We would be inclined to lay special stress on this word “honestly” and to believe that the Apostle used it advisedly and in a particular sense. As we look all about us we find dishonesty is very prevalent, not merely in the world where we expect a certain amount of duplicity and misrepresentation and deception by people passing for what they are not, but we find this kind of dishonesty very prevalent amongst professing Christians. One writer says that some preachers have been known to boast of their dishonesty, declaring that they never did believe the creeds which they had professed to believe and vowed they would teach to others. Intelligently supposed teachers are to-day preaching in denominations what they do not believe, standing: for creeds and theories which misrepresent their true sentiments. This is acting dishonestly, and many are thus searing their conscience, and putting themselves into a condition where they cannot make progress in the light of the truth. God will certainly not have dishonest people in His elect Church, and so unless such become honest they will have their portion with the hypocrites.. Every true Christian must surely walk honestly; as We have it expressed again: “Everyone should ‘see to it that, he is honest, not only in financial matters, ‘but -honest in his’ treatment of his neighbour, it his treatment of the brethren in the Church, and, above all, honest in his confessions respecting his God and his faith.” One of our tests is along this line, and those who love the favour of men more than the favour of God, and who dishonestly are willing to confess and profess a lie, will be given up to their lie, will be permitted to blight their eternal interests, and thus prove themselves unfit for the kingdom. This is the very essence of the Apostle’s declaration in his letter to the Thessalonians, when speaking of this evil day and the great trial that would come upon the Church. He declares, “God will send them strong delusions that they might believe a lie,” because they were not honest, obeyed not the truth in the love of it. (2 Thess. 2:11, 12.)

Again in this chapter the Apostle admonishes the saints that they should not engage in worldly revelries and timekilling pleasures, harmless though they may be, as such a desire would indicate intoxication with the spirit of the world. The Lord’s people who have had their understanding opened and are awake should be absorbed in the things pertaining to godliness, and treat all else as secondary affairs. We must not set our hearts on wrong things, but those which will help us to make straight paths for our feet and assist one another to be more pleasing to the Lord. The saints must seek more and -more to put on the Lord Jesus Christ, taking to themselves His characteristics of meekness, patience, gentleness, forbearance and love, and- recognising His willingness to be servant of all in His complete devotion to the Father at all times.

The Apostle advises the saints (Rom. 12:17) “to provide things honest in the sight of all men,” but he says, “make no provision for the flesh to fulfil the lusts thereof.” The flesh will be continually pressing itself forward and the Lord’s people are to ignore it to the necessary extent and not to excuse it. We are to do this so thoroughly that we will provide for the doing of the Lord’s will in all things, whether that will is pleasant or unpleasant, agreeable or disagreeable to the flesh. Therefore the greater measure of the spirit we possess, the greater will be- our ability to discern how we may be most pleasing unto God. Let us therefore examine ourselves and take heed to do all things to the honour and glory, of His cause and His name.

What is the Cross.

What is the Cross? I questioned.

‘Tis bearing every day
The trials which the Father
Permits along the way;

‘Tis sharing the reproaches
Your Master meekly bore
While those who claim to love Him
Revile you more and more.,

Correspondence,

New South Wales, 14th July, 1933.- Dear Brother,—

My subscription is due, so I will enclose postal note for same with a little added for Tract Fund. I have pleasure in assisting a little in this way to 'bring the truth to those who desire it.

God has given increased light suitable for our day, and those who walk in it are out of step with the world. Sometimes it is said: "Poor fellow, too narrow, he does not know what he is missing," but the Bible says: "They shall be mine saith the Lord in that day when I make up My jewels." It is nice to know that there are some whose light is- a reproof in that they will not link up with the world. I rejoice that it is possible for each to endure to the end. Yours in the faith of •Christ, T.C.

Dear Brother,— 16th July, 1933. Your ever welcome letter of the 10th to hand, and contents noted and appreciated. Always pleased to receive word and encouragement from those of like precious faith who are striving to make their calling and election sure.

It is sustaining to our faith and encouraging to our confidence to find others who are evincing an interest in spiritual things in these times of materialism, when almost all people are neglecting the things that pertain to their everlasting welfare. We are reminded by these happenings of Bunyan's man with the muck rake seeking the straws and not observing the crown above him.

How thankful we are to our God for opening our eyes that we may behold wondrous things out of His Law. I was very much impressed the other morning when reading the last few verses of Psa. 119, where the Psalmist in closing his wonderful thanksgiving and petition says: "Give me understanding according to Thy Word," "Let my lips utter praise," "Let my tongue sing of Thy Word," and then finishes with the acknowledgment that, "I have gone astray like a lost sheep; seek thy servant; for I have not forgotten Thy commandments." How the above very often fits our experiences; we do not make the sanctified use of all the understanding our heavenly Father has given us and neglect to "let our lips utter praise," forgetting that "who so offereth praise glorifieth God." With the understanding •God has given us through His servants of His Divine Plan we should be ever praising such boundless love, and as this Psalm puts it:

"Let our tongue ever sing of Thy Word."

I am glad that you sent the books along to —, and pray that God's rich blessing of understanding and strength may be hers to her own enlightenment. If you have another set of volumes the same, please send them to the address enclosed. Now with all Christian love to all those who love our Lord Jesus,

Yours in Him, M.J.

P.S.—Herewith please find payment for 6 vols. "Scripture Studies."

New- South Wales,

10th July, 1933. Dear Brother,

Thank you for your kind letter of explanation of the 22nd June; also the book "Desolations of the Sanctuary," for, the loan of which I am very pleased. I can see the error I could have fallen into had I continued reading those books.. Next time they call I will explain as far as I have the ability to do so with the Lord's, help the error they have fallen into.

I would like a book of "Desolations of the Sanctuary" for myself, if you have one to spare, and please tell me the price. I have not finished reading it yet. Hope you had a good time with the friends in Tasmania.

With kind regards,

Your Sister in Christ, E.A.B.

“In Heaven, their angels do always behold the face of My Father.”—Matt. 18:10.

PERHAPS, it was the fact that Peter, James and John had been favoured more than the others on several occasions that led to the query connected with our text: “Who, then, is the greatest in the Kingdom of Heaven?” They knew, of course, as St. Paul declares, that the Heavenly Father is above all, and that next to Him is our Lord Jesus Christ. “To us there is one God, the Father, of whom are all things; and one Lord, Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by Him.” What the disciples wished to know was, which of them would be greatest, most influential, in

Messiah’s Kingdom, next to Himself. •

Jesus, calling to Him a little child, set him in the midst of them and said, “Verily I say unto you, except ye turn (from, this spirit of self-seeking which your question implies) and become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter into the Kingdom of Heaven”—you will have no part in it, you will not be fit. Whoever would be greatest in the Kingdom of Heaven should therefore become as humble as this little child.

A little child, unsophisticated, is- ready to acknowledge its lack of wisdom. It asks questions, a thousand a day, perhaps as many as that in an hour; it seeks instruction; it does not profess and boast wisdom: or knowledge—it is candid, it is truthful. It is in later years that it learns from its parents and others, untruthfulness, pride, bombast and various qualities which it did not possess at first. It may have possessed the disposition to pride and arrogance and haughtiness, etc., by heredity, but at first it was guileless, and “as a little child.”

The Master’s lesson is that whoever would become a child of -God and be taught of God, and be eventually developed as a child of ‘God, for the glorious position in the Kingdom to which we were called, must become childlike—must turn away from all pride, from selfish ambitions and hypocrisies and pretensions. They must confess- their littleness and ignorance, and go humbly to the Lord for the necessary instruction.

Any who refuse to adopt this proper, childlike spirit will thus be refused the opportunities of the Kingdom, for God will have none others—none others can be taught of God, they will not learn the lessons necessary, under the arrangements of this present time. Here then is the standard of simplicity and artlessness which the Lord’s people should adopt and should continue to allow to control them, regardless of their years and experiences. “Now we know in part”; we are dependent upon our Father and His instructions. We have entered the School of Christ, our Elder Brother; He is our Instructor; we must learn of Him, and to learn we must be in this proper, childlike attitude of mind.

“ONE SUCH LITTLE CHILD.”

We are not to understand that little children, however guileless, are members of Christ’s Kingdom class, nor that the dear little ones dying in infancy will be members thereof. “The hard. is seeking for mature men and women, who have a childlikeness, of mind, readiness to receive the Heavenly Father’s Message,”

If some one were thus drowned in the sea, it would indeed terminate his; present life, but it would not at all endanger or influence his future life. A future life, by a Restitution awakening, is assured to Adam and every member of his race. Neither drowning nor any other form of death could possibly interfere with it. But he who would injure one of the Lord’s little ones would thereby come under such a measure of Divine displeasure that it would affect his future interests beyond the grave, beyond his awakening. He would be held responsible for his deeds, even in the next life, in proportion as he realised what he was doing when he injured the Lord’s saints.

The Lord declares that His faithful ones are as precious to Him as the apple of His eye, and that all their interests are subject to Divine supervision. He will allow nothing to happen to these; troubles permitted to come upon them will be only such as the Lord has foreseen and is able to make work out some blessing in connection with their preparation for the Kingdom.. But even this fact will not excuse wilfulness on the part of those who do evil to the members of the Body of Jesus.

We remember the persecution of the saints by Saul of Tarsus. We remember Jesus said to him, “Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me?” He answered, “Who art Thou, Lord?” And Jesus replied, “I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest.” In persecuting the saints Saul of Tarsus had been persecuting Jesus, but because he did it ignorantly, God had mercy upon him. Doubtless many saints from Jesus’ day down have been persecuted ignorantly, and the Lord will have mercy upon those persecutors; but some of the persecutors have had such light, such knowledge, as to make them responsible; and it is of this class that our lesson speaks. Our Lord added a warning: “Woe unto the world because of offences! It must needs -be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom- the offence cometh.”

CUT OFF HAND OR FOOT.

Here- the Master brought in a saying which has perplexed many. "If thy foot cause thee to stumble, eat it off, and cast it from thee; it is better to enter life maimed, or halt, than having two hands or two feet to be cast into everlasting fire. If thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee; it is better to enter into life with one eye, than that having two eyes thou be cast into Gehenna fire."

Those who fail to remember that Jesus spake to the people in parables, and never without a parable,. will be liable to stumble over these words of His. His teaching is this: If you have anything in your make-up dear to you as a right hand or a foot or an eye, that is likely to cause you to stumble and fail to enter the Kingdom, you would better cut off that tendency, no matter what it costs, no matter how precious, no matter how great a hold it may have upon the very tendrils of your life. Would it not. be better to enter into life- than to go into- Gehenna fire, that -is, destruction, the Second Death? Surely this is true. Having put our hands to the plough, having even become followers of Jesus, we must either go on and be accepted as conquerors, or must perish.

There will, of course, be none in the Kingdom with but one eye, but the illustration is the same. If it should cost us the cutting off of some of our members, it would surely pay us to gain the eternal life in glory, even thus maimed, rather than to take the consequences of the Second Death, utter extinction. The lesson is that having begun as followers of Christ, and entered upon the contract and received, a part of the reward, the Holy Spirit, the Divine favour, we cannot back out of the contract; we must. go on to everlasting life or to everlasting death.

How careful the Lord's people should tie not to stumble one another, even one of the least of the little ones who has accepted of Jesus and become His follower ! --is the lesson. To illustrate it,. Jesus suggested that any shepherd losing one of his sheep would leave all the others to go and seek that one; and he rejoices specially at its recovery. So- we, the followers of Jesus, should be careful not to stumble each other, but rather to remember that we are all sheep- under the great Shepherd, our Heavenly Father, and the great Under Shepherd, our Heavenly Lord, and that 'He has the spirit of loving interest and care which would go after the straying sheep, and that we should have this same spirit; and possessing this spirit, we would be very careful indeed not to stumble or hinder even the least of the Lord's followers.

All the Lord's true followers are God's "little ones," and are subject to special Divine supervision, represented in our text as angel care. The messengers who have guarded over the lives of God's saintly few always have access to the Heavenly Father's presence, to make known the necessities of those whom they represent, for Divine Power is ever on the alert for the protection of these. Oh, how blessed the privilege of being children of God. Oh, how wise to continue so little, so humble, so childlike, as to abide in His love, -and to be enabled to learn the necessary lessons, and be ultimately received with Messiah in His Kingdom, honour and glory!

PALESTINE IN CONVALESCENCE.

The following is cut from an address by Mr. Hugh Martin, telling of his visit to the Holy Land to celebrate with others the achievement of Methodist Unity in Great Britain must not be tempted to write of -Galilee, or the Dead Sea, or Capernaum, or many other fascinating spots. But one other impression must be recorded. .

Palestine is not only a land with a past. It has a future. It strikes one as being like a convalescent after a long illness. The traces of the ravages of the past are still visible, but even more noticeable are the signs of returning health. We have no right to pass a final -verdict on Zionism; perhaps no man can yet do that: But I was much impressed by the vitality of the numerous Jewish settlements,. and the vigour of their attack on the land in modern farming and afforestation and the like."

DIVIDENDS OF DEPRESSION.

"The depression," says "The Baptist" (Chicago) "has declared some dividends for which we cannot be too grateful. The uses of adversity arc not all sour. Some things the depression has produced, and some it has revealed, that will permanently contribute to the wealth of . the world's experience. It has caused multitudes to pause for thought. They had been so busy and so well satisfied that they had little time or occasion for thinking things. over."

"Many arc achieving a simpler, more wholesome way of life. To the surprise of the experts, who supposed that unemployment and reduced incomes must have resulted in a marked increase in the mortality rates, it is revealed that public health has improved during the depression and that, in particular, deaths from tuberculosis have decreased eight per cent. There have been moral gains, also. Now they have come to themselves. again they are discovering that some of the things they wanted so much a few years ago. are not really necessary to their happiness."

Aside with Jesus! Is it hard to be,

Aside with Jesus! basking in His smile;

CHRISTIAN PRIVILEGES

(Convention Address.)

THE Standard Dictionary defines a “privilege” as “a particular benefit enjoyed by a. person, company, or society.” All classes of people have privileges of one, kind or another; but, in order to enjoy our privileges, we need to clearly understand them—to know very definitely of what they consist. What are our privileges as Christians?

In His dealings with typical Israel the Lord has given us certain lessons and pictures which help us to appreciate Our privileges in Christ. We know how the people of Israel, encamped around the Tabernacle, represented the world of mankind needing atonement to be made for their sins. Then the tribe of the Levites, specially set apart to do a Service in connection with the Tabernacle, would represent those who are members of the household of faith—all believers in Jesus and His ransom. The Levites had certain privileges which none of the other tribes enjoyed. They were to encamp in the immediate vicinity of the Tabernacle on either side, and they had the privilege of access to the Court—hence they represent a class justified by faith in the blood of Christ. Aaron and his sons were consecrated to the service of the priesthood, and they had certain privileges which none others of the Israelites enjoyed. Only the priestly class had access to the ‘Holy and Most Holy of the Tabernacle.

The arrangements of the Tabernacle and its services were intended to typify God’s dealings with the Church of this Gospel Age; and the Apostle tells us that the things which were written aforetime were written for our learning. The lessons to be learned from a careful study of the Tabernacle Shadows will be of much assistance to us in our endeavour to appreciate and enjoy our privileges in Christ.

Those who are familiar with the meaning of the typical Tabernacle are aware that the Shekinah light of the Most Holy apartment represented the presence of Jehovah. This is seen by reference to Psalm 80:1”0 Thou who dwellest -between the cherubim, .shine forth.” God is represented as dwelling there, but the question that confronts the searcher after God and holiness is: How can we, who by nature are sinners, and alienated from God by wicked works, be brought near to God and receive His favour and blessing? One thing, is certain—man in his fallen state would never be able, to find the way back to God’s favour unaided; for “when. He hideth His face, who can behold Him whether it he done against a nation or against a man only.” (Job 34:29.) As a result of the disobedience of father Adam, the whole human family has been plunged into. sin, and the sentence of God’s justice has gone into effect, “Dying, thou shalt die.”

Is that all there is to it, then? Will sin and death be forever permitted to exercise their baneful influence upon the human race? No! thank God that while His justice must condemn the guilty sinner, yet His love and wisdom has made provision for man’s recovery from the curse of sin and sentence of death. In harmony with this we read in Job 33:24: “Deliver him from going down to the pit; I have found a ransom.” How glad we are that God in His great love has given His well-beloved and only begotten Son to be our Saviour. The Apostle Paul tells us that “Jesus Christ by the grace of God has tasted death for every man.” (Heb. 2:9.) The sacrificial death of Christ is the means whereby we who were sinners by nature and enemies of God through wicked works are brought near to God—reconciled to Him as the Scriptures speak of the matter—Rom. 3:21- 26; 5:8-11; 2 Cor. 5:18.

Those who have heard and understood the message of God’s love in Christ will scarcely need to be reminded that they have been richly blessed. They have been highly favoured of God. The Master’s gracious invitation, “Come unto Me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I- will give you rest,” means so much to the heart that is hungering and thirsting after righteousness. Those who come to Christ with humble spirit and contrite hearts, acknowledging past sins and pleading for the sense of His favour, may be assured that He will not send them away empty. “Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out.”

It does us good sometimes to look back to the time when the light of truth began to shine into our hearts. Many of us were associated with one or other of the sectarian systems, but how little we knew of the true God. The theory of the eternal torture of all but a small handful of the human race—which had been instilled into us—could only have the effect of inspiring us with a dread of God. How could we be happy to be one of the saved ones while we believed that multitudes of others would be forever in an agony of torment? But how different was our outlook when we began to study God’s Word in the light of present truth. We began to see that God had arranged for the salvation and restoration of mankind along the lines of a systematic and orderly Plan. What a blessing was ours when the Divine Plan of the Ages began to unfold to us. We were filled with love and gratitude to God when we came to understand that the ancient promise to father Abraham would have so grand a fulfilment, and all the families of the earth would be blessed. This blessing of the whole world, we understood, was to take place in the future—during the 1000-year reign of Christ.

The knowledge of these truths and the realisation of God’s favour to us caused us to desire to know more of God’s ways. Gradually we were drawn from the world and its ways, and we began to approach the Court condition. What a blessing—what a privilege it was to understand the doctrine of the ransom—to see how God could be just and yet be the justifier of those who believe in Jesus. Our acceptance of Christ as our Saviour is represented in the type by our entering the gate into the Court. The first thing we see is the Brazen Altar, which reminds us of the ransom-sacrifice of Jesus Christ—the only ground of our acceptance with God. We have turned from sin—we have renounced the world and its evil ways, and “being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.” In taking this step we pledge ourselves to the service of righteousnesses. We enjoy a measure of God’s favour in the Court condition of Justification, and yet the Scriptures clearly show that there is a further step for us to take if we would enjoy all the privileges of a Christian. In Romans, 12th chapter verse 1, the Apostle shows us that after being justified the appropriate thing for us is to “present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable, unto God, . . . your reasonable service.” What does the Apostle mean in this verse? He means that we should consecrate to God’s service every power and talent we possess. Remembering that we are not our own, but have been bought with a price, even the precious blood of Christ, it is surely as the Apostle says, “our reasonable service” to present our little all to God. Those who get the right viewpoint of this matter esteem it a privilege to be invited to offer themselves to God in this “acceptable time”—this antitypical Atonement Day—the Gospel Age. The verses of the hymn express the thought of our hearts as we come in the attitude of consecration

“I’m not my own, dear Lord—to Thee
My every power, by right, belongs;
My privilege to serve I see,
Thy praise to raise in tuneful songs.

And so, beside Thy sacrifice,
I would lay down my little all.
‘Tis lean and poor, I must confess;
I would that it were not so small.

When we accept the heavenly invitation to follow in the steps of Jesus through the narrow way that leads to life, our Lord; our High Priest, accepts our offering and the merit of His righteousness is imputed to us to make us acceptable to God. The Heavenly Father acknowledges His acceptance of our offering by imparting to us of His Holy Spirit (see Eph. 1:12-14; 2 Cor. 1:21-22). As our entrance through the gate into the Court condition brings us into the enjoyment of a measure of God’s favour, so this further step of full consecration brings us into a place where we can begin to understand spiritual things. In the type the Levites in the Court represented the justified believers, while the consecrated spirit-begotten ones are represented by Aaron’s sons—the underpriests. The Levites were forbidden to enter the Holy or Most Holy. They must not even look therein; this represents how the natural man is unable to see or understand the things of the spirit. (1 Cor. 2:9, 10, 14.) Only the priestly class had access to the Holy and Most Holy of the Tabernacle. This shows how the privileges represented by the Holy are reserved for those who make a covenant with the Lord by sacrifice.. (Psa. 50:5.) The light of the Golden Candlestick can only be appreciated by the priestly class—by those who have taken up their cross to follow in the steps of Jesus Christ. Many valuable lessons can be learned from a careful study of the Tabernacle Shadows. In the 25th chapter of Exodus we have the instructions given by the Lord to Moses for the construction of the Candlestick. It was made entirely of pure gold, beaten or hammered to such an extent that the metal becomes pliable in the hands of the fashioner. Although it was really one Candlestick, yet it was composed of seven branches, each of which held a lamp, making seven lamps in all—a perfect number.

This represented the entire Church, from the Head, our Lord Jesus, right down to the last member of the Body which He is selecting from amongst mankind to be, partakers of the Divine nature. The seven churches of Revelation would represent the seven stages of the one true Church, just as the seven branches convey the thought of perfection. In Leviticus, 24th chapter, we find that Aaron was instructed to keep the lamps supplied with oil, and to keep them burning continually. This was necessary because the Candlestick was the only light in the Holy. While the Candlestick represented the true Church, the oil very fittingly represented the Holy Spirit which dwells in each and every member of the Body of Christ, and beautifies their lives with kind thought and loving service one for the other. The flowers and fruit of the almond, which ornamented the branches of the Candlestick, shows that the true Church is beautiful as well as fruitful from first to last. Our Lord said: "Herein is my Father glorified that ye bear much fruit," and so we want to be on guard against anything that would tend to hinder our growth and fruitfulness. We must take time to be holy. We have before us the example and instructions of our Lord and we will need to consider these very carefully in order to let the light of His life shine out through your lives. "Let your light shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." The Apostle James urges that we "be doers of the Word, not hearers only." The treasure of the New Mind still dwells in a frail earthen vessel, and how we need to watch and pray and keep our hearts with all diligence, and make straight paths for our feet.

Another piece of furniture in the Holy to which only the priestly class had access was the Golden Table which bore the shew-bread. This bread, which was proper for only the priests to eat (Lev. 24:5-9), represented the spiritual food which God provides for His people in His Word. Just as a human body needs nourishment to sustain the physical strength, so the New Creature needs nourishment of a spiritual kind. The Apostle Peter tells us that God by His Divine power has given unto us "all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of Him that hath called us to glory and virtue." (2 Peter 1:3.) We must feed upon God's Word if we would grow in spiritual grace and strength of character. We must take time to study the Word and meditate upon its instructions. Peter tells us to "grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" (2 Peter 3:18), and this will only be possible to those who make God's Word their daily meditation and study. While, then, in the type the shew-bread represents the pure message of truth; the Golden Table very fittingly represents the true Church as a whole, including our Lord Jesus and the Apostles—all the sanctified in Christ Jesus. In Phil. 2:16 the Apostle speaks of the true Church "holding forth the word of life." The most important work of the true Church during this Age has been to feed, strengthen and enlighten all who enter the condition of full consecration. The Bride of Christ is to make herself ready (Rev. 19:7) and it is our privilege to assist one another. The Apostle Paul tells us in Eph. 4:16 that "the Body is fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth." It is our privilege to help to make our meetings profitable. We can do this by carefully looking up the lessons before we come to Bible Class, and by encouraging and exhorting one another. "As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God." (1 Pet. 4:10.)

Another privilege which the consecrated priestly class enjoy is represented in the Altar of Incense. When Aaron the high-priest had killed the bullock of the sin-offering on the Day of Atonement, he was instructed to take his censer full of burning coals from off the Brazen Altar. The censer was to be placed on the top of the Incense Altar in the Holy, and Aaron must get his hands full of sweet incense and bring it in and crumble it upon the red hot coals. The result was that a cloud from the burning incense arose and filled the Holy and gradually penetrated beyond the second Veil into the Most Holy. Aaron must be very careful to carry out the Lord's instructions in this matter. If he had failed to offer the incense before going into the Most Holy he would have perished as he went under the veil. But having offered the incense in the proper manner, he must then bring the blood of the bullock and sprinkle it upon and before the mercy-seat seven times. The Lord's goat was then slain and its blood brought in and sprinkled on the mercy-seat in the same manner as the blood of the bullock. What did this signify? What was represented in the cloud of incense which preceded the high priest into the Most Holy? It is full of deep significance to us when we keep in mind that the Most Holy apartment of the Tabernacle represents heaven itself—the place where God dwells. As Aaron, the high priest, represented our Lord Jesus Christ, the High Priest of our profession, so the two hands full of incense would represent the perfection of our Lord Jesus. Just as the incense coming in contact with the fire of the Altar yielded up a fragrant perfume, so the manner in which our Lord carried out His consecration vow was as a sweet-smelling savour unto God. In Eph. 5:2 we find this thought—"Walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given Himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice unto God for a sweet-smelling savour." In the type there was no mention of a special burning of incense immediately preceding the sprinkling of the blood of the goat. That is to say, although there were two sacrifices on the Atonement Day—a bullock (representing our Lord Jesus the Head) and a goat (representing the Church, His body)—the incense was offered but once, preceding the presentation of the blood of the bullock.

This shows that the incense was clearly intended to picture the perfection of our Lord's obedience to God. Our Lord, being holy and pure and perfect, could offer up Himself without spot to God; we, His Body-members, are accepted of God, not because of any goodness or merit of our own, but because of the righteousness of Christ our Head; "we are made acceptable in the Beloved."—Eph. 1:6. We find the same thought in Rev. 8:3-4. The Angel with the Golden Censer had much incense given him that he should offer it "for the prayers of all the saints on that Golden Altar" (see Diaglott rendering). We see, then, that it is the righteousness, the purity, the perfection of our Lord Jesus Christ that is represented by the incense. All the priestly class, however, i.e., all the consecrated Church, have access to the Golden Altar; each member of the Body of Christ—the Royal Priesthood—is privileged to offer up sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ. (1 Pet. 2:5.)

The life of a faithful Christian is a life of sacrifice. Our Lord said: “If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, take up his cross daily and follow Me.” It is our obedience to our Lord’s invitation that brings us into the privilege of fellowship with Christ. We have fellowship in His sufferings at the present time, and if we are faithful unto death we shall also share the joys and blessings of His Kingdom, .

It is the privilege of the follower of Christ to rejoice even in the present time in connection with the sacrificing of earthly rights and privileges. (See Col. 1:24.) Any sacrifice of time or strength given in the Lord’s service will surely bring us a blessing and will increase our joy in the Lord. In 1 Cor. 10:31 the Apostle says: “Whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God”; and in Heb. 13:15, “By Him therefore, let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips giving thanks to His name.” Truly the Lord’s people are a privileged people. It is a great privilege to have a clear understanding of God’s Plan of salvation; the opportunity of serving the truth and the brethren is also a privilege; then we have the privilege of prayer and of fellowship with the Lord and the brethren. What a great privilege it is to know and understand something of God’s great love, and of being adopted as children into His family, as Paul speaks of it so beautifully in the first chapter of his letter to the Ephesians. It becomes then a matter of importance -as to- how We may maintain the enjoyment of our privileges in Christ. Our Lord said on one occasion: “If ye .continue in My word, then are ye My disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall wake you free.” The Master also said that, “when the Comforter, the Holy Spirit, came it would teach us and lead us into all truth, and show us things to come.” The Apostle Paul said, “As many as are led of the spirit of God, they are the sons of God.”

In order to have a proper enjoyment of our Christian privileges, we will need to be attentive to the Word of God. It would seem that some have gone astray because they did not walk with sufficient carefulness. The Apostle urges that we “walk circumspectly.” We must not allow ourselves to become overcharged with worldly things (see Luke 21:34-36). We must watch and pray, and guard against the entrance of pride and headiness. We must not allow ourselves to get into the luke-warm condition. Then we must also defend the principles of the truth. The Apostle urges Timothy to ‘continue in the things he had learned and had been assured of.’-2 Tim. 3:14. How frequently the Apostle would warn Timothy along these lines, as 1 Tim. 4:16; 6:20, 21; 2 Tim. 1:13, 14; also 2- Tim. 4:1-8. How clear it is that we must guard the truth if we would maintain our liberty in Christ. “Buy the truth and sell it not.” “Hold fast that which thou hast that no man take thy crown.” “Prove all things, hold fast that which is good.” The truth alone can sanctify. We need to know what we believe and why we believe it; then we should be bold and uncompromising in declaring it; for if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle?

To bear another’s weakness,
To soothe another’s pain;
To cheer the heart repentant,
And to forgive again
This is my work to-day.

ST. PAUL AND THE RESURRECTION.

Question Answered by Rev. John Bevan, M.A.

“Old Presbyterian,” Dublin, writes;—”. . . Just a year ago I lost my dear wife, whose comradeship for over sixty years has been God’s greatest gift to me., When I pressed my lips to her cold forehead as she breathed her last, my heart said, ‘She is not here; she is risen—absent from the body here, present with the Lord,’ and I have loved to cherish that thought learned from Paul in 2 Cor. 5. But in reading the second part of 1 Thess. 4 I am puzzled. Here he speaks as if there were no meeting with the Lord by those who have died until some remote uncertain date when He is to come again in visible form to the world. Isn’t there some inconsistency between those two passages? . . . To me it is incredible that resurrection should mean the gathering together of the scattered elements of the former physical frame, and that we do not meet our Lord till that remote miracle takes place. Am I wrong in believing that my dear wife and her daughter who preceded her are even now in the Father’s house? . . .”

If I were you I should ignore the Thessalonians -passage, which shows Paul’s first notion of the end. Five years after (1. Cor.) he had considerably altered his idea, and five years later than that we find that further thought on the matter had radically changed. Paul’s view. Hold on to what he said in 2 Corinthians. That is what I do,- and if I were you I certainly would go on believing that your beloved wife and daughter are now “with the Lord.” There is no gap, no hopelessly drearily drawn-out waiting until the general resurrection. How can there be, for there is no Last Day resurrection. Pay no heed to those who would have you believe that your beloved must await the Last Day ere they reach the Divine presence. A friend of mine, who is a Church of England rector of a church that stands on the site of a Saxon church, said to me one day as we were passing through the churchyard, “It is wonderful to think that at the Resurrection morning there will be people rising from these graves who will speak Anglo-Saxon and not English.”

It only shows what absurd beliefs people do hold. Trust your own spiritual conviction, based as it is on a long and mature religious experience and on sixty years’ blessed companionship with a lovely Christian soul. Don’t be puzzled. Be at peace. God bless you.

“Christian World.” -

What a sad condition prevails to-day among those professing to be preachers of the Gospel. The answers to questions given in the “Christian World,” London, so often display such unbelief in God’s Word, such ignorance of Bible truths. The influence of “Higher Criticism” or the “Liberal” School has produced agnostics in the pulpits. Those who have come to understand the Divine Plan of the Ages, and to see the harmony and beauty of the Bible, must feel happy to be free from the darkness and ignorance of such teachings as, for example, the above reply of Dr. Bevan’s respecting the resurrection. There is no discord in Paul’s writings in 1 Thess. 4; 1 Cor. 15; and 2 Cor. 5. The difficulty lies with those who cling to the errors which were incorporated into Church teachings from Paganism during the Dark Ages.

If the doctrine of the inherent immortality of the human soul was true, then there would be no room for the Scriptural doctrine of the resurrection. If Christians all down the age had at death been translated to heaven, then Paul’s statement about the dead in Christ rising first at the second presence of our Lord would surely be a mistake, for there would be no “dead” in Christ to rise. But at the close of his life, when ready to be offered (2 Tim. 4:6),

Paul stated that his hope was to receive the crown of life which the Lord would give him, and not to him only, but to all those who love His appearing “at that day”—the second presence of Christ. So, then, Paul had not changed his thoughts as Dr. Bevan states; he had the same thought at the close of his life as he had expressed in his early epistle, 1 Thess. 4:16.

The 2 Cor. 5 is quite generally misunderstood. It does not intimate that any were immediately translated into the Lord’s presence at the moment of death. We know that though this earthly house, this human body die, we shall in due time receive a heavenly body. That is our hope as Christians. Still we go along in this poor earthen vessel, with its conditions of weakness, pain, weariness and sorrow, learning our lessons of faith and obedience and striving to develop characters and dispositions like Christ our Saviour. Yet in our minds we are so often very present with the Lord, in prayer and hymns and fellowship with those of like precious faith. On the other hand, various responsibilities require our attention in home and in business, and thus we are necessarily absent from this fellowship and the more immediate presence of the Lord. However, whether absent or present, our heart’s desire is to be true to the Lord and so to act and speak, or so to walk, that “whether present or absent we may be accepted of Him, for we walk by faith and not by sight.”

It is indeed a sorry thing to see one professing to be a minister of the New Testament casting such doubt on the words of the Apostle, at whose hand the great portion of the New Testament has been given to us. Surely it would be the Divine intention that the Church throughout the Gospel Age should be informed concerning the words, deeds and teachings of our Saviour. This information we have in the Gospels and the Epistles, and the Lord made no mistake in selecting Paul as the principal minister to convey to the Church the things necessary for the completion of all its members (Ephes. 4:11-16). The Lord's own words respecting . Paul are beautiful; (Acts 9:15): "He is a chosen vessel- unto Me to hear My name before the Gentiles and kings and the children of Israel."

QUESTION BOX.

Question.—Please explain Mark 7:11. I have never quite understood it.

Answer.—It will be noted that in the preceding verses of the chapter and to verse 15 particularly, the complaining spirit of the Scribes and Pharisees is in evidence. They were superstitious over the traditions of their ancestors, and regarded outward purity, such as the washing of hands., etc., of much more importance than purity of heart (verses 6-9). • Then our Lord goes on to show that, '-while they were zealous- over little things of small value, they rejected their own laws of Moses: "Honour thy father and thy mother."

The thought behind the word "cortban" is a gift, a present made to God or to His temple, and it seems that the Pharisees would neglect their responsibilities to parents under the pretence of devoting their means to God. What a false position this was, and our Lord reproached them for this treatment of their parents in making a corban of what should have been appropriated to their use. They thought to make themselves free in a hypocritical way by outward service to the temple, etc. It is stated that the Pharisees further permitted debtors to defraud their creditors by consecrating their debt to God,, as if the property was their own and not rather the right of their creditors. How significant are the words of our Lord in Matt. 5:23, 24, respecting offerings to God; also of the Apostle Paul, 1 Tim. 5:8.

Question.—What is the Apostle's 'thought in 1 Thess. 5:23?

Answer.-To quote from the writings of one:—The terms body, soul .and spirit are. figuratively used of the Church collectively. The Apostle says, "I pray God (that) your whole spirit, soul and body be preserved blameless unto the - coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." This prayer must be understood to apply to the, Church as a whole—the elect Church whose names are written in heaven. The true spirit has been preserved in the little flock. Its 'body is discernible to-day also, notwithstanding the multitude of tares that would hide as well as choke it. And its soul, its activity, its sentient being is in evidence everywhere, lifting up the standard for the people, of the cross, the ransom.

In no other way could we apply the Apostle's words; for, however much people may differ respecting the preservation of the individual spirits and souls of the people addressed, all will agree that their bodies have not been preserved, but have returned to dust like those of others. Besides, the words body, soul and spirit are in the singular, not in the plural.

Question:.—What is signified by the words of the Apostle that our Lord was ordained to offer both gifts and sacrifices for sin?

Answer.—From the Scriptures it is evident that during the Millennial Age the world of mankind will be privileged to offer themselves to God as gifts, but not as sacrifices. Hence, during the Millennial Age, part of the work of the great High Priest will be to accept these gifts and to make them acceptable to God through His own merit and. rights, as the Melchizedek Priest. We can, however, apply this text very properly to the present time. The Apostle puts the word gifts first. - We may, therefore, look. to see whether there is not some way in which the High Priest. offers gifts now. Surely our Lord's consecration of His own life was a gift on His part. The Father accepted that gift and ultimately permitted our Lord's gift to constitute a Sin-Offering for others. Likewise, throughout this Gospel Age, the "brethren" are invited to present their bodies living sacrifices—to give themselves to God.—Rom. 12:1, 2.

When we thus make a present of ourselves to God, we are not making a Sin-Offering to God; for this we could not do. But the Divine arrangement for accepting our gift is that each gift will be acceptable through the merit of Christ t and that then, later on, these gifts will, according to the same Divine arrangement, constitute the great Sin-Offering which the High Priest gives for the world. Thus the High Priest is ordained to make the ultimate offering of that gift as the Sin-Offering for the world.

Amongst those who served in the office of typical high priest, says the Apostle, the uniform custom was that they should offer both gifts and sacrifices to God. Hence, he proceeds to point out that Jesus, as the Anti-type of those priests, must have something to offer. He must also offer both gifts and sacrifices, in order to fulfil His priesthood.

He presented Himself without spot unto God; and, by virtue of that presentation, He is a Sin-Offering unto God; and, through His merit, He makes the same true of His Church, who voluntarily give themselves to God.

IN THEE I TRUST.

Only for thee, Lord, would I live, while here below;
It is my great delight, thy love to show;
Use me, then, first as thou seest best
Not mine to choose, but mine to trust and rest.

Only to thee would I resign my will, 'tis all I have to give, and Lord, it seems so small A thing to offer unto thee,
Who didst lay down thy life for me.
Only to thee, my Lord, I'd come when trials press,

Assured that thou alone canst comfort best;
My deepest griefs, I need not to thee tell,
Thou understandest all, dear Lord, so well!
'Tis only thou canst send the peace which soothes my pain,

That bids my weeping cease, and sunshine follow rain,
My every fear remove and doubt dispel,—
I rest on thee, and know that all is well.

GOD'S HUSBANDRY

1 Cor. 3:9.

WHAT a noble example was Paul, both as runner in the race and as worker. No one has been more used and no one more willing to suffer. Surely he had much forgiven and was a noble example of loving much. The beauty of Paul's character is seen in the above chapter. The sectarian spirit was in the Church in those days, and neither Paul nor Apollos nor Cephas, as faithful servants, would encourage it. The fault lay with the Church at Corinth; again we see the same condition pictured in Colossians, and it seems always to have been the chief difficulty in the Church.

So often the elders get puffed up, and instead of reproving receive homage. It would be a good thing in any church to often read this chapter, as in a general way it is good to have all admonitions before us.

Reproof by 'Paul was always given gently, humbly and lovingly. None could claim the members of Christ but Christ Himself, and none could make a member in Christ but God. One may plant, another water, but God giveth the increase. How foolish for any to seek to be anything in a church and draw away disciples after himself, and yet this is the very thing that has made trouble all down the age and even got to work in our Lord's day. "Who shall be greatest?" How He gave them the lesson. "One is your Master, even Christ," and He girded Himself and served them. The Lord knows each of us and our hearts even better than we know ourselves, but it is certainly good for us to examine ourselves often and see that any little service we do is done from love and a desire to serve. Better by far, if there is any difficulty, to seek a humbler position in the Church; and, after all, any service rendered is acceptable only because of the accompanying sweet incense of our great High Priest. How much depends on each and all and especially on the elders, that we keep in the happy condition pictured in Psalm 133.

We are God's husbandry and He is bearing patiently with us as He sees the work go on. Yes, we are God's husbandry, and all in Christ can witness, as the Apostle James expresses, to the long-suffering of the great Husbandman. He careth for His garden, never fails us, never slumbers or sleeps. How much we have for which to be thankful and how we should appreciate the long-suffering of the Husbandman. Nothing can come but will work out for our good. He is too wise to withhold the pruning knife; all need prunings, chastenings, etc. All have similar experiences and trials, and all these have the same effect and bear the same fruit, and so these similar experiences bind us together. Talents and temperaments differ so much, and so the Apostle likens the 'Church to a body of many members, and sometimes it just seems as if the hand does not love the foot, etc. But there is something wrong; each should be able to see in the other the good, the something that God sees.. He never would have called any if He had not seen some good there, and so we should not know each other after the flesh. We should be more concerned with ourselves and what we are doing than seeing the faults in others. Some are more crusted with The outer covering, but the good is there, so let us each humbly recognise that good.

The Husbandman is not looking for great works, but the fruitage of Divine love. The words of our Lord to the workers who trusted in their works were: "I know you not." God's will for us is our own sanctification. He plants the seed and looks for the fruitage, more joy, peace, long-suffering toward all and especially toward the professed followers of Christ. Some may say God is doing the work, He will produce the fruit; but, no. He tills the soil, assists us to remove the weeds, prunes the limbs, and then we must do our part and produce fruit. Are we willing to learn from sources God uses.; circumstances and conditions all have a use. God does His part; are we looking for the lessons He would teach? Are we more gentle toward all, and kind even to those who may seem to be turning from the straight way? There is no reason why we should not produce fruit. Let us drink of the .brook by the way and lift up our heads.

It is not for us to judge one another; we may make mistakes however sure we may be. We may injure one of Christ's little ones by some expression. Let us remember that he who injures one of His members injures Christ. Responsibility is on all, but especially on the elders; let the weight rest on the Lord, He makes no mistakes. The Shepherd of Israel neither slumbers nor sleeps. The tie that binds us in Christ will lead to great tenderness. In differences of opinion let us be liberal-minded. What would we think of an earthly family always quarreling and wishing to separate because of difference of opinion; what, then, would we think of a church thus minded? We must be ready for calm, quiet reasoning on all Scripture, etc., and then each has a right to his own opinion. The responsibility then is not Sours, but let us do all we can to water and nourish and assist any to right conclusions.

"YE ARE GOD'S HUSBANDRY."

It is often well to remind ourselves how we came into the Lord's Garden. It was not by any worthiness we possessed, not by works that we had done, but simply because we realised our need. We felt somehow that we were not right, not at peace with God, and we had that desire to get right. We realise it was then all of grace that God drew us and we followed on. He showed us the way by faith in the sacrifice of our Lord and we gladly came and our longings were satisfied. The debt was paid, and more, His merit He, applied so that we might approach God, not in our own righteousness but as covered with a robe of righteousness, so that our poverty was met by His riches of grace.

“Thou, O Christ, art all I want,
All I need in Thee. I find,
Thou didst strengthen me when faint,
Now my eyes no more are blind.

Thou of life the fountain art,
Rich supplies I find in Thee,
Springing up within my heart,
Rising to eternity.”

The way is so beautifully shown in the Tabernacle in the Wilderness. In this picture the camp of Israel would illustrate the world in unbelief. Any who would come nigh to God must enter the Tabernacle by coming first into the Court. The only entrance is by the Gate by which stood the Altar of Sacrifice, well typifying Christ, who said: “I am the way,” or “I am the door.” So we came into the Court and found a sheltering wall of white curtain, representing the wall of faith. ‘Thus we were justified and at peace with God. But “here (says the Apostle) we have no abiding city”; no, we heard a further call to present ourselves as a living sacrifice in entire consecration to do God’s will (Rom. 5:1, 2; Rom. 12:1, 2), and taking this step we realised the peace of God in our hearts and received the Holy Spirit as illustrated in the first apartment of the Tabernacle. We had the light of the golden candlestick and the nourishment of the unleavened bread, which only priests were allowed to eat; we further received the privilege of offering our prayers to God, acceptable through the incense, kept burning by the coals from the altar—on the golden Incense Altar. This is how we came into such close fellowship with God. In other words, we came into His garden, we became branches in His Vine and so received His kind care and seek to bear fruit to His glory.

Then, again, it is good to think of the object of the Great Husbandman in dealing with so few of earth’s millions instead of ploughing up the whole field and making at once the whole world as “the garden of the Lord.”

When we realise the purpose, we rejoice, the more in the wonderful “high-calling,” for we see that those now drawn of God are being prepared to act under the direction of Christ to lift up mankind and fill the whole earth with the glory of God—“Paradise restored.” we notice that everything was vested in Christ, who purchased the world from condemnation to death by His own precious blood. He laid down the price of sin and first applied it for the Church, that its members might follow His steps—“follow the Lamb whithersoever He may go,” and as He went to death, so says the Apostle (Rom. 8:36), “We are killed all the day (Gospel Age) long, we are led as sheep to the slaughter.” So Christ’s death was applied for our justification so that we could lay it down and be acceptable as a sacrifice, so that the merit could then—the Church being complete—be applied for the whole world.

