. 14. “Then suddenly there was with the angels a multitude of the heavenly host praising God.

saying, Glory to God in the highest. and on earth peace: good will toward men.” This shows how the angels of God are interested in the affairs of men. and how they sympathise with us and rejoice over our prosperity. And this reminds us of other statements, to the effect that there is joy in heaven among the angels over one sinner that repenteth (Luke 15:7) : and again, that they are earnest students of the plan for human salvation: and that they are all ministering spirits sent forth to minister to them who shall be heirs of salvation. (1 Peter 1:12; 110). 1:14). Thus we see them to be creatures of God full of loving benevolence even toward a fallen race, and esteeming it a privilege to serve the heirs of this salvation, although they know, as they studiously look into God’s plan. that some of this fallen race are by and by to be highly exalted, even above the angels who never sinned.

Thus we see their humble recognition of the right of the Creator to do what He will with His own, and their cheerful and joyful acquiescence in His perfect will. which they know to be determined by His unerring wisdom and His fathomless love. ‘Oh, what universal joy will prevail when the whole family of God in heaven and in earth is brought into fullest harmony under Jehovah’s Anointed!

Verses 15, 18 show the teachable attitude of the shepherds : they recognised the angels and their message as from the Lord. and, their fears being allayed. their hopes revived and their faith increased, they felt that they must go at once and see this which had come to pass. And when they had so determined, a strange star (evidently a meteor, as it could not have been a fixed star) appeared, moving in the direction which the angel had told them to go; and they followed the star until they reached Bethlehem, when it stood still over the place where the young child was. And when they saw Him, they worshipped Him and presented to Him gold and frankincense and myrrh, recognising in Him the long-promised Messiah. And being warned of God in a dream, they disregarded the request of Herod to inform him of the whereabouts of the new-born King, and so departed into their own country another way. But as they. went they published abroad the good tidings which the angels had brought to them, and how they had actually seen Him of whom the prophets testified.

Verse 19. “But Mary (motherlike) kept all these things and pondered them in her heart,” doubtless calling to mind also the message of the angel to her. (Luke 1:28-35). Again and again we seem to hear her say. “My soul doth magnify the Lord; . . . for He hath regarded the low estate of His handmaiden . . . He that is mighty hath done to me great things and holy is His name.” (Luke 1:46-49).

Verse 20. The shepherds returned to their flocks. fully assured of the wonderful truth that the promised seed of the woman who was to bruise the serpent’s head had come. and they rejoiced and glorified God for all the things that they had heard and seen, as they were told unto them.

FOREVER WITH THE LORD

AS one by one the members of the Body of Christ are gathered I to me we are reminded of the words of John the Baptist: "He must increase, but I must decrease." The Church glorified increases while the Church in the flesh becomes fewer in number.

Those of our readers who have visited Adelaide will remember Sister Ruth Barrie, who passed away recently after a brief illness. Conscientious, studious, and of kindly spirit, our sister for quite a number of years has, we believe, faithfully trodden the narrow way of self-denial that leads to life.

While our sympathies go out especially to the members of her household—mother, sisters, and 'brothers—in the loss of such a loved one, yet we are also comforted with the thought that now that the race has been run, the course finished, there is the crown of righteousness granted to our sister, whose life surely gave evidence that she loved the Lord's appearing. 2 Tim. 4:8.

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth ; Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them," (Rev. 14:13.)

CHRISTMAS CONVENTION.

THE Melbourne brethren have pleasure in announcing that the arrangements for their annual gathering are about complete. A syllabus has been drawn up covering afternoon and evening sessions, and setting out the programme extending over a period comprising Sun-day, Monday and Tuesday, December 25th, 26th and 27th . A copy of the syllabus may be obtained from the secretary or will be gladly forwarded to any desiring one.

The meetings will be held at Molesworth Chambers, 450 Little Collins Street, Melbourne, and a hearty invitation is extended to all consecrated believers in the ransom sacrifice of our Lord.

The friends here are looking forward to a profitable and enjoyable season spiritually, and are delighted to hear of brethren who contemplate coming amongst us from other parts and participating in sweet fellowship and happy association.

Provision can be made respecting a 'baptism service should any of the brethren desire to symbolise.

In reviewing the year fast closing we feel that the friends here, and no doubt those in other parts, have much for which to praise our heavenly Father. We gratefully acknowledge the manifold blessings bestowed, and pray that God's continued favour and smile may attend our Christmas gatherings as the clear brethren assemble for mutual encouragement, uplift and blessing.

We ask the prayers of our fellow members to the end that each and all present may be the recipients of that Divine grace which will prove a stimulus, a comfort and a joy in the daily sojourn and varied experiences attending the life of every true follower of the Master.

In order to finally complete our arrangements, we will be pleased to hear as quickly as possible from any of the Lord's people intending to be present during the Convention season, and can assure them of a very hearty and appreciative welcome. Any requiring accommodation to be secured are asked to forward full information as to their needs in good time.

Kindly address communications to the Secretary. Berean Biblical Institute, National Bank Chambers, 226 Glenferrie Road, Hawthorn, E.2., Vic.

BOOKLETS, TRACTS, CARDS, &c.

The last edition of the booklet, "Where are the Dead?" has become exhausted, but as it has been so greatly in demand and is appreciated by many of our friends, some of whom have been 'brought to a knowledge of the truth by the explanations presented, a further edition has been decided upon and is now on the press.

No thoughtful person can surely fail to give some attention to the condition of departed loved ones; and it is when the Lord's Word is carefully examined and explained on this matter, as it is in this booklet, that satisfaction is brought to both heart and mind.

Friends desiring copies may send their orders at any time, and those unable to purchase may have a copy free upon request. The price is 3d. per copy or 2/6 per dozen.

We trust that the re-issue of this booklet may still accomplish much good to the glory of God, by assisting many more to a clear understanding of the Bible, by which they will be guarded against the many deceptions of our day along the lines of spiritualism, etc.

A good supply of tracts is now just in from the printers on the topic, "Why Sorrow, Sin, Death and Evil are Permitted." These may be obtained by all friends who are zealous for the welfare of others, but we advise that they be not cast too broadcast—rather handed out with discretion and a word to encourage reading, and to enclose in letters.

Many thinkers today are wondering why certain happenings are so, and we trust that some help and comfort may be conveyed by this tract to those who can receive its message, and those friends assisting in this work will undoubtedly be much blessed themselves.

At this time of the year many of our readers enquire about greeting cards for Christmas and general use, and so as to provide a wider assortment to our stock, a new series has been prepared by the printers.

These are not specially Christmas cards, but have been chosen more for the value of the verses, and so are 'suitable' for all seasons. Many of the Lord's people have been encouraged and blessed by some helpful words in times of trial, and in this connection we quote from a letter of a dear friend just to hand still have that list card sent me when I was getting the Bibles in 1926, 'If I Could Know,' and feel it is part of me; and like the woman in the Bible I feel I can say I have seen a man who told me all that ever I did, and can realise, 'My presence shall go with thee.' "

Orders for the cards can be filled immediately, and the price is 1/4 per dozen or 9d. per half-dozen posted.

The Test of Endurance.

“Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast him—self as he that putted) it off.”—1 Kings 20:11.

THE test Of endurance is certainly one of the severest tests of faithfulness to which the elect Church, the Body of Christ, is subjected. It is the test which gauges and registers the strength of every other virtue and grace, and no soldier of the cross will be crowned with the laurels of victory who has not stood this test. The Christian life is a warfare, and the above words of one of the kings of Israel to a ‘boastful enemy of the Lord’s people are applicable, not only to every new recruit in the Lord’s army, but, similarly, to all who have not yet finished the good fight of faith.

The first gush of enthusiasm in the Lord’s service, much as we may and do appreciate it, may be but the hasty production of the shallow soil of a heart which immediately receives the truth with gladness, but, having no root in itself, endures but for a time, and afterward, when affliction and persecution arise, immediately is offended. (Mark 4:16, 17.) Such characters cannot stand the fiery tests of this “evil day,” whereof it is written: “The fire (of that day) shall try every man’s work, of what sort it is.” (1 Cor. 3:13.)

NECESSITY FOR THE WHOLE ARMOUR

Therefore, says the Apostle Peter, “Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though sonic strange thing happened unto you.” Peter 4:12). All of the elect Church must be so tried; and blessed is lie that shall endure unto the end. The sure Word of prophecy points to severe conflicts and great trials in the closing scenes of the Church’s history. Elijah, a type of the Body of Christ, finished his earthly career anti went up by a whirlwind in a chariot of fire—strong symbols of storms and great afflictions. John, another type of the Church, was cast into prison and then beheaded. And we are forewarned of the great necessity of the whole armour of God, if we would stand in this “evil day.”—”Studies in the Scriptures,” Series 2, chapter 8.

It therefore behooves every one who aspires to the prize of our high calling to brace himself for the severer conflicts and trials of faith and patience that may suddenly and without a moment’s warning be sprung upon him. In the ‘battle of this day, as in all other battles, the effort of the Enemy is to surprise and suddenly attack and overwhelm the Lord’s people ; and the only preparation, therefore, that can be made for such emergencies is constant vigilance and prayer and the putting on of the whole armour of God—’the Truth and the spirit of the Truth.

WHICH WAY WILL YOU TURN?

“In your patience possess ye your souls.” No other grace will be more needed than this in the fiery ordeals of this “evil day”; for without great patience no man can endure to the end. All along the Christian’s pathway, ever and anon, he comes to a new crisis; perhaps these are often seemingly of trivial importance, yet he realises that they may be turning-points in his Christian course. Who has not realised them? There comes a temptation to weariness in well-doing, together with the suggestion of an easier way; or there springs up a little root of pride or ambition, with suggestions of ways and means for feeding and gratifying it. Then there conies, by and by, the decisive moment when you must choose this course or that; and lo, you have reached a crisis!

Which way will you turn? Most likely you will thin in the direction to which the sentiments you have cultivated have been tending, whether that he the right way or the wrong way. If it ‘be the wrong way, most likely you will be unable to discern it clearly; for your long cultivated sentiments will sway your judgment. “There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof is the way of death.” , (Pros. 14:12.) How necessary, therefore, is prayer, that in every crisis we may pass the test successfully! Nor can we safely delay to watch and pray until the crisis is upon us; but such should our constant attitude.

THOSE WHO OUTRIDE THE TRIALS WILL BE THE OVERCOMERS.

The life of a soldier, ever on the alert and on duty, is by no means an easy life ; nor do the Scriptures warrant any such expectation. On the contrary. they say. “Endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ”; “Fight the good fight of faith,” etc. And yet many Christian people seem to have the very opposite idea. Their ideal Christian life is one without a breeze or a storm; it must be one continuous calm. Such a life was indeed inure possible in former days than now, though the world, the flesh and the Devil always have opposed them, and always have had to be resisted by every loyal soldier of the cross. But now the opposition is daily becoming more and more intense; for Satan realises that his time is short, and he is determined by any and every means to exert his power against the consummation of the Lord’s plan for the exaltation of the Church.

Consequently, we have had within this Harvest period many and severe storms of opposition and still there are doubtless more severe trials to follow. But those who, with overcoming faith, outride them all—who patiently endure, who cultivate the spirit of Christ with its fruits and graces, and who valiantly fight the good fight of faith, rather than withdraw from the field—such will be the “overcomers” to whom the laurels of victory will be given when the crowning day has come.

Christ in You : The Hope of Glory.

(Col. 1:27-29).

THOSE who accept of Christ's teachings and follow Him in entire consecration of every power and talent to God's service, become infused with the same desire to do the will of their Father in heaven. These have the same mind as Jesus—a mind, or will, to sacrifice self in the carrying out of God's plans—a spirit or mind, dead to the praises and scoffs, the hopes and fears of the world, but alive and active to the heavenly smiles or frowns, prizes or losses.

The spirit or mind of Christ, thus received, hears fruit in every action, word and thought; some of which are mentioned by Paul—love, joy, peace, gentleness. meekness, patience. godliness (God-like-ness).

These graces, these fruits, grow gradually — the rapidity of the growth depending upon the nature of the soil, the purity of the seed (example followed), and the amount of moisture and sunlight of truth (the Word) with which the ground and seed are supplied. if we would have increase of the spirit of Christ, and bear much fruit, how important that we be particular to have pure seed—following only our Master —and that we keep out from the shadow and shelter of all human creeds, and let the sunlight of heaven and the refreshing dew of truth into our hearts, by lifting them to heaven for these. as do the flowers for the natural. Such shall receive from the heavenly store—the Word.

This continual and increasing growth of the fruits is not only expressed by Jesus as above, but the apostles urge the “increase of the fruits of your righteousness,” and that we be “filled with the fruits of righteousness.” (2 Cor. 9:10 ; Phil. 1:11).

As it is natural for a good tree to bring forth good fruits; so all who have received really of the spirit of Christ will ultimately- show it. It was Jesus who said, “By their fruits ye shall know them.”

Christianity is much misunderstood- to-day, and many that bear thistles are members of the nominal church, and thus pretend to be members of the “true Vine” ; but by their fruits ye shall know them. “If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of His.” (Rom. 8:9). This is a searching test for all; let us each apply it to ourselves. Do I (as Jesus), “do not mine own will,” but God's? Do I seek to please not myself, nor my fellows, but God only? Do I present myself daily and hourly a living sacrifice, for right and truth, and in- just the way God's Word (not my feeling) directs? If so, this is' Christ in me, and is a good basis for the “hope of glory” promised to those who walk in His footprints..

This spirit of Christ—or renewed mind — is the anointing which we have received, and it is an evidence to you, and to others that your consecration is complete; that you are begotten to the higher (divine) nature which God has promised to those who so walk in the Spirit; that you are members of the Christ (the anointed body, of which Jesus is the Head).

So, then. Christ is manifest in your mortal body. (2 Cor. 4:11). When the world sees you it sees a member of the Christ, not in glory, but in the flesh ; and in us as in our Head, only to a less degree, it is still true—God is manifest in the flesh.(1 Tim. 3:16).

Thus, for “me to live is Christ” (Phil. 1:21). In this sense. Christ in the flesh is still in the world as its teacher and reprover—illustrating the word and love of God. All the body following the Leader have been “despised and rejected of men.” There is no beauty in any of them that they should be desired of the world. Soon. when manifested with the Head, as the agency for blessing the world, they will desire them. They desire deliverance from the bondage of corruption into the liberty Of sons of God, and will soon come to know Him whom, for 1800 years, they ignorantly rejected. thinking Him weak and powerless.

Then “the Desire of all nations shall come” into power and glory for their deliverance.

During all the age we find it true, and an evidence that we are in the Leader’s footsteps. that the world loveth us not. Jesus said, “Marvel not if the world hate you; ye know that it hated Me before it hated you.” “If ye were of the world, the world would love his own!” “In the world ye shall have tribulation.” And “Whosoever will live godly shall suffer persecution.”

Any who think they are being carried to glory on “flowery ‘beds of ease,” should awake to the fact that our Master trod the narrow, thorny way. Now is not the time to glory in ease in the lap of the world, but a time to “fill up that which is ‘behind of the afflictions of Christ.” •

We suffer as members of the Christ of which the prophets spake when they testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ (during this age), and the glory that should follow.

To him that overcometh—self, ease, the world—even unto death. “shall be the Victor’s crown.”

The Prayers of the New Creation.

PRAYER to God, communion with Him, is a great privilege and an evidence of His favor. God does not grant us this privilege, however, in order that He might be informed of our desires, for since we are imperfect ourselves our desires cannot be perfect: "We know not what things to ask for as we ought." and He does for us better than we know how to ask or think. Nor does God permit us to pray to Him that we may inform Him regarding matters here; for He I knoweth the end from the beginning, as well as every intervening step. But He has instituted prayer for our benefit and comfort and instruction.

The object of prayer is to bring the heart and the mind of 'the child of:God into contact with the heart of ' God, that he may be enabled thus most fully to realise the Fatherhood of God, His love, and His deep interest in every item of our welfare; that in deep affliction we may unburden our hearts to God and thus have forcibly brought to our attention His love and care and wisdom—for our encouragement, not His; for our strengthening, not His, and for our joy.

This opportunity is not for us to instruct Jehovah how to arrange matters for the 'best, but to bring our hearts to realise Him as the Centre of wisdom and power, that having unburdened our hearts, we may be prepared to listen for His answer and advice through His Word. And he whose knowledge of prayer is con-fined to the meager information he has imparted to God with "much speaking," and who has never learned to listen for the answer to his prayer from the Word of God, has, as yet, measurably failed to appreciate the object of prayer.

Earnestness in God's service will bring His children to Him frequently, to realise at His feet His sympathy with them in the difficulties, discouragements and trials of life, as well as to ask His guidance and overruling of every affair of life, and through His Word to hearken to His wisdom, which will enable them to serve Him acceptably.

The province of prayer is to ask for only such things as God has already declared Himself well pleased to grant. And while we may freely speak to Him as a Father and tell Him how we understand His Word, and the confidence and trust we have in its ultimate fulfilment, yet we must not only avoid telling the Lord of our will and our plans, and what we would like, but we must avoid and put far from us any such spirit, and must recognise, and bring ourselves into full accord with His will and His plan for accomplishing it. If this thought were appreciated, it 'would cut short some of the "long prayers," "much speaking," and "vain repetitions" by which some endeavour to instruct the Lord in their wishes regarding every matter under heaven. It would send them speedily to the Word of God to search diligently the Plan of God that they might labour as well as pray in harmony with it.

While assuring us that the Father cares for us, and is well pleased to have us come to Him with sincere hearts, the Master informs us of the conditions upon which we may expect an answer. He says, "If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall- ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you."—john 15:7.

"ABIDE IN. ME."

The conditions of the above statement, or promise, are two; the first is, abiding in Christ. But what is it to abide in Christ? Only those can abide in 'Christ who are in Christ, who have come into Him by faith, repentance and consecration; and to abide in Him means that the faith will abide, the repentance for sin and the opposition to it will abide, and the consecration to the Lord and His service will abide, and it will be manifest that our will has been wholly consecrated—swallowed up in the will of Christ.

The other condition is also a weighty one: "If My Word abide in you." Ah I how evident it is that our Lord meant to associate Himself and His Word, the Scriptures, in the minds, in the hearts, in the lives of all who are truly His!

They must search the Scriptures to know the will of the Lord; to know what He has promised and what He has not promised; to know what they may ask and what they may not ask; and, ascertaining these, one fully consecrated—one controlled entirely by the • will of God—will not want to be, to have, or to do anything except that which will be pleasing to the Lord in respect of himself.

When this position has been reached, the will of Christ governing him, the words of Christ abiding in him, we can readily see that whatever would be asked by one thus well informed with respect to the Divine promises and fully submissive to the Divine will would be things which the Father would be pleased to grant in answer to his requests.

These requests would probably be as simple as was the Master's petition when He prayed, "Not My will, but Thine, be done !" (Luke 22:42). In such a condition prayers are always answered; but in such a condition the prayers would be very modest. One's prayers under such circumstances would be more a thanksgiving for blessings, an expression of confidence and trust, and the committal of his way unto the Lord, confidently realising the promise that to him under such conditions, all things (even seeming disasters and troubles) shall work together for good. Hence, whatever came, such a one could realise his prayer answered. He could rejoice evermore because he is prepared to rejoice in tribulation as well as in prosperity, in the path of service. He has no will to oppose whatever God permits, knowing that it will work out good.

Such, amongst the Lord's people, could not pray that their own will be done; for they have no will except God's. Those who abide in Christ, and in whom His Word abides, can pray for their enemies and those who spitefully use them and persecute them, though they cannot pray God to open the blinded eyes of their enemies at once, nor in their way. Realising from the indwelling Word of God's promise that the blinded eyes shall all be opened to the Truth, they can abide His time. Going to God in prayer they may express their forgiveness of • their persecutor, their interest in him, and their patient waiting for the day when "the know-cover the sea"—ocean deep—and His will shall be done ledge of the Lord shall fill the whole earth as the waters on earth as it is done in heaven.—Isa. 11:9.

ANSWERS OFTEN DELAYED.

The answer to our prayer is not always granted immediately; but after we have made sure that our requests are in accord with the promises, those things which lie very close to our hearts become our continual prayer, associating in our minds with all of life's duties and interests, the heart gravitating continually toward the thing we have desired of the Lord, and on suitable opportunities repeating to Him the request. This is the kind of prayer which the Lord commended, saving, "Men ought always to pray and not to faint." (Luke 18:1). The Lord's people ought to continue asking for the right things with some degree of persistency, and should not grow weary, hopeless, faithless, faint in their hearts.

Doubtless there are many reasons why the Lord does not promptly grant all of our requests which are in accordance with His will, in harmony with His Word. We may not know -all of these reasons; but some of them are apparent.

Undoubtedly one reason for the Lord's delay in answering us is often to test the strength and the depth of our desires for the good things that we request of Him.

For instance. He informs us that He is more willing to give His Holy Spirit to us who ask than are earthly parents to give good things to their children. Yet the giving of His Holy Spirit is a gradual process; and we are enabled to receive it only in proportion as we are emptied of the worldly or selfish spirit. It requires time to become thus emptied of self and prepared for the mind of Christ; in some it requires longer for this than in others; but all need emptying in order to receive the refilling.

He that seeketh findeth, but the more he seeketh the more he findeth; to him that knocketh it shall be opened, but his continual knocking and his increasing interest in the knocking means his increasing desire to enter, so that as the door of privilege, of opportunity, swings slowly open before him, his courage and his strength increase as he seeks to. avail himself of the opening. Thus every way the blessing is greater than if the Lord were to answer the petitions hastily.

We are to think of our Heavenly Father as rich and benevolent, kind and generous, yet wise as well as loving. We are to suppose that He will have pleasure in giving us the desires of our hearts if those desires are in harmony with His plan, which He has already framed on such lines as to include not only our very highest and best interests, but the highest and best interest of all His creatures. Then, whatever comes, His well-informed children can have all the desires of their hearts, because their hearts are in full accord with the Lord; and they desire nothing of the Lord except the ,good things of His purpose and promise.

“DESIRE, UTTERED OR UNEXPRESSED;”

When thus considered, not as a begging arrangement, nor as an occasion of instructing the Lord as to our wills, but as a season of union and communion of heart with the Father, in which we may relieve our burdened or perplexed hearts and realise Divine sympathy, calling to mind Divine promises, reviewing Divine care. and expressing our confidence in God’s many promises, thus bringing those promises afresh and close to our hearts, as though God now audibly uttered them in our hearing—thus considered, how proper, yea, how necessary is prayer to the true child of God’: He cannot live without it. To break off this communion would be like stripping a tree of its leaves; their removal would stunt and hinder its development.

But to suppose that Christian life depends solely upon prayer without earnest study of God’s Word, is like supposing that a tree could flourish from its leaves only, without roots and soil. Both are needful. As good soil and roots will produce leaves and fruitage, so likewise, the promises of God’s Word absorbed by us will naturally lead to good works and to communion with God in prayer, without which the fruits of the Spirit would soon wither and disappear.

No wonder, then, that Jesus, both by precept and by example, said, “Watch and pray” (Matt. 26. 41), uniting the conditions necessary to our development. Some pray and neglect to watch; others watch and neglect to pray. Both these errors are serious; and it is not possible for us to decide which is the more serious neglect, since either would work disastrous loss of the great “prize” for which we are running.

Nowhere is prayer defined as a duty, though its necessity is stated. The Father desireth such to worship Him as worship Him in spirit and in truth (John 4:23); and it would be contrary to this principle to define prayer as a duty, and to stipulate a set time or place or a formal manner. The earnestness of the service and the peculiarity of the circumstance will regulate the frequency and the subject matter of prayer.

No form of prayer is furnished in the Scriptures. Even the Master, when asked by the disciples for instruction on the subject, gave them, not a form to repeat, but merely an idea or example of how to arrange their prayers to God. He did not say, Pray this prayer, but, “After this manner pray ye.” ,Our prayers, then, should be after this manner—not an assortment of extravagant demands, but the simple expression of the earnest heart: first, acknowledging and paying homage to God as our Father, the Almighty and Hallowed One; second, expressing our expectation and trust that His Kingdom coming according to promise. and our eagerness for it, and for the time when His will shall be done on earth as in Heaven; third. our reliance upon Him for “daily bread,” which He has promised us; fourth, our acknowledgment that our ways are not perfect and of our reliance upon His favor (granted through Christ Jesus) for forgiveness; and our willingness to exercise forgiveness towards our debtors, toward those who trespass against us.

“OUR FATHER WHICH ART IN HEAVEN.”

The term, “Our Father,” is one of special endearment. The affection of a true father for his child, being one of the most precious in the world, is used to illustrate the relationship of the Lord’s consecrated members to the Creator. It is necessary to be some time in the School of Christ as disciples, learners, before we are able properly to appreciate the meaning of this word “Father” as applied to God; but the more we come to know of the love of God, which passes all under-standing, and the more we are enabled to draw near to Him through faith and obedience, the more precious will this term Father become.

“Hallowed by Thy name,” expresses adoration, appreciation of Divine goodness and greatness, and a corresponding reverence. In addressing our petition to the Lord our first thought is to be, not a selfish one respecting ourselves, nor respecting the interests of others precious to us; but God is to be first in all of our thoughts and aims and calculations. We are to pray for nothing that would not be in accord with the honour of our Heavenly Father’s Name; we are to wish for nothing for ourselves or for our dear ones that He would not fully approve and commission us to pray for.

Perhaps no quality of heart is in more danger of being blotted out amongst professing Christians to-day than this thought of reverence for .God. However much we have grown in knowledge, and however much we have gotten free from superstitions and errors, and however advanced in some respects is the Christian’s position of to-day over that a century ago, we fear that reverence has been losing ground, not only in the nominal church, but with many of the members of the one “Church of the Firstborn, whose names are written in heaven.” (HO). 12; 23). Every loss of reverence is a distinct disadvantage, both to the Church and to the world, paving the way to various evils, and ultimately to anarchy.

As God and His glory and honour are to be first in the minds of His children, so their next thought should be for the coming glorious Kingdom which He has promised shall bless the world. However much our 'own personal interests and affairs may be pressing upon us, and however much we may desire to have the Lord's blessing and guidance in them, they are not to outrank our appreciation of His beneficent arrangements which He has so clearly promised in His Word. We are to remember that the Kingdom, when it shall come, will be a panacea for every ill and every trouble, not only for us, but for the whole world of mankind. We are not, therefore, to permit our own personal needs to be too prominent, but are to remember that the whole creation is groaning and travailing in pain together, waiting for this glorious Kingdom and the blessing upon all the families of the earth, which our Heavenly Father has Promised shall yet come through the Seed of Abraham.

This thought respecting the Kingdom, its necessity, and the blessings that it will bring will keep prominently before our minds our own High Calling to joint-heirship with our Lord in this Kingdom. And in proportion as that hope is clearly before our minds it will be, as the Apostle explains, as "an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil."—Heb. 6:19.

This anchorage of hope in the future, in the Kingdom, will enable us to pass safely, and with comparative quiet, through the trials and storms and difficulties of this present evil world. More than this, our thoughts respect- in, the Kingdom will remind us that if we are to be heirs of the Kingdom it will be necessary that we have the appropriate discipline and training now. This thought in turn will make all the afflictions and trials of this present time seem to us light afflictions; for we know that they are working out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Thus the very offering of this prayer, in its proper order, will bring us a measure of relief from our perplexities, trials and disappointments before we reach the appropriate place to mention them at the Throne of grace.

RADIANCE.

The shining face is no mystery. Centuries ago the Psalmist knew the secret. and wrote, "They looked to him and were 'radiant.'" It comes to those whose faces are always turned toward Christ, as a flower turns toward the light.

It was said at the time of the Boxer rebellion that Chinese Christians could not be disguised—the light in their faces betrayed them. The pity of it, that every Christian may not be known by the shining of his face!

"WORK FOR THE NIGHT IS COMING." ANOTHER YEAR OF OPPORTUNITY.

THE main work of the Christian is certainly the work of transformation of character, of disposition, to attain the conformation to Christ our Lord. It may be likened to the painting of a picture. How carefully every colour must be applied, how important every tint or shading; how . wonderfully these features affect the whole. We have a copy which we must ever keep in view in order that we may be 'brought into the likeness of God's dear Son. The Apostle expresses a similar thought, saying, "We with open face, beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the spirit of the Lord."

As each tinting or shading of a picture may change the whole view or likeness, so each act, each word. each thought, each impulse or the way in which we are affected by the day by day trials, joys or sorrows, affects our characters. It is the small things of every day concerns that really mould our lives. It is how we are affected by the incidents of life as we come in contact with others, in the home circle, in the Church or in the world. The Lord does not protect us from very severe trials, indeed it is because we are Christians that we must have the “fiery trials which shall try you.” The object is to develop character. It is because “God is working in us to will and to do His good pleasure,” it is because we desire to be made like Christ, that we must be tempted in all points as He was. We must like Him prove our loyalty and faithfulness to God so that we may be “overcomers” and strong to resist every foe, every temptation, and stand any trial.

We can never complete the picture by our own unaided ability. The great Artist must guide our hands in all the coloring, tinting or shading; and the opening of another year is an appropriate time to review the past work and resolve that in the days ahead, whatever the circumstances and conditions may be, we shall strive even more earnestly than ever before to work with God to will and to do of His good pleasure. By His grace, in due time, the likeness will be complete; “for He is able to complete that which He hath begun in us.” Only let us day by day seek to be guided by His hand, gladly co-operating with Him in this wonderful work. Then when we may be with our Lord where He is, “we know that we shall be like Him and Him as He is.”—1 John 3:1, 2.

Another year is dawning,
Dear Master, let it be,
In working or in waiting,
Another year with Thee.

Another year of leaning
Upon Thy loving breast,
Of ever-deepening trustfulness,
Of quiet, happy rest.

Another year of mercies,
Of faithfulness and grace,
Another year of gladness
In the shining of Thy face.

Another year of progress,
Another year of praise;
Another year of proving Thy presence “all the days.”

Another year of service,
Of witness for Thy love;
Another year of training
For holier work above.

Another year is dawning!
Dear Master, let it be,
Just as Thyself would have it,
Another year for Thee!

The End of The Way.

THERE is a feeling of sadness with the passing of one and another of our dear brethren, but deeper still is the comfort and joy of realising the pilgrim journey ended and the reward with the Lord gained by those members who finish their course faithfully in the narrow way.

Word has been received recently from our friends at Digby, Victoria, of the death of Bro. W. Thomas. Those of our readers having visited the Melbourne Conventions in time past, will probably remember our crippled Brother, who, though reserved, was so bright and cheerful, and deeply enjoyed the spiritual lessons and fellowship at the gatherings.

It is understood that Bro. Thomas suffered much at times, but with his strong faith and hope in the Lord, made light of his afflictions in all patience and long suffering. Those who knew him best declare that he was a saintly character, and strong in the truth; and their belief is that he has been granted a share in the heavenly reward which the Lord hath in reservation for those who love Him supremely.

“Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints.”

The moment a man becomes a disciple, his exclusive self-reliance vanishes; he trusts another than himself; he loves a better spirit than his own; and while living in what is human aspires to what is divine; and he is mellowed into the attitudes of looking up and lifting up. —Martineau.

The Two Parts of the Work of Redemption.

THE statement of the Law is very positive—"The man that doeth these things shall live by them." Whoever keeps God's commands will live in them and 'will receive everlasting life as a reward for keeping them: (Lev. 18:5; Rom. 10:5). In making the promise of life to the Jews, God did not tell them in what manner He would arrange for its fulfilment. As a matter of fact, although the Jews did not understand the types of the Law Covenant. God had showed how the keeping of that Covenant would give everlasting life; namely, through sacrifice.

In His great Plan of. the Ages, God. had ,already provided a Redeemer. (Eph. 1:4). It was, therefore, in view of this provision of Divine grace that the promise of life through keeping the law could be made. But in giving the Law Covenant. God did not omit the great atonement sacrifice, which was the type of the work of Redemption. •

That our Lord had, some understanding with the Heavenly Father before He was made flesh is self-evident; for His change of nature is represented as a voluntary act on His part. (Phil. 2:8). He took not upon Himself the nature of angels, but that of the seed of Abraham, He had an object in taking upon Himself the nature of Abraham's descendants. He did so "for the joy that was set before Him." (Heir. 12:2 . This expression implies that He had some knowledge of the nature of the work which He had come to accomplish.

This knowledge' which our Lord possessed in His pre-human condition did not include the understanding of all the various types of which He was to be the Antitype, but evidently He knew that this stooping from the heavenly to the earthly nature was a means to an end, which was to be accomplished when He became a man. In order to take this great step, it was necessary for Him to have absolute confidence that the Father would not wish Him to do anything which would be to His injury, out to the contrary, something which would do Him good. So great was His faith in the Father that He wished to do the Father's will at any cost.

The first step toward the achievement of the Father's was the taking of a nature lower than any on the spirit plane—the human. Then, being found in fashion as a. man, He humbled Himself unto death, even the death of, the cross. (Phil. 2:8). He..did not humble Himself before He became a man, but. afterwards. As a boy He inquired of the Doctors of. the Law what time it would be appropriate for Him,enter upon His ministry. Evidently satisfied by His investigation that there was nothing to be done at that time, He 'returned to His home with His mother and her husband, and was subject to them until He was thirty years old.—Luke 2:51.

At thirty years of age, Jesus offered Himself at Jordan, where lie went for^ no other purpose than to make His consecration. He knew that He had come into the world to be man's Redeemer; that God's will concerning His work 'Of redemption Was written in the types and shadows of the Scriptures, and that this will was altogether outside of the moral. part of the Law, for it was not obligatory on one who would keep the Law. He also knew that to do this work of redemption He must present Himself in sacrifice. (Psa. 50:5). Gladly He offered Himself, saying, "Lo. I come. . . . to do Thy will. O My God."

ONLY ONE PART OF THE REDEMPTION WORK YET ACCOMPLISHED.

In the Atonement Day offering, our Lord's consecration on is pictured by the High Priest when he smote the bullock and killed it. Here we have in the type a picture of our Lord, who was represented by both bullock and priest. The new mind, the new will, the New Creature, offered up the flesh. It was not that He offered up Himself as man's Redeemer; He presented Himself a sacrifice.—not to mankind, not to Satan, not to the world, but unto God. He was so loyal that He was ready to sacrifice to the Father everything which He possessed; He was permitted to prove His. Loyalty and faithfulness even unto death.

As a result of his obedience unto death, even the shameful death of the cross, our Lord was raised from the dead and given the very highest nature—the Divine. In due time He will be permitted to offer the merit of His sacrifice as a Ransom-price for the sins of the while world, and thus He will become the world's Redeemer.

This word Redeemer is quite broad. It signifies one who obtains control of something and brings it back to a former condition in a legal and satisfactory manner. Our Lord began to do this work. He has accomplished the first part, which in clue time will become a satisfactory price for the sins of the world, He has already been highly exalted and thus qualified for, the great office of Mediator between God and- Men,. He is waiting merely until the members of His Body be joined to Him and made participators of His glory, and then the work of Restitution for mankind -will begin.