The Master Himself gives the thought along the lines of husbandry too, in John 12:24-26. He had the life of the human race in Himself. He was planted so as to produce the Church—to be joint-sacrificers and then joint-heirs with Him. (Rom. 8:17, etc.) He, the “corn of wheat,” fell into the ground and died for the life of the Church, and then He invites those receiving life from Him to do as He did. Then there will be a second crop (Psalm 72:16). If we should seek to save our life, being unwilling to be dead with Christ, we should lose it; but if we yield our lives in willing sacrifice, sharing in His death, we shall also share His resurrection, and be members in that “Abrahamic seed” which is to bless all the families of the earth (Gal. 3:16, 27, 29) and make the “whole earth as the garden of Eden.” Then Christ will hand over the Kingdom to God and all mankind will then be “God’s husbandry,” everything working perfectly, no more pests and weeds, but the fruits of love and of goodwill shall abound everywhere—“There shall be no more curse.” How beautiful it would be if all the world were just as full of good fruitage as the happy classes of God’s true people. Our prayer is that this happy, helpful condition may continue and that all may increase and abound in love and happy service one toward another, until the Church’s deliverance is complete.

The Victorious Spirit.

“Personally,” says Helen Keller, blind, deaf and dumb, “I find it a great help to believe that my misfortunes were sent for a purpose, even if the purpose were only to discipline an impatient, wilful nature. To conceive of them as punishments or accidents is intolerable.”

“It is true I am shut out from the world of the eye and ear. Yet how rich I am in what I know through the sense of touch alone! The seasons come round to me like old friends. The breath of new flowers in spring brings joy and sweetness. As I walk along, the winds caress my cheek and I feel the play of sun and cool shadow upon my brow. Through the sense of touch, too, I feel the force of sea waves, and I can say with Byron, “Roll on, thou deep and dark blue ocean, roll.” —“Christian World.”

The above is surely a wonderful example. Miss Helen Keller being blind, deaf and dumb, has achieved so much, and attained so high a degree of education notwithstanding her terrible handicaps. She is a notable example of accepting misfortune in a noble spirit and making the best out of such circumstances and conditions as may seem to be one's lot. Instead of bemoaning and being discouraged, she has wonderfully overcome the drawbacks. While shut off from the many beautiful things upon which our eyes may rest and to which our ears may listen, and even from speech, yet she can see with her mind the beauties of nature and maintain great joy in the blessings she has. If such an one finds no reason to murmur nor complain, we may well ask, who has?

The best way to bear crosses is to consecrate them all in silence to God.—Fletcher Face to Face with Trouble.

“You are face to face with trouble,
And the skies are murk and gray;
You hardly know which way to turn,
You are almost dazed, you say.

And at night you wake to wonder
What the next day’s news will bring;
Your pillow is brushed by phantom care
With a grim and ghastly wing.

“You are face to face with trouble;
A child has gone astray;
A ship is wrecked on the bitter sea;
There’s a note you cannot pay;

Your brave right hand is feeble;
Your sight is growing blind;
Perhaps a friend is cold and stern,
Who was ever warm and kind.

“You are face to face with trouble;
No wonder you cannot sleep;
But stay, and think of the promise,
The Lord will safely keep,

And lead you out of the thicket,
And into the pasture land;
You have only to walk straight onward,
Holding the dear Lord’s hand.

“You are face to face with trouble;
And did you forget to look,
As the good old father taught you,
For help to the dear old Book ?

You have heard the Tempter whisper,
And you’ve had no heart to pray,
And God has dropped from your scheme of life,
For--oh, many a weary day!

“Then face to face with trouble;
It is thus He calls you back
From the land of dearth and famine
To the land that has no lack.

You would not hear in the sunshine;
You hear in the midnight gloom.
Behold, His tapers kindle
Like stars in the quiet room.

“Oh, face to face with trouble,
Friend, I have often stood,
To learn that pain has sweetness,
To know that God is good.

Arise and meet the daylight;
Be strong and do your best!
With an honest heart, and a childlike faith
That God will do the rest.”

Keep The Door of My Lips

“But the tongue can no man tame (of himself): it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison. Therewith bless we God, even the Father, and therewith curse we men, which are made after the similitude of God. Out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be.”—James 3:8-10.

THESE words of the inspired Apostle are addressed to the “brethren”—not to the world. Indeed, the entire Epistle is addressed to the church: the fact that in opening it James addresses “the twelve tribes, which are scattered abroad,” is not to the contrary of this. We are to remember that to the twelve tribes of Israel, the natural seed of Abraham, pertained originally the great promise of God made to Abraham. By natural heredity, then, God’s offer or proposition to bless the world belonged to fleshly Israel, as the divine instruments, if they would comply with the divine conditions. But one of the divine conditions was that they should have the faith of Abraham and should not be considered the promised seed of Abraham without that faith, since Abraham was to be the father of the faithful. Our Lord and the Apostles, in the New Testament, set forth clearly how and why natural Israel, as a nation, was broken off from inheritance under that covenant: the Apostle representing the promise as an olive root, describes all Israelites as branches, growing up out of that root, and tells us that many of the natural branches were broken off; the vast majority, and that only a remnant at the first advent were found possessed of the faith of Abraham, and accepted by our Lord as members of the new house of sons (John 1:12).

The Apostle further explains that the rejection of the unbelieving of natural Israel left the way open to engraft in: the place of the broken-off branches some from amongst the Gentiles, possessed of the faith of Abraham. And this, we see, has been the work of this Gospel Age—grafting into the original root of promise believers from amongst the Gentiles, who were once without God and having no hope in the world, strangers from the Commonwealth of Israel, but are now brought nigh, united with Christ, and through Him united with the Abrahamic root of promise, and inheritors of all its richness and fatness (Eph. 2:12, 13; Rom. II).

Thus we see that “these spiritual Israelites become, the Israelites indeed, from the divine standpoint, the actual inheritors of the Abrahamic promise; although we see also yet to be fulfilled certain gracious earthly promises to the natural seed of Abraham, they nevertheless have missed, have lost, as a nation, as a people, the great prize; as the Apostle declares, “Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for, but the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded.”—Rom. 11:7.

So, then, the “twelve tribes” of Israel had promises made to them which apply, not merely to themselves, but also and specially to spiritual Israel, whom, they typified; while the original election or predestination of God, respecting the Abrahamic seed, that it should be 144,000, or 12,000 from each tribe, still stands; and consequently that each one accepted from amongst the Gentiles, and engrafted into this root of Abrahamic promise, is counted as taking the place of one of these broken-off branches of the various tribes. By the time the Gospel age shall have finished its work, a spiritual Israel will have been found—“a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people”—showing forth the praises of Him who called them out of darkness into His marvellous light—neither one more nor one less than the original, elect, predetermined number—each one from, the Gentiles having been “grafted in,” to take the place of each “natural Israelite “broken-off.” The Church is thus referred to in Rev. 7:3-8; and the sealing is spoken of as being SO many from each of the tribes, with the intimation, that all of these will have been “sealed in their foreheads” before the great time of trouble shall come upon the world.

So, then, the Epistle of James is to be understood as addressed to these true Israelites, engrafted into the root of promise, and taking the place of the natural Israelites. And to this, agree the words of the Apostle Paul, "They are not all Israel which are of Israel." (Rom. 9:6, 7). And again, "He is not a Jew which is a Jew outwardly, neither is that circumcision which is outward in the flesh; but he is a Jew which is one inwardly, and circumcision is 'that of the heart,'" (Rom. 2:28, 29).

Having thus definitely determined that the holy spirit through the Apostle is addressing the Church, let us consider the astounding statement of our text, and seek to ascertain in what sense it should be understood; resolving that, should we find that in any sense or degree it applies to us individually, we will assuredly quickly respond to the spirit's teaching, and correct so evil a condition.

BLESSING GOD WITH THE TONGUE.

We may readily see how the Apostle means that God's people bless or praise His name with their tongues. They do so in prayer; they do so in their hymns of praise; they do so in declaring His truth, and in witnessing to His providences on their behalf. In a word, we bless God with our tongues by showing forth His praises, who called us out of darkness into His marvellous light.

CHRISTIANS. WHO CURSE MEN WITH THEIR TONGUES.

But in what sense does the Apostle mean that spiritual Israelites curse men with their tongues?—and that so commonly, so generally prevalent as to require public reproof? Surely no 'Christian curses his fellowman by oaths and profane swearing. But, are there no other ways in which our tongues may 'be a curse and an injury to fellow-men? We are to remember that the meaning of our English word "curse" has somewhat altered in common usage within the last century, having very generally lost the sense of injury and assumed wholly the sense of swearing, profanity.

In the Greek language, different words are used when referring to a cursing oath (viz.. anathema and anathematiso, used ten times in the New Testament), and when referring to a spoken condemnation as a blight or curse (viz., hatara and kataraoimai, which signify condemnation—to speak against, to speak evil of, to injure). The latter is the word used 'by the Apostle James; hence his language really is—With the same tongue wherewith we praise and honor God, we do injury to fellow-men, by evil-speaking, slandering, etc. Thus our Lord, using the same word, said, "Bless them that curse (speak evil of) you." The Apostle Paul, using the same word, admonishes God's people to "Bless and curse not"—speak favourably of others, but do not speak injuriously of them. Again, we are told 'that our Lord cursed (the same Greek word) the fig tree, saying, "Let no fruit grow on thee henceforth"—He injured it, He made a declaration unfavourable to its future development. Thus also the Apostle declares that the Jews under the Law were under a curse—not that the Law was evil, but that, because of imperfections of the flesh, the Israelites came under the condemnation (curse) of the Law. He declares also that "Christ hath redeemed us (formerly Jews) from the curse (condemnation) of the Law, being made a curse for us having suffered for us the full condemnation or blight which the Law imposed upon the transgressor. Gal 3:10-13). He illustrated the same thought in connection with the word "curse," when he declares that garden land, which has been overgrown with thorns and briars, is "nigh unto cursing"—not ready for profanity, but for condemnation, as unfit for tillage, until burned over and its weeds exterminated.—Matt. 5:44; Rom. 12-14; Mark 11:21; Heb. 6:8.

Having thus before our minds the real word, and its signification as used by the Apostle, we see that while curse is a proper enough translation of the original, the whole difficulty is that present-day common usage and common education have largely hidden from sight this signification of the word. (Similarly the word evil has lost its original breadth of meaning and is almost invariably considered to signify immorality, badness, wickedness; whereas in its breadth of meaning, it may be used to refer to anything that is undesirable, not good, such as calamities, etc.).

Looking at the Apostle's statement from this standpoint, we see clearly that his charge is applicable, to Christian people of to-day to an alarming extent. How many there are who do injury with their tongues to their fellow-creatures, who use the same tongue in offering praise to God. We know of no evil to which God's consecrated people are more exposed than to this One. With many, it is as natural to gossip as to breathe; they do it unconsciously.

Many are the peculiar subterfuges which the fallen nature will use in its attempt to stifle the voice of conscience and yet maintain the use of this channel of evil—long after it has been driven from evil practices which are less common, less popular, more generally recognised as sinful.

(1) It will say, "I mean no harm to anybody; but I must have something to talk about, and nothing would be so interesting to friends and neighbors as something which has more or less of a gossipy flavor (scandal) connected with it.” But is evil-speaking, slander, any the more proper on this account for the children of the light? By no means. Hence it is that the Scriptures instruct us, “Let your conversation be such as becometh saints ;” “Let your speech be with grace, seasoned with salt, that ye may know how ye ought to answer every man ;” “Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good, to the use of edifying, —that it may minister grace unto the hearers.”—Phil. 1:27; Col. 4:6; Eph. 4:29.

As for the point that there would be little else to talk about if scandals were thoroughly eliminated from Christian conversation, and were all to abide strictly by the Apostle’s injunction, “Speak evil of no man,” we answer: Is there not a wide scope for conversation amongst Christian people, on the subject of the riches of God’s grace in Christ Jesus, our Lord, expressed in the exceeding great and precious promises of the divine Word? In these things, we have indeed that which not only ministers grace to the hearer, but which adds also to the grace of the speaker. It showers blessing on every hand, so far as the “new creature” is concerned, and assists in deadening the old nature with its evil desires, tastes, appetites.

This is what the Apostle had in mind, evidently, when he said that the Lord’s people should “show forth the praises of Him who called us out of darkness into His marvellous light.” And a heart filled with the spirit of love, the spirit of God, the spirit of the truth and overflowing with the same at the mouth will be sure to overflow that which is within, for, “Out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh.” An evil mouth, therefore, a mouth which does injury to others, either to fellow-members of the “Body of Christ” or to those that are without, indicates an evil heart—implies that the heart is not pure. “Blessed are the pure- in heart, for they shall see God.”—4 Vet. 2:9; Matt. 12:34; 5:8.

(2) Another excuse for gossip about other men’s matters is offered by others, who say: I can talk about religious matters to those who are religiously inclined, but when I am with worldly people or with professors of religion who take no interest in religious themes, I must be agreeable and accommodating, and must at least.. hear their gossip and news; and if I do not share in such conversation, I would be considered very peculiar, and my company would not be desired. Yes, but this is to be one of the peculiarities of the “saints”; they are not only to be different from the world, but different also from the nominal professors of religion. Their religion is not merely to be on the surface, and on one day of the week, but is to be of the heart, related to all the affairs of life, for every day and every moment. To follow strictly the divine injunction will indeed separate you from some who are now your friends and who love such evil things—bidden us who have become sons of God and who have received of His spirit of sonship, the spirit of love.

And that the Lord understood and meant this is evident from the fact that He foretold to us that the way of discipleship would be a “narrow way.” If, therefore, your failure to be an entertaining visitor, neighbor, friend is ‘because of your fidelity as a “new creature” to the law of Christ, love—which “worketh no ill to his neighbor” either in word or deed, then indeed you have cause for rejoicing, because you are suffering a little, experiencing a loss, for Christ’s sake, for righteousness’ sake. The loss may at first seem heavy, ‘but if you endure it for Christ’s sake, in obedience to His righteous law of love, you will soon be able to say with the Apostle that such losses are “light afflictions,” not worthy to be compared with the offsetting blessings.—Phil. 3:7, 8; 2. Cor.4:17.

Your cause for rejoicing is that you have the Lord’s promise that such suffering shall work out for your good. Companionship with those who are not seeking to walk according to’ the mind of the spirit, but; according to the common “course of this world,” is injurious to the saints, to those who are seeking to walk in harmony with the new mind. They are far better off without such worldly companions and friends, and in proportion as they are separated from these will they find closer fellowship with the Lord Himself and with His Word, and with all who are true members of His Body and under the direction of His spirit. It is in harmony with this. that the Scriptures declare, in so many words, that the friendship of this world ‘signifies enmity against God. (James 4:4.) God has purposely placed’ the matter in such a position that His people must take their choice, and lose either the divine friendship and fellowship, or the worldly friendship and fellowship; because those things which the Lord loves are distasteful to the worldly, and those things which the worldly love, evil deeds and evil thoughts, evil-speaking, are an abomination in the sight of the Lord, and those who love and practise such things lose His fellowship—they are not of His spirit. “If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of His.”—Rom. 8:9.

(3) Another way by which some otherwise good Christian people avoid this question, and justify themselves in this common fault of humanity, is by confining themselves (as they think) to the truth: though how frequently their gossip-loving natures pervert their judgments and lead them to accept as truth things respecting which they have little or no knowledge, they never know.

Such will say—“Oh, I never tell anything for truth until I positively know it to be true—of my own observation, my own personal knowledge. Anything that I do not ‘know of myself to be true, I am always careful to so state, and say, I have heard thus and so, or, I am told thus and so; I do not vouch for the truth of it myself. Thus I am sure that I always avoid speaking evil of anyone.” Perhaps there is no more common delusion on this subject than is thus expressed.

The depraved taste hedges itself behind conscience, and declares that it is always right to speak the truth, and hence God cannot have meant that speaking the truth would be slander, but that in condemning evil-speaking and slander as works of the flesh and the devil, He must have meant the speaking of that which is false, untrue.

This is a great mistake; a slander is equally a slander, whether it is true or whether it is false, and is so regarded, not only in the law of God, but also in the laws of civilised men. True, in human law, if a suit were brought for slander, if it were proven that the charges made by the slanderer had some basis of fact, that would probably be considered by the court and jury as extenuating circumstances, and would probably very much reduce the amount of the verdict for damages. A slander is anything which is uttered with the intention of injury to another, whether true or false, and the laws of men agree with the law of God, that such injury to another is wrong.

But the law of God, the law of Christ, goes much further and deeper into such matters, naturally, than do the laws of men, for it deals not with men, but with the “new creatures in Christ Jesus”—transformed by the renewing of their minds, under a special covenant relationship, and bound by the law of that covenant love—which “worketh no ill to his neighbor,” under any circumstances, under any provocation; which, on the contrary, returns “good for evil”—“blessing for cursing.”

The law of Christ, love, commands silence to all who acknowledge that law and the Law-Giver, saying, “Speak evil of no man” (Tit. 3:2) It goes further than this and declares against evil thoughts, evil suspicions, evil surmisings, against neighbours. It declares that love, filling our hearts, will not only hinder evil conduct and injurious words, but will prevent evil thoughts. “Love thinketh no evil”—can only be convinced of evil by indisputable proofs. Indeed, to impress this subject and its importance in His sight, the Great Teacher declares to the pupils in His school: “With what judgment ye judge others, I will judge you.” (Matt. 7:2.) And again He tells them to pray to the Father: “Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us.” (Matt. 6:12) Again He declares, “If at heart ye treasure up resentment against others, the Heavenly Father will not forgive you.” (Matt. 18:35) All! indeed, a Christian after the Lord’s pattern, a graduate of the school of Christ and prepared to teach others, is one who not only outwardly, but inwardly also, is clean, separated, washed by the water of divine instruction, from the meanness, the filthiness of the flesh. He is no longer the slave of sin, controlled by the desires and weaknesses of his fallen flesh and its spirit of the world, hearing fruits unto unrighteousness, anger, malice, hatred, strife, slander, evil-speaking. (Col. 3:8; 1 Pet.

2:1,2.) From his high standpoint of appreciation of the, divine law, the advanced Christian sees that the Lord’s sight hatred is murder, slander is assassination, and the destruction of a neighbour’s good name is robbery and rapine. And any of these things done in the Church, among the professed people of God, is doubly evil—The assassination and robbery of a brother.—Compare 1 John 3:15 and Matt. 5:21, 22.

Those who thus speak, and attempt to justify their misconduct, have either never entered the school of Christ, or are as yet only in the infant class, and do not know that theirs is the spirit of murder, and not the spirit of brotherly love. Oh! that all true Christians might learn the scope of this law of love, in its relationship, not only to God, but also to fellow-men; what a bridling of tongues it would mean, what a carefulness of speech! As David said, “I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue.” And he who watches his tongue is putting a detective upon his deceitful heart and can the better know it and master it, for “out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh.”—Jer. 17:9; Psalms 39:1; Matt. 12:34.

The only exception to this rule, “Speak evil of no man,” would come in where we might know of an absolute necessity for making known an evil—where the relating of the evil would be contrary to our heart’s wishes and only mentioned because of necessity, because of love for others who, if not informed, might be injured. For instance, the law of the land demands that, if we know of murder having been committed, it shall not be considered slander, but on the contrary be considered duty, to make known to the proper officers of the law the facts (not suspicions) which have come under our observation. Likewise, if we knew of some weakness in a brother or sister, and realised that they were about to be placed in a dangerous position, because of some other brother or sister not knowing of that weakness, it might become our duty to make known, either to the individual or congregation liable to be injured, so much of our knowledge of facts (not suspicions) as might be necessary to guard them against injury through the weakness mentioned. And before anything should be said on the subject, we should most positively satisfy our own consciences that our motive in speaking is a good one, and not an evil one, that we are about to use our tongues to bless, and not to injure. And even then, prompted by the spirit of love and kindness toward the weak brother, as well as toward the others, we should avoid mentioning one solitary item that would not be necessary to the object in view.

With these thoughts before our minds, let us all, as brethren in the school of Christ, more earnestly than ever guard against the old nature, and its insidious attempts to gain control over our tongues. Let us, more and more, seek to appreciate, in ourselves and in others, the heavenly wisdom, the operation of which is so forcefully presented by the Apostle. The more important our members, the more influential, the more earnestly ought we strive to keep them in full 'subjection to the Lord as His servants. Our feet are useful members, consecrated to the Lord; we may use them. in many errands of mercy, to the glory of His Name and to the profit of His people. Our hands are likewise useful thoroughly consecrated to the Lord's service. Our ears- are also useful 'in His service, to hear for Him, to refuse to hear the evil, and to set a good example to others. Our eyes .are a great blessing from. the Lord, and they also are to be kept from evil, from the lust of the eye_ and the pride of life, and are to be instruments .or servants of righteousness, in seeing the good, in appreciating the good, and in assisting the good, and in helping us to know the will of our God.

But of all our members, the most influential is the tongue. The tongue's influence exceeds that of all our other members combined: to control it, therefore, 'in the Lord's service, is the most important work of the Lord's people in respect of their mortal bodies and the service of these rendered to the Lord. A few words of love, kindness, helpfulness—how often have such changed the entire course of a human life !—nay, how much they have had to do with moulding the destiny of nations! And how often have evil words, unkind words, slanderous words, done gross injustice, assassinated' reputations, etc., or, as the Apostle declares, "set on fire the course of nature"—awakening passions, strifes, enmities, at first unthought of. No wonder he declares such. tongues "set on fire of Genenna"—the second death.

The public servants of the church are to some extent specially its "tongues," and what an. influence they yield for good or for evil, in the blessing and upbuilding of the Lord's people, or for their injury—cursing! How necessary that all the tongue-servants of the Lord's Body be such, and such only, as are of His spirit! Their influence not only extends to those who are 'in the church, hut in considerable measure they are mouthpieces heard outside. And the same principle applies to every individual member of the 'Church, in his use of his member, his tongue. He may use it wisely or unwisely, with heavenly wisdom or with earthly wisdom. He may use it for strife, and tearing down the faith and character of the brethren, in overthrowing love and confidence, or he may use it in building up, these graces of the spirit. How few amongst the Lord's people have conquered -the tongue to the extent of 'bringing it into subjection to the will of God, that they may minister good, and only good, to all with whom they come in contact. Let us, dear brethren, be fully resolved that by divine grace (promised to assist us) the days 'ahead shall witness great progress in our control of this most important member of our bodies, bringing the same into full subjection and obedience and service to the Kings of kings and Lord of lords—to Him who bath. called us out of darkness into His marvellous light

From time to time

FROM time to time voices are raised in Christendom which show that some leaders in religious circles appreciate the sad conditions now prevailing not only in the “earth,” i.e., the social phase of society, but -also in the “heavens,” i.e., the religious portion of the community. (2 Pet. 3.) Dr. Henry Townsend, Principal of the Manchester Baptist College, is credited with the following statement:—

“It seems that present-day civilisation has put the Church into the dock, and the only way in which she can possibly hope to get out of the dock is by some solemn and dramatic act of penitence for the wrongs -done to the human race in the past. Matters have reached such a stage that the Church needs the forgiveness of men -as she does that of God. The Gospel is imperishable, but our organisations and cults cannot escape the disintegrating effects of ethical criticism. Until the Church has renounced the dark stains in her record and repented of her past ways, confessed that she has been the tool of militarists and used violence to serve her own -ends, acknowledged that she has resisted the true humanism and the political -and industrial emancipation of the peoples, it looks as though this age will scorn her appeals. We are not responsible for the history of the Church, but we are responsible for condoning much in her history which -this generation knows to be irreconcilable with the spirit of her Founder. The blood of the past is upon us.”

Though realising the sad history of the Church, especially as associated with the state—the wrongs done in joining in worldly, and national ambitions as the tool of militarists, etc., Dr. Townsend still hopes for recovery and that the churches may yet attain the spirit of -Christ and pureness of faith and conduct. He seems to forget that the Lord, and particularly the Apostles Paul and Peter, as also John in the Revelation, show very clearly that the condition among professing !Christians would wax worse and worse (1 Tim.. 4:1, 2 Tim. 3:1-5, 2 Pet. 2:1, 2; 3:3, 4), and reach the very condition of to-day, described by these passages, as -also in Rev. 3:16. This shows the Lord realised that recovery was not to be expected, and instead He would cast off and no- longer recognise such a Church as His representative.

The last few words of the quotation from Dr. Townsend are significant—“The blood of the past is upon us”—and remind us of the, words of „the Jews clamouring for the death- of Jesus—“His blood be upon us and- on our children,” and it seems that they will have similar fulfilment. Of the Jewish nation the Lord said .(Matt. 23:35): “Upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth from the blood of righteous Abel unto the blood of Zacharias.” That generation walked in the same way as their murderous forefathers, even slaying the “prince -of life,” so the Lord in !closing that dispensation visited His judgments upon that generation. Likewise the Revelation to St. John pictures the church systems as the harlot (papacy) and her daughters and declares their destruction. Also- God’s true people are warned to “come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins and that ye receive not of her plagues.” (Rev. 18:4.) While the Roman Church is the mother -and has been the most terrible !in wickedness and corruption, yet undoubtedly the daughters represent the other churches and the Laodicean Church represents the whole system of nominal Christianity. (Rev. 3:14-17.)

These systems have left the Christian narrow way; they have departed from- “the faith once delivered to the saints” and gone after Balaam and wordliness and have been “spued out” of the Lord’s mouth—no longer recognised as followers of Christ. The Jewish house lingered some 37 years after our Lord had said, “Your house is left unto you desolate,” and Christendom is, as Dr. Townsend intimates, weighed in the balances and found wanting, and simply awaits her destruction. How important it is for all true Christians to give earnest heed to “what the spirit saith unto the churches.” It is time for all who still believe in the cross of Christ as the price of sin and only means of salvation and who are seeking. to walk in the simplicity of faith, holding fast to the things they have heard—since having had ears to- hear—to separate themselves from such systems and like the “eagles” be gathered together around the “carcase,” (Luke 17:37) feeding together on the Word of God and encouraging each other in the wonderful unfoldment of prophecy and the prospect of early completion of the Church of Christ, and then the setting up of the Kingdom for the blessing of -all the families of the earth and the scattering of all the darkness of error and superstition and deceptions so prevalent in the world to-day.

Some verses -of the poem, under the title “The Nominal Church,” appear in another column of this issue, which aptly describe how the “falling away” has come about, thus emphasising how necessary it is for all the Lord’s people to be quite free from such systems, that they -may worship Him in spirit and in truth.-! John 2:15-17.

Saviour, I long to walk
Closer with Thee:
Led by Thy guiding hand
Ever to be;

Constantly near Thy side,
Quickened and purified,
Living for Him Who died
Freely for me.

Dear Brethren,

Your letter of May 23rd came duly to hand, but inasmuch as we were out of the 1932 Convention Reports, we found it necessary to send your order to the Dawn Publishers,, N.Y., and hope these reports have been received by this time.

We are pleased to inform you that we are contemplating another Annual Convention at. Pittsburgh this year, which will be' held on October 27th, 28th and 29th.

Noting that you publish a monthly paper, we would appreciate your giving due notice of this Convention in your publication. While we realise that our brethren on foreign shores can not be with us, we are anxious that as many as possible be acquainted with the activities of the brethren in America, and particularly in Pittsburgh.

We have a very nice class here, numbering nearly one hundred, and meet every Sunday in the old Bible House Chapel, in what was formerly known as Allegheny, Pennsylvania, now a part of the City of Pittsburg.

We rejoice with you brethren in your activity and service, and sincerely trust the Lord will continue to bless your efforts.

With Christian love and best wishes, we are, your brethren in Christ,

Associated Bible Students.

[We are pleased to draw attention to the forthcoming Annual Convention of the brethren in Pittsburgh, U.S.A. Realising from our own Convention gatherings how helpful such occasions can be, with the Lord's blessing over all who love His truth and cause generally, it would be nice for all to remember the brethren gathered at Pittsburgh on the above dates before the throne of grace, to the end that they may be refreshed, strengthened and encouraged in their pilgrim way.]

South Australia, Sept. 17th, 1933. Dear Brother,—

I feel it my duty to drop you a few lines and at least thank you for those papers you sent me free of charge. They were very interesting indeed, and I very 'much missed the "People's Paper" when it did not come along last month. However, I thank you very much, and I will herewith send you a small offering for the same, for I know you cannot print them and send them out for nothing. I am a father of six children, and also times are hard, but we trust in the Lord and look forward to His kingdom as the only hope and salvation, for better times really can only come from the Almighty God, and let us hope that He soon may come into His Temple.

Yours truly, Brother in the Lord, K.H.H.

Dear Friends,—

I am enclosing herewith subscription that I owe for the “People’s Paper.” Hoping this is right, and thanking you very much for still sending the “Paper” along, as I enjoy the reading and would not like to be without it.

Wishing you every success in your work for the Lord. Yours faithfully, A.A.

THE CLOSE OF THE PILGRIM WAY.

The following letter, giving information of the death of a dear elderly Brother, was received early last month from the secretary of the Sydney class, meeting at Rawson Chambers.

Dear Brother,
Greetings in His Name. •

I feel it my duty’ to report the passing from this vale of tears of our dear Bro. G. Morris, of Bankstown, N.S.W. Through the good office of a Brother who lives in the same locality we were informed of his death, which took place suddenly on August 25th.

We did not see much of the Brother, for he was subject to -a considerable amount of sickness for the past year or so, but the Lord was very gracious to him, as he lived into his seventy-seventh year. He was with us at the last Memorial, and was with us at the Class once since. Our Brother was very zealous for the truth and rejoiced in the knowledge of the same. The last time I conversed with him—the last time he was able to attend the Class—in talking together of God’s goodness to His children, so full was he that he had some difficulty in finding words to express himself.

Brother Muir and myself availed ourselves of the privilege of attending the funeral, and although the family of our departed Brother belonged to various nominal Churches the eldest son expressed his wish that the father be buried by representatives of the Church to which he belonged, the rest of the family also being quite willing. That,, of course, gave an opportunity to give a good witness for the truth. Brother Downey, of the St. Peter’s Class arrived after the service had started, his train connections serving him badly. We were pleased to see that Brother present, for he had the privilege of immersing the dear Brother a little while ago.

In conversing with the family they all expressed the same sentiment of his sterling Christian character—’’though dead yet he speaketh. ‘ Rev. 14:13 comes to mind—’Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; they rest from their labours and their works do follow them.”

In conclusion, I may say we have great hope for our Brother, for he continued in well-doing till the end, therefore he could have expressed himself like the Apostle Paul—”I know there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness.” May the calling away of a Brother here and a Brother there stimulate us with more zeal to make our calling and election sure.

“Oh, what are all our sufferings here,
If Lord Thou count us meet,
With that enraptured host to appear
And worship at Thy feet.”
I close with Christian love to all the friends, and remain,
Yours is the one hope,

J. H. T.

[The above sentiments respecting our late Brother G. Morris are truly endorsed. For some years past he has corresponded regularly with us and at all times manifested much zeal and sacrifice in the cause of truth. It was always his delight to speak of the Lord’s goodness, and in harmony with his faith in the finished work of Christ was continually active in passing out the tracts or loaning the books to those having ears to hear, if haply they, too, may receive of the glad message in which he rejoiced. No discouragement was shown by the Brother when results from his efforts seemed small; on one occasion well remembered he remarked that if the message does not gather any “wheat” it may help some of the “sheep.” In other words, while endeavouring chiefly to find those who would enter into the Christian way at this acceptable time, the help that others may gain and “glorify God in the day of visitation” was riot overlooked.

We rejoice to know that our dear Brother finished his course in full faith and joy, and so have every confidence that he has entered into his reward, as we are living in the close of the harvest of this age with our Lord present gathering His “jewels” to inherit with Himself the heavenly mansions so graciously provided and promised to the overcomers by our loving Heavenly Father.]

U.S.A., August 24th, 1933.

The Ransom and its Application to Mankind

THE word “Ransom” is used in respect of the purchase-price of humanity and also in connection with the deliverance of mankind after having been purchased by that price. As an illustration of the two uses of the word, we give two texts of Scripture:— (1) “Who gave Himself a Ransom for all, to be testified in due time.” (1, Tim. 2:6.) (2) “I will Ransom them from the power of the grave.” (Hos.’ 13:14.) In these texts we see the two uses of the word “Ransom.” The word Ransom. in the Scriptures is often used in a similar manner to the word “redeem.” The two words, indeed, have the thought of purchase connected with them. To redeem is to buy back; to ransom., as used in 1 Tim. 2:6, is to buy back, by giving a price to correspond.

The Bible sometimes speaks of the death of our Lord Jesus Christ as the giving of the price.. The Scripture says that our Lord Jesus gave Himself to be a Ransom-price. (Matt. 20:28, Mark 10 45.) He gave Himself at Jordan; He completed the giving of Himself at Calvary. In His death He laid clown the ransom-price, the price necessary for redeeming Adam and all of his race from the sentence of death.

But there is a difference to be observed between the laying down of the Ransom-price and the application of that Ransom-price. The price was in our Lord Jesus Himself, but He must lay it down sacrificially before the benefits of it could be given to others. The Scriptures show us that, after He had laid down that price, God empowered Him to make use of it, permitting Him to enter into the Most Holy, even heaven itself, to do so. He makes use of that price, as outlined in the Scriptures, in a two-fold offering to God:—

First, He appropriated of that life which He had laid down—the merits of that Ransom-price—to those who would constitute His Body, the Church. He Himself had no sins to cleanse, but those who, according to God’s arrangement, were to be the members of His Body, had sins; and for these He applies His blood as a redemption price or merit On their behalf, securing for them, not only release from condemnation, but also the opportunity of becoming sharers with Him in the Ransom work. He has not applied the merit of that sacrifice as yet to Adam or his children, but merely to those who, in the type, were represented by the under-priests, and to the Levites, the brethren and servants of the priestly family.

Secondly, Christ will make use of His sacrifice on behalf of all the people. As was shown in the type, the sprinkling of the blood on the mercy-seat at the close of the Day of Atonement, which was the second sprinkling, was for all the people. The antitype of this act will constitute a full offset to the Adamic condemnation. Another Scripture, however, shows us that while all the people are to come under the direct control of the great Messiah, they are not to be turned over perfect, but as they are found—in a dying condition, the wrath of God, because of -imperfection, still being upon them. Then, under the New Covenant, of which our Lord is made the responsible Mediator, the Great Messiah will take charge of “all the people,” _even while they are still subject to the weaknesses resulting from the sentence of death. Under this New Covenant, as many of them as will become obedient to the laws of Messiah’s Kingdom, will come into relationship to the Life-Giver, in harmony with the text, which. says, “lie that bath the Son bath life, and he that bath not the Son shall not see life.” (1 John 5:12; John 3:36.) All of Adam’s posterity will have an opportunity to accept Jesus, either as His brethren at the present time, or as His children in the next Age.

Coming back, then, to the words Ransom ‘and Ransomed: They are used in respect of our Lord, to indicate, not that He completed the Ransom work when He died, but that He there provided the Ransom-price. During His Mediatorial reign the whole work of Christ will be that of delivering those for whom He gave the Ransom-price. In this last use of the word, it would be right to say that the Church shares with Christ in this Ransom work of delivering the world. This is the thought everywhere set before us in the Scriptures. But it would be wrong to say that the Church participates in the Ransom-price. The Ransom-price was the perfect Man, Jesus, who gave Himself to be a Ransom-price for all.

In that sacrifice there is a sufficiency.of merit for all of Adam’s posterity. The Church, therefore, has no participation in the work of giving the Ransom-price, though it is to participate in the work of. Ransoming or recovering those for whom the Ransom-price is to be applied.

The sentence of death, passed upon Father Adam, was transmitted in a natural way to all of his children. At the end of this Gospel Age, the Great High Priest will have finished His atoning work. Then, by applying the Ransom-price on behalf of the world, He will become invested with all the rights and titles to humanity and to the earth. The full price having been paid over in behalf of mankind and their home, and having been accepted by the Almighty, the “world and the fulness thereof” will all be turned over to Christ, who will then ‘be King of kings and Lord of lords. Justice will then have no further claim upon mankind, all of whom will have been turned over to Christ. But He will not recognise those who. are in a rebellious attitude toward God’s arrangements.

Such, however, will be held in restraint and will still be under Divine Justice, for the Great Mediator will be a representative of Divine Justice, as well as of Divine Mercy. During His reign it will be His duty and privilege to teach mankind a great lesson. In one of the prophecies we read, "Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and He will teach us of His ways, and we will walk in His paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the Law, and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem." (Isa. 2:3, Micah 4:2.) And it shall come to pass that the nation that will not go up to Jerusalem will have no blessing.—Zech. 14:17-19.

In other words, while the Millennial Kingdom will be fully -established, its blessings will be operative only toward those who will seek to keep the Divine Law. But as the nations perceive that there is no blessing apart from the -keeping of the Divine Law, they will doubtless be influenced to do so. In due time, the light of the knowledge of the Lord will fill the whole earth, and ignorance and superstition will be supplanted by Divine enlightenment.

The Scriptures assure us that this New Covenant will be made with Israel, and with all mankind, who will become Israelites; for God will also give the heathen to Messiah, who will be Ruler of all the earth, not merely of those who accept His Government. "Ask of Me and I will give thee the heathen for an inheritance." He will rule with the iron rod, to the intent that all mankind may learn the Divine Law and have- the Divine blessing.—Psalm 2:6-12.

The Nominal Church

The Church and the World walked far apart
On the changing shores of time;
The World was singing a giddy song,
And the Church a hymn sublime.

"Come give me your hand," said the merry World,
"And walk with me this way";
But the good Church hid her snowy hands
And solemnly answered "Nay,

I will not give you my hand at all,
And I will not walk with you;
Your way is the way that leads to death;
To my Lord I must be true."

"Nay, walk with me but a little space,"
Said the World with a kindly air;
"The road I walk is a pleasant road,
And the sun shines always there;

Your path is thorny and rough and rude,
But mine is broad and plain;
My way is paved with flowers and dews,
And yours with tears and pain;

The sky to me is always blue,
No want, no toil I know;
The sky above you is always dark,
Your lot is a lot of woe;

The way you walk is a narrow way,
But mine is amply wide."

"Your house is too plain," said the proud old World.
"I'll build you one like mine;

Carpets of Brussels and curtains of lace,
And furniture ever so fine."
So he built her a costly and beautiful house;
Most splendid it was to behold;

Her sons and her beautiful daughters dwelt there
Gleaming in purple and gold;
Rich fairs and shows in the halls were held,

And the World and his children were there.
Laughter and music and feasting were heard
In the place that was meant for prayer.
There were cushioned pews for the rich and gay,

To sit in their pomp and pride;
While the poor, who were clad in shabby array,
But seldom came inside.
Then the Church sat down at her ease 'and said,

"I am rich and my goods are increased,
I have need of nothing or ought to do,
But to laugh, and dance,- and feast."
The sly World heard, and he laughed in his sleeve,

And mocking said aside
"The Church is fallen, the beautiful Church,
And her shame is her boast and pride."
The angel drew near to the mercy-seat,

And whispered in sighs her name,
Then the loud anthems of rapture were hushed,
And heads were covered with shame.
And a voice was heard at last by the Church

From Him who sat on the Throne,
"I know thy works, and how thou hast said,
'I am rich'; and hast not known

That thou art naked, poor and blind,
And wretched before my face;
Therefore, from my presence, I cast thee out,
And blot thy name from its place."

BE LIKE THE SPRING.

Up in the mountains there is a spring. Day and night, year in and year out, for years this spring has been running continuously. Long before there were homes about it, people came from afar to quench their thirst with its cool flow. The spring's waters are pure and health-giving, for nothing is allowed to accumulate in the waters. Sieved through rocks -and gravel for miles, all impurities are washed away before its sparkling waters are offered to whomsoever may take and drink.

About a mile from this spring is a pond. It is still and stagnant. If you were to chink from it you might die from its accumulated poison. It gives nothing.

Put the little spring is always giving. Always it made and kept clean by moving.

Let us keep our hearts like the little spring. Keep the kind and thoughtful deeds flowing all the time. The only satisfactory life is the one that is continually giving away and renewing itself by acts of service and devotion for others.

Messengers of God.

“He shall give His angels (messengers) a charge concerning thee, to guard thee in all thy ways.”—Psalm 91: II.

IN the midst of the “perilous times” of this “evil day,” and of the warning voices of the Holy Prophets and Apostles pointing out snares and pestilences and subtle dangers on every hand—and in the midst, too, of a realising sense of the actual existence of such evil besetments and perils—how precious to the saints are the assurances of Divine protection and care and personal love!

Evidently the person referred to in our text as giving a charge, or message, is Jehovah, the Heavenly Father. The Prophet David is prophesying in respect of some person, then future. That person was primarily, we believe, the Lord Jesus Christ, and secondarily, all those whom. He has accepted as members of His Body throughout this Gospel Age—the Messiah class, Head and members. The words imply a special care of God over this class. All through the Scriptures they are referred to as those whom. God specially loves and specially cares for. Our Lord Jesus is the Only Begotten, the well-beloved Son, and all those who are His members are peculiarly loved. Jesus said to some of His faithful disciples, “The Father Himself loveth you.”

The charge given to the angels we would understand to have a very broad application. The Apostle Paul assures us that the angels of God are ministering spirits sent forth to minister unto and to serve those who shall be heirs of salvation, the saved ones of this Gospel Age. Yes, all of these, because believers in Christ, because at heart faithful, because fully consecrated to the Lord and begotten of His Spirit, are the special and happy objects of His trace, ministered to and served by the invisible messengers. Our Lord Jesus sets forth practically the same thought in His declaration, “their angels do always behold (have access to) the face of My Father.” The Master’s words seem to imply that one or more of these angels have charge over the consecrated ones, the Very Elect.

Our Lord uses a different figure of speech from that of the Apostle, as though He would assure us that these messengers would not be delayed in caring for our interests. They would not be hindered by more important Heavenly business, but would at once have direct access to the Divine presence and attention, so that our interests would have all needed consideration. Our Lord would have us realise that we are of the House of Sons, under Himself the chief Son, hence no time is lost in bringing our interests to the Father. Our interests have first place, our angels have always access to the Father. Before we speak, He knows our minds. Before we realise our own necessities, He has made provision for them. A wonderful watch-care has been arranged. It is hard for us to understand how the Almighty God can give such particular care and attention to our needs. Instead of being puffed up that God has manifested such loving consideration towards us, it should make us feel how little we are, how unworthy of such blessings.

Although the Father makes such use of Heavenly messengers, this by no means invalidates the thought that the Lord’s earthly children are frequently used of Him as ministers, servants, the one of another. Indeed, we may be assured that the invisible messengers are required generally to act through human instrumentalities. Of this we have illustrations in the Harvest work, supervised by our present Lord and His Heavenly hosts, yet in the main carried on by members of His Body in the flesh.

The Apostle Paul has stated that the Lord makes His ministers, or servants, a flaming fire, and intimates to us that any and every agency and power that Divine providence uses is a part of that care over His people. (Heb. 1:7.) In other words, every agency used of God—whether it be fire or electricity or man, or whatever—would be a messenger of God. And whatever would riot be to His praise and work out what He chooses, He is able to restrain—as He tells us (Psalm 76:10).

Overcomers Developed By Trial.

These angels are to “keep- thee in all thy ways” not only in all the affairs of the Church, both individually and collectively, but also in all times; they were kept during the Dark Ages as well as at other times. But this care will not keep us from temptation. None can be of this elect Church unless they have trials. In order to have the overcoming qualities of heart they must have the tests. But the Lord’s promised grace is to be with them for their assistance—not to overcome for them, but to sustain them. His grace is sufficient for us. He does not make up for a poor will; but He does make up for imperfect bodies. If the will is poor, He does not want such in His elect Church. He wants His people to be strong in will—nothing doubting—overcomers.

The next verse of the Psalm from which our text is taken proceeds to say that these messengers which have a charge over the affairs of the Church, Head and Body, will keep the feet from stumbling. In a general way we might apply the term “feet” to some members of the Body all down, in all times of the Age; as we might say, for instance, one member is a hand, and one a foot, etc. The Church, resting on those “feet” members all the way down, throughout the Gospel Age, will be guided aright; they will not be allowed to stumble; for, “Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my pathway.” Thus they would be enabled to surmount the difficulties in their path.

So- all down through the Gospel Age the messengers of the Lord have helped His people over all of their trials. But this reference to the “feet” seems especially applicable to the last members of the Body of Christ. “How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace . . . that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth !” (Isa. 52:7.) This would seem to apply to the last members of the Church. This could not have been said all the way down the Age. It is only for us who are living at the present time to say.

These various manifestations of progress that we see, are just beginning. The new regime is only opening. After our Lord shall have delivered and glorified the Church, then He will begin the work with the world. None had the right to say, “Thy God reigneth,” in the past; but now in the close of the Age this proclamation is made.

Christ’s Presence a Stumbling Stone.

The text seems to imply that the feet members at this time would be in a position of special trial, and be as a stumbling-stone. And this calls to our remembrance that the Lord foretold this, saying, “He shall be . . . for a stone of stumbling and for a rock of offense to both the houses of Israel” (Isa. 8:14.) This stone was stumbled over in the end of the Jewish Age (1 Peter 2:8.) The Scriptures set forth that Jesus is the Way. The Lord is a Stumbling-Stone in the pathway of many. These passages do not refer to the world. It was not the Gentile nations that stumbled over Jesus at His First Advent, but it was some of the Israelites who were there stumbled. And the text implies the stumbling of some Spiritual Israelites because of the coming of the Lord: in a way totally different from what they had imagined.

So we believe that there are very many good Christian people to-day who are stumbling over Christ’s presence. They thought so and so; they imagined ^Aso and so. And all is so different from what they had imagined and expected that it is just as it was in the end of the Jewish Age, when the rabbis stumbled.

The question is, why should not the angels’ have charge over all good people, so that they would not stumble?

Is not this the promise? We answer that the promise is made to all who are of the elect class. But in order to remain members of this Body, they must all stand the trial. It will be a test. Are they willing to have the assistance of the angels—messengers? Are they willing to surmount these difficulties and to remain in the way?

One class will be in a condition to receive the trials in the proper manner; another class will be so self-confident, so overcharged with the cares of this life, and so lacking in spiritual development, that they will not be ready to avail themselves of the services of the angels. This is because God uses as His messengers some whom the world will not be ready to receive.

Parallelism Between Jewish And Gospel Ages.

In the Jewish Age the Lord used some whom the scribes, the doctors of the Law and the chief priests could not accept. at all. If He wanted to use agents, or channels, or messengers, to teach the people, why did He not choose the learned scribes or the pompous Pharisees of that day? Why did the Lord use as His messengers men who had been fishermen, tax-gatherers persons whom the learned would think entirely unfit as instructors, or teachers? We recall that in the end of the Jewish Age it was written of two of them (and perhaps of them all) that the people perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men (Acts 4:13.) How could it be that God would pass by some of the most learned of that day? “Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father: for so it seemed good in Thy sight” (Matt. 11:25, 26).

So to-day the Lord is using agencies, messengers, that are not acceptable to many whom they approach. And while these are making up their minds to believe, slow in this ‘because overcharged with the cares of this life, the elect company will be made up. Then the others will say, “Lord, Lord, open unto us.” But the Lord will declare that He cannot recognise them as members of His Body, the Elect. They will not have shown the spirit of meekness, gentleness, patience, love necessary to give them a place in this Body. ‘So it will be only the Body members who will be lifted up by the messengers and carried safely through the trials and difficulties which will be ‘permitted to test the love, loyalty and obedience to the will of God, of all who have made with Him a Covenant of Sacrifice—even unto death.

Each one of us has a stewardship somewhere, and some gift qualifying him for it. It may be that we are called to very humble duties; still they are held from God, and constitute a stewardship.—Goulburn.

The Gospel of Hope,

Ye Have Need of Hope.

THE Apostle wrote, “Ye have need of patience.” We are not contradicting his statement when we add that also, “Ye have need of hope.” Without hope, patience would soon fritter away; and no length or breadth or depth of character could be expected. The very word Gospel is full of hope; for it means “Good Tidings.” Whoever, therefore, would preach the Gospel should be sure that his message is one of Good Tidings, one of Hope. True, it may be necessary and appropriate at times to say something respecting the time of trouble that we see near. Yet even ‘that subject is to be approached from the standpoint of Good Tidings. To tell about the time of trouble merely to alarm people, would not be to use it as a part of the Good Tidings. If necessary to refer to the time of trouble, we should mention it merely as that dark cloud which for a little season will obscure the dawn of the rapidly oncoming Day of Christ—the Day of blessing and joy—the world’s jubilee—the time of rolling away ‘the curse and substituting God’s blessing.

“The Whole Creation Groaneth.”

The majority of the world and also of the Lord’s consecrated people have plenty of trouble in the present time without being terrorised needlessly in respect of the great day of trouble. Let us remember that, additionally, the world has a latent fear respecting the future. They have been told by distinguished religious teachers and by musty creeds that nearly everybody was damned in advance to spend an eternity of torture. And although this is no longer outwardly preached to intelligent people, and no longer would be believed, nevertheless insinuations are often thrown out; and a secret fear lurks in the mind lest there should really be some, thing terrible awaiting the masses after death—a Catholic Purgatory of awful severity, if not the endless torture of Protestantism. Much of the present day tendency toward intoxication with pleasures and travels, as well as with alcoholic intoxicants, is the result of an attempt to get away from fearful forebodings—to substitute more pleasant and happifying thoughts.

What the world specially needs is what the Bible alone can give. Bible students alone are qualified to introduce others to this comfort of the Scriptures. More and more, therefore, it should be our aim to bind up the broken-hearted and to say to the weary and heavy-laden, “Come to Christ, and find relief and rest. Come now, and see who is the great Burden-bearer for all who become His followers. Then look beyond the present and see how, in harmony with the Father’s gracious arrangement, He Will eventually scatter the blessings of Restitution far and wide. Behold the Love of God, which constraineth us ! Cast away your fear of Him! Draw nigh unto Him through Christ, and He will draw nigh unto you.”

As there may be proper times for telling something about the time of trouble coming, which will inaugurate Messiah’s glorious reign, so there may be proper times for telling the wayward that those who sin shall suffer; that walking in the ways of sin they are walking away from God; that the end of that way is death; and that “whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.” But these features of the Divine Word are not so necessary to be repeated every day; for mankind instinctively know that sin leads to suffering of some kind, and that righteousness sooner or later brings its reward.

What the world needs most is encouragement to turn away from sin, to realise the sympathy of God for the rebellious family of Adam, and to know of the arrangement which God has made whereby He will have mercy upon all, through Christ. We need to follow the Master's course when He declared, "Blessed are your eyes, for they see; and your ears, for they hear." We need to tell those who see and hear what a blessing they enjoy.

It is necessary at times to point to the narrow way of self-sacrifice, self-denial, suffering, which the followers of Jesus must take if they would share with Him in His Kingdom glories, honors and immortality. But they "will find the narrowness" of the way, even if we should not tell them. No one can walk in the narrow way, no one can follow Jesus, without knowing the truth of the statement, "Through much tribulation shall ye enter the Kingdom of Heaven."

What then shall we tell the people? Oh, give them also the Message of hope, the Message of joy, the Message of peace! Let us draw the attention of the brethren to the blessed privileges that are ours, rather than frequently to point them to the trials and hardships of the way. But what are the privileges of the Christian, if through great tribulation he must enter the Kingdom? They are, oh, so grand! It is his to know the joy of sins forgiven; and many need to have this told them over and over again, that they may fully appreciate it. It is his to know of the Heavenly Father's Love and care—matters so easily forgotten in the stress of life. These assurances of the Word need to be repeated over and over: "The Father Himself loveth you." "God is for us." "All things shall work together for good to them that love God."

As these promises of God's Word abound in our hearts, they promote the fruits of the Holy Spirit; joy and peace come in, such as the world can neither give nor take away. The peace of God, which passeth all human understanding, thus gradually comes more and more to dwell in our hearts; and so thankfulness results. Thankfulness in turn leads to more joy and praise, and to more sympathy for our fellows—for our families and for the world. Thus the Christian finds himself growing in grace, knowledge and love.

"Think On These Things."

All this is in full accord with St. Paul's advice:- "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things" (Philippians 4:8.) • Following this course then—of preaching the Gospel of Hope—we are following the Master and the Apostles. They had so much of this spirit of hope, trust, confidence, love, joy and peace, that they could rejoice in tribulation; and they did, so. The Apostles even sang praise to God that they were accounted worthy to share in the sufferings of Christ, that they might also share in His coming glories.

Let us then, dear brethren, realise that the world has tears and sorrows enough, and fears aplenty. Let us more and more use our time, strength, talents, joys, etc., in relieving the poor world of its mental distress. Harken 'to the words of Jesus, "God shall wipe all tears from all eyes." "Be ye perfect, even as your Father which is in Heaven is perfect." As it will be God's great work in the future, through Christ and the Church, to wipe away earth's tears, let us chase away some of those fears at the present time. Thus we shall help to prepare the way for the world to come back into fellowship with God by and by, for the faithful of the present time to walk more carefully in the footsteps of Jesus and to encourage one another in the good way.

To face the stern, to wrestle with the strong;
“A little while” to sow the seed with weeping,
Then bind the sheaves and sing the harvest song.

“A little while” to keep the oil from failing,
“A little while” faith’s flickering lamp to trim;
And then the Bridegroom’s coming footsteps hailing
To haste to meet Him with the bridal hymn.

And He who is Himself the Gift and Giver,
The future glory and the present smile,
With the bright promise of the glad “forever,”
Will light the shadows of the “little while.”

“A VOICE FROM SWITZERLAND.”

WITHIN recent months a booklet bearing the above title has been circulated amongst some of our brethren, and it has been thought well to bring it more particularly before the minds of our readers at this time. Originally printed in German the work was published by Bro. Dr. W. Hodler, of Switzerland, entitled, “Das Tier,” and being so well thought of by Bro. J. G. Kuehn, of New Jersey, U.S.A., he had the translation carried out with the willing assistance of interested helpers for the benefit of ‘the English brethren as a whole.

In this booklet the writer takes up an explanation of Revelation 17 and 13, and deals extensively with the Roman Empire—the “beast”—with its various “heads” .’kingdoms-- (upon which the “woman”—the Roman Catholic Church—sits) showing ;that these, commencing early in the Gospel Age, have continued down into our own day, as one has given place to the next, and so on, in fulfilment of this important revelation.

The following rather lengthy extracts from the work are set out with the object of prompting all the interested to a careful study of these things, so that none may be in darkness concerning the momentous times in which we are living. While all that is expressed in the booklet may not be correct in every detail, there is surely much that will commend itself to the sincere student of God’s Word:—

“At the time the Revelator’ sees and describes these things the sixth ‘head’ is in control and a ‘seventh’ is to come and is to continue a short space The head is the seat of the central nervous system and of the will; from it the entire organism is controlled and its action directed. A ‘head’ is, therefore, a very fitting picture of that power in Europe which occupies the leadership, the chief nation. We would observe here that during the Christian phase of the Roman Empire Rome itself did not continue to be the head’ or centre of government of Europe, but was succeeded by various other countries or kingdoms. Each successive principal ruling power was outwardly marked by the fact that its head bore the imperial crown of Rome, the only exception being that of the sixth head, which, however, we shall find is in full harmony with the Scriptures.

“During the Christian phase of the Roman Empire the following powers constituted successively the heads of Europe, historical proof of which will be given in the following pages:—

(1) Byzantium, or Constantinople, from 312 to about 500 A.b. (2) The Kingdom of the Franks, from about 500 to 900 A.D. (3) Germany, from 900 to 1250 A.D. (4) Austria, from about 1273 to about 1659 A.D. (5) France from about 1659 to 1815 A.D. (fall of Napoleon.) (6) England, from 1815 to about 1925 A.D.

“The seventh ‘head,’ according to our understanding, will be Italy. We are inclined to think that we are already living in the epoch of the seventh ‘head.’ Italy will -be revealed as such by the assumption of the imperial crown of Rome, an event more or less expected by the world to-day.

The Eighth Head.

“We read that after the seventh, an eighth ‘head’ will appear, which will then be the original ‘beast’ in its entirety: ‘And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition.’ This can only mean that after the rule of the seventh head no single power will again have the leadership of the other more or less independent States of Europe, but that a combination government will be created for all Europe. This government will be neither democratic nor a European parliament, as dreamed of by a few political enthusiasts to-day; but one of the seven named leading powers will use its position to bring all Europe into dependence to it. The Scriptures tell us that this will not be brought about by war or conquest, but by a voluntary agreement with the heads of the other States. We believe that Italy will bring about this creation of an autocratic Pan-Europe; and with it the Roman Empire would have returned to its starting point—an undivided unity, with the City of Rome as its governing) centre.

“Who can fail to see that this very thing is the goal in the mind of the present rulers. of Italy, and which is giving such impetus to the Fascist striving for power? Thus Italy’s aspirations may, indeed, find fulfilment. The Roman Empire will then occupy a position of power never before attained: it will lord it over the whole world.

“But the Scriptures also state that this is the very condition that must precede the utter and final ruin of this empire.

The Beast Which Was and is Not.

“The Revelator tells us that his view of these events falls into the period when the ‘beast’ is not We understand that John describes these things as taking place at the beginning of the Lord’s day—the period of transition to the Millennium. ‘He (finds himself carried down in spirit to the period of the sixth ‘head’ —the British Empire—as we shall see from other Scriptures, at the end of this period, just before the seventh ‘head’ is to attain dominion and the development of the ‘beast’ which is about to ascend out of the abyss (v. 8, Diablott) begins to appear. This was not the case until after the world war. Thus, the year 1920 is about the date indicated as the period of time from which the Revelator views the course of events. This assumption is seemingly supported by Rev. 11:18: ‘And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come.’ We think that this verse speaks of the world war as already in the past, and that the second part—Thy wrath is come’—is about to be fulfilled.

“England as the ‘Sixth Head’ outlasted the world war, coming forth victoriously from it. It even increased, outwardly, having secured for itself a large portion of the former German colonies. But immediately after the close of the war signs of dissolution appeared in this great and powerful system. England had to grant such far-reaching independence to Ireland and to other dominions that it is a question, if these would be found at her side in a future war. India and Egypt, the foundations of Great Britain’s commercial power, seem to be especially endangered now by emancipation movements.

The Seventh Head: Italy.

“To-day we certainly are living in the time of the ‘Seventh Head’s’ arising, concerning which the Revelator says that ‘he must continue a short space.’ “In October, 1922, Fascism attained power in Italy by a revolution. With it came the dictatorship of Mussolini, which restored order in that country, so deeply disordered by incessant strikes and lockouts, and plunged into anarchy through the Socialistic rule, taking a new political course of a strongly-marked nationalistic and imperialistic character. Mussolini became the father of a new political doctrine, having discarded the democratic and liberal doctrines, which had constituted the ideal power of the Anglo-Saxon epoch. This new political faith finds day by day a greater and a more unconditional following, among authoritative politicians in all Europe. Mussolini makes no secret of the fact that he holds Fascism to be of universal importance Surprisingly early does the seventh ‘Head’ step forth with aspirations to a renewal of the Roman Empire, as if it knew that it must make haste, because it was allotted only ‘a short space.’ The idea seems to belong to Mussolini himself. ‘We shall,’ said he, ‘make Rome the spiritual city, the pulsation heart, the living soul of the Italian Empire, of which I dream.’ And this • Empire is not thought of simply as a national Empire such, for instance, as the German Empire of the last century, but as a renewal of the old Roman Empire. -

The Ten Horns of the Beast.

“Daniel had already seen the vision of the ‘beast with ten horns,’ evidently pictured at the time of its full development, at the time of the end. He records in chapter 7, verse 24, that the ten horns are individual powers into which the universal empire of the ‘Beast’ splits up. ‘In Revelation 17:12, we read in greater detail: ‘And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received’ no kingdom as yet, but receive power as kings one hour with the Beast.’ This definition evidently points to dictators. Therefore, when the ‘Beast’ ascends out of the abyss then the ‘ten toed’ kingdoms (Daniel 2:42) of the fourth world—empire., the individual European States—will be ruled by dictators. (The number ‘ten’ need not be taken literally, but points to a multiple expressed by ten.)

“We see these dictators spring from the ground as if by command, in recent years. After Italy we saw Spain - and Greece (where it is temporarily discarded), Portugal, Poland, Hungary, and finally Jugo-Slavia, openly pass over to dictatorships. But these exist in many countries in a more or less covered manner, as in Bulgaria, Rumania and Turkey. Yes, even Germany, France and England are gradually preparing for dictatorships. We do not mention Russia, although it, too, is a dictatorship; because that country, as the ‘land of the North,’ occupies a position apart from the ‘Beast’—the Roman Empire.

.(‘In more recent times Germany has certainly passed to a dictatorship, and with respect’ to France, the following cutting from the Melbourne ‘Herald,’ of October 25th, is of interest: ‘Complete confusion has followed the defeat of the Daladier Ministry on its Budget. The task of the President (M. le Ilrun) in arranging a Ministry is unusually difficult. Probably France will eventually settle down to a national union coalition Government. The only real alternative would be a dictatorship, of which everyone is talking. There would be little opposition dictatorship, if a real leader could be discovered.’)

The Solidarity of the Ten Horns and the Beast.

- “In verse 13 we read: ‘These (the ten horns) have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the Beast.’ ‘This would indicate that the European dictators will join themselves to the ‘Head’ power of the Roman Empire. The individual rulers will find it to their interest, to support vigorously the Roman dictatorship, or at least to lean upon it, just as tyrannical governments in the past have mutually supported each other. An intimate covenant of friendship between Italy and Spain has been signed; Jugo-Slavia has suddenly shown a striking friendliness, recently toward its chief competitor in the Adriatic—’Italy.

“Thus, in an altogether ‘peaceful’ manner, a universal European Empire may again be formed under the leadership of Italy. The .Revelator .even mentions a giving up of power to the ‘Beast’ on the part of the dictators. This would mean the resurrection of the Roman Empire in its ancient form. This epoch is designated by the Revelator as ‘The Eighth Head.’

“While the democratic powers did .not succeed in bringing about a real league of nations or unity of purpose, it seems to be given to the dictator-ruled Italy to bring the other dictator States together into one uniform State under its own leadership. The present ‘League’ will probably not even be considered as a basis for this union. It is entirely foreign to the character of the ‘Beast,’ . being an institution brought forth by a pacifist, democratic spirit, and will probably wholly disappear. The unity pointed out in verse 13 will be brought about by an agreement between the dictators—by setting aside all right of co-determination and discussion on the part of the nations—since it could hardly be accomplished otherwise. This community of interests, which is well supported historically and logically, is also outlined in verse 17: ‘For God hath put it in their (the ten horns) hearts to fulfil His will and to agree and give their kingdom ‘unto the Beast, until the words of God •shall be fulfilled.’

“With this new formation of a United Europe under one supreme ruler, the ‘Beasts would, then have returned to its original state. We read that the eighth head is one of the seven already_ mentioned. Italy, the seventh head, would doubtless become the central government of this giant empire. Rome would thus again be the centre of the civilised world. A telegram by Mussolini, addressed to the Mayor of Rome, on October 31st, 1923, is significant: ‘You know what we want. Rome must again, as in the days ‘of old, become the city of cities—the Eternal City—just as she was in her golden age.’

(In this connection the following report from the Melbourne “Argus,” of August. 1st, is interesting:—” (hie of the most salient and dominant characteristics of life in Italy to-day is the wave of nationalism, which is sweeping through the country,” said Mr. R. A. Shaw, a graduate of: the Melbourne University, who returned from Italy yesterday. “‘Italy for the Italians’ is now the keynote of politics, and the creeds of national unity and independence are being fostered in every breast. Although foreigners receive every courtesy, they are not over welcome.”

Shaw continued. “Emanating from Mussolini, a strong movement is afoot which has as its principal object the return to the spirit of ancient Rome. Guided and strengthened by the glorious past of the ancient Empire the Italian people hope to advance to an even. more glorious future. There are manifestations of this spirit all through Italy, where the names of scores of small towns have been changed: from the Italian to the Roman equivalent. The town of Presto, in the province of Salerno, is a typical example of this remarkable movement, the name - having been changed to the Roman, Paestum. Mussolini himself is anxious to resemble a Roman Caesar.”)

The Beast Goes into Destruction.

“ ‘And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth (head), and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition’ (verse 11.)

“It is here indicated, as it is also in verse 8, that this resurrection of the Roman Empire takes place in the universal empire of the end, in order that in the purposes of God He may at one blow make an end of everything contrary to Him and to His power. Thus the Seed of the woman will bruise (literally ‘crush’) the serpent’s head” (Gen. 3:15).

The book goes on to show how the closing scenes in the great world drama may be expected to work out according to the Lord’s will and in His due time for the establishment of His kingdom. of righteousness which will stand for ever.

We believe that a careful study of this, booklet of 90 pages will be found profitable. by 'all the:, Lord's people, -who are rejoicing in the truth and looking for-Ward to the fulfilment of all. that our Lord has spoken in His wonderful revelation through the faithful Apostle.

Copies of "A Voice From Switzerland" are expected to arrive very shortly and may be had by all desiring them. The price will be just sufficient to cover the cost and postage.

Correspondence.

New South Wales, 5/10/33. Berean Biblical Institute,

Dear Brethren,—

I am herewith requesting a copy of "Herald of Christ's Kingdom," and also would like to know of your publications and prices. I wish to mention here how grateful I am to have been led to read "Desolations of the Sanctuary," as without such help I could never have been restored to the sweetness of the truth as when Brother Russell served us.

For the past few months I have been seriously troubled with the Rutherford doctrine; could see it was not the Master's voice, and yet was unable to extricate myself from the terrible force of its arguments and threats. For the past few weeks I associated, and on two occasions assisted in distributing their literature, supposing that such obedience was essential, but terribly worried all the time.

I am very relieved to know that the Lord has a means and place for comforting those who will not follow the stranger nor take part in the misrepresentation of our Father's name. I would like to mention the name of. the Sister who loaned me the book, "Desolations." I will be visiting her shortly, as she lives near at hand.

I have now broken off all connections with the Watch Tower Association, recognising that the truth and proper spirit of the Lord's people is not with them.

Thanking you again as the means of allowing me to regain the freedom of the sons of God, and thanking Him who is thus reaching out to such as me by this means. That many thus imprisoned will be ultimately delivered is our confidence, for we know that the Lord knows those that are His.

Your brother in Christ, P.A.

Dear Friend,—

I can truly say that the "People's Papers" are among some of the "fat things" to my soul. Every word is helpful, and I will pass them on to any whom I find will have the mind for them. Enclosed is a small offering to help on the work. When it is possible I will send more.

I have often wondered just what, "whosoever the carcase is there will the eagles be gathered together," means, and from the reading of the October copy of the "People's Paper" I was delighted to find an answer to my quest, viz., that when Jesus returns to His people one is to be taken and the other left. Where Lord? Answer: To be taken out from the nominal professing churches to be gathered together around the carcase" like the "eagles" gathered together, feeding on the Word of God. We are (if faithful stewards) taken out one by one and waited on by the Master, who will make us sit down to feast on the fat things of His Word.

Dear friend, I have the assurance of my salvation and have learnt to yield to God for victory over self, but I am hungry for a clearer understanding of the Scriptures. However, I am reading carefully the Bible, and am very interested and helped day by day. I am not yet quite clear of the manner of the Lord's Second Coming, but am prayerfully studying the subject.

I thank you for your help and cheer.

Yours in Christ Jesus, R.E.F.

[The booklet, "Christ's Return," deals with the important subject of the manner of Christ's return and manifestation. Its cost is just 4d., or sent free upon request].

South Australia, Oct. 20th, 1933. Dear Friends,—

I am enclosing stamps, and shall be very pleased if you will send me a copy of “Mythology Explained,” price 3d.

I have been hoping to have sent a subscription for the “People’s Paper,” which you have so kindly been sending me; but I am sorry that I am not able to do so yet. With your kind invitation to attend a convention when there is one in Adelaide, I should be very pleased to do so; but even if it were financially possible I would meet with family opposition. I have studied the copy of the “Plan of the Ages,” which I find most interesting. I hope to read all your books in time, and I am watching world events in connection with the Book of Revelation, and I would like to know if you have any explanation of the 12th chapter of Revelation.

Thanking you again for your assistance in my study of the Bible, Yours sincerely B.A.

Building a Disposition

“Well, I do hope that when I reach the age when I have- to be taken care of, I -shall be willing to let other people have their way instead of insisting upon my own and making it hard for everybody else,” said a clear, decided voice as three women parted at the street corner.

They had been discussing the troubles of an acquaintance. As the speaker departed, the other two looked at each other with a significant smile. This friend of theirs was one who had great faith in her own wisdom.

“I am afraid that virtue does not develop suddenly,” remarked one. “I suspect that the person who is to be gentle and unselfishly considerate in old age has to begin to cultivate that spirit much further back.”

That is the story of so many of our failures to attain Our ideals. We do not begin to practice their graces early enough. The strong, self-controlled, useful man-, hood or womanhood does not grow naturally from a, careless, self- indulged youth, and the beautiful old age that is a benediction is not likely to spring from the hasty, domineering spirit that has been allowed to rule middle life.

Character is a garden whose gracious flowering calls for early planting.

IT IS NOT THE DEED WE DO.

“It is not the deed we do,
Though the deed be ever so fair,

But the love that the dear Lord looketh for Hidden with holy care.

In the heart of the deed so fair.
“The love is the priceless thing,

The treasure our treasure must hold;
Or ever the Lord will take the gift,

Or tell the worth of the gold
By the love that cannot be told.”

The Wise Choice

“Choose ye this day whom ye will serve; as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord.”—Joshua 24:15.

THE Children of Israel had crossed Jordan. Moses was dead and Joshua was their leader. They were having no difficulty at that time; but Joshua thought that it was proper just then for them to make their decision—proper for them to decide whether or not they would be faithful to the Lord, or would allow themselves to be led away by the idolatry of the people who lived in Canaan. Joshua had called them together and had recounted to them the Lord’s blessings and favour which they had thus far enjoyed, and then expressed himself in the grand and noble sentiments of our text.

So, dear friends, we who realise that the Lord has been blessing, guiding and sustaining us in the past, should come to a full, positive decision as respects our course of life. The very fact of coming to a positive decision is a great blessing and a great help in the formation of character. Every time we come to a wise decision on any question, it strengthens mind and character, and makes us much more ready for another test—along some other line, perhaps.

We well recognise the fact that the entire consecration which the Christian makes, leaves nothing out; but we need to have some touchstone, something which will enable the mind to reach a decision quickly, and this touchstone should be God’s will, so that to perceive the Lord’s will on any subject would be to settle it without any temporising. Again, it is highly proper that we should reiterate our consecration, and thus make it prominent before others.

For instance, if we were at a testimony meeting, there would be nothing wrong in saying, “Whatever anyone else may do, I acknowledge God and will serve Him!”—not as a new vow, but as a fresh acknowledgment of the consecration vow we have already taken.

We are to recognise the difference between making a new covenant every day, and the daily renewing of our covenant; the one would be an impropriety; the other would be proper. If we have made a binding covenant for life, we should no more think of breaking it than would a man who had leased a house or sold it.

Every day we should renew our covenant with the Lord—renew it and make it fresh in our minds, thus showing that there has been no change on our part; that we are still in the same attitude. This is the same thought as was in the making of our consecration; we are dead with Christ—“Ye are not your own, ye are bought with a price.” We are exhorted to make this review of our lives and renewal of our consecration daily; to continue to keep this before our minds and hearts; to render our sacrifice to the Lord. Thus we are baptised by baptism into His death; and this baptism continues just as it was with our Lord. He had made His consecration and so it had to be completed; so it is with us; our vow, our covenant is unto death.

If the Lord’s consecrated people could be brought to the point where the chief aim in life, the burden of all their prayers, would be that they might have a larger measure of the Spirit of the Lord, the spirit of holiness, the spirit of the Truth, the spirit of Christ, the spirit of a sound mind, what a blessing it would mean! If then they should wrestle with Him until the breaking of day, their hold upon Him would be sure to bring the desired blessing. The Lord reveals Himself for the purpose of giving this blessing; but He withholds it until we learn to appreciate and desire it.

Hitlerism and the Churches.

In one of the telegrams of congratulation sent to Herr Hitler on his forty-fourth birthday the Stahlhelm leader's declared that under his leadership they would held' to complete his "mighty work—the creation of the German nation." It is clear that Herr Hitler is succeeding in his attempt to unify the political, commercial, business and religious life of the German people and that the German people are submissively accepting the domination of, the Nazi Commissioners in all departments of life. The plan which is known as the Gleichschaltung is being applied to the Protestant 'Churches. "The Times" correspondent, at Berlin, writing on the subject, said that the process began in Mecklenburg-Schwerin, where the Nazi Premier has appointed a Nazi "Commissioner^ for Tile Evangelical Lutheran Church," who has dissolved all administrative bodies of the Church in that State and taken over their functions.

The German Evangelical Church Union, the correspondent adds, has protested to the Government against this step, recalling, that Herr Hitler, in his Government declaration, solemnly guaranteed the independence and constitutional rights of the Church. On the other hand the German Christians—a Nazi organisation of Protestant churchgoers—demands "Bishops and not Parliaments"; they want their new national Church governed by men and not by Synods. The Gleichschaltung policy strikes at the independence of the Protestant State Churches in the various States and aims at creating a unified national Church, whose control will be centralised at Berlin.—''Christian World."

WHY DOUBT THE RESURRECTION ?

Who would imagine that from a single grain of seed a. huge tree would rise up, unless he had it as a certain fact by experience? In the extreme minuteness of a grain where is the wood buried, the roughness of the bark, the greenness of the root, the savour of the fruit, the sweetness of the scents, the variety of the colors, the softness of the leaves? Yet because we know this by experience, we do not doubt that all these spring from a single grain of seed. Where, then, is the difficulty that dust shall return into limbs, when we have every day before our eyes the power of the Creator, who in a marvellous manner from a grain creates wood and fruit.—S. Gregory.

THE LIFE OF JESUS

THE more we think of it the more marvellous it seems that the Gospel narratives record so many of the particulars of our dear Redeemer's ministry —miracles, teachings, etc.—yet never once descend to the discussion of commonplace events, nor of our Lord's sayings or doings other than those directly connected with His ministry. This is one of the strongest internal evidences that these books were written under divine supervision. Experience with the writings of men in all ages will assure all that it would be almost impossible for four men to write biographies of one person, such as these four Gospels are, without entering into social features and events. Our Lord's mother is barely mentioned, and this only where her life touched particularly with that of Jesus. Her husband, Joseph, was probably dead at the time our Lord's ministry began, yet no mention is made of this fact either.

Respecting our Lord's life, previous to His consecration at thirty years of age, we know scarcely anything. The four Gospels merely bring to our attention His miraculous birth, Herod's jealous fury, and the escape of the child before the massacre of the innocents, followed by the incident which occurred in His twelfth year, and the declaration that He increased in wisdom and stature and favor with God and man. How brief the record, yet how suggestive !: It would have been no part of the Gospel to have explained the details of His life- as a boy, as a young man, etc. It might, indeed, have satisfied the curiosity of some to have told us whether He was a 'farmer or a fisherman or a carpenter, matters about which people seem inclined to dispute. Undoubtedly the Lord's way in this matter was the better one. Our minds are more drawn to the important features of the Lord's work by reason of the brevity of the sketch given us of His earthly life and interest.

The important thing for us to know is simply stated, namely that He was the beginning of the creation of God--the first born of every creature; that in His preexistent condition He had glory with the Father before the world was, and was the Father's instrument in the creation of angels, principalities and powers and men, everything that was made (John 1.) The necessary particulars are also given us respecting the transference of this great spirit being to earthly human conditions—that He might become man and redeem man, the world; that He might be born under the Law and thus redeem those who were under the Law, the Jews. Let us then thank God heartily for the simplicity of the narrative, and for the fact that no item necessary for our comfort and peace and joy has been omitted therefrom, and that no needless items pertaining merely to earthly things have been permitted to intrude themselves and thus to dim in any measure the glorious record of the great love wherewith the Father loved us and the great redemption effected thereby.

We see that the boy Jesus, although miraculously begotten, not of the will of the flesh, nor of man, but by the holy Spirit, was permitted to grow after the ordinary manner, gradually getting stronger physically and mentally, being filled more and more with wisdom, and giving evidence that God's favor was upon Him. Quite probably Joseph,

His foster father, was a carpenter; and if so, the boy Jesus, unquestionably, like other boys, would have more or less association in the carpenter shop, its tools, etc. It has been wondered by some that our Lord never referred to carpenter tools or work in any of His teachings or parables, and this has been urged as an objection to the thought that He was reared in contact with such work and tools. It matters not so far as we can see. Our Lord addressed, not classes, but the masses; and quite probably the majority of the people at the time knew little about the carpenter's trade, tools, etc., even less than in our day. Hence, it was not necessary or appropriate that our Lord should use as figures and parables that which would not be common to the experiences of all or nearly all of his hearers,

In Luke 2:41 Joseph is evidently referred to as one of His parents. This is not in conflict, however, with the previous statements of the same writer, to the effect that Jesus was begotten, not by Joseph, but by the holy Spirit (Luke 1:30-35). We would consider it proper enough to-day that any child should speak of his foster father or stepfather as father without explaining the particulars of the relationship, and likewise it would be proper for the friends to speak of both father and mother as the parents of the child as in this verse, under consideration, and previous verses (Verse 27).

The narrative passes over the twelve years of Jesus' earthly life to tell us of the incident of His tarrying behind after having been with His parents at the Passover Feast. The religious Jews from all parts of the country went to Jerusalem upon these feast occasions according to the directions of the Law, and naturally enough close relatives travelled in each other's company considerably. Thus it was that in the large concourse returning from Jerusalem after the feast a whole day elapsed before the boy Jesus was missed by those who properly had guardianship over Him. Although admonished by the angel Gabriel that Jesus would in due time be greatly honored of God, and that He was born differently from others of the human family, nevertheless neither Mary nor Joseph seemed to have caught any considerable view of the greatness of the one whom they called their son Jesus. The prophecies spoken respecting Him, like all the prophecies of olden times, were more or less vague, and could not be comprehended except by the aid of the holy Spirit, which had not yet been given. His mother, Mary, however, we are told, kept all these things pondering in her heart, wondering what would be the consummation—little dreaming, we may be sure, how great her son must ultimately be made, according to the divine arrangement.

The story of the boy of twelve amongst the Doctors of the Law, discussing the various types of the Law, what these probably signified, and what would be expected to be their antitypes, furnish us a very interesting picture, especially when we remember that the one who was asking the questions was the one who ultimately would give correct answers to those questions in His own experiences. We are not to assume that this precocious boy of twelve was unduly bold or forward; we are not to presume that He undertook to teach the Doctors of the Law. He was not yet anointed to preach, and was, therefore, not yet qualified. The narrative is that He was found hearing the doctors and asking them questions, and not attempting to teach them. There is a good suggestion here—especially for such as are not permitted to teach, by reason of sex or insufficient years—namely, that even a child can ask questions, and in asking may suggest wonderful and powerful answers.

We may reasonably assume that Jesus had previously, after the manner of the Jewish boys, attended the synagogue worship at His home, and that hearing there the Law and the prophets, the Scriptures of the Old Testament, read Sabbath after Sabbath, and having a perfect memory and an active mind, because not blemished by sin and the fall, the various questions of the Law and the various declarations of the prophets would greatly interest Him—especially as He realised that He had left the Father and had come into the world to do a redemptive work.

The Doctors of the Law doubtless remarked that they had never had such pointed questions asked them respecting the Law and the prophets, even by wise men of their day and by each other; hence they evidently noticed the precocity of this boy. As He asked questions, which apparently showed that some of their interpretations were faulty and inconsistent, they in turn considered it not beneath themselves to ply the boy with questions, and according to verse 47 of this same chapter 2 of Luke, they got their questions answered in such a manner as amazed them. Nevertheless, we are to remember that our Lord Jesus could not have Himself understood the full meaning of the Law shadows and the prophecies at that time—nor until after His anointing with the holy Spirit (I Con 2:14.) This little item gives us a suggestion respecting the ability of mind that would belong to a perfect boy. It gives us a suggestion respecting what we may expect of the ancient worthies, also the world of mankind, when they shall be resurrected and brought to human perfection.

It was natural enough that after missing the boy for four days His mother should upbraid Him somewhat, and, taking Jesus' answer in its simplicity, we must suppose that He had been so absorbed with the opportunities and studies that the time had passed without His appreciating the trouble and inconvenience He was causing to others.

“Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business”? must have seemed strange enough even from so remarkable a boy. His parents did not fully comprehend the meaning of the words, but Mary set these apart with the other peculiar things to treasure up, hoping ultimately to see something that would fully justify the words, as she did afterwards see. After making this protest, respecting His desire to be engaged in the Heavenly Father's mission, studying His Word and teachings, and realising that His sentiments were not understood or appreciated, and that really He was still properly under subjection to His parents, Jesus said, no more, but went quietly with them to Nazareth and doubtless to His accustomed vocation.

Our Lord could not begin His ministry because He was under the Law and bound by its every restriction. We note, however, His promptness to engage in His Heavenly Father's business at the very earliest moment, as we read, “Now when Jesus began to be about thirty years of age He came to Jordan to be baptised.” We, who are not under the restraints of the Law Covenant but, on the contrary, are under grace, are not thus limited as to the time we may present our bodies- living sacrifices upon the Lord's altar to be used in His service; hence we rejoice the more if we can find that at an early date we can give our hearts and our all to Him who loved us and bought us with His precious blood.

It was not the babe of Bethlehem that was to bless the world, nor the boy of Nazareth, nor the young man of Capernaum, but it was to be a full grown man, a mature one, whose sacrifice would offset the sin of Adam, redeem him and his posterity and satisfy the demands of divine justice against the condemned race. So,,then, while interested in everything pertaining to the divine character and plan, while interested to know how Jesus grew in stature and in wisdom, as He approached the maturity of manhood at thirty years, while interested to know about His miraculous birth, our chief interest in all of these things is that they established our faith in Him as the man Christ Jesus—that He was holy, harm-less, undefiled and separate from sinners, and, therefore, able to make the atonement sacrifice—to give His son's n life a ransom, a corresponding price for the life of Adam, and thus for the life of the whole race of Adam, in his loins at the time of his transgression and thus sharers with him in his condemnation.

We do well, therefore, to dwell less upon the birth and, infancy of Jesus and more and more to grasp the precious themes set before us in the Gospel, of which the cross is the great point or centre of interest. Similarly, we regard all the followers of the Lord—not according to the flesh but according to the Spirit. True, it is good to know of some that even before their consecration and baptism of the Spirit were noble minded, virtuous and irreproachable, and there is a measure of regret when we hear of some who had a contrary disposition to this; nevertheless, our interest centers around the fact that they did turn from sin, did become the Lord's followers and that they have been begotten of His holy Spirit. In this we rejoice. Thus we know each". other according to the Spirit as New Creatures in the Lord, and thus we know our Lord as the New Creature, as the Apostle suggests, "Though we have known Christ after the flesh, henceforth, know we Him so ne more." Our special interest centers in our Lord from the moment of His anointing of the Spirit until He completed the work there begun three and one-half years later on the cross, crying, "It is finished." Our, interest still holds beyond that point in the resurrection of our Lord from the dead, and the evidence thus .given us that the begetting of the Spirit at His baptism became the birth of the Spirit at His resurrection, and that He was thus the first born from the dead, born of the Spirit to spirit conditions. Then our hope is to follow in His steps, and thus realise the promise that if we suffer with Him we shall also be glorified together and share 'His Kingdom and His nature in glory.

Each in his way is indispensable. To do our own share in the acting, and to feel that each one is an integral, essential portion of the whole, not interfering with the rest, ' is co-operating best in the work.—F. W. Robertson.

“COVET EARNESTLY THE BEST.”

God has His best things for the few

Whose love shall stand the test;

God has His second choice for those Who do not crave His best.

It is not always open sin

That risks the promised rest;

A good more often is the foe

That keeps us from the best.

The Lord is My Shepherd.

The Prophet David wrote the 23rd Psalm concerning himself; but in his words there is still deeper signification, namely, that Jehovah is the Shepherd of the anti-typical David—The Christ, of which Jesus is the Head and the Church His Body.

In proportion as any are in an attitude of mind in harmony with the Lord they are out of harmony with their present environment, in which the great Adversary is seeking their destruction, under conditions unfavorable - for their spiritual development as the Lord's "sheep." Foxes, wolves, lions and even cattle have means of defense and offense; but the sheep has practically none. It seems to have no judgment; therefore, the sheep is de-pendent on the shepherd. In other words, it is out of its environment if away from the shepherd. God provided for man's protection, but by reason of sin the race got into the wilds and became exposed to various difficulties which otherwise' would not have been man's lot.

Those who are the "sheep" will come back into harmony with the Lord. As represented in our text, the Church class comes back in the present time. We all recognise, as the days go by, how necessary is the Divine care. As we come to see the Divine Plan, we see that "all who are of this fold," all those who will come into harmony with God, will have this care; and that eventually there shall be one Shepherd and one flock.

Our Lord Jesus is the representative of the Father. Humanity, as the Lord's sheep, went astray. All of Adam's posterity are now astray. The Great Shepherd sent His Son for the lost sheep. He is seeking them and will ultimately find all who belong to this true flock. He is, therefore, in the highest sense of the word, the Bishop, or Shepherd of our souls, the Good Shepherd who laid down His life for the sheep.

The trouble is within us.

This last century, says Dr. Fosdick, was lighted in by tallows dips and out by electricity; rode in on horseback and out in an aeroplane; came in talking like a Neanderthal man and ended using a microphone; commenced with quill pens and finished with linotype; started with hands for labour and ended with the har-nessed forces of the universe. It is an amazing civilization. But there is something the matter with it. Look anywhere you will—at family life or city governments, at private morality or public wars, at the swift increase of mental disease and the universal evidence of nervous overstrain—something is the matter with it. The need cannot be met by inventive ingenuity. Increasing our speed will not help. Multiplying our machinery will not save us. The need is spiritual life, wise enough and powerful enough to master the instruments we have created and make them servants of an enriched humanity. The trouble is within us.

Pacific School of Religion

PEAKING at the Pacific School of Religion, at Berkeley, Cal., U.S.A.; Dr., Dwight Bradley made some plain statements regarding the sad conditions of the churches to-day. What he describes is very much in line with the prophetic anticipations of Revelation 3:17. He says, "We receive new members into our churches and add up the number with some pride. Our prayer meetings, however, are pitiful, and when we are honest with ourselves we realise how parched and barren is the soil in which the 'souls of our constituents, with a few exceptions, are struggling to keep alive . . . They are hungry and thirsty for religion. It is in us that the lack is to be found. We have no food or drink to give them. Or perhaps possessing a few loaves and fishes we do not know how to perform the miracle that will feed the multitude in the desert. Nevertheless, it is for reality in religion that people are searching, and which they are finding in sometimes bizarre places outside the church."

One could not help deploring this sad and all too true statement, when reading in a recent leading London religious journal an appeal of an anxious bereaved father for comfort. He had been a lay preacher for 32 years, but now that his much loved and talented daughter, in whom his affections and hopes were centred, had been killed, he felt his faith so shattered that he could not enter the pulpit—he must stop preaching. He surely, "asked for an egg and received a stone." The reverend gentleman responded with expressions of great sympathy, but acknowledged that he would feel about the same. He said he could not preach a God that permitted such a thing—he could not understand it, and it was just better to let time heal and try to think of God as loving and merciful, although there were such dreadful things taking place that seemed so out of accord with the thought of an all powerful God of love and mercy. He said no one could explain why God permitted such things. So the people perish through lack of knowledge. "There is a famine in the land, but not for bread."

It is one of the signs given by our Lord (in Matt. 24) respecting His second presence, that those who were hungry for spiritual food would be separated from the church systems, two might be in a (creed) bed, one should be taken, another left; two might be grinding at the mill (trying to find food for the hungry); one would be taken and the other left; two in the field (the world) one taken, the other left. The disciples asked where would they be taken to? And the reply was, "Where the 'carcase' or the body is, thither will the eagles be gathered together" (Matt. 24:28; Luke 17:34-37.) That is to say that, being unable to find spiritual food in the churches the hungry ones, like eagles, seek it elsewhere.

How strange that a man could be a preacher for 32 years of the Gospel of how "God gave His only begotten Son" to die on the behalf of sinners—not to be quickly killed, but in agony and the torture of the cross—yet, as soon as one of the calamities which are happening to thousands every day, comes to him in taking away his lovely (daughter), he finds his faith too weak. His knowledge of God, of the great Divine Plan of the Ages, is so lacking, that his faith crumbles up. Certainly we agree that he should stop preaching until he can teach a reasonable doctrine and be able to show that God is not responsible for all the sin, sickness, death and calamities, which abound everywhere. Mankind, represented in our first parent, disobeyed God, chose to obey Satan and God has simply withdrawn His providence and protection from the human family and left them to learn the hard lesson of experience. Left them to see how wretched the condition is outside of the Divine providence. Then God, in His wisdom and love, has arranged that the penalty for sin having been paid by Christ all shall have an opportunity of serving righteousness and obtaining eternal life.