Our Lord will be a thousand years in doing the second part of this work of redeeming. At the close of the thousand years the work will have 'been finished. Now He is the Redeemer, the Restorer, not because He has done the work, but because He has the power and authority to do it. At the close of the thousand years He will be the One who will have accomplished this work of Restitution, and the name Redeemer will be His forever, even though the work of redeeming will be in the past. .

Nothing in the Scriptures indicates how clearly' our Lord understood the terms and conditions upon which ,He would please the Father after coming into the world. We are, therefore, not to dogmatise on the subject. But it is probable that He did not know all the. experiences through which. •He would. pass:while in the - flesh, and that some of these were afterwards revealed to Him, as we read that when after His baptism He came up •out of the water, the heavens—the higher things, the spiritual —were opened to him. (Matt. 3:16). Thenceforth He was able to appreciate the deeper features of God's Plan.

QUESTION BOX.

Question.—Please explain Rev. 14:1-5. If the women referred to are unfaithful church systems, just where are we to draw the line; where do they start and ‘finish as such’?

Answer.—These verses seem clearly to picture the church triumphant—the overcomers of the Gospel Age. The statement is that these have not been defiled with women. That would appear to intimate that they had kept the faith and not had their hearts deflected by the allurements which are associated with these women, i.e., church systems which have lost their first love, and be-came entangled in earthly matters and confused in doctrine.

Woman in the Bible appears to represent a church. Virgins represent those who have preserved their hearts in purity, looking forward to the great marriage of the Lamb. “The “woman” that “sits as a queen,” or “Jezebel,” represents the unfaithful church—a church married to the world, leaning on a secular arm. So “women” in this passage would refer to any church that has become allied with the world. The worldly spirit has taken possession of the churches to-day. There can be no doubt we are living in the Laodicean period, and that the message of Rev. 3:14-21 is applicable. Worldly alliances and associations have crept ill and the Spirit of Christ has been quenched. The congregations are mostly kept together by sports, games, socials, dances, card parties, etc. The true Church, the “chaste Virgin,” is not attracted by such things, but by the glorious hope of sharing with her Lord all the joys of His Kingdom. Instead of the spirit of the world she is held together by the Holy Spirit of consecration, of faith in Christ and fellowship around the Word of God. The true Christian must consider just how far such Laodicean conditions prevail, or whether there is food from the Word of God provided; whether the doctrine is pure and God is glorified by the revealing of His glorious character and plan of salvation, so that there may be growth in grace and in knowledge and progress made in the work of transformation into the likeness of Christ.

Question.—What is the Bible teaching respecting anyone preaching the Gospel as a paid servant of a church; can he expect a reward for his work when the Lord is giving the rewards to the labourers, seeing that he has already had his reward here?

Answer.—In I Cor. 9:4-19, the Apostle would seem to show that it might be quite right for a church to meet the reasonable living necessities of one whom they might desire to serve the “flock of God;” and to be thus provided for would surely not invalidate the reward of faithful labour in the Lord, that “when the Chief Shepherd shall appear ye shall receive a crown of glory.” —1 Pet. 5:4. There would, however, be a great difference ‘between having the necessities of life provided and having fixed salaries enabling the “servants” of the Church to live in luxury. There were no salaries available for the Lord and the Apostles, although it would seem that they received freewill offerings for their sustenance. If, says the Apostle, “we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things?” He rejoices, however, that it was not necessary for him to take anything from them. He was out to preach the Gospel whether he received any support or not. “For if I do this voluntarily I have a reward; but if I have been entrusted with stewardship reluctantly what is my reward then?” (Diaglott). We recently noticed a statement by the clergy in England that they could not live on less than £7 a week. Many thousands of families are living in that land on less than half that sum. The introduction of salaries, which lifted the clergy above the common people and made the ministry a worldly profession, has been the cause of decline of spirituality. It gave rise to the great Papal Apostasy. The position would seem to be that where possible all should follow Paul’s example and seek to support themselves while they preach. When necessity arose he was pleased to receive assistance from the Church at Philippi, but he could say “I have coveted no man’s silver or gold, yea, ye yourselves know that these hands have ministered to mine necessities and to them that were with me.”—Acts 20:33-35. The paid ministry is a “hireling” ministry, and such “shepherds” are well described by our Lord (John 10:12, 13; and Ezekiel 34:8-10, 17-19.). While it seems in accord with the Lord’s will that in case of need a servant of the Church should be supported, there would seem few such cases among the Lord’s people to-day. Surely those who make their acceptance of any calling to preach the Gospel, dependable upon the salary available, are not likely to receive the reward “when the Chief Shepherd doth appear.” -

WHAT IS PERFECT LOVE?

“Perfect love is gentle and teachable, kind and easy to be entreated. It enters the school of Christ, as a pupil, not as a master, realising how much is yet to be learned, rather than how much has been attained. Perfect love shows us our ignorance and begets the inextinguishable desire to dissipate that darkness. and to enter the realm of real and reliable knowledge. If you find yourself growing wise above all your teachers, inclined to become dogmatic, to criticise your fellow disciples and set yourself up as a standard for the whole church, you have no little reason to fear that you are not controlled by the Spirit of God. Self-wisdom may easily assume the place of Divine wisdom; and Satan may appear as an angel of light even in one who concerns himself with the most holy things. In no way are his ends more effectually secured than by inducing people to promote the subject of holiness •by exceptional methods, and in an unteachable and arrogant spirit.”

Some Better Thing:

“Our Heavenly Calling.”

IN the early days of our Christian life there is some difficulty in understanding how to “rightly divide the Word of Truth” (2 Tim. 2. 15). We do not comprehend all at once that God’s Plan provides, first, a heavenly salvation for the Church, and then an earthly salvation for mankind in general. The study of the Bible along Dispensational lines clears away all of our difficulties. It shows us that the promise that the redeemed “shall sit every man under his own vine and fig tree,” and “long enjoy the work of his hands” (Mic. 4:4; Isa. 65:22), is God’s provision for Israel restored to Divine favour, and for all the families of the earth, but not for the Church. Of the true Church, the Bride of Christ, it is declared that her members shall, in the resurrection, be like unto the angels—heavenly or spirit beings.

St. Paul distinctly says of these, “Flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God.” (1 Cor. 15:50). Jesus tells these that He has gone to prepare them a place in the Father’s house on high. (John 14:2, 3). But the place for man, the earth, already provided from the foundation of the world (Matt. 25:34). is a very different one from ours, of which we read, “Eve hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him.”—1 Cor. 2:9; Isa. 64:4.

THE CALL TO THE SPIRIT NATURE.

Now we understand why it is that from Genesis to Malachi there is not one suggestion of a heavenly or spiritual hope for any natural man. Every promise is earthly. In Abraham’s case, for instance, we read, “The Lord said unto Abram, Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art northward, and south-ward, and eastward, and westward, for all this land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever. And I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth, so that if a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered. Arise, walk through the land in the length of it and in the breadth of it; for I will give it unto thee.”—Gen. 13:14-17.

St. Paul refers to this difference between the hopes of the spirit-begotten Church, founded at ‘Pentecost, and those of all others. Pointing to the faithful of the past, he declares that although they had God’s testimony to their faithfulness, nevertheless, they “received not the promise, God having provided some better thing for us, that they, without us, should not be made perfect”—Heb. 11:38-40.

As soon as we get our “better thing,” our higher reward of “glory, honor, and immortality,” in joint-heirship with our Lord as figuratively His Bride—then the worthy ones of ancient times will get their reward of resurrection to human perfection. Under Messiah’s Kingdom, those perfect men will be “princes in all the earth.” (Psa. 45:16). Then from the spiritual to the perfected earthly ones the blessings and instruction will descend for the poor, ignorant, selfish and superstitious world to help them, to uplift the obedient to the perfections illustrated in the perfected Worthies.

We have heard of the Sunday School teacher who told her class about heaven. about its pianos, harps, organs, horses and carriages, fruits and flowers, etc. We see that she was merely thinking of the blessings God has provided for the faithful and obedient Of the world” in due time.” She had no conception of the “heaven of heavens” promised to the faithful followers of Jesus in the “narrow way.” The Great Teacher explains that it is impossible to describe heaven with its beauties and charms. He said to Nicodemus, “If I ‘have told you of earthly things, and ye believe not, how shall ye believe if I tell you of heavenly things?”—John 3:12.

In line with this, the Bible makes no attempt to describe heaven itself, nor its inhabitants. We are merely told that “God is a Spirit,” “dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto, whom no man hath seen, nor can see”—personally. (John 4:24; 1 Tim. 6:16). Men must discern God in His works—the noblest of which is the perfect man—made in His moral likeness, on the earthly plane. “a little lower than the angels” on the spirit plane. The most that His Word declares of our heavenly inheritance is that “Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him.”—1 Cor. 2:9.

But while refusing to inform us of the heavenly condition, God gives us a soul-satisfying portion. Through the Apostle declares (1 John 3:2), “It hath not yet appeared what we shall be; but we know that when He (the glorified Jesus) shall appear (at His second advent, in power and great glory) we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is.” Others, not thus changed from human to spirit nature by the First Resurrection power, will not “see Him as He is,” but only as He shall be revealed in His providences and judgments. which every eye shall recognise.

How satisfactory! Beyond all that we could have asked or thought! “Like Him!”—what more could we ask? “Like Him” whom God hath highly exalted “Far above all principality and power and might and dominion, and every name that is named!” (Eph. 1:21). We stand amazed at such grace! Moreover, we can realise that He who called us to become “partakers of the divine nature” and joint-heirs with the Redeemer in His Mediatorial Kingdom has provided for our every comfort and joy in that heavenly state, the details of which we may not now grasp. Prophetically of these it is written, “I shall be satisfied, when I awake with Thy likeness.”—Psa. 17:15.

It is the hope, the desire, the aim of every one of us to make our calling and election sure—to so run that we may obtain that great “prize” of participation in the First resurrection. Of that resurrection we read% “Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the First (chief) Resurrection; on such the Second Death hath no power, but they shall be Priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with Him a thousand years.” (Rev. 20:6). Let us have this in mind, that our participation with our Lord in the glories of the Kingdom is dependent upon our faithfulness here in following Him through evil report and through good report; through honour and through dishonor; in the bearing of the cross along the way of self-denial.

My Soul Be On. Thy Guard.

WHILE;, as the Apostle predicted, “perilous times: are upon us, in which some in the church will -stumble,” and some “fall,” and when “the love of many shall wax cold” let us not forget that it is “he that endureth (faithfully) to the end (of • his trial), the same shall be saved.” Remember the Apostle’s advice, to take trials and oppositions and misrepresentations cheerfully, joyously, patiently, knowing that, so endured, they will. “work: out for us a far more exceeding and eternal -weight of glory.” But, as the Apostle adds, ‘to secure such blessed results from trials, persecutions, and oppositions, we must remember to “look not at the things that are seen (earthly .things and prospects), but at things that are unseen (the heavenly and eternal things).” We are to endure “as seeing Him who is invisible.” Greater is. He that is with us than all -that be against us. (Hob. 11:27; 1 John 4:4-8). “Who is he that will harm you (really) if ye be followers of that which is good?” (Read I Pet. 3:13-16; Rom. 8:31-39). The opposition of evil can work only good to “the elect,” those who are called according to God’s purpose. To all who are of the true Zion the promise is, “...No weapon that is formed against you shall prosper.”

When that noble Servant of God, John Wesley, was zealous in opposing Satan, and preaching a full ‘consecration to God, he provoked Satan’s enmity, and the latter found mouthpieces amongst ambitious and zealous “false brethren,” who spread abroad vile rumours from time to time, not only assailing his teachings, but even his moral character. His plan was to make no defence. He argued that if he should engage in personal disputes it would be just what Satan would. want—a hindrance to his work. Finally, however, when a most malicious rumour reflecting’ on his moral character. was started by some prominent persons, and the entire work seemed likely to be greatly injured by it, his brother Charles and some others came to him and said, “John, you must answer this charge or your reputation is gone.”

John replied in substance thus: “No; I will keep right along with-My work. When I consecrated myself to the Lord, I-gave Him my reputation as well as all else that I possess. The Lord is at the helm! Our Lord Jesus, by His fatefulness, ‘made Himself of no reputation,’ and was sacrificed as a blasphemer and between outlaws, yet He •opened not His mouth. No, I will make no de-fence. A certain class, evil at heart, would believe the evil ‘reports regardless of my denials; and those thus alienated no doubt, as in the ‘early church, go 'out from us because they were not of us.’ The Lord knoweth them that are His, and will keep His own; and none shall ‘pluck them out of His hand. Besides the Lord may see that some are thinking of me, rather than of Him and His message which I seek to declare.”

Nothing is stronger in its power, either for helping or hurting, than; word. Gentle, kind, affectionate words are never lost, They give a forward impulse to good deeds, and they • are passed along, like coins that have a golden value.

The White Stone Given The Overcomer.

“To him that overcometh will I give . . . a white stow. and in the stone a new name written. which no man knoweth save he that receiveth it.”—Rev. 2:17.

In ancient times. the Greeks and the Romans had a means of a white stone. This stone was divided custom of noting and perpetuating friendship by into halves, and each person inscribed his .name on the flat surface, after which the parts of the stone” were exchanged. The production of either half was sufficient to ensure friendly aid, even from the descendants/ of those who first divided the stone. A similar custom was sometimes observed by a king, who would break a white stone into two parts, one of which he would retain and the other part give to a special ambassador.

That part could be sent to the king at any time and would ensure aid. Thus the divided stone became a mark of identification.

Rev. 2:17 seems to refer to this ancient custom. The white stone signifies a precious token of the Lord’s love, and the new name written in the stone suggests the Bridegroom’s name. The statement indicates a special acquaintance with the great King of kings, secret between Himself and the individual. The overcomers are not to be recognised merely as a class—the Bride class but each-will have the personal favour of the Lord. Of this no one will know save himself and the King. There is an individual and personal relationship between the Lord and the overcomers, who may be said to-receive the mark of identification—the antitypical White stone—now, in this life.

This mark is the sealing of the Holy Spirit by which the Lord identifies the overcomers. While this is said to be a part of the final reward of the Church, yet him’ the very beginning of our experience we have this personal acquaintance with the Lord. The full seal of the Holy Spirit will be given in the Resurrection, when we receive the new body. Then we shall have the complete knowledge of. the name by which we shall be known to the Lord and He to us forever.

The Power of Example.

CONVENTION ADDRESS.

“Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity.”—1 Tim. 4:12.

WE remember that Timothy was an elder in the Church, and St. Paul wished to impress on him the importance of Christian living, as the Apostle himself exhorted again in 1 Con 11:1, “Be ye followers of me, even as I am also of Christ.” We see by these words that there is an opportunity of each one claiming the name of Jesus, being a living example of what a Christian should be, and thus demonstrating not only to the brethren but to all men the power of the spirit of God in their lives. Thus, all in turn may be led to praise and glorify God in the day of their visitation, when I He shall pour out His spirit on all flesh.

This exhortation to Timothy is surely helpful to us at the present time, when we need every grace to stand, and by every means possible we wish to be. helpful to each other. So the Apostle has said, “Be an example in word.” There are Scriptures which prove that our general conversation indicates in many ways the condition of the heart. The Apostle James stated, “If any man among you seemeth to be religious and bridled his tongue, that man’s religion is vain—worthless.” a man thinketh in his heart so is he”; and “Out of the fulness of the heart the mouth speaketh.” Therefore, the unbridled tongue, speaking selfishly, enviously, bitterly, boastfully or slanderously, proves that the heart from whose fulness these overflow is unsanctified, unholy and grievously lacking of the spirit of Christ. The Psalmist wrote: “I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue; I will keep my mouth with a bridle while the wicked are before me.” Experience teaches also that it is easier to control any other organ than the tongue. So skilful a servant is it that every ambition, passion and inclination of the fallen nature seeks to use it, as a servant or channel for evil. It requires, therefore, increased vigilance, wisdom and care on the part of the Christian to govern this member of the body and bring it into subjection to the new mind in Christ, that it may not be a hindrance, but rather a helpful member to himself and others; “for life and death are in the power of the tongue.” A few words of love, kindness helpfulness how often have changed the entire course of a human life, and even the destiny of nations. “A man bath joy by the answer of his mouth; a word in season, how good it is.”

Then again we are to be examples in conversation. This word “conversation” does not refer merely to language as it is now used, as the original meaning is conduct, and is so translated in the Diaglott. Our conduct relates chiefly to our manner, to the way we walk in the Master’s footsteps, to the way we act, in full, to our general deportment. We are to be examples in our gentleness of demeanour, considerate, kind, thoughtful of others, letting our light shine so that all may see that we have been with Jesus and learned of Him.

Our heavenly Father loved mankind, and while we were yet sinners gave the choicest treasure of His heart for man’s recovery. He still loves the World and is fitting the Church to be the blessers of mankind in future. So all begotten of God’s spirit should have the same disposition of the Lord; a transforming influence should be at work in their lives; an influence that will manifest itself even to those who are out of the way, those who are not blessed yet with the light of God. To bear patiently the failings of those about us with perverse tempers; to endure neglect when we feel we deserve attention, and ingratitude when we might reasonably expect thanks, are opportunities of showing forth the praises of Him Who has bought us and the spirit which animates our every action for good—“The Spirit of God,” “The Holy Spirit,” “The Spirit of Christ,” “The Mind of the Lord.”

The Christian is also to be an example in charity love. In Col. 3:14, the Apostle says that love is the bond of perfectness. Love is that which will unite all other graces and make them one complete whole. Every intelligent being, from the humblest to the most exalted, craves love. The dog craves his master's affection, and expresses his delight at any indication of it. A horse or cat will return your caresses; the young long to be loved, and the angels in all the glory of their state desire it. Our Lord Jesus delights to have our love, and the heavenly Father is pleased with the love we give from true and honest hearts through Christ, our Advocate on High. It is not only those in weakness, then, that crave love, but those in strength and glory desire it, too. What is this desirable thing so universally craved by every intelligent being? Possibly some tender hand has soothed a throbbing brow, we may call to remembrance a mother's love or the tenderness of a father's care, but beyond all earthly affection we have tasted the sweetness of the Divine love which provided for the ransom of the whole human race, and will reach even from the least to the greatest in due time—surely it surpasseth all other loves. In 1 Cor. 13th chapter, the Scriptures show that though we might have all other virtues combined, yet lacking this one, we would be as sounding brass or tinkling cymbals; unless prompted by love the putting on of the other virtues would be mere sham and hypocrisy. With love in the heart the Christian may prove loyal, though the flesh might be weak to perform the dictates of the heart and other qualities perhaps be lacking to some extent. The child of God, who is earnestly endeavouring thus to manifest and cultivate the spirit of the Lord, will indeed become more and more like His blessed Master. What contradiction of sinners He endured against Himself. How patiently He bore the shortcomings of His disciples in all meekness, and how faithfully He taught them and led them to follow in His steps. There was the perfect Pattern of that sacrificing love, which was set as a living example for us and all His followers during this Gospel Age.

A further exhortation is to be examples in faith. A Christian's faith is manifested to others in his conduct, his words, his course in life. The trial of our faith is not left to chance, for it is supervised by our Lord Himself, Who is pictured by the prophet as a Refiner and Purifier of gold and silver—that He may purify the antitypical House of Levi. So the Apostle Peter, in 1 Pet. 1:7 states: "That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honour and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ." We can see that God is not dealing with the world, but allows mankind in general "to lie in the wicked one"—1 John 5:19. Right clown through the ages God has paid no special attention to their conduct, except when it reached an extreme. Hence Satan, who was permitted to be "the prince of this world," by assuming to be an angel of light, is deceiving the world with strong delusions and lying wonders, which we are told would, if it were possible, deceive even the very elect. God purposely permits the Church to be subject to manifold temptations for the testing of the faith of each member, which is necessary because of the high station to which the Overcomers will attain. We may suppose that prior to man's existence the angels had no such trial of faith and patience, nevertheless, the time came when they were given a test of faith and which has continued during all of man's experiences. The primary cause of Satan's deflection, which resulted in his rebellion, was that he lost his faith in God, and pride came into his heart. He thought he could manage the universe better than the Almighty, and succeeded in getting control of our first parents, only to find that instead of bringing a blessing he had brought the curse of death on the human family—the penalty of sin—with all its train of misery and crime. Satan's career no doubt became a very important test to the angels when evil went on for centuries, for some of them preferred to materialise and live in human conditions, a direct violation of Divine arrangements, resulting from their loss of faith in God's wisdom and power.

Faith is a matter of cultivation and development. The same Apostles who cried out in terror gradually grew stronger and stronger in faith until, as the records show, they could, and did, trust the Lord in His absence as in His presence. In a similar way it should be a part of our daily lessons to cultivate trust in the Lord, to think of all the experiences in the past of those who have kept the faith, and all the promises in His Word, that thus we may become rooted and grounded and not moved away from the hope in Christ Jesus. Faith will be in proportion to our knowledge of the character of God. Since our test is for so brief a time—a few years—it must of necessity be a very severe one. God is subjecting our faith to great heat in order to separate the dross, and if we have not the faith to stand the trials then we are not of the class which God is looking for at the present time. "Without faith it is impossible to please God," but confidence in Him will lead us to weigh His words of promise, that we may understand the reason for these testings, and appreciate them as marks of His love for us.

We are also to be examples in purity. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." There is a purity that goes with all that pertains to God and His Word; a loftiness of impure which is not found elsewhere. Everything impure is contrary to God and to His Word. Purity is one of the component elements of Christian character, for the wisdom from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, etc.

In all these ways each of God's people should be living epistles; wherever they go they should be examples to the world. Whether they believe what we preach or not, there will be respect to some extent at least, and the example will bear fruitage in due time, if not now. So let every child of God, the young as well as the older ones, strive to be an example worthy of imitation, an example of earnest, faithful endeavour to copy the Master, a pattern of active zeal in the service of our God. We will not be able to be examples in the full sense while in the flesh, for we realise, and the Apostle reminds us, that the new creature is still in the earthen casket, • which is so frail and prone to err. But thanks be to God, the merit of His dear Son is imputed to each one whose heart intentions are sincere and honest, and our weaknesses are hidden under His cloak of righteousness.

“Blessed are the Dead Who Die in the Lord.”

WITH the passing of our dear fellow-members in Christ beyond the veil, we are reminded more particularly of the Apostle's words in 2 Cor. 5, “For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved we have a building of God, an house not made with hands eternal in the heavens.” This gracious assurance and hope of attaining the heavenly inheritance is held out to all Christ's followers, who, throughout a life of consecration, fight the good fight, and keep the faith even unto death. Our Lord's own words are: “Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life,” and our belief is that this blessed condition has been gained by our Sister Warren, of Canberra, who finished her earthly pilgrimage: last December in full assurance of faith and submission to the will of God throughout a trying time of suffering in recent years, and particularly in the closing hours.

Our deep sympathy and Christian love is extended to Brother Warren and children in their great loss; and it is good to realise that they are consoled and comforted in having the assurance of the wondrous hope in Christ for their dearly loved one, and so “sorrow not as others who have no hope.” We pray that the bereaved ones may ever realise the Lord's sweet blessing bringing peace of heart and mind, as by faith they look beyond the present, to when God shall gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth, even in Him.

The funeral arrangements were simple. The reading of the 23rd Psalm was followed by a -brief address prepared for the officiating minister, concluding with a prayer for God's blessing on the assembly. We have pleasure in presenting the address below, trusting that it may be a helpful witness to still more than those at the graveside, to a life laid down in faith and hope in Christ Jesus and the wondrous plan of redemption all centred in Him.

The address was as follows:—Our departed friend was a devoted wife and mother, and those intimately associated with her can bear witness to a faith which must be worthy of respect; something able to sustain in the severe ordeal of pain and suffering. A recital of various phrases such as “God knows best,” “Sometime we'll understand,” and “He giveth His beloved sleep,” uttered during the Gethsemane experiences causes one to inquire what is the basis for such unbounded faith in the Infinite.

Although not a member of any sect, her faith was based on the Scriptures, untrammelled by dogma and creed. God, infinite in wisdom, love, justice and power has a plan for the benefit of the whole human race. Not vindictive but greater love than a mother's, prompting in carrying forward a scheme to bless all the families of the earth..

Through one man's disobedience the curse followed upon the human race, hence the reign of sorrow, sickness and death. Those under the curse were sustained by a promise that all the families of the earth were to be blessed. Two thousand years ago the Lord Jesus came from heaven to earth, “Glory to the new born king,” sang the angels, but, wait, men crucified the Messiah, the forces of evil seemed to triumph; however, death. was swallowed up in victory.

Our Lord, the first fruits of them that slept, sits waiting until the time is due to set up His kingdom. The interim is devoted to the selection of a Church, the Bride of Christ; out of all denominations a class will be garnered as associates to rule and bless the people of earth.

Look round in the earth to-day; “change and decay”; man's impotency manifest everywhere; the old world is passing away. The kingdoms of earth are falling, a new world or order is gradually assuming shape; a righteous government is being set up; the King is at the door. The “Prince of Peace” will take control of earth's affairs; a stone cut out without hands shall become a mountain and fill the whole earth; Christ and His Bride, the Church, will dispense justice. No barriers of race and creed but a new world or order wherein dwelleth righteousness. No pain, sorrow or death there, but peace, joy and happiness for evermore. “Thy Kingdom Come.” Then with the Apostle exultingly say. “O death, where is thy sting. O grave thy victory.”

Seed-Time and Harvest.

We are sowing, ever sowing,
Something good or something ill
In the lives of those around us—
We are planting what we will.
Not a word we say falls fruitless,
Not a deed we do decays;

Every thought and word and action
Will be found in future days.

When perhaps the hand that sowed them
Shall itself have ceased to be;
Still the record of their being
Will live on eternally.
Grant, then, Lord of all the harvest,
That the seeds we daily sow
May refresh the hearts of others
Spreading blessing as they grow.

May each thought and word and action
Be the growth of Christian love,
To be found in coming ages In Thy garner-house above!

Treasured there, in Thine own keeping,
Just to prove our love was true;
For the motive gives the value
To the meanest thing we do.

When we are most filled with heavenly love, only then are we best fitted to bear with human infirmity, to live above it, and forget its burden.—Maria Hare.

“IN EVERYTHING GIVE THANKS.”

ONCE again at the termination -of the Melbourne Christmas Convention season, we rejoice and render grateful thanks and heartfelt appreciation to our gracious God and Father for another -blessed season of fellowship enjoyed in association with His people from other centres. The pervading spirit of love toward the brethren, borne of that seal of sunship and earnest of the Spirit was most marked, and its blessed influence was indeed a stimulus,[^] urging all to an even greater degree of loyalty, love and devotion in the cause we so deeply prize. Surely the bond of Christian love is drawing all of God's faithful children closer in these latter days, and it was this beautiful evidence at our gatherings which enabled all to feel in fullest measure how blessed is that tie which binds our hearts in Christian love.

We desire to heartily thank the dear brethren who journeyed long distances in order to enjoy sweet fellow-- ship, and who displayed that loving spirit of sacrifice toward us as they sought to encourage, exhort and strengthen their fellow members in this city. The ad-dresses given and the studies which engaged our attention were such as to inspire and yet remind: us that- we have not yet finished our course.) -We were reminded of the sanctifying effect which the of God has to those who faithfully continue in that Word and as expressed in the beautiful chapter 17th of St. John's Gospel. were also directed to the importance of the power of example as recorded in 1 Tim. 4:12; and that our every manner of life Should inspire the fellow-members to greater heights respecting Christian development and service. -Our attention was also drawn to the life of Joseph and God's special dealings with this lowly character, and how our heavenly. Father's purposes and Designs, often seemingly adverse and not understood, eventually prove His love and wisdom when brought to fruition. Thus we were. encouraged to a stronger exercise of faith that can trust the Lord even when we cannot trace His designs for us at the time. We were indebted to another brother who, in pleasing references to incidents in the nature of anecdotes, sought also to encourage particularly the younger 'northers present, and how we were all reminded of the fact that although the narrow way is a path of hardship -and often rugged and thorny, yet in 'our devious and winding uphill passage, we every now and again come upon some refreshing. nook and resting place where we may rest awhile before resuming our strenuous climb along the strait and harrow path until eventually, if ,we faint not, we arrive at the celestial city, the eternal abode of the truly faithful. 'the power of prayer and the necessity to more and. more value this great favour and privilege was stressed along the line of the sample, prayer given us by our Lord. We were encouraged to continually seek the throne of grace ever available for chose who abide in Christ and have God's Word richly abiding In them, thus enabling us at all times to pray aright. The value of prayer respecting one another's interests was also expressed in line with our Lord's Prayer to the Father regarding His chosen disciples, and all who would believe into Him through their word. In this connection the words of Hymn 143. were. found to be most appropriate—"Let 'us pray for one another."

We were privileged to spend helpful times in consideration of the Bible studies •on Gal. 6:1-10; 2 Tim. 2:1-13; and Psalm 97. In the various Scriptures which we believe were heartily appreciated and. proved profitable, we noted again the loving manner in which -the Christian must at all times view the fellow members, as the strong would assist the weak, bearing one another's burdens, and thus seeking to fulfil the law of Christ. It was noted also that- at the same time.. each have individual burdens which even the brethren cannot bear for us, as they relate. to our own personal responsibility, and that-we must not be found leaning upon the brethren. We were exhorted to press along and not become weary in well doing, for in due time we would reap. our reward if we faint not. Meanwhile in our sojourn here we were enjoined to do good unto all as opportunity offers, hut particularly to the "household of faith."

Another study brought to our attention the wondrous grace of our -Lord, of which .we are-privileged to par-take, not to selfishly enjoy, but rather that it might zealously affect us as all would go forth in the service of .-Christ and be found faithfully witnessing to the cause of truth and righteousness. The need of courage in enduring the hardness of the way was stressed, and the need of lighting the good-fight of faith lawfully. according to the injunctions and precepts of God's Word was seen to be essential if we hoped to -be victors in the race. As the Apostle Pauls. says"If we be dead with Christ, we shall also live with Him - if we suffer with Him we shall also reign with Him!"

The final study for the Convention,— Psalm 97—revealed God's plan and purpose as related to the closing days of this harvest period down to the time when the Church shall be gathered, when the law of God shall go forth front

Zion and the word of the Lord front Jerusalem in fulfilment of the great "Abrahamic Promise" which provides for the-setting up of Christ's Kingdom and the uplift and blessing of the poor groaning creation. Meantime -we noted,[^] as an evidence of God's Kingdom coming gradually into operation and His righteous judgments -beginning to be manifested, that on this account the nations are becoming more and -more restless, fearful and dissatisfied, as they strive to adjust affairs according to their sense of justice and equity. We saw daily the darkness and gloom deepens with perplexity on every hand, while the preparatory stately workings of our God are causing men to wake up to a sense of right and wrong, yet in their ignorance of the approach of the incoming kingdom of Christ and its objects, mankind are striving to bring about their own selfish devices and ends. 'Thus the wrath of God is beginning to thunder from heaven and causing men's hearts to fail them as they fear and quake while groping in darkness and despair. We rejoiced as we realised again that eventually mankind will come to see God's righteous judgments abroad in the earth, and then all the inhabitants will learn divine principles of justice, love and goodwill toward their fellowman, and when all the world will come to recognise the glory of, the Lord in clearer light and at last attain to that earthly perfection of human nature as was the heritage of our first parent before sin entered into the World.

Not the least pleasing feature of the Convention was the happy occasion as all assembled on the Sunday morning to witness a dear Sister symbolise her consecration 'by being immersed in the waters of baptism. We rejoiced at this outward evidence and token of a sincere, earnest, loving and devoted heart of one who has 'been for some time a noble example in our midst, and who desired, in the presence of God's people, to witness that inner consecrated condition of heart and mind of which the immersion was but a symbol. We heartily thank our Heavenly Father for this witness and the gladness and rejoicing that has been 'brought to our Sister's home in consequence.

The parting scenes came all too soon, and as the session came 'to a close with the usual love feast and the singing of appropriate farewell hymns, it was evident that the privilege and blessings experienced in happy Convention were such as to manifest hearts filled with love -to overflowing, and no doubt words failed to adequately express the inmost feelings as with the final hand shaking we reluctantly left the holy precincts, realising that the lessons gained must now be put into operation as each 'and all would go forth and witness that we have been with Jesus and learned of Him.

We heartily thank all the dear brethren who in one way or another so ably assisted and thus made the occasion such a profitable and joyous one. All realised to the full that all their blessings were at the gracious hands of God, and that the great Head of the Church, true to promise, had indeed served His brethren as they gathered round. the carcase in expectancy of hope and rejoicing.

The several messages of love, together with appropriate verses of Scripture sent from 'brethren who could not attend the meetings, as well as from the dear friends in Adelaide and Digby, were most heartily appreciated, and. in return the Melbourne brethren desired to send along as one general greeting the words of verses 9 to 11, of Psalm 91, together with their Christian. love and gratitude.

May 'God's richest blessing attend the dear brethren everywhere, and the year we have now entered upon prove to 'be one of increased love and zeal in joyful service for Him Who has. promised us so rich an inheritance.

CONVENTION NOTES.

The following given by one of Our friends at the fellowship meeting, “Favourite Hymns and Why,” is typical of many helpful thoughts expressed throughout the Convention gatherings.

The majority—to me—are beautiful, having helpful lessons along one line or another, reminding us of God’s great love to us, or of our duty and privileges, ‘both toward Him and one another, and often they help us, in that they reprove, making so plain to us our shortcomings in one direction or another. Two that have been a good deal in my thoughts of late are:

“I Know not What Awaits Me,” 108.

The former reminds us of our duty and privilege as Christians to forget self and the interests of others, and . with the latter as we sing, “That every joy He sends _me, comes a glad and sweet surprise,” we are reminded of what a lot of surprises we do get, for many are the joys that come to us, although nothing was -promised other than a narrow and difficult way.

“In the world ye shall have ‘tribulation,” said our Lord— John 16:33.

There is the reminder for us also to see that we keep self in the condition that we do not accept and look upon these joys as our due, but rather let them come as the little hymn puts • it, “glad and sweet surprises.”

If we do find ourselves beset with sorrows and troubles they are more than offset by the joys of truth that the poor world knows nothing of, and then there is, too, the compensation that comes as we enter into the cares and sorrows of others, for it would seem to be impossible to be able to .comfort or ‘brighten the lives of others without benefiting self. Truly it is more blessed to give than to receive.

Correspondence,

N.S.W., Jan. 22, 1933.

Dear Brother,—I received your kind letter yesterday, and the Testament and cards a few days before. Please send two dozen more cards, one dozen of “A Child’s Prayer,” and one dozen of “My Prayer for Thee.” These are lovely cards, and my friends seem to appreciate them very much.

The Testament is a very nice one; I got quite a surprise when I opened it, and saw how it was arranged, and with marginal notes. It is a nice type for my eyes, and will not bother further with any other just now. Yes, I like the Diaglott, but the type is so very faint for my eyes. I had not known its value till some little time ago; it is really a splendid book, nicely set up, with its printers’ marks for a guide, which I did not understand for some time. You see, brother, I had very little schooling, as I was very delicate in those days, and now I am getting on in years. It is really wonderful how the Lord guides us to understand His Word when we put our trust in Him. We know that our Father does not call many wise men to be partakers of His Kingdom, but chiefly the poor of this world, rich in faith and full of love for Him by keeping His’ commandments, which are not • grievous. The Lord’s sheep hear His voice and love to follow Him.

Thank you very much for the little paper you enclosed, “Humility in Service”; I enjoyed every bit of it, and it was nice to be able to read it over again. I noticed the wonderful eye-cure mentioned, but my doctor tells me that my eyes will never be as good again as they have been, yet he says they will get much better.

Ten shillings is enclosed for the Testament and cards, also a few stamps, and any change can go towards the Work for the Master.

I now close with warm Christian love to yourself and the brethren, and remembering you in my prayers.—Your Brother in Christ, B.J.

Would you please send me along the following free literature:—“Our Lord’s Return,” “Perplexed Humanity’s Only Hope,” “Do the Dead Know Anything?” “God’s Great Plan of Salvation and Restoration.” Finding the other little writings very helpful, I would very much like some more.—From yours truly, M.P.

Dear Brethren,—I am sorry I am late with my subscription again for the “P. Paper,” and I find it so helpful, and such good reading in them. My sister and I are so thankful for the food we get from books and papers as we are isolated ones, and cannot meet very often our-selves. It is His will, and we must learn to lean wholly on our blessed Saviour. I pray God to bless you all and keep you in His care. •

Enclosed please find postal note for — 2/6 for “P.P.” and please send me a small hymn book without music. Please use the rest for the good work.

Your sister by His grace, _ M.A.

“The Lord be With you!”: steals the benediction’
With solemn splendour like a falling star;^
In morns. of joy and midnights of affliction,
It breathes its echoed sweetness near and far.

“The Lord be with you!” when the shadows hold you;
And prove His loving power to soothe and bless;
When dangers darken and when fears enfold you.;
“The Lord be with you!” in His tenderness.

“THY WILL BE DONE ON EARTH.”

This petition offered from the heart implies- that the one offering it has made a full consecration of his will, his heart, to the Lord; and that as he hopes for the Kingdom by and by to come and subdue all unrighteousness and to establish the Divine will from sea to sea, and from pole to pole; so now, the petitioner, being in accord with the Lord's will, and thus wishing that it might be universally in control, will see to it that this will is ruling in his own heart; that in his own affairs God's will is done to the best of his ability in his earthly condition, even as he hopes to have it perfected in the Kingdom soon to be established.

No one can intelligently and honestly offer this petition, unless he both desires and endeavours to have the Lord's will done in himself while on earth. Thus a blessing comes to the one who offers this petition before he has asked any special blessing upon himself Or others. The mere thought of the Divine arrangement brings a blessing, a peace, a rest, a satisfaction of heart.

“GIVE US THIS DAY OUR DAILY BREAD.”

The thought in this petition seems to be that of continual dependence upon the Lord, day by day, for the things needed—accepting for each day the Lord's providential care and direction of our affairs. Daily bread should here be understood in the broad sense of food and raiment—things necessary. The Lord's people, who recognise Him as their Father, must trust Him as children, while seeking to use the various instrumentalities and opportunities within their reach. They are to provide the things necessary for themselves, yet to recognise the Divine provision and care which has pre-arranged matters so as to make their present conditions and blessings attainable.

Agnosticism and Higher Criticism in general may deny, if they please, Divine providence in connection with the grains and other supplies for man's necessities; but the eye of faith sees behind these supplies the Love, the Wisdom and the Power of God, making ready for man's necessities, and giving the things necessary in such a manner as will be for the advantage of mankind —through sweat of face, etc.

“FORGIVE US OUR SINS.”

To petition the Lord for forgiveness of sins implies that we are at heart opposed to sin, and that any sins committed have not been wilful; and that the Lord, according to His Covenant of grace with us, agrees to accept the intention of our hearts instead of the actual, full, complete, perfect obedience to the Divine requirement, in thought, in word and in act. This petition, then, signifies that we recognise that the Robe of Christ's righteousness granted to us has become spotted or sullied; and that we desire to be cleansed, so that we may again be “without spot or wrinkle or any such thing.” This cannot refer to wilful sins, for as the Apostle explains, “If we sin wilfully, after that, we have received the knowledge of the Truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins,” and hence, no more a basis for forgiveness; and the end of wilful sin is the Second Death. (HO). 10:26). It is, however, proper to re-, mark that there are what might be termed mixed sins—sins in which a measure of wilfulness may have continued with a measure of ignorance or inherited weakness.

In the case of such sins the Lord expresses His willingness to cancel the wrong upon its being promptly repented of; but He reserves to Himself the giving of stripes, or chastisements appropriate and necessary to His child as an instruction in righteousness and correction of weaknesses, etc.

Happy are they who, with growth in grace and know-ledge, find their hearts so fully in accord with the principles of the Divine arrangement that they will never transgress with any measure of wilfulness; but blessed also are those who, finding some measure of wilfulness in their deflection from, the Divine rule, are pained thereby, and who, as the Apostle says, are led to discipline or correct themselves that they may the more quickly learn the lessons, and bring their bodies more completely into subjection to the new mind—”I keep under my body. and bring it into subjection, lest that by any means, when I have preached to others. I myself should be a castaway.” “For if we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged.” 1 Cor. 9:27; 11:31.

“THOSE WHO TRESPASS AGAINST US.”

As we are imperfect and cannot keep the Divine Law,, so likewise others are imperfect. As the degrees of deflection from the Divine Law vary With the degrees of the fall, so also we must expect that the trespasses of ourselves and others, one against another, will vary, according to the natural temperament, weakness, etc. As we realise that we have received, and will still need Divine compassion and mercy in respect to our shortcomings, so the Lord teaches us that we must exercise similar benevolence toward our fellow creatures, both in the Church and outside.

Elsewhere He lays down this rule very stringently, that if we do not from our heart forgive those trespassing against us, neither will our Heavenly Father forgive us our trespasses. Thus the Lord would develop in His consecrated people the spirit of the Father, even as He instructed us, saying, “Be ye perfect, even as your Father which is in Heaven is perfect.”—Matt. 5:48.

Perfection is to be the standard. However far short of it we may come, we can have no lower standard; and in proportion as we are striving for that standard and realise our own weaknesses and imperfections, we should: have proportionate compassion upon fellow creatures and. their shortcomings toward us. This is love, sympathy, compassion; and whoever does not attain this degree^ of love which will have. compassion upon others and their weaknesses, and which would be ready, and glad to forgive them, is deficient in love; and whoever does not succeed in this matter to the extent of being-able to love his enemies, so as to even pray for them, that person fails to reach. the mark.. of character which the Lord demands. and he may be sure that his own deviations from perfect rectitude will not be overlooked; for he is lacking in the^ one important quality of love, which covers a multitude of sins of every kind. • None, surely, will gain a .place in the Kingdom. class, in the Bride class, except those who have this forgiving quality, this quality of love.

“BRING US NOT INTO TEMPTATION.”

We are.to remember the words of the Apostle (James 1:13) to the ‘effect that God tempteth no man, and are to apply this thought to our prayer. So our prayer will not signify that we fear that God will tempt .us; but that we ,..treat- Him that He may guide our steps, our cares in life, so that .no temptation, no trial, shall come upon us that would .be too severe for us; that He may’ bring us by a way in which we shall not be tempted above that we are able, and provide a way of escape when we are sore distressed. ‘The Apostle assures us that this is the Divine will; and that such a prayer would be in accordance with it. He says that God will not suffer us to be tempted above that we are able, but will with . every temptation provide also a way of escape. The temptations are of. the Adversary, and of our own fallen natures—through our own flesh, and through the weaknesses of others. God is not responsible for these; but lie is able to guide the way of His people that they shall not be overwhelmed in these natural difficulties, weaknesses, besetments, nor by the wiles of the Adversary.

“DELIVER US FROM THE EVIL ,ONE.”

There never was a time when there was greater need of this petition than at the present. The Evil One is specially seeking to trap and ensnare the Lord’s people at the present time.; and the Scriptures inform us that God is permitting this; and that thus He is sending strong delusions upon the world and upon the nominal church. Our Father is permitting this because the time has come. for a complete separation of the “wheat” from the “tares.” He has promised, however, that those who are truly. of the “wheat” class—the sanctified in Christ Jesus, who are seeking to walk in His steps—shall not be stumbled, shall never fall, but shall have an abundant entrance ministered unto them into the everlasting Kingdom. The question, then, is one of loyalty of heart to the Lord.

The trial of this “day shall try the work of every man (in the Church). of what sort it. is:” This trial will be so severe that if it were possible the “very elect” would be deceived; but this will. not be possible, for the Lord will specially care for these. Nevertheless; the Lord will be inquired of by His people in ‘respect to these matters which He has already promised, and as they pray, “Deliver us from the Evil One,” they surely will labour in the same direction. It is our expectation that very shortly now the. forces of evil will gain much greater strength than at present .with all deceivableness of unrighteousness.” Meantime, onr Lord is staying the adverse forces that Hie true people may put on the armour of God and be able to stand when the evil day shall come (Concluded)

Ransom—Ransom Price—Sin Atonement.

BUT one Ransom-price was arranged for by our Heavenly Father and provided for in the death of His Son, our Lord Jesus Christ. That Ransom-price is for the sins of the whole world. But the world has not yet gotten its share of the benefit of that Ransom-price provided more than eighteen centuries ago; for it still “lies in the Wicked One.” (1 John 5:19.) Our Lord, knowing the Father’s will in this matter, declared, “I pray not for the world, but for them which • thou bast given me.”—John 17:9.

‘The application of the merit of the Ransom for the Church was made when our Lord Jesus “ascended up on High and appeared’ in the presence of God for us” —the Church class. (Heb. 9:24.) His application of His merit for us was manifested by the Pentecostal blessing, which has since continued with all of the “us” class, begetting these to the new nature, as joint-heirs with our Redeemer.

Our great High Priest will not make application of His Ransom-merit on behalf of the world until the end of this Age, until He shall have finished the use of it on behalf of the Church—now enabling those drawn of the Father to “present their bodies living sacrifices, holy and acceptable to God, their reasonable service.”—Rom. 12:1.

During this Age, He accepts, therefore, as part of His own sacrifice, the offering of the Church. This enables this class, as referred to by the Apostle (Col. 1:24), “to fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ for 11 is Body’s sake, which is the Church.” Thus, suffering with Him in this present time, they will shortly be glorified with Him in His Kingdom as His Bride.

To recapitulate: The Ransom-price is one thing, and the Sin-atonement made with that Ransom-price is quite another. The Ransom-price for all was provided by our Lord in the work finished by Him at Calvary. The appropriation of the Ransom-price is two-fold:—

- (1) In this Age, for or on behalf of, the Church.
- (2) In the coming Age, for the sealing of the New Covenant with Israel, which will be open for acceptance by all the families of the earth—all nations.

The Atonement, so far as God is concerned, all proceeds from the Ransom-price provided at Calvary. The first application of that price was made after our Lord ascended up on. High, when He appeared for us, His Church. The second application of the Ransom-price will be at the close of this Age, when, as the Great. Priest, He will mediate the New Covenant with the House of Israel and the House of Judah. This Covenant is different from the Covenant under which the Church is developed, namely the Abrahamic Covenant, which has no mediator, and which is a Covenant of sacrifice, while the New Covenant is a Covenant of Restitution, to return man to his original condition ‘of perfection.

THE PRAISE BELONGS TO HIM.

I know if I am chosen to joint-heirship with my Lord,
To reign with Him in glory, to receive that great reward;
If after all my weaknesses a crown for me He'll claim,
I know that choice will surely bring great glory to God's name.

If I had been more worthy, and my stumblings had been few,
When men gave God the glory, they'd have praised my virtue, too;
If I'd ne'er lost a battle, or had never missed the mark,
As they talked about His goodness, mine, also, they'd remark.

But my being so deficient, in thought and word and deed,
Means He'll get all the glory—He deserves it all, indeed.
When they see this weak mortal raised to such immortal heights,
What praise will rise to Him who in such nothingness delights!

I know that when my Saviour did return to Heaven above,
And was crowned with wondrous glory, it did prove His Father's love;
But thinking of Christ's merit, and His sinless life of grace,
'Twas no wonder that Jehovah chose Him for such a place:

With me it is so different; I have not one thing to plead,
That I should be more honored than another bruised reed;
And truly there's no reason to give me a mite of praise;
To Him belongs all glory for the joys which crown my days.

If you knew all my failings, and my blemishes so vile,
And saw the loving patience my Father shows the while,
'Twould amaze you beyond measure to think He could or would Make me an able servant who should do His people good.

But if to Him such praise is due because of what I am—
Because of such a weakling He has made a stronger man,
Then what will be His glory when He's raised me higher still,
And crowned me with His choicest on the top of Zion's Hill?

That all these years of striving find me so imperfect still,
Does not speak much to my credit nor give a happy thrill;
Where I appear as worthy 'tis because His grace is there,
And in the praise and glory I deserve no part, no share.

I hate my faults and failings, and I fight them day by day, '
But from self with all its weaknesses I cannot get away;
Despite this fact, He uses me—beyond is still more grace—
And hosts will tell His glory—His who found poor me a place.

The Peace of God.

“And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus.” — Phil. 4:7.

PEACE is defined to be a state of quiet, or tranquillity, freedom from disturbance or agitation—calmness, repose. Such a state of mind our text affirms of God. His is a mind tranquil, calm, undisturbed, never agitated, nor even wearied, nor perplexed by any - of the cares of His vast dominion. Yet this perfect peace of God, the Scriptures show, is due neither to the fact that there are no disorders in His vast domain, not yet to any stoical indifference to pain or pleasure, but rather to that perfect poise of His glorious attributes which makes Him Master of His situation as Sovereign of the whole universe.

Have we admired the coolness and calm self-possession of a great general, such as Grant or Napoleon, in the midst of confusion and smoke of battle? Or of a great statesman, such as Gladstone or Bismarck, in the midst of national perplexities and perils? Or of skilled physicians or others in critical times and places? These are only faint illustrations of the peace of self-possession and self-confidence which rules in the mind of God. He is never confused, bewildered, perplexed, anxious or care-worn, nor in the least fearful that His plans will miscarry or His purposes fail, because all power and wisdom inhere in Him.

The scope of His mighty intellect reaches to the utmost bounds of possibility, comprehends all causes and discerns with precision all effects; consequently, He knows the end from the beginning, and that, not only from philosophical principles, but also by intuition. •As the Creator of all things, and the originator of all law, He is thoroughly acquainted with all the intricate subtleties of physical, moral and intellectual law, so that no problem could arise, the results of which are not manifest to His mind. “God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all.”—I John 1:5.

God, the Creator of all things, is also the competent Sustainer of all things. In silent grandeur, from age to age, the whole physical universe fulfils His will, without a suspicion of disorder or mishap; and the same power is pledged for its sustenance throughout the eternal future.

Thus from His own vast, inherent resources of power and wisdom, springs the peace of God. But not from this source alone is the divine peace; for peace is the certain concomitant of inherent goodness. God is the impersonation of every virtue and every grace; and consequently He has the blessed satisfaction and peace of conscious moral perfection as well as inherent wisdom and power.

GOD’S EMOTIONAL NATURE.

Yet we find this peace of God coexisting with much of disorder and trouble. As a Father He shows us that He bears a Father’s love to all His intelligent creatures—“the whole family [of God] in heaven and in earth”—and that for His “pleasure they are and were created.” (Eph. 3:15; Rev. 4:1 1.) He created them in His own likeness—with the same mental and moral attributes, so that He might have communion and fellowship with them as sons, and they with Him as a Father, that thus, in mutual fellowship and communion, the Creator and the creature might find pleasure, happiness and delight.

This likeness of God includes in all not only the same mental faculties, but also the free exercise of the same in the formation of character. A creature incapable of thus forming character would not be in God’s likeness. And for the purpose of developing character, the alternative of good and evil must be placed before him. The right and the wrong principles of action must be discerned, and the individual -left free to his own choice in the matter, that the pleasure of God may be realised in the virtuous character resultant from the free choice of righteousness.

Since the love- of God for His -newly created- and innocent creatures is akin to, but much stronger than, the love of an earthly parent • for an innocent infant, and since that loving interest and solicitude does not grow cold as the creature advances in years, • but earnestly watches for the development of the principles and fruits of righteousness, it is manifest that, like an earthly parent, God experiences the sense of either pleasure or pain, . according as His free, intelligent creatures choose the right -course. or the wrong. Of this we are fully assured, not only by thus reasoning from the fact of Ills Fatherhood, but also by all of those Scriptures which speak of some things as abomin-able, displeasing, hateful, and despicable to Him and as giving Him no pleasure; which say that His anger burns against them, and that His indignation and wrath wax hot, even to their destruction. Other Scriptures speak of His pleasure, love, joy, and delight, in pleasing things—in the principles of righteousness and those who obey them—the appreciation of pleasurable emotions of an opposite character, for pain and pleasure may properly be considered the ebb and flow of the same emotion.

These exhibitions of the mind of God indicate clearly an emotional nature in the Divine Being, of which fact we might also judge from the realisation of our own emotional nature, since man was created in God's image. No, God is not a God of stoical indifference, insensible to the emotions of pleasure and of pain; but the perfect poise of His attributes preserves the equilibrium of peace under all circumstances, whether of pain or pleasure.

GOD'S PEACE UNBROKEN BY ETERNAL DISCORD.

With this thought, then, let us consider the circumstances under which the marvellous peace of God has been perpetually maintained. The deep-laid plan of God in all His creative-works required long aims [ages] for its accomplishment. Across the vista of ages He saw in His purpose the glory of an intelligent creation in His own likeness, established in righteousness and worthy of His gift of eternal life. He therein saw the mutual pleasure of the Creator and the creature, and with a peaceful patience He resolved to wait for the glorious consummation.

As the plan developed and time rolled on, the free Moral agency of His creatures, misused by some, was enabling them to develop evil characters. By this means discord was introduced into His family—"the family [of God] in heaven and in earth"—all His creatures, angels and men; and the family was divided, some holding to righteousness and some choosing to do evil. But such a contingency was one of the foreseen necessities of the far-reaching plan, the glorious outcome of which was, in the divine judgment, worth the cost of all the trouble and loss which He foresaw.

What a dreadful thing is family discord. How a prodigal son or a wayward daughter often brings. the grey hairs of the human parent down with sorrow to the grave! Ah! the heavenly .Father knows something of such sorrow.; for He saw Satan, one of his sons (Isa. 14. 12), an angel of light, fall as lightning from heaven. (Luke 10:18.) For six thousand years, at least, that son has been in open, defiant rebellion against God, and most _actively and viciously engaged in inciting further rebellion and wickedness. He saw many of the angels leave their first estate (Jude 6) and become the allies of Satan, and then He. also saw the whole human race fall into sin. Did ever any human parent find such a. conspiracy—so virulent and hateful—spring up in his family? Surely not!

Then God found it necessary to perform the unpleasant duties of discipline. In His justice He must disown the disloyal sons and deal with them as enemies. Though all the while His Fatherly love was preparing to bless the deceived and fallen ones when the purposes of redemption should restore the repentant to His favour, love must be veiled, while only stern. relentless justice could be manifested. This has been no pleasant duty, nor has the attitude of the sinner been pleasing to Him.

Consider the love against which these recreants sinned.. Though from God cometh every good and perfect gift, His favours have been despised, His love spurned. His righteous authority conspired against and defied, His character maligned, misrepresented, made to appear odious, hateful, unrighteous, and even despicable. Yet, through it all the, peace of God continues, and for six thousand years He has endured this contradiction of sinners against Himself.

And still, O, wondrous grace,,! His love abounds; and it is written that He so loved the world, even while they were yet sinners, that He gave His only-begotten Son to die for them; and that through Him judgment (trial) is also to be extended to those angels that fell. with the exception of Satan, the leader and instigator of the whole conspiracy—the father of lies.—john 3:16; 1 Cor. 6:3; Jude 6; Heb. 2:14; Rev. 20:10, 14.

GOD'S PEACE COMPATIBLE WITH SORROW.

This gift of divine love was another indication of the cost to our heavenly Father of His great and marvellous plan. Not only did He behold the fall into sin of a large proportion of His family, but their recovery cost the; sacrifice of the dearest treasure of His heart, and the subjection of this beloved One to the most abject humiliation, ignominy, suffering and death. Again the illustration of a parent's love assists us in comprehending the cost of this manifestation of Jehovah's love.. With what tender and yearning emotions of love must He have made this sacrifice. of His beloved Son, in whom He was well pleased? In addition to all the graces of character manifested since the very dawn of the being of the Logos, was now added the further grace of full submission to the divine will, even. when the pathway pointed out was one of humiliation and pain.

Ah did the Father let Him go on that errand of mercy without the slightest sensation of sorrowful emotion? Had IN no appreciation of the pangs of a Father's love when the arrows of death pierced the heart of-His beloved Son? When our dear Lord said. "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death," and again, "Father. if it be possible, let this cup pass from me:: nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt." did it touch no sympathetic chord in the heart of the Eternal? Yes, verily the unfeigned love of the Father sympathetically shared the Lord's sorrow.—Matt. 26:38, 39.

The principle taught in the divine Word, that true love weeps 'with those that weep and rejoices with those who rejoice. is one which is also exemplified in the divine character. The immortal Jehovah 'could not Himself die for us, his divine nature being proof against death. And even if He could have died, there would have been no higher power to raise Him out of death. Thus all creation would have been left forever without a Governor, and only disaster and ruin could have ensued. But God could and did sacrifice at great cost to His loving, Fatherly nature, the dearest treasure of His heart; and thus He manifested (I John 4-9) the great love wherewith He loved His deceived and fallen creatures. if this sacrifice cost Him nothing. if it were impossible for His mind to realise any painful emotion, even under such a circumstance. then the gift of His Son would be no manifestation of His love; for that which costs nothing, manifests nothing.

Our Lord Jesus also manifested His great sympathy for the Father in the misrepresentation of His character, which He has so patiently endured for ages. It was the one effort of His life to glorify the Father and to rectify among men the false impressions of His glorious character—to show to men His goodness. benevolence. love and grace. and to lead them to love the merciful God who so loved them, even while they were yet sinners. as to seek them out and to plan for their eternal salvation.

GOD'S PEACE SELF-CENTRED.

Yes. there has been great commotion in the disrupted family of God—commotion in which the Lord declares He has. had no pleasure (Psa. • 5:4); but, nevertheless. the peace of God has never been disturbed. In the full consciousness of His own moral perfection, His unerring wisdom, His mighty power, and with the fullest appreciation of justice and the keenest and most ardent love of the beauty of holiness, patiently and peacefully. He has endured the contradiction of sinners against Himself for six thousand years.

But during the seventh millennium, according to the divine purpose. it will be the joyful privilege of our Lord Jesus fully to manifest to all creatures in heaven and in earth the Father's glorious character. Then will the Father rejoice in the grandeur of His finished work and in the everlasting peace and happiness of His family in heaven and on earth. "reunited under one head."—Eph. I:10. (Diaglott).

This blessed consummation will not be realised. however, until the incorrigible fallen sons of God. disowned and disinherited because they loved unrighteousness, and would not be reclaimed, shall have been cutoff. This will be the last unpleasant duty of the Creator and Father of all, who positively declares that it is a sad duty, yet nevertheless. one which He will have .the fortitude to perform in the interests of universal righteousness and peace. Hear Him: "As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the- wicked turn from his way and live; turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die?"--Ezek. 33:11.

Thus we see that the peace of God is: compatible with great commotion and with sorrow and pain of any kind; for it is not dependent upon outward circumstances, but upon the proper balancing of the mind and the conditions of a perfect heart. Such peace—the peace of God—was enjoyed also by • our Lord Jesus in the midst of all the turmoil and confusion of His eventful earthly life. And this brings us to the consideration of our Lord's legacy to His disciples, when He was about to leave the world, as expressed in His own words:

"Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you; not as' the world giveth tin stinted measure or in perishable quality I, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid."—John 14. 27.

This article, in connection with these words of our Lord, will be continued in our next issue.

The Good Fight of Faith.

I came and saw, and hoped to conquer,
As the great Roman once had done;
His was the one hour's torrent shock of battle,
My field was harder to be won.

I came and saw, but did not conquer,
The foes were fierce, their weapons strong;
I came and saw, but yet I did not conquer,
For me the fight was sore and long.

They said the war was brief and easy,
A word, a look, would crush the throng;
To some it may have been a moment's conflict,
To me it has been sore and long.

They said the threats were coward bluster,
To brave men they could work no wrong;
So some may boast of swift and easy battle,
To me it has been sore and long.

And yet I know that I shall conquer,
Though sore and hard the fight may be;
I know, I know I shall be more than victor
Through Him who won the fight for me.

I fight, not fearful of the issue,
My victory is sure and near;
Yet not the less with hand and eye all watchful,
Grasp I my buckler and my spear..

For I must fight, if I would conquer,
'Tis not by flight that fields are won;
And I must conquer, if I would inherit
The victor's joy and crown and throne.

Bahaism

THERE appears to be a movement abroad called Bahaism. The thought appears to be to abridge all religions in order to bring about a working faith, into which all may be gathered in a common brother-hood of man under the Fatherhood of God. Referring to the movement, I. W. E. Dudley, of Brooklyn, N.Y., has made the following remarks

"It is certain that the clay will arrive when the human race will come into the unity of the faith; 'that that may all be one' is a prayer destined for fulfilment, even though the mountains crumble. But this unity of faith will not be realised by throwing off institutional restraint. It will be hastened by an organised programme of clear thinking, a programme born at the altar, where consecrated souls see their Lord high and lifted up. You see, to believe some thing about everything and nothing in particular, leads to no end of difficulty. If a man, for the sake of breadth of vision, believes equally in Christ and Buddha, the inevitable result is a neutrality that inhibits religious zest. This means that universality of belief may easily be made the excuse for carelessness in personal worship.

“There are individuals whose beliefs are so numerous that conviction is an absolute impossibility. This is why too much breadth leads to confusion. It is a delightful experience to be regarded as a person of unlimited tolerance and vision, but after all the thing that matters is the goal for which we are striving. To dip a ladle in every pot, and to be applauded for it, is positively thrilling, ‘but the danger is the complete loss of logic through loose thinking.’”

There is on the one hand danger of bigotry and a disposition ready to declare that every one not thinking and believing just along certain lines are outside Christianity altogether, and then, as is usual, the great Adversary swings others to the other extreme as inti-mated in the above excerpt, i.e., that it does not matter what we believe—just have a kind spirit and spend happy times together—gather all and sundry and make them think they are all bound for the same place, even if journeying along roads leading in opposite directions.

The Christian must know what he believes, and there are certain fundamental teachings which he must up-hold, and any who do not accept such doctrines are not Christians at all. All the same, there is no occasion to denounce those who cannot see what we believe to be essentials, not all are called to the “high calling of God in ‘Christ Jesus.’” We rejoice to know that the Lord has a provision for such in own time and way. There are other matters which are not so vital, and on these we should seek to exercise. consideration towards those who differ from us. All should be able to express their thoughts in quietness and turn to the Scriptures which they would think support their views; maintaining the unity of the spirit in the bonds of love, joy and peace.

Probably all other religions in the world might form a basis for unity, but the Christian faith can make no compromise—Christianity is exclusive—”what fellowship bath Christ with Belial.”

ADELAIDE CONVENTION

It is with pleasure that announcement is made to the effect that the brethren of the Adelaide Ecclesia have decided to hold their usual Easter Convention in that city. again this year (D.V.),

The Convention is to take in Good Friday to Easter Monday, April 14th to 17th, inclusive, and the evening just preceding these Convention days—Thursday, April 13th—has been chosen for the Memorial Service in commemoration of our Lord’s great sacrifice.

A very pleasing feature this year is the inclusion of a Baptismal Service in the programme, at which those so desiring may symbolise their consecration already having taken place, in the waters of baptism.

Any further information shall be supplied in our next month’s issue, and in the meantime the class secretary in Adelaide will be pleased to hear from all friends who may contemplate being in attendance, and to whom a hearty invitation is extended.

We pray God’s blessing upon the arrangements that the season may be one of mutual help and encouragement for each and all. Kindly address: - ,S. H. E. Copping, 70 Fairford Street, Unley, Adelaide, South Australia.

THE PASSOVER MEMORIAL, 1933.

Opportunity is taken of making this early reference to the Passover season for this year. All truly consecrated followers of Christ delight to assemble together, wherever possible, and keep the Memorial in remembrance of His death, in sincerity and truth. And, further, as is fully appreciated by the brethren, this solemn occasion of partaking of the emblems is a confirmation of our consecration vow and heart desire 'to be broken' with our Lord, as the life is "poured out" in faithful service unto death. (Rom. 8:17).

Our Lord, in fulfilment of the type (Exod. 12:1-6) became "our Passover (Lamb) slain for us" on the 14th of Nisan, according to the Jewish Calendar, and this date falls on Monday, 10th April, this year. It was, however, on the previous evening, still Nisan 14th (the Jewish day commencing and closing at sundown) that Christ instituted the Memorial with His disciples, after the customary Passover Supper. The evening of Sunday, April 9th, will, therefore, be the appropriate time to celebrate the Memorial this year for all the brethren desiring to hold it on its anniversary.

The Melbourne Class have decided on the anniversary (late, Sunday, 9th April, for the Memorial Service and all consecrated members in Christ will be welcome at the usual meeting rooms, Molesworth Chambers, 450 Little Collins Street, Melbourne.

Distinction Between Keeping and Fulfilling The Law.

THE question, Did the keeping of the Law Covenant require the death of Christ? is a peculiar and very deep one.

On one side it might be argued that the death of Christ was sacrificial, that no law would be just which would require the death of an innocent person; that since God's Law is just, it did not require the death of an innocent man, and that therefore it was not necessary for Jesus to die in order to fulfil the Law. But this is only one side of the question.

The other side of the argument is that our Lord Jesus, who loved His God with all His heart, soul, mind and strength, and who had consecrated His life to do the Father's will. must do that will and avoid everything contrary to it, in order to live in harmony with His consecration. As soon, therefore, as He learned that it was God's will that a redemption price of a perfect human life should be paid for Adam and the world of mankind, He would present Himself in consecration and faithfully carry out all that is implied in that consecration, because He loved God with all His heart, soul, mind and strength.

It would be reasonable, also, to expect that if our Lord knew that the hundreds of millions to whom He had become "neighbor" by becoming human were in great difficulty and could be delivered only by a sacrifice on His part. He would, if He loved His neighbour as Himself, want to do something for their relief. This desire would lead Him to make the sacrifice.

If to this we add the thought that God would not permit our Lord ,to perish, but would restore Him to life and glory, and that Jesus had in mind the promise that He would not be suffered to remain in death, we at once perceive that He would be willing to die for His Unjust neighbor, because He loved His neighbor as Himself.

These two views, so directly opposite, nevertheless coincide in that it was left open for our Lord to will what He would do. The Father gave Him an opportunity and set before Him a great reward; the Father did not entrap our Lord into an engagement from which He could not draw back. When we come to view the subject from this standpoint, we see the reasonableness of the whole arrangement.

In His consecration at baptism our Lord had said, "Lo. I come . . . to do Thy will, O God" (Heb. 10:7); I will keep nothing back that You require. Such obedience would have been as much as the Law could require of any one. On the other hand, Justice would not require a sacrifice, for Justice could not demand it. Willingness to do anything that justice would demand constituted His keeping of the Law. This point is so fine that 'it is almost impossible to explain it in language. We can know, however, that the Father set before Jesus the great reward, and that for the joy set before Him He endured the cross and despised the shame.—Heb. 12:1, 2.

GOD'S WILL EXPRESSED

There is a distinction between fulfilling the Law and keeping the Law. The Jews did neither. They partially kept the Law and endeavoured to do still further than they were able to do. But they could not fulfil the Law; for it is so great that it is beyond the 'power of man to fulfil all of its requirements. . . . The Law consists of two different parts. The one is a regulation of the morals the duty of all toward -God and toward fellow-men. In this sense of the word, the Law stands for justice—for what is right. The Jews endeavoured to do right and thus to keep the Law, but were unable to do so on account of hereditary weaknesses.

Our Lord Jesus, however, kept the Law in this sense. By so doing He earned the right to everlasting life on the human plane. This the world will do in the next Age. They will be enabled to keep the Law and will get everlasting life, the reward of obedience to the Law. But Jesus did more than keep the Law of Justice. He also fulfilled that part of the Law which is applicable to Him, and He is still fulfilling the

The other part of the Law consists of ceremonial features, which constitute the types and shadows mentioned by St. Paul. (Heb. 10:1). These prophetic features of the Law represent the Divine will in respect of the means by which mankind will 'be restored from the plane of degradation, sin and death to Divine favour. This prophetic fulfilling of the Law consisted in the carrying out in antitype of one important feature—the Passover institution. The 'killing of the lamb, the sprinkling of the blood and the eating of the flesh, were prophetic—typical.

Jesus fulfilled His part of the type when He was put to death. It was only by virtue of His sacrifice of His will entirely to the Divine will that He was able to fulfil the prophecies, for these were not commands to mankind in general. In these was a suggestion of things which were not commanded, but which God desired to have accomplished at some time through some one, and through which the Redemption of the human race and the Restitution of all things lost by Adam would be effected.

In the performance of the Atonement Day sacrifices the blood was taken into the Most Holy and typically made satisfaction for sin. Jesus accomplished a part of this work. Since then He has ascended on High and made satisfaction for us, the Church class, by means of which we may walk in His footsteps by consecration. (Heb. 9:24). All down through the Gospel Age He has been accepting this class, and eventually will accomplish their sacrifice. This was typified by the killing of the Lord's goat.

Jesus, we see, has been fulfilling the Law during these eighteen hundred years, as well as during His ministry. This work will not 'be finished until the end of the Age. Jesus said that He came not to destroy, but to fulfil the things of the Law (Matt. 5:17); and He will continue the fulfilment of the types of -the Law during the thousand years, until all is fulfilled at the close of the Millennium Age. Some of these things are future: such as the sprinkling of the blood of the antitypical Lord's goat, the sending away of the antitypical scapegoat, and the appearance of the antitypical High Priest to bless the people. It will take the entire thousand Years of Christ's reign to get back all that was lost through Adam's disobedience and that is to be restored to mankind through the merit of Christ.