It may be argued, but surely God will protect those who believe and are Christians. Yes, indeed, "Saints are His peculiar care"; He will, indeed, make all things work together for good to them who love Him and are called according to His purpose. The question is, who is to judge as to what is good for one or another? We are not capable of discerning just what experience will prove to be best for us. We know, however, that even the experiences of our Lord Jesus, terrible as they were, all worked out good to Him as well as to the whole world. We know too, that God loved His son as much as any parent can love his child; "Like as a father pitieth his children so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him." Yet He allowed His Son to pass through the most terrible ordeal and cruel death. Then why should we think that we should be spared from such experiences. We have no right to the love which Jesus so well merited. As Christians, on the other hand, we have covenanted to follow Christ, to walk in His steps and have yielded ourselves in consecration to God, that His will should be our will. "We have taken up our cross to follow Christ. We shall be tested, we must be eroded, and if we fully trust in God as our Heavenly Father, then we shall know that the fiery trials which are sure to come are designed not to destroy our faith, but to lead us step by step to "trust Him more," and we learn like Cowper that:—

"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform;
He plants His footsteps in the sea
And rides upon the storm.

His purposes will ripen fast,
Unfolding every hour ;
The bud may have a bitter taste
But sweet will be the flower."

So we trust and look forward to the completion of the Divine Plan, when not only the Church shall be glorified with her Lord, but the whole groaning creation shall be delivered from their travailing in pain into the glorious liberty of the children of God (Romans 8:19-22).

Dear Brethren in the Lord,

Greetings! Just a line in remitting 5/- as subscription towards a copy of the "People's Paper," which you have been so kindly forwarding me at the request (I believe) of dear Bro. Nicholson. I have long been wanting to send a few shillings, and the Lord knows how we enjoy the pages of this little "Paper." You have been sending me two and sometimes three, copies, and I have been passing the extra copies on to the brethren, who, in turn, have been passing them on to friends.

Our little Class at Durban are very earnest students, and all are looking forward to making their calling sure. The "Peoples Paper" and "Herald" are looked for each month, and I know that in my home their pages are read and re-read. We are at present studying the 1st' Vol. of "Studies in the Scriptures," and are receiving a' great amount of blessing and enlightenment from its pages, more so as we see the times in which we are now living and the trouble in the world. Unemployment is still very great here in South Africa, and many are on relief work, yet there are many thousands unemployed.

Should you see Bro. Nicholson we should be very grateful if you would convey to him our very best love, and hope that he is still pressing along towards the mark of perfection, and still about his Father's business. How we have enjoyed his visits to Durban the great God whom we love and desire to please alone knows, for He alone can read our hearts.

I will now wish you joy in the Lord and His service, and close with Christian love to you all.

Your Brother by His Grace, G.W.

Dear Friends,

Greetings in the Master's name. I am pleased to have the opportunity of writing. I would like you to send some literature to New Zealand for me. I have a young friend there, and both he and his wife have recently accepted Jesus and are starting out in a new life. Naturally I am delighted, and realising what a help you have been to me, I thought that they couldn't do better than become interested in the "Bereans." I do appreciate your "Paper," and there is no doubt life is very different under the standard of the Cross.

Things are very complex to-day; the stage seems set for a remarkable manifestation of interesting events. However, these things and the secrets thereof belong to God. The Man from Calvary has given us our instructions; I know I fall short a long way, but the narrow way is not easy.

Well, brethren, I must close. Again thanking you for what you are doing for me and hundreds of others. Your Brother in Christ,

R.V.W.

P.S.—I will enclose . Use your own discretion on what to send. I would suggest “Some of the Parables.”

Victoria, 19/11/33.

Dear Brother,—

The little parcel of tracts for distribution came to hand alright, also your kind letter. The tracts are very suitable, touching briefly but clearly on many vital Bible truths in a way calculated to cause the readers to desire more detailed knowledge. I will do my best to place them well. This is forest country with but a small scattered population, and not many of them have the hearing ear, but there are a few who read eagerly and understandingly. These few I help all I can. Some of the tracts I will distribute by post as far as Western Australia and Echuca, to my sisters and to others in different parts of Victoria.

I am enclosing stamps for you to send a copy of “A Voice from Switzerland” to me when they come to hand,

You asked me in your letter if I had read the “Divine Plan of the Ages”; and you will excuse me if I give a very long reply. In my youth I was taught in the Wesley Sunday School till 16 years of age; when a young man I became a member of the S.A., and was a bandmaster there for 16 years. I earnestly sought to be perfect, while some members, according to their testimony, really thought they had attained that desirable experience, so I thought they were better than myself. And when the leaders of meetings would sometimes, as it were, almost hold the people over the mouth of hell and stress its tortures I used to feel almost angry instead of saying amen; for this I also blamed myself. Further, when we were taught that death was an immediate passport to heaven or the region of fire and brimstone, in my mind I would be debating, if so where does the resurrection and day of judgment come in. I was behind the rest again; I could not understand it, but I do now. The point I want to stress is this: there is no man with an honest desire for the unadulterated truth in Christ Jesus, but what God in some way will have it brought clearly to him. The way in my case was this:—I was on a visit to a town, and in a friend’s house on the mantelshelf was a book. I picked it up and was at once intensely interested; it answered all my questions and seemed to be a veritable Bible key. That book was the “Divine Plan of the Ages,” and since then the Bible is to me an intelligible book, and God has an exalted place in my heart and mind.

I have read “Foregleams”; it is very good, and I intend to get you to post one to an address for me; what is the price with postage ? I hope I have not wearied you.

Dear Sir,

Many thanks for the loan of book, “Divine Plan of the Ages.” It certainly is a book well worth reading, and does all you claim for it. Before reading this book I had just read “The Martyrdom of Man,” by W. Read. It is only by reading such books and comparing them that the truth is driven home to one.

I have not been of a deeply religious mind for a number of years, having come to the conclusion that religion draws but the Church repels. I am sorry to say that the majority of our present-day ministers do not preach the Word as it should be. For the falling off of church-goers they are themselves to blame. Money and the greed for a higher promotion is overcoming their higher ideals. How often to-day do we see (especially in small country towns) ministers surrounded with all the luxuries of the present day, whilst the average member of the congregation cannot afford to give what they put in the collecting box? I think that the race is becoming as warped in mind as it is in body.

Wishing you every success in the future,

I am, yours truly, R.J.

Wisdom from Above

Wisdom is the principal thing.” “With all thy getting get understanding,” says wrote the wise man, Solomon, and so we all agree: wisdom is necessary at the very beginning of any matter that would result favorably. Wisdom is craved by the whole world of mankind, and the majority, even while going in divers directions, would claim to be seeking, to walk in wisdom’s ways. How important, then, that we discriminate as between the true wisdom and that which it is frequently misnamed wisdom, which is really folly !

One of the first lessons of life to be learned is, that our own judgments are unsafe, and even those who are least unbalanced by the fall are liable to make the mistake of seeking wisdom in a wrong direction—leaning to their own understanding (Prov. 3:5.) Those, therefore, who would take the wisest course should promptly admit their own unwisdom and seek for divine direction, divine wisdom. “If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God who giveth to all liberally and upbraideth not” (James 1:5).

But alas, how few are disposed to accept the wisdom that cometh from above ! The majority have so large a degree of selfishness that they seem, indeed, to make miserable failures out of the best opportunities of their lives, before they realise that they lack wisdom and need guidance by the great Teacher. Hence, as the Lord declares, only the humble, only the “poor in spirit,” are in the way that leads to eternal life and the kingdom—because only these will seek for and obey the heavenly wisdom from the great Counsellor. This class alone is in the condition to be taught of God: and concerning all who shall attain to the fulness of divine favor it is written, “They shall all be taught of God.”

For the humble, then, God has provided true wisdom in Christ. His words, no less than His example, show us that we are sinners and that “no man cometh unto the Father” except by Him. He tells us of the Father’s pity, and of the redemption provided through His own blood, and of our privilege to accept of divine grace unto full forgiveness and reconciliation, and of our need of the heavenly wisdom for every step of the journey, if we would walk the narrow way, which leads to the glory of the kingdom and life everlasting; and all who accept this “call” accept the great Advocate’s instruction and guidance, as the very essence of divine wisdom. With varying degrees of promptness and after varying degrees of wandering from this good Shepherd, and being sought and found by Him, the faithful eventually reach the position where they put no confidence in themselves and their own wisdom, but all confidence in the wisdom of Him whom God hath appointed to be our wisdom—“who of God is made unto us wisdom.” When this degree of progress has been attained, a measure of rest and contentment takes possession of the true sheep, which permits them to look up to God with confidence in every matter and at every time—especially in seasons of distress and grief and trial. They learn not to trust to their own wisdom any longer; but to trust implicitly to the wisdom and goodness of the great Shepherd.

But not for a considerable time is such a development of confidence in the Lord’s wisdom attained: meantime they have many battles and contentions against the wiles of Satan, who would tempt them to use their own wisdom, or the wisdom of other men, and to doubt the results of following the divine wisdom and its programme. On every hand, the flesh, assisted by the devil, offers inducements and seductions to follow its way and to cease to follow in the Lord’s way. In business affairs, in church affairs, in home and family affairs, the temptation is continually advanced that we should choose our own way, follow our own preferences and thereby reap larger and better results. It is only after considerable experience, and frequently after many failures, that the “pilgrim” for the heavenly country learns to trust no wisdom but that which cometh down from above and is in accordance with the Divine Word. Describing the attitude of the true children of God, abiding in Christ as branches in the vine, the Apostle says:—“He hath abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence; having made known unto us the mysteries of His will” (Eph. 1:8).

“We also pray for you and desire that ye might be filled with the knowledge of His will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding, that ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God” (Col. 1:9, 10).

Let your hearts be “knit together in love, and unto all riches of the full assurance of understanding, to the acknowledgment of the mystery of God, and of the Father and of Christ; in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge” (Col. 2:2, 3).

Notwithstanding the fact that those who accept Christ are the “meek,” “the poor in spirit,” and lower than the average standard along the lines of worldly wisdom and power and wealth, yet, nevertheless, the acceptance by these of Christ as their wisdom makes them really wiser than others ;—not only in respect of the greater riches which they are laying up in heaven, but also wiser in respect of the most ordinary affairs of this present life. This is not because they miraculously receive new brains or a better and more orderly arrangement of the brains they have, but because submitting their judgments on every subject to the will of the Lord, and walking according to His directions in every matter and in every particular, they have His wisdom, His spirit, to guide them. Hence, although their own minds are imperfect and unbalanced as much or more than the average of the race, the Apostle is able to say of such, “God hath given us the spirit of a sound mind” (2 Tim. 1:7).

The spirit of a sound mind enables its possessors to view things more correctly than they would be able to view them of themselves; for instance, it cautions us not to think of ourselves more highly than we ought to think, but according to the measure of the Lord’s spirit possessed. Yet while cautioning us to be very humble, it guards us against being fearful, men-pleasers, flatterers. While constraining us to be peace-lovers and peace-makers, and kind, and forgiving, and generous, without maliciousness or vindictiveness, it nevertheless cautions us to ‘be firm respecting principles of righteousness and truth. We may and should gladly yield our own preferences to those of others, for the sake of serving others or doing them good, yet we must never do so at the expense of the truth and principle. We should never say, let us do evil that good may result, let us yield some principles for the sake of harmony and the good of the cause. Alas, this seems to have been the difficulty with some of God’s people all through the Ages. The fear of man, that bringeth a snare, has interfered with the fear of God, which is the beginning of wisdom. All Spiritual Israelites should learn, should fix it in their hearts, that while moderation and a disposition to be obliging and helpful and considerate of the wishes of others are prominent elements of Christian grace and to be cultivated, nevertheless the principles of the divine law are never to be infringed, nor even compromised for the sake of blessing others.

We are to remember that when great emergencies arise God is superior to every one of them, and they can never be understood as His voice commanding us to violate the principles of righteousness, nor to compromise respecting the truth—the foundation doctrines of ‘Christian faith and hope, and the truths of this harvest period of the Age. We are to do our duty in harmony with His law as kindly, as gently, as wisely as possible, and leave all the results to Him—the Almighty. Whatever others may do, how-ever, others may think or compromise, let us take the Apostle’s standpoint and say, “We can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth” (2 Cor. 13:8).

In the family, love is to be the rule, blended with mercy and justice, kindness and generosity; nevertheless, the rod is not to ‘be spared if its use be necessary to the proper training of the child. And the Christian father is not only to be “kind and gentle toward all,” but is to “rule his own family well, having his own children in proper subjection.” Thus, we might multiply the various counsels of the heavenly wisdom, as it enters into the lives of those who are fully devoted to the Lord and gives them wisdom and grace for the affairs of life far beyond any that they would have had without it.

After exhorting us that “If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God,” the Apostle James (1:5) says, “Who among you is a wise man and endued with knowledge? Let him show out of a good conversation his works with meekness of wisdom. But if ye have strife in your hearts, glory not (to think yourselves led of the Lord and guided by His true wisdom), and lie not against the truth. This wisdom (which in selfishness seeks its own gratification and advancement, envying others and striving selfishly for its own advancement) descendeth not from above but is earthly, sensual, devilish. For where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work; but, the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, without hypocrisy. And the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make for peace” (James 3:13-18).

Let us remember well this analysis of the wisdom that comes from above.

First, it is pure, guileless, sincere, honorable, open above board: it cometh to the light, loveth the light, it is not of the darkness, nor of sin, it is utterly opposed to secret whisperings, back bitings and all slanderous and underhanded works and ways. It takes the word at His word, receiving the pure word of wisdom into a good and holiest heart. It is honest: it does not deceive itself into believing that self-will is the Lord’s will.

Secondly, it is peaceable: that is to say, so far as is possible and consistent with honesty and purity it is peaceable.

It loves and desires peace, harmony, unity; but since peace is not first, but purity first, therefore it can only be fully at peace and fully in harmony with that which is pure and honest and good.

Thirdly-, it is gentle—it is not rude, coarse, rough, and has no sympathy with such a spirit and such methods. It is not only of God, but God-like. Nevertheless, its gentleness follows its purity and ‘peaceableness: those who receive this wisdom are not first or primarily gentle, and therefore peaceable and pure, but they are primarily pure, sanctified with the truth, and therefore are peaceable, and therefore are gentle, and therefore, are easy to be entreated. But they can only be easily entreated in harmony with purity, peace and gentleness: they cannot be easily entreated to assist in any evil working of bearing false witness or scandalmongers, or slandering, „or evil-speaking, nor into any of the works of the flesh and the devil.

Fourthly, it is full of mercy and good fruits: it rejoices in mercy, because that is a part of its very self; mercy and all the good fruits of the spirit of the Lord are sure to proceed from the heart in which rules the spirit of love, honesty, purity, peaceableness and gentleness. But this mercy, while taking hold upon the ignorant and the unintentional evildoers with sympathy and help, cannot have the slightest sympathy or affiliation with willful wrong-doers, because the spirit of wisdom is not first mercy, but first purity; hence, the mercy of the spirit of wisdom can only exercise itself upon the unintentional wrong-doers, or the ignorant wrong-doers.

Fifth, without partiality (which would signify injustice): the purity and peace, gentleness, mercy and good fruits of the spirit of wisdom, lead us to lie no respecters of persons except as character shall demonstrate real value: the outward features, the natural man, the color of his skin, etc., 'are ignored by the spirit of the Lord, the spirit of wisdom that cometh from above. It is impartial and loves that which is pure, good, peace-able, gentle, true, wherever found and under whatever circumstances it exhibits itself.

Sixth, it is without hypocrisy. This heavenly wisdom is so pure, so peaceable, so gentle, and so merciful toward all that are worthy of consideration or notice, that there is no necessity for hypocrisy where it controls. And it is bound to be out of harmony, out of sympathy and out of fellowship with all that is sinful; and in fellow-ship and in sympathy with all that is pure or that is making for purity and peace and gentleness—so that it has no room for hypocrisy.

Let us, dear brethren, as children of God, more and more fully accept Christ as our wisdom, for all of the affairs of life—little as well as great, temporal as well as spiritual. Let us seek to be More and more filled with the spirit of true wisdom, that cometh from above, whose ultimate teaching is holiness to the Lord.

Missions Without the Cross

“Where can the motive for foreign missions be found, and how can energy for it be expected to well up and overflow,” asks Toyohiko Kagawa in an article on the “Rethinking Missions” report in “The Christian Century” (Chicago), “except as proceeding from a sense of absolute commission from God,? There would have been no need for Christ to be crucified merely to propagate humanism!”

“There are, indeed, many religions in the Orient; but is there any that clearly teaches that God loves humanity with the love of the Cross? Buddhism propounds abstract principles, but it failed to wipe away my tears. To this day Buddhism compromises With the system of public prostitution in Japan. Shintoism and militarism, and Brahmanism and superstition, are closely associated. I do not wish to attack other re-ligions, but it is useless to be too lenient with them. Man will not be saved thus.”—’Christian World.”

It is, indeed, good to have such a sound note of warning coming from Mr. Kagawa. He recently visited America and was rather scornfully referred to as though the Ministry of the West disdained to learn from an Asiatic, but while the majority of professing Christian ministers, to-day, are losing faith in the Bible as the inspired Word of God, and, in the necessity of the Cross of Christ for the salvation of the world, Mr. Kagawa seems to be on the only sure foundation. “God commendeth His love toward us in that while we were yet sinners. Christ died for us” (Rom. 5:8).

Pressing Towards The Mark.

“Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended, but this one thing I do, forgetting those things that are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.--”Phil. 3: 13, 14.

IN the epistle to the Philippians, St. Paul expresses his full appreciation of his opportunity to gain a prize, something worthy of laying hold upon, of grasping fully, of getting possession of. What was that - for which the great Apostle was striving and which he had not yet attained? He spoke of this thing as a prize, which he was pressing along to win.

We may view “the mark for the prize of the high calling” from two standpoints, both of which are correct. From one standpoint, this mark is that of heart-likeness to God’s dear Son, of perfection of intention, of love for righteousness, for God, for the brethren of Christ, and for the world, even our enemies. This degree of character-development should be attained as early as possible in our Christain experience, and should be such that, were we to die at any time after its attainment, God would count us worthy of a share in the First Resurrection.

From the other, standpoint, this “mark for the prize of the high calling” is that of crystallisation of character in the likeness of our Lord. After having attained a heart-likeness to Christ, we must hold it fast, and see that in all the testings which the Lord permits to come upon us, we are counted by Him as overcomers, not in our own strength, hut in that of our Redeemer. This mark of crystallised character is not attained so early in our Christain experience as is the mark of character-development. But by fighting the good fight until the end of our course, we crystallise our characters in love for the principles of righteousness, for God, for the brethren and even for our enemies. If thus faithful, we shall win the prize of glory, honour and immortality.

There is no reason to think that our consecration is the mark; for our testing, our proving, comes after our consecration, and not before it. No one would be at the mark merely because he is consecrated, but because he had endured the testing, thus proving that his consecration was from the heart and that he was sincere in the devotion of his every power to the service of God. We cannot suppose that the mark is reached the next moment after consecration. Some degree of character-development must be possessed; there must be some mark of character, in order that God may count that person worthy of everlasting life.

God’s standard of character is perfection, which must be manifested by loyalty and obedience under whatever tests He permits to come to individuals upon any plane of life. No one will get the prize of everlasting ‘life unless he successfully passes those tests. We realise that the Church has been under trial throughout the ‘Gospel Age, as to her worthiness to obtain “glory, honour and immortality”—Joint-heirship with her Lord. Rom. 8:17.

From the Scriptures, we learn that throughout the Messianic Age the world will be tried by The Christ, and that even after passing that test they will not receive the reward of everlasting life until God shall have proved them at the end of Christ’s reign by loosing Satan ‘for a “little season” (1 Cor. 15:24; Rev. 20:7-10.) The fact that the world is thus to be tried by both The Christ and God confirms the thought that God has a standard, or mark of character to be attained by ‘all those who are loyal and obedient to Him—on any plane of existence.

While this mark of character to be attained by the world during Messiah’s reign is not the one to which St. Paul refers in this epistle, nevertheless there is such a character-mark to be reached by mankind. Those who then attain the mark will have everlasting life on the human plane. But those who attain the mark to which the Apostle refers will be given eternal life on the divine plane.

The Mark of Character-Crystallisation.

The Apostle was a noble example of one who had reached the mark. So far as we know, he was ready to die at any time; hence it was not this mark of character-development to which he had not attained. He had not yet attained to the prize itself, and could not do so until his change should come. He was constantly pressing along, trusting that God would give him all the things that are in reservation for “them that love Him.” (1 Cor. 2:9) We could not think the Apostle to mean that he would reach this mark of character-development just at the moment before death. This would be an absurdity of thought.

Our Lord Jesus was at the mark of perfect character at the time of His consecration; and He maintained Himself at the mark. As a sacrifice He would have been acceptable at any time. It was His part to consecrate His life and not to hold it back. It was the Father’s part so to arrange matters that the Jews might not take our Lord until the Father’s hour for Him had come. In everything that He did He submitted Himself to the Father’s will. Our Lord spoke of His “cup” as the one which the Father had prepared for Him.—John 18: 11.

If our Lord had determined for Himself the time and the manner of His death, then He was pouring the cup. If the Jews had determined these points, then they were pouring the cup. But neither our Lord nor the Jews did so, for both time and manner were foretold by the Prophets. Our Lord took the cup and accepted it as the Father’s providence for Him. If the Father’s providence had led to His death a year sooner or two years sooner, if the Father’s will had been expressed in our Lord’s crucifixion at an earlier time, even then it would have been well with Him. But He “learned obedience by the things which He suffered.”—Heb. 5: 8; 2: 10.

At Jordan, our Lord was shown to be perfect and to have made a perfect consecration, both by the descent of the holy Spirit and by the voice of Jehovah. (Matt. 3: 16, 17.) He had also a perfect body—though it was earthly—in which the New Creature operated. But His obedience must be tested—His loyalty even unto death. Whatever the degree of testing to which our Lord might have been subjected, it was just the right amount, according to the Father’s wisdom. Our Lord would have been just as much an overcomer had He died at any time after His consecration. But if He had died sooner than He did, it would merely have proved that the Father did not require as much evidence of our Lord’s faithfulness and loyalty as He did require.

Our Lord an Overcomer at Consecration.

Here some one may ask, “Is it proper to say that our Lord was an overcomer as a New Creature at the time when He made His consecration?”

Our answer is, Yes. An overcomer is a victor. The word does not imply that a man has completed the victory, however; for we sometimes say, He will lead them from victory to victory. So with our Lord. He con-

Hinted faithful as an overcomer down until death; but He was not counted as an overcomer until death, ‘Between the Father and our Lord as a human being there was no Mediator, and as a New Creature there was neither Robe to cover nor Advocate to represent in case of any deviation from, the will of God; and the slightest deflection therefrom would have meant the Second Death.

The Scriptures give us two pictures of our Lord as an overcomer at His consecration, where He gained the first great victory over His flesh. The first of these pictures (Lev. 16: 11), the killing of the bullock on the Day of Atonement, represents the death of our Lord’s humanity at the moment when He consecrated Himself at Jordan. There He gained a victory and continued victorious until the end of His course.

The second picture is found in Rev. 5: 2-7. Here our Lord is represented by a newly slain lamb. He was not this newly slain lamb at His death when He had finished His course, but at His consecration, when He began His course. The proclamation which the Revelator heard was, “Who is worthy to open the Book, and to loose the seals thereof ?” We read that John wept much. “And one of the elders saith unto me, Weep not: behold the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Root of David, hath prevailed to open the Book and to loose the seven seals thereof And lie came and took the Book out of the right hand of Him that sat upon the Throne.” Our Lord alone was worthy of the honour of receiving the Divine Plan into His care. We also read that John looked and saw the newly slain Lamb open the Book.—2 Rev. 6.

After our Lord had entered upon His consecration He was the newly slain Lamb. Then the Father gave into His hand the scroll of the great Divine Plan of the Ages—the scroll written on both inside and outside. The outside He was already able to read. But the inside, which contained information on spiritual things, remained sealed.

As soon as our Lord came up out of the water after His baptism, He was begotten of the holy spirit and began to understand spiritual things. "The heavens (higher things) were opened unto Him." The time when He began to be considered the slain Lamb, the time when the scroll was delivered to Him, was the time of His consecration.

Submission the First Requisite—Patient Endurance the Second.

A good illustration of the process of character-development and crystallisation is afforded by the work of a potter. First, he must select the right kind of clay, for some clays would produce very coarse ware, others would crack or warp in the drying, and still others would not stand the intense heat. Having selected the proper clay, the potter subjects it to very many processes of grinding, mixing and wetting until it comes from the mill a soft, plastic mass of the consistency of tough dough, ready for the potter's use. Then comes the moulding into the article desired. The dish is formed, or shaped, with care and dried. Next it is placed in the kiln and fired with an intense heat for two or three days and nights.

Then it requires a long time to cool before it can be removed' from the kiln. But even then it is only a porous, leaky vessel, altogether unfit for use until it has been dipped into a liquid glaze, or slip, which it readily absorbs.

Again it is subjected to the heat of the glaze kiln, which not only melts the glaze, but converts it into a perfectly transparent glaze all over the surface, making the article beautifully smooth and comely. But if the vessel is of very choice porcelain, to be made still more attractive to the eye by decorations, the ornamentation and gilding must be done at this stage, and the vessel must again be placed in the kiln for the third firing. Some vessels, which have stood all the other tests, fail at this point and are cast into the waste heap. But if the vessel passes successfully the last test, it is ready for the service for which it was designed.

So in our Lord's case. Not only was He perfect as a man, but His own will was in complete subjection to the Father's will. When trials came, there was no swerving, no twisting, no 'bending. He was of the proper material. His heart (applying this word to the mind), was of the proper character. So must it be with us. Those who will be accepted and found worthy of the great reward will be of His character-likeness in this respect; they will 'be loyal to God's will. Not only will they endeavour both to ascertain and to do the Father's will, but they will be in heart submission to that will in every degree. The "cup" they will be required to drink is the same that our Lord drank—and "all of it!"

To follow in His steps, we must first reach this mark of character-development ; and having done all, we must stand there. It is well to repeat the thought that it will not do for us to think that one reaches the mark of proper character-development just at the moment of death. Character should be attained as soon as possible. But having reached this character-development called the "mark," it is for us to stand faithful, and not be thrust away from it 'by the opposition of the world, the flesh and the Devil. All such opposition must be endured before we can win the prize. Some of the noblest characters, who have been in an acceptable condition, and used of the Lord, did not get to the mark until they had passed through certain severe experiences.

"We Have they Mind of Christ."

The thought of the Apostle seems to be: Here is a certain line of conduct and character-development which God has marked out ; and it is the same for all who are in the race. The life of Christ is the rule. if we would attain the mark, obtain the prize, we must follow this line, or rule, or mark.

The Apostle Paul had but one mind or will. "This one thing I do," he said. He was not a double-minded man, at one time thinking he would like to serve the Lord, at another time himself, and then again the Adversary, etc. He had accepted the Divine proposition to give all his talents to the service of the Lord. He had before his mind the great promise that God had made. For him there was but one thing in life.

The Scriptures tell us that during the Gospel Age God has sent out a special call, or invitation, and" that those who have accepted that call have "exceeding great and precious promises" of wonderful things to look forward to. All who accept the call should practically forget all the trifling things of life in order to attain these promises. There is but one, way to win the prize—'by manifesting to God faithfulness, 'obedience and loyalty. Character, not talent, makes us acceptable. God could give any one intellectual powers as good as ours or better. He will not grant any one a place in the Kingdom on account of physical strength or endurance. He will not admit any one to the Kingdom because of worldly prosperity or honour of men, or because of riches.

What' then is God seeking? To what has He called us? The Apostle Peter says that God has "called us to glory and virtue." (2 Peter 1: 3.) Certain conditions God requires of those who will run in the race. He requires that none be proud, but that they possess humility. And 'He will have no one in the Kingdom of His Elect who is weak, vacillating, so far as his mind is concerned. He may not have a strong intellect; but he must manifest to God that he has a strong will and firm determination, and that he has cut off everything in life in order to win the prize. He must also demonstrate his loyalty to God. He must not merely seek glory, but he must recognise and appreciate his responsibilities to God.

Loyalty is one of the great tests of character—loyalty to God,, to His Word, loyalty to principle. Whatever follows, the Christian must be submissive to God, trustful and faithful. To such alone could we expect God to give the great blessings promised to overcomers. Hence we see that the Apostle was quite right in giving up all that he might serve God, that he might please the Father, and thus attain to this glorious reward of joint-heirship with His Son.

Finally, it is important that we should keep in mind the fact that since true love on our part will manifest itself in obedience, then disobedience is an evidence of a loss of love, as viewed from the Lord's standpoint, a deflection from loyalty, a failure to endure the tests. We must agree that the Lord's standpoint of judgment is a reasonable one. Should one ask: How would it be if we should disobey through ignorance? The answer is, that the Lord has made provision against our ignorance; first, He has given us the Word of Truth, "that the man of God may be perfect (perfectly informed), thoroughly furnished unto all good works"; and second, He has promised to supply such helps to the spirit of holiness and the understanding of His Word, as will enable us to do what is pleasing in His sight.—2 Tim. 3: 17; John 16: 13, 14.

Love is the crown of all graces, "the fulfilling of the.' Law." Without a fervent, glowing love, it will be impossible to render obedience or to stand the tests for development and crystallisation of character arranged for by Divine Love. Our Lord tells us that He was beloved of the Father; and the Father Himself declared, "This is My beloved Son." We can readily see why our Lord Jesus was greatly beloved, for He expressed and fully manifested the Father's love.

But it astounds us to know that this same love is exercised by the Father toward us! "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God!" "The Father Himself loveth you !"—1 John 3: 1; John 16:27.

Loving- Obedience Brings Joy and Peace.

Let us, dear brethren, be more than ever careful respecting the Word of the Lord; let us not by negligence give evidence of a decay of love. Our Lord points out that His continuance in the Father's love, as the well-beloved Son, with all which this implies, was because of His--obedience to the Father's will; and that following the same-line, He must require that we should be obedient to Him if we would abide in His love and share His Throne and glory.—John 15: 10.

Our Lord's instructions and commandments are not intended to terrify us, nor to deprive us of happiness. On the contrary; "These things have I spoken unto you that My joy may be in you, and that your joy might be filled Trol:" (John 15: 11.) Those who give surest evidence of living nearest the Lord well know that obedience to the Lord's words, together with the privilege thus obtained of abiding in Him and His love, is the greatest joy, a joy which wholly outweighs all the trifling pleasures which the world has to offer. It is the joy and peace which "passeth all understanding," which rules in the heart, and which brings with it the promise, the assurance, "not only of the life which now is, but also of that which is to come."—1 Tim. 4: 8.

Tho' disappointments, keenly felt,
Have traced care on thy brow;
Tho' hopes have perished..that have caused
Thy heart in grief to bow;
Tho' friends have failed thee whom thou loved,
And fees with wicked dart
Have drawn the cruel bow of scorn
To pierce thy. breaking heart.
Be vigilant, be strong, be true,
And, quit thee like a man;
Be, diligent God's will to know—

Submissive to His plan;
Heed not the counselling of men,
E'en- the' in love 'tis given.
(Shortsighted it is apt to be
And. lead thee far from heaven).

But ready, be to follow Christ,
Wherever He may lead;
To voice of stranger hearken not,
But :to His voice give heed.
Though evil or through good report

Undaunted follow on;
Your feet will never find a path
But there your Lord has gone.
And what if men may look askance
And sneer and laugh and scorn ?

You'll never feel a pang of pain,
But that your Lord has borne;
The trials of ' this present life
Are not to be compared
To glory we shall share with Him,
Whose sufferings we have shared. —H.H.

“For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I ‘have done.”—John 13: 15. If, before we say or do anything, we would always consider whether it was agreeable to the pattern of Christ, a multitude of sins would be avoided.

“SONGS IN THE NIGHT.”

WHILE the perplexities and difficulties of recent years are deepening the world over, causing much travail of mind amongst ‘statesmen of all lands, and with mankind in general greatly concerned as to the outcome of this period of gloom, it may be asked how the Lord’s people can at this time truly sing “songs in the night.”

The year just closed has surely witnessed a continuation of the night of weeping. Sickness, sorrow, sighing and dying continue, but those who have been brought to know the Lord and His plan of salvation realise that these conditions, under the reign of “the prince of this world,” exist only for a limited time—until the glorious morning of Messiah’s Kingdom—and so they have great cause to rejoice that while, “Weeping may endure for the night, joy cometh in the morning.” (Psa. 30:5.) How glad we are that we have learned from God’s Word that, then, the glorious change will come to earth! St. Paul confirms this truth when he declares, “The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now, waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God.” (Rom. 8: 22.)

At present these sons of God are comparatively little known or recognised amongst men; frequently they are considered “peculiar people,” because of their zeal for righteousness and truth and for God. “Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, ‘but we know that when He shall appear we shall ‘be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is.” Soon the Lord will establish His kingdom under the whole heaven. Soon the Church class, the saintly, “the elect,” will be glorified, and then the time will come for the blessing of the non-elect—for their restitution to human perfection and to a world-wide Paradise which Messiah’s kingdom and power will produce. “He must reign until He hath put all enemies under His feet; the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death.” Death will be destroyed; sheol, hades, the grave, will be destroyed, by the resurrection of the dead therefrom—“Every one in his own order.”

“Songs in the Night He Giveth.”

While the whole creation groans under its load of sin and sorrow, the saintly few may sing, may rejoice, even in the midst of all the sorrows of life, and even though they share the results of sin as fully or even more fully than do others. The secret of their joy is two-fold: (1) They have experienced reconciliation to God. (2)

They have submitted their wills to His will. They obtained this new relationship by the way of faith in the Redeemer—faith in His blood of Atonement. They entered by the “strait gate” and “narrow way” of consecration to God—surrendering their own wills and covenanting to do the Divine will to the best of their ability.

This submission of the will to God and the realisation that all their life’s affairs are in God’s keeping and under His supervision gives rest to the heart. They have a rest and peace in this surrendered condition which they never knew when they sought to gratify self-will and ignored the right of their Creator to the homage of their hearts and the obedience of their lives.

Similarly, these have joy and peace and songs of thankfulness to God ‘because to them He grants a knowledge of His Divine purposes, and shows them things to come. These see beyond the trials and tribulations of the present time—they see the glories that will follow the present time of suffering. These see that the Church, the saintly few from all denominations and of all nationalities, are prospective heirs of God—heirs of glory, honour and immortality and association with: the Redeemer in His glorious Kingdom. This encourages them. They see also the outlines of the Divine Programme for the blessing of all the families of the earth. When they thus perceive that God is interested in their dear ones who are not saints, and interested in the whole human family, very few of whom are saints, it causes them rejoicing. When they perceive that God has arranged that through Christ and the glorified Church all the families of the earth shall be blessed, it makes them “joyful in the house of their pilgrimage”—while pressing on in the narrow way, and fully realising how light are their own afflictions in comparison with the “far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.”

Correspondence.

New South Wales, 26/11/33.

Dear Brother,—

I noticed in the last “P.P.” that “A Voice from Switzerland” was to arrive soon. As I would like to receive a copy of this I am enclosing , out of which you can take payment for this work, and the rest can go to the Tract Fund.

The extracts from the “V.F S.” you published seem profitable reading, and as prophecy is being fulfilled before our eyes so rapidly, it behoves us to take full advantage of our opportunities, for it has been promised that “Ye shall not be in darkness, etc.”

The “P.P.” is still a source of comfort to me, and I’m sure to many others of the isolated. “The Gospel of Hope” message is very helpful, and reminds one of the great joy we should ever be telling to others—the joy of sins forgiven—and leave the wiping of all tears away to God Himself, who is so able to accomplish this great work in its due time. The Gospel is indeed good news unto all people.

Hoping that your class is enjoying real Christian fellowship, and rearresting your united prayers.

I remain, your Brother in Christ,
FA.

Tasmania,
Nov. 28th, 1933. Dear Brother,

Loving Christian greetings in our dear Saviour’s name. I trust our God is still blessing you richly in your “labour of love.” Isn’t it encouraging, dear Brother, for we who are watching, to see the signs of the approaching end of the age and to know that we can “lift up our heads, for our redemption draweth nigh?”

How much we need to keep our eyes upon Jesus in these troublous times through which the last members of His Body must pass. The dear Lord has been near Brother and myself in spite of our being away so much from fellowship with the little class. We hope, D.V., to meet there next Sunday with Bro. It is not until one gets right away from others who are in the truth and consecrated to Him, that one realises what a great help the little class meetings are.

Will you please send me the two Books of Studies in the Scriptures; namely, “Thy Kingdom Come” and “The New Creation.” I hope to get one of the books, “A Voice from Switzerland,” from Bro. as soon as he gets them. The messages in “Peoples Paper” from time to time are helpful and encouraging.

Now, dear Brother, I must draw this letter to a close, hoping you and yours and the members of your little Class are well and still holding firmly to the glorious truths of the Bible. I am your Brother by His grace and with much Christian love,

MR N.

I would be true, for there are those who trust me,
I would be pure, for there are those who care;
I would be strong, for there is much to suffer;
I would be brave, for there is much to dare;
I would be friend of all—the foe, the friendless;
I would be giving and forget the gift;
I would be humble, for I know my weakness;
I would. look up (to God) and laugh and love and lift.

Prepare Ye for the Kingdom

JOHN THE BAPTIST was the last of the Prophets and Jesus declared that none of them was his superior—"There bath not arisen a greater Prophet than John the Baptist—and yet I say unto you that the least in the Kingdom of Heaven is greater than he." (Matt. 11: 11:) Every member of the Kingdom of Heaven class must be higher than John because begotten of the holy Spirit. They are reckoned as members_ of the House of Sons, while the Prophets belong to the preceding House of Servants : "Moses verily was faithful in all his House as a servant, but Christ as a Son over His own House, whose House are we."—Heb. 3: 5, 6: John 1:13.

God proposed. from 'before the foundation of the world that He would redeem man and that He would establish His Kingdom for their restoration from sin and death conditions.- The Redeemer of the world was to be the King by whose reign of a thousand years the work of Satan:, would be undone; the-head of the Serpent would be' crushed- and humanity would be uplifted out of sin and' death and be brought back to the condition in which Adam was at first—"very good." The obedient would, learn through experience a great lesson, valuable to all eternity ;: the wilful rejectors would be destroyed without hope or remedy. But previously, from amongst the redeemed would 'be selected a little company to be associated with the Redeemer in His great work. These would be called the Kingdom—the Kingdom class —the Royal Family-Sons of God.

_ God promised Abraham, "the friend of God," that this great blessing would come to humanity through his posterity, and indeed all of the saved ones should be known as his posterity in that they would become proselyte members of Israel. Messiah was promised to be of Abraham's seed also, and it was to be through this Messiah :''that Abraham's natural posterity would be blessed, and "Would be made a channel of blessing to all nations. One thing not explained to Abraham was that Messiah would -have a company of joint-heirs selected from amongst men and, counted the "Body of -Christ," or "The Bride," the Lamb's Wife." ..

Necessarily to the Jew First.

Although God had not mentioned this elect class ,which He purposed should be members of the Messiah, 'or His Bride, nevertheless God determined that the opportunity to become members of this elect, special class 'I should first of all' go to Abraham's natural seed. For the three and a half years of Jesus' ministry and for "a ' further three and a half years after His death the privilege_of becoming His Bride and joint-heir was limited to Israel after the flesh.

Latex it was sent on equal terms also to the Gentiles. Saint Paul tells us that it was necessary that the -Gospel Message should go first to the Jews because this was the Divine arrangement. But he adds, "Israel bath not Obtained that which he seeketh for (the best of God's gifts, the privilege of becoming members of the spiritual Israel), but the election bath obtained it and the rest were blinded." (Rom. 11: 7.) The blindness' 'is not to be forever, but merely until the completion of the elect, spiritual class—then the blindness is to pass away and Israel is to be saved or recovered to the Divine favour lost eighteen centuries ago. (See Romans 11: 25-33.)

Meantime the dealing with natural Israel proceeded just as though Jesus in the flesh were about to- take the Throne; and just as though His disciples in the flesh were to be His Bride; and just as though the Jewish nation would then be exalted and used as the Divine channel ; and just as though the promise would there have fulfilment: "In thy -Seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed."

"My Kingdom, is Not of This World."

It was in harmony with this offer, which God knew would not be accepted by a sufficient number, that- He sent John the Baptist to announce Jesus as though He would be King of the Jews in the flesh and to announce His Kingdom as though it would be immediately established. However, all along God .knew that His Son would be crucified, and that merely a beginning would be then made in the selecting of the elect Church, and that it would require more than eighteen centuries to complete it—and therefore require a tarrying of the Kingdom for more than eighteen centuries, until the Kingdom class should -be ready in God's name and power to take the dominion of the earth—under the whole heavens.

Jesus declared, "My Kingdom is not of this world (Age)," and as He did not establish His Kingdom at His 'first advent, but merely began the work of calling the "elect," so- the work of John the Baptist was merely to the Jew and proportionately only was he the anti-type of Elijah. A larger antitype of Elijah and John as forerunners, we may now see. The faithful members of Jesus in the flesh for eighteen centuries have constituted the antitype of John the Baptist. Their message all the way down these centuries has been to all who hear it, "Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand.” The King whose Kingdom they announce is composed of the glorified Jesus and His glorified Bride, beyond the veil, These soon shall take the Kingdom and reign gloriously as Abraham’s Seed for the blessing of all the ‘families of the earth.

The Church has cried in “the wilderness” in the sense that she has been alienated and separated from the world.

She has called upon all who would hear to prepare for Messiah’s Kingdom. She has told more fully than did John the Baptist of the effect of Messiah’s Kingdom—the levelling up of the valleys (the lifting up of the poor), the straightening out of the crooked things and the smoothing of the rough things, that thus all flesh might see, appreciate, understand, experience the salvation of God. Both John and the Church declare that this salvation is to be brought through Jesus and His glorified Bride in Kingdom power. The point we are making is that while John the Baptist was an antitype of Elijah, and was forerunner or herald of Jesus, so, only more particularly, the Church in the flesh is a higher antitype of Elijah, and still more particularly a herald of the Messianic Kingdom.

In John’s day multitudes desired to be of the Kingdom class, but while still holding on to their gross sins. And so it has been throughout this Age. The only ones who can truly claim to belong to Abraham’s spiritual Seed are such as show their repentance from sin and their loyalty to God by a full consecration to oppose sin and to walk in the footsteps of the Master, even unto death—even an ignominious death, if need be.

John declared that the “ax” was about to be applied to that nation. Pruning would no longer do. Each individual must either bring forth good fruit or be cut down and be cast into the “fire”—the great time of trouble with which the Age ended. The people asked John what they should do following their repentance. His answer was, that those who had a surplus of coats should be ready to give or lend to those who had none, and those who had a sufficiency of food should likewise give to the needy. Thus would they show their repentance from the selfishness and hard-heartedness which evidenced them as sinful—thus would they show a condition of heart necessary to an acceptance of Jesus.

“Art Thou The Messiah?”

When the tax-gatherers came to John repenting they asked, “How shall we conduct our lives?” He answered,

“Extort no more than that to which you are entitled by the Law.” Soldiers also repented and asked John respecting their course: “What shall we do?” He answered, “Do violence to no man; neither exact anything wrongfully; and be content with your wages”—thus will you show that you have repented and that you are seeking to do the Divine will, for such a course will be very different from the one to which you have been -accustomed. But notwithstanding John’s preaching of contentment he was apprehended as a disturber of the peace and beheaded. ‘

The spirit of expectation was in the air and some of the people, wondering at John’s teaching, asked if he were the Messiah. He promptly replied, “No; my baptism is merely that of water.” Messiah’s baptism will be that Of “the holy Spirit and of fire”; “His fan is in His hand and He will thoroughly purge His threshing floor; He will gather the wheat into His garner, and will burn up the chaff with fire unquenchable.”—Matt. 3: 1 1-1 2.

“Wrath- is Come Upon This People.”