THAT FEATURE OF THE LAW FULFILLED BY CHRIST'S DEATH

The moral Law--the Ten Commandments—and the Covenant, of which it is a part, promised life to those who would keep its requirements. Jesus could have had that everlasting life by doing everything that the Law required, for the Law demands no more than justice. He could have obeyed every command of the Law without sacrificing any of His rights. But the prophetic features of the Law could not have been fulfilled unless some one had sacrificed his life, and the one who would do this must be equivalent of the one who had sinned.

Since the one who had sinned was perfect, in the image of God, the one who would be a corresponding price to fulfil the Law and to bring out all those blessings to the world that the Law prophesies, must be one who could fully keep the Law. •Only such a person would be competent to make the sacrifice and thus to fulfil the prophetic features of the Law.

This requirement was fully met by Jesus, who was "holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners"— everything, that Justice could expect. He gladly kept the Law, and did even more. He proposed to do everything written in the Book; for He had said, "Lo, I come to do Thy will, O God" (Psa. 40:8)—everything that had been written. His consecration went beyond the moral Law and embraced everything that God had written prophetically.

All this He fulfilled. As a result He is the Saviour, able to save to the uttermost" all that come to the Father through Him.—Heb. 7:25.

We cannot think that God would be offended with any one who came up to the requirements of the Law, but who did not go beyond. Since God had said, "If any one, keep all this Law, I will do My part and give him everlasting life," Justice could ask no more. If such a one should not go forward to sacrifice, Justice could not be offended, for it could not demand that he do so.

In fact, the Father does not require the righteous of this Age to sacrifice, nor will He expect the world to do in coming to the plane of human perfection. But if God should set before any of the human family an opportunity to offer their lives in doing the Divine will, they should esteem this a privilege. The Father would not consign one to death, however, who should fail to do this. But every one who loves the Lord should think, "Here is my opportunity to show my trust, my loyalty to God." In this respect the example of Jesus will stand out for all eternity to angels and to men, so that if ever God gave even a hint of what His will would be, they would hasten to do that will and not hesitate for any consideration.

There is a lesson also of love in the matter. We are not to content ourselves with saying, "I did not lie; I did not steal; I did unto my neighbour as I would wish done unto myself." We are not to stop with this as a sufficiency; no one will get life on any plane if he does no more than this. Our privilege is to anticipate God's will through watching the types of the Law and the words of our Lord and Head. We are to count all things as loss and -dross in comparison with this opportunity which we have. Nothing else should be counted so great a privilege as that of following in the footsteps of Jesus.

CHRISTIAN BAPTISM.

(Address at Baptismal Service.)

TO the well-informed Christian . believer. the Scriptural term, “Baptism,” must ever present itself in deep and solemn significance. so rich in meaning. so singularly rare and grandly unique on account of the comparatively few invitations held out as a wondrous privilege for those so invited to enter into a covenant with God, having been drawn of the Father to Christ in true devotion and sacrifice and a fervent desire to wholly consecrate their lives in the Master’s service. Realising that God’s Word portrays, “One Lord, one faith, one hope, one baptism.” and discerning the many so-called beliefs ill Christendom to-day, the truly enlightened child Of God views with sacred trust and solemn reverence these great fundamentals and foundation for his faith and hope.

We rejoice to-day because of this happy privilege of assembling and witnessing our dear sister’s desire to symbolise with that sincere and earliest spirit of devotion and consecration which precedes her immersion in the waters of baptism, and which is merely an outward sign and symbol of a life hidden in Christ.

On all occasion such as this, it is well that we each and all remind ourselves of that deeper baptism, which is enjoined upon all called of God to journey along the same narrow way of self-denial and trial, and to examine our hearts and lives to see if our covenant is being fulfilled to the utmost. How easy it is, brethren, to become. in any degree, indifferent to our vow of consecration and to quench to that extent the true and proper spirit of obedience and sacrifice. Having begun in the spirit, are we made perfect in the flesh? Or are we continuing to crucify the fleshly tendencies in order that we may walk in newness of life, becoming more and more steadfast, immovable, and rejoicing in the wondrous privilege of living not for self, but unto Him who vouchsafes to present us faultless before the Throne with exceeding joy, providing we continue in the faith, grounded and settled,- and be not moved away from the “ Hope of the Gospel”? Let us say, then, with all earnestness of heart and purpose, “For me to live is Christ”—and be. determined that nothing shall separate us from the love of God as exemplified in Christ Jesus, our Head.

How, then, do we understand the symbol about to be performed?. What does it signify? First of all, t’) be immersed in the waters of ‘baptism without intelligently comprehending why we participate in that ceremony would certainly profit the candidate nothing. Many •to-day so perform the symbol, believing it to be imperative that such must be, in order to make secure their salvation, and thus demonstrating the fact that a goodly percentage of professing Christians are blinded to the true import, and in their ignorance are found grasping at the shadow, and thereby losing the substance.

The beloved Apostle Paul expresses the matter of real baptism very vividly and decidedly in his 6th chapter of the Epistle to the Romans, verses 3-11. In the light of these verses we learn that the true baptism is not water immersion, ‘but something far more definite, and deeply significant—a “death ‘baptism”—of which -this outward sign is an evidence, a picture. “Know ye not that as many of you as have been baptised into Christ have been baptised into His death !” Yes, a real death ‘baptism of which the water baptism is but a symbol. The same Apostle says that the true baptism is not an outward observance, not the washing away of the filthiness of the flesh, but rather an answer of a good conscience toward God, a mind and heart co-operating intelligently in the lives of those N’ ho have desired to put on Christ, and have entered into a covenant with Jehovah, with the spirit and understanding as to what the hidden, inner and deeper meaning signifies. Our dear Lord, the Head of the Church, clearly defined the spirit’s leading, and what must be the attitude of each of His followers when, coming to John the Baptist, He desired to be immersed in Jordan’s waters, and how John could not comprehend why the Messiah, of whom he was the forerunner, could possibly request of him an immersion, seeing that our Lord was holy, pure, undefiled and separate from a sinful world. John replied that he felt a much greater need to be baptised, seeing that the baptism he was administering was on behalf of fallen Jews who had violated their covenant under the Law, on account of fallen tendencies and imperfections, and thus had come short of Jehovah’s requirements for them. Our Lord’s reply, “Suffer, or permit it to be so now, for so it becometh Me to fulfil .all righteousness”—was deeply significant and not understood by John, but was designed to teach a very important principle in fulfilment of God’s will for our Lord in picture and prophecy, subsequently preached and elaborated upon by the inspired Apostles as Jehovah’s mouthpieces and representatives.

Our Saviour’s baptism in the waters of Jordan, then, was an observance and Manifestation of in Ward desire and purpose of a consecrated heart and mind. working intelligently and in unison respecting His heavenly Father’s will, and-so .He hastened at. the appropriate time to witness to that inner and deeper spirit of consecration that had preceded the symbolic immersion. John the Baptist was permitted and privileged as God’s representative, to see the evidence of this inmost soul’s expression as He says,—”I saw the spirit of God alighting upon Him. and I heard. a voice from heaven, saying,— •”’This is My beloved Son in whom I am well pleased.’ “

While our Saviour’s deep spirit of consecration was in advance of His Jordan experience, vet it was not until God’s Holy Spirit -rested upon Him that we read of the heavenly, the spiritual, the higher things being opened unto Him in richer and deeper purport and significance, and with a clearer illumination of mind than formerly respecting His Father's will for Him, and all that His covenant of sacrifice entailed and implied. In regard to the Lord's brethren we have noted firstly how the chosen Apostles left all to follow their Master, and during our Saviour's earthly ministry, aided by His spirit demonstrated that love, faith, and obedience as they hearkened to our Lord's instructions concerning them. They, too, thus previously gave that evidence of possessing the Master's true spirit of consecration, even before they were anointed with the Holy Spirit of God in that upper room at Jerusalem. At that time the evidence of the Spirit's begetting was manifested in the appearance of flaming tongues of fire resting upon them, and they were all filled with the Holy Spirit of power, which thus constituted them God's chosen mouthpieces and witnesses. Just so, as we one by one enter into that same covenant of sacrifice with our Leader and Head, just so it is, that the same anointing received by Him and the Apostles, is shed upon us, and we henceforth have our minds enlightened and illuminated and our lives quickened as we come to see the will of the Father for us more clearly, and the wondrous grace and heavenly hope extended to us as we receive the seal of sonship and earliest of the spirit in a truly consecrated heart—"Be ye filled with the Spirit"—is the Divine injunction laid down for God's earnest and obedient children, that they may lie more and more sanctified or set apart and quickened in the Master's service.

Just so we rejoice, as we realise in this our clear sister's witness, a deeper and more fervent desire to fulfil her covenant vow with an even more earnest spirit of love, obedience and sacrifice, as a richer sense of God's quickening spirit of power and love would so energise. This, then, is our prayer, that God may work in each of us to will and to do according to His good pleasure, as we heartily co-operate toward the consummation of that life placed upon the sacrificial altar.

We know, then, what the symbol represents; we well know what the real baptism in Christ signifies, and so the loved Apostle Paul urges us further, that being buried with Him by baptism into death, we ought to walk also now in newness of life. Yes, the old order of things passed away, earthly, unlawful desires sacrifice so that we may lay hold upon the heavenly. Natural hopes, aims and affections are surrendered that we might live for the Master and at last obtain far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Our hearts are transformed by the renewing power of Christ, by His Spirit, so that we may manifest to the world that we have been with Jesus and learned of Him. our minds increasingly centred upon the rich inheritance held out of joint-heirship with our Lord in the Kingdom, and this only to the "little flock" of truly consecrated ones baptised into His death, in order that eventually we may awake in His likeness in the first resurrection—"If ye be risen with Christ seek those things above"—and again—"That I may know Him and the power of His resurrection, the fellowship of His sufferings, thus being made conformable unto His death"—and so ultimately attain the high station promised. Yes, in the performance of the symbol, the going down into the water and being raised again, well pictures this change of disposition and transformation which takes place in the heart and life of the individual as old aims and former desires are put away in the mortifying of the deeds of the flesh, and all things become changed as the heavenly aspects appear in full view and the Daystar arises in the heart.

Having tasted of the Word of God as the living "Bread" from heaven, and the "power of the Age to come," is it not a matter of great rejoicing as we witness our sister's confession, in the presence of God's people, of a life surrendered to the service of Christ in joyful recognition of that rich favour bestowed in calling and drawing her in the one great hope and invitation of the Gospel during this only acceptable dispensation and day of sacrifice. Can we not say with our clear sister also: "Since my eyes were fixed on Jesus, I've lost sight of all beside, so enchained. my spirit's vision looking at the crucified."—"All for Jesus."

The Apostle goes on to say that. "if we have been planted in the likeness of our Lord's death certainly we shall awake in the similitude of His resurrection; for if we be dead with Him from the rudiments of this world, we will finally live and reign with Him." This is our privilege, our standing, our responsibility. Let us then cast off the works of darkness, and count not our lives dear unto us, realising at all times that we are not our own, but purchased with so great a sacrifice and price, that our lives are hidden now in the Anointed One.

To seek the earthly riches and again become entangled with the carnal, transitory things of this world, with all its emptiness, pride and vain showing, would not only manifest a deplorable lack of appreciation of God's grace to us, but would demonstrate also that we have not been diligent and faithful in the performance and carrying out of that covenant of sacrifice formerly entered into with such solemnity, zeal and earnestness of heart and purpose. Brethren, let nothing deter us from fulfilling our course with joy and determination, for hereunto were we called that we should inherit a blessing, knowing that all things are working together for our good because we are called according to our heavenly Father's gracious purpose and goodwill.

Let us each seek to encourage and stimulate the fellow in the Body to be alive and-awake to the wondrous station to which we have been invited to attain meanwhile to develop faith and patience, hope and love operating in our lives as evidencing the fact that these characteristics are essential, while the attendant hard experiences of our trial road are but for a moment anyway, so to speak, during this brief span of our earthly existence and pilgrimage.

Now is the acceptable time, now is the “Day of Salvation” for God’s consecrated people, and as the day is now far spent, let us readjust our armour that we may war a good warfare as sincere, earliest, courageous, and devoted soldiers of the Cross of Christ, ever marching onward and upward with that deliberation and fortitude, so needful in order to overcome the besetments of the flesh with its natural tendencies, the world with its yam allurements, and the great arch-deceiver with his subtle deceptions. “If God ‘be for us, who then can be against us?” Let us rally round the banner of Jehovah, for the victory is ours if we faint not. “Reckon ye yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, and alive unto God through Jesus -Christ our Lord.”

“What shall I render unto God for all His benefits toward me, I will take the cup of salvation and call upon the name of the Lord, I will pay my vow unto the Lord in the presence of all His people.”

“Precious indeed in the sight of Jehovah is the death of His saints.”

“Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much. fruit.”

“Herein is My Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit, so shall ye be My disciples.”

“According to Thy gracious will
This water symbol here fulfil,
Like unto my dear Head.
In token of my earnest vow,
I sink beneath right here and now,
And rise as from the dead.”

“Lord, grant me all sufficient grace
To walk as to behold Thy face,
In newness of that life,
All earthly aims and hopes subdue
As I my sacrifice renew
In this, my daily strife.”

“Accept my weak, imperfect all,
As ever at Thy feet I fall,
In consecration sweet.
Blest Master, all I have is thine,
O cause my life for Thee to shine,
Until Thy glory it complete.”

“Peace be unto you; as My Father hath sent Me, even so send I you.”—John 20:21.

It was, it is, a solemn thing to be sent of God. Moses shrank from it before the unbelief of his people and the scorn of his enemies. Jeremiah, from his conscious weakness, would excuse himself: “Oh, Lord God! behold I cannot speak, for I am a child.” Isaiah shrank from ‘testimony by reason of his sense of sinfulness: “Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a ‘man of unclean lips.’ “ But the Lord God, when He sends a messenger, goes with him.—Anna Shipton.

The Passover Memorial.

THE Supper which our Lord instituted as a remembrance of His great sacrifice for our sins, and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world, is striking in its appropriateness and its simplicity. The world's great men have always sought very different means of perpetuating their memories. In whatever way they would remind their followers of their merits and their greatness, it surely has not been by a reminder and commemoration of their death— especially if, as in our Lord's case, it was a death of ignominy and shame, a death as a malefactor and criminal. Another, more probably, would have left instructions for medals to be struck commemorating some of his mighty works—such, for instance, as the awakening of Lazarus, or the stilling of the tempest on the sea, or the triumphal entry into Jerusalem, while the multitude strewed the way with palm branches, and cried, "Hosanna to the King!"

But our Lord chose as His remembrance that which represented what was, in His and in God's estimation, His mightiest work—His Sin-Offering on our behalf ;. and that which His real followers, and they alone, would appreciate more than any other feature of His mission. True, His followers would have appreciated something commemorative of His wonderful words or works, but the worldly also could have appreciated those things. But not so the value of His death as our Ransom-Sacrifice, the basis of our reconciliation and atonement, which has never yet been fully apprehended by any but the consecrated Little Flock—the Elect. And it was for these that the remembrance was arranged and instituted. And though a Judas was present, he was given a sop, and went out from the others before the supper was ended; thus, no doubt, representing that in the close of this Age, before the Little Flock will have finished their part of having fellowship with their Lord in His sufferings, the sop of Truth will have become so strong as to drive forth from the company and communion of the faithful all who do not rightly appreciate and value the Ransom accomplished by the Lamb of God for the taking away of the sins of the world. —John:29.

Blessed are those whose eyes can see that Jesus was indeed " the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world"; that the cancellation of the world's sin is to be effected by the payment of man's, penalty, by the application of Jesus' sacrificial merit in due time for the sins of all mankind.

Only the Church have as yet received of the merit of Jesus' death. Greatly favoured are those who can see that as the whole world lost Divine favour and came under Divine sentence of death. with its concomitants of sorrow and pain, so it was necessary that a satisfaction of Justice should be made before this sentence, or curse, could be removed; and that, therefore, as the Apostle declares, "Christ died for our sins,"—"the Just for the unjust," that He might bring us back to God. Thus He opened up a new way—a way to life everlasting.

JESUS, OUR PASSOVER LAMB.

The Apostle Paul clearly and positively identifies the Passover Lamb with our Lord Jesus, saying, "Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us; therefore let us keep the feast." He informs us that we all need the. blood of sprinkling, not upon our houses, but upon our hearts. We are to partake of the Lamb; we must appropriate to ourselves. the merit of Christ, the value of His sacrifice; we must also eat of the unleavened bread of Truth, if we would be strong and prepared for the deliverance in the morning of the New Dispensation. Thus we put on Christ, not merely by faith; but more and more we put on His character and are transformed into His glorious image in our hearts and lives.

We are to feed on Christ as. the Jews fed on the literal lamb. Instead of the bitter herbs, which aided and whetted their appetites, we have bitter experiences and trials which the Lord prepares for us and which help to wean our affections from earthly things and to give us increased appetite to feed upon the Lamb and the unleavened Bread of Truth. We, too, are to remember that we have no continuing city, but as pilgrims and strangers with staff in hand, we are to gird ourselves for our journey to the Heavenly Canaan, to all the glorious things which God has in reservation for the Church of the First-borns, in association with our Redeemer, as kings and priests unto God.

Our Lord Jesus also fully identified Himself with the Passover Lamb. On the same night of His betrayal, just preceding His crucifixion, He gathered His Apostles in the upper room, saying, "With desire have I desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer." It was necessary that as Jews they should celebrate the Passover Supper on that night—the night of the anniversary of the slaying of the Passover lamb in Egypt, of the saving of the typical firstborns from the typical "prince of this world"—Pharaoh—the same date on which the real Passover Lamb was to 'be slain. But as soon as the requirements of the type had been fulfilled, our Lord Jesus instituted a new Memorial upon the old foundation, saying, "Do this in remembrance of Me."

We recall the circumstances of the first Memorial—the blessing of the Bread and of the Cup, the fruit of the vine; and our Lord's declaration that these represented His broken body and shed blood, and that all His followers should participate, not only feeding upon Him, but being broken with Him; not only partaking of the merit of His blood, His sacrifice, but also laying down their lives in His service, in cooperating with Him in every and any manner, that they might later share all His honor and glory in the Kingdom. How precious are these thoughts to those who are rightly in tune with our Lord!

In presenting to the disciples the unleavened bread as a memorial, Jesus said, "Take, eat; this is My Body." The evident meaning of His words is: This symbolises, or represents My body. The bread was not actually His body; for in no sense had His body yet been broken. In no sense would it then have been possible for them to have partaken of Him actually or antitypically, the sacrifice not being as yet finished. But the picture is complete when we recognise that the unleavened (pure, unfermented) bread represented our Lord's sinless flesh—leaven being a symbol of sin under the Law, and especially commanded to be put away at the Passover season. On another occasion Jesus gave a lesson which interprets to us this symbol. He said, "The Bread of God is He which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world." "I am the Bread of Life." "I am the living Bread which came down from heaven; if any man eat of this Bread he shall live forever; and the Bread that I will give is My flesh, which I will give for the life of the world."—John 6:33, 35, 51.

In order to appreciate how we are to eat, or appropriate this living Bread, it is necessary for us to understand just what the bread signifies. According to our Lord's explanation of the matter, it was His flesh which He sacrificed for us. It was not His prehuman existence as a spirit being that was sacrificed, although that was laid down and its glory laid aside, in order that He might take our human nature. It was the fact that our Lord Jesus was holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners without any contamination from Father Adam, and hence free from sin—that enabled Him to become the Redeemer of Adam and his race, that permitted Him to give His life "a Ransom for all, to be testified in due time."—1 Tim. 2:3-6.

When we see that it was the pure spotless nature of our Lord Jesus that was laid down on behalf of sinners, we see what it is that we are privileged to appropriate. The very thing that He laid down for us we are to "eat," appropriate to ourselves; that is to say, His perfect human life was given to redeem all the race from condemnation to death, to enable them to return to human perfection and everlasting life, if they would; and we are to realise this and accept Him as our Saviour from death. The Scriptures show us, however, that if God would consider all past sins cancelled, and should recognise us as having a right to human perfection, this still would not make us perfect, nor give us the right to eternal life.

In order that any of the race of Adam, might profit by the sacrifice of Jesus, it was necessary that He should rise from the tomb, that He should ascend to the Father and deposit the sacrifice, merit of His death in the hands of Justice, and receive from the Father "all power in heaven and ill earth." As relates to the world, it was necessary also that in the Father's due time He should come again to earth a glorious spirit Being, then to be to the whole world a Mediator, Prophet, Priest and King, to assist back to perfection and to harmony with God all who will avail themselves of the wonderful privileges then to be offered.

Now let us note that God's object in justifying the Church by faith during this Gospel Age, in advance of the justification of the world by works of obedience in the Millennial Age, is for the very purpose of permitting this class who now see and hear, who now appreciate the great sacrifice which Love has made on man's behalf, to present their bodies a living sacrifice, and thus to have part with the Lord Jesus in His sacrifice—as members of His Body. This deeper meaning of the Memorial He did not refer to directly. It was doubtless one of the things to which He referred when He said, "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now; howbeit, when it, the spirit of truth, shall come, it will guide you into all Truth, and show you things to come."—John 16:12, 13.

This Spirit of Truth, the power and influence of the Father bestowed through Christ, speaking through the Apostle Paul, clearly explains the very high import of the Memorial; for St. Paul says, writing to the consecrated Church, “The Cup of blessing for which we give thanks, is it not the participation of the blood of Christ? The Loaf which we break, is it not the participation of the Body of Christ?”—the sharing with Christ as joint-sacrificers with Him even unto death, that thereby we might be counted in with Him as sharers of the glory which He has received as the reward of His faithfulness?”—“For we, being many, are. one. Loaf and one Body.”—1 Cor. 10:16, 17.—Emphatic Diaglott.

Both views of this impressive ordinance are very important. It is essential, first of all, that we should see our justification through our Lord’s sacrifice. It is proper, then, that we should realise that the entire Christ, the entire anointed company, is, from the Divine standpoint, a composite Body of many members, of which Jesus is the Head (1 Cor. 12:12-14), and that this Body, this Church, as a whole must be broken—that each member of it must become a copy of the Lord Jesus and must walk in the footsteps of His sacrifice. We do this by laying down our lives for the brethren, as Jesus laid down His life—directly for His Jewish brethren, but really for the whole world, according to the Father’s purpose.

It is not our spiritual life that we lay down, even as it was not Jesus’ spiritual life that He laid down. As He sacrificed His actual, perfect being. His humanity, so we are to sacrifice our justified selves, reckoned perfect through Jesus’ merit, but not actually so. Likewise, the Loaf and the Cup represent suffering. The “grains of wheat” must be crushed and ground before they can become bread for man; they cannot retain their life and individuality as grains. The “grapes” must submit to the pressure that will extract all their juices. must lose their identity as grapes, if they would become the life-giving members of the Body of Christ. Thus we see the beauty and force of St. Paul’s statement that the Lord’s children are participants in the one Loaf and the one Cup. But it is His ‘blood, the virtue of His sacrifice, that counts. Our blood has virtue only because of His merit counted to us, only because we are members of His Body.

Our Lord distinctly declares that the Cup, the fruit of the vine, represents blood; that is, life—not life retained, but life shed, given, yielded up—sacrificed life. He tells us that this life poured out was for the remission of sins; and that all who would be His, must drink of it, must accept His sacrifice and appropriate it by faith. They must receive life from this source. It will not do for any to claim an immortality outside of Christ. It will not do to declare that life is the result of obedience to the Law. It will not do to claim that faith in some great teacher and obedience to his instructions will amount to the same thing and bring eternal life. There is no way to attain eternal life other than through the blood once shed as the ransom-price for the whole world. “There is none other name given under heaven or amongst men, whereby we must be saved.” (Acts 4:12) Likewise, there is no other way by which we can attain to the new nature than by accepting the Lord’s invitation to drink of His Cup, and to be ‘broken with Him as members of the one Loaf, to be buried with Him in baptism into His death, and thus to be with Him in His resurrection to glory, honour and immortality.—Rom. 6:- 3-5; 2:7.

In considering the events of those solemn hours which followed the first Memorial Supper, let us follow the Redeemer to Gethsemane, and behold Him “with strong cryings and tears,” praying “unto Him who was able to save Him out of death”—expressive of our Master’s fear of death lest in some particular He might have failed to follow out the Father’s Plan, and therefore be thought unworthy of a resurrection. We note that our Lord was in some way comforted with the assurance that He had faithfully kept his consecration vow, and that He would surely have a resurrection as promised.

We behold how calm He was thereafter, when before the high priest and Pilate, and Herod, and Pilate again. “As a lamb before her shearers is dumb, so He opened not His mouth” in self-defence. We see Him faithful, courageous to the very last; and we have His assurance that He could have asked of the Father and could have had more than twelve legions of angels for His protection. But, instead of petitioning for aid to escape His sacrifice, He petitioned for help to endure it faithfully. What a lesson is here for all His footstep followers!

On the other hand, we recall that even amongst His loyal disciples the most courageous forsook the Master and fled; and that one of them, in his timidity, even denied his Lord! What an occasion is this for examining our own hearts as respects the degree of our own faith, our own courage, our own willingness to suffer with Him who redeemed us! What an opportunity is thus afforded for us to buttress the mind with the resolution that we will not deny our Master under any circumstances or conditions—that we will confess Him not only with our lips, but also by our conduct.

The thoughts, then, before the mind of each of those who participate in the Memorial service should be that expressed in the words of St. Paul: “If we suffer with Him, we shall also reign with Him; if we be dead with Him, we shall also live with Him”; “for our light afflictions which are but for a moment.” “are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us.” (Rom. 8:18.) With these thoughts respecting the passing over of our sins as the First-born through the merit of the precious blood, and our share with our blessed Lord in all His experience of suffering and of glory, we may indeed keep the Passover feast with joy, notwithstanding the trials and difficulties.

So doing, continuing faithful as His followers, very soon we shall have the great privilege of leading forth the Lord's hosts—all who ultimately shall hear and know and obey the great King—out of the dominion of sin and death into the liberty of children of God during the grand Millennial reign.

MEMORIAL SERVICE.

As stated in last month's issue, the Memorial Service in Melbourne in commemoration of our Redeemer's great sacrifice will be celebrated on the evening of Sunday, 9th April, at Molesworth Chambers, 450 Little Collins Street. The time of the service will be 6.45 p.m.; and all brethren intending to be present are also heartily invited to attend the afternoon meeting at 3.30 p.m., which will comprise a study appropriate for the Passover season. Evening tea will be provided, so that none need leave between the services. We pray the Lord's blessing on this solemn occasion everywhere.

THE human mind is often so easily led to swing from one extreme to another. A few years ago practically all church ministers, from the Roman Catholic to the Salvation Army, deemed it heresy for any to deny the unthinkable doctrine of eternal torture. God was quite generally pictured as taking pleasure in perpetuating the lives of the wicked—all the unconverted and the millions of heathen who had never even heard of the only way of salvation—in order that they might suffer agonies of torture forever.

It was a horrible conception of the great Creator, so impossible to One whose nature and name is love, and who is so wise and so just. Such teaching emanated from the Romish Church, no doubt through its alliance with Paganism—so many errors were incorporated from the Pagan system. It is good to be rid of such a nightmare, but there is a tendency to swing away to the opposite extreme and forget that justice is the foundation of God's throne.

There are those who seem to think that God's love will override justice, and that He will compel all to be saved eternally. Then they perceive a difficulty in the way God dealt with Israel of old and how He destroyed the antediluvians, Sodom and Gomorrah, the Egyptians with Pharaoh, and the Canaanites, whose land He gave to Israel. The difficulty under which some labour appears to be illustrated by the following statement of Rev. Norman Goodall, M.A.:—"Recent history" has done more than many commentators to show the cleavage between the Old and the New Testament conceptions of God. The character of Jehovah Sabaoth—the Lord of the battle lines of Israel—is not compatible with the Christian revelation of the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. Both views cannot be woven into our pattern of God. We must choose between alternatives. Jesus did more than show that a warlike partisan God was also loving. He revealed that which makes it impossible to believe that a God of love is also a God of battles. He corrects much that had been believed in error, and long as it has taken us to learn the lesson, it is unlikely that the Christian conception of God will again be distorted by views of the Divine seen only through the mists of barbarism."

It is the failure to understand the Divine Plan of the Ages that leads to this confusion and discrediting of the writings of those "holy men of old who spake they were moved by the Holy Spirit." It is the same Holy Spirit that inspired the writings of the Law and the prophets that also declared Jesus to be the Son of God, and guided the writings of the apostles. When the Divine plan is understood, both Old and New Testaments are found to be in perfect accord. Divine wisdom has arranged the whole programme, and age by age has just accomplished its designed end. Justice is the first principle in all God's arrangements, and nothing can last that is not based upon that quality.

Divine wisdom evidently saw that the lesson of justice was the necessary first lesson to be taught to the human race that was to be. That then was the lesson of Eden and the first transgression. Again, when God would deal with the nations of Israel, the same great lesson was the principal thing taught. "Eye for eye, tooth for tooth, life for life." So it was respecting Adam's disobedience, life was forfeited, and only the finding of a life as substitute—to pay the penalty for him—could liberate Adam and all who shared his sentence. Thus it is written respecting Christ Jesus—the second Adam. "He tasted death for every man." He gave Himself a ransom for all. "I will ransom thee from the power of the grave," or, as our Lord Himself said, "My flesh I give for the life of the world."

It was in this way that God's love was manifested (Rom. 5:8). There is no disharmony between Old and New Testament, between God's Justice and God's Love, between the Lord of Sabaoth, i.e., the Lord of battles for Israel, and the Father of mercies. God's Justice is still, and always must be, the foundation of His throne. His love, however, sees that every opportunity and ability is accorded to His creatures for meeting the demands of justice. He has given His own Son to die to offset the Adamic sentence of death resting on the human race, and he has provided the risen Christ and those chosen in Him, i.e., the Church of this Gospel Age, to be the means of assisting all the poor groaning creation up the highway of holiness to the perfect state of manhood (Romans 8:19-22) during the Kingdom Age. All the willing and obedient will thus receive eternal life, and only the incorrigibly wicked will be destroyed eternally. The 9th Psalm, verse 17, says: "The wicked shall be returned to sheol" (the tomb).

It is in Revelation 20:9 that we again see Almighty God as the Lord of the Battles of Israel, when "fire comes down from God out of heaven and destroys them all—all the enemies of righteousness and truth and peace. The revelator sees the harmony between the Old and New Testaments when he says: "They sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying. Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints" (Rev. 15:3).

Wish always and pray that the will of God may be wholly fulfilled in thee. What is it to thee whether that man be such and such, or whether this man do or speak this or that. Thou shalt not need to answer for others, but shall give an account for thyself.—Thomas A. Kempis.

Correspondence,

Dear Brother in Christ,

Another year is gone and the subscription must be due for the "Peoples Paper." It always brings comfort in this dark clay of Him Who said, "Be of good comfort, I have overcome the world."

I feel the burden of old age, but I have the rest for which I've been seeking all my life, the Truth that makes us free, the knowledge of Almighty God and the Beloved Son in whom He is well pleased—God's purpose in Christ Jesus for the whole world. "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof; the world and they that dwell therein." "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world." I am enclosing —, and please use the balance as you wish. I am with you, dear Christian friend, in spirit.

Yours in that blessed hope, F.A.

New South Wales, 24/2/33.

Dear Brother,

Greetings in our dear Redeemer's name. The booklets and tracts came safely, for which I thank you. The tract, "Why Evil," etc., is permitted seems to be appreciated by a good many people. I generally go to the doors and give them to the people and say I want to make sure that they get this very important message, as every one should know why evil was permitted. Some say, "That is what I want to know," so it is encouraging. I only put the message in the mail-box where there are high steps, as I cannot climb them, and do not like to miss too many. We know God will give the increase, and my prayer is for just the right ones to get it.

I was disappointed that there was nothing left for the tract fund; I seem to want so much when I write. I have a little tin money-box for the tract fund, and put by a little every week for that purpose. I have now —, which I am sending along to you for that purpose only, so in future if I ask for more than what I can pay for, please let me wait, and apply the amount to the tract fund, whatever I say, as by this you'll know it should not be used for anything else.

If you have any "Tabernacle Shadows" I would be glad of some. I have no idea what is the price, but am enclosing 3/-; send as many as it will cover. We are still rejoicing in the beautiful truths that our Father gave us through Bro. Russell, but one cannot help seeing the truth shine brighter as we go on, and see the wonderful outworking of God's plan in these times.

With Christian love and fellowship,

Your Sister in Christ, J.E.

Sydney, New South Wales. Dear Friend,

One day last week I was returning to work after having my lunch in the park and picked up your little paper, "The Voice," from the pathway. After perusing the article or subject therein, I find at the finish an offer of literature on any one subject, without money and without price. I certainly would like to have the following, "Our Lord's Return," "Where are the Dead?" "All About Hell," "Our Lord's Parables." I would be willing to forward payment for same, so that the money could be used for further distribution, as I am asking for more than one subject.

Awaiting a favourable reply,

I am, yours faithfully W. E. J.

Queensland, 18/3/33. Dear Christian Friend,—

I am forwarding 2/6 for "Peoples Paper," and am sorry I have been so long. I still enjoy reading the "Paper," and thought the verses, "The Good Fight of Faith," very nice. It is so like the Christian life; we have seasons of joy and also times of sorrow, but I feel the conflict will not last long.

The Passover Supper will be held on 9th April, and it will be nice for Christian friends to partake of that Supper and enjoy that Christian fellowship with each other.

With Christian love,

I remain, B. A.

Looks Like Prophecy.

(Extract from the Melbourne "Argus," dated 15/3/1933.)

CHURCHES SHOULD ACT.

Mr. Lloyd George's Advice.

"All the nations are marching towards the battlefields with the dove of peace embroidered on their banners," said Mr. Lloyd George, M.P., at the annual meeting of the National Council of Evangelical Free Churches. "The Allies disarmed Germany after the war," he added, "and promised to do likewise, but they enforced the nay and dishonoured the aye. The only means I see of arresting a clash is for the Churches throughout Christendom meeting in some central place and calling a halt before it is too late."

Bible students realise more and more in fulfilment of the prophetic Word respecting these latter days, that church federation is becoming a decided possibility and a growing reality. Allied with this present agitation amongst professing Christian Churches is the twin prophetic movement as expressed above by one of the world's eminent statesmen, and which points more or less directly to desired union between church and state as a solution of our world-wide troubles and crisis.

Christians generally view statements like the above as tending toward the prophetic, and having a decidedly significant air, reminding them of the typical picture respecting Ahab and Jezebel of the Old Testament times, and the antitypical Ahab and Jezebel of Revelation, setting forth an improper and unholy union and its effect upon the true Church, the members of which recognise this unauthorised alliance, eventually to come about. Thus constituting the great anti-Christian system of so-called Christendom, it is as mystic Babylon to be finally overwhelmed in the time of trouble, going down symbolically as a millstone into the depths of the sea of anarchistic trouble, never to rise again; the whole giving place to the Millennial Kingdom of God, established under the rulership of the great Prince of Peace.

EASTER CONVENTION.

The arrangements for the Easter Convention at Adelaide are now well in hand. A very fine programme has been drawn up, and all able to be present may feel assured of a really helpful time, by the Lord's goodness.

On Thursday evening, April 13th, the Memorial Service will be held in the Leavitt Hall, Wakefield Street (opp. Gawler Place), at 8 p.m. Anyone requiring programmes, or further information, kindly address the Class Secretary, 70 Fairford Street, Unley, South Australia.

The Peace of God.

"Peace leave with you, my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid.—John 1-1:27.

THUS with abounding compassion and tenderness did our Lord, on the last night of His earthly life, bestow upon His beloved disciples His parting blessing, His legacy of peace. It was the richest legacy He had to bequeath, and was one of priceless value. It was the promise of that tranquillity of soul, that rest and ease of mind, which He Himself possessed—the peace of God. It was the same peace which the Father has Himself always enjoyed, even in the midst of all the commotion which the permission of evil has brought about; but it was not derived from the same source. In Jehovah this peace was self-centred; He realised in Himself the omnipotence of power and wisdom; while the peace of Christ was centred, not in Himself, but in God, by faith in His wisdom, power and grace. So also if we would have the peace of God, the peace of Christ—“My peace”—it must, like His, be centred in God by faith.

Yes, the peace of Christ was a priceless legacy. Yet how • quickly the storm cloud of trouble, which was even then growing very dark, burst in its fury upon the heads of those very disciples to whom the words were directly addressed. It followed almost immediately the gracious bequest, and struck consternation, bewilderment, confusion to their hearts, and shook their faith from centre to circumference. Then, where was the peace? While our Lord was speaking the words, the foul betrayer, Judas, was out on his murderous errand. Then followed the agony in Gethsemane, and the terror and consternation among the disciples as they began to realise • the fate of their beloved Lord. Soon their almost breathless suspense deepened into more fearful forebodings as He stood alone before His merciless accusers and persecutors in the Hall of Pilate and the Court of Herod, while they were powerless to shield Him. Then came the tragic end—the horrors of the crucifixion.

WHAT HAS BECOME OF THE PEACE

Where • was the promised peace - under such circumstances—• then, overcome with fear and dread, they all forsook Him and fled; and when St. Peter, although anxious to defend Him, was so filled with fear that three times he denied his Lord and with cursing declared that he never knew Him. The explanation is, that the peace had not yet come; for, as the Apostle Paul tells us, “Where a testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator. For a testament [a bequest] is of force after men are dead; otherwise it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth.” (Heb. 9: 16, 17.) But as soon as the tragic scene was over and the cry, “It is finished,” fell upon their eager ears, strange as it may seem, there is evidence that peace began to steal into their grieving hearts. The darkened heavens, the quaking earth, the rending rock, the torn veil of the Temple—all spoke to them a message of comfort which the world could not receive.

To the world (Jews and Gentile, both participating in the crime) the language of these events was that of divine wrath and indignation against them. And— as fear -fell upon the people, and the clamour and excitement of that awful day died away, they smote upon their breasts and returned to their homes. The Roman centurion and they that were with him, fearing greatly, said, “Truly, this was the Son of God !”

But to the disciples of the Lord these events spoke a -very different language. The cause of their blessed Master was their cause, and it was God’s cause. To them these supernatural demonstrations were evidences that God was not regarding this matter with indifference; and though through the veil of darkness they could not read His bright designs, in these events there was to them a whisper of hope.

Three days later hope was revived by the news of our Lord’s resurrection, confirmed to them by His appearance in their midst. Again, forty days later, hope was strengthened by His ascension after His parting counsel and blessing and promised return, and the instructions to tarry in Jerusalem until they received the promise of the Father, the Comforter, the Holy Spirit of adoption, not many days thence at Pentecost. Then the peace of Christ, the Lord’s rich legacy, began to be realised, and the tarrying days of ‘prayer and expectancy were days of abiding peace—peace which flowed as a river. But when, on the day of Pentecost, the promised Comforter came, the river of their peace found a deeper bed; and their joy knew no bounds!

“Like a river glorious is God’s perfect peace,
Over all victorious in its glad increase.
Perfect: yet it floweth fuller every day;
Perfect: yet it groweth deeper all the way.”

OUR RICH LEGACY OF PEACE.

But not alone to the early Church was this legacy of peace bequeathed. It is the blessed inheritance of the entire Church, even to the -end of the age. The Lord showed His thought for us all on that very day, when in His prayer He said, “Neither pray I for these alone, but for all those who shall believe on Me through their word.”—John 17:20.

The peace promised, observe, is not the short-lived peace of the world, which is sometimes enjoyed for a little season—while fortune smiles, and friends abound, and health endures, but which quickly vanishes when poverty comes in and friends go out, when health fails and death steals away the treasures of the heart. “My peace,” the peace of God which Christ Himself by faith enjoyed, who, though He was rich, for our sakes became poor,. who lost friend after friend, and in His last hour was forsaken by all of the. few that remained —His peace endured through loss, persecution, scorn and contempt, and even amidst the agonies of the cross. This peace is something which none of the vicissitudes of the present life can destroy, and which no enemy can wrest from us.

What richer legacy could the Lord have left His beloved people? Suppose He had. bent His energies during His earthly life to the accumulation of money and that in so doing He had amassed an immense fortune to leave in the hands of His disciples wherewith to push forward the great work of the age when He should be taken from them; money to pay the travelling expenses of the apostles and to defray the numerous expenses incidental to the starting of the work in various places, such as the renting of lecture rooms, the payment of salaries to travelling brethren, etc., etc. How soon would it all have vanished, and how poor would be our inheritance to-day! “The man of sin” would surely have gotten hold of it in some way, and not a vestige of the legacy would have reached this end of the age. Hut, blessed be God, His rich legacy of peace still abounds to His people!

The peace promised is not such as the world can always recognise and appreciate; for the possessor of it, like the Lord Himself (and all His followers throughout the age) may have a stormy pathway. Indeed, that it must be so to all the faithful until the purposes of God in the permission of evil are accomplished, we are distinctly forewarned, but with the assurance that through all the storms this peace shall abide—”In the world ye shall have tribulation, hut in Me ye shall have peace.”

FAITH THE BASIS OF PEACE.

If we would know the foundation and security of this abiding peace which is able to survive the heaviest storms of life, we have only to look to the teaching and example of the Lord and the apostles. What was it that held them. so .firmly- and gave them such rest of mind while they suffered? It was their faith—their faith in the love, power, and wisdom of God. They believed that what God had promised, He was able also to perform, and that His righteousness and benevolent plan could know no failure. By the mouth of His prophets He had declared, “My counsel shall stand, and I will bring it to pass; I have purposed it, I will also do it.” “The Lord of Hosts hath purposed, and who shall disannul it?” (Isa. 46:9-11; 14:27.) On the assurances of God they rested. In Him their faith was anchored; and it mattered not how fiercely the storms raged or how they were tossed by the tempests of life while their anchor still held fast to the throne of God.

The language of our. Lord’s faith was, “O righteous Father, the world hath not known Thee; but, I have known Thee.” He had been with the Father from the beginning, had realised His love with His goodness, and had seen His power, and had marked His righteousness and His loving kindness and Fatherly providence over all His works. And so it is written, “By His knowledge shall My righteous servant justify many; for He shall bear their iniquities.” (Isa. 53:11.) The knowledge which He had of the Father gave to Him a firm footing for faith in all God’s purposes concerning the future. Hence He could and did walk by faith. And that faith enabled Him to overcome all obstacles and to secure the victory even over death.

So also it is written for our instruction—”This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith” —that faith in God built, ill our case, upon our Lord’s testimony of the Father; and again it is written that, “Without faith it is impossible to please God.” It is only through steady, unwavering faith that the peace of God—the peace of Christ will abide with His people. While the Lord with His disciples, and they saw in Him the manifestation of the Father, their faith was strong and they had peace in Him, as He said. “While I was in the world I kept them.” But not until after He had left them was their faith anchored in God. After Pentecost they experienced the same peace that Christ had enjoyed—the blessed peace that came from a knowledge of the fact that God acknowledged them as sons and heirs, and joint-heirs with Christ, if they would continue faithfully to follow in the steps of the Redeemer.

CULTIVATION OF UNWAVERING FAITH.

Herein is also the basis of our peace. No matter how fiercely the storms of life may assail us, We must never let go. our anchor and . allow ourselves to drift, but always remember that “the foundation of God standeth sure”; that “His truth is our shield and buckler”; that “what He had promised He is able also to perform,” notwithstanding our human imperfections and frailties; that covering these we have the imputed righteousness of Christ, our Surety. and Advocate and that “the Father Himself loveth” us, “He considereth our frame and rememribereth that we are dust,” and so has compassion for the sons of His love and is very pitiful and of tender mercy. Indeed, “What more can He • to us than He ‘lath said,” to assure our faith and to steady and strengthen our hearts to patient endurance in the midst of the trials and conflicts of the narrow way of sacrifice?

There is nothing which puts the Christian at greater disadvantage in the presence of his foes than for him to let go, even temporarily, his grip Upon the anchor of faith. Let him do so for a moment; and of necessity darkness begins to gather round him. . .He cannot see the brightness of his Father's face.; for "without faith it is impossible to please God"; and while .he grapples again for the anchor, the powers of-darkness fiercely assail him with doubts and fears. These attacks are generally based upon his human imperfections, which he should ever bear in mind are covered by the Robe of Christ's righteousness.

If we would have the peace of God reign in our hearts, we must never let go our anchor, "nor .suffer Satan's deadliest strife to beat our courage down." "The language of our hearts should always be, "Though He slay me, yet Will I trust Him."With this faith the peace of God, the peace which the Master bequeathed to us, ever abides. Thus "the peace of God which passeth all understanding will keep our hearts and minds through Christ Jesus"; for it is written again, "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee."

In the midst of the Christian warfare let our hearts be cheered and our minds be stayed, not only with such assurances that all the divine purposes shall be accomplished, but also with such promises of personal favour as these

"Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him; for He knoweth our frame; He remembereth that we are dust." "Can a woman forget her sucking child? . . . Yea, they may forget; yet will I not forget thee. Behold, I have engraven thee upon the palms of My hands." "The Father Himself loveth you," and "It is the Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." "Such as are upright in their way are His delight." "Delight thyself also in the Lord, and He shall give thee the desires of thine heart" —the peace of God, even in the midst of storm and tempest.

(Concluded.)

The Church of the First-Borns.

THE Church of the First-borns” is not to be confounded with the Church of the First Resurrection. The word first, in the phrase First Resurrection, signifies better, superior. The First Resurrection includes only the Lord and “the Church, which is his Body”; in other words, the Bride Class.. But in this glorified Church of the First-borns are included all those who are born of the Spirit. Those who are to be of the spirit nature will be those who have been developed throughout the Gospel Age—before God’s favour goes to the world. This Church of the First-borns includes all who came into covenant relationship with God before the New Covenant is put into force. Some will have part (an inferior part, however, to that of the Church) with the great “High Priest of our Profession” in instituting the New Covenant. They will all have some share with him in dispensing the blessings of the New Covenant to all the families of the earth—to Israel first, and then to all nations.

“YE ARE COME UNTO MT. ZION, THE HEAVENLY JERUSALEM.”

This Church of the First-borns is prophetically pictured in the Old Testament in connection with the Passover. In that night when all the first-born of Egypt were slain, all of the first-born of Israel were passed over. These escaped because of the blood on the lintels of their houses and because of their partaking of the lamb within. We know that afterward all of the first-born of Israel were exchanged for the one tribe of Levi; and that this tribe was separated or divided into two parts—one a priestly class and the other a servant class. The former were called Priests; the latter Levites; though, of course, all were Levites. These two classes were types of the Church of the Gospel Age.

“But ye are come unto Mount Zion, and unto the City of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem; to the General Assembly of the Church of the First-borns.” (Heb. 12:22, 23.) More properly we understand this to signify that we have approached—this is that to which we are coming—it is in sight. Some have already reached it. Our Lord has reached the goal. And some others of the First-borns have also reached their goal; and some of us have not yet reached it. But this is what we are approaching. We shall all have come into power and into our place in the Divine Plan, at the close of this Gospel Age. Thereupon will follow the “time of trouble” with which this Age will end, typified by the trembling of the mountain of Sinai. Then, in the same connection, we read that we are approaching an innumerable company of angels.

The Apostle seems to be here setting before us the glories of the future. Not only shall we see our heavenly Father and our heavenly Lord, and be ushered into the Assembly of the Church of the First-borns, but we shall be ushered into the presence of an innumerable company of angels. These are the angels who encamp around about those that fear the Lord and deliver them. (Psa. 34:7.) They are sent to be ministers for those who shall be heirs of salvation. (Heb.

1:14.) They have been with us here overseeing our interests; and it will be part of our joy on the spirit plane to make their acquaintance. If the Apostle had neglected to mention these, we would think it strange; for he is enumerating the things to which we are approaching.

Thus we see that the Church of the First-borns includes the “Great Company” of the Levites as thoroughly as it includes the smaller company of the Priests. As the Levites had no inheritance in the land, so not only the “Little Flock” but also the “Great Company,” the servant class, the companions of the Bride, have no share in the earthly inheritance, but will have a share in the heavenly inheritance.

ONE DAY AT A TIME.

One day at a time, with its failures and fears,
With its hurts and mistakes, with its weakness and tears,

With its portion of pain and its burden of care;
One day at a time we must meet and must bear.

One day at a time to be patient and strong,
To be calm under trial and sweet under wrong;

Then its toiling shall pass and its sorrow shall cease;
It shall darken and die, and the night shall bring peace.

One day at a time—but the day is so long,
And the heart is not brave and the soul is not strong.

O Thou pitiful Christ, be Thou near all the way;
Give courage and patience and strength for the day.

Why should we look forward or back with dismay ?
Our needs, as our mercies, are but for the day.

One day at a time, and the day is His day;
He hath numbered its hours, though they haste or delay.

His grace is sufficient, we walk not alone;
As the clay, so the strength that He giveth His own. —Selected.

Two Distinct Salvations.

“So great salvation, which began to be spoken by our Lord, and was confirmed unto us by those who heard Him .”—Heb. 2:3.

In the past, many of us misunderstood these words—so great salvation—and have thought them to apply merely to an “elect” few of the saintly followers of our great Redeemer. Surely it should not be thought strange if a closer examination of God’s Word would demonstrate to us that, as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are His ways and plans higher than ours. (Isa. 55:9.) It should not surprise us to find that our forefathers were generally in considerable darkness in respect of “the length and breadth and height and depth of the love of Christ, which passeth all understanding.” (Eph. 3:18, 19.) It should not surprise us to find that our Saviour will yet see the fruitage of the travail of his soul and be satisfied (Isa 53:11), and that this satisfaction will result from the salvation of more than the “little flock” who walk in His footsteps and who, like Him, “present their bodies living sacrifices, holy and acceptable to God,” in the service of truth and righteousness.—Rom:12-1.

There are several ways of treating this thought, that more than an “elect” few are eventually to reach eternal life through the Redeemer of mankind. One way, which many adopt, is to claim that our Lord and the Apostles did not really mean to establish so high a standard of saintship as their words imply, and then to conclude that the unsaintly will gain eternal life as well as the saintly—all except the degenerately wicked. This view of matters, which is the common one, is undoubtedly prompted by sympathy for friends, relatives, neighbors and the heathen, but is wholly contrary to God’s Word.

Another view still held by some, is that everybody but the saintly will suffer torture eternally and hopelessly.

The third theory which we desire to present here, is the one we believe to be in accord with every text of Scripture. and in accord with Justice, Wisdom, Love and Power Divine, and in accord with sanctified common sense. Space will allow only an outline of this Plan, which is most comprehensive, as follows:

THE SAINTLY ,NEW CREATION

Salvation in no sense began before the Redeemer’s birth, hundreds of years after the fall of our first parents. In all that long period, nobody was saved. The Apostle declares in our text, that salvation began to be preached by Jesus. Again we read that Jesus brought life and immortality to light through His Gospel. (2 Timothy 1:10.) So, then, life and immortality and the Gospel Message began to be preached by our Lord, and was not preached before His day. Indeed, we can see that if there is “none other Name given under Heaven or amongst men whereby we must be saved,” than the name of Jesus, then it could not have been preached; nothing could be preached previously except the Divine declaration that God purposed in due time to redeem mankind from sin and death, through a Saviour and a Great One—One able to save unto the uttermost all that would come unto the Father through Him.

This reasoning is surely true to the facts. Search all through the Old Testament, and you will find no promise of eternal life set forth, except by the Law given to the one little nation of Israel. That Law declared that he that doeth these things, shall live by his obedience thereto. (Rom. 10:5.); and the Apostle assures us that Jesus died because not one of them kept the -Law because no imperfect human being could possibly meet the requirements of God’s perfect Law. “By the deeds of the Law shall no flesh be justified in His sight.”—Rom. 3:20.

The Apostle, further explaining the Matter, says. “Wherefore, then, serveth the Law?” He replies to his question, “It was added because of transgression until the promised seed should come”—Gal. 3:19. .

THE PROMISED SEED.

The Apostle’s words direct put thoughts -back to Eden, when God declared that the Seed of the woman would, at ‘some future time; bruise’ the Serpent’s head. But that seed. did not exist for ‘over four thousand years after; and. has; not yet crushed the Serpent’s head—destroyed sin and the” works of Satan.

The Apostle’s words again remind us of God’s promise to Abraham “In. thy Seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed.’ Gen. 12:3 Abraham was not thus blessed, not were any others thus blessed, however faithful they. were, All the ‘blessing was to come through Abraham’s seed, and could not be dispensed before His coming. Hence the Apostle referring to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all the faithful of past time, declared, “All these died in faith, not having received the promise.” (Heb. 11:13.)—the blessing—reconciliation to God and eternal life.

And when Jesus came, He did not attempt to bless the world, but on the contrary, in His prayer, declared, “I pray not for the world, ‘but for them which thou hash given me” (John 17:9); the saintly, the “Very Elect”. (Matt. 24:24.) These He called; these He taught—”Israelites indeed.” These He directed to give the same messages to others, not for the conversion of the world, but for the calling, instruction and edification of “the Church, which is the Body of Christ.” The message to these from first to last, was that they were called to suffer With Him; that they might also reign with Him.

“THE CHURCH—THE BODY ‘OF CHRIST”

In the past, many of us have overlooked the fact that ‘the Church is, figuratively, “The Body of Christ”—to be hereafter, as the Apostle declares, “The Church which in His Body.” And again, we are members in particular of the Body of Christ, which is the Church. (1 Cor. 1.2’:27). In a word, then, the entire Christ includes the members of the Body, with the glorious Head of the Body. And this glorious Christ, which will be completed by the close of this Gospel Age, will, as a whole, be the promised Seed of Abraham. (Gal. 3:8, 16, 29.)

From this viewpoint we can see why God’s long promised blessing has not yet reached the world, and furthermore, we can also see that He is merely selecting, or electing the Church, the Seed of. Abraham. The promise to Abraham is; “In thy Seed, shall all the families of the earth be blessed.” and, as we have seen the Seed of -Abraham is “Jesus, the Head, and the Church His Body.” In a word, our previous view of the Divine Plan, was too narrow. We saw the election of the Church, but did not see God’s gracious purposes for “all the families of the earth.” The Church, as the Scriptures declare, is merely a “first-fruits” unto God of His creatures, and is not, by any means, the entire harvest. Let us here remember St. Paul’s explanation of the matter. He declares, “We ‘brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of the promise” (Gal. 4:28)—the heirs of the promise—through us all the families of the earth are to ‘be blessed.—Gen. 26:1-4.

NO SECOND CHANCE IN THIS.

It might indeed be said, in one sense of the word, that since Father Adam was placed on trial in Eden with a reward of eternal life before him, or the penalty of death, and that since he lost his chance of eternal life by disobedience, therefore any chance of eternal life coming to him, or to any member of his race would, of necessity, be a second chance. This is undoubtedly true. From this standpoint, every member of the human family, must eventually have a second chance for eternal life, because it was for this very purpose that our Redeemer left the heavenly glory, was made flesh, dwelt amongst us, and “died, the just for the unjust.” Whoever enjoys this second chance must expect no more, because “Christ dieth no more.” But as we have already seen, nobody had a second chance for eternal life prior to the coming of our Redeemer into the world. “He brought life and immortality to light.” He died, the just for the unjust, to make reconciliation for iniquity—and this message of so great salvation began to ‘be spoken by our Lord.

The comparatively few who have heard the Gospel since Jesus’ day—”Good tidings of great joy which shall be unto all .people”—these, the comparatively few who have heard of “the only name given under Heaven or amongst men whereby we must be saved” are the only ones who in any sense of the word have had their second chance. Indeed, we might scripturally limit the matter much further and say that the Gospel has been hidden from the majority of those who heard it, their mental eyes and ears being deaf and blind, they did not comprehend the Message, and therefore could not reject it.

The “High calling” and “so great salvation” which so few have really heard and seen, is referred to. by our great Redeemer saying, “Blessed are your eyes, for they see; and your ears, for they hear.” “The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned. But God hath revealed them unto us by His Spirit.” (1 Cor. 2:14.) In other words, only the spirit-begotten ones are now on trial for life everlasting or death everlasting. And only the faithful footstep followers will gain the glory, honour, immortality and joint-heirship with Him in His Kingdom. These are the “Elect”—The “Very Elect.” These are such as make their calling and election sure by so running’ as to obtain this great prize of membership in the Body of Christ..

These elect ones experience a change of nature, and in the future will not be human beings, but partakers of the Divine nature. (2 Peter 1:4.) They will be inducted into the perfection of the Divine nature in the First Resurrection, the Chief Resurrection, ‘in which they will be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, because flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God.

HUMAN SALVATION IS RESTITUTION.

We all greatly wondered at the thought that the heathen and everybody except saints would be consigned to an eternity of torture, yet we all recognised that Heaven is not a place of development, but a condition of perfection.

We were perplexed, mystified, We did not follow our Bibles with sufficient care. Many of us twisted the Scriptures, wrested them from their plainly obvious import, and always to our own injury. Some went in the direction of Universalism; others half-way, and still others abandoned the Holy Book. Now we see where we erred.

God has two salvations; one for the Church and a totally different one for the world. The salvation for the Church is to Heavenly nature, spirit bodies, and joint-heirship with the Master in His Kingdom, which flesh and blood cannot inherit, as we have already seen. The Other salvation for mankind is an earthly one, called in the Scriptures “Restitution.” Man was not an angel originally, not a spirit being, but, as the Scriptures declare, “The first man was of the earth, earthy.

It was that earthly man, perfect, in the image of his Creator. for whose happiness Eden was specially pre-pared, and by obedience to God he might have continued to enjoy his Eden home everlastingly. By disobedience he first lost his fellowship with God, then, his Eden home, and after nine hundred and thirty years of toiling with thorns and thistles, in sweat of face, the death penalty upon him reached completion—he died. Adam’s race, sharing his weaknesses by laws of heredity, have also shared death with him.

“WORLD THROUGH HIM MIGHT BE SAVED.”

The Scriptures tell us that God’s real purpose in sending Jesus into the world was that “The world through } Inn might ‘be saved”—not the salvation of the Church; that was an incidental feature. The Church is selected that, as the Bride or Queen during the Messianic Kingdom, she may be associated with her Lord the King, as the Seed of Abraham in the blessing, the saving of Adam and his family, or so many of them as shall he willing, from sin and death conditions. We remember the Master’s words to the effect that He “came to seek and to save (recover) that which was lost”.—Luke 19:10.

We have just seen that it was as a human life, human perfection and an earthly home that were lost. It is these, then, that Jesus proposes in due time to recover for Adam and his family. The Messianic Reign of Jesus. and His Body—The Anointed, The Christ, The Messiah—will be for the purpose of blessing Adam and all of his race with glorious opportunities of an earthly salvation. The uplifting, restoring influences of Messiah’s Kingdom will affect not only Adam and his race, but also the earth itself. Gradually Paradise Lost, as a little garden of Eden, will become Paradise Regained, as the world beautiful. Then the wilderness shall blossom as a rose, and the solitary place shall be glad.

‘TIMES OF RESTITUTION.’

At our Lord’s ‘First Advent the “acceptable time” began—the time When God, having accepted the sacrifice of Christ Jesus, ‘became willing through Him to accept the sacrifices of all who desire to become His Disciples to take up their cross and follow Him through evil report and good report, even unto death. The entire Gospel Age antitypes Israel’s Day of Atonement, and the sacrifices of our Lord and the Church, His Body, are the “better sacrifices,” foreshadowed by ‘the bullock and the goat offered typically; by, Ole Jews, This is the acceptable year of the .Lord, which. Jesus declared (Isa. 61:2; Luke 4 19)- God’s! faithful people of this acceptable day are glad to be invited, to “present their bodies living sacrifices, holy .and, acceptable able unto God” (Rom. 12:1). In the end: of this acceptable day will come the end of all eternity. to thus sacrifice the human nature, and becomes joint-heirs with Christ and partakers of the Heavenly nature,

Then will be introduced a new period styled, in the Scriptures, “Times (or years) of Restitution.” The acceptable day for the Church’s sacrifice has lasted for nearly nineteen centuries. And we know how long the “Times of Restitution” will last—nearly a thousand years. St. Peter tell us just when these “Restitution Times” will begin. They did not begin in his day. They begin as the result of the Second Advent, of Jesus, The Messiah, and the establishment of His Kingdom and righteousness, “Times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord and He shall send Jesus Christ, as before was preached unto you, Whom the heavens must retain until the Times of Restitution of all things which God hath spoken ‘by the mouth of all the Holy Prophets since the world began. For Moses verily said unto the fathers, a Prophet like unto me (of whom I am but a type or figure) shall the Lord Your God raise up unto you from amongst your brethren, Him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever He shall speak unto you. And it shall come to pass that the soul that will not obey that Prophet shall be destroyed from amongst the people” (Acts 3:19-23) in the Second Death, from which there is no recovery.

This great Prophet has been in process of raising up for now nearly nineteen centuries. And’ when the last member of His Body shall have passed beyond the veil, He will stand forth in the glories of His Kingdom to rule, judge, instruct, restore and bless all the families of the earth with opportunity for restoration to. all that was lost in Eden and redeemed at Calvary.

A Lesson From the Trees.

Some young people were discussing life, and the question was asked: “Which season of life is the most happy?”

Being unable to agree on the subject, they referred the question to their grandfather, a ‘veteran of over eighty.

“You see that grove of trees before the house,” he said. “When the spring comes and the buds are breaking on the trees, I think—How beautiful is spring! And when the summer comes and covers the trees with foliage, and the birds sing in the branches, I think—How ‘beautiful is summer! When autumn loads them with golden fruit. I think —How beautiful is autumn! .And when it is winter, and there is neither foliage nor fruit, then I look up, and through the leafless branches, as I could not do so until now, I see the stars shine.

If we are living as God would .have us, we will be happy through all the seasons of life.

CONVENTION NEWS.

THE Easter Convention to which the Classes at Adelaide and: Gawler had been looking forward for some time is now a happy memory, and our hearts go out in thankfulness to our Heavenly Father for all His goodness and love in granting us such blessed realisation of His loving kindness, “O, how great !”

There would seem to be no doubt that these special occasions, which give opportunity to local Classes to show their love for the Lord, His truth, and the brethren by the sacrificing of some earthly comforts and conveniences, become to us seasons of rich blessing. Those Classes making the effort to arrange a little Convention each year, are not only spiritually enriched and blessed, but opportunity is also given for brethren from visiting Classes to share in the sacrifice of earthly things —time, strength and means, etc.—that they may also share the blessings of fellowship. Truly as the hymn book has it, “Blest is the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love.”

About 40 brethren and sisters met from time to time during the Convention which extended over the four days during Good Friday to Easter Monday. Easter Saturday being not a full holiday, was the means of hindering the attendance of some who would like to have been with us. Much sympathy was also felt for an elderly Sister, whose presence was missed on account of a severe affliction.

It may be of interest to others to know of the Bible studies which we think, generally speaking, are the most important of all our meetings—Titus 3:1-11; 2 Peter 3:10-18; Romans 6:1-10; and John 15:1-12. These passages of Scripture provided quite a substantial feast for our New Minds in themselves, the verses being introduced to us by various of the brethren and sisters, and then discussed by the whole Class. Discourses on “Patience,” “Faith,” “Spirit of Power,” “Love,” and of a “Sound Mind,” Christian “Obligations,” and “Privileges.” “Peace,” “2 Tim. 3:16,” helped to encourage us in our faith and hope.

The Memorial of our Lord’s death was celebrated on the evening before the commencement of the Convention, and once again our hearts were cheered and encouraged by the remembrance of our dear Redeemer’s loving sacrifice on our behalf, in which also, by the grace of God, it is our privilege to share. How it rejoices our hearts to realise that soon the work of this anti-typical Atonement Day will be finished, the sacrificing of the Christ will be accomplished and then “Victorious High Priest! No more in garments stained Shalt Thou for sacrifice draw near;

No more with sin’s dread penalty shalt
Thou be pained.
The great redemption-price is paid,
the glory-heights attained,

And soon to bless shalt Thou appear!
“All glorious High Priest!
All power, heaven earth,

All grace and love lost Thou possess!
As rightful King of kings and
Lord of lords, stand forth!
While joyful trumps proclaim

.Thy righteous name and worth,
And prostrate hosts Thy praise confess.
“O, merciful High Priest!
O tender Advocate,

The penitent’s unfailing Friend,
Still touched by feeling for our griefs and low estate!
The future work of grace-for-all anticipate.
And unto us, Thy blessing send!”

This report would be incomplete should we fail to mention the Baptism service which was held on •Easter Monday morning. Three sisters and one brother took advantage of this occasion to symbolise the consecration of all their earthly rights and privileges to be dead with Christ. As we gathered to witness this public confession of faith and obedience to the will of God, our hearts were filled with the sense of the Lord’s blessing and approval, and our fervent prayers ascend ‘on behalf of our dear brethren, that, having taken up their cross follow Jesus, they may be kept faithful and pure. even unto death.

“If 1 in Thy likeness,
O Lord, may awake,
And shine a pure image of Thee,
Then I shall be satisfied when I can break
The fetters of flesh and be free.”

“Till He Come.”

The occasion of another anniversary respecting the celebration of the Lord’s Supper was again the scene of a solemn assembly in Melbourne as the dear brethren gathered in sacred worship and fellowship to commemorate our loving Saviour's death as the great antitypical Lamb slain for us.

All present, about 22 in number, availed themselves of those blessed emblems which so forcefully speak to us of that close union and fellowship with our Redeemer through a vitalised justified standing, made possible in the giving of the life in willing, obedient and loving sacrifice, as each and all would enter into hearty cooperation, and joyfully present their bodies, living sacrifices, and covenant to be dead with Christ that they might eventually be privileged to reign with Him.

The friends, we feel sure, realise more and more each succeeding year the solemnity and yet the grandeur and wondrous privilege of having been invited to tread the pathway of self-denial and sacrifice in the footsteps of their Head, and to be broken with Him in the fullest sense, and thus the symbols partaken of were tokens of the grave responsibility that goes with the participating, and which represents an earliest and willing desire to follow the Master whithersoever he leadeth. 'throughout the service. indispersed with some appropriate and 'beautiful hymns, there was that atmosphere of sincerity and reverence as the dear brethren gathered in quietness and confidence, and we feel sure that the Lord's spirit and blessing were richly bestowed. All were reminded of that oneness of heart, mind and fulness of intent and desire which must be striven for, if the deeper realisation of that inner life with Christ be experienced and enjoyed, and thus as true branches in the Vine be found submitting to the needful disciplinary testings and trials, in order that each and all bear much fruit, as we would seek to be rightly exercised under every circumstance and experience that comes to all faithful members of the Body of Christ. Under these conditions . all were solemnly enjoined to "keep the feast" With the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth, And 'to "continue in the Word," loyally and stedfastly, that its deeper and hidden meaning may more and more be revealed as we progress in knowledge and love, and as Members in particular of the Anointed Body, daily be found growing up unto Him, our glorious Head.

No doubt the dear members in Christ in all places have realised a -blessing in the privilege and solemnity of observing the Memorial season, and it is encouraging to hear of the services in other centres. From our Sydney brethren. meeting at Rawson Chambers. the following is appreciated: "We are pleased to report that thirty friends were present coming from all points of the compass.

Several were having made arrangements to attend the home of other friends because of three not being able to attend the Class on account of sickness. We also forwarded the emblems to several friends by post, where the distance made it impossible for them to attend.

"These seasons bring sadness mingled with joy; sadness when we think of that broken Body with its sufferings, but joy at what in God's providence it has accomplished. We had nothing new to relate with reference to the matter, but as the Apostle said, it was necessary at this time to refresh our pure minds of the type and antitype so that we could profit during the coming 'week' in our meditation on these truths."

. "Love, so amazing, so divine,
. . Demands our soul, our life, our all."

This opportunity is taken 'of exhorting the dear brethren in all parts to stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ makes free, and with increased zeal, earnestness- and love, to fight the good fight of faith as they would strive by God's grace to make their calling and election sure, and at last be found in Christ without spot and blameless.

"For as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, •ye do show forth the Lord's death till He come."

We must forget ourselves, and all self-interest, and listen, and be attentive to God.—Madame Guyon.

Notes on Convention Bible Studies.

Titus 3:3-9.

THE conditions of .verse 3 were evidently the effect of ignorance of the true God—of wrong thoughts of the Deity. The gods of paganism were supposed to be vengeful, cruel and abominable, and their devotees were, of course, like them, fell' what they worshipped they naturally sought to follow. 'When the true (led was revealed and His attributes of wisdom and . love were manifested, the old works of the flesh and the devil appear in their real light abominable, hateful and foolish, so that the true worshipper of the only true God learns to love righteousness,- and to hate %wickedness.

The kindness of God our Saviour was manifested as we read "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him would not perish, but have everlasting life" (John 3:16); and again "God commendeth His love toward us. in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us" (Rom. 5:8). Even Paul had not a right conception of God, while he was seeking to serve Him under the Law. What a revelation it was to him to learn of the grace of God in Christ, and how beautiful was the effect in his life. He writes in Eph. 2:4—"But God who is rich in mercy for His great love wherewith He loved us." and again verse 7: "That in the ages to come He might show the exceeding riches of His grace in His kindness toward us through Christ Jesus."