These things which John prophesied of Jesus were partially fulfilled more than eighteen centuries ago, but in another sense they are yet to be fulfilled. They were fulfilled so far as the Jewish nation was concerned. Jesus did baptise some of them with the holy Spirit at Pentecost, and subsequently—all the faithful “Israelites indeed” ; and He did, later on, baptise the unfaithful with fire—a time of trouble. Writing of that trouble St. Paul says, “Wrath is come upon this people to the uttermost; that all things written in the Law and in the Prophets concerning them might be fulfilled.” Jesus did a harvesting work there for the Jewish nation only. He gathered their wheat into the garner of the Gospel Age by begetting them of the holy Spirit at Pentecost and onward, and “burned up” the nation in a time of trouble with which their Age ended, in A.D. 70.

But now for the larger, fulfilment—world-wide. In the end of this Age all the “wheat” class are to be gathered into the heavenly garner by the change of the First Resurrection, and in the time of trouble coming all others than the true Church will be cut off from association with the Church and from all opportunity of membership in it—as “tares” they will be burned—reduced to the level of the rest of humanity. But, thank God! at that time will begin the work of blessing the masses of mankind ; all the families of the earth are to be blest by the glorious, Messianic Kingdom!

“ In Due Time.”

In Thy due time, our heavenly Father, shall be known
Thy gracious plan, which now is hid Except unto Thy saints alone.
O glorious day, when Thine All-wisdom, justice, power and love,
The whole creation shall approve!

In His due time, O blessed Jesus, Thou shalt see
The travail of Thy soul, and shalt Be satisfied eternally;
Thine agony on Calvary, the price that thou didst give,
Shall cause the dead again to live!

In God’s due time, O pilgrim- on the “narrow way,”
Thy painful journey ended, darkest Night shall turn to brightest day;
Thine every trial, then, thine every tear, shall prove a gem
To beautify thy diadem!

In His due time, O weary, groaning, sin-cursed earth,
The Lord will wipe away your tears, And bring the promised “second birth,”
And there shall be no pain, nor any death in that blest day,
When sin and sorrow pass away!

In His due time angelic choirs shall sing again
In grander strain that heavenly message,
“Peace on earth, goodwill toward man!”
And every knee shall bow, and every loving heart confess
The Christ who comes to reign and bless!

Making the New Year Beautiful.

A young girl was hanging up a new calendar on New Year’s Day, and as she did so she remarked in a confident voice:
“It is going to be a beautiful year.”

A friend who overheard her remark was curious to know what was passing in her mind, and asked: “How do you know passing it is going to be a beautiful year? A year is a long time.”

“Well,” she said, “a day isn’t a long time, and I know it is going to be beautiful because I am going to take a day at a time to make it so. Years are only days, when you get right down to it, and I am going to see that every one of these three hundred and sixty-five days gets at least one beautiful thing into it.”

We have a New Year given to us, and it can a beautiful year, a year of abundant success, if we live each day at our best and serve at our highest to help others who are needing our help and comfort.

Blameless and Harmless, Without Rebuke.

TO be blameless is to be devoid of any disposition . to do evil; not controlled by anger, malice, hatred, strife; but, on the contrary, to be disposed to do all the good possible to all with whom we have contact. We should be harmless, not merely so far as God would see, or so far as the brethren would see, but, so far as possible, harmless in the sight of the world, before whom we are to shine.

Blamelessness does not necessarily mean perfection. One might be blameless and yet imperfect on account of natural weaknesses. To be blameless in the sight of God is to live so that He may see one's intentions always to be just, loving, kind. The world will speak evil of us even as they spoke evil of our Lord, and will hate us ; for the darkness always hates the light. If we have the friendship of the world, we are not in accord with God. The Apostle James asks, "Know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever, therefore, will be a friend of the world, is the enemy of God." (James 4: 4.) But if we are friends of God, the world will seek to do us injury as evil-doers— "as deceivers, and yet true." While not "friends of the world," we must endeavour to be at peace with them, so far as lies in us.

We cannot, however, expect to please everybody. We are to be blameless in the sight of those of mankind who are recognised as having the best judgment amongst the people. Thus it was with our Lord. While the world blamed Him, yet in their private councils they recognised the fact that He was harmless. Pilate, who. put Him to death, was honest enough to state, "What evil hath He done? I find no cause of death in this man" ; "I am innocent of the blood of this just person."—Luke 23: 22 ; Matt. 27: 24.

The thought of the Apostle is that whatever charges may be made against us, our course of conduct before the world should be such that only the perverse of mind will think wrongly of us; that the better minds would think justly and note that the lives of the Lord's people are indeed blameless, not blameworthy.

The disciples were dwelling in the midst of a perverse generation, their own Jewish nation, among whom they were so to conduct themselves that their lives would be a light to their fellowmen. Perverseness implies unwillingness to be guided by the Lord; crookedness seems to apply to their course of life, not always a way of open wickedness, but a crookedness, doing both right and wrong. On the one hand was an evil heart of unbelief ; on the other were forms and ceremonies.

For more than eighteen hundred years these conditions have followed the Lord's people. Everywhere there is a great deal of crookedness and self-will. Many things are done which are known to be contrary to the will of the Lord. Amidst these conditions the Lord's people are to shine as lights; they are to seek to walk in the Lord's ways, that they may "show forth the praises of Him who has called them out of darkness into His marvellous light."

Portrait of -Christ.

APOSTLE AS ARTIST -- A REMARKABLE DISCOVERY ("The Times" Special Service.)

LONDON, Dec. 26.—In an obscure corner of the British Museum has been discovered a copy of a portrait of Christ attributed to the apostle Peter, and other representations of Christ's head from which the traditional likeness of Christ is believed to have been derived. They are unpublished copies of early Christian portraits, the originals of which remain in the catacombs of Rome and elsewhere. The portraits were included in a portfolio deposited in the British Museum about 1873, and were unaccountably overlooked. They belonged to the British artist, Mr. Thomas Heaphy who spent his life searching for and copying early likenesses of Christ. He searched Rome as a boy in quest of a mysterious picture of Jesus which he heard was in St. Peter's. He 'failed to find it, but a cardinal, noticing the boy's disappointment, told him that there was a likeness on the cloth with which Saint Veronica wiped Christ's face. This relic, he said, only the Pope and two high Church dignitaries were permitted to see, but by some means young Heaphy was allowed to copy the portrait. Later he copied the treasures of the catacombs, made friends with numerous prelates, and although a Protestant was shown relics inaccessible to the public. Heaphy found a likeness of Christ in a fresco on the ceiling of a second-century catacomb.

The expression on the representations is an appealing and loving yet anxious face. The face is strong, but lacks the hardness of many of the later portraits. The pictures have not previously been reproduced because of the difficulties of stereotyping -when Heaphy published them. The portrait attributed to St. Peter was, it is believed, drawn from memory. It is in ink, and was done with a stylus, it is said at the request of the daughters of the Senator •Pudens. Now it is the most jealously-guarded relic in Saint Prassede's Church in Rome, and has never been shown to the public.

St. Peter is believed to have stayed with the Senator Pudens during the Neronian persecutions in 67 A.D., when Pudens and his daughters rescued the bodies of Christian martyrs and interred them in a secret church in their father's grounds. The portrait has never left the church, although the church was rebuilt in the ninth century.

In his notes Heaphy reveals that the early Christians covered the faces of the dead with handkerchiefs bearing a drawing of Christ's features. He conjectured that Pudens' daughters, requiring a handkerchief to cover the martyr's face, asked St. Peter to draw likeness of Christ.

Beware of Deception.

(Convention Address).

“This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived. Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away.” -2 Tim.. 3: 1, 13, 5.

HOW many times are we exhorted in the Scriptures to beware of various dispositions of character, to be not deceived, to take heed unto ourselves, to watch and be sober, to examine ourselves, to walk worthy of God and to fight the good fight? What a contract we have before us to do all these things properly; our hands would be so fully occupied that there would be very little time left to reprove others. With what carefulness we need to beware of deceptions in ourselves. The Scriptures reveal that there is grave danger of some of the Lord's people being deceived unless they are very humble minded and able to realise their own deficiencies.

Considering the vast multitude of professed Christians, how few realise to what extent they form their own characters, to what extent their minds, their affections are gardens in which they may plant either thorns and thistles of sin, or the merely moral and practical qualities corresponding to the useful vegetation, or those seeds which produce the fragrant and beautiful flowers and fruit 'which more particularly represent the heavenly and spiritual graces. "Whatsoever a man soweth he shall also reap," whether he sow to the flesh or the spirit.

Whoever, therefore, seeks for the heavenly things, joint-heirship in the kingdom, must plant, or set out in his mind. in his affections, those qualities and graces which the Lord, marks out as essential to the development of characters such as will be "meet for the inherit-alike of the saints in light." Thus the Father throws upon '41 those whom He calls to this "high calling"—chose" who accept the call and make a covenant thereunder—the responsibility of their success or failure in attaining the prize. Through His Word He tells them of their own natural Weaknesses and imperfections and shows them how He has provided full offset or counter-balance for their imperfections 'in the merit and sacrifice of the Redeemer: He shows also what are the fruits and graces of the 'spirit which they 'must possess, in heart at least, if they would be joint-heirs with Christ, Our heavenly Father reveals also in the Redeemer's life as well as in His teachings, the copy which all must follow who would reach the same glorious station. We might look at this matter from the standpoint merely of the responsibility which it throws upon us, and might well feel overawed thereby; rather; however, we should view it from the standpoint of Divine grace and consider what, a blessed privilege has been granted us of being transformed by the ^renewing. of our minds that we may come, more and more .to know and to strive .for the good and acceptable and perfect will of God. In addition to all this, God has set before us the grandest reward imaginable for that which is.. merely our duty. and 'our reasonable service, the doing :of that 'which would bring us the largest measure of joy and peace aside from a future reward. 2. Pet.; 1.: 3, 4.

For all mankind there is a natural attraction, toward earthly things, even though the earthly things are blemished and in many respects distasteful 'to those who love righteousness and hate . evil. Like weeds, earthly affections and desires spring spontaneously from seeds which come we know not whence. The Christian who would keep his heart in the love of , God, must, therefore, not only keep planting good seeds, keep setting his affections on heavenly things, but he must keep rooting out the weeds of. earthly attraction.

Our new .life is not manifest to all; this the Apostle intimates when he says, "Your life is hid with Christ in God." Even the brethren may not be able to appreciate, the progress of the new life, in us, and we ourselves may be perplexed at times respecting the rapidity and strength of its growth. We may need to look back over months or years perhaps in order to determine unquestionably that it is growing. Our new life represented 'by our endeavours to follow the will of God is thus hidden in Christ.

In harmony with this thought the Apostle in one place declares that neither the world nor the brethren were capable of judging him, that only the Lord who could read the heart and know all the conditions, testings and weaknesses to be striven against, could properly -judge him. He even declares, "Yea, I judge not mine own self." It is no doubt a good thing neither to - condemn others who claim to be walking conscientiously, or ourselves if we are sincerely striving to do the Lord's will. We need to beware of the deception of the Adversary that we be not discouraged when not measuring up to what we would wish. We must simply press along, doing the best we can to cultivate the heavenly graces, leaving all the results with the Lord. He careth for us, and so long as our hopes and aims and objects of life are centred in the heavenly things and our lives hid with Christ in God we need fear no evil, present or future.

Coming down to a description of the change which. takes place in those who have consecrated themselves wholly to the Lord, the Apostle enumerates certain alterations of disposition which should be attempted, and so far as possible accomplished; namely, the putting away of all the following—anger, wrath, malice, evil-speaking, impurity of language and falsehood in its every form. To mention such correction of life, might, at first thought seem to 'be unnecessary, such evil traits 'being coarse and entirely opposed to every true Christian principle. As we scrutinise the matter, however, we find that the Apostle has really taken into his list nearly all the weaknesses of the flesh which beset those who have become "new creatures in Christ." How many Christian people there are who may become angry? How many there are who have named the name of Christ, but have malicious or at least unkind thoughts respecting others and who harbour them, permitting them at times to influence their conduct. How many are there who indulge in -evil speaking that is slander. This is often done in such a manner as to deceive not only the hearer but the speaker himself as to his real intention in speaking of others discredibly, unkindly. Every Christian should see to it that, henceforth, every word which proceeds from his mouth shall be such as will minister grace to the hearers, such words as will do only good and 'be edifying. How much need there is not only of having good intentions in the heart, but also of expressing them truthfully one to another without deception. The heart must be very pure and full of love, otherwise it would lead to trouble continually. If the unloving and ungenerous hearts imbued with evil surmisings were to express such thoughts it would add immensely to the trouble in the world. The Apostle, therefore, urges first the purifying of the heart and then general candor.

With the thought in mind of the oneness and spiritual development of those who have been accepted into the body of Christ, the Apostle shows the necessity of putting off the evil dispositions of our fallen flesh, and the putting on and cultivating of the various graces of the spirit. These are specified in Col. 3: 12-14:—(1) Compassionate sentiments; a disposition of largeness and generosity of heart toward everybody and everything, toward the saints, toward our neighbors, toward our enemies and toward the brute creation. (2) Humbleness of mind; the reverse of boastfulness, headiness and arrogance. (3) Meekness or gentleness of disposition. (4) Long suffering or patient-endurance with the faults and weaknesses of others. These imply that we should hear with one another's peculiarities of temperament, freely forgiving one another if there be found: cause of offense, learning the meanwhile to correct ourselves as we see our blemishes mirrored in others. And the standard for all this course of conduct is found in the Lord's course toward us.

The Apostle Paul says in Gal. 6: 7, "Be not deceived"; and the question is suggested : Is there danger that some may not know whether they are sowing to the spirit or the flesh? There certainly is a danger of being deceived along this line. The Scriptures indicate that the flesh is very crafty, that the natural mind is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked, and that the new mind needs to be on guard continually lest it fall into a trap of the old nature. If one is living according to the flesh he may expect to reap accordingly. Though others may be deceived, God cannot be mocked 'by any outward service of Him and His truth, while we inwardly live according to the flesh. Whatever seed we plant we must realise that we shall reap the same kind. In all the affairs of our lives we are either building up the old nature that we agreed should 'be destroyed, or faithfully seeing to it that the deeds of the flesh are mortified or killed that we may prosper as new creatures.

How then is the Christian to guard against the deceptions prevailing in this period of darkness? It is for such to put off everything that would 'be displeasing to the Lord, everything that is contrary to the light of the new day; the light, which, though unperceived by the world, is seen and appreciated by' the Lord's people. An important factor in guarding against deception is to walk honestly. As we look about us we find that dishonesty is very prevalent not 'only in the world where we expect a certain amount of misrepresentation, deception and hypocrisy, but even- among professing Christians. Everyone naming the name of Christ should see to it that he is honest in his treatment of all. Honesty is a basis of character, a very valuable foundation for character. Where there is little honesty there is little character, so we see that this quality embraces the thoughts and intents of , our hearts as well as our words. Many deceive themselves in thinking they are honest when they may be still- a long way from the real mark. How subtle is the depth of deception! How deceiving is the depth' of selfishness ! How many do not really realise how much selfishness is still ingrained in themselves while observing the selfishness of others I It would seem that we need. to be more careful in not deceiving ourselves than in being deceived by others. We are reminded of. the, saying—take care of the minutes and the hours will take care of themselves; take care of the pence and the pounds will take care of themselves. Give attention to those small deceptions in ourselves, then we shall be in a better position to discern 'the deceptions from without.

How careful we need to be in our opinions of others, that we are not deceived by misjudgment and wrong surmisings; how many times we may be deceived in our thoughts though these may not be expressed. The more we have of the spirit of a sound mind the more able we are to' exercise sound judgment; on the other hand if we allow any stubborn, self-opinions to come in, we shall be hindered from discerning the true and correct understanding. How much need there is for a sincerely humble mind in each and all; to fully appreciate the Apostle's words, "When I am weak, then am I strong." Further, we may imagine that we have a humble mind; but have we? Are we sure that we are not here deceived by the inherited trait of lurking pride, which waits for the least opportunity of manifesting itself when there is an unguarded moment. How necessary is the Apostle's injunction, "Be not deceived." These. words are very short in expression, hut very long in meaning. Though we may deceive ourselves and others, we cannot deceive God, for everything is manifest and open before Him. We should truly always endeavour to do to others as we would that they should do to us.

At the first advent of our Lord the principal charge which He made against the religious teachers of His day was that they made great professions of holiness, when, as a matter of fact, they were not holy. Probably our Lord would denounce a great deal of the wisdom of to-day as He did then, but we have not the ability to read the heart, and, therefore, cannot speak as He did. All this is to be left to Him who judges righteously. With respect to the religious teachers of to-day, it would seem that many hold their positions under false pretences, but to give some the benefit of the doubt we would say that they are deceived in thinking they arc doing God service while fighting against His Word.

The Apostle says, "Let us walk honestly." What meaning is contained in these words. Let us take a proper stand for truth. While we should always speak the truth in love, whether it be to our friends or enemies, and should always have consideration for the opinions of others, yet we should take our stand firmly. Some who have high positions are "deceiving and being deceived." There is such a thing, as deceiving one's self by 'repeating a sentiment until one believes it himself—an imaginative force, propelled by the power of Satan to deceive. Let us remember that God has promised to keep and guide the minds of those whose hearts are loyal and true to Him. We must co-operate, however, giving heed unto ourselves—our first responsibility. Then, having a sound footing on which to stand, we shall probably be- able to lend a help to others. None are able to sound forth the right notes upon the trumpet if they' have not taken heed to learn them themselves.

Let us remember the words of Scripture : "A thousand shall fall at thy side," and why? Because they have not made the Lord their habitation, but have been deceived with the theories of man. We should, therefore, conclude that if the Lord is thrusting any out of the light as unworthy of it; if He is' permitting unfaithful ones to be seduced by the great enemy, it is not our mission to follow them into the outer darkness and converse and read their error. We are to remain with the Lord and those who are walking in the light. Neither are we to waste sympathy on those who depart, after. having done our best to help them. We can neither persuade nor pull them out of the fire, we must let them go and should turn and render aid to others more worthy. We would not here refer to slight differences of understanding which should .be patiently dealt with, and explained, or overlooked, as all children in the school of Christ have not attained to the same step or degree of knowledge, but would refer to more radical differences which do not square with' the Word. Let us more and more be of one mind with the Lord; His friends must be our friends; His enemies our enemies. If any affiliate with the Lord's enemies, they shall at least get into a luke-warm condition with Him and His friends, and the Lord will restrain their mouth, that is, He will not speak through them..

As regards self-deception we need to remember that the mind of the flesh will seek to enter into partnership with the new mind, and will be very ready to accept love as the rule of life under certain conditions. The mind of the flesh would prefer to recognise love in words, in profession, in manners only, a form of godliness without the power. Gentle manners such as love would manifest may be exercised by a selfish heart, deceiving itself and seeking to deceive others. 'On the lips may be the smile, the word of praise, of kindness, of gentleness, while in the heart may be feelings of selfishness, of grudge or bitterness. Under favourable conditions these hidden motions of sin in the flesh may manifest themselves in more or less carefully worded reproaches. Or these. continuing to rankle in the heart, may, when opportunity affords, bring forth words of the flesh and the devil, contrary to the course of a pure heart and at variance with the commandment of the law of the new creation. The Apostle says, "Walk in the spirit and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh." This admonition means that. we should guard all the actions of life as well as our words, for these are a source of either blessing, or ill to ourselves and to others. 'As .a man thinketh in his heart so is he.'—Prov. 23: 7. Some may deceive others for a time, some may deceive themselves, but the Lord knows whether we are seeking to please Him. We must endeavour to please the Lord in all things, and to watch the outward conduct so that our walk in life may lie circumspect. Even though we know that the world will take our very best thoughts and endeavours for hypocrisy, nevertheless, our way is clearly marked out, and the way of the Lord is the way of wisdom.

Further, in guarding against deception, we need to take heed to the Apostle's words to the Ephesians, chap. 5, verse 6: "Let no man deceive you with vain words." Those of good understanding realise that there is a vast difference between the principles of faith and superstition, but this is not always clearly discerned even among the children of God. A superstition based upon an error of doctrine often passes in some for superior and wonderful faith. . Such persons may be highly esteemed among their brethren as Saints' of remarkable attainment, while the more logical and thoughtful who exercise, a more real faith are often far less esteemed among the brethren, though, doubtless, more approved of God. Real faith always has a good, sound, reasonable basis. It is simply an established confidence. Take an illustration: You have faith in a friend because you say you have known him for Many, years; you have observed and mentally noted his principles of action, and have found them uniformly the same; he has always been just, true, benevolent and kind for Many years, and under many tests you have observed his steady faithfulness to these principles; and so your confidence or faith has been so established that you never think of doubting him. Just snit is with those who have become acquainted God through His Word and His providences. From year to year their confidence or faith has grown and taken deeper and deeper root until every promise of God is now to them yea and amen in Christ Jesus. 'They know that what He has promised He is able to perform, and that He Will do it. So these make all calculations accordingly, and live in this confident hope. Such a faith is a real faith, without .deception; it has been real from the beginning, and has matured and strengthened with the proofs of passing years. Such a faith is not mere surmise, imagination, or guesswork ; it has a sound logical basis. You have drawn positive conclusions from a, logical argument based upon an infallible and undeniable promise, and consequently you. have full faith in those conclusions. Superstition, however, unlike faith, has no substantial basis, nor are its conclusions reached by logical deductions. Superstitions originate in the minds of fallible men, and are more prevalent upon religious subjects than any others. Superstition is in direct opposition to faith,, and should be carefully avoided by every sincere child of God.

May we always take heed and not be led away thinking that the Lord .or spirit deals with any independently of His Word. "To the law and to the testimony, if they speak not according to this word it is because there is no, light in them." The careful Christian who has a true faith and is carefully instructed in the Word, sees this supposed or claimed teaching of the Lord' or the Holy Spirit, put forth with the stamp of divinity upon it, to be a dangerous deception. Let us not be so sure that the Lord has shown us this or that item of doctrine or course of conduct unless we are able to put our finger on the testimony of His Word, which has borne this witness to us, so that our faith and that of our friends may stand; not in the questionable wisdom of fallible humanity, but in the power of God's own sure testimony.

Let us do all things with n view to edifying and not in a manner, ,to darken counsel by words without knowledge (Job 38: 2). And, further, let us not aspire to" he a Man or woman' of so-called wonderful faith; let us just be content' with a simple, childlike faith that believes everything God says and refuses to believe what

He does not say on matters of Divine. revelation. On the common principles of reasoning, we ought to have full confidence in every item of. God's. Word, and should continually act upon it. Let the rejoicing be in the testimony of our conscience, that with the greatest simplicity and sincerity (not with, fleshly wisdom but by the grace of God) we have spent our lives in this world. Especially should we be sincere toward the household of faith whose development and perfecting should be our deepest concern.

CONVENTION NEWS.

WITH the passing of the recent Christmas Convention in Melbourne, we render heartfelt praise and . grateful thanks to our loving heavenly Father for the many blessings bestowed throughout the gatherings at that time especially, and send out this brief report trusting that, it may be. of interest and some encouragement to our dear friends in other parts.

Those who have attended -similar gatherings of the Lord's People, realise to the full just how helpful and refreshing such occasions -are when the Lord's spirit dwells richly in the hearts of all assembled, and they are "seated together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." We agree with the numerous expressions of the brethren, that the Christmas Convention, 1933, was no exception in this :respect ; at the same time much sympathy was felt by all in attendance for a dear Sister who was seriously ill throughout the Convention days, and who has since finished her earthly course.

It was a pleasure indeed to have the visiting (brethren with us,. for though fewer in numbers than on previous occasions, there was the same zeal. and earnestness manifest that is always characteristic of the true child of God. We thank the clear brethren who so willingly sacrifice time and means to attend in Convention whenever possible, and so ably assist in the program for the benefit of all. Others would. have attended had the way 'been open, and in their absence sent along loving 'greetings with :the intimation that they would be present in spirit and these were much appreciated.

Sunday afternoon, December 24th, found all assembled together in oneness of spirit for the opening of the three- day season of 'praise, prayer, study and fellowship before the Lord, 'and each session seemed to pass all too quickly with the feast of good things derived from the selected studies and addresses given by the brethren. The following passages of Scripture proved very helpful studies for ' the three days :—Rev. ' 3: 14-22; 1 Cor. 1: 1-9 ; Phil. 2: 1-5; and will give some idea of the lessons brought to mind and the encouragement received from the sure Word of Truth. The addresses by various brethren were on the subjects :—'Beware of Deception," "The Bride of -Christ," "Gladness in Heart (Psa. 4: 7), "Faith," "Trustful Endurance"- (Dan. 3: 16-18), "Working 'Out Our Salvation," and "The Gospel of Peace" - (Rom. 10: 15). Each in turn brought' out many timely and necessary truths, exhorting the 'brethren to fully appreciate their' privilege of sonship to 'be glad in the Lord, and press on in full faith and patient endurance, working out their salvation through a knowledge of the gospel of glad tidings and all dependent upon the loving sacrifice of Christ.

In addition to the profitable sessions at the meeting rooms, there was a further very helpful service on the Tuesday morning as the friends gathered to witness the beautiful symbol of baptism performed by two Sisters and one Brother as they thus outwardly manifested their previous consecration to the. Lord, to be dead with Christ. (Rom. 6: 3). All were reminded of the deep significance of Christian Baptism, and exhorted to give all diligence to make their calling and 'election sure. We rejoice with the dear Sisters and Brother, and pray that they may daily seek and thus find the necessary grace and strength from the Lord to fulfil their vow of consecration faithful unto death.

The greetings contained in some very fine and encouraging. Scriptures, together with Christian love from various classes and individual brethren were appreciated very much, and the message chosen by the Convention assembly as' a general greeting is found in 1 Cor. 1: 4-9. The thoughts contained in these verses, along with sincere Christian love, were sent by the visiting members to their own classes and homes, and it is desired that all dear friends accept the same to themselves from the Melbourne Class.

The closing scenes came on the Tuesday evening, with the pleasing Love Feast and singing of the beautiful hymn, "God be With You Till We. Meet Again," and concluding in prayer for God's blessing to attend each and all of His people throughout the days ahead.

IT is a great pleasure also to report having heard of a very profitable 'Convention being held at Rulla, Tasmania, on December 26th, and we truly rejoice with our dear brethren there, in the many blessings received. A message to hand is as follows :—"You will rejoice to know that we had a very happy time of fellowship together, and I am sure by the messages- since received from the other friends, all received much blessing from our gathering together, which we' count a great privilege. I understand that this was the first Convention gathering in Tasmania, but we trust that if it is God's will it may not be the last. 'There were thirteen Brethren and Sisters present, all of whom professed consecration, and at the testimony meeting at 5.30 p.m. each one gave testimony of God's wonderful love .and care, and a very noticeable feature of each was the feeling of greater faith as the end of the year approached, thus fulfilling the Scripture that we should grow in grace and the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jests Christ.

It is pleasing, too, to 'be able to report that each of the Brothers present took advantage of the privilege of giving us a little talk, and some very fine thoughts were expressed. 'Oh, what a privileged people we are, to be able to thus gather together in the liberty of our Lord and Saviour, free from all bondage of sectarian creeds.

Correspondence.

Victoria, 11/1/34. Dear Friend.

I am writing to thank you for sending the books I ordered at Christmas, namely, "The Divine Plan of the Ages" and "Some of the Parables."

Being a farmer, this is a very busy period of the year for me, and 'I have not yet read "The Divine Plan of the Ages," but "Some of the Parables" I am reading now a second time. I have never had the Parables taught so before, and it is with great wonder that I read.

I hope at some future time to read more of the pamphlets you offer in "People's 'Paper:'"

Please accept the thanks of one who, by the grace of God, earnestly desires to be His disciple.—Yours faithfully,
S.A.W.

N.S. Wales, 15/1/34.

Dear Brother.

Allow me to wish you much blessing from the Lord during the year we have entered. I trust what is past of it has brought gladness to your heart, and that the Xmas season also brought you its own special cheer.

I am writing you now with regard to the "Herald" and "P.P." and renewal of subscriptions for the year. Meantime,

I do not find myself in a position to renew these subscriptions, as with increasing age and heavy expenditure of my resources recently, I have to curtail every possible outlay. It is hard' to do so, as both in coming to me have often brought me comfort and encouragement, and will miss them. Times are difficult, and no doubt you and the "Herald" people are finding the burden of things very trying. So, rather than add to their and your troubles, I think it wise to ask' that they cease coming. I have the old issues to fall back upon, and they are always interesting and helpful. With kindest' Christian love.—Yours in Him, M.W.

Dear Brother in the Lord.

In answer to your kind letter of 2nd January, you might put the amount to Tract Fund. I trust will be in a better position when the' year is up, should I still be in the flesh;. 1935 seems such a long way' off.

I was pleased to hear you had such a time of refreshing. Yes, God is good indeed. I do enjoy reading the "People's Paper," and hope to pass them on to others. I have not been able to get among folks lately where I can give them away, and posting is slow work at the best of times for, me. It is marvellous to see and know how God is working in our midst, and I trust I shall be thankful and grateful to Him. May God bless you in His works always.-

Dear Brother.

I received the booklet, "Voice from Switzerland," and thank you very much for sending' it; it is going on to Bro.

— tomorrow, as directed. The amount — you may use according to your discretion.' This little book contains a very great deal in few words, and it would seem as if the truth on the matter lies in that direction. That the Lord will make manifest the true character of the present governments and their religious systems before the great millstone falls, there is no doubt.

by God's grace.

What Mankind Needs Most To-day.

"If now," said Dr. H. E. Fosdick, in a recent sermon in New York, "the desperate need of being saved from an utter breakdown of our social order can weigh heavily upon our consciences, so that our intelligence is conscripted for social uses, so that the same kind of scientific and business brain power which solved the problem of production is set to solve the problem of distribution, until wealth becomes common wealth and all the people share in the goods which they help to create, then a hundred years from now there will be no economic problem."

"Yet, this does not finish the matter unless we add a final thing. If we are going to be saved from our present humiliating and perilous estate, we must as persons and as a nation be borne again into a better spirit. You may confront us with all the new science, the new philosophy, the modern world's changing circumstances, but we know that mankind still needs nothing quite so much as to be saved into the spirit of Christ."

WHEN we realise that the full that the earthly life ,of God's people,, since their consecration to Him, is for the development of character like unto our Lord's in preparation for the glorious inheritance and privileges of service with Him in His heavenly Kingdom, we are then enabled to view matters from the Divine standpoint- and are comforted when one or another of our dear members complete the pilgrim journey in full faith and confidence. It was from this viewpoint that the Apostle wrote .the 'words. of comfort and hope in 1 'Thess.4 13-18, would' not have you to be ignorant,, brethren; concerning them which are asleep, that ye. sorrow not even. as others which have no hope; for if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even, so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him." And not only so, for the Apostle goes on to show that at the second presence of our Lord (the time in which we believe we are now living) after the sleeping saints were raised, the faithful, "feet"" members of His Body do not sleep in death when the earthly life is closed, but are changed in a moment to be with their Lord and Head, and are so soon to enter upon the grand work of the Millennial. Age when the last- member has been glorified' and 'the Marriage of the Lamb has taken place.

With these thoughts in mind 'we refer to the passing of a, very dear member of the Lord's people, Mrs. J. H.

Clayton, of Brunswick, Victoria. Since being blessed with a knowledge of the wondrous plan of redemption quite a number of years ago, our Sister Clayton has walked the narrow way in service of her Lord and His cause continually. For some years past our dear Sister has been closely associated with the Melbourne Ecclesia, and was dearly loved by all the friends, particularly those who were in closer 'touch in recent times, and during the last trying illness. Loyal to the truth, of a quiet disposition, and, yet with zealous care for the highest welfare of others, never sparing herself when very often so weak and frail, our dear member was a fine example in our midst of a true disciple of the Master.

Our sincere sympathy goes out to the bereaved ones in the home circle where the dear wife and mother will be sadly missed, but the influence of her life will remain with them, and we trust may lead them to endeavour to follow her faith and life. Our own grief at the loss of one so dear is great, but we thank God for the faithful and loving sacrificial life, and rejoice to know that, "precious in the sight of 'the Lord is the death of His saints."

The end came at about' 6. a.m. on New Year's morning, after some "days of almost unconsciousness, during which the words of some beautiful hymns were repeated, and such sayings as, "Dare to be a Daniel" could be heard, indicating that though the body was so weak and worn out, the mind was on heavenly things.

On Wednesday' morning, January 3rd, "after a short service 'in the home of Our departed Sister, the earthly tabernacle was laid to rest in the quietness of Fawkner, in the presence of a goodly number of relatives, friends and members of the 'Melbourne 'Class. The gospel message of hope in Christ for the redemption of the elect, and also for the world of mankind in due time, in which our dear Sister rejoiced was reviewed, the service closing with prayer to our heavenly Father for His blessing on the bereaved, and that the solemn occasion may be a further incentive. to all • His dear people to be faithful to their covenant of sacrifice, even unto death.

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth :
Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours ; and their works do follow them."

"They shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels."
"Though earth-born shadows now may shroud
Thy thorny path awhile,

God's blessed Word can part each cloud,
And 'bid the sunshine smile.
"Only 'believe, in living faith,
His love and power divine,

And in each trial, e'en in death,
His light shall round thee shine.
"I-Told on thy way, with hope unchilled By faith and not by sight,
And thou-shalt own His Word fulfilled—
'At eve it shall be light.'

Manuscript of Bible.

Britain. to Buy From Soviet. - Price, £100,000.

THE British. Museum Trust will pay £100,000 to the Soviet for a fourth century manuscript of the, Bible. This is the largest price 'ever paid 'by the Museum for a manuscript.

The manuscript is the Codex Sinaiticus, Which formerly was in the possession of the Czar of Russia. It is one of the oldest manuscripts of the Bible, and is regarded as of ' paramount importance to the establishment of its text. , - • The Prime Minister (Mr.' MacDonald) stated in the House of Commons that the Government had undertaken to make a special contribution toward the purchase price of one pound for every 1:1 subscribed by the' public.

Mr. R. Flower, Deputy Keeper of Manuscripts at the British Museum, says that the purchase is the most important that the 'Museum has ever made.

Monks Ignorant of Value.

The Codex, which is written in Greek, is one of the most important manuscripts in the world. Forty-three leaves of -it were discovered in 1844 by the German Biblical scholar, Tischendorf, in a rubbish basket at the monastery of St. : Catherine, on Mount Sinai. These were presented to the Leipzig Library.

Tischendorf, in 1853, returned to Mount Sinai, and was shown additional manuscripts 'which he recognised as the main bulk of that formerly obtained, and which were sent to the Czar Alexander. ' .

The Codex consists of a very large portion of the Old Testament a translation of the Hebrew Septuagint, -although some books are fragmentary, and also a complete: New Testament Epistle of Barnabas and a treatise 'known as "The Shepherd' of Hennes," which was so popular in the early Church that ,it was nearly included in the Canon of Scripture.

This Codex, dating from the second half of the fourth century, and the Codex Vaticanus at Rome, constitute the two earliest, great Biblical manuscripts.

The third is the Codex Alexandrinus, dating from the second half of the fifth-century, which is already in the British Museum.. ..

Wrapped in a Napkin.
(Published in "The Times"),

The announcement that the British Museum has • an opportunity of acquiring the Codex will thrill everybody' interested in the history of the Bible, writes Sir Frederick Kenyon, Director and Principal Librarian of the British Museum, in "The Times." ' , • , -

Its intrinsic value is ,heightened ..by the glamor of its romantic discovery.

Tischendorf, in 1844, found -several leaves of the Codex that had been, consigned . to the furnace. He was informed that much similar material had- already:, -been destroyed, Inquiry elicited that other portions of the manuscript existed. .

Tischeridorf's eagerness was aroused, but he was not permitted to take more although he warned the monks that such treasures were too valuable to feed to the furnaces.

When he returned to the.:monastery in 1853, his enquiries met with blank negatives, but these 'were changed later because he was under the powerful patronage, of Alexander II., Protector Of the Greek Church.

On his last evening visit he showed a steward of the monastery his recently published Septuagint version of the Old Testament whereupon the steward produced, the remainder of the Codex, wrapped in a napkin.

Written on Vellum:

The Codex was written by four scribes on fine vellum leaves, measuring 15in. by 13Y2in. 'The text is arranged four columns to a page, except for the poetical 'books of the Old Testament, Which are,giVerr-lin 'tw6-COLUmns to a page.

Thus it recalls' the papyrus rats from' Which the text was copied. Generally, it is more impressive than the Codex Vaticanus.—(Melbourne "Herald,")

Archbishop of Sinai Demands Its Return.

Cairo, 29th January.

The Archbishop of Sinai has telegraphed to the authorities of the British Museum requesting the, return of-the Codex Sinaiticus. He says the British public Must know that the manuscript belongs to the monastery of Mount Sinai.

[The Codex Sinaiticus, the oldest 'Biblical manusnript in the world, was bought from the Soviet Government in December for the British Museum, -the- price paid being £100,000. The Archbishop's claim raises an interesting situation.—(Melbourne "Age..')] “Go Ye Out to Meet Him.

Out of the past, with its death-haunting shadows,
Out of the dread what to-morrow may bring;
Out of the doubt that has hindered our service,
Out of self's winter and into His spring.
Out of the keenness that notes others' failure,
Blind to the pain of the path they have trod:.

Out of ourselves and our own fancied goodness,
Into the life that is hidden in God.
Out of the fear of what others will think of us,
Out of the longing that others should praise:
Out of all questioning why He thus deals with us,
Into the life of content with His ways.

Out of the life that is always expecting
Sympathy, love, all that' friendship can' give:
Into the life where the joy is in sharing,
Poured out in service that others may live.
Out of all giving that lacks love's. sweet graciousness,
Out of all judging with earth-eyes so dim;
Out of the Natural into the Heavenly,
Church of the living God rise to meet him!

Prayer Brings Peace.

“Being in an agony, He prayed,” is the record of our Saviour's Gethsemane experience. The lesson stands for all time. Like a bright lamp, the little sentence shines amid the olive trees of the garden. It shows us the path to comfort in our, time of sorrow. .Never before or since was there such grief as the Redeemer's that night, but in His prayer He found comfort. As we watch Him the hour through, we see the agony changing as He prayed, until at last its 'bitterness was all gone, and sweet, blessed peace took its place. The gate of prayer is always the gate to comfort.

There is no other place to go. We may learn also from our Lord's Gethsemane how to pray in our Gethsemanes. God will never blame us for asking to have the cup removed nor for the intensity of our supplication; but we must pray with submission. It is when we say in our deepest intensity, “Not my will, but Thine,” that comfort comes, that peace comes.

Perfect loyalty to Christ brings perfect peace into the heart. The secret of Christ's own peace was His absolute devotion to His Father's will. We can find peace in no other way. Any resistance to God's will, any disobedience of His law, any wrenching of our lives out of His hand must break the peace of our hearts. No lesson that He gives ever mars our peace, if we receive it with willing, teachable spirit, and strive to learn it just as He has written it out for us.

If we take the lessons just as they are given to us, we shall make our life music, and we shall find peace.—T. R. Miller, H.D.

“A Voice From Switzerland.”

In last November's issue of the "People's Paper" extracts were given from the above-mentioned booklet with the intimation that a supply was expected to be available for all desiring them. We are sorry to say that only five could be procured. These are now being loaned around amongst the good number of brethren who ordered copies, and we ask those who have not had Word to that effect, to accept this notice that they have not been overlooked, but shall receive a copy as soon as possible. It has been impossible to write all personally about the matter. Should a further edition be printed all will be supplied as originally intended. It is to be understood that we are not necessarily endorsing all that is stated in this booklet, but think many of the thoughts very interesting and probable.

The Lord's Supper.

THE thoughts of the Lord's consecrated people being X of His death at this time of year, we cannot — more particularly directed toward the Memorial fail to be benefitted by a review of 'the institution of this Supper, which our Lord established shortly before the close of His sacrificial life on earth. It was celebrated on the day before the Passover proper began—on the fourteenth of Nisan, the first month of the Jewish sacred year.

The Law respecting the Passover was very exact. The lamb was to be taken on the tenth day of Nisan, was to 'be killed on the fourteenth, and was to be eaten during the night 'before the dawn of the fifteenth. In the antitype Jesus offered Himself at Jordan and was killed 3% years later, on the fourteenth: of Nisan, after all except His faithful few neglected to receive Him. It was in the same Jewish day in which He was crucified that He ate the Passover and later on was betrayed. (The day with the Jew began at sundown and lasted until the next evening.)

One Evangelist records that our Lord said to His disciples, "With desire have I desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer." It was His last commemoration of the Jewish rite, which as a Jew He was bound to observe legally, fully. We may not know the particular hour of the fourteenth day at which our Lord and the disciples partook of the Lord's Supper, but probably it was near midnight, after the Passover had been eaten, that our Lord instituted the new memorial of His own death, substituting it for the Passover supper of the Law, and intimating this in His words, "Henceforth, as oft as ye do this, do it in remembrance of Me." "This" represented the antitypical Lamb, "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world," and doing this—breaking the bread and drinking of the fruit of the vine—showed forth our Lord's death and not any longer the death of the type, 'because the anti-type had now come, and in this same day, a few hours later, He would be killed, crucified. Our Lord was thus laying a deep and broad basis for the New Creation,—His Church, and separating it from the Jewish type by pointing out to the 'believers Himself as the antitype, and the higher meaning connected therewith—the deliverance of all the true Israelites, not from Pharaoh, but from Pharaoh's antitype, Satan, the deliverance of all the first-born of God's people from death into life more abundant, eternal life.

It was while the Lord and His apostles were eating the Passover Supper, the typical roast lamb, that our Lord said to them, "One of you shall betray Me." John tells us 'that our Lord was "troubled in spirit," manifested emotion, at the time He said this. His emotion was not caused, we may be sure, by the matter of His betrayal, for He evidently foreknew the particulars as well as the fact of His death. The cause of His sorrow, we may reasonably suppose, was the thought that one of those whom He had so tenderly kept and cared for should now prove so ungrateful, unthankful, unholy—evidently His sorrow was for Judas. His statement drew forth inquiries from the disciples, “Lord, is it I?” Or rather, as the Greek word would seem to indicate, the question signified, Lord, do you mean to accuse me? I am not the one, am I? And the disciples in general were sorrowful, too. It was well, perhaps, that they should pass through this experience at this time, as they evidently needed it all, in order to prepare their’ for the trying times just before them.

Judas asked the same question with the rest, for riot to have asked it would have implied that he admitted his guilt. Our Lord’s answer was that it was one who supped with them, and dipping the sop He gave it to Judas, who forthwith went out. (John 13: 25-30.) So far from these incidents melting the heart of Judas and leading him to change his course before it was too late, they seem to have aroused in him a malevolent spirit, just as Divine mercy toward Pharaoh, in the stopping of the plagues, hardened his heart. Instead of resisting the Adversary’s suggestions, Judas entertained them more and more, until he was filled with the Satanic spirit. “Satan entered into him,” fully, completely—took possession of his heart as an instrument of evil, and it was doubtless because he felt out of place in such-society that he went out. -

It thus Seems that Judas was not with the others when our -Cord” instituted with the bread and the., fruit of the vine,,the Memorial of His death. It was better that he should be absent ; and so it would be preferable, where possible, that only the true, loyal, devoted disciples of Christ should meet together to celebrate His death on its anniversary. Nevertheless, let us remember that...We are not competent to judge the heart, and hence in coming to the memorial table all should be invited to come who trust in the precious blood of Christ for redemption and who profess a full consecration to the Lord. Let us leave it to Divine providence to scrutinise those who profess to be fellow-disciples.

Primary Signification of the Bread and Cup.

In presenting to the disciples the unleavened bread, as a memorial, our Lord gave a general explanation, saying, “Take, eat ; this is my body.” The evident meaning of the words is: This symbolises or represents My body. It was not actually His body, because in no sense of the word had His body yet been ‘broken; in no sense would it have been possible for any to have partaken of Him actually or antitypically then, the sacrifice not being as yet finished. But the picture is complete when we recognise that the unleavened bread represented our Lord’s sinless flesh—leaven being a symbol of sin under the Law, and specially commanded to be put away at this time. On another occasion our Lord gave a lesson which interprets to us this symbol. He said, “The bread of God is He that came down from . heaven and giveth His life for the world. I am the bread of life.”—John 6: 33, 35.