Iii verse. -4. God is mentioned as our Saviour, and in verse. 6 Jesus Christ is stated to be our Saviour. That does not mean that Jesus is identical with God—the Son cannot be identical with His Father—but here as elsewhere (Titus 2:10; Luke 1:47.; 1 Tim. 4 1 10) God is called our Saviour, as He is the great Author of the plan of salvation. The Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world. The Son is the Saviour in that He carried out the work, and said, "I have finished the work which thou gavest Me to do."

Verse 5 reminds us that it was not by works (Rom. 3:20-28) but He saved us .according to His great mercy — providing the redemption in Christ who, "tasted death for every man." Thus the members in Christ have been justified by faith and have entered a course of sanctification, cleansing by regeneration, being begotten of the Holy Spirit (John 3:5; Eph. 5:26); "being transformed by the renewing; of your mind" (Rom. 12:2). Verse 6 speaks of the Holy Spirit being shed .on abundantly. This could not be a separate person- to be shed abroad in our hearts, but is the holy power emanating from the Father. which comes to the Church- through the Son, Jesus Christ our Saviour.

Verse 7 shows that it is entirely of God's favour we are justified so that we might ;become heirs through Christ according to the hope of eternal life.- As the Apostle Paul tells us in Romans 8:24, we- are saved by hope, and this hope sustains through any trial. ;For as he shows in 2 Cor. 4:17. our- .present sufferings are light, •but for a moment, compared with the eternal life promised to the faithful. And it is in this hope we strive to do as the Apostle commissioned Timothy. "Lay hold on eternal life."

Verse 8,- "This is a faithful saying," seems to refer to what the Apostle has just said in the previous verses, and in accordance with it he desires Titus to teach, or to affirm strongly (Diaglott) that all who have 'believed may live up to their profession, may excel in good works. These things, if received rightly into a pure heart, are good and profitable, bringing forth the fruits of righteousness.

Verse 9. This verse shows the unprofitable things to be avoided, things that are vain and useless, and valuable time should not be wasted on such. Our time should be spent according to the lines laid down in the Scriptures, thus building each other up in our most holy faith, and thereby loosing our hold on the things which are not upbuilding to the Christian character (1 Tim. 6:3-5).

2 PET. 3:11, 17, 18.

“All these things (as mentioned in verse 10) shall be dissolved.” Truly we are now in that time spoken of by the Apostle, therefore how forcefully these words should apply to us, upon whom such love has been bestowed in granting us the favour of this knowledge. “What manner of persons ought ye. to ‘be in all holy conversation and godliness.”

The Diaglott seems to give the correct reading—”holy conduct and piety.” It -behoves us to examine ourselves, as to whether our. conduct is in accordance with our profession, that we may walk worthy of the honour bestowed upon us. In chapter 2:21, the Apostle says, • “It had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than, after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them. John 13:17. •

Verses 17, 18. St. Peter says: “Seeing ye know these things, beware.” He would warn all of the responsibility placed upon them through the knowledge of God’s Plan. The warning is to see to it that the favor ‘granted is appreciated in a practical way, by faithfully using that knowledge for the purpose it was given, that of preparing us to stand in the evil day when all but the very elect will be stumbled by one error or another, either of false doctrine, or compromising with the Truth for some selfish end.

“Fall from your own steadfastness,” seems to refer more to laxity in regard to those principles which keep the Christian character firm and steadfast to the end, and which, faithfully adhered to, would produce the necessary growth in grace and knowledge of our Lord, to enable us to make our calling and election sure. Then all the praise and honour would be to our Lord through whom all our ‘blessings come both for the present and fur all time.

The Spirit of Love.

(Convention address)

“And we have known and believed the love that God bath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in Him.”-1 John 4:16.

THE Apostle Paul, writing to Timothy, says: “The end of the commandment is love from a pure heart and a good conscience, and an undissembled faith.” And our Lord told His ‘Church that the new commandment to be observed was. “That ye love one another, as I have loved you.” Also when speaking to the scribe, recorded for us in Mark, in answer to the query as to the first commandment to be observed, said, “The first of all the commandments is, Hear, O Israel: the Lord our God is one Lord: And thou shalt love the Lord ‘thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength—this is the first commandment. And the second is like, namely this, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these.” And so we clearly see that “Love is the fulfilling of the Law.”

The Apostle Paul enjoins us to “follow after love,” and in 1 Cor. 13, he says that though he spoke with the tongues of men and of angels and had not love, he would be as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal. Well. we all know how empty of substance is sounding brass. He also says that though he had the gift of prophecy, and understood all mysteries. and had all knowledge, and, still further, that though he had all faith, even so great as to remove mountains, and yet, if he lacked love, these other virtues would profit him nothing. Furthermore. if one had ever so much wealth and distributed it all to feed the poor, and still further, to such an extent as to give one’s body -to ‘lie burned, .and if love was lacking, these actions would, not be of any profit -to one. We may well ask with St. Peter, “Lord, who can he saved?” and how shall we know about love, since it is so great and necessary to •salvation.? How can we learn of such a virtue? Who will instruct us to put into effect the wisdom we might have concerning love? David answers for us in the Psalms, “Our help is. in the name of the Lord, who made heaven and earth.” Surely our help, then, is in the name of Jesus •Christ the Righteous, the only ‘begotten Son of the Father, who had such greatness of love as to lay down His perfect, justified life for His friends. St. Peter, as a foundation stone of the Lord’s Temple, says that there is no other Name under heaven whereby men can be saved than in the Son of God—Jesus Christ.

So to learn of love we must come to ‘Christ and learn of Him. He was. and is, perfect love. Come to God’s Word and see how His beloved. Son conducted Himself whilst on earth, and let us have Him for our guide, pattern and example. Love is the sum of all the. graces.

No. 1.—Patience—Love suffers long. “The patient in spirit is better than the proud in spirit.” “We have need of patience so that, having done the will of God, we may receive the promise.” St. Peter asks, too, where is the glory if we suffer patiently for our faults? None whatsoever. But to do well and then to suffer patiently, this is acceptable with God, or as St. Paul says, a “sweet savor of Christ unto God.”

The love of God, and of our neighbour for God’s sake, is patient toward all men. It suffers all the weakness, ignorance, errors and infirmities of the children of God; all the malice and wickedness of the children of the world. and all .this, not for a time, but unto the end. And in every step toward overcoming evil with good. it is kind, soft, mild, benign. It inspires the sufferer at once with the most amicable sweetness and the most fervent and tender affection. “And may the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God and the patience of the Anointed One.” “For consider Him that endured such contradiction of sinners against Himself, lest ye be weary and faint in your minds.” “Who, when He was reviled, reviled not again; when He suffered he threatened not, but committed Himself to Him that judged) rightly.”

Without mentioning the patience of the Lord with His children in the wilderness; of Moses their leader, or of the patience of Job, we come to another grace of love in kindness.

No. 2.—Kindness—Love is kind. Is it possible for professing Christians to dwell too long on this grace, this particular fruit of the Spirit of holiness? Love is kind. Being kind makes the walk of a Christian along the narrow path a joy indeed. But how easy it is to get on that by-path of unkindness, as we become disgusted with so-and-so; or we think this one, or that one is not fulfilling the covenant of sacrifice as we would do it. To make our calling and election sure, this tree of kindness must be cultivated to an extent that it yields visible fruit, even to the world, so that eventually they might recognise our good deeds and glorify our Father. “Let brotherly love continue, and be kindly affectioned one to another, in honour preferring one another.” We are very blessed inasmuch as we have fellowship with the Father through Jesus Christ, but we cannot take anybody into that presence, we can only help in such a degree as to the intimacy we ourselves possess. .Certainly love rebukes, hut how mature must love be before it could rebuke in the spirit of love. First we must take heed unto ourselves, to judge ourselves, and maybe the faults or moles in the brother’s eye are the ones we possess. How easy it becomes to be kind, if we, like the Apostle, were “determined not to know anything among any, save Jesus Christ and Him crucified.” All sectarian and personal spirit would be routed; we would not be followers of this person or that society, but would be “growing in grace and knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.” We would “be kind to one another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ’s sake hath forgiven you.”

No. 3.—Generosity—Love envieth not. Love rejoices at the success of others. What an example is recorded for us in the love Jonathan had for David. This great love was manifest because Jonathan recognised in David the favor of the Lord more than in himself. Jonathan willingly rendered David every service, knowing full well David was to reign instead of him. How different it was with our Lord and Israel. Even Pilate was aware, when he asked them who he would release unto them, Barabbas, the murderer, or Jesus that was called Christ, that it was for envy they brought our Lord to him.

And it was on account of envy Joseph was sold into Egypt. Let us be generous, then, and abound in this part of the spirit of love.

No. 4.—Humility—Love vaunteth not itself, - is not puffed up. The valley of humiliation is very necessary for Christian growth in love, and one is much enriched by traversing it. “for God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble.”

Let us take a song of David unto ourselves, “Lord, my heart is not haughty, nor mine eyes lofty, neither do I exercise myself in great matters, or in things too high for me.” And, as St. Peter says, to “humble ourselves, therefore, under the mighty hand of God, that He may exalt us in due time.” Our Lord enjoins us, too, to humble ourselves as little children if we would enter the Kingdom of Heaven, assuring us that the most humble will be the greatest.

We all have our little difficulties in varying degrees in the direction of humility as a fruit of the spirit of love. Some are endowed with natural gifts in this direction, and others find it hard to descend. But responsibility rests on the one who is in the valley thriving on the pastures so green, to help the one trying to enter and pointing out the easy paths down. Perhaps if we remembered that “One is our Master even Christ,” we would be more ready to serve in any capacity the Lord saw fit to place us, and not be puffed up, lording it over God’s heritage and to remember that what we have is not of ourselves, but a gift of God.

No. 5.—Courtesy—Love does not behave itself unseemly. Evil communications are corruptive of good manners. “Speak evil of no man, not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing, but contrariwise blessing, knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing.” “For he that will love life and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil and his lips that they speak no guile, let him eschew evil and do good; let him seek peace and pursue it.” “Give none offence, neither to Jew nor Gentile, nor the Church of God.”

No. 6.—Unselfishness—Love seeketh not her own. Perfect love is generous, which is the opposite to selfishness. I know well the Apostles executed this grace of love, not seeking their own but others’ wealth to salvation; not pleasing themselves but all to please their neighbor for his good to edification. So love seeks not ease, pleasure, honor or temporal advantage, but is willing to spend, and be spent, for the household of faith, that others may be rich in the glorious Gospel of Christ; to stimulate the zeal and faith of others to good works in the name of our Lord and to His glory.

No. 7.—Good-tempered—Love is not easily provoked. This virtue seems to couple up with patience. To be good-tempered is an asset for “the servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle unto all, apt to teach, and patient in meekness, instructing those that oppose themselves.” Love is not provoked to sharpness and unkindness toward any, but forbearing one another in love. “The meek will He guide in judgment, and the meek will He teach His way. For the Lord taketh pleasure in His people, He will beautify the meek with salvation”; and, further, “The meek shall increase their joy in the Lord, and the poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel.”

No. 8.—Sincerity—Love rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth. To experience the “peace that passeth understanding,” and to fully enter into that rest wherein believers are hidden, one must be sincere. It will not benefit any to be double minded or unstable, but let our “Yes” mean yes, and likewise our “No” mean no. Sincerity, then, goes to make up the spirit of love, and tends to make that new song felt in our hearts to such extent that we can all sing with David, "Let all those who put their trust in the Lord rejoice; let them ever shout for joy because Thou defendest them; let them also that love thy name be joyful in Thee"; "for our heart shall rejoice in Him because we have trusted in His Holy Name. So then, our sincerity of purpose should not be partial, but for our "righteousness to be exalted" we must lie sincere and rejoice in the truth all the day: "rejoice in the Lord always, and again I say rejoice."

What a wealth of substance there is to feed the new mind with in the spirit of love. What opportunities there are for all to put off the former ways of living, and live in such newness of purpose that whatsoever we do, do to the glory of God. We all have varying ways of doing His will and keeping in His love, but actually there is only one way, and that brings us to another fruit of the spirit of love, in Purity.

No. 9.—Purity—Love thinketh no evil. St. Peter says that "seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren. see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently." If we would "ascend into the hill of the Lord, or stand in His holy place," we must have clean hands and a pure heart. not a soul lifted up unto vanity, nor to have sworn deceitfully, -and then the Lord is true to His promise that we shall receive His blessing and righteousness. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." "And every man that hath hope in him, purifieth himself even as He is pure." To do this, St. Paul says, to think on the things that are true, honest, just, pure, lovely, of good report, and then love will never fail us.

We must wait on the Lord for instruction and guidance, and eventually will be revealed to us the purity of God's Word; in comparison, the Psalmist says. More pure than silver which has been refined seven times in an earthly furnace. Is there any brief instruction that all may know and experience the spirit of love? Yes. The Lord says "that all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even to them."—The Golden Rule. How lacking it is in worldly pursuits, and how the blessing is missed by all who know not of it. But the love of Christ which constrains us, holds us together in the interest and love for the welfare of each other, that the ministry of the Gospel shall not suffer, but will ever go on, and that all may know that "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever should believe in Him shall not perish but have everlasting life." And think still further, if we love God for this unspeakable gift, He says to us that, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him."

Just how favored and blessed we are is beyond human comprehension, but if we continue in the spirit of love, God shall change our vile body of sin, and from time to time we will be changed from glory to glory into the same image, and eventually we shall be like I Him, for we shall see Him as He is. "The end of the commandment is love from a pure heart."

“To Be Thine.”

“Oh, to be clean, to be pure, to be true!
Cost what it may, to be Thine through and through;
Purged from the promptings of evil within,
Freed by Thy grace from the thralldom of sin!

“Oh, to be simple to that which is ill,
Wise with a wisdom alert to Thy will;
Earnest of purpose and single of • eye,
Eager to live and unfearing to die!.

“Oh, to be fair, to be just, to be kind,
Sober in spirit and humble in mind;
Patient, unselfish, regardful of all,
Thinking no evil, though evil befall!

“Oh, to be fervent, unceasing in prayer,
Watching thereunto Thy praise to declare!
Living or dying, this blessing be mine—
Always, in all things, to wholly be Thine!”

The Lord is my Light and my Salvation

In the first six verses of this Psalm we find expressions of strong confidence in God—the language of faith and assurance. During his long and varied career David passed through certain experiences which caused him to feel deeply his need of the Lord's help. On more than one occasion he was in danger of losing his life at the hands of his enemies; but he put his trust fully in the Lord, and never was that trust betrayed—never did the Lord forsake him.

The Psalm, therefore, is the heartfelt expression of the feelings of David; and it also expresses the sentiments of every member of the Body of Christ.

As we read the Psalms we find they are full of expressions of praise. The Psalmist had much for which to thank God and to rejoice in, but he had not the same reason for thankfulness and rejoicing as have the Lord's people of this Gospel Dispensation. David never experienced the lifting of the Adamic condemnation to death, but the Church have passed from under that death sentence, and have been lifted up and blessed with a full knowledge of God's plan.

David is a good example to us along the lines of patient waiting upon the Lord. He had a strong faith in God and had learned how to wait for the Lord's time to lead and guide him in respect of all his doings. In this he showed reverence for God. David had been anointed by Samuel to be king over Israel, yet it was quite a few years before he was actually crowned and recognised as king. During the period of his waiting he never sought to take the kingdom to himself; he waited patiently for the Lord's time. Even when King Saul sought to take David's life, and cruelly hunted him in the madness of his anger, yet how graciously David acted in the face of the opposition of Saul. (See 1 Sam., 26th chapter.) Only a truly god-fearing man would act as David acted toward Saul.

In verse 1 we have the expression, "The Lord is my light and my salvation." What does the Psalmist mean by this?

In what way was Jehovah a Light to David? As all are aware, light is that by which we see objects distinctly. The light of the sun enables us to discern the form, distance, magnitude and relation of objects, and prevents the perplexities and dangers which result from a state of darkness. Light is therefore put for knowledge, for whatever enables us to discern our duty, and the path of safety, and that saves us from the evils of ignorance and error. Everywhere in the Bible light is the emblem of knowledge, purity and truth, as darkness is the emblem of ignorance, error, sin and wretchedness. The Lord was David's "Light" because he endeavoured to walk in harmony with God's Word. (Psa. 119:33-40, 97, 105.)

David sought earnestly to do the will of God, and took pleasure in meditating in the law of the Lord. The antitypical David class—the Body of Christ—are much more favoured than David was, in respect of opportunities for knowing the Lord and understanding His ways. What a privilege is ours to have in the Gospels the record of the life of Christ, therein revealed as our Saviour. The Apostle John speaks of our Lord as the "light of men." (John 1:4.)—"In Him was life, and the life was the light of men"; also verse 9, "He was the true light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world"; and verse 14, "The Logos was made flesh, and dwelt among us, and we beheld His glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." Truly then the Church of this Gospel Age can say: "The Lord is my light and my salvation." The knowledge of the Divine Plan of the Ages, which—God has graciously given us, enables us to understand just how our salvation has been arranged through the death and resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ; and how we are called to walk in His steps and share in His sufferings, being first justified through faith in His blood.

The Psalmist says (Psa. 119:130): "The entrance of Thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple" ; - and bow thankful we are 'that our Heavenly Father has given us ears to hear -His Word, and opened our eyes -of understanding to see something of the light of the knowledge of the glory of God, in the face of Jesus Christ."

Our Lord said (Jno. 8:12): "I am the Light of the world; he that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life"; and again (Jno. 12:46), "I am come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth on Me should not abide in darkness." In these words of our Lord we see clearly the value and necessity -of faith and obedience.- We must first of all believe • on Him, and there we must follow Him (our faith must lead to action), if we would have the light of life to shine continually upon us. How important is this matter of faith. We must learn to trust the Lord with all our heart, like David did, and then we will be able to say, "The Lord is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid?" How thankful we are that God gives strength to His people—that He has become the strength of our life, and our portion forever. In Psa. 28:6-8 we read: "Blessed be the Lord, because He hath heard the voice of my supplications. The Lord is my strength and my shield; my heart trusted in and I am helped; therefore my heart greatly rejoiceth; and with my song will I praise Him. The Lord is their strength, and He is the saving strength of His anointed." It was because David trusted the Lord with all His heart that he found help and strength, and deliverance from evil. And so it will be with us to-day. if we find at any time that we are lacking in strength and courage, and likely to suffer defeat, let us examine ourselves. Have we neglected to use our shield of faith; or have we been careless or heedless of the Lord's instructions along the lines of watchfulness and prayer? The Lord has promised to give strength to His people; but in order to receive help from God, we must believe His word and draw near to Him in prayer. Thus opening our hearts to God, He will draw near to us. In Nahum 1:7 we read, "The Lord is good, a stronghold in the day of trouble; and He knoweth them that trust in Him"; and in Isaiah 26:4, "Trusty in the Lord for ever; for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength." In Eph. 6:10 the Apostle urges us: "Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of His might." We can go forward with courage and confidence, trusting fully in the Lord, for He "is the strength of my life" and we have nothing to fear.

Verses 2-3.—These verses show that David had his enemies to fight even as have the members of the Church. . In the 17th chapter of 1st Samuel we have the account of the slaying. of the lion and the bear; also David's victory over the giant Goliath the Philistine. (See 1 Sam. 17:32-37.) As David himself is a type of the Church, so -the enemies of David—the lion, the bear and the giant, may represent the enemies of the church—the world, the flesh and the devil. What was the secret of David's success over his enemies? Was it not his faith in God? While all the best and strongest men of Israel were terror-stricken at the sight of Goliath, David showed not the least sign of fear. Putting aside the cumbersome armour offered him by King Saul, David took his staff in his hand, and chose five smooth stones out of the brook, and taking his sling in his hand, he, approached the Philistine.

Goliath scoffed at the sight of a mere lad approaching him; but David was full. of faith and courage and confidence in God. In his words Were: "Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a shield; but I come to thee in the name of the Lord of hosts, the God of the armies of Israel, whom thou hast defied. This day will the Lord deliver thee into mine hand." The stone was sent with such accuracy that it found its mark,--and -the proud and boastful -giant was brought low, and Israel was delivered from. the fear of the Philistines.

The Lord's people of to-day still have their battles to fight, but what a help it will be to us if we meet the oppositions in the same spirit as David met his. "If an army should encamp against me, my heart shall not fear; if war should arise against me, even then will I have trust." (Leeser's translation.) It was the power of God's spirit that gave David the victory; and the same Holy Spirit will also give us the victory over all fear, if only our faith and trust is staved upon God. He is our strength, and He will give grace to help in every time of need. "Not by might, nor by power, but by My spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts."

Verse 4.—David desired one thing of the Lord—"To dwell in the house of the Lord, and to behold His beauty." David loved the typical tabernacle of God, and the desire of his heart was to build a temple, a more permanent structure for the Lord. (See 1 Chron. 28:2-3, 6-10, 20; 1 Chron. 29:10-19.) If David could so rejoice in the construction of-the earthly temple, how much more may we rejoice in the construction of the antitypical temple. (Eph. 2:20-22; 1 Pet. 2:5.) The thought that God has called us and chosen us to be of that temple class should stimulate us to run faithfully and zealously the race before us. "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God." (Rev. 2:12.)

In His Word we have the beauty of the Lord revealed to us, and His holy spirit has enlightened our minds to enable us to behold the glorious character of our God. Surely the one thing that he desired above all else is that we may be found living near to the Lord, and -beholding His beauty of holiness. In Phil:3:13 Paul says: "This one thing I do"-- in order that he might eventually be a member of the house of the Lord. "To enquire in His temple" seems to mean that we might have the help and enlightenment of God's Word. When Israel was perplexed or in doubt about a matter, there was the opportunity of inquiring of the Lord, through the priests; and very often the Lord communicated His will through His prophets. So we have our Lord Jesus, our High Priest through whom we can approach God in prayer, and we have the written Word of the Lord which will serve to guide us in times when we are undecided how to act. 'We are to trust in the Lord with all our heart and lean not to our own understanding. We must lie willing to -be guided -by the Word and its underlying principles, and we will need to empty our hearts of all selfishness which would prevent us from seeing and following the wisdom from above. "To inquire in His temple" may also indicate that we have the privilege of asking the advice and help of other members of the Body at times when the pathway before us is not clear. Surely it is a great blessing to have the help and love of the brethren—the fellow-members of the Lord's temple. How greatly then we are favoured: We have the privilege of the throne of grace. We can come with confidence in every time of need. We have the fellowship and love of the brethren; and the light of God's precious Word to guide us in the paths of righteousness and truth. His Word assures us, "The meek will He guide in judgment; the meek will He teach His way." (Psa. 25:9.) "I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go: I will guide thee with mine eye." (Psa. 32:8.)

Verse 5.—"In the time of trouble He shall hide me in His pavilion, in the secret of His tabernacle shall He hide me." David realised the protection of the Lord, and like him we, too, are hidden in the secret place of consecration. Nothing can by any means harm the Lord's consecrated ones. He that is for us is mightier than all that be against us. Our Lord knows how to cause all things to work together for good to those who love God.

The fourth chapter of second Corinthians shows us how Paul appreciated the privilege of dwelling in the secret place of full consecration, He was fully given up to do the will of God; he was engaged in the work of the ministry of reconciliation; making known to all who have ears to hear the glad message of salvation through faith in Christ, and the opportunity that is now open to believers. to take up the cross and follow in the steps of Jesus. Yet Paul had his full share of difficulties, but he had learned how to rejoice in them. There were times when he was troubled on every side, as he says in 2 Cor. 1:5, "For when we were come into Macedonia, our flesh had no rest, but we were troubled on every side; without were fightings, within were fears." He was perplexed, and persecuted, and cast down, yet He realised that he was not forsaken—he was hidden in the secret place of God's tabernacle—the place of full consecration; and therefore, while bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, the life of Jesus was being manifested also in his daily life.

May it be then that we, like Paul, and also like David of old, have that abiding trust in God that will enable us to, look forward through the clouds and shadows that may threaten to overwhelm us, and have that peace and rest that comes as a result of our full submission to the will of God.

"Thy will be done! I will not fear
The way provided by Thy love ;
Though clouds and darkness shroud me here,
I know that all is bright above."

Like Paul we, too, should press on with courage and rejoicing, even though the outward man perish—the human hopes die; yet if we are faithful, how great will be our reward; the inward man—the hidden man of the heart—will be renewed and strengthened day by day; in every time of trouble we will be hidden in the pavilion of God; we will be established upon a rock—a sure foundation.

Verse 6.—Surely then our head shall be lifted up above our enemies round about us; will, triumph over all oppositions through God's grace to us in Christ. Isa. 54:

God's favour to David awakened in his heart 'the spirit of thankfulness; so it does in the hearts of God's true people to-day. David was moved. to offer sacrifices of joy to God; so our offerings, our sacrifices to God should be rendered gladly, When David went to purchase the threshing-floor of Araunah, the man, knowing that King David intended to make an altar and sacrifice to God, offered to give him. the threshing-floor, and also bullocks for the sacrifice and wood for the fire. But David would not accept it as a gift. He said, "Nay; but will surely buy it of thee at a price; neither will I offer burnt offerings unto the Lord my God of that which doth cost me nothing." (2 Sam.. 24:24.) Like David, our offerings to the Lord should be something that -costs us a sacrifice. • - (To be continued.)

GOD’S PERFECT PEACE.

“Like a river glorious is God’s perfect peace,
Over all victorious in its glad increase.

Perfect; yet it floweth fuller every day;
Perfect; yet it groweth deeper all the way.

Stayed upon Jehovah, hearts are truly blest,
Finding, as He promised, perfect peace and rest.

“Hidden in the hollow of His blessed hand,
Never foe can follow, never traitor stand;

Not a surge of worry, not a shade of care,
Not a blast of hurry toucheth spirit there,

Stayed upon Jehovah, hearts are truly blest,
Finding, as He promised, perfect peace and rest.

“Every joy or trial cometh from above,
Traced upon our dial by the Sun of love.

We may trust Him solely, all for us to do;
They who trust Him wholly, find Him wholly true.

Stayed upon Jehovah, hearts are truly blest,
Finding, as He promised, perfect peace and rest.”

“THAT MUCH.”

A little girl who was in hospital recovering from a severe operation, was visited by her mother every day. The mother noticed that the child was careful to keep her handkerchief in a place where she could easily get it. There was nothing strange about that, but her mother also observed that whenever the nurse ‘brought her a clean handkerchief the little girl would transfer to it something that was tied up in the corner of the other one. At length the mother gently asked the child what she was guarding so carefully. With tears in her eyes, the little sufferer answered, “I found it in the drawer at home, and I wanted that much with me.”

The mother untied the knot, and found rolled up in the handkerchief part of a leaf from the Bible containing the text, “Fear thou not, for I am with thee; be not dismayed, for. I am! thy God.”

The child wanted “that much” with her to take to the operating-room; she could hold “that much” in her hand when the dressings were made and the stitches taken out, and it meant, oh, so much to her !

Oh, for the faith and trust of a little child!

COOPERATION 'IN' THE CAUSE OF TRUTH.

EACH year the twelve months' work of the:Berean Biblical Institute closes with the month of .April, and we desire at this time to present the Tract Fund Account for 1932-33,;also reference to the work which has. been a joy and privilege to engage in with the willing and loving co-operation of the brethren generally.

‘Throughout the year there has been cause for much thankfulness to our loving Heavenly Father, for while certain difficulties and trials have not been absent, these have been so small in comparison with the blessings received. We trust that the dear friends in all places can likewise testify to a full realisation of the Lord's goodness as they have endeavoured to “seek first the kingdom of God “ and serve His cause in spirit and in truth.

The work done (luring the past year has not been great; We are- not of those claiming “many wonderful Works,” yet we trust it has been of benefit to the brethren and others coming' to a knowledge and appreciation of the truth. , •

There are those in very lonely places who write, saying that they find the monthly visits -'of the “People's Paper” a blessing and encouragement to press along 'the narrow way, which is now all the more beset with various hindrances and difficulties. Other readers, though having. more opportunities of personal fellowship in the classes and small home gatherings, also express appreciation of the “Paper” with its articles contributed by the brethren in various parts. We assure each and all dear friends of our love and sympathy and earnest desire for their highest spiritual welfare, and trust that, though the way may be “narrow is and rough,” -they may 'find in- all hard. experiences' such evidence of- the overruling care of the Lord that these will just be ' the Means of adding to their faith the necessary virtues to obtain “an abundant entrance into the everlasting Kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.”

The subscriptions to the “People's, Paper” remain about the same, so that the deficiency in its cost of printing. and posting, as in former- years, requires to be made up by the Tract Fund. The efforts on. the part of those brethren who endeavour to obtain new subscribers are much. appreciated, and. maybe other. readers have interested friends who would like to receive the “Paper” regularly. Back issues are gladly supplied to- all who can make good use of them, and any -desiring the “Peoples Paper, but. are unable:. to provide the subscription, a card to that effect will be sufficient each year. The assistance to the Tract Fund manifests again the willing and loving sacrifices of the dear friends to help on the work,- and the endeavour is to use this provision-to the best of our ability in the cause of truth. While the .expense for the year is not quite covered, we are thankful. to have been able to fulfil all inquiries and requests for the free literature, etc. Many thousands of tracts of a nature likely to create interest in the glad message of salvation have gone here and there to willing workers and we believe have been faithfully distributed. The responses to this witness may seem small, and yet we realise that we are still living in the day of small things, and quite a few nice cases of interest have been found during. the year by the message of hope making impression in the heart. However, another method that was particularly mentioned last year as being a profitable means of witnessing has again brought good results, mid that is, by inserting coupons in suitable newspapers Offering literature free on the sure Bible teachings of the Lord's provision for all mankind in their distress and perplexity. Quite a number have been brought to a knowledge of the truth in this way, and it is encouraging to have - the co-operation of the brethren along this line, as they make use of the papers in their localities likely to bring .the best results. More could possibly be done in this direction, for although the chief object with each and all must be to “seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness,” to “make straight paths for our feet,” and assist those of our brethren in the same, there is much joy and blessing in finding others who may be just waiting for the message the Lord may be pleased to give them.

From time to time enquiries are received regarding the price of tracts for distribution, and opportunity is taken of mentioning that the arrangements of the past are still carried on, we believe with the best results all round. That is, that the Tract Funds, comprising the voluntary contributions towards the work, provide the literature for general distribution, so that each and al: who are willing may feel free to co-operate as they have opportunity. Some may have talents in one direction, others in another, and as all are combined the best results should surely -be attained, It is for each one rejoicing in the light of the truth to determine the best way of serving the cause in co-operation with other members 'of like mind and desire. Quantities of tracts are now available on the topics, "Two Distinct Salvations" and "Why Sorrow, Sin, Death and Evil. are Permitted"; also a limited number with other titles. We are very glad to hear •from all who may desire to assist in some way the work of thrusting in the sickle of truth while there is yet opportunity. •

May the dear brethren everywhere feel encouraged to press along the pilgrim way as they realise the Lord's blessings of the past and present, and meditate upon the many promises and assurances of grace and strength for every time of need. "He that dwelled', in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow' of the Almighty. I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge and my fortress', my God; in Him will I trust." We ask again at this time for the prayers of the brethren upon the work, that all may be done to the praise and glory of the Lord. 2 Thes. 3: I.

Correspondence.

South Australia,

April, 1933. Dear Christian Friend's,—

I write to thank you very much for the loan of the book “Divine Plan of the Ages,” also the other papers, which I find most interesting and helpful. I shall read “The Plan” most carefully. It is indeed a revelation, as I have blundered along for 20 years enquiring into the beliefs of Several different sects, only to come to the conclusion last year that through faulty translation of the Bible and traditions and alterations of the different churches, we were in a complete fog. My thought was just this: “If I only knew the truth I would follow it”; but I don't think I could ever be good enough to be one of the elect, although I do feel that I have been called, not once, but many times, and I truly believe in the Bible as God's Word, and have been baptised because I found we were told to do so.

Thanking you for your kind assistance, for I feel that have been very greedy in asking for so many papers, but I want to know all I can learn about the truth.

Yours gratefully, Alb

New South Wales, 18/-1/33. The Secretary.

Dear Friend,—

I wish you to forward for twelve months a monthly copy of “People's Paper.”. With the first, kindly send a copy of the tract, “Why Evil is Permitted.” You sent me one some time ago and I thought it the most beautiful pamphlet I ever read. I lent it, to lose it, as it so happened. I would like to know what you would charge for a hundred of them to distribute here.

Your sincere Brother in Christ, A.Q.

South Australia, 12th May, 1933. Berean) Biblical. Institute, 1-

Dear Friend,—

I am sorry for neglecting to forward my subscription. Please find enclosed 5/—2/6 subscription and a little contribution.

I have been reading some of Pastor Russell's books:. I have a loan of them from a German friend. They are wonderful books and a great help. I would like to get them in English so that I could lend them to others. Please let me know the price: And may God bless and prosper your work.

Yours sincerely, F.D).

New South Wales, 13/5/33.

Dear Brother,—

Greetings in our dear Lord's name. Sorry for delay in sending a small donation towards helping in the good work. Enclosed is a cheque for I had intended sending it before now, but delayed. - I would like you to send me some more tracts and "P.P.," particularly the last one. I thought it was very good, showing the two salvations, etc. I was just wondering whether it 'would be wise to go over the whole of with the tracts; what do you think about it yourself? I would take charge of • the tracts and see that they were delivered as best we could, if thought advisable. We have a small class meeting in my house every Thursday- evening in which Bro. and others take part, but perhaps we could get a small hall to meet in if other.; were sufficiently interested to come. If thought advisable, we could put a rubber stamp address on the tracts.

It. would take a good many tracts to go over and surrounding suburbs.-

In case above was decided. upon, could we get tracts enough to do it with.? Will be glad to know what you think of it, brother, and let me know.

Please renew my "Herald," also "P.P." I would like a copy of "Some of the Parables" and the book by the two Germans, entitled "Cleansing of the Sanctuary." Trusting you are quite well and with best wishes, I remain,

Your Brother 'by His grace, C.I.

[It is indeed good to be zealous in spreading the message of truth at every opportunity, to be "instant in season and out of season." and quantities of tracts may be had for distribution as wisely as possible.. Reference to the work along this line will be found in this issue under the heading, "Co-operation in the Cause of Truth."]

TRULY BEAUTIFUL.

Beautiful hands are they that do
The work of the noble, good and true,
Busy for them the long day through;
Beautiful faces—they that wear

The light of a pleasing spirit there,
It matters little if dark or fair;
And truly beautiful in God's sight,
Are the precious souls who love the right.

There is a sweet joy which comes to us through sorrow.—Spurgeon.

The Spirit of a Sound Mind.

(Convention Address)

THE Christian Church is not being chosen from the most talented of the human race; in fact, we are" assured by the Apostles that "not many wise are called," and the Lord's words were, "I thank Thee, O Father, that Thou hast hidden these things from the wise and prudent and revealed them unto babes." Though Some may. tie naturally endowed with more wisdom than others, it is quite certain that none can run the heavenly way without the gift of the Holy Spirit —the spirit of a sound mind—the wisdom from above.