In order to appreciate how we are to eat or appropriate this living bread, it is necessary for us to understand just what it was. According to our Lord’s explanation of the matter, it was His flesh which He sacrificed for us. It was not His prehuman existence as a spirit being that was sacrificed, although that was laid down and its glory laid aside, that He might take our human nature. It was the fact that ;our Lord Jesus was holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and without any contamination from father Adam, and hence free from sin—it was this fact that permitted Him to be the Redeemer of Adam and his race—which permitted Him to give His life a ransom for all, to be testified in due time. And when we see that it was the pure, spotless human nature of our Lord Jesus that was laid down on behalf of sinners, sacrificed for us, we see what it is that we are privileged to appropriate. The very thing which He laid down for us we are to “eat,” appropriate to ourselves: that is to say, His perfect human nature was given for us and re-, deemed Adam and all his race from condemnation to death—to a right to return to human perfection and everlasting life if they could. The Scriptures show us, . however, that if God would consider all of past sins cancelled and should recognise us as having a right to return to human perfection, this still would not make us perfect nor give us, therefore, the right to everlasting life. In order for the race of Adam to profit: by the redemption accomplished by our Lord's sacrifice, it is necessary that He should make a second advent, and then to be to the whole world a Mediator and King, to assist back to perfection and to harmony With God all who will avail themselves of the privileges .then to be offered.

It is this same 'blessing which the Gospel Church in this age receives by faith from the Redeemer, viz., justification by faith—not justification to a spiritual nature, which we never had and never lost, and which Christ did not redeem ; but justification to human nature, Which father Adam did possess and lose, and which Christ did redeem by giving His own sinless flesh as our ransom-sacrifice. The partaking of the bread, then, means to us primarily acceptance and appropriation to ourselves, by faith, of justification to human rights and privileges secured by our Lord's sacrifice of these.

Likewise, the fruit of the vine symbolised our Lord's life given for us—His human life, His being, His soul, poured out unto death on our behalf ; and the appropriating of this by us signifies primarily our acceptance of restitution rights and privileges which our Lord has thus, at His own cost, secured for us.

The Secondary and Deeper Significance of the Loaf and the Cup.

As we have already seen, God's object in justifying by faith the Church during this Gospel Age in advance of the justification of the world through works of obedience, in the Millennial Age, is for the very purpose of permitting those who now see and hear and appreciate the great sacrifice which Love has made on their behalf, to present their bodies living sacrifices, and thus to have part with our Lord in His sacrifice—as members of His Body. This additional and deep meaning of the memorial our Lord did not refer to directly.' It was doubtless one of the things to which He referred, saying, "I have many things to tell you, but ye cannot bear them now ; howbeit, when he, the spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth, and show you things to come."

The spirit of truth, speaking through the Apostle Paul, clearly explains the matter of this secondary and very high import of the memorial, for he says, writing to the consecrated Church : "The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the participation of the blood of Christ? The bread which we break, is it not the participation of the body of Christ ?"—to share with Christ as joint-sacrificers even unto death, that thereby they may be counted in with Him also as sharers of the glory which He has received as a reward for His faithfulness. "For we being many are one loaf and one body." (I Cor. 10; 16, 17.) Both views of this impressive ordinance are important : it is necessary that we should see, first of all, our justification through the Lord's sacrifice. It is proper, then, that we should realise that the entire Christ is, from the divine standpoint, a composite 'body of many members, of which Jesus is the Head, and that this Church as a whole must 'be broken, and that in this respect each member of it must be a. copy of the Lord Jesus and must walk in the footsteps of His sacrifice. We do this by giving our lives, "laying down our lives on behalf of the brethren," as Christ laid down His life for all. It is not our spiritual life that we lay down, even as it was not our Lord's spiritual life that He laid down in sacrifice ; but as He sacrificed His actually perfect being, so we must sacrifice our justified selves, reckoned, perfect but not actually so. Likewise, the cup represents suffering. It is one cup, though it be the juice of many grapes, even as it is one loaf, though it be from many grains. The grains cannot maintain their individuality and their own life if they would become bread for others; the grapes cannot maintain themselves as grapes if they would constitute the life-giving spirit; and thus we see the beauty of the Apostle's statement, that the Lord's people are participants in the one loaf and one cup.

Our Lord distinctly declares that the cup, the fruit of the vine, represents blood, hence life; not life retained, but life shed or given, yielded up, sacrificed life. He tells us that it was for the remission of sins, and that all who would be His must drink of it—must accept His sacrifice and appropriate it by faith. All who would be justified through faith must accept life from this one source. It will not do to claim an immortality outside of Christ; it will not do to declare that life is the result of obedience to the Law; it will not do to claim that faith in and obedience to any great teacher will amount to the same thing and bring eternal life. There is no other way to attain eternal life except through accepting the blood once shed as the ransom price for the sins of the whole world. “There is no other name given under heaven or amongst men whereby we must be saved.” Likewise, there is no other way that we can attain to the new nature than by accepting the Lord’s invitation to drink of His cup, and be broken with Him as members of the one loaf, and to be buried with Him in baptism into His death, and thus to be with Him in His resurrection to glory, honour and immortality.—Rom. 6:3-5; 8-17.

The Celebration in the Kingdom.

As usual, our Lord had something to say about the Kingdom. It seems to have been associated in His every discourse; and so on this occasion He reminds those to whom He had already given the promise to share in the Kingdom if faithful, of His declaration that He would go away to receive a Kingdom and to Come again to receive them to share it. He now adds that this memorial which He instituted would find its fulfilment in the Kingdom. Just what our Lord meant by this might be difficult to positively determine, but it seems not inconsistent to understand Him to mean that as a result of the trials and sufferings symbolised there will be a jubilation in the Kingdom. “He will see of the travail of His soul and be satisfied.” He will look back over trials and difficulties endured in faithful obedience to the Father’s will, and will rejoice in these as He shall see the grand outcome in the Kingdom blessings which will come to all mankind. And the same jubilation will be shared by all His disciples Who drink of this wine, first in justification and secondly in consecration, and who suffer with Him. They are promised that they shall reign with Him, and when the reign is begun and when the Kingdom work has been established, looking back, they, as well as He, will praise the way that God has led them, even though it be a “narrow way,” a way of sacrifice, a way of self-denial. Our Lord’s faith stood the test of all these trying hours which He knew to be so near to the time of His apprehension and death. The fact that He, rendered thanks to God for the bread and for the cup are indicative of a joyful acquiescence in all the sufferings which the breaking of the bread and the crushing of the grapes implied. He was satisfied already with the Father’s arrangement, and could give thanks, as by and by He will greatly rejoice. In line with this was the singing of a hymn as they parted, a hymn of praise, no doubt, thanksgiving to the Father that His course was so nearly finished, and that He had found thus far grace sufficient for every time of need.

The Memorial Supper this Year.

The anniversary of our Lord’s death will this year fall, according to Jewish reckoning, on Friday, March 30th. Consequently, the appropriate time for all consecrated followers of the Master desiring to celebrate His memorial on its anniversary would be at the time corresponding to the “same night in which He was betrayed”—the night of Thursday, March 29th.

Let us come together, orderly and quietly, full of precious thoughts respecting the great transaction we celebrate, rather than with our attention much taken up with forms and ceremonies. Let us in this, as in all things, seek to do that which would be pleasing to our Lord, and then we will be sure that it will be profitable to all who participate.

In mem'ry of the Saviour's love
We keep this simple feast,
Where ev'ry consecrated heart
Is made a welcome guest.

By faith we take the bread of life
Which this doth symbolise;
This cup in token of His blood,
Our costly sacrifice.

This cup shall e'er recall the hour
When thou d'idst set us free;
Soon with new joy in Kingdom power
We'll drink it, Lord, with Thee.

What rapturous joy shall then be ours,
Forever, Lord, with Thee!
Clothed with our resurrection powers,
Thine endless praise shall be.

The Greatest Revolution in Human History.

AND so the story goes. Machines displacing men and ever more men ! In fact, it is understood that a factory for the production of rayon yarn is nearly completed which will 'be entirely automatic, with production carried on twenty- four hours per day without a worker in the plant!

We are in the midst of what is the greatest revolution in all human -history. The machine has become so efficient that it is rapidly tending to reduce the economic need for human labour to zero.

Technology can make goods almost as free as the air we breathe, but this will mean fundamental changes which will go far beyond the 'new ideal' of any of our politicians. Unless we make these changes, and fairly soon, human society will be caught and torn to pieces by the very wheels it has created."

Thus is brought to view the possible ending of extreme 'sweat of face' which was part of the curse imposed on man when sin entered. Now is seen the possibility of removing that feature of the curse if sin were abolished. However, while sin still reigns, selfish greed and ambition for riches and power will prevent the blessing which machinery might be to mankind and make a great cause of present unemployment and distress. Only when the great task-master, well represented in Pharaoh of Egypt, has been overthrown and his evil influences have -been restrained, and instead earth's new ruler—the Prince of Peace—takes control and His spirit of love, sympathy, peace and joy pervades the hearts of men, will the curse of sin and death be rolled back and the world be a happy family—no more labour and sorrow, no more burdened souls, no more weeping nor sighing, no more curse, and "there shall 'be no more death." The following excerpt from an address by Professor Miles Walker, of the British Association, is interesting "This failure of civilisation to attain its purpose is not surprising when we remember that the chief principle in operation has 'been 'every man for himself and the devil take the hindmost.' This is supposed by some economists to be the only principle which will work satisfactorily and automatically. It certainly does automatically give the hindmost to the devil."

"The main business of the world, to-day, is buying and selling. Things are .manufactured to be sold at a profit. When prices are low, business is said to be had. This shows how invested is the position under our ridiculous system. It ought to, be just the other way. Buying and selling should be a mere unavoidable incident in the distribution of wealth. When prices are low, it should be evidence of economical manufacture and distribution, and the standard of life should accordingly be higher. The main business of the world should not be to buy and to sell, but to make the things that men want and distribute them in the simplest way without adding any more to the cost than is absolutely necessary. .

. . Many attempts are made to justify the prices at which things are sold, but the real reason for high prices is that in a so-called civilised country there are only about 15 per cent. of the inhabitants making a real contribution to wealth; the remainder are hangers-on, such as landlords, merchants, retailers, servants of the rich and retainers of all sorts. .

. I suggest that the engineers and economists of this association should urge upon the Government the necessity of organising a wealth-producing community in which the voluntary work of thousands of young men might be directed to making things for themselves—houses, clothing, fuel, food, and most of the things they want. . . The abject in view would be to ascertain how far it is possible with our present knowledge and the best methods of manufacture and distribution for a group of, say, 100,000 persons to maintain themselves and continually to increase their wealth when freed from the restraints and social errors of modern civilisation. Such an experiment might do more to enlighten the world as to the possibility of modern logical methods than an experiment carried out on a continent thousands of miles across, where unforeseen difficulties might easily defeat the best intentions."

Adelaide Convention.

Word is to hand from the secretary of the Adelaide Ecclesia, directing attention to the Annual Convention that has been arranged for Easter in that city. It is understood that the usual four days—Good Friday to Easter Monday, March 30th to April 2nd—will be taken up with the gatherings, and a hearty invitation is extended by the Adelaide brethren to all who may be able to join them in this season of fellowship and praise before the Lord. Our prayers are to the end that the assemblies may bring much blessing and encouragement to all able to attend.

The gatherings will be held in the usual meeting rooms in Liverpool Buildings, Flinders Street, Adelaide, and visiting friends not supplied with programmes, or desiring further information are advised to communicate with the secretary, Mrs. H. H. Bartel, 10 Forest Avenue East, Clarence Gardens, Adelaide, S.A.

Ancient Bible for State.

Gift from London Bookseller.

A copy of the Geneva version of the Bible, believed to have been published in 1589, has been presented as a Centenary gift to the State of Victoria by Mr. W. A. Foyle, the head of a London bookselling firm. The Premier (Sir Stanley Argyle) was informed of the gift in a letter which he received recently from the Agent-General for Victoria in London (Mr. R. Linton) who said that it was due entirely to the initiative of Miss Mary Chomley that this ancient and historically valuable Bible had been acquired by the State. Head arranged for Miss Chomley to bring the Bible with her, and to present it personally. Miss Chomley arrived in Melbourne recently by the "Mongolia."

According to authorities, the Geneva version of the Bible was regarded by scholars of the 16th century as of great distinction for its accuracy. With other versions, however, it was supplanted by the Authorised Version, which was published in 1611.—News Cutting.

Not Holding the Head.

THE Apostle warns us all against a wrong attitude which at all times has more or less threatened the body of Christ, in its larger gatherings as well as in its little handfals ;—he warns us against the danger of looking too much to ourselves or to other men in the Church and not enough toward the Lord, who is indeed "the Head of the Church, which is His Body." Some members he represents as taking a head position, forgetful of the fact that "one is the Head of the Church, even Christ," and inclined, in consequence of this forgetfulness, to think too highly of themselves, to imagine that the whole weight and importance of the Lord's cause devolves upon them, and to assume too much leadership.

The Apostle warns other less prominent members of the Church against a recognition and support of such a wrong position, assuring them that their condescension is extreme, prejudicial to themselves and to the interests they would serve; that the angels, that is the messengers, the representatives of the Church (Rev. 1: 20; 2: 1) are not to be worshipped, though they are to be highly esteemed in proportion to their faithfulness, good works and humility.

He warns other members that such a humiliation as would ignore themselves entirely and cast all the weight and responsibility and influence upon these angels or elders would be improper, and would indicate an unfaithfulness to Christ and a failure to rightly appreciate His arrangements.

Dangers in Opposite Extremes.

Thus, reproving two classes because of taking opposite extremes, the Apostle proceeds to explain that the difficulty with both parties is a failure to hold the Head in proper esteem—Christ, the only true Head of the Church. Whether by exalting ourselves, usurping our Lord's place in the Church, and ignoring His words and arrangements and being puffed up as His servants, or whether, on the other hand, quietly submitting to such things and doing reverence to those who usurp the Lord's place in His body, in either case the difficulty is the same—a failure to rightly recognise the true Head.

If we accept the fact that Christ is the Head of the Church, let us rest every argument on that basis; let us not feel for a moment that everything will go to pieces unless we steady the ark—that we are main spokes in the divine programme in any little quarter of Zion (1 Chron. 13: 10). All such self-conceited ideas are traitorous as respects the Captain of our salvation, for He has told us, and we believe His word—"Without Me, ye can do nothing." Every member of the body of Christ, whom the Lord has in any sense of the word set in the Church to serve His cause, should realise that he is not at all essential to the development of the divine plan, that it is a favour, pure and simple, that he has been granted a share in connection with it, that His blessings, day by day, more than compensate any little Service and sacrifice he may be able to render. So far from feeling heady he should feel humbled by the thought that he is permitted to have any part in the great plan of God as a servant amongst his brethren, and he should realise distinctly that, so surely as the Lord is the Head of His Church, any who cease to occupy positions of trust in a humble manner will be debased, will lose the privileges and opportunities, perhaps with injury to themselves and to others.

Self First, God Second.

In 2 Tim. 2: 3, the Apostle assures us that, in the last days, grievous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of self, lovers of money, boastful, haughty, railers, disobedient to parents (and higher authority in general), unthankful, unholy . . . traducers, heady, high-minded . . . having a form of godliness, but ignoring the power thereof.

This picture certainly fits well to our day throughout nominal Christendom, and it is not strange, therefore, that something of the same general spirit at times seeks to invade the camp of the saints—the little companies of the consecrated who are striving to be overcomers of the world and its spirit. The fact that the Apostle writes thus forcefully on this question does not prove any lack of sympathy on his part, but the trouble is a grievous one and especially injurious to the brethren who may yield to such headiness: nothing is surer to sap spiritual vitality and to lead us into darkness, both doctrinal and spiritual.

It would be well for all whom the Lord hath set in the body, either in a humble position or in a conspicuous place, to have the Apostle's words well in mind—that as our Lord humbled Himself and was subsequently exalted, it demonstrates a principle at work in the Father's programme under which all of His Royal Priesthood must humble themselves if they would in due time be exalted. The Apostle Peter's argument also is, "Humble yourselves, therefore, brethren, under the mighty hand of God, that He may exalt you in due time." Now is not the proper time for exaltation; to elevate ourselves or others under present conditions is to incur the greater danger of a fall. Hence, all who are earnest and of humble heart, should both watch and pray lest they enter into temptation along this line, which, from the very beginning of the Gospel Age, has been the most serious stumbling block in the pathway of this class. We remember that it was amongst the apostles themselves that the argument took place as to which would be greatest in the Kingdom. Let us all remember our Lord's words of reproof to them, "Except ye humble yourselves and become as little children, ye can in no wise enter into the Kingdom."

Thus our Lord marks humility as one of the prime essentials of a place in the Kingdom. It will not be very long—let us have patience. Let us have faith, too, not be doubters. Which of the endeavour to grasp and wield authority in the Church is at first undertaken with the best of intentions, with the desire to do and be in the highest interests of the Church. In such cases, faith is not strong enough to realise how unnecessary we are to the divine plan and how able the Lord is to overrule every incident and circumstance according to the divine will. More faith in the Lord's power to regulate the affairs of the Church will counteract largely the efforts of some of His people to run the Church's interests along lines of their own wisdom and ability. Let us remember that He is able, He is willing, to work all things according to the counsel of His own will. Let us remember that our highest place is lying low, that the greatest mastery is self-mastery, and that whatever success we might have in usurping the place and authority of our Lord and His Word would undoubtedly react unfavourably to us in the end. Hence, in self-preservation, as well as in the interest of the Church and in honor of the Lord, we need to keep self under. Let us remember the words of the poet and apply them daily :—

“O! to be nothing, nothing,
Painful the humbling may be;
Yet low in the dust I’d lay me
That the world my Saviour might see.
Rather be nothing, nothing
To Him let their voices be raised
He is the fountain of blessing,
Yes, worthy is He to be praised.”

Let us keep ever in memory the Apostles’ example and words: “We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus, our Lord, and ourselves your servants for Jesus’ sake.” 2. Cor. 4: 5.

The Nemesis of anti-Semitism.

“There are things worse than physical violence,” says the Chief Rabbi (Dr. J. H. Hertz) in “In Ancient Egypt and Present-day Germany,” a Passover sermon published as a pamphlet in connection with the anti-Jew movement in Germany, “and among these things is the unbelievable trampling underfoot of the human dignity of the Jewish population. Jews as a body are constantly branded in the Nazi Press, and by means of every form of Government propaganda, as ‘traitors’ and ‘criminals,’ and are spoken of as ‘vermin’ and ‘monsters’ who forever plot the ruin of their fellow-men.”

“In various German towns, public placards have been, posted broadcasting the foul and Satanic lie of Jewish ritual murder, warning Christian mothers to guard their children well, as the Jewish Passover is approaching and ‘the Jews require blood.’ To such low depths does a Government descend in order to infuriate the mob against the Jew, to make him loathsomely hateful in the eyes of his fellow-men, to ‘embitter his life,’ and crush his spirit. . . . But one need be neither Rabbi nor even religionist to see that the world is built somehow on moral foundations, and that no nation which chooses anti-Semitism, i.e., the will to hate, as the basis of its national life, can have a future. ‘The study of European history during the past centuries,’ wrote Olive Schreiner in connection with the Tsarist pogroms of a generation ago, ‘teaches us one uniform lesson: that the nations which have received and in any way dealt fairly and mercifully with the Jew have prospered ; and that the nations that have tortured and oppressed him have written out their own curse.’ “—”Christian World.”

The Call of the Church, the Bride of Christ.

(Convention Address.)

“Hearken, O daughter, and consider, and incline thine ear ; forget also thine own people, and thy Father’s house; so shall the King greatly desire thy beauty; for He is thy Lord and worship thou Him.”—Psa. 45: 10, 11.

We recognise these words of the Psalmist as prophetic—referring to the Church of Christ. God has been calling out of the world a peculiar people during the present age, to be the Bride of Christ. The Prophet here pictures the call of this class, the terms of the call, and the preparation of the Bride for her marriage to the King’s Son. The exhortation is that those who have taken upon themselves the covenant of faithfulness are to separate from the world. Hear the injunction, “Forget thine own people and thy father’s house.”

Our own people are the human family. Our father’s house is Adam’s house. By nature we belong to his house; we have natural interests in his inheritance. Whatever we have as human beings we have received from Adam. Those who are now the Lord’s people, were by nature children of wrath even as others. But we have been called out of this condition and invited to become “the Bride, the Lamb’s wife.” Rev. 21: 2, 9-11; Psa. 45: 9.

None of the human family could claim to be worthy of this high exaltation—to be the Bride—nor even to life on the earthly plane, for neither Jew nor Gentile could keep the Divine Law. Our Lord Jesus was the only ‘One who could keep that law, for it is the full measure of a perfect man’s ability. Our Lord Jesus being a perfect man, kept the law, and additionally laid down His life according to the Father’s will, thus becoming heir of all things. Just as a wealthy man might take a beggar for a wife, lifting her up from her degraded condition and making her joint-heir in his inheritance, his name, his honour and his property, so the Lord Jesus is taking a Bride from the fallen human family to make her joint-heir with Himself.

We had nothing that would ever entitle us to be taken into God’s family, but God made this way for us through His plan of redemption. What a wonderful thing for us that God should choose some, a little flock, to be associated with our Lord in blessing all the families of the earth. This is indeed a heavenly calling.

This choice is being made in harmony with the custom of olden times, as in the case of Abraham and Isaac.

Abraham typified Jehovah, Isaac our Lord Jesus Christ, and Isaac’s bride (Rebecca) the Church. As Abraham sent his servant to seek a bride for his son Isaac, so God has sent through this Gospel Age the message of His grace by His holy spirit, His servant, to seek a Bride for His only begotten Son.

The promises of God have gone here and there through the world and acted like a magnet upon certain individuals. The magnet of God’s truth has been a power that has drawn a certain class, but does not attract others so much. Is God making a discrimination? Yes, there are many whom He does not want at all for ‘His present purpose. He is not calling the world now, but a people for His name to have Jesus as their King, by whom He intends to bless all the families of the earth in due time. Whosoever will may then come and take of the water of life freely, as Jesus Himself said, “I if I be lifted up will draw all men unto Me.” These statements would have seemed very strange to us once, for we had in mind the idea, handed down from the errors of the past, that whoever did not understand and accept spiritual truths, thus becoming a saint during this present life, would have to burn for all eternity. Now we see that God is gathering out a special class that have special characteristics. God uses measures to drive others off, as many are called but few chosen. The Lord is also using means to cause any who do not enter into His fold by the strait gate, the narrow way, to fall out of fellowship with His chosen ones, that He may separate the tares from the wheat. This is in order that any of the worldly who have attached themselves to the Church may be separated from His chosen ones, but those who are of the true Church class will adhere the closer.

In the parable of the wheat and tares, Jesus shows that in the harvest time of the Gospel Age He will completely separate the wheat from the tares. Matt. 13: 36-43. Not a grain of wheat is to be left among the tares and not a tare is to be left among the wheat. The wheat class will be taken out by the Lord and gathered into the garner; the tares will be uprooted from the wheat field and burned. In other words, in the time of trouble the tares will be shown to be of the world as they have been all along. There is only one class desired for the Bride—true Christians. Millions of people are associated together and calling themselves Christians who have not the slightest relationship to God—they are tares. They have not come into harmony with God through the door, Jesus Christ. (John 10: 1-7.) Some assemble together because their parents or friends do, and some have the thought that unless they are baptised they would go to eternal torment.

In the end of this age now present, there is to be a great burning time; not the people, but their religious conceptions and affiliations are to be burned up. The fire of that day will try every man's work of what sort it is. (1 Cor. 3: 13.) Those who have 'built with the stubble of human traditions will suffer loss—their works and professions will perish. These are they who build on the sand—their systems and doctrines will be consumed by fire. The great church systems will suffer complete collapse in the day of the Lord—they will fall to rise no more. Jer. 51: 58.

The special ones whom God has been gathering out for eighteen centuries to be the Bride of Christ, have accepted God's terms and entered into a special covenant with Him. These terms are very positive and definite. Our Heavenly Father, in making the arrangement by which we may come into His family, drew up an unchangeable contract more binding than any earthly marriage contract. It is a condition of full surrender to Him, for we give up our own wills and accept the will of our God. Those who have become betrothed to the Lord Jesus Christ have given all to Him.

They do not have very much to be sure; most of us have very little, for "not many great, not many wise, not many noble are called." (1 Cor. 1-123-29.) However, association with the One to whom they are betrothed gives them a noble character. The spirit of God begins immediately to work in them "to will and to do of His good pleasure"; it is a transforming work. The Apostle Paul tells us that we are "transformed by the renewing of our minds." (Rom. 12: 2.) Our body is the same body that we had before, but we have a new mind; we are new creatures. All things appear in a new light. This makes a great change in us. We know that if we are of this class the things we once loved we now hate. Now we love the things pure, noble and beautiful. Many of the things which we once loved were things which we cannot now approve. We have received the begetting of the spirit, and as God's spirit abounds in us more and more, we become copies of. His dear Son, our Redeemer, our Head, our Bridegroom.

In the case of the Hebrew marriage contract, if the bride-elect was guilty of infidelity to her betrothed bridegroom, the unfaithfulness was punished by death. So, should any of us who have made a contract with our Lord violate that vow and be untrue to the Bridegroom, we would lose all. "If any man draw back My soul shall have no pleasure in him," says the Lord. The Apostle Paul says that these draw back to perdition.

We are espoused to a Husband, having taken upon us certain obligations. We must go on now and make our calling and election sure if we want to gain the prize of the high calling of God. One may make unintentional slips of various kinds; probably there is no child of God who has not made such slips. Our imperfections are hindrances to our doing perfectly ; but our great Redeemer, who is our prospective Bridegroom, has made satisfaction for our imperfections. Therefore, when we err we are to go to the throne of heavenly grace to obtain mercy with God through Jesus Christ our Lord. If we were perfect we would not need to go to the throne of grace to find mercy and grace to help in every time of need. (Heb. 4: 16.) But as we become developed as Christians we shall not need to go so often to obtain mercy. As we grow stronger we grow wiser, but we shall need mercy as long as we are in the imperfect flesh. The Lord knows our blemishes and unsuccessful strivings to overcome, and He has provided us a covering—the precious robe of Christ’s righteousness. The spotless robe given us is the wedding garment mentioned in our Lord’s parable in Matt. 22: 11-14. Clad in this precious robe we may come in and be participators at the great marriage as members of the Bride of Christ. We are exhorted to keep our garments unspotted from the world, yet it seems that no one can pass through the world and always remain absolutely spotless. But if those who are in the right attitude of heart should get a spot on their robe it will be so grievous to them that they will hasten to remove it. There is only one way to get a spot from that robe: we must take the matter to the throne of grace, and whatever our sin, when our lapse has been acknowledged, the cleansing merit of Jesus’ blood is applied and our robe is spotless again. (1 John 1: 7-9.) In this way our robe is kept white. The blood of Jesus Christ—the atoning merit of His sacrifice—cleanses us if we come to Him with a contrite heart.

There are some who do not take these steps and who do not have these spots removed. When first we came to the Lord full of earnest desire to keep ourselves unspotted from the world we were careful about our robe, but how shocked you were at the first spot. You said, “I am a child of God, and oh, what a mistake I have made.” But as time passed and you realised more and more keenly your infirmities of the flesh, you found that you were often overtaken by these weaknesses. But if you were a true child of God, you conquered this feeling and went to the Lord to have the spots removed. A great many Christian people, however, have not been faithful in this respect; they are deceived, but a reckoning time is at hand. They have failed to make their calling and election sure. Their lives are unsatisfactory to themselves and to God; they will not be of the Bride class. Nobody whose robe is covered with spots will be received into the wedding as a member of the Bride of Christ, for the Bride is to be without spot or wrinkle or any such thing. (Eph. 5: 25-27.) Only thus could she be presentable to the heavenly Bridegroom. There will be weeping and gnashing of teeth among the foolish virgins when the door to the wedding is shut. (Matt. 25: 10-12.) Many will be disappointed in that day.

Let us hope that we shall be among those who make their calling and election sure, that knowing the terms we shall keep our garments unspotted from the world, from everything that is contaminating. “So shall the King greatly desire thy beauty.” It is a beauty that dwells in the heart, a beauty of character. Every Christian should see to it that he is growing daily in grace. In all the members of the true Body of Christ, there is a growth in the Lord’s spirit, a growth in love. This is the beauty that our Bridegroom desires in His Bride—this beauty of character likeness to Himself. We desire this ourselves; we wish to see our hearts and minds opening more and more widely to take in the welfare of others, especially our brethren of the Body of Christ. Those who prove faithful unto death shall receive glory, honour and immortality. “They shall walk with Me in white,” says our Lord, “for they are worthy.”

There is one reason which should make us highly esteem our daily small temptations. They are a far better discipline of humility than sublimer trials. We get no credit for meeting them well.

Death and the Resurrection.

DEATH is not a sleep destruction. ; it is destruction Dead bodies decay because the work of destruction is progressing in them. We say that mortification sets in; that is, the destruction of the tissues goes on until everything that had life in that body has perished. This process of decay is common to both man and beast, and also goes on in the vegetable world. As the Scriptures say, "That which befallerth the sons of men befallerth the beasts; even one thing befallerth them; as the one dieth, so dieth the other ; yea, they have all one breath ; so that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast. all go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again."—Eccl. 3: 19, 20.

Very few people seem to realise what is meant by the term "soul." The Scriptural teaching is that man is a soul, not that he has a soul. In Gen. 2:7 we read, "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the 'breath of life; and man became a living soul.'" The Word of God speaks of both man and beasts as souls. (See Num. 31:28).

A dog has a body; a dog has a life—a vitalising principle; and aside from this life-principle and organism, a dog has a personality. One dog differs from another ; one may be a bulldog, another, a lap-dog in a fashionable family. Each animal has his own joys and sorrows, 'but whatever he is, these things go to make up the experiences by which a dog would recognise himself.

So it is with a human being. There is a body and . a life principle, the union of which makes the soul. His experiences—his home-life, his education, his environment, his travels, his finances, his private affairs—all go to make up his personality. It is not his body, but his soul that has these experiences. As two dogs under different experiences would have very different personalities, so with human beings. All the different experiences of life help to make them happy or unhappy, learned or ignorant, wise or unwise.

In Death, What Pre-eminence Hath a Man?

What is the difference between a brute soul and a human soul? The human soul has a. higher organisation of body and brain, which constitutes him an individual of a higher order ; and not only has he a better brain by Divine appointment, hut he was not made like the brute beast to die after a brief period of years. Man was made to live forever.

In Eden, man came under the sentence of death, as the penalty for disobedience. The entire race has been born in a dying condition. Each human being receives a spark of life from his parents, without which the body would return to dust. When man dies, his personality, which is the result of his hereditary and prenatal influences combined with his experiences, perishes, for it cannot exist without a body. As the Scriptures declare, “In that day his thoughts perish” ; for “the dead know not anything”; “there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest.”—Psa. 146:4; Eccl. 9: 5, 10.

The question then arises: Does man die in the same sense that the brute creation does? We answer that so far as man himself is concerned, he would be as dead as is the beast, if God had not made an arrangement by which humanity will have a future life. God intends to restore to life, not the body, but the soul that died. The soul that went into death is the soul that was redeemed by Jesus.—Psa. 49: 15.

Through the resurrection, God has arranged to show His love for the world. It is written, “When the fullness of time was come, God sent forth His Son” (Gal. 4: 4) ; “Who gave Himself a Ransom for all” (1 Tim. 2: 6)—“for every man.” (Heb. ‘2: 9.) Every man has gone into death or is going there; and unless a redemption had been ‘provided, there could be no resurrection. So the Apostle Paul explains that, “since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order.”-1 Cor. 15:21-23.

This making alive will be the resurrection of the dead —not of those particles of matter which have gone to fertilise a tree and then through its fruit become a part of another organism, but the resurrection of the being—the soul. In the resurrection, “God giveth it a body as it hath pleased Him.” (1 Cor. 15: 38.) To the individual, it does not matter what particles compose his new body. What he is interested in is the resurrection of his soul—his being—his personality. That restoration is the all-important part of the resurrection.

God has given the assurance that He is able to restore mankind ; and we who believe His Word do not think of man as dead in the same sense as is the brute. On the contrary, we allow the beast to pass into oblivion, but we think of man. For our dead we raise a memorial, a remembrance, of the body which represented the personality dear to us. Our faith assures us that the personality is not extinct, but that it will have a resurrection. The respect which we show to our friends and loved ones in their sepulchres indicates our faith in their future life through a resurrection of the dead

Adamic Death Scripturally Called Sleep.

In the Scriptures, ‘God sets forth the thought that the dead are asleep. Since He is the One who has the power and the purpose to raise the dead, He can speak of them in this way. Their bodies have indeed gone to dust, but they as individuals are known to God. To raise men from the dead and to give them back the very thoughts which they had before death will be a stupendous work, which only the wisdom and power of the Almighty God can accomplish.

These alone who have confidence in the promises of God can speak of their loved ones as asleep in death.

The Scriptures speak of the Ancient Worthies as asleep. We read that “David slept with his fathers.” (1 Kings 2:

1.0.) The same statement is made of all of the kings of Israel, whether good or bad. St. Stephen, stoned to death, “fell asleep.” (Acts 7:60.) St. Paul says, “Them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him We which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent (precede—go before) them which sleep and the dead in Christ shall rise first.”-1 Thes. 4: 14-16.

In the morning of that glorious Day when the Sun of Righteousness shall rise with healing in His beams, all that God has promised for that blessed time will come to pass. (Mal. 4: 2.) Meantime, the dead are awaiting that Day during which “all that are in the graves shall hear His voice (the voice of the ‘Son of

(John 5: 28, 29.) In this sense of the word, therefore, we speak of the dead as asleep. ‘Our Lord Himself used this word in speaking of Lazarus. He said, “Lazarus sleepeth.” When by their reply the disciples showed that they did not understand, Jesus said unto them plainly, “Lazarus is dead.”—John 1.1: 11-14.

Heavenly Phase of the Resurrection.

From one standpoint all mankind fall asleep to wait for the morning of the great Millennial Day; when the Sun of Righteousness shall arise. The resurrection will come - to every member of the human race; but as no two individuals have been in the same degree of degradation, some will rise more rapidly than will others. The Scriptures seem to indicate that there will be several classes in the resurrection. ‘One of these is designated the “First Resurrection,” that is, the chief, or most important ; and it will consist of those who are to be associated with our Lord in His Throne. “Blessed and holy is he that bath part in the First Resurrection; on such the Second Death bath no power, but they shall be Priests of God and of ‘Christ, and shall reign with Him a thousand years.”—Rev. 20:6.

This description excludes the Great Company and applies merely to the Little Flock, “partakers of the Divine nature.” (2 Pet. 1: 4.) Other Scriptures seem to show us that the Great Company class will attain to spirit perfection in their resurrection; and therefore we might think of theirs as a second resurrection—second in order, ill glory and in preference. These two classes compose the “Church of the First-borns, which are written in Heaven.” (Heb. 12:

23.) The difference between them is that the Little Flock were zealous to go forward and perform what duties and privileges they saw, while the Great Company were. less zealous and less loyal in sacrifice, although they would suffer death rather than deny the Lord or His Truth.

‘This distinction is set forth in the typical arrangement of the Law Covenant. As the tribe of Levi was called out from among Israel for a special work, so the Church of the Firstborns are called out from among mankind, as the antitypical Levites. The priestly tribe of Israel was divided into two classes, the priests and the Levites, and likewise the Church is composed of two classes. Of these, only the “more than conquerors” (Rom. 8: 37) will ‘become “partakers of the Divine nature” and have the pre-eminence. The Great Company will not attain to this honour.

We are not able to distinguish who are the “more than conquerors.” The Great Company are identified with the Little Flock both here on earth and also in heaven. Both classes are of the “First-borns.” As the Apostle James says, we are “a kind of first-fruits of His creatures.” (James 1: 18.)

Earthly Phase of the Resurrection.

In the Scriptures, a third class of faithful servants of God is mentioned. Many of these are called by name in the Epistle to the Hebrews. We refer to the Ancient Worthies, who lived and were found faithful before the coming of our Saviour. These did not have the opportunity of walking in the footsteps of our Lord and so did not have the “high calling.” These are said to receive a “better resurrection” than will the rest of mankind (Heb. 11: 35)—better, not in the sense of belonging to the spirit plane, but in that it will ‘be instantaneous raising to human perfection, whereas the remainder of the race will require a thousand years during which to come back gradually to the original condition lost by Adam.

At the beginning of the reign of Christ, the Ancient Worthies will come forth almost perfect human beings — mentally and physically—that their bodies may correspond with their moral development. If they had scars, these will be theirs no longer ; if they had blemishes, these will have disappeared. It is not easy for us to picture to ourselves a perfect man, for we have never seen one, and all around us are various degrees of imperfection. But we know that ‘a perfect human being will be perfect in form, feature, voice, sight, hearing, taste, and in all other organs, as well as in mind.

Last of all, “the residue of men” will come forth, “every man in his own order.” (1 Con 15: 23.) Their awakening will merely bring them forth from the tomb in the condition in which they entered it ; for in the grave “there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom.” (Eccl. 9: 10.) This awakening is not the resurrection, but merely the preliminary step toward it. The Greek word rendered “resurrection” is anastasis, and means literally “a standing up again.” Adam fell, and ever since “the whole world lieth in wickedness”— literally, “in the wicked one.” (1 John 5: 19.) The standing up again is, therefore, a return to the perfection lost in Eden; for the world of mankind the resurrection is the Restitution.—Acts 3: 20, 21.

During the thousand years of Messiah’s reign, the resurrection of the world will be in progress. The work will not be done by the Father directly, but will be committed to the Lord Jesus (John 5:28, 29), and will require the whole thousand years for its completion. At the end of that Millennial reign the world of mankind will be perfect, as was Adam in his creation. All God’s work is perfect.—Deut. 32: 4 ; Gen. 1: 31.

As previously stated, the Ancient Worthies, as a reward for their faith in God, will come forth to a better resurrection than will other men. The remainder of the race will come forth in practically the same condition in which they went into death. They will know nothing more, nothing less than when they died; their personality will be the same. As for their bodies, we cannot suppose that these will be perfect, for if mankind were thus brought back from death, they would not know each other. If all should be brought forth of one colour, or if all should have the same style of features, they would not be recognised. On the other hand, they will come forth, neither gasping for breath, nor in fragments, as if blown to pieces by an explosion or eaten by an animal, but in what formerly was their usual health.

Mankind recognise each other by certain physical traits as well as by mental and moral characteristics. If in the awakening a man were given a perfect form or a properly balanced brain, he would not know himself on coming forth from the tomb. His very thoughts would be different ; there would be nothing by which memory could identify him. Humanity will be raised from the tomb in the condition suggested by our Lord when He said to the man with a withered hand, “ ‘Stretch forth thine hand !’ And he did so; and his hand was restored whole as the other” (Luke 6:

10)— complete—not in the full sense of the word, but enough so to have a new start in the new life.

Shame and Contempt will be Purged Away During the Millennium.

The Saviour makes an atonement for the sins of mankind for the very purpose of giving them a trial for life, all opportunity to demonstrate whether, under the favourable conditions of the Messianic Kingdom, they will choose righteousness and life or unrighteousness and everlasting death. The Scriptures seem to imply that there will be a great deal of shame and contempt properly attaching to those who will not have come into full accord with God.—Dan. 12: 2.

During the thousand years of trial, very many will purge themselves of this shame and contempt. Thus we may suppose that, as the years go by, the shame will gradually cease and the contempt will die away. We see this point illustrated in the case of Saul of Tarsus. When he learned that he was fighting against God, he was very much ashamed of the course which he had taken. As gradually he manifested his loyalty to God, he purged himself of this shame and contempt. St. Paul's valour and zeal in the service of the Lord offset the things which he did ignorantly as Saul of Tarsus. His shame, therefore, has passed away.

The world will awake from the dead in this condition of shame and contempt. But gradually the obedient will arise from this state to the original perfection of the image of God. The wilfully disobedient, on the contrary, will not rise. They will sink lower, until finally they will go into everlasting destruction, or as St. Peter says, "As natural brute beasts shall utterly perish in their own corruption."—2 Pet. 2:12.

At the First Advent our Lord did most of His healing on the Sabbath Day, thus foreshadowing the work of healing which He will do. for the world in the great anti-typical Sabbath—the Millennium. Mankind will come forth from the tomb free from their previous condemnation, with human bodies in proper condition, so that their friends will recognise them as formerly; but they will have weaknesses—physical, mental and moral.

God has provided everything necessary for the resurrection of mankind—not only the Ransom-price, but also Christ's Mediatorial Kingdom. The uplifting influences of the incoming Age will be open to every member of the race, whether great or small, rich or poor. But their acceptance or rejection and the rapidity of their progress will depend upon their personal interest in the matter. Those who refuse to advance and who show no desire for their own development, will be cut off in Second Death.

There is no reason why those who will not make progress should be allowed to live on indefinitely. The same Justice which declares that only those who are in perfect accord with God shall have everlasting life, will not permit those to live forever who continue to be imperfect. Such will indicate by their attitude that they are not in harmony with righteousness, and will be justly classed as wicked. Of these it is written, "All the wicked will He destroy."—Psa. 145: 20.

Miracle in Palestine.

New Era of Things. Development of Holy Land.

THE following newspaper report of an interesting lecture by Mr. A. J. Reedman, of Newcastle, N.S.W., has been received from one of our brethren in Queensland, where the address was given recently:

“At the Town Hall last night, Mr. A. J. Reedman, in an illustrated lecture, vividly depicted what he described as the marvellous changes of the last decade in the Holy Land. He declared that the Land, which was approximately one three-hundredth part of the size of Australia., had played a part in history out of proportion to its size.

Three thousand years ago, declared the lecturer, it was the centre of a kingdom of magnificence and ‘glory, but on account of the idolatry of the people it was reduced to a land of tombs and ruins.. For 2000 years it had remained waste and desolate, but the scattered people of Israel prayed for a return to Zion with undying hope.

Weary centuries had passed, but every attempt at colonisation failed until in 1877, when Dr. Herzl called representatives of the Jewish people to a. great conference and founded Zionism.

Mr. Reedman pointed out that for many years it was not clear how a Jewish State could be created in Palestine, but Dr. Herzl expressed the opinion that only a great European war could liberate the land from the Turks. He advised his people to prepare for the day, and at length the Great War came. While it brought havoc, carnage and ruin to many countries it caused the opening of the gates of Palestine.

British Mandate.

The League of Nations granted a mandate in 1921 to Great Britain. Four years earlier, under the Balfour declaration, England had given a pledge to facilitate the rebuilding of Palestine as a national home for the Jewish people and the altered conditions made it possible for the Jews to have a legal status in the land.

Hundreds of thousands knocked at the door, but the policy of the Government was to admit only as many as it could be proved the country had an economic capacity to absorb.

The lecturer continued that already about 250,000 had gained entrance, while at the present time refugees, chiefly from Germany, were entering the country at the astonishing rate of 1000 per week.

Striking pictures were shown by Mr. Reedman to illustrate the marvellous building of cities, the reclamation of the soil, the transformation of swamps to agricultural lands and the development of industry. It could not be denied, he said, that the events were miraculous.

A great city had been built in the sandhills north of Jaffa. It was called Tel Aviv. and was looked upon as the wonder city of the East. Twelve years ago it was a desert. To-day more than 70,000 Jews were living within the municipality. Altogether the old land throbbed with new life.

‘A New Control.’

Mr. Reedman told his audience that such mighty things were happening at a time of universal disturbance and perplexity of gloom and darkness to all lands. In view of the prophetic writings in the Scriptures, they were not of mere chance or circumstance, he declared, but they must have some special significance. The deafening thunders of tumult and revolution sounded throughout the earth and the signs of the times pointed to a great collapse of governments and the establishment of a new control, he added.

The lecturer outlined what he described as the plan of God, as revealed in the Bible, to create a great world state, a divine political kingdom on the earth, with the universal centre at Jerusalem and the Lord Jesus Christ enthroned as King of Kings and Lord of Lords. Then, he said, would come peace on earth and goodwill among men. All of those beautiful prospects of the future were embraced in the general term 'the hope of Israel,' said Mr. Reedman.

The lecturer, concluded, 'Theology has perhaps obscured the literality of biblical predictions, but now as we see the events coming to pass, we should face the facts and adjust ourselves to return to the faith of the first century Christians.'

The above account supports the reports that appear from time to time in connection with the return of God's favour to the Jewish people in fulfilment of our Lord's prophecy concerning the "budding of the fig tree"—Matt. 24: 32. Compare also Jer. 8: 13., with Jer. 24: 5-7. We rejoice with Mr. Reedman that so much is taking place to-day along this line, indicating the near approach of the Kingdom Age.