One thing is clear: the Lord does not select the: members in Christ because of mental ability, but because of the heart condition—the heart that is kind, that is humble, that is likely to prove loyal and faithful under the trials and testing which will be sure to come during the course of preparation for so high a station.

Some troubles have originated even, through those whose kind dispositions have not been controlled by the spirit of a sound mind. Instead' of acting, along the lines of true' principle and justice, the tender heart. may have sided 'With the erring one. The spirit of a sound mind enable:>-, one to view matters from all. sides, and decides and nets on the principles of justice and love.

All Christians receive a measure of the Holy Spirit, which is manifested by the development of the spirit of a sound mind; and one who has been long in the way ought to discern:good and evil and he wise in counsel. The spirit of d sound mind enables one to understand God's great purposes and to comprehend more of the breadth and length and height and depth of His love. So we come to appreciate the divine wisdom, the beauty in the balancing of justice, righteousness and love in all God's plans and ways. One can then depend upon the good promises of His care, protection and providence, and appreciate the purpose God has in permitting the trials and hard things we sometimes experience. The result is a restful peace while working together with God—co-operating with Him—in producing the character likeness of Christ in us, as well as in serving His cause and His dear people.

HOW IT IS DEVELOPED.

Like all Christian graces, the spirit of a sound mind is developed by exercise and application of the truth—"Thy Word is truth"; "The reverence of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom.." God appeals to our minds; He commends His love to us, inviting us to "come, let us reason together," to consider our ways and to apply our hearts unto wisdom. When we heard the glad message that revealed to us a God of love, we turned in reverence to Him, and as we took the steps of repentance and faith and found peace through justification and consecration, we began to understand even, why evil has been permitted, and now' see wisdom and love as well as justice in the great Divine Plan. Life was changed for us, the Bible became a new book, we continued to see new beauties and obtained a more intelligent view of life. Instead M. the spirit of fear—dread—our hearts responded to God's love and became restful, joyful, and peaceful, and we inure and more realised the reasonableness of having made a full surrender to God. (-Rom. -12:1.)

It was then that we received the Holy Spirit and could understand spiritual things. We had to make, a revaluation of - things—make new estimates. "Things that were gain to me I counted loss for Christ." Things which we had been ignorant of, then became to us of greater value than anything earth could supply; "Yea, (says Paul) I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of:Christ"; and so this heavenly wisdom—the spirit of a sound mind—is given unto us in order that we may prove wise stewards respecting all our talents and walk worthy of the name of Christ. It will assist us to balance our weaknesses and to make allowances for the frailties of others, in the home, in business, in contact with, the world, as well. as in Christian fellowship:

A CORRECTIVE OF WEAKNESSES.

All have some talents and these require to be exercised wisely. For instance, sympathy may be unwisely expressed and do more harm than good; human wisdom might .lead to a course unwise from a spiritual .view-, point, and so the spirit of a sound mind must control, Then, how necessary to control the gift of speech. Where one is fluent, what endless harm can be done by an uncontrolled tongue. Sometimes, too, though per; haps no great injury is inflicted, lengthy speeches in classes only waste time and becloud the subject under, consideration instead of elucidating the matter. So, also, with the gift of, song; while we may ever make melody in our' hearts, we might be enjoying our own voices while being a nuisance to others near by.

Even in the talent of prayer, as in telling the glad message of truth, the spirit of a sound mind should direct so that our words may be in season. There arc times when long prayers are a great trial to others., Generally, for lengthy prayer we should enter our own rooms and "when we have closed the door pray to our Father in secret." Short prayers in public or in class will generally serve the cause better than long ones. As indicated by the Master, long prayers contain vain repetitions (Matt. 6:5-7). The thought should be to voice the desires of those present. Particularly at the close of a meeting, unless it be some very exceptional case, the prayer should be: brief. Not always what may appear best for us, is what is really best for others.

With respect to class matters, we should not 'be too insistent upon what we think best; we may be mistaken, and even regarding the meaning of 'a. Scripture, while clinging to our view until reason is satisfied, Where: no vital truth or principle is at stake we should, having expressed our view allow the matter to pass, recognising that it is the chairman's privilege to conclude the discussion. We should prefer' others rather • than please ourselves in all things where truth and principle will allow. Let us ever be careful to lean on the Lord's Word and not on our own understanding. The Word is the source whence we may develop the spirit of a sound mind.

The spirit of a sound mind should enable us to recognise our own failings and shortcomings, and make us ready to prefer others when we notice that they are strong where we are weak; So we find plenty to do, as another has beautifully stated it, in "meekly, earnestly striving to stem the tide' of human imperfections and weakness, endeavouring with painstaking care to regain the Divine likeness.": In doing this we shall not be found 'meddling with other's concerns—such is the very opposite of the spirit of a sound mind, it is foolish; rather does 'the spirit of a sound mind teach us to "learn to be quiet and to mind our own business." We should take note of our failings and seek to correct ourselves. We may be of an irritable, impatient disposition, or curt, 'brusque; and so easily misunderstood, excitable or extreme and apt to jump to conclusion; and to judge others, perhaps given 'to surmising, or we may be too touchy or ready to take offence. Let us be ready to confess our faults, ready to make amend;, ready to deal leniently with others. Let us seek in prayer and study of God's Word to grow in grace. Guy strength lies in our faith in God, in •His love, His power and His promises of strength for our need. Perfect trust in God will assist us in all these matters.

Then the spirit of a sound mind takes note of our responsibilities and also of the responsibilities of others, leading us to so walk as not to infringe on others' rights or privileges. Sometimes one overestimates one's privileges and underestimates the privileges of others. , -Sometimes we may exercise liberties and in doing so curtail someone 'else's liberties, as in a class where one speak; too long and too often so that others do not get opportunity. We should prefer to encourage all to take part.

Also in our homes sometimes we may not realise how much our ways .and likings may be irksome to others. The fact that "a man's ways may be right in his own eyes" does not make them right in God's eyes. Even in our religious arrangements and sacrifices we should make certain that we are not, perhaps, taking too much time from. others who are anxious to get along with matters which devolve upon them. In our relationships the Christian love in one may be patiently enduring what another may not be sufficiently alert to notice and correct in himself.

God's will should be the deciding factor in all our arrangements. In His great 'plan there is perfect order and time observed, and we must seek to copy his -ways. As His people associate in worship, fellowship and study, all things must be done decently and in order, and each member must respect the arrangements made, must recognise. the appointments and submissively adhere to the order of meetings and direction of the, elders.

The spirit of a sound mind will not conflict with 'the .Golden Rule that we do unto others as we would that they should do unto us, but will assist us so to "walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise., .redeeming the time because the days are evil; wherefore be not unwise but understanding what the will of the. Lord is." (Eph. 5::15, 16.) Let us give no offence to •any,- but seek to be more and more-a help and blessing. to all, especially to the fellow members in Christ with whom we may be in contact, that grace may abound, that progress may be made, and-.that the happy condition of unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace may continue. "With all lowliness and meekness, with long- suffering, forbearing one another in love."—Eph. 4:2, 3.

What Constitutes Spiritual Mindedness ?

Ability to understand the Scriptures, to talk fluently upon them and to expound them clearly is a qualification which we think should follow in the wake of spiritual-mindedness; but some might be able to expound Scripture very well, and to express truths in very good form, who are not necessarily very spiritually-minded.

To be spiritually-minded is to have a mind in harmony with the Spirit of God, and fully surrendered to the Divine will—fully consecrated to the Lord. It would not be enough merely to have a preference for good, saying, “I prefer not to do any gross sin; I prefer to live a life that will be honest and decent.” This attitude would not be spiritual-mindedness. Adam was not spiritually-minded, but in his perfection he had a mind to do right. He had the mind of God, in the sense that he had a balanced mind, not one having a preference for sin, or one that was weak. He was sound-minded and could appreciate things from the standpoint of righteousness and justice. But even in his perfection Adam had not a spiritual mind in the highest or Scriptural sense of the word.

In Rom. 8:6 the Apostle Paul uses the expression “spiritually-minded” in describing a certain class who have become followers of Christ, who have made a full consecration of their lives to the Lord, and who, in harmony ‘With this consecration, have been begotten’ of the Holy Spirit. These are spiritually-minded. These are granted a spiritual insight into divine things.

OUR LORD BECAME SPIRITUALLY MINDED AT JORDAN

This was true of our Lord Jesus. Having left the glory which He had with the Father, and having humbled himself to take the human nature, He was found-in fashion as a man. We read that He was not an imperfect man, but “holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners.” (Heb. 7:26.) Yet with all these special qualities, He did not have the spiritual mind to which the Apostle has reference. Our Lord had a mind such as Adam had before the fall—a mind in perfect harmony, perfectly balanced. Our Lord received the spiritual mind, however, at the moment when He was - begotten of the Spirit, when He made full consecration at baptism, and as a consequence the Holy Spirit descended and lighted upon Him in bodily form like a dove.

Following that begetting; the Lord had an enlargement of understanding and was granted to See certain deep things of God, which He had not seen before His consecration so we read in that very connection that “the heavens were opened” to Him—the higher things became clear to Him—the more spiritual things. . These things; St. Paul calls “the deep things of God.” “The natural Man,” Paul says (the natural -man would be a perfect man; fallen man is imperfect, unnatural), “receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, . . . neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned.” (1 Cor. 2:14.) Then he proceeds to say that we have received the Spirit of God through the begetting of the Holy Spirit; and that have the new mind, this-spirit begetting, - we are able to understand the deep ‘things of God. “The things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God; and we have received . . . the spirit which is of God, that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God.” Thus to us it is given to know the deep things of God. (1 Cor. 2:11, 12.)

NO NATURAL MAN IS SPIRITUALLY MINDED.

So, then, the one who has been begotten of the Holy Spirit is spiritually-minded. He sees things from the new standpoint which God specially brings to the attention of the spirit begotten. As the Apostle John says, “Ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye all know it.” (1 John 2:20.) Whoever receives this begetting of the Holy Spirit, this anointing, has an understanding of heart and of mind which is different from that which any natural man would have—a quality that will progress with him.. He has the privilege of growing in grace and in knowledge and in the appreciation of the deep things of God, and he should grow.

The Apostles Peter and Paul go on to explain (1 Pet. 2:2, 3; Heb. 5:13, 14; 6:1, 2) that one thus begotten of the Spirit of God is at first only a babe, and, as a babe, should desire the sincere milk of the Word—the first principles of the doctrine of Christ; but as he goes on, he should feed upon the strong meat of God’s Word. Some of those who have the begetting of the Spirit may be blessed with the special gift of language, so that they can make the matter very clear to others; some others, who have also received the begetting of the Spirit, may not be blessed with this gift. But all certainly would have the desire to tell forth the blessings which they have received from the Lord, that others might know and might glorify God in their bodies and spirits, which are His.

As these spiritually-minded ones would thus endeavour to tell the good tidings, we have no doubt that the Lord’s blessings upon them would more and more qualify them as ambassadors and representatives, that they might tell the message to others, if not in one form, then in another. We have noted, however, that some who speak with stammering lips have sometimes accomplished very wonderful things while others have failed to obtain the same results. The victory is not always to the strong nor to the swift; for the Lord may grant His blessing with the feebly-spoken word, particularly if the while life he in harmony with the message given out.

We have _been surprised at times to find that some who have apparently considerable understanding of spiritual things, in the sense of being able to tell about them, do not always give the best evidence in their lives that they really have the Spirit of the Lord. Sometimes in their private lives there is that which is quite contradictory. This condition surprises us; causes us to wonder how it is that those who apparently understand the Truth should 'be without the power, or manifestation of the power of the truth in their daily lives. We should bear in mind that whoever speaks the words of the Lord with his mouth, should uphold it in his every act, thought in private life as well as in public.

THE LIFE NOT THE WORDS, A TRUE INDEX.

The Truth should be the standard. Everything else is certainly quite contrary to the Divine will; and that person who .fails to uphold the Truth in his daily life gives evidence that he has not the Spirit of the Lord in the proper degree. If, therefore, any of us should find that in our daily -lives we have not been living in conformity with the message of our lips, it would be a matter of serious concern, for we cannot doubt that whoever is out of harmony with the Lord in his heart will sooner or later get out of harmony ill his utterances.

We think, therefore, that if in a congregation of the Lord's people any one were proposed as an elder or a deacon who outwardly had ever so great ability as a teacher, but who did not in his daily life give good evidence of being fully consecrated to the Lord, and of seeking to walk, not after the flesh, but after the Spirit, he should be regarded as an unsuitable person to be put into the position of elder or deacon. The sooner he is left quite by himself the better. For the more such people are. put forward in public, the worse it will be for them and for the congregation whom they are supposed to serve.

[The above article is a reprint from the writings of our Brother Russell. It is our thought that at the time it was written- 1912—he had clearer insight into the deeper truths than when he commenced his writings. Some of our brethren have had their minds exercised recently on the subject of spiritual mindedness, and this article is recommended to their careful consideration.]

One of these days we shall know the reason
Haply, of much that perplexes now;
One of these days, in the Lord's good season,
Light of His peace shall adorn the brow.

Blessed though out of tribulation
Lifted to dwell in His sun-bright smile,
Happy to share in the great salvation,
Well may we tarry a little while.

The Word is Truth

(Convention Address)

“All Scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness.” 2 Tim. 3:16.

THESE words were addressed to Timothy many years ago, and throughout this Epistle we can notice some of his characteristics. It appears that Timothy was a very young man, and although St. Paul reminds him of the genuine faith and piety he had inherited from his mother and grandmother, and of the special grace conferred upon him from God, yet it appears- that he was of a somewhat timid nature and needed encouraging. The Apostle Paul urges him, to stir up, re-ignite, the gift he possesses for the ministry. He reminds him, also, that God has not given him this spirit of fear or timidity, but rather a spirit of power and love, to awaken his zeal ‘afresh for the truth and the brethren; and yet lest Timothy should get the thought that the spirit of God leads only to zeal and energy that might be unwise at times in its exercise and do more harm than good, the Apostle adds that the spirit of God is also the spirit of a sound mind--a mind that is fortified and strengthened by the Word of God on every subject. To this end, he refers Timothy to the Scriptures which are able to make one wise unto salvation.

“All Scriptures given by inspiration of God are profitable”, . . . They are inspired, for they came not by the will of man, but were spoken by holy men of old, as they were moved or controlled by the Holy Spirit of God. The writers were kept from error by God, and thus we often speak of the Bible as the Truth, God bearing witness to the truth by miracles, signs, and wonders. The Scriptures are profitable in every direction and quite sufficient for the Man of God, not requiring to be supplemented by visions or dreams of our own or other men. Let us bear in mind that it does not say some -Scriptures, but all, every Scripture is useful; “We live by every word that proceeds out of the mouth of God.” Therefore this includes the whole of the Old and New Testaments. Hereby, then, we realise the excellence of the Scriptures, and for this excellent, profitable knowledge of ‘Jesus Christ, Paul was willing to suffer the loss of all things and so have many others to this day.

It is clear, then, that we should not despise any Scripture—“Despise not prophesyings”—and should not neglect to read and study them. By so doing we will come to realise that they certainly contain a record of all we ‘need and must have, to regulate live lives and conduct in this world. Therein is contained all that could possibly be desired to develop and ripen character and prepare us for the station we are called to occupy in the world to come. We ought never, therefore, think, say or do anything that would belittle, degrade or dislodge God’s Word from that central supremacy that it ought to have in moulding every thought and affection of our hearts. Not only receive the Bible but read it, study it, love it, reverence it and cherish it as a precious possession. Entertain it as a life in the heart and not as a mere direction outwardly.

What use will God’s Word be to us? What does it profit a man? It is profitable, useful for doctrine: It contains doctrine, teaching, something we ‘ought to know, declaring unto us the whole counsel of God, ‘the full statement of the Divine Plan, and no human authority is competent to add thereto or take away.: “For who hath known (or penetrated) the mind of the Lord, who has been His counsellor”—who is competent to instruct, Him. See that the kind of doctrine you hear speaks according to the Bible,—“If they speak not according to this Word there is no light in them,”—for some will come: speaking things contrary to sound doctrine and their manner of life will be as their teaching.

What is the secret of knowing the doctrine? Jesus said, “If any man will do His will he shall know the doctrine.” That is the secret of knowing,—do His will, then you shall know the doctrine. The Bible itself invites us to reason; with it, to prove it, to test it. One of the best ways of knowing if the Bible is true, is to try the test of living according to its commandments, precepts and lofty ideals, and you, will soon see its purity and, requirements are, far above the human, and that it teaches eternal righteous principles, because it is the doctrine of an eternal righteous Being. “Take heed, therefore, unto the doctrine, for in so doing thou shalt save thyself and those that hear thee.”

The Bible is also profitable for reproof. The word reproof often means convincing. It convinces a man of his condition, of sin, and of the truth. The Apostle writes,—“I had not known sin but by the law: for I had not known lust except the law had said, ‘Thou shalt not covet.’” “For by the law is the knowledge of sin.” God’s Word convinces a man of his own unrighteousness and the need of the righteousness of Christ. This influence tends either to life or death,—let us take heed, therefore, how we receive reproof, if in the right spirit it will make us wise unto salvation. In the sense of reproof the Scriptures give the best correction for all. No words that we could use in correcting the errors of others, either in word, deed or teaching, could possibly be as forceful for reproof as the inspired Word of God. “For God’s Word is full of life and power, and is keener than the sharpest two edged sword. It pierces even to the severance of soul and spirit and penetrates between the joint and the marrow, and it can discern the secret thoughts and purposes of the heart. And no created thing is able to escape its scrutiny; but everything lies bare and completely exposed before the eyes of Him with whom we have to do.” (Weymouth.)— Heb. 4:12, 13.

The Word of God makes one wise in the use of the word of reproof. “Reprove not a scorner lest he hate thee; Rebuke a wise man and he will love thee.”— Prov. 9:8.

Reproof is necessary, as we are told,—“Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them.”—Eph. 5:11; 1 Tim. 5:20; Eccles. 7:5. The Scriptures should also be used to reprove false teachings and errors, for it is mighty in this direction. See 2. Cor. 10:4, 5.

Although a person may be convinced of his condition and sin, or even if a Christian is reprov'd of his error or conduct, that in itself would not be sufficient, that would be of little use alone. This the Lord seems to teach in Matt. 12:43-45; “No sooner has the evil spirit gone out of a man, when it roams about in places where there is no water, seeking rest and finding none.” Then it says, “I will return to my house which I left and it comes and finds it unoccupied, empty, swept and in good order. Then he goes and brings back with him seven other spirits more wicked than himself . . .” “To have cast out a sin does not make a person safe from sin. There must be, therefore, no emptiness, no leisure in the Christian life, or else seven other spirits more wicked will occupy, and the end of that man’s condition is worse than the first.

When the convincing and reproofing has done its intended work, then, if we are wise, we will also ask the question which Paul asked when he was reprov'd on an evil errand on the road to Damascus—“Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? What saith the Lord? “It shall be told, thee what thou must do.” At this junction the Scriptures become profitable for correction; they tell us what to do and what not to do, and so will correct our errors and train us up in righteousness—in right doing. Reproof; then, must be followed by corrections; that is, rules for setting right—a reformation, and the Scriptures are indeed a powerful means of reformation. There are many good books that can give us rules of corrections and standards of morals or of discipline and how to apply them, but none can come up to the Word of God, none are so complete as the Scriptures. It is still the most powerful and effectual means in correcting those who are convinced of sin, righteousness and judgment to come. It searches thoroughly our hearts and corrects all waywardness.

If the truth is allowed to do this work, it will also guard us from a great mistake, and that is to think that the truth is given chiefly for our mental illumination and correction in doctrine. Its chief work has to do with our reaction toward the great principles of the Divine character, which it reveals. How impossible it is to attain accuracy in the understanding of the doctrinal framework of the plan, without having learned the spiritual principles of its great Architect. The great difficulty with some people, is that they seem to have a greater knowledge of God’s past and future operations, than of His present dealings revealed experimentally in the hearts and lives which have been wholly submitted to His power here and now. The Word of God pronounces a blessing upon the pure in heart—those whose intentions are upright, honest and clean.

The Scriptures, further, are profitable for instructions in righteousness. Literally, this means to bring up and establish one in the right—a training up in right doing, making one skilful in the application of the principles of love and justice in the daily affairs of life. God’s Word takes hold upon all the affairs of life and those who practice the exercises will find that it gives them a sound mind, able to weigh and appreciate things from the true standpoint—God’s standpoint of righteousness—and thus recognise that “bodily exercise profiteth little, but godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that is now and of that which is to come.” 1 Tim 4:8.

The instruction of the Word reaches down to the relationship between husband and wife, parents and children, friends and neighbors and even to our enemies . It lifts away from sin and encourages toward righteousness; it gives consolation in trouble, strength and courage in a time of general fear and doubt, and wisdom in times of perplexity.

The result is, that the people of the Lord have much advantage every way through such instruction, as respects the present life, besides the hope, the encouragement and the preparation which it gives for the life to come.

It is because David did not forget the Word of the Lord that he was a good king. King Solomon desired to judge and rule the people in justice and love, and he was granted wonderful wisdom in answer to prayer. We must not only be acquainted with truth and convinced of our errors, we need to be taught what is right, what is required, what is to be cultivated and grown in place of old and bad habits.

The Scriptures furnish rules for holy living in abundance, that the man of God may be complete, perfectly furnished for every good work-none of his necessities .are overlooked. For instance, when we come into the world, We need clothing, and so. does the Christian-"For He Hath clothed me with, the garments of salvation, He hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels." Isa 61:10. "Be clothed with humility" 1. Pet. 5:5; and again-"Whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or putting on of apparel; but let it be . . . a meek and quiet spirit . . . for so holy women of old adorned themselves." 1 Pet. 3:3-5.

You need food: "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent me." John 4:34.

You need to be educated: "Teach me Thy will." "Come, ye children, hearken unto me, I will teach you the fear of the Lord." Psa.. 34:11. "They shall be all taught of God." John 6:45.

You need exercise: "Exercise thyself unto godliness." 1, Tim, 4:7. "Herein do I exercise myself to have always a conscience void of offence toward God and Man." Act. 24:16.

You need pleasure: "In Thy presence is fulness of joy, at Thy right hand are pleasures for evermore" Psa. 16:11.

"Thy law is my delight." Psa. 119:77.

You need work: "Work out your own salvation." Phil, 2:12. "Let us labor, therefore, to enter into that rest," Heb. 4:11.

You need rest: "Come unto Me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28. "My presence shall go with thee and I will give thee rest." Exod. 33:14.

You want a reward: "I will be thy . . . exceeding great reward." Gen. 15:1,

Do you desire riches? "Lay up for yourselves, treasures in heaven." Matt. 6:20. 1 Tim. 6:17-19. "The blessing Of the Lord it maketh rich." Prov. 10:22,

Do you desire a home? "I go to prepare a place for you . . . I will come again and receive you unto Myself, that where I am, ye may be also." John 14:2,3. "To an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled that fadeth not away." 1 Pet. 1:4.

You need company: "He that doeth the will of My Father in heaven, the same is My brother, sister and mother." Matt. 12:50.

You may need a new song: "My tongue shall sing aloud of thy righteousness." Psa. 51:14. "And He hath put a new song into my mouth." Psa. 40:3. "And they sing the song of .Moses and the song of the Lamb." Rev. 15:3.

Do you want to be loved? "The Father Himself loveth you." John 16:27. "I have loved thee with an everlasting' love." Jer. 31:3.

Do you want to know where God dwells? "For thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy; I dwell in the high and holy place with him also that is of a humble and contrite spirit."

Isa. 57:1 .5. "If any man love' Me, he will keep' words; and My Father will love him, and We' will Co* unto him and make our abode with him." John 14:23:

Do you want to see God? “Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God.” Matt. 5:8. “Follow ‘peace and holiness without which no man shall ‘see the Lord:” Heb. 12:14.

Do you want wisdom.? “In Christ, are hid all’ the treasures of wisdom and knowledge.” Col. 2:3. “The reverence of the Lord is the ‘beginning of wisdom.”, Prov. 9:10.

Do you want to be true? Think on the things that are true. Phil. 4:8. “Put away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbor.” Eph. 4:25.

Do you want to be free from the power of evil? “Abhor that which is evil, cleave to that which is good.” Rom. 12:9.

Do you want to be cleansed from bitterness and hate? “I say unto you, Love your enemies, do good to them which hate you, bless them that curse you, and pray for them which despitefully use you.” Luke 6:27, 28. “Let all bitterness be put away from you.” ‘Eph. 4:31.

Do you want to be free from envy? “Be content with such things as ye have.” Heb. 13:5. “In lowliness of mind, let each esteem other better than themselves” Phil, 2:3.

Are you in search for happiness? “Happy is the man whom God corrected).” Job 5:17. “If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them. John 13:17.

You need courage and strength “The Lord is the strength of my life.” Psa. 27:1. “Wait on the Lord, and be of good courage and He shall strengthen thine heart.” Psa. 27:14; Deut. 31:6.

The Bible will correct your anxiety and worry; “Cast all your care on Him for lie Careth for you.” 1 Pet. 5:7. “My God shall supply all your need.” Phil. 4:9. And so we might continue to show that the Scriptures’ are able to make one wise and thoroughly furnished as a man of God. “Let the words of Christ dwell in you richly admonishing one another.” Such a man giving heed to the “sure Word of Prophecy,” will be “a good workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth.” His hopes and aims, joys and interests will not be wholly absorbed with the silence and seclusion of his own spiritual life.

The Word of God opens the heart, enlarges the affections and constrains us to love others. See Psa. 19:7-11.

Calmness of Truth.

All Truth is calm,
Refuge and Rock and Tower;
The more of Truth the more of calm,
Its calmness is its power.

Truth is not strife,
Nor is to strife allied;
It is the error that is bred
Of storm, by rage and pride.

Calmness is Truth,
And Truth is calmness still;
Truth lifts its forehead to the storm,
Like some eternal hill.

ISRAEL.

NOTWITHSTANDING the very many definite prophecies concerning the restoration of Israel to their ancient home and Divine favour, there are those who, like Sanballat and- Tobiali, in the days of the restoration under Nehemiah (4:1-3), would ridicule the thought that the "Figtree" is budding again. However, developments proceed and the gradual rehabilitation of Palestine by "Abraham's chosen race" is taking place. While other countries have had to close their doors to immigrants because of the number of the unemployed everywhere, it is announced that for the next six months the governments quota of Jewish immigrants into Palestine has been increased to 4500, the largest figure since 1926. It is claimed that this is a tribute to the economic success of Jewish work in Palestine.

The Lord just prior to His death used a fig tree as a symbol of the Jewish nation. Because of the pride, hypocrisy and unbelief of Israel, He cursed the fig tree and it withered away. Thus He prophesied the destruction of that nation and this. was fulfilled by the Roman power, in the final overthrow of Jerusalem, about A.D. 70.

Then in Matt. 24, in answer to the questions of Verse 3, "When shall these things be and what shall be the sign of thy presence and of the end of the age"? He gives the sign that the fig tree would be seen W. be budding again, i.e., Divine favour would be returning to Israel and their national hopes would be revived. Verses 32, 33. In line with this we have the Apostle's statement in Romans 11 25-28, "That blindness in part (not entirely blind, for Israelites have ever maintained faith in God notwithstanding their _terrible experiences as outcasts among the nations) has happened to them, because of unbelief until the fulness from the Gentiles be come in (to complete the church) then all Israel shall be saved, for this is My - covenant with them, when I shall take away their sins." As concerning the gospel they are enemies for your sakes, but as touching the election they are beloved for their father's sake," etc. The covenant referred to here is that of Jeremiah 31, How beautifully this chapter foretells the return of Israel from all lands whither they have been scattered, and the renewed expression of Divine love, see Verse 3, "The Lord hath appeared -as of old saying, 'Yea I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore, with loving kindness have I drawn thee,' Then follows a picture of the" gathering and further the establishment of "the New Covenant with the House of Israel after, those days." The Prophet .Micah (4:1-7) shows how Israel will 'Once; more be the most Divinely favoured nation on the earth and how, indeed, all other nations will look to Jerusalem for assistance and will recognise that the God of Israel is the only true and wise God. - Peter's statement of Acts 15:14-17 is also in agreement with the foregoing showing, that while Israel had rejected Messiah in their blindness, God was taking Oat a people for His name from the gentiles and that He would then return His favour to Israel and would Set up the tabernacle of David (Israel again in Jerusalem). and that there would then come an opportunity for the rest of mankind to seek after the Lord (by enquiring of Israel, the earthly phase of His Kingdom.). The same principle applies then as in the past, God's favor is "To the Jew first and also to the Gentile." ‘

Correspondence.

Dear Brother,—

I am writing you a few lines to express my appreciation of the helps we receive each month from the “Peoples Paper.” It seems very necessary that the Lord’s people should have fellowship one with the other, and without these helps, along with the “Herald,” we would be lonesome indeed. The Lord knows best how to deal with His people, so we do not complain.

I would like if you could send me two spiritism pamphlets, the old ones that Bro. Russell wrote.

We think, dear Brother, that we are not far off some crisis in the affairs of this world. The conditions that led up to 1914 brought about a certain result, and it would appear that the affairs which have transpired since that date would lead up to other complications. The Lord says, “Yet once more I shake note the earth only but the heavens also,” Heb. 12:26; and since our Lord’s presence we see all these things coming to pass, something seems to press upon our mind that the glorious Kingdom is not far off. Praise ye the Lord.

With Christian Love,

Your Brother by the Lord’s Grace, B.T.

Tasmania, June, 1933. Dear Brother,—

Loving greetings in our dear Redeemer’s Name, It was nice to get your interesting letter. You put in a good deal of manoeuvring to get to all the places you did. Actually there was only Sis. -- that you did not go to, though had there been time and opportunity, it would have been nice to have gone, and to Sis. of —. Next visit. D.V.

Your visit, I feel sure, has been a great blessing to the friends. From what I hear and see, the friends in Tasmania, as a whole, have kept to the “old paths” more than elsewhere, and it is something to be very thankful for in these days of deceptions and side tracking. The straying in little by-paths here and there seems to be the trouble. It makes me think of Paul’s admonition, “Having clone all, stand.” It is only those of contented mind, at rest in Christ, who feed on the shew-bread, and whose only light is that which comes from the golden candlestick that can.

Your visit passed quickly, as all these things do in this life, yet for these bright spots, however fleeting, we can always see God’s kindness and love. Have just received a letter from , asking if they go to would. I come. It would be nice, but I seem to have more opportunities of service here amongst the friends and our dear Brother seems very firmly established.

Well, dear Brother, I’ll close. You have got back to your “labour of love,” and may God bless and be with you to the end.

My sincere Christian love to self and Sister and all the friends.

Your Brother in Christ, B.C.H.

South Australia. Berean Biblical Institute.

Dear Friends,

I received your papers safely, and wish to thank you for your kind, friendly letter. It appealed to me very much.

I am a young man and take a great interest in spiritual matters. I want to have religion as God would have me know it. I attend the Protestant Churches in the district, but I never found Jesus altogether by attending them. HO came into my life quite privately, in a manner which only those who have had a similar experience can understand. I have been impressed lately with the interest that has been aroused concerning the return of Christ, although on turning to history I find that most every period of distress brings a revival of the Second Adventists.

I have had a few talks lately on this subject, and any literature you may have on it I would be pleased to read. will send a subscription to your paper shortly, just at present I am a bit short of money, but I am. enclosing 1/- for some literature.

Possibly some time I may have the pleasure of calling on you personally. However, in the meantime, may Go bless your Christian endeavours towards the betterment of mankind.

Yours very sincerely, R.V.W.

THE BEST ORDER

A man of high character but ordinary education was addressing a roomful of schoolchildren, and he said to them: "All of you know the verb which says 'I am, thou art, he is,' and all of you know that verbs in English, French, German, Italian, and Latin run in that way. But do you know that that is a very bad way for a verb to run? Do you know that the old Hebrew people arranged their verbs the other way round, 'He is, thou art, I am'?"

Then he added: "That is the way to look at life. Say to yourself, looking up to God, 'He is.' Then look at your neighbour, and say, 'Thou art.' Last of all think of yourself and say, 'I am.'"

One who heard this story was so struck by it that he sought out a Hebrew scholar and asked him if it were true that the Hebrew verbs were conjugated in that way.

"Yes," said the Scholar. "But why do you ask?" And when told what the man had said to the children, he exclaimed: "Well, I have been. studying Hebrew for forty years, and it never once occurred to me that Hebrew verbs have that wonderful and beautiful significance."

That is the way to think and to live.
First God, then your neighbour, then yourself.
Serve God, and be cheerful. Live nobly,
Do right and do good. Make the best
Of the gifts and the work put before you,
And to God, without fear, leave the rest.

The Lord is My Light and My Salvation

WE have noted previously' that verses 1-6 of this Psalm are full of the rejoicing, exultant spirit; the language of one conscious of victory through the grace of the Lord. , We notice, however, that verses 7-12 are in the form' of ,a prayer. . How, truly are the experiences of the Church ,pictured in the Psalms. There are times when we are lifted to the mountain-top, and it is comparatively easy for exultant faith to sing the song of victory; but experienced soldiers of Christ know well that tile mountain-top experience of to-day must soon give place to the humiliating valley experience of to-morrow. There are good lessons to be learned in every-experience. It is in the valley of humiliation that we learn the preciousness of the sympathy and love of our Lord and Saviour, and we also learn the value of prayer. We want to be loyal under the trials of our faith which the various experiences of life bring to us. We want to be able to say with the Psalmist—"Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me!" (Psa. 23:4.)

Verse 7. There may come times in our experience when trials and afflictions and adversities come thick and fast upon us like they did -on Job, and it may seem as though the Lord has forsaken us, but He has said—"I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." It would seem that sometimes the Lord allows Us to get alone in -order that we may learn, and because there are lessons for Us -to gain from such experiences, but He is ever watchful. "He that 'keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep," and lie will never suffer us to be tempted above what we are able to bear, but will, with-every trial, provide a way of escape.

Verse 8 indicates that God is not compelling any—it is an invitation to seek the Lord. The Church class are those who are prompt to respond, and to seek to know and do the will of the Lord. Rebecca, who typified the Church, showed her readiness, when invited, to become the bride of Isaac. We have been invited to become, the Bride of - Christ, and we show our love for the Lord, and our appreciation of His invitation, by prompt obedience to His Word.

Verse 9. We may sometimes stray away from the Lord through carelessness or waywardness. This verse is a cry from David's heart at such a time, and pictures the same thing in us—the straying away from the Lord and turning again to Him for help, Verse 10 shows that though we may be forsaken by our earthly friends, yet the Lord will never forsake His people.