It would seem, however, that the manner in which Christ will reign over the world, after the establishment of His kingdom on earth with the centre of control at Jerusalem, is not generally understood. In the past, the general thought amongst those who have considered the matter has been that 'Christ's Kingdom. would be completely of a heavenly nature. Now, however, there are many holding the view that our Lord's Kingdom will be totally of an earthly nature—that 'Christ will descend from heaven in human form in full sight of mankind, and be enthroned as King to reign over all the earth from Jerusalem, along with His elect who have proved faithful unto death. If the statements of Mr. Reedman are correctly understood it would seem that he supports this latter view. Both the above views, however, will 'be seen to be unscriptural when examined in the light of God's Word. We cannot do better than quote from "The Divine Plan of the Ages," under the heading :

Two Phases of the Kingdom of God.

"While it is true, as stated by our Lord, that the Kingdom of God cometh not—does not make' its first appearance— with outward show, in due time it is to be made manifest to all 'by outward, visible and unmistakable signs. When fully set up, the Kingdom of God will 'be of two parts—a spiritual or heavenly phase and an earthly or human phase. The spiritual will always be invisible to men, as those composing it will be of the divine, spiritual nature, which no man hath seen nor can see (I Tim. 6: 16; John 1: 18) ; yet its presence and power will be mightily manifested, chiefly through its human representatives, who will constitute the earthly phase of the Kingdom of God.

"Those who will constitute the spiritual phase of the kingdom are the overcoming saints of the Gospel age—the Christ, head and body—glorified. Their resurrection and exaltation to power precedes that of all others, because through this class all others are to be blessed. (Herb. 11: 39, 40). Theirs is the first resurrection (Rev. 20: 6). The great work before this glorious anointed company—the Christ— necessitates their exaltation to the divine nature: no other than divine power could accomplish it. Theirs is a work pertaining not only to this world, but to all things "in heaven and in earth"—among spiritual as well as among human beings. Matt. 28: 18; Col. 1: 20; Eph. 1: 10; 2: 10; 1 Cor. 6: 3.

"The -work of the earthly phase of the Kingdom of God will be confined to this world and to humanity. And those so highly honoured as to have a share in it will be the most exalted and honoured of God among men. These are the class referred to as Ancient Worthies, described in Heb. 11, whose judgment day was previous to the Gospel age. Having been tried and found faithful, in the awakening they will not be brought forth to judgment again, but will at once receive the reward of their faithfulness—an instantaneous resurrection to perfection as men. (Others than these and the spiritual class will be gradually raised to perfection during that Millennial age). Thus this class will be ready at once for the great work before it as the human agents of the Christ in restoring and blessing the remainder of mankind. As the spiritual nature is necessary to the accomplishment of the work of Christ, so perfect human nature is appropriate for the future accomplishment of the work to be done among men. These will minister among and be seen of men, while the glory of their perfection will be a constant example and an incentive to other men to strive to attain the same perfection. And that these ancient worthies will be in the human phase of the kingdom and seen of mankind is fully attested by Jesus' words to the unbelieving Jews who were rejecting Him.

He said, "Ye shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all the prophets, in the Kingdom of God." It should be noticed also, that the Master does not mention that He or the Apostles will be visible with Abraham. As a matter of fact, men will see and mingle with the earthly phase of the kingdom, 'but not with the spiritual; and some will, no doubt, be sorely vexed to find that they rejected so great an honour.

"To gain a place in the earthly phase of the Kingdom of God will be to find the gratification of every desire and ambition of the perfect human heart. . . And when, at the end of a thousand years, the great work of restitution is accomplished by the Christ (in great measure through the agency of these noble human coworkers) ; when the whole human race (except the incorrigible—Matt. 25: 46; Rev. 20: 9) stand approved, without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing, in the presence of Jehovah, these who were instrumental in the work will shine among their fellow-men and before God and Christ and the angels as "the stars forever and ever." (Dan. 12: 3). 'Their work and labour of love will never be forgotten by their grateful fellow-men. They will be held in everlasting remembrance. Psalm 112: 6.

"But great as will be the accumulating glory of those perfect men who will constitute the earthly phase of the kingdom, the glory of the heavenly will be the glory that excelleth. While the former will shine as the stars forever, the latter will shine as the brightness of the firmament—as the sun (Dan. 12: 3). The honours of heaven as well as of earth, shall be laid at the feet of Christ. The human mind can approximate, but cannot clearly conceive, the glory to 'be revealed in the Christ through the countless ages of eternity.—Rom. 8: 18; Eph. 2: 7-12."

Let it not 'be understood that this happy condition of affairs will gradually come about from the present existing order of things; there is yet to be the necessary, very severe time of trouble upon the whole world (Matt. 24: 21; Zeph. 3: 8), including the Jewish people (Jacob's trouble, Jer. 30: 7), for the removal of the present "heavens" (spiritual controlling powers) and "earth," (earthly order of society). which are out of accord with God and His righteousness (2 Pet. 3: 10). Then will be established the "new heavens and new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness" (2 Pet. 3:

13)—the above mentioned two phases of the kingdom of God. It is through these two 'phases of the kingdom that the promise to Abraham is to be verified: "In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." "Thy seed shall 'be as the sand of the sea, and as the stars of heaven"—an earthly and a heavenly seed, both God's instruments of blessing to the world. "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

Wherever in the world I am,
In whatsoever state,
I have a fellowship with hearts To keep and cultivate;
A work of lowly love to do
For Him on whom I wait.

Faith.

(Convention Address),

FAITH is a beautiful quality, and forms a base or foundation for the superstructure of love and hope. All have it in some degree; it enters into the affairs and arrangements of daily life to a far greater extent, perhaps, than we realise.

We do things because we expect certain results to follow. The farmer sows his seed in expectation of reaping a harvest. The earth is the natural place for the seed to grow, but rain and sunshine also are necessary, and he believes that both will come at the right time and a harvest more or less abundant will follow. He cannot tell how the rain is produced or the day and hour when it will come, but that it will come he has no doubts; it has come before, therefore he does not doubt that it will come again.

Men have faith in each other. Our social system is built and maintained upon trust and confidence in the integrity of each other. We know the nature and character of our neighbour and trust him; occasionally our confidence is misplaced, but the man who abuses the confidence of his fellowman falls in the estimation of those who know of his delinquency, and is regarded with suspicion because of his lack of moral principle.

To have faith in that which is seen and can be handled is easy. An old saying is, that seeing is believing and feeling is the naked truth. The things that come into our daily lives and experiences we believe in, and being well based, our belief is quite reasonable.

In spiritual matters faith is of a higher order; it is exercised in things that are not seen. No man hath seen God at any time, yet we believe in Him with just as good reason as we believe in temporal matters. He that has eyes to see has the evidence of his senses. God's handiwork is everywhere around him. There is another evidence, not so easily defined; it is within, and responds to the drawing of the spirit of God and finds satisfaction in Him. Man has always been conscious of a power higher than his own. He realises his own weakness and impotence in the face of nature. He cannot stay the storm; the wind blows with hurricane force; the rain may descend in torrents, the lightning flash and the thunder roll, but however much damage may be done, he is helpless. He must bow his head and wait with what patience he may until it passes. He cannot even stay the fierce passions that rage within his own breast, neither can he guide, his own destiny or way.

The Apostle says, "Faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the Word of God." Hearing is a very important means of gaining knowledge. We are very much influenced by what we hear; an impression is made on the mind; truth is recognised and received by those who have ears to hear. As truth is better understood, light increases and darkness is dispelled, faith comes into existence, takes root and begins to grow. "Without faith it is impossible to please God; he that cometh to God must believe that He is, and is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him."

He who comes to God must do so in spirit and in truth; there must be no doubts. For want of understanding, there may be some grasping in the dark, but with sincerity and searching, which is a test of faith, light will be found, for God is not far off, and is pleased to reveal Himself to those who search for Him with a true and honest heart. The purpose of seeking is to know God, His nature and attributes; to come into harmony with Him and do His will. God accepts and justifies us through the merit of Christ's sacrifice, because we have no merit of our own. Justification is maintained by a continuation of faith, and leads on to sanctification, a setting apart of ourselves for the service of our heavenly Father. So we are led on step by step and shown what is required of us. We learn that the work to be done in us is a purifying one, for every man that hath the Christian hope in him, purifieth himself by renouncing those things that are not in conformity with the character or will of God. A transformation by the renewing of the mind takes place after the forsaking of old ways and things, and we 'become new creatures by the begetting of the spirit and putting on of the mind of Christ.

We are in the world but not of it. We must of necessity take some part in its activities, for it is by the sweat of our face that we earn our daily bread. Success may attend our efforts in worldly matters, but our chief aim is to seek those things which are above. Worldly pleasures and enjoyments would lead us away from consecration and weaken devotion to God if permitted to come in. Seeking 'first the kingdom of God and His righteousness should have the uppermost place in our hearts. The things of the world, its activities, pleasures and enjoyments are our temptations, 'because they appeal to our former desires and appetites, and for that reason diligent watchfulness is necessary lest their indulgence lead us into wrong paths. Other trials are affliction and adversity ; all these have their uses and purposes. 'Could we be proved without a test? Without temptations, difficulties and perplexities, what would there be to overcome? The testing is very searching, but to the watchful the weak places are revealed. The knowledge of weakness induces humility and shows the necessity for perfect trust in God, who has promised that with every temptation He will also 'provide a way of escape—His grace is sufficient.

So that His disciples should not be anxious about their material requirements, Jesus told them that God knew they had need of such things and did not forget them. The fowls of the air, He said, sowed not, neither did they reap or gather into barns, yet they were fed. The lilies of the field toiled not, neither did they spin, yet Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. Not even a sparrow fell without His knowledge. . This is a simple yet most beautiful lesson in faith, and also shows the benevolence of God in providing for His creatures. Man is gifted with reason, and by the exercise of this faculty can see the truth of this quite clearly. Eating, drinking and wearing rich clothing is not the purpose in life for God's children. Whatever God may see_ fit to send us of these things should be appreciated and accepted in all humility, knowing that He can withhold as well as give. We must live and walk by faith, knowing that our heavenly Father who knows the end from the beginning is choosing the way, and His spirit is teaching and instructing us how to follow. All that happens and every experience that comes is by His permission; having this knowledge we can trust Him. And whatsoever things ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive. This is faith sublime. This is the attitude in which we should come to God, sincerely believing in Him and His goodness—perfect trust and confidence without a trace or shadow of doubt. To come in any other spirit would be wavering; "Let not that man think that he will receive anything of the Lord." "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much."

How many failures can be attributed to coming to God in a wrong attitude of heart and mind—insufficient faith. He will withhold no good thing from us; every good and perfect gift cometh from above and He is without variableness or shadow of turning. "If ye had faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye might say unto this sycamine tree, Be thou plucked up by the roots. . . and it should obey you."—nothing shall be impossible. A grain of mustard seed is but a small thing, a mere speck, but it contains great possibilities. Within its small dimensions there is something vital, which, given the right conditions, will develop and bring forth a plant of considerable size and reproduce in its own kind. So with our faith; if it is vital and rightly exercised it will accomplish much. Faced in the right spirit, difficulties which appear overwhelming will 'be overcome, things that hinder our progress will be removed, and that which appears to be insurmountable will 'be conquered. The Apostle Paul says, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." The thought that it was for the Master inspired him; the love of Christ constrained him. He was willing to sacrifice all and count it but loss and dross that he might win Christ. He counted even his life not dear, indeed, it was in danger often; he endured all things, having in mind one thing only, the keeping of the faith. Being convinced that this was right, he allowed nothing to turn him from his purpose. Wealth, and the honour of men were not to (be compared with the crown of righteousness. At the close of his life he wrote to Timothy those beautiful words which are an inspiration to every child of God ; "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand, I have fought a good fight. I have finished my course. I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day, and not to 'me only, but unto all them also who love

His appearing." To keep the faith was what the Apostle fought for, and in the face of all opposition he succeeded through Christ who strengthened him,. In the Apostle Paul we have a magnificent example of faith, showing what may be accomplished by determination and endurance.

Weak though we may be at the beginning of our Christian way, yet if our faith be of the right kind, if it has vitality and life, the every day affairs of life afford scope and opportunity for its growth and development. Growth must continue and development go on; there is always some weak spot to strengthen or rough place to smooth; self-examination is necessary. Thoughts are important, and those which are not good should be dismissed and never be allowed to develop into action; every thought should be brought into captivity to Christ.

From trust and confidence in God there comes a feeling of security, there is a realisation that underneath are the everlasting arms, and, therefore, there is no cause for fear. Though the mountains be removed and be cast into the depths of the sea, yet will we not be afraid. We are enabled to look into the future and 'behold a new order of things; the problems and perplexities that vex the children of men will be taken away. With righteousness established, it shall cover the earth as the waters cover the face of the deep, for God has promised, "Behold I make all things new."

Correspondence,

New South Wales. Dear Brother,

I received the book, "A Voice from Switzerland," forwarded by Bro. — and have to-day forwarded same on to Mr.

--, as requested in your letter. It is very good, and the events in France and Austria during the last few weeks go far to prove that Dr. Hodler is right in his interpretation. The stage is almost set. One can see events marshalling themselves for the final scene. Let us work while it is yet day, for soon the words will be fulfilled, "The night cometh when no man can work." Did you notice Mr. Baldwin's remark recently—"England is now almost the only country where liberty of speech and of conscience are permitted," and how long will this, last?

I am still away from home, but having food and raiment I have learned therewith to be content. I have been disappointed here; no one wants to hear of Christ, or at best they merely want Him to be an adjunct to their own lives; but the Apostle says, "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear; . . . we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is." Thank God "The night is far spent, the day is at hand." If you should eventually get a supply of the books, "A Voice from Switzerland," I should still like to have one for reference.

Kindest regards from yours very sincerely, N.W.

New South Wales. Dear Brother,

Just a few lines to thank you for all your kindness. Thank you for the cheery words and kind exhortations to continue in His service. I am very thankful to work for the interest and advancement of the truth. Your little "Paper" takes along some help and encouragement in its pages, as it seeks to point all to a knowledge of the truth and a closer walk with the only true God and Jesus Christ. With the love of the truth the individual scorns to do a mean thing.

Dear Brother, may the Lord continue to bless you abundantly as His blessings are distributed to others. I pray that the Lord will watch over His little ones and strengthen them.

With much Christian love to yourself and all of like precious faith, yours in the one hope, L.H.J.

New Zealand, 3/3/34. Dear Friend,

I must apologise for not 'writing to you before this; I received your book, "The Divine Plan of the Ages," and have read once through it. It is a very simple story of the Bible and explains passages which seemed to be hard to follow. I am busy again going through the last chapters—"The Kingdoms of this World," and "The Kingdom of God." May I lend this book to a friend of mine who is interested and will take care of it?

- I have not heard yet re the book "Voice from Switzerland. There is no doubt that if we could only get people to read and understand the Bible we would be living a better life, and there would be more of the brotherly spirit about which is lacking very much just now. It seems a peculiar thing that to everybody one speaks they seem to be up against a brick wall—no outlook ahead. Men have been used to getting anything from £8 to £10 per week, and even this class are being very hard hit with the depression. It seems to be God's way to bring them back to Him and to look for Divine guidance. Man has appeared to have gone as far as he can go, and "I can hope that the Lord's prayer will be answered soon "Thy Kingdom Come," and may it come soon.

Yours truly, Your Christian friend, B.J.W.

Dwelling in the Lord.

TO dwell in Christ means to be in the closest relation- ship with Him; there must be agreement, harmony, and a unity of purpose, producing a feeling of confidence and goodwill. • The closeness of this relationship is shown clearly in that beautiful illustration of the vine and its branches. The vine is the stem or trunk that produces and supports the branches which bear the fruit. The branch is part of the vine with which it must remain connected. “Abide in me and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit except it abide in the vine no more can ye, except ye abide in me.” John 15: 4. Here the word “abide” has the same meaning as the word “dwelleth” in 1 John 3: 24, for we surely dwell in God as we continue to abide in Christ.

We dwell or abide in Him by doing His will, keeping His commandments, and He abides or dwells in us. ‘This: union is a double one we in Him and He in us. To establish and maintain this union it is necessary to keep His commandments; God cannot dwell in us unless we dwell in Him. “If a man love me, he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him.” John 14: 23.

In Psalm 37: 3, we read, “Trust in the Lord, and, do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed.” Here also is implied a spirit of concord without which God’s bounty could not be enjoyed. His commandments must be kept, then the promise of peace and plenty would be fulfilled.

Further, the prophet says, “He that walketh righteously and speaketh uprightly; he that despiseth the gain of oppressions, that shaketh his hands from holding of bribes, that stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood, and shutteth his eyes from seeing evil; he shall dwell on high : his place of defence shall be the munitions of rocks : bread shall be given him; his water shall be sure.” Isa. 33: 15, 16. Again the condition attached to the promise is righteousness, and he who does righteously has the spirit of God and dwelleth in Him. Under the dispensation existing at the time of the Psalmist and Prophet, the promises were earthly, and to enjoy God’s favour it was necessary to keep His commandments, just as it is now, if we would receive His spiritual favours.

“And hereby we know that He abideth in us by the spirit which He hath given us.” In Rom. 8: 9 and 14, we read :— “But ye are not in the flesh; but in the spirit if so be that the spirit of God dwell in you; for as many as are led by the spirit of God, they are the sons of God.” Being led by the spirit of God is abundant evidence of the inward presence of God’s spirit which leads us to seek those things which are above rather than mind the things of the earth.

What we want is, in one word, that graceful tact and Christian art which can bear and forbear.

Hold Fast that which thou hast.

Rev. 3: 11. (Convention Address).

IT would seem that the words of this text have a very special meaning to the Lord's people of to-day. In the Christian world at the present time there is the tendency to lower the standard of truth. The Laodicean spirit is a compromising, luke-warm condition. It is this spirit—neither hot nor cold—which says, “Do not let us trouble very much about what we believe, only let us join together in one great confederacy.” This spirit has wrought havoc in the churches, so that they have become altogether worldly and indifferent to the true spirit of the truth and consecration, as set before us by the Lord and His Apostles.

Writing to Timothy, the Apostle Paul said (2 Tim. 4: 3), “The time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts shall heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears.” “And they shall turn away their ears from the truth and shall be turned unto fables.” While recognising that there has indeed been a great falling away from the pure teachings of God's Word, we will do well to remember that the Adversary, who has already succeeded in blinding so many, will also seek by one means or another to “quench the spirit” among those who have become awake to “present truth.” By “present truth” we mean those things which have been revealed by the opening up of the Scriptures “as meat in due season,” or truths specially applicable to our day. No doubt it is those matters pertaining to our Lord's Second Presence, the Harvest work, the closing down of the present age, and the preparation of ourselves for the work of the coming Kingdom, that we are exhorted to “hold fast that no man take thy crown.”

The questions arise as to what does a true Christian really need to believe? What are the essentials of our faith? What is it that we must “hold fast”? Does it mean only that we preserve a clear knowledge of truth, or does it not imply “walking in the steps of Christ—walking in the light”?

What, then, constitutes a ‘Christian? The Scriptures show how in due time “God will have all men to be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth,” and how under the New Covenant and its great Mediator all the willing and obedient will be assisted to work out their justification to life by works of obedience and righteousness. ‘the New Testament also clearly shows that the Divine purpose for this Gospel Age is to select a spiritual class to be joint-heirs with Christ, to reign with Him in the coming Kingdom Age, when the wider opportunity will come to all mankind. That will be when the Church or Bride of Christ will be complete, and “the Spirit and the Bride will say come, and whosoever will, let him come and take of the water of life freely.”

This class of "Priests and Kings"—the Church—is dealt with quite differently in its selection, from that of the rest of mankind in the next age. The Millennial Age will be an age of works, justification by works. The Gospel Age. is an age of faith, justification by faith, and that faith the Apostle tells us in Eph. 2: 8, is "the gift of God." "Our Lord declared, "No man cometh unto Me except it be 'given him of My Father;" "No man cometh unto the Son except the Father draw him."

These Scriptures show that the first essential is that we be invited. How are we invited or drawn? It is through the Word, as the Lord intimated in His prayer, "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on 'Me through their word.'" (John 17:20). So it is God who invites those who may be joint-heirs with His Son, by bringing His Word to their attention, and by His holy Spirit He grants the faculty of faith. There is the conviction of sin, and the longing to be at peace with God and to be righteous. Then, in true penitence, faith in 'Calvary's atoning sacrifice lifts the load of sin and we find peace and rest. What a great favour this is, first to be called of God, and then, instead of being slowly justified by works under the New Covenant of the next age, to be at once "justified by faith and at peace with God." This particular arrangement of grace is in order that we may be able, through the merit of our Redeemer, "to present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God." This is the second step after being justified by faith through our Lord Jesus Christ ; "By whom also we have access into this grace wherein we stand, and now rejoice in the hope of the glory of God." Rom. 5: 1, 2..

Following this step of consecration, we receive the begetting of the holy spirit—the spirit of adoption—and God calls us His sons. This holy spirit begets in us a new mind, a new heart, a new creature, so that though the human being is laid upon the altar of sacrifice to be done to death, for, "as many as have been baptised into Christ have been baptised into His death" (Rom. 6: 3) ; yet a new life is begun, a spiritual life, and as new creatures we have become Christians in the full sense.

As Christians, then, we have first the favour of having been called of God. Then we have the gift of faith; after that, justification through the exercise of that faith; then the holy Spirit of adoption through the further step of faith— i.e., consecration. Following our consecration we receive the wonderful hope of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

Having received these favours, are there no other essentials for the Christian? We reply that the new creature, like the old creature, needs nourishing. If we fail to feed upon the Lord's Word, if we fail to drink of that water of life which is provided for us, we shall fail to develop, and would probably soon lose our faith and hope. We must go on from these first principles and learn to appreciate the deep things of the Word. We remember how the Apostle Paul felt that it was useless to try and explain the deeper things to the Hebrews because they had not exercised their minds along the lines of truth: They, had stunted their growth and so were still babes, feeding on milk, when they ought to have been able to teach others.

How essential it is that we hold fast the present truth as it is revealed from God's Word. The Word of God is the instrument, not only for calling the saints, but also for supplying grace and strength and enabling them to meet the difficulties of the way. It unfolds its precious truths as "meat in due season" to supply the needs of the Christian in his own day. It is, then, very essential that we understand, the present truth as it opens up, in order that our "shield" may be bright and strong, our "helmet" of hope firmly fixed, the "breastplate" of righteousness properly adjusted, that our feet be shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, our loins be girt about with truth and that we may be able to wield the sword of the spirit, and be overcomers in the "good fight of faith."

How important is the correct knowledge and application of the truth. The truth alone can sanctify and give us strength to run our course. Just as truth helps, so error hinders.

The question arises as to how far Christians may differ from one another in respect of the truth without interfering with our fellowship? The fact that we do at times differ on what may be called non-essentials, provides opportunities for the exercise of brotherly kindness in respecting the opinions of others though not endorsing them.

It would seem to be a different matter when we come to deal with the clear lines of faith and hope, or truths which are divinely revealed for the purpose of accomplishing some particular feature of work in connection with God's great plan. It would be presumptuous to say that such truths are of so little importance that it does not matter whether or not we believe them. We would also find it impossible to enjoy the same helpful fellowship with those who denied or belittled these things, as we could with those who appreciated them, and who were seeking to faithfully sound forth the message and Mi-form their lives to it.

It is quite understandable that those who do not know present truth, who do not recognise that we are living in "the days of the Son of Man," and the harvest-time of the age. etc., should think such things are non-essentials. They cannot see the present truth to be essential if they do not recognise that the harvest work is in progress and that the separating of the "wheat" from the "tares" is taking place. They cannot value the truths now revealed as we do, who realise the presence of the Lord as "Reaper," and that He is now reckoning with His people respecting the use of their talents and their structure building of character—we who realise that the present truth is indeed the feast which He promised to the faithful watchers in Luke 12: 37, and Rev. 3: 20. What may seem non-essential to some, may be very essential to others, for it is the "present truth" which is doing the harvest work. On the one hand it sanctifies and prepares the Bride class for the great consummation of her hopes, and on the other it separates those who from some cause or other seem unable to understand it.

The "present truth," or "meat in due season," or the unfoldings of truths respecting the Divine Plan, the second presence of Christ, the harvest, the gathering of the saints and the consummation of the Age, etc., appear to be essential to those to whom they have been revealed if they would make their calling and election sure. Those who lightly esteem such things will surely fail in the use of their talents.

Similar conditions existed at the time of our Lord's first advent. The truth then due was sent forth; many were inclined to say such matters were all right and might be true, but, they should not be carried too far; they were not essential, they could still hold on to the Law ceremonies and synagogue gatherings. The "present truth" at that time was, however, essential to such as the Lord was calling, and it did its work of separating the "wheat" from, the "chaff."

Dear friends, let us not undervalue the things which God has revealed to us. Let us fully appreciate our privileges. God has opened our eyes to see the wideness of His purposes and shown us that we are at the end of the Age and living in "the days of the Son of Man," and that, "as in the days of Noah" preceding the deluge; so now a great calamity is pending, which will end this dispensation, after which: the new Age will commence when Christ shall be King over all the earth..

These things we are exhorted to "hold fast" in the message to the Philadelphian Church (Rev. 3: 10, 11), "Because thou hast kept the word of My patience, also will keep thee from the hour of temptation which shall come upon all the world to try them that dwell upon the earth. Behold I come quickly, hold fast that which thou hast that no man take thy crown."

We are living in a day of such a variety of confused teachings. We are forewarned of the many deceptions that were to come, so that even if it were possible the very elect would be deceived. The Apostle Peter says that there would be false teachers and that many would follow their pernicious ways, by reason of which the way of truth would be evil spoken of. Paul admonishes, "Be not carried about by strange doctrines for it is good that the heart be established with grace." The Church is called "the pillar and ground of the truth.” It is her responsibility to preserve the truth in its purity, to guard it and to let it shine. Our Lord declared, “To this end came I into the world that I should bear witness to the truth,” and it is for those who will follow Him, to do His work, and to be among those who are “beheaded for the witness of Jesus and for the Word of God,”

Many are the injunctions of the Apostles respecting this matter of “holding fast the form of sound words,” and the truths, which God has revealed in His Word. See 2 Tim. 1: 13; 3: 13, 14; 4: 3, 4; Tit. 1: 9; 2 John 7-11; 1 Tim. 1: 3-6; 4: 16; 6:20, 21.

While seeing the necessity for holding fast to sound doctrine, we realise that that is- not all we must “hold fast.” There is the possibility of holding fast the form of sound words, of having a correct understanding of the main features of the truth, even of being “virgins,” and of understanding “present truth,” to the extent of expecting the Lord soon to take His people home, and yet to fail to be prepared and so fail to enter the marriage chamber.

A clear head is a good thing to have, but if the knowledge does not go down to the understanding heart, it fails in its intended purpose of sanctification, and we shall prove to be but sounding brass and tinkling cymbals. The trials of our day will not only try the doctrines, but will test our faith, our hope, our love and our loyalty to God, and to one another as members in Christ.

‘Other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid in Christ Jesus. There is no standing before God apart from His Son, our Saviour, but having this foundation we must build thereon. What must we build?

We must build our doctrine and see that all our teachings are in line with the foundation ; we must also build character. We must hold fast our foundation; we must hold fast our faith in the great Ransom for all. We must hold fast our consecration, our love to God in operation; we must bind the sacrifice with cords to the altar. We must “hold fast the confidence of our hope firm to the end.” We must keep on the whole armour of God and continue the good fight of faith. We must preserve our zeal for the Lord’s cause.

There is much in these days that might discourage us. Some have trials and testings in one way, some in another. Sometimes the failure of brethren whom we had highly esteemed in the Lord is apt to discourage us. Sometimes in contact with the world we meet plausible arguments against the truth by unbelievers or scientists, and if we trusted to our own wisdom and strength to save us, we might fail, but let us hold fast the Word of God. There may be some things that we do not fully understand, but we do understand enough Of God’s wisdom, justice, love and power which we have exemplified in His dealings with Israel and explained in His Word and experienced in our own lives, so that we can reasonably trust where we cannot quite understand. Even our Lord Jesus was tested in this way. He could not understand why the light of the Father’s countenance should be withdrawn just at the moment when, more than any other, He needed the assurance of His favor and presence. We must nerve ourselves and seek to grow in grace that we too May reach that condition of heart that can say, “Yea, though He slay me yet will I trust Him.”

‘Conditions in our home circles are sometimes such as would crush our religious life and quench the spirit. It puts us on our metal to so conduct ourselves as to bring honor to the cause we love, and preserve our faith, hope and spiritual life. We have, no doubt, been in many very trying circumstances, and have failed under the trial, at least to some extent, yet we may depend upon it that there are no circumstances into which we may come, but that we may by God’s grace conduct ourselves to His glory, and come out the better for the experience. “No trial shall overtake you, but such as ye are able to bear,” ‘and God, who permits the trial, is faithful to provide, a way of escape from anything too hard.

Probably all can look back upon trials and temptations and trace the kind hand that has overruled for our protection, guidance and provision, and thus tracing the way God has led us, shall we not hold fast the confidence of our faith firm to the end?

Sometimes there arise conditions in our circles of Christian fellowship which try us. We may be much misunderstood, or perhaps we misunderstand others, and so difficulties arise, and sometimes anything but the spirit of love and of a sound mind seems to prevail. Then things are said and done, which cause so much pain and heartaches, and the bond of Christian love is greatly strained. Nearly all these things come through misunderstandings, lack of patience, lack of waiting upon the Lord for grace to act, and speak aright, and to enquire of His Word for instruction. What a lot of sorrow has thus been caused, and sometimes a root of bitterness has been permitted to grow, and many have been defiled. Have we injured one of the Lord's children by a harsh or hasty word or act? Has it not been because we failed to hold fast our faith 'in God, in His Word, and our love to Him and His.

Let us hold fast our love to the Lord. If we love God we will also love those begotten of Him, and it will be painful indeed to us to even think evil of a fellow member. We would shun listening to reproaches against brethren, we would be loyal to God and defend His children, and all members in the Body of Christ would be loyal to one another.

That loyalty, however, will be secondary to our loyalty to God, and His Word and the doctrine we have proved to be true. It may be necessary for us to withdraw even from those we love in Christ, if they teach things which we believe to be contrary to the truths with which we have been entrusted by God's grace to preserve and proclaim.

While we may find that separations are sometimes unavoidable, there is never any occasion to be unkind. We may have to speak plainly against wrong teachings or practices, but we are not to condemn nor cease to love those who think differently. As long as they believe in the Lord Jesus Christ as the Saviour of mankind, by His own blood, and profess consecration to God, we may still think of them as brethren, though they may be erring brethren.

Let us hold fast our faith, our hope, our love, our doctrine, which includes "present truth." "Continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of knowing of whom thou hast learned them." How important it is that we hold fast that which we have proved to be an unfolding of God's Word,— "Meat in due season." If we begin to let slip this or that truth, other truths will likely soon be lost, and "if the light that is in thee become darkness how great is that darkness." "Hold fast that which thou hast that no man take thy crown."

A Christian.

OUR every day, every hour silent conduct is more effective than our conduct when we are among the Lord's people. There has always been a tendency in two opposite extremes when describing what the Christian ought to be.

One is to look for absolute perfection; the other is to lower the standard, by excusing the defects and sins of the followers of Christ. Let us avoid both. We cannot place before our vision a standard too high.

While we cannot be perfect and faultless, it is required of us that we be "blameless and harmless the sons of God, without rebuke in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world; holding forth the word of life." And the Apostle tells those who are so doing that it will be a cause for rejoicing in the day of Christ, that they did not "run in vain, neither laboured in vain."—Phil. 2: 15, 16.

A Christian is one whose eye is single to God's glory. "If your eye is single your whole body will be full of light," and the influences that proceed from you cannot but have a sanctifying effect upon those you meet and associate with daily. How responsible a matter is daily life, particularly the daily life of the Christian !

Convention News.

The Easter Convention, arranged by the Adelaide and Gawler classes, proved once more to be a season of helpful and happy fellowship. The Lord's blessing was surely upon the gatherings of His people, met together in His name and seeking to do His will. We trust the many good lessons and exhortations will long remain with us and serve to strengthen our faith and hope and give us renewed courage to press on in the narrow way that leads to life. The Christian pathway is the same to-day as ever, it is still the way of self-denial and sacrifice of the human hopes and ambitions; but those who have tasted of the Lord's goodness rejoice to suffer for His sake, knowing that "if we suffer with Him we shall reign with Him; if we be dead with Him we shall also live with Him."

In harmony with our Lord's request "this do in remembrance of Me," the Memorial of His death was kept on the Thursday evening, and the Convention commenced on , Good Friday, continuing on the Saturday and Sunday; Easter Monday being spent at Gawler, 25 miles distant from Adelaide.

Many good thoughts were expressed in connection with the Bible studies, which occupied the afternoon of each of the four days. The portions selected for study being as follows :—Matt. 10: 32-42; 2 Con 5: 14-21 ; Eph. 1: 3-12 ; John 15: 13-21. The addresses were helpful and encouraging to us,—Psalm 23, "For the Elect's sake ;" "All things are Thy servants ;" "The Lord proved) you ;" "Love one another ;" "Christ in you--the hope. of glory ;" "Let us walk in the light of the Lord ;" "Our Warfare ;" "Hold fast that which thou halt;" being the topics chosen.

A fellowship meeting having as its topic, "What good things have I received?" (Psa. 84: 11), reminded us of the many blessings which are ours in Christ. Also discussions on, "How do we determine the Lord's Will?" "How can we make our meetings and Bible studies most helpful?" "How can I best serve the - cause of truth?" gave us opportunity to examine ourselves and to profit by what we heard.

We feel grateful to those brethren and sisters who journeyed from -Victoria and N.S.W. to attend the Convention.

The spirit of loving service and the desire to just help along in the meetings is much appreciated. The same spirit of service was also manifested among the members of the local classes, and we doubt not that those who took pleasure in entertaining the visiting brethren, also received blessing upon their own hearts and heads. The provision of tea by the sisters of the Adelaide and Gawler classes was much appreciated.

The usual Love feast and singing of "God be with You till we meet again " terminated a very helpful season of fellowship and spiritual refreshment; and our hearts go out in thanksgiving to God for all His benefits. May the days that lie before us find us each one pressing on toward the mark for the prize, laying aside every weight and the sin that doth so easily beset us; running with patience the race set before us; looking unto Jesus. keeping little in our own sight, and content to let His strength be manifested through our weakness.

Notes from Adelaide Convention.

THE following thoughts were expressed in the introductions on portions of the Bible Studies; also the additional selections at the fellowship and discussion meetings. .

Matthew 10: 32, 33.

“That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus “. (Rom.. 10: 9, 10.) The habit of confessing the Lord Jesus before men seems to be one of the Christian’s most difficult tasks, for it requires both tact and courage, but it has correspondingly a rich reward. There is a book of remembrance written for them that fear the Lord and try to obey His laws. This confession can also be seen by men, by the way we serve the Lord, by our conduct, by our speech, and by our daily habits. Everything we do must conform to the Divine Law as much as possible, and by this high standard men can discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth Him not.

In 2 Pet. 2: 1, and many other Scriptures, we find a class of false teachers, who deny even the Lord who bought them., but this is not the only way in which one may deny Christ. There are those who profess that they know God, but in their works they deny Him. A work (an only have one motive,—it must either be done to the glory of God, or else the honor is given to the Adversary. We can deny Christ if our thoughts are not pure, true and honorable; we can deny our Lord by our conduct and actions toward the brethren. If we neglect to obey the Royal Law, “I command thee that ye love one another,” we most assuredly deny our Saviour.

The class which God is selecting from mankind to reign with our Lord at His second presence is represented in the Scriptures as a new creation, its members being specifically mentioned as new creatures in Christ Jesus in this verse 17. See also Eph. 2: 10.

Read Rom. 12: 1, 2. We cast all we have and all we ever hoped for down before the Lord, because, as the Scriptures point out, in order to be counted a “new creature in Christ,” it is necessary that the old things or earthly things,—ambitions, hopes, vanities and follies,—shall have passed from the will, even though to some extent they may harass us, because in a measure attractive to our flesh. But we are to make no provision for the flesh to fulfil the lusts thereof. See Gal. 5: 16, 17, 24, 25; Rom. 8: 5.

Our whole aim in life is for the progress and development of the new mind, because it is the new mind which the Lord recognises as the “new creature.”—Epli. 4: 22-24. In Col. 3: 3, we read, that “our life is hid with Christ in God.” These new creatures are actuated by a hope which entereth within the veil,—”Whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus”—Heb. 6: 19, 20. See also. Psalms 45: 10, 11, 13.

Following on from the Apostle’s statement that we have committed to us the word of reconciliation, he leads us to see what a great responsibility and privilege the possession of this message is.

There are, as we all know, earthly ambassadors whose position is recognised as being one of responsibility and dignity. How much more then is this so, in the case of the ambassadors for Christ.

In this connection. see John 1:45 Phillip findeth Nathanael; “We have found Him.” in effect this is how the ambassadorship is carried out ; only those can represent Christ who have themselves already found Him. Read Rom. 5: 10, 11; Phil. 1: 20, 21,—”For me to live is Christ.”

This invitation extended through the faithful ones as members of Christ’s Body will, we know, be appreciated only by the few at the present time, and so the statement speaking prophetically of our Lord would apply also to us,—”The reproaches of them that reproached Thee have fallen upon me” (Psa. 69:9.) Nevertheless, the work of witnessing must continue, for it is only by proving ourselves worthy as ambassadors at the present time, that we shall attain to the privilege of being associated with the Lord in the full work of reconciliation in the next age, when “in the dispensation of the fulness of times He will gather together in one all things in Christ,”—Eph. 1: 10.

Ephesians 1:9,10

God has, indeed, most generously made known to us the mystery of His will. Not a mystery in the sense of .being unintelligible, or incomprehensible, but a mystery in the sense of it being kept secret for an appointed time, as in Col. 1: 26,—”The mystery which had been hid from ages and generations, but now is made known to His saints.”

In God’s plan, the Gospel Age was. the time for revealing this secret unto “us,” which He had previously purposed in Himself, or that which had originated in His own mind. At an appointed time (the Millennial Age) all would see the end or consummation of this plan, Which God had purposed even “before the foundation of the world,” and since then has gradually been unfolding and progressing toward its glorious completion, when all things, both things in heaven (spiritual) and things in earth (natural) shall be brought into complete harmony with the Head,—the anointed One, the embodiment of God’s righteous law of love.

This pictures the unity which is to exist in the whole universe when all things, both animate and inanimate, shall resound to the beauty of perfection, making one harmonious whole.

Jesus was reminding His disciples that they must expect reproaches, as he had received for preaching the Gospel of God. In an unfriendly world we can only expect to receive the reproaches that fell on our Master, for the servant is not greater than his Lord. Christ bore the taunts and persecutions of the world patiently, while His great loving heart was full of pity and loving concern for others, and if we are His followers we should bear the persecutions as He bore them,—with pity and prayer for those who persecute us. We should endure persecutions as good soldiers for the truth’s sake and in our efforts to do the Lord’s will. All those who live godly lives during the present evil day will suffer Persecution, because they are not of the world, therefore, the world cannot endure the clear, searching light of the true Gospel.

“Those who endure joyfully for the Lord’s sake the greatest trials and persecutions in this present life, and have experiences most like our Lord, will, in proportion to their faithfulness, have a future high reward. As the Apostle declared, he counted the sufferings of the present time not worthy to be compared with the glory hereafter. See John 13: 16; Matt. 5: 10-12, 44.; 1 Thes. 2: 15; 2 Tim. 3: 12.

Determining the Will of the Lord.

The following is the rule which George Mueller followed when seeking to determine the Lord's will:—

“I seek in the beginning to get my heart in such a state that it has no will of its own in regard to a given matter. Nine-tenths of the difficulties are overcome when our hearts are ready to do the Lord's will, whatever it may be. Having done this, I do not leave the result to feeling or simple impression. If I do so, I make myself liable to a great delusion. I seek the will or spirit of God through, or in connection with, the Word of God. The Spirit and the Word must be combined. If I look to the Spirit alone, without the Word, I lay myself open to great delusions also. If the Holy Spirit guides us at it will do it according to the Scriptures, and never contrary to them. Next, I take into account providential circumstances. These often plainly indicate God's will, in connection with His Word and His Spirit. I ask God in prayer to reveal His will to me aright. Thus, by prayer to God, the study of the Word, and reflection, I come to deliberate judgment according to the best of my knowledge and opportunity, and, if my mind is thus at peace, I proceed, accordingly.”

The Canary and the Sparrow.

“A story is told of a gentleman who had a beautiful singing canary. A friend wanted to try if he could teach his sparrows to sing by keeping the canary with them. He borrowed it, and placed it in the cage with his sparrows. Instead, however, of teaching them to sing, the poor bird got so timid among the strange birds that it stopped singing altogether, and did nothing but chirp like the sparrows. The owner then took it back, but still it would not sing. It then occurred to him to put it beside another canary, which sang well. This had the desired effect, and, regaining the old note, it sang as beautifully as ever. Many Christians go, like the canary, into the strange company and atmosphere of the worldlings, and consequently they not only do not teach the world to sing their happy, 'glorious note of praise, but they cannot sing the old songs of praise in a strange land themselves, and soon they learn the sorrowful note of the world. The best thing for such is to go back again into the more genial society of happy, rejoicing - Christian saints, among whom they will soon learn to sing the 'glorious notes of praise again, making melody in their hearts.”

Memorial Service.

On Wednesday evening, March 28th, the brethren in Melbourne assembled together on the occasion of another Memorial season, in remembrance of Christ,—“our Passover. Lamb.” “In whom we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of His grace.”

The few visiting members in attendance on this solemn occasion ere ‘gladly welcomed, and in the singing of appropriate hymns, the prayers of various brethren, and the remarks directing they thoughts of all to the deep significance of partaking of the emblems,— representing as they do our Lord’s body broken for us, and life (blood) poured out on our account—a very helpful and spiritual time was experienced.

As each Memorial comes round we feel more and more grateful to our loving Heavenly Father for the gift of His dear Son, and additionally, for revealing to our hearts and minds the wondrous privilege of following in the footsteps of. our Lord during our short earthly sojourn, being broken with Him, and drinking of His cup, so that we may eventually live and reign with Him and co-operate in the further joy of blessing the families of the earth, in due time.

We assure the dear brethren everywhere, including the ones and twos in the isolated places, of our prayers on their account, and sincerely trust that the passing of the Memorial season once again may stimulate and encourage each and all to faithfully fulfil their covenant of sacrifice in the days that lie ahead, by the grace and strength from above. “For Christ our passover is sacrificed for us: therefore, let us keep the feast, with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth.”

The following is gladly received from our brethren in Sydney :—”We of the Rawson Chambers Class, Sydney, held our Memorial on Sunday, the 1st inst. Previously, we have held the Memorial on the due date, but some of the friends expressed the wish to be present with us, but could not make it convenient or possible to be present on the correct date, so we thought it wise to put the matter off for a few days to meet the wish of the brethren. The Lord knows all things and looked) at the heart’s intentions, does He not?

Our numbers were somewhat smaller than usual, several of the friends having moved too far away, to whom we forwarded the Emblems. The small class held at Sutherland celebrated by themselves, being more convenient, and several others met with the St. Peter’s class, nevertheless, we had twenty present. The spirit of the Lord was manifest throughout, hence the meeting was very profitable spiritually to all. We know not how many more we shall celebrate this side the vail, my prayer is that we may keep our hearts and minds La the same attitude towards our Master continually.

Another Brother in N.S.W. writes in the same connection :—”I hope you had a good and profitable time at Melbourne and Adelaide, and experienced His presence at the Memorial and the Convention. It is another milestone in the Christian journey and each one brings us nearer home, and nearer to Him who loved us and gave Himself for us.

We did not celebrate the Memorial on the 29th, hut on the following Sunday. There were six of us, and we considered the institution of Passover in Egypt, where the sprinkled blood protected the first-borns, who sheltered under it, and reminded ourselves of its typical significance in our case, and how we too need trust in His shed blood, which is our protection. How we rejoice as we think of the time of which Jesus spoke, when He would drink of the fruit of the vine anew in the Kingdom, and further to think that He prayed for us in that memorable prayer, “Nor do I entreat for these only, but also for those believing into Me through their word: so that all may be one, etc.” (John 17: 20-22.) Well could the writer of the song, “Oh, that will be glory for me” say—”that will he glory for me.”

Question Box.

Question :—Is it possible to incur the second death without being begotten of the Holy Spirit?