Verse 11 is a prayer for Divine guidance. "Teach me Thy way, O Lord." We must have meekness of spirit in order to be taught of God and guided in His ways. "The' meek will He guide in judgment; the meek will He teach His way." (Psa. 25:9) We should strive at all times to make straight paths for our feet and we may also pray, for a plain 'path because of the: snares that beset us on every side.

Verse 12 is a continuation the petition for protection from the forces of evil. There are times when we must pray earnestly for the grace and strength to -enable us to overcome, The Lord's people, like their Master, are oft-times treated unjustly, and we will need the wisdom and grace from above to enable us to meet the trials in the way Christ met them. "When He was reviled, He reviled not again; when He suffered, He threatened not, but committed Himself to Him that judgeth righteously." The Apostle Peter tells us (2 Pet. 2:9) "the Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation;" and in Psa. 91:3 we read:—"Surely He shall deliver thee from the snare of the fowler, and front the noisome pestilence."

'Verse 13. Surely it is our faith in God that sustains us and keeps us from fainting. We have faith in the promises of God and in the outworking of His gracious Plan of the Ages; and we have confidence that His goodness will soon be shown to all men. It is faith that enables us to hold fast to the promises, and to know that, "All things work together for good to those who love God." Faith Will enable us to overcome the world.

The Psalm closes with the exhortation:—"Wait on the Lord, be of good courage and He shall strengthen thine heart; wait, I say, on the Lord." In Isaiah, 40:31 we read:—"They that wait upon the Lord, shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles, they shall run and not be weary; and they shall walk and not faint." Our great strength surely lies in trusting in the Lord; in waiting upon the Lord.

If we should attempt to undertake things in our own strength, we would not accomplish very much. We need the Lord's help and grace for each step of the way Without Him, we can do nothing; and we must guard against any tendency to run ahead of. the Lord. How we need to hearken to the Lord's voice, and seek to understand His will for us through His Word. In Psalm 37:4-7, we read: "Delight thyself also in the Lord; and He shall give thee the desires of thine heart. Commit thy way unto the Lord, trust also in Him; and He shall bring it to pass. And He shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noon-day. Rest in the Lord and wait patiently for Him."

Do we sometimes feel that the mark for the prize of the high calling is something that we dare not hope to attain unto? Are we tempted to think that while the heavenly reward of the Divine Nature may be gained by others, yet do we hesitate to entertain the hope of sharing in the reward of the more than conquerors? Let us not permit the spirit of fear and distrust to weaken our hearts and take away our hope. Let us rather “wait on the Lord” and call to mind His assurance.—“My grace is sufficient for thee; My strength is made perfect in weakness.” The Apostle Paul has said, “If God be for us, who can be against us?” and again “Our sufficiency is of God.” We do not feel sufficient of ourselves to run the heavenly race; but God will help us over each step of the way. “He that hath begun a good work in us, will finish it until the day of - Jesus. Christ” (Phil. 1:6.)

Let us then “be strong in the Lord, and in the power of His might.” “Be strong and of a good courage; fear not, nor be afraid . . . for the Lord thy God, He it is that doth go with thee; He will not fail thee, nor forsake thee.” Deut. 31:6. In Phil. 4:13 the Apostle says—“I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me.” Also, Eph. 3:14-19.

If our hearts be truly emptied of self-will and we be filled with the spirit—filled with all the fulness of God, then we cannot doubt that He will WO will go from strength to strength. If we truly learn bring us off more than conquerors. Under His leading to wait upon the Lord we will find strength to mount up with wings as the eagles; things that otherwise would be quite beyond our attainment will be possible to us by the Lord’s grace, as represented by David’s victory over the lion, the bear, and the giant.

Let us then take to ourselves the important lessons from the life of David, as pictured in this Psalm. We have the lesson of reverence for God shown in the way David waited for the Lord’s time and way of giving ‘him the Kingdom. Then we have the lesson of faith in the Lord that will enable us to realize continually that the Lord is our Light and our Salvation and the Strength of our life. Also, we have the lesson of courage which is the outgrowth of faith, and lastly, the lesson of patient endurance—another of the fruits of faith.

When clouds hang heavy o’er thy way,
And darker grows the weary day,
And thou, oppressed by anxious care,
Art almost tempted to despair,

Still wait upon the Lord.
When friends betray thy loving trust,
And thou art humbled in the dust,
When dearest joys from thee have fled,

And Hope within thy heart lies dead,
Still wait’ upon the Lord.
When death’ comes knocking at thy door,
And in thy home are sorrows sore,

Though age comes on and eyes grow dim,
Still look to Christ, still trust in Him,
And wait upon the Lord.
Whate’er thy care, believe His word;

In joy or grief, trust in the Lord.
Good courage He will give to thee,
And strong indeed thy heart shall be,
By waiting on the Lord.

WAITING ON GOD THROUGH TRIAL.

There is indeed strength given us in being quiet before God. Man is so prone to do and say, and attend to things himself rather than to allow God to work out things for him, while he patiently and humbly waits before Him. It is one thing to talk about this, and quite another to actually wait before God. It is never right to speak or act hastily. We can always afford to wait until we know or understand the mind of the Lord.

Sometimes, when we are throwing a line to others, the tide turns in our favour, and we find ourselves drifting to our own desired haven.—Ethel M. Dell.

The Grace of Humility

“In lowliness of mind let each esteem other better. than themselves.”—Phil.,2:3.

THOSE who naturally have a humble mind have no particular difficulty in esteeming others better than themselves. But there are some who naturally have another attitude of mind. This is not necessarily their fault, for they may have been born with larger self-conceit than were others. But even if we were born with humbleness of mind, we should need to take care that self-conceit and pride do not come in. Sometimes in their own heart some people feel boastful of the knowledge they possess. They like to shine, even though they know they have no more brilliancy than others; they would like to obscure the shining of others that they might be the more noticed in the darkness.

It would, therefore, be a safe matter for each of us to follow the Apostle’s suggestion to cultivate this humility of mind and never allow it to be lost. “Humble yourselves, therefore, under the mighty hand of God, that He may exalt you in due time”; “whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall ‘be exalted.” (1 Pet. 5:6; Luke 14:11.) God would do this abasing, not of a. vengeful spirit, but because the one who would vaunt himself must be brought low.

There might, however, be circumstances when some who appear to be vaunting themselves really are not doing so, but circumstances and conditions make it seem so. Therefore, to best fulfil the Apostle’s injunction, we should, as he suggests in this text, cultivate the spirit of humility—not considering our own good qualities so much as those of others. If we have good qualities, we are glad; let us make use of them.

In comparing ourselves with others, let us look at our own blemishes. There are very few in whom we cannot see some good qualities, good traits. If, therefore, we look at our own imperfections and the good qualities of others, we shall find ourselves more and more appreciative of others; and this will be of assistance to us in running the race.

As an illustration of seeing something to admire, even in our enemies, we have the suggestion of the old lady to her nieces. One niece said to the other, “Auntie can say something good about ,everybody. I believe she could say something good even about the Devil.” “That is so,” answered the other. “Let us ask her.” Then she called, “Auntie, is there any good about the Devil?” “My dear,” replied Auntie, “I wish we all had as much perseverance as he has.”

So if we could find something in the Arversary that we could admire and commend, we can certainly find something in all others to admire and commend and to give them credit for. Thus we will cultivate the spirit that will be most helpful to ourselves for our future work.

The consideration of our own imperfections would, as we have suggested, make us very humble of mind and keep us in a. very humble attitude of mind. This might discourage us unless we had the proper relationship with the Lord and His Word. We know, that ‘all things work together for good to those who love God.” (Rom. 8:28.) Through His Word our Lord has provided for such the “Balm of Gilead” for their encouragement, and the anointing oil and the comfort of the Scriptures. The Lord does not cast us off if we are not wilfully wrongdoers, and if we take in the right spirit: the humiliating things. That disposition is what He wants. Those things which would humiliate us in the sight of others, and in the sight of the Lord Himself, will, if we are rightly exercised by them, work together for good to us. Such He will bless and lift up and give an appreciation of His Love. This He purposes to do. We have every evidence that the Lord will give the necessary encouragement, and we have the assurance of the Scriptures that those who obey His Word to the best of their ability shall not be overcome.

For each one to look merely upon his own things, interests, welfare or talents and to ignore those of others would manifest a general selfishness and, consequently, a dearth of the Spirit of Christ, which is a spirit of love and generosity. In proportion as we are filled more and more with the Holy Spirit, Love, we shall find ourselves interested in the welfare of others. This was the mind, disposition, or spirit which was in our dear Redeemer, which He so wonderfully manifested, which we must copy and develop in our characters if we would ultimately be of the “little flock,” who shall be joint-heirs with Christ in His glory, concerning whom God has predestinated that to be accepted with Him to this position they must be “copies of His Son.”—Rom. 8:29.

OUR GREAT EXEMPLAR.

That we may partially discern how our Lord Jesus exemplified this spirit of humility, the Apostle briefly sums up the story of His humiliation and shows how it led to His present exaltation. He points out to us that when our Lord Jesus was a. spirit being, before He stooped to take our nature and to bear the penalty of our sin, He was in “a form of God”—a spirit form, a high and glorious condition. But instead of being moved selfishly and ambitiously to grasp for higher things than God had conferred upon Him—instead of seeking to set up a rival Empire, as Satan did—He did not meditate a robbery of God to make Himself the Father’s equal (Satan’s course), and say, “I will ascend above the stars (the bright ones, the angelic hosts), I will be as the Most High” (His peer, His equal.) Quite to the contrary of this, our Lord Jesus, “the beginning of the creation of God,” was willing, in harmony with the Father’s plan, to humble Himself, to take a lower nature and to do a work which would involve, not only a great deal of humiliation, but also a great deal of pain and suffering.

The Apostle points out how the ‘Only Begotten’ proved His willingness ‘and humility by complying with this arrangement; and that after He became a man He continued of this same humble spirit willing to carry out the Divine. Plan-to- the very letter by dying as man’s ransom price, and not only so but when it pleased the Father that the death should be a most ignominious one in every respect, perhaps beyond the requirements of the ransom merely - He did not draw back, but said “Thy will not mine be done”.

Here we have the most wonderful demonstration- of humility, meekness and obedience to God that ever was manifested or that could be conceived of. And this’ is the pattern • the Apostle points out that we should seek to copy.

“Let this same (humble) mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus.”—Phil. 2:5-10.

This humility enabled our Lord to render perfect obedience, on account of the Heavenly Father has so highly honored Him as to raise Him from the dead to the divine nature, to a station far above angels, principalities and powers, and every name that is named. That this is the Apostle’s argument is shown (verse 9) by the word “wherefore,” i.e., on this account ,on account of this humility just described, God’ has highly exalted Him.

Not only did our Lord’s beautiful and perfect humility and obedience demonstrate that He was to the core loyal to the Heavenly Father, but it also demonstrated that in Him the Father’s spirit, Love, dwelt richly, for He shared the Father’s love for the race He redeems. On this account also He is found worthy to be the Divine Agent in the -blessing of all the families of the earth, according to the terms of the Divine Covenant made with Father Abraham.

Thus He has become the “Seed of Abraham” which is to bless the race redeemed; and hence it will be to Him that “every knee shall bow and every tongue confess” when Jehovah’s “due time” shall come for the pouring out of Divine blessings upon the redeemed world —that all may come to a knowledge of the truth and, if they will, into full harmony with God, and to eternal life.

Not only does the Apostle hold up the Lord Jesus as the great Example of a proper humility, self-abnegation and obedience to God in the interest of others, but he would also hold up before us the reward, the high exaltation of our Lord by the Father, the result or reward of His obedience, that we also might be encouraged and realise that, if faithful in following the footsteps of our Redeemer and sacrificing the advantages of the present to serve the Lord and His cause, then in due time we also may expect to be glorified with Him and to share anointed name and throne and work, as members of His anointed Body, His Church, His’ joint-heir.

Beloved, let us apply to ourselves the loving exhortation of the Apostle to the Church at Philippi, contained in the succeeding verses (Phil. 2:12-16), and continue in the way upon which we have entered, making more and more progress in the race-course, working out in ourselves through humility and obedience the character, the disposition of Christ, with fear and trembling, and thus working, out each our own share in the great salvation to- glory, honor and immortality which God hath promised.

WORKING OUT OUR SALVATION.

We cannot work out our own justification, but being ‘justified by the blood, of Christ, and being called with the heavenly calling, we can make our calling and election sure. We can work out our own share in the great salvation to which we have been called in Christ by giving heed to the instructions of the Lord,-by following the pattern which He has set for us; not that we shall attain perfection in the flesh, but merely perfection of will, of intention, Of heart, and if we keep the body under to the extent of our ability, its weaknesses and imperfections will be reckoned as “covered by the merit of our Lord, the Holy One.

It is encouraging also for us to know that this warfare against weakness and sin is not merely one of -Our own, -but that God is for us, has called. us, and is:helping us. He already works in us, by His word of promise, and has led us thus far in the willing and the doing of His will, His good pleasure; and He will continue thus to lead and to help us and to work in us by His Word of Truth, if we will continue to ;Om heed ‘to’ His counsel. “Sanctify them through Thy Truth—Thy Word is Truth.” The Gospel is “the power of God unto salvation” to every one that so accepts it; and no greater stimulus to true godliness can be found than the “exceeding great and precious promises given unto us; that ‘by these we might partakers of the Divine nature.’”-2 Pet. 1:4.

Moreover, in following in the footsteps of our Lord Jesus, running the race for the great prize set before us in the Gospel, we are not to murmur by the way, finding fault with its difficulties and ‘narrowness; nor are we to dispute respecting it, nor seek to have any other way than that which Divine providence marks’ out for us, realising that the Lord ‘knows exactly what experiences are necessary to our development in the school of ‘Christ; and realising also that, if obedience were possible, while our mouths are full of complaints and dissatisfaction with the Lord-and our lot which He has permitted, it would indicate that we are at ‘least out of sympathy with the spirit of His arrangement; and such an obedience, if it were possible (but it would not be possible), would not meet the Divine approval, nor gain us the “prize.” Hence, as the Apostle exhorts, we should “Do all things without murmuring and disputings, that ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God without rebuke, . . . holding forth the Word of life in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world.”— Verses 14-16.

Speak only when you have anything to say which it is desirable to communicate. You do not know what a great gift of God it is not to be obliged to speak, and to know when to hold your tongue.—St. Gregory.

The cross is no longer a cross when there is no self to suffer under .it.—Henelon.

Twopence Halfpenny Acceptable to God

“Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in Thy sight, O Lord, my strength and My Redeemer.”—Psa. 19:14.

How beautiful in the sight of right-thinking men is a well-balanced, self-possessed and disciplined character ! And in contrast with such, how unlovely are the undisciplined and ungoverned—the selfish, the unjust, the unkind, and the violent-tempered ! Naturally, the one awakens in us emotions of pleasure and admiration, and the other, of pain. And if such is the appreciation of virtue and the abhorrence of the lack of it among men who have lost much of the original image of God, with what a keen appreciation must they be observed by a pure and holy God !

Men of the world who have no personal acquaintance with God have no special thought as to how they appear in His sight, but with what carefulness should those who love Him and who value His approval study to conform their conduct to His pure and holy mind ! True, all who are “begotten again,” notwithstanding their imperfections and shortcomings through inherited weaknesses, are acceptable to God through Christ, whose robe of righteousness amply covers them; hut the measure of their acceptableness to God, even through Christ, is only to the extent that, while availing themselves of His imputed righteousness, they are earnestly striving to attain actually to the standard of perfection. By so doing they manifest their real appreciation of the Divine favour.

With what confusion and chagrin would one be covered who, in the midst of a fit of violent temper or an unjust or mean transaction, unworthy of his dignity or his profession, should be suddenly surprised by the appearance of a beloved friend of high and noble character ! And yet, the eye of such a One is ever upon us. And only to the extent that we dismiss this thought from our minds, or else that we undervalue the Lord’s opinion and approval, can we allow the evil propensities of the fallen nature to run- riot,

“WHEREWITHAL SHALL A YOUNG MAN CLEANSE HIS WAY?”

Realising the downward tendency of the old nature, how constantly should the above prayer of the Psalmist be in the minds of God’s consecrated children ! Hut how, one inquires, may the difficult task of subduing the inherent depravity be accomplished? It is hard .for one, particularly under exasperating circumstances, to control a hasty or violent temper, for another to bridle a gossiping tongue; and especially if the trials of life to Some extent put their coloured glasses on the eyes. And then what a host of inherent weaknesses there are, which every one of God’s true children realises and knows that he must strive against, if he would be acceptable with God ! .The thoughts of our hearts are not manifest to fellow-men until -we express them in words or actions; but even the very thoughts and intents ‘of the heart-are all open and manifest to God. What a comfort to the honest-hearted !

The Psalmist repeats this inquiry, saying, “Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way?” and then replies, “By taking heed thereto, according to Thy Word.” Then he frames for us this resolution: “I will meditate on Thy precepts and have respect unto Thy ways; I will delight myself in Thy statutes; I will not forget Thy Word.” (Psa. 119:9, 15, 16.) Here is the secret of a pure and noble life, acceptable to God. It is to be attained, not merely by prayers and righteous resolutions, hut, in addition to these, by careful, painstaking heed, by systematic and diligent effort at self-cultivation, by care and perseverance in weeding out evil thought, and by diligent and constant cultivation of pure, benevolent and noble thoughts, and by nipping in the bud the weeds of perversity before they bring forth their hasty harvest of sinful Words and deeds.

But observe, further, that this heed or care, is to be taken,, but according to the imperfect standard of our own; judgment, but according, to God's Word. The standard by which we test our lives makes, a, vast difference in our conclusions., .

The, psalmist further commends this standard to us, saying:,"The Law of, the Lord is perfect, converting the soul., (That is,if we take heed to our ways according to God's Law, it will turn us completely from the path. of sin to the path of righteousness.) The testimony (the instruction) of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple (the meek, teachable ones—clearly pointing 'out to them the ways of righteousness). The statutes (the decrees, ordinances and precepts) of the Lord are right (the infallible rules of righteousness), rejoicing the heart (of the obedient). The commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes. The fear of the Lord is clean (not a mental, servile fear, but a noble fear, 'begotten of love—a fear of falling short of His righteous approval), enduring forever. More to be desired are they (the Law and the 'testimony of the Lord)' than gold; yea, than much fine gold; sweeter also than honey and the honeycomb."

"KEEP BACK THY SERVANT FROM PRESUMPTUOUS SINS."

"Moreover, by them is thy servant warned (concerning the dangers of the way and the snares of the Adversary, and concerning everything which is calculated to discourage, or to hinder his growth in grace), and in keeping of them there is great' reward. Who (in the use merely of his own fallible judgment and without the standard of God's Law) can understand his errors (can rightly judge himself) ?"

But when, as we measure ourselves by this standard, we detect and deplore our shortcomings, let us remember the Psalmist's prayer: "Cleanse Thou me from secret faults"—thus supplementing our efforts by our prayers. —Psa. 19:7-12.

But there is still another part of this prayer which the Lord thus puts into our mouths. It reads: "Keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins; let them not have dominion over me; then shall I be upright, and I shall be innocent from the great transgression." Let us consider what kind of sins would be presumptuous sins. To presume signifies to take for granted without authority or proof. A presumptuous sin would, therefore, be taking for granted and asserting as truth something which God has not revealed, or the perversion of what He has revealed. To claim and hold tenaciously as a part of God's Plan any doctrine, merely on the ground of fallible human reason and without Divine authority, would therefore be a presumptuous sin.

Of this nature is the sin of those who malign the Divine character by boldly teaching the 'blasphemous doctrine of eternal torment without warrant from the Scriptures, and in direct contradiction of them. And there are many other sins of greater and less degree which partake of the same character. But the words here seem to refer directly to some particular error into which there is danger of drifting—"When shall I be innocent from the great transgression"—evidently, the sin unto death referred to by the Apostles also. (1 John 5:16; Heb. 6:4-6; 10:26-31.) Such a sin: would be that of presuming upon the love of God to bring us salvation, even though we should, wilfully refuse it through the channel, which He appointed —the precious of Christ, shed for our redemption.

'BLESSED IS THE MAN WHOSE DELIGHT: IS IN THE LAW OF THE LORD

Well, indeed, may we pray and strive to be kept back from presumptuous sins—sins of pride or of arrogant selfwill, which does not meekly submit to the will of God! Let us, beloved, beware of the slightest tendency toward pride and self-will, or the disposition to be wise above what is written, or to take for granted what God does not clearly promise. Then, indeed, if we watch and strive against the very beginning of that proud and haughty spirit which surely presages a fall, we shall be "innocent from the great transgression."

"Blessed is the man whose delight is in the Law of the Lord, and who doth meditate therein day and night. He shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season; his leaf also shall not wither, and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper." (Psa. 1:1-3.) If we make the Word of God the theme of our constant meditation, its principles will soon be assimilated and become part of our mental makeup, making our characters more beautiful and commendable both to God and to our fellowmen; and in harmony with this habit of the mind the acts of life will speak.

The purified fountain will send forth sweeter waters than formerly, bearing refreshment and good cheer to all who come in contact with it. It will make happier homes—better husbands, better wives and better children. It will sweeten the temper, soften the voice, dignify the language, cultivate the manners, ennoble the sentiments and lend its charming grace to every simple duty. It will bring in the principle of love and cast out the discordant elements of selfishness. Thus it will make the home the very garden-spot of earth, where every virtue and every grace will have ample room to expand and grow.

It will not only thus favourably affect the individual and the home-life, but it will go out into the avenues of trade, and truth and fair-dealing will characterise all the business relations; and thus will God be honoured by those who bear His name and wear the impress of His blessed Spirit.

While the heights of perfection cannot be reached so long as we still have these imperfect bodies, there should be in every child of God very perceptible and continuous growth. in grace, and each step gained should be considered hut the stepping-stone-to higher attainments. If there is no perceptible growth into the likeness of God, or if there is a backward tendency, or, a listless standstill, there is cause for alarm.

Let us constantly keep before our eyes the model which the Lord Jesus set for our example—that model of the complete fulfilment of the will of God, in which the whole Law was kept blamelessly. Let us follow His steps of righteousness and self-sacrifice as nearly as a full measure of loving zeal and faithfulness and loyalty to God will enable us to do, and we shall have a blessed sense of the Divine approval now, and the glorious reward of Divine favour in due time.

Found Wanting

IF such a stage of unemployment is recurrent and inevitable, then I say that the whole social order under which we live not only will go but ought to go.” (Rabbi Stephen S. Wise.)

How evident it is that man is unable to devise means even of preserving the present inequitable social order.

“Men’s hearts are failing them for fear of what is coming on the earth.” They acknowledge that conditions are beyond recovery to even such a state as preceded the great war .and that was far from being what could be desired. ‘They acknowledge that under the present order of things there is no hope of ever being able to find work for’ the unemployed, and there is no one with a theory that can work out a new social order that will bring world-wide satisfaction, peace, joy and goodwill toward all.

The following from the Melbourne “Sun” of July 17 describes the same conditions:-

“Only 55 per cent. of the people who had been required to produce the quantity of commodities turned out in American works in 1929 would be employed if production were to reach that volume again, said Mr. Fenton, M.H.R., yesterday afternoon at Northcote.

“This was because of the increase of efficiency in machinery in the past three or four years. It meant that of the 13,000,000 unemployed in the United State:: at least 4,500;000 could never be re-employed because they had been displaced by machinery. The same position ruled in Australia.

“It was no’ use relying on conferences of nations, said Mr. Fenton. The people would have to do as King Hezekiah had .done—pray humbly to God, Who would lead them out of the shadows and grant them the light of intelligence in His own good time.”

Surely, as Mr. Fenton says, the only hope for mankind is to look to God, and yet how few professed Christians of today have studied their Bibles sufficiently and sought the Lord’s guidance to know of .the wondrous provision He has made for the redemption of themselves and all mankind through the sacrifice of His dear Son.

Only the Bible offers the solution of present distress, and that is a new social order, or as the Bible states it, “a new heavens and a new earth.” The present social order will break down and there Will be-the great time of trouble such as never Was- since” there was nation—Dan. 12:1. ‘ The’ earth ‘ (social order. Will ‘be’ destroyed in ‘a fiery. time ‘of trouble ‘(‘2 ‘Pet.” 3’); there will then be a new earth and new heavens. The’ heavens or spiritual controlling ‘powers ‘Will -also’. pass away—that is, Satan will be bound.’ He’ has been ‘;the prince of the power of the air=the prince of ‘this_ world —and when restrained along With his hosts,’ all ‘false religions will pass away. Then the new heavens— Christ and the Church glorified—(unseen by men) will control earth’s affairs. The new earth will’ have its capital at Jerusalem. Israel is being restored to the ancient home in preparation and then “the Law shall go forth out of Zion (Christ and the Church) and the Word of the Lord (the enforcing of it)’, will go forth from Jerusalem.”Zeph. 3:8, 9; Mic. 4:1-4.

WHERE THE BIBLE AND JESUS ARE SILENT.

“Perhaps you wonder sometimes why the Bible and the sayings of Jesus are so often silent on so man? questions which perplex you,” writes Adolf von Harnack in “A Scholar’s Testament.” “Why is it, you wonder, that so many things you would have liked to see stated in black and white are simply not mentioned at all? Perhaps you discover that for the special doubt of your soul there is no direct word, and you can find no completely satisfying answer to the special needs of your life. But would it have been possible to’ have given detailed and minute instructions and advice so far ahead that it would have covered all the variety of individual need, and all stages of human development? And even if this had been possible, would it have been salutary? Would it have been good for us to live by a huge book of spiritual recipes, or by a great code of ethics, which would supply chapter and verse for every emergency? How many of us could stand that, and where would be our spiritual freedom?”

“Think of what you possess as a child of God; think of what you see in your hours of vision, even if you cannot always express it articulately, think of that which gives you shelter in the assaults and storms of life, and light in the’ doubts of your soul! It is not this or that particular word or saying, it is not any special command, but it is the deliberate turning of your spirit towards God: the sense of truth, the spirit of reverence for all that is holy, and an ever renewed apiration—even though it may often be hindered—of desire after a life whose power is not of this world. This is the Spirit of God, which you have received, and it will lead you far more clearly into the truth, that is, into the reality of a higher life, than a single word or command could ever do, because as the brook issues from the mountain spring; so the Spirit issues from God. From this Spirit, in increasing measure, you yourself will be able to decide what is true for you, and what you ought to do in your necessities and ‘difficulties and doubts. And it is precisely this feeling of freedom which will give you strength.’—”Christian World.”

Christian Obligations

(Rom. 13:7, 8, 10-14.)

WE might consider it a remarkable thing that every feature of Christian life, duty and character is set forth somewhere in the Apostolic writings, did we not remember- that the Apostles, as the stars or bright ones of the Church, were specially held in the hand of the Lord; specially guided in their utterances, enabling them to set forth the whole counsel of God, that the man of God may be thoroughly furnished unto every good word and work.

There is a vast difference between the governmental conditions of the present time and those which prevailed at about the time of the writing of this epistle to the Roman Christians. Monarchs now are no longer absolute, and it is difficult for us to conceive of the condition of things in those early days when an emperor had authority not only to set apart culprits as victims for death in public, but to instruct his servants to select further victims from amongst- the audience. It is when we get before our minds this view of atrocious governments which prevailed in the Apostle’s day, that we get the full grip of his injunction—”Let every soul be subject to the higher powers, for the powers that be are ordained of God.”

It is comparatively easy to be subject to the higher powers in civilised lands to-day, for although justice may not be meted out in every instance, there is at least an endeavour to render a show of justice. We should be very thankful that our lot has been favourably cast in this respect. In declaring that “the powers that be are ordained of God,” we are not to understand the Apostle to mean that they are endorsed by God; nor that their decisions, rules, etc., are approved by Him, or are in harmony with His rules and laws. The Apostle’s intimation means simply that in Divine providence things are as they are, and God, who knows all the circumstances and conditions, permits them to be so, though He could overthrow them and substitute His own kingdom of righteousness. Nevertheless this is not His plan just yet; for the time being He permits the kingdoms of this world (whose rulers are largely blinded by the deceptions of the prince of this world) to run their course subject to certain limitations. God hinders Satan and his misguided dupes from doing unprofitable injury to the interests of His people, and the Divine Plan as a whole. . God’s power overrules the wrath of man and makes it to praise Him, and that which will not accomplish any good He restrains.

We are to render to all men as well as rulers their dues. This does not mean to become entangled with the affairs of this life. A big mistake is no doubt being made by professed Christians along this line. Some think that Christian citizenship implies engaging in political affairs, endeavouring to determine who shall be rulers, and striving to better the laws and have them obeyed. It will be noticed that the Apostle gives no such advice. He tells us, in Phil. 3:20 (R.V.): “Your citizenship is in heaven.” We are strangers and pilgrims in the kingdoms of this world. It is our business to render obedience to the laws, customs, usages of this world in so far as they do not infringe upon our conscientious obligations to the Lord and the truth; but this does not mean that ‘a Christian should engage in political strifes and contentions among men. Let the world elect its own rulers in whatever way it thinks best; we should put up with whatever it provides with gratitude to God, realising that He will guide and care for us under all circumstances and that in a way to conserve our highest interests.

“The Apostle says, “Render fear to whom fear is due.” Fear or reverence is differentiated from honour and respect. The fear that is to be rendered is in the sense of obedience, as we read elsewhere, “Fear the judge.” The commands of the judge or court are to be obeyed, whatever others may- be disposed to do. Christians are never to be found in contempt of court, but are to obey its rules to the very letter whether they consider them, just or unjust, because the judge is the representative of the law and God permits the law and the judge to have control for the present. If, therefore, as our Lord explained, someone shall sue us at the law and take away our coat, or if it include our cloak also, we are not to resist; we need to be obedient to the powers that be. This would not mean that we -shall willingly Submit to our articles being taken from us illegally or unjustly without process of law.

Having thus seen the Christian’s obligations to the government of a country, we next pass to the consideration of his obligations to his neighbour. The Apostle says, “Owe no man anything.” This would not actually mean that a Christian should not under any circumstances borrow, but that if he borrows with a specific understanding respecting the time of re-turn, he shall be prompt to meet the obligation. If one is not very sure of -his ability to meet the obligation or do something that would be satisfactory between the two, it would be advisable and more to the mark not to borrow. There-is, then, the standing advice of the Word of God that the children of the -great King should-be lenders and not borrowers. “Do good and^ lend.” As one has said—”We believe it would be to the advantage of every child of God, if he would put into practice the Apostle’s words on, this matter in the most absolute sense, and never borrow anything; never owe anything, paying for what he needs at the time of purchase or waiting for it until able.

The Lord knows what is for the best and will provide what is necessary if we since-rely co-operate with Him and work to that end. We realise this in both temporal and spiritual things. It brings to mind the old saying, "Where there is a will there is a way."

There is one thing in particular the Apostle implies we are continually owing to our fellow creatures, not only to the brethren; the members of, our own families and our own neighbourhood, but to all men, and that is love. We, owe them this under the Divine law, and it is part of a Christian's duty to discharge this. obligation daily. Each should strive to see to it that his influence in his neighbourhood, amongst his friends and acquaintances, shall be for good and • not for evil, for peace and not for strife. The Apostle calls attention to the comprehensive statement of the Law set forth by our Lord, that love is the fulfilling of the law. Therefore love for those with whom we come in contact signifies that the law of God is fulfilled toward our neighbour hour. It will be remembered that the law of love is divided into two parts; first, love to God; second, love to our fellows, and so the loving of our neighbour would therefore be only a part of the fulfilling of the entire love to God.

Having considered these two points—duty to rulers, and duty to neighbours—the Apostle next takes up the Christian's duty toward himself, as he declares, "Knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep."

The Christian is to realise that he and the whole world in general has been asleep, in a sort of stupor in respect of the highest, the best and the noblest things. Now, having gotten the eyes of his understanding opened, and being awake to righteousness, he begins to weigh and measure matters quite differently from his previous course. He begins to estimate rightly the things of this present life as not worthy to be compared with the glorious things which belong to the eternal life. As he realises this, he should feel disposed to arise still more and shake himself thoroughly from the dust of superstition, blindness and sordidness, and to live in harmony with the glorious hopes he now entertains— living for the new dispensation, which he sees is approaching, realising that day by day since he first believed his salvation is drawing nearer. Instructed by the Word of God, he will not expect his salvation except in connection with the second presence of our Lord Jesus and the establishment of His Kingdom, as the Apostle Peter declares: "The grace that is to be brought" unto you at the revelation of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

The thought of the second coming of the Lord was continually before the Apostles, and our Lord evidently designed that it should be constantly an incentive to all the members of His Church throughout the age. This no doubt was the reason why He did not particularly explain the length of time that would intervene. It would be a short time from ,God's standpoint, and even iron, the human viewpoint it would be a short time to each individual who would have only the few remaining years of life wherein to make ready for the glorious things of the future, "for in death there is no remembrance of Thee: in the grave who can give Thee thanks." Psa. 6:5. Looking back and perceiving that over 4000 years had, already passed with sin and gross darkness Upon the world, the Apostle realised that "the night" was surely far spent - and "the day" not far distant. What is the force of the Apostle's. argument to those who see as he did the approaching kingdom of light that shall banish all the darkness of sin, ignorance and superstition? It is expressed. in his words: "Let us therefore cast off the works of darkness and let us put on the armour of light." As expressed in one of the "Manna" comments: "The works of darkness would be any works whatsoever that would not stand the fullest investigation; that would not stand approval; in the light of the new dispensation if it were already ushered in. Let us remember that we belong to the new 'dispensation and not to the old, and should, therefore, live in accordance with our citizenship and our responsibility toward the Prince of Light and in opposition to the prince of darkness, his works and his ways."

We have been admonished to put on the armour of light, and the necessity for such is because the particular period of time in which the change from the dominion of the prince of this world to the kingdom of the Son of God will be a specially evil day, a period in which all the children of light will be crucially tested; such a day as will try every man's work and faith, what they are; a day of fiery trial through which only the gold, silver and precious stones will pass unscathed, and in which all the hay, wood and stubble of error and sin, human traditions and falsehood will be entirely destroyed. No wonder, then, that the Apostle repeatedly urges the Lord's people to put on the armour of light for the trials of this particular time which we perceive is gradually drawing on. We are already in the time when the wood, hay and stubble is being consumed, when Higher Criticism, Evolution, Christian Science, etc., are devouring as a flame all that are not fully devoted to the Lord and are therefore not specially kept by His power through His Word and providence.

Let us walk honestly as in the day. We are not yet fully in the day, but we belong to the new era, and are therefore to live as nearly as possible up to the perfect standard of the future. To live so will signify self-denial; we will be misunderstood by the world and thought foolish. Further, we will be considered enemies, not only by those who are in gross darkness, but particularly by those who profess to; be the Lord's people but who really prefer darkness and error rather than light and truth.