Answer :—The second death does not mean that one must have personally died previously. It rather refers to the fact that all mankind were included in the first sentence and “all die in Adam:” then all are redeemed or purchased from that death sentence ‘by ‘Christ, so that as all in Adam die, so all in Christ shall be made alive again. That is, all will have an opportunity of choosing good and life, or evil and death, i.e., the second death, from which there is no recovery, for “Christ dieth no more.” All were in mercy included in one man’s sin, so that all could be included in the one man’s righteousness (Rom. 5: 12-21) and have the opportunity of going up the highway of holiness unto perfect human life. The prophet, Isaiah, 65: 17-25, speaking of that time, states that any one who refuses to make progress towards righteousness will die “as a sinner, being 100 years old, being accursed.” Such an one would never have been “begotten” of the Holy Spirit, although he shall have received “the knowledge of the truth, which will be the result of the Holy Spirit being “poured upon all flesh,” for God will have all men to be saved (from the Adamic condemnation) and come to the knowledge of the truth (1 Tim. 2: 3, 4.) To wilfully resist the influences of truth and righteousness would be sinning against the Holy Spirit. This would be corroborated by our Lord’s words to the Pharisees, who had never been begotten of the Holy Spirit for “the Spirit was not then given,”—”How can ye escape the damnation (or condemnation) of gehenna” (Matt. 23: 33.) Gehenna always signifies death, from which there is no ransom--the second death.

In Matt. 12: 31, 32, it is stated that sin against the Spirit shall not be forgiven, neither in this Age nor in the Age to come, that is in the Kingdom Age, when all mankind are to have the opportunity of life. This privilege of being “begotten” of the Holy Spirit belongs only to the Gospel Age. Those who become members in Christ are begotten of the Spirit, because they are to be no longer human, but spiritual beings in the resurrection.

In Heb. 6:4-6, the Apostle says that those who have been enlightened and tasted of the heavenly gift and made partakers of the Holy Spirit and tasted the good word of God and the powers of the world to come, if they should fall away it would be impossible to renew them unto repentance. He does not say that it would be impossible to sin the sin unto death unless all these conditions had been attained.

In John 9:41. Jesus said unto them, “If ye were blind ye should have no sin, but now ye say we see, therefore, your sin remained].” So these Pharisees were sinning against light and knowledge, and thus their sin was towards the second death, although they had not been begotten of the Holy Spirit.

The “sin unto death” would then appear to be wilful sin against light and knowledge of righteousness or the Divine will, whether by the Christian in this Age, or by mankind in the next Age.

Correspondence.

New Zealand,

13th April, 1934. Dear Brother.

A few (lays ago, I received a letter from a Bro. in the Lord which contained some thoughts on “The alabaster box of ointment,” as recorded in Matt. 26; Mark 14; and John 12.

These thoughts appealed to me, so I herewith copy the portion and so pass it on, maybe helping thereby to fulfil Matt. 26: 13.

“When we were studying John, a long time ago, we noticed that our Lord mentioned that what the woman with the alabaster box of ointment did to Him was to be told for a memorial of her wherever the gospel would be proclaimed in the whole world. Matt. 26: 13.

“I have never been satisfied with the thoughts we got then, but now I seem to see a parallel between this and what He was actually doing Himself. In Matt. 26, the one follows the other.

“Briefly—The Woman’ represents Love’;—The love of God that provided the sacrifice. ‘The Box’—The body of Christ;—This is My body broken for you.’ The Ointment’;—The result of this breaking—The outpouring of the spirit. In no other way could this ever be possible. The box had to be broken.. Mark 14 (possibly made so that its contents could not be released till then) and so with our Lord. He, the Head, was anointed at Jordan, and only after He gave His body a living sacrifice, and so it is with the whole Body down to the feet. Now note the result of this: ‘What waste, etc.’ Even then, many thought that Jesus would have been far better to remain with them and continue to heal the sick and feed the poor, etc. If, as Jesus said, it was a ‘good work’ that this woman had done, how much more His wonderful work of love. Yet there are many to-day who do not see that it was the only way, costly as it seemed to be. He did not condemn helping the poor, and little did they think that He was giving His all, in order that this problem might be solved.

“In the words, ‘She hath done this for my burial’ or embalming’ as the Diaglott says, we get the thought of an effort to preserve from or counteract the effect of death. This seems to me to be the key to this parallel. Was not this just what He was doing, ‘Giving His life, that we might live, etc.’ “

I have not seen the above expressed elsewhere, particularly regarding the problem of the poor, and the “embalming.” With Christian love,

Your’ Brother by His Grace, N.G.

Dear Brother.

I am very pleased to be able to write to you again. Every day since my return I think of that wonderful long journey I had to Adelaide and Gawler, and the happy days I had with the friends there during the four (days' Convention.

It seemed to be the Lord's will that I should go so far away to assemble with those of like precious faith. It was really good to be with the friends there and dwelling together in spirit and in truth, and to have the eyes of one's understanding enlightened all the more. Truly, it makes one's heart feel glad to meet with the Lord's people wherever we go, for we can all see the beautiful spirit of the Master, and all speaking and studying the same things which He taught, "The Scriptures," which is a boon most sacred from the Lord. Here my thoughts remind me of a few beautiful lines which some friend wrote:

"What majesty and grace
Through all the Gospel shines,
'Tis God that speaks and we confess
That doctrine most Divine"

How good it was to meet with friends of like precious faith at Melbourne, to celebrate the Memorial Supper which our Lord desires us to keep in remembrance of Him,—All who have accepted His invitation to drink of His cup, and be broken together with Him as the one "Loaf." How sweet His name sounds to them that believe and know the truth

"No voice can sing, no heart can frame,
Nor can the memory find
A sweeter sound than Jesus' name,

The Saviour of mankind."

I also think of the little study we hail in Melbourne; this study—Acts 8: 26-40, is much deeper than one would think at first glance. I intend to study it again. Well, brother, I was sorry to have to leave all the kind friends at Adelaide, Gawler and Melbourne. I felt it very much, and was too full for words as I was leaving them all. I felt a big tear or two well up in my eyes as the train drew out from Melbourne, for realised I was leaving behind very great friends all along the way. How thankful I am to you all, for your kindness to me, and I pray the Lord will bless you all and that His spirit will always dwell within you.

I had a wonderful experience in the train after we crossed the Victorian border; it happened that as I took my seat at Albury, I sat next to a man who was one of the Plymouth Brethren. I offered him a tract, "Why Sorrow, Sin, Death and Evil are Permitted." He said, "I saw one of these you gave out on the Victorian side." "Some things in it are beautiful," he said, "but I don't hold with it all." I asked, "What part do you disagree with?" But he could not give a satisfactory answer; he spoke of salvation, then I handed him another Tract, "Two Distinct Salvations." Then he handed me his tract, "Found Written," and which I find according to Scripture is a thousand years ahead of its time. He said how the world will see Jesus again; I said, "Not with their natural, sight, for our Lord tells His people—that the world will see Him no more, for He gave His' flesh for the life of the world." After a while the man went to sleep, and in the same seat was a lady of the I.B.S.A. I gave her a tract and she promised to read it later. She seemed nice and friendly to me, and the man was, also.

On arrival at Goulburn I broke my journey for two days—Saturday and Sunday. I put out tracts from house to house on Saturday, and only three people refused to accept them. On the Sunday I took the 'bus to the General Cemetery, where I gave out quite a number of tracts—"Why Sorrow, Sin, Death and Evil are Permitted”—and most people seemed pleased to accept them, and I found it quite a pleasure to give them out.

On the Monday, at 7 a.m., I caught the train for Sydney to see the doctor about my eyes, etc. I have had a very bad cold since my return, and it is not right yet. I will close now, dear Brother, with warm Christian love to yourself and all the friends.

I remain,

Your Brother by His Grace, B.J.

Lord Jesus, make Thyself to me
A living, bright reality;
More present to faith's vision keen
Than any outward object seen;

More dear, more intimately nigh,
Than e'en the closest earthly tie.

O House of Jacob, Come Ye, Let Us Walk in the Light of the Lord.

(Isaiah 2: 5).—Convention Address.

THE faithful prophet Isaiah, speaking as he was moved by the holy spirit and being granted visions of the future, seemed to see what glory and blessing the Lord was willing to bestow on the nation of Israel in fulfilment of the promises to their fathers Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and Moses.

The first four verses of this chapter foretell how that even though God would punish them severely for their sins, yet He would return His favour and exalt them as a nation above all peoples and use them as a means of establishing righteousness and peace on earth. He could see the coming judgments as a result of their sins, also the blessings they might enjoy if they would walk in the ways of the Lord, and this called forth the expression of our text. He saw their wickedness as described in the first chapter, and pleaded, verses 16-20, "Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes, cease to do evil, learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed . . . Come let us reason together, saith the Lord ; though your sins be as scarlet they shall be as white as snow, though they be red like crimson they shall be as wool."

He could see what might have been, and cries out, "Why should ye be stricken any more?" Then after foreseeing that ultimately Israel would repent and be restored under the Messianic Kingdom, he implores, "O, House of Jacob come ye, let us walk in the Light of the Lord,"

What is implied by this expression, "walk in the Light of the Lord?" The nation of Israel was the only nation at that time that had the opportunity of walking in the Light of the Lord. "He hath not dealt so with any nation, and as for His judgments they have not known them" (Psalm 147:20; Amos 3:2.) They had the Law for instructions, and prophets for guidance, and the Temple and priesthood for direction and teaching in righteousness. While they walked in the ways of the Lord they had the rich promises—none of which ever failed, of prosperity, and health, and no nation could stand before them.

The Light of the Lord now shines much more brightly than it did in that day. In 1 John 1: 5-7, we read, "This is the message we have heard of Him and declare unto you, that God is light and in Him is no darkness at all. If we say that we have fellowship with Him and walk in darkness we lie, and do not the truth. But if we walk in the light as He is in the light we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ, His Son, cleanseth us from all sin."

How true it is that darkness and light cannot have fellowship. Where light enters darkness recedes, where light is withdrawn darkness follows. Then after having been in the light, to go into darkness again how much greater is the darkness. "If the light that is in thee becomes darkness, how great is that darkness."

In the beginning "the earth was without form, and void; and darkness covered the face of the deep." And God said, "Let there be light."

Where God is there must be light. The first act, then, in dealing with the literal earth was to create light, and before God will again deal with mankind as His children the darkness of sin must be destroyed.

Mankind represented in Eden, chose to obey the prince of darkness, therefore came sin, wickedness, cruelty, murders, calamities, sickness and death, depravity, ignorance and superstitions. The dark night of sin has been wisely permitted so that man may learn the lesson of obedience.

When the lessons are learnt and all come to appreciate righteousness and truth, the "morning will break and the shadows flee away," and "the willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land." "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."

Only by abiding under the providence of the Almighty can man enjoy the fulness of life, the joy of His love and the shelter of His care. Only as the Lord will "lift up the light of His countenance upon us can we have peace."

While darkness always symbolises ignorance, superstition, sin, sickness, sorrow, calamity and death, light ever indicates enlightenment of mind, intelligence, knowledge, righteousness, truth, life, peace and joy. So Jesus said unto the Jews (John 12: 35, 36), "Yet a little while is the light with you. Walk while ye have the light lest darkness come upon you, for he that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth,—while ye have the light believe in the light." "In Him was life and the life was the light of men and the light shineth in the darkness and the darkness comprehendeth it not" (John 1: 4, 5.) These words were uttered at another crisis in the history of Israel. Isaiah had warned against the sins of Israel, and the Lord's judgments of his time, which meant the carrying away of the nation to Assyria. They failed to walk in the light of the Lord,—the light was withdrawn and they did not discern where they were drifting until they became captives and were carried away from their loved homeland of liberty. When Jesus came 1000 years ago, Israel again faced a great crisis. Matt. 4: 16, quotes Isaiah as referring to Christ, "The people which sat in darkness saw great light ; and to them that sat in the region and shadow of death is light sprung up."

Had Israel recognised Christ, "the Light of the world," He would have gathered their nation as a hen doth her chickens under her wings and the great calamity, the fall of Jerusalem, would never have occurred. Because they failed to "walk in the Light of the Lord," darkness came upon them, their leaders acted as though stupefied—"blind leaders of the blind," they stumbled into the ditch. So Paul informs us that, "Blindness is happened to Israel until the fulness from the Gentiles be come in,"—that is, until the Church is completed, out of all nations. "Through their fall salvation is come to the Gentiles."

How important it is, then, that we "walk in the light of the Lord." In Isaiah's day the light did not shine as brightly as now. The Law Dispensation is likened to the light of the moon, which is • only a reflection of the sunlight to which the "light of the glorious gospel of Christ," is likened. "The Lord God is a sun and a shield." The light increases as the ages progress; it shines for the guidance, comfort and blessing of God's people.

How important it is that we should be ready to perceive truths which the Lord is willing to make known.

\\Then sin entered, man went out from the Divine presence and providential care. How soon came sorrow and death. Yet even in sending man out of Eden God gave him a little light, a glimmering hope in one or two ways. It was clearly shown that death was the penalty. The confident trust of righteousness had gone, no longer could he rejoice at the voice of the Creator walking in the Garden; fear and dread was felt and he preferred darkness to hide his shame. God in mercy, in sentencing the Adversary, gave a hope of help in the seed of the woman, and indicated that a covering for sin might be found in having animals slain to provide clothing for the guilty ones.

Abel would seem to have grasped the thought,—to have seen the light,—that in bringing an offering to the Lord there should be a recognition that death being the penalty for sin, there must be a death in order to redeem man. Thus his slain lamb pointed to the hope in, “the Lamb of God that should take away the sins of the world.”

Abel walked in the light which Cain had not perceived, therefore, Cain missed the blessing and fell into worse sin.

In his jealousy he slew his brother.

From Abel to Noah there were those who walked in the light of the Lord, such as Seth and Enoch, but the remainder of the human family went their own ways into depravity,—the darkness of sin. Through walking in the light of the Lord, Noah and his family were able to understand the present truth of that day, the ark was built and their lives were saved.

There are some, however, who think that there must be some new truth, new light, every few weeks, and we have seen what confusion they get into, by exercising their vain imaginations. We notice that it was about 400 years before there was further development of the light of the Lord. It was then Abraham who was found faithful, and to him was the light made clearer and the promise was given that in him and in his seed should all the families of the earth be blessed.

It was again another 400 years before the light increased. In the meantime, faith had been tested by the gloom of slavery in Egypt of the seed of Abraham, which seemed so contrary to the promise. There were, however, still those who faithfully looked for the fulfilment and they were rewarded by the coming of Moses. The whole nation of Israel were then miraculously delivered and the Law was given. Then there were from time to time the messages of the prophets and Psalmist telling of the golden day of Israel’s glory, givings of warnings against their sins and instructions in righteousness, Again and again was Israel punished to correct and bring them to repentance and forgiveness, yet they rebelled and ultimately brought upon them the long punishment of “seven times” foretold in Lev. 25. They were under this punishment, being then under the Roman rule, when Christ came. As a nation they refused to recognise “the Light of the world,” and darkness came upon them. Blinded because of unbelief, only a remnant were saved and the Gospel then went to the Gentiles to make up the full number required for the spiritual seed, i.e., the Church of Christ (Rom. II: 25; Acts 15: 14.)

What privileges were lost through not walking in the light—not perceiving the unfolding of the Divine plan or the truths clue as time went on. We may remember just one or two such occasions :—

(1) Fifteen months after leaving Egypt, Israel could have entered Canaan, but they failed because of unbelief—failed to walk in the Light of the Lord, though led by a pillar of fire by night and a cloud by day. Consequently the nation wandered 40 years in the wilderness. •

(2) Again in Zedekiah's day, because of wickedness, the seven times of punishment had come upon them and they were commanded to be content under the over-rule of the Gentile power ; they failed to recognise the present truth of that day and so they were carried away captives to Babylon and the land was desolated.

(3) In the days of our Lord, they failed to recognise the presence of Messiah—the present truth of that day,— consequently they were destroyed as a nation, their city ruined and temple burned in a terrible calamity.

“What, then, has this message of Isaiah to do with Christendom, the nominal “Israel of God,” the “House of Jacob”? It is just as important as ever it was that God's people should recognise “present truth,” and so direct their lives accordingly and “walk (go forward) in the light.” The light of truth shines more clearly to-day than it ever did and only as we appreciate it can we have the blessings and privileges which it brings. Those who lag behind saying, “what our fathers believed is good enough for me,” do not know what they are missing until it shall be too late, like the foolish Virgins in the parable.

The present truth of this day has gone forth with trumpet sound, as foretold by our Lord (Matt. 24: 31.) It is sounding for a particular purpose. Those who have “ears to hear” respond and enter the joys of the promised feast (Luke 12: 37; Rev. 3: 20), and in their turn become the messengers proclaiming the “sound of the trumpet” and gathering “the elect from the four corners of the heavens.” Those who have no ears to hear,—whose ears are not attuned to catch the wireless message—do not know the importance of the present truth, and fail to “walk in the light of Lord.”

There are those as indicated in the Parable (Matt. 25), who seemed to appreciate the trumpet proclamation at one time, but they appear • to be short of any reserve of oil (the holy spirit) for their lamps—the word of God.. From some cause their light has become dim, things appear to be confused, they cannot even see that we are living “in the days of the Son of man.” They say that they were mistaken in thinking they had heard the “sound of the trumpet” and that anyway it does not matter much whether it be sounding or not, that such things are not essentials; and again they seem “to eat and drink with the drunken,” in the Laodicean spirit of compromise,—’neither hot nor cold.”

It is in this way, through the revealment of truth, that the Lord has ever tested His people. Only those walking in the light of the Lord will understand present truth, and be separated from the systems of error, and have the joys of bearing the glad message of the presence of the Lord and the Kingdom being so near at hand.

Isaiah had visions of that glad day. He could see Israel returning to God's favour again in their own land and prosperously leading the whole world. (after the Church was glorified), into harmony with righteousness and the joy of knowing God. Only those willing to “walk in the light of the Lord” will enjoy the blessings of that time. It shall be a “Way of holiness, the unclean shall not pass over it.” No doubt the light will grow brighter and brighter throughout that Age, the Divine purpose and will, no doubt, becoming clearer and the Bible fully understood. Then, as now, light will be sown for the righteous and truth for the upright in heart, and the indication is, that at the end of that age, once more revealed truth will be the means of proving who it is that loveth the Lord his God with all his heart and soul and strength.

“Walking in the light of the Lord,” however, means much more than just understanding dispensational truths. In 1 John I : 5-7 we read, “God is light and in Him is no darkness at all ; if we say that we have fellowship with Him and walk in darkness we lie and do not the truth. But if we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin.” That is the important part ; are we walking “in the light of the Lord ?”

God has revealed His plan in His Word, we have the instructions of the Law and the Prophets, as also of Jesus and the Apostles. The light that shone as the moon, revealing the righteousness of God, now shines as the sun manifesting His love as well as His justice, wisdom and power. “God commendeth His love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us.” He has extended to us a wonderful invitation to become joint heirs with Christ if so be that we suffer with Him. The mystery, which had been hid from Ages, is now made manifest to the Saints. The requirements of those who will attain such glory are made known. They must “suffer with Christ,” must present themselves a “living sacrifice,” to be “as sheep led to the slaughter killed all the day long.” They must walk (progress) in the light, “more and more of Jesus learning every day,” and be transformed into His likeness.

We may agree about doctrines and discuss Bible teachings and dispensational truths, chronologies, etc., and speak of the drift of the world into the great time of trouble, and also of the great times of restitution to come, but unless the “life of Jesus becomes manifest in our mortal bodies,” unless we partake of His spirit and “delight to do God’s will,” and become copies of the character of our Lord, all will be in vain. -

It is, then, to such as have heard the great invitation to be members in the spiritual House of Jacob, of whom it is written, “He hath chosen our inheritance for us even the excellency of Jacob,” that this message applies to-day. It would urge us to carefulness in our Christian walk, to diligence to make our calling and election sure, “O, House of Jacob come ye, let us walk in the light of the Lord.”

“God is Light,” then we read, “Jesus is the light of the world.” Again, Jesus speaking to the disciples said, “Ye are the light of the world.” It is for this light that the poor world waits, while grovelling in darkness. “Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the Kingdom” (Rom. 8: 19-22.) “The sun of righteousness shall arise with healing in His wings,” and chase away all the darkness of sin, superstition, error, sorrow, death and the curse. “And there shall be no night there, and they need no candle nor the light of the sun, for the Lord God giveth them light” (Rev. 22:

“And the city had no need of the sun (gospel light), nor of the moon (the Law) to shine in it, for the glory of God did lighten it and the Lamb is the light thereof” (Rev. 21: 23; Isaiah 60: 19-21.) And

“The light that shines on Zion’s Hill,
Shall lighten every land;
The King that reigns in Salem’s Towers,
Shall all the world command.”

“O, House of Jacob come ye, let us walk in the light of the Lord.”

Patience is the key of joy, but haste is the key of sorrow.—Arab Proverb.

MY TRAVELLING COMPANION.

It is the path for those who are alive from the dead, and immediately we step into it we find that we have a travelling companion. He hath said "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee" (Heb. 13, 5). "Thou art with me, Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me" (Psa. 23). Cultivate the thought of the Lord as your Travelling Companion in the path of faith and obedience to God's will, and the sufficiency of His grace for you in it will not be a doctrine only but a blessed experience.

Work of the Berean Biblical Institute

AT this time of the year the opportunity is taken of referring more particularly to the work of the Berean Biblical Institute over the past twelve months, and also to include the Tract Fund Account for the same period, which closes with the month of April. In so doing, it is with deep thankfulness to our loving Heavenly Father for all His blessings throughout another year of privileges in proclaiming the glad message of truth with the willing assistance and loving co-operation of the dear brethren in all parts. We would, then, at the same time express sincere appreciation of the help and encouragement received from fellow-members in the Christian way, which means so much, especially in these trying times.

The work of the Institute has gone on steadily and for the most part similarly to former years. It is mainly in the small ways that service has been rendered, but many expressions of appreciation of the efforts to encourage and stimulate with the message of truth are received from time to time. The main lines of activity are still in the publishing of the monthly "People's Paper"; supplying such literature as will be enlightening and beneficial on most Bible subjects ; and providing quantities of tracts of a nature likely to appeal to the minds and hearts of those still hungering for the message of hope and comfort.

While the subscriptions to the "People's Paper" have shown a little increase in the year just past, it is still necessary that a good balance of its cost be made up from the Tract Fund. Again we would remind all subscribers that they could help greatly by encouraging others to take the "Paper" regularly; the work being done by some along this line is highly appreciated, and we trust that they realise much blessing in their efforts to give the same to others. Sample copies of the "People's Paper" will be gladly posted to any address, or forwarded in numbers free of charge to those friends willing to pass them on to likely cases of interest ; also extra issues of current numbers may be had each month, upon request.

A. goodly number of free tracts have been distributed throughout the year again by willing workers, and this is one avenue in which all may co-operate—all have some talent in this direction. Some nice results have come from this witness work again, and we may be sure that much more has been accomplished of which we see nothing at the present time—our faith is such that we can feel assured God’s Word of truth will not return void. The main object in this work would be to place the pamphlets with wisdom and reverence, also with a word of encouragement to read of the Scriptural plan of redemption for the whole world of mankind, in due time. Good supplies of tracts are on hand, so that all who desire may enter upon this service while there is still opportunity. “A night cometh when no man can work.”

Another method of witnessing to the truth which is worthy of continued attention, is that of advertising free literature on interesting Bible topics by way of coupons in suitable newspapers. Very good results have come in over the past year from this means, especially from South Australia, and we would be glad to hear from other brethren who could co-operate in this way of reaching those in somewhat isolated places perhaps, who could not be found by other means. We are hoping to take up more in this way from Melbourne shortly. Free literature is forwarded to all enquirers, also the “People’s Paper” for three months at least, as well as a personal letter to try and encourage the interest.

The Tract Fund Account below shows the financial assistance received for the work from all the dear friends, and which no doubt represents much of loving sacrifice in the interests of the Lord’s cause. It has been our endeavour to use this provision as wisely as possible, in a way which we believe has had the Lord’s approval. All will be able to see what expenses have been met, and it will be noticed that the credit balance has been increased from last year. However, there will be need very shortly of a further supply of printing paper to keep up the stock of literature, and this will greatly reduce the credit in hand.

In conclusion, we assure all the Lord’s dear people everywhere of our warm Christian love and sincere interest in, their highest welfare, and trust and pray that, despite the trying circumstances, the days ahead may prove the power of the spirit in each and all by continued growth in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord. The Lord’s words seem particularly appropriate at this time: “In patience possess ye your souls,” and “In quietness and in confidence shall be your strength ;” “Rest in the Lord and wait patiently for Him.” It is a pleasure to hear regularly from all members near and far, and any assistance we can possibly give is rendered gladly, as unto the Lord. Suggestions by way of improving the work in any direction are very welcome and shall receive the best attention. We desire at all times the prayers of the brethren for guidance in the work, that all may have the Lord’s approval and be to His praise and glory.

Encouraging Words from Tasmania.

THE following helpful account of the Memorial, and Easter Sunday Convention, held in Burnie, has been kindly forwarded. by the Secretary of the Class there. On account of being delayed the report came just too late for our last month's issue, but we feel it will still be of deep interest and encouragement to all.—
"Loving greetings in the name of Him we love so well."

"I am sending you just a few notes on our Memorial and Convention, as I know your interest 'n our doings. In all, nine of us assembled at Burnie to partake of the Memorial Supper on March 29th, at 7.30 p.m. The great, simple, yet : solemn privilege was truly appreciated by us all.

"The years pass quickly, dear Brother, and each (lie is another milestone passed in our pilgrim journey ; the thinning of our numbers, and greater appreciation of the deep things of God. As we -Tow in knowledge, it makes us look forward with renewed joy to the time when we, like our Blessed Lord, can say, "It is finished," so as to be ready to drink it anew with Him in the Kingdom.

"Truly, in this evil day, this simple little service is a wonderful stimulus to continue with renewed zeal in the dear old rugged path until we hear those words, 'Well done.' Needless to say our thoughts reverted to those who were 'keeping the feast' in companies, or with their Elder Brother alone, that they might also be richly blessed.

"Is it not a nice thought to look upon this date (Nisan 14th) as our new year's day (I think it was for the Jews), and trust that we will make it by (God's grace the best yet in loving faith and zeal. May all the dear ones so run as to obtain the great prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus, who alone is the Author and Finisher of our faith.

"Our little Convention is a thing of the past ; just blessed memory to help us along. We were reminded that it is not numbers that go to produce time of sweet fellowship when only eight came; we expected to have about thirteen.

"The whole day was spent in the little room you now of, and, I am sure, from the happy, helpful time spent we numbered nine, for truly our dear Lord was there and His spirit manifested.

"Commencing with prayer and testimony the friends had the old story of their Father's love and supervising care to recount, which never tires. Some thoughts expressed were, grief at coming short of the standard set ; God's goodness now,—a foretaste of future blessings when able to serve perfectly ;—love for the brethren a proof that we have eternal life now in the begotten state. The message from yourself read,—James 5: 7, 8, to, 11.

"Afternoon :—Luke 12: 37-46.

"Amongst other thoughts were, the great blessings accruing to the servants found watching. The girding and serving to those fully exercised thereby, alone an undisputable proof of our Lord's presence. Satan, at first unaware of our Lord's return, only recognising it when too late to save his house. His endeavours to blind others to understand, until the watchers can say in the words of John,— there standeth one amongst you whom you know not.' Afternoon concluded with an address by Bro. Badrock on 'Consecration' (Text, 1 Cor. 4

"Evening:—Study, 1 Thes. 4:-18. Some very helpful thoughts came out of this study.

“Addresses.—Bro. Dobson, on ‘The Presence and Consecration,’ taking Isa. 52: II as his text ; Bro. Brown, ‘Our Glorious Hope,’ text Tit. 2: 13.

“This, in brief, brought to a close a happy, helpful and encouraging day. To sum up one might say that consecration and the blessedness of those who have come to the 1335 days (Dan. 12:12), were quite the two principal themes. Thus, we separated to our homes in deep thankfulness to God.”

NOTICE.

Being unable to procure further stocks of the original “Daily Heavenly Manna,” and having enquiries for copies from time to time, we are wondering whether it would be well to reprint a supply in Australia (should the way be open), and would like the help of the brethren in the matter.

The “Daily Manna” is, no doubt, of much help in every home where the truth is appreciated, and provided the demand is sufficient to warrant its being printed again, the work may be undertaken. As the enquiries for the “Manna” have been mainly for the pocket edition (without the birthday recording pages), an estimate has been prepared showing that these could be printed, nicely bound in cloth, and posted to any address for about 1/9 per copy, with a reduction for three, six or one dozen copies, etc., in proportion.

It is desirable to hear from all who, are interested in the above as soon as convenient, and if each will kindly indicate how many copies they would take if the “Mannas” are printed, that will be a good help in deciding for the best.

Correspondence;

Tasmania, 15/5/'34. Dear Brother,

Loving greetings in our dear Saviour's name. I have enclosed a postal note for the Berean Teacher's Manual that you sent to Bro. some time ago. He has gone to Victoria to work and is going to write to you from there. I miss him very much; but, still, we cannot always be together, and it is a glorious thing to know that wherever we are we can still enjoy the sweet fellowship with our Master. I have not been able to gather with any of the brethren for study lately, but He is just as precious. Bro. and I went to Burnie and celebrated the Memorial Supper with the friends there, and had a blessed time as we thought about the great sacrifice made for us by our dear Redeemer, but I was unable to attend the Convention held there on the following Sunday.

I saw the report 'of the Adelaide Convention in the "People's Paper" and was pleased to know that you had such a helpful time in the study of the Word. It is indeed good to be able to gather together in one accord and enjoy fellowship one with the other around the "Throne of Grace." The reading in the "People's Paper" is still enjoyed, and a good deal of food for thought is got from them.

Is it not wonderful, ' dear Brother, that we see signs around us which show that the "time of the end" is drawing nigh, and that whilst the world is in such a turmoil, we can rejoice in the wonderful peace we have in Christ Jesus, which the world cannot give nor take away.

With Christian love, your Sister in Christ, • M.E.

Victoria,

17th May, 1934. Dear Friend,

Many thanks for the "Foregleams of the Golden Age," which you have kindly loaned to me, and which I received safely. The small portions I have read are most interesting, and I feel I am going to like this book exceedingly. I think I will take about two months to study it, providing this time is not too long for you.

I am still safely receiving the "People's Papers" and enjoy them as ever.

Thanking you for the book and all past kindnesses, Yours in Christ's bond,

W.G.

New South Wales,

The Principal,

Berean Biblical Institute.

Dear Sir.

The "People's Paper" is coming to me each month; I appreciate it and enclose the yearly subscription, 2/6. I should like to read other publications advertised in it — "Divine Plan of the Ages," cheap edition; "Death, Hell and Spiritism"; "Mythology Explained"; "Christ's Return"; and any of the free pamphlets will be passed on. Stamps — enclosed.

New South Wales,

Dear Brother.

I am enclosing postal note for three shillings for "People's Paper." Have you a spare copy of "A Voice from Switzerland?" Would like one if you could let me have one, please, and let me know what I am in debt.

I am always very glad to hear from you; it cheers me up; the fellowship of the Lord's own is very sweet.

Yours faithfully, D.A.

Soon we shall be united together with Him whom our soul loveth. I am drawing near the end of my journey; it is sweet to rest awhile and look back on the way the Lord my God has led me. I know now His will and way is the best—I can safely trust the future. Praying still more that I might press on toward the mark, my arduous task will not be done till I have gained the crown.

Yours in the Faith, with Brotherly Love,

L.A.G.

Question Box.

Question.—I have been looking over Matt. 24 and would like to know if you consider the shortening of the days to be the same time as the holding back of the winds, in Rev. 7?

Answer.—The references to “the elect” in Verses 22, 24 and 31, of Matt. 24, all appear to apply to the same class mentioned in 1 Peter 1:2, “Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father through sanctification of .the spirit,” i.e., the Church of Christ, and the “shortening of the days” for the elects’ sake would seem to be the same as the “holding back of the winds until the servants of God are sealed,” in Rev. 7. Neither “earth,” “sea” nor “trees,” should be broken up until the elect were sealed. The sealing must be completed or, as Matt. 24:31 has it, the elect must be gathered from the four winds of heaven. The trees spring Out of the earth but raise themselves up to the heavens and seemingly represent the sects of Christendom, out of which the elect are to be gathered. If the sea and earth were to be “turned upside down” (Psalm 46), in turmoil, the trees would go too. That cannot be permitted until the “harvest is past.” A figure of this may be seen in Genesis 19: 22, when Sodom was to be destroyed, the angels urged haste, “Haste thee, escape, for I cannot do any thing until thou be come hither.”

So the great time of trouble is now held back and the longer it is held back the shorter will be the time of distress, for at the time appointed Christ’s Kingdom will be set up and the work of restitution begin.

The divine plan seems to be, that mankind should experience 6000 years under Satan’s rule, with its sin, sorrow, trouble and death, and that the 7th moo year day shall be man’s rest day—the great antitypical seventh day Sabbath.

It would seem then that the way to shorten the days would be to hold back the winds of trouble—to keep back the great catastrophe, foretold in Daniel 12:1, and Matt. 24: 21, and this, so that every member in Christ shall be gathered home,—”taken to the mountain” (Gen. 17-19.) The 6000 years from the fall of man have evidently not yet been reached, though we cannot be many years from it.

That Ye Love One Another.

(Convention Address.)

“A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another as I have loved you, that you also should love each other” (John 13:34).

AFTER the Adversary had fully entered the heart of Judas, he immediately went out into the night bent on his awful mission. To the little band gathered together in that upper room the passing of Judas seemed to revive their spirits, for what fellowship hath light with darkness. From the words of their Master, a sadness had filled their hearts, also a feeling as if some dread disaster were about to take place, so, once more finding themselves alone with Jesus, their spirits revived and they felt secure in the Divine presence. “For Jesus having loved them, He loved them to the end.” So much has been crowded into that eventful night, so much has been written of that last supper, that right down the Gospel Age the story of Jesus on this solemn occasion with his Disciples, has never lost its charm and beauty; there has always been a fresh act of love to catch the eye and warm the heart. And it was on that eventful night that Jesus gave us this “new commandment,” that we love each other.

All ‘of our Saviour’s teachings had been leading up to this Royal Command. We hear Him say, “If ye do not from the heart forgive men their trespasses, neither will My Heavenly Father forgive you.” A strict condition firmly set, and the only one by which we can hope for forgiveness. There must be no regret in forgiveness, hard though it may be, it must be wholehearted,—as Jesus has loved you. If this love, for the brethren is not cultivated it will not grow, and if the spirit of love does not grow let us fear lest we too walk out into the night.

It will be well for us to remember that this command comes from the King of kings; it is a Royal command given to a chosen race,—to a “royal Priesthood, a holy nation.” It is to this law that the new creature should pay special heed, for the one who puts this law into daily practice, will be known as a disciple of Christ.

Whoever we love we try to imitate,—their ways and actions,—so, if we sincerely love Jesus, we shall most assuredly be like Him. For the Lord has loved us with an everlasting love and with loving kindness He has drawn us to the Cross of Christ and made us heirs to all the precious promises. So let our minds be as a glass to admit the love of God and to reflect it, for the greatest gift on earth is to have, our hearts so full of tender compassion for one another, so tuned and ruled by the love of Jesus, so united to each other,—anxious and willing to bear the burden of another,— that we will have no time to see their defects or faults. If we are looking for faults we will most assuredly find them, not only in others but in ourselves too,—for faults lie thick where love is thin.

There is an unutterable sweetness in the love of Jesus, an irresistible force which carries all before it. No creature has ever sounded the depth of that Love and the height will ever be left for us to ascend. It is as boundless as the ocean, as limitless and unsearchable as the vault of heaven. And this love of Jesus can be ours only as we use it and expend it on others. There must be a generous giving of love, if we would receive bountifully of this hidden treasure. Deep in our hearts there must be the constant, earnest striving after the spirit of love.

It seemed so easy when we first came into the troth, so easy to love those clear ones, whom Jesus died to save.

But has it been so; have we lived up to this Divine standard of perfection? We look back on the past and find that the ones we loved most are often the very ones who wound and disappoint us, and so difficult it is. to put this commandment into daily practice, that were we not endowed with power from on high we could never hope to do so; for the Adversary, ever ready to stumble the child of God, lends them a glass with which to see and magnify the faults of others, and so huge do they 'appear in our sight that we forget that deep in our own hearts there lurketh the very same evil.

“They all went out and left her there,
The Scribe, the Pharisee, the Jew;
But the Lord’s words, how sweet they were,
He condemned her not and loved her too.
So quick are we to cast a stone
And swift to mark another’s fault;
Oh, help us, Lord, to see our own,
Lest we be sick, and lame, and halt,
We only feel our burden fall,
When taught by God, we pity all.”

We have seen the departure of Judas on that eventful night. Our Saviour had tried in every way by loving-deeds and actions to rescue him from the powerful evil. And we hear His loving reproof to another disciple who would lay down his life for his Master,--”Simon, behold Satan has desired to have you that he may sift you as wheat.” And is not the Adversary trying his hardest to sift us as wheat, to make us rend and devour one another with harsh words and unkind actions. Have we not one and all vowed to lay down our lives for the Master, and like Peter of old, have we denied Jesus by our harsh treatment of a brother or sister? Have we said, I know not the man? Have we washed the feet of the humblest member? Have we performed the most menial task with joy? Have we dipped the sop revealing our tender love and devotion to the ones who would wrong us? Have we prayed to the Heavenly Father that the faith of the weakest member fail not?

So let us from the heart try our hardest to fulfil this command. Let us use the mantle of love the Lord has provided, to cover the faults and defects of others, and let us fear greatly lest the Lord having left us this law we should fail to come up to the standard of perfection. “For inasmuch as ye have done’ it unto the least of one of these my brethren, ye have clone it unto Me.”

The Dead Sea.

A Health Resort.

On the north-western corner of the Dead Sea, in Palestine, there has come into existence a little health resort which, according to Mr. Harold J. Shepstone, who contributes an article on the subject to the "Empire Review," is "a veritable modern Lido."

"One travels down from Jerusalem to Kallia by bus, and the return fare is only 2/6, decidedly cheap when one remembers that the distance is 23 miles each way, the return journey being a steep, uphill climb," writes Mr. Shepstone. "Palestine's bus service deserves mention. It represents Jewish enterprise. There are also bus services to Haifa, Hebron, and other centres, at most reasonable fares, and they are proving invaluable in enabling tourists to see the country cheaply. The ride down to Kallia is decidedly interesting, as one passes many places of biblical interest.

The area, however, is being rapidly enlarged, as Palestine's Lido is developing rapidly. It adjoins the works of the Palestine Potash Company, which to-day covers 500 acres of ground, virtually monopolising the whole northern area of the lake, and there are the great evaporating pans and miles of dykes, factories for treating the salts, power house, pumping station and dwellings capable of housing 500 workers with their wives and families.

"A favourite time for bathing in the Dead Sea is during the period of full moon, when there is quite an exodus from the Holy City to the new Lido. It is a common thing to find 500 or 600 people bathing in the lake at one time. The novice quickly discovers that bathing in the Dead Sea is unlike swimming in the ordinary ocean. There are notices warning you not to dive or allow the water to get into your eyes. The water is so salt and bitter that no fish can live in it. Whereas in the ocean, such as the Atlantic, the percentage of mineral salts is but 3.5 per cent., in the Dead Sea it reaches no less than 25 per cent. It is these salts that render the water so buoyant that it is impossible for a human being to sink in it. The water is exceedingly clear, and it is possible to see distinctly every pebble at a depth of 20 feet."

"Trials make the promise sweet,
Trials give new life to prayer,

Bring me to the Master's feet,
Lay me low and keep me there."

God's Sympathy For His People.

BEFORE the mountains were brought forth, or the hills, before the First-born was created, He is God. To Moses at the burning bush, He said, "I am that I am." (Exodus 3: 14.) Our God is very great, very wise, very high, and the Scriptures show us that He is also very sympathetic. He is a God of mercy and of love.

Besides being very great and lofty, our God is particularly sympathetic towards those who are of a broken and contrite heart, whose spirit is humble, who realise that they are imperfect, who desire to be in accord with Him, and to dwell in holiness. To such He is ever near—to revive the spirit of the humble, to give them strength, He will not trample them into the dust, as many an earthly potentate has done to his subjects, but will assist them in the right way, and revive the heart of the contrite. These are to know that our God is a God of sympathy, compassion and love, who takes pleasure in reviving their hearts and in bringing them back into harmony with Him, if they are willing to be led.

Discouragement with Self a Favourable Condition.

There is a difference between a broken and a contrite heart. A heart is broken when it is bowed down with grief and sorrow ; a heart is contrite when it has a quiet, deep, continual sorrow for acts not in harmony with righteousness. A broken will is not necessarily the same; for there are those whose wills are broken, but who are not submissive to the Divine will.

To be repentant is to be thoroughly submissive to the Divine will, and implies a change of mental attitude toward sin. This humble, discouraged condition becomes a very favourable one if the person will seek Divine assistance, if he will become submissive to the Lord and ready to do the Divine will. Such will surely receive the blessing of God; for the Lord is very nigh to every One who is broken-hearted. The way to full consecration would be very short to him.

If such as be of contrite- heart will be submissive to the Lord, He will save them from their difficulties and bring them into a large place, as the Prophet David states. (Psalm 18: 19.) This does not necessarily mean that He will deliver them from financial troubles, but that He will give them peace and rest, which are better than money. If they have family troubles, they will find in Him a superior Friend, who is able and willing to administer superior consolation and refreshment.

Come, ye disconsolate! where'er ye languish,
Come to the mercy-seat, fervently kneel;
Here bring your wounded hearts; here tell your anguish;
Earth hath no sorrow that heaven cannot heal.
Joy of the desolate, light of the straying,
Hope of the penitent, fadeless and pure!
Here speaks the Comforter, tenderly saying,
Earth bath no sorrow that heaven cannot heal.

The Lord's Method of Deliverance.

The Scriptures assure us that, "There is none righteous, no, not one." There is relative righteousness, however, which God can approve. Those who are seeking to be in harmony with Him to the best of their ability, who are walking- in the ways of righteousness, and at the same time are trusting in the precious blood of our Redeemer—such are spoken of as righteous. Of these it is said, "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness ; for they shall be filled" (Matthew 5: (1).

This class, however, shall have afflictions. The Scriptures tell us that all who will live godly lives shall suffer. (Acts 14: 22; 2 Timothy 3; 12; Romans 5: 3-5.) The reason why this is true is that the world is travelling in the opposite direction to righteousness—in the way of selfishness and gratification of the flesh. We read, "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." (1 John 2: 15.) This is especially true of this Gospel Age, when some are following in the footsteps of the Master. It was also true of the Jewish Age, when some were seeking to walk in the Way , of righteousness.- The Lord delivered them out of their afflictions, and in the sense of shielding -.them from trials, but in- that of not permitting there to be overcome by their difficulties.

The Ancient Worthies fully appreciated the Divine favour or exercised in their behalf, and took joyfully the spoiling of their, goods, in order that they might have the continuance of ,that favor and larger blessings by and by. God delivered them out of their trials and difficulties by not permitting these to overcome them. This was also true of our Lord, and is true of the Church as well. The Lord delivers us out of our trials and difficulties, so that mentally we are not oppressed by them in the same way as are others. He will sustain and support us in our experiences and will eventually deliver us by giving us a share in the First Resurrection.

The sons of God by adoption are, during this Gospel Age, especially beset by trials and difficulties. If they should fall, however, the fact that they have stumbled will not make them feel like going back into sin, if their hearts are of the right stamp. On the contrary, they will feel like St. Peter, who, when others were stumbling, said, "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life." (John 6: 68.) The true people of God have no desire to go to any one but Him. If they stumble, they recover themselves, avail themselves of His arrangements for forgiveness and press on. By these stumblings they learn of their own weaknesses, and then fortify themselves so that they may be strong in the Lord, and in the power of His might. (Ephesians 6: 10).

A just man will not fall into sin. The very most that could happen to him would be to stumble. There are various causes for stumbling. But if the heart is right, the man will rise again; for the Lord will show him that he has made a mistake and will point out the way to him by which he may recover himself. If he is a lover of righteousness, he will desire to press on toward that which is right, just, approved of the Lord, even if he should stumble many times. (Psalm 37: 23, 24; Prov. 24:16).

The Evidence of Favor with God.

So far as our humanity is concerned, we are undone by reason of the fall. It behooves us, then, to be very humble, to feel our own littleness, our own fallen condition. It becomes us to be very contrite, very much in opposition to sin, to feel that sin is the great blight upon the whole race, and that God will not be in harmony with anything except that which is righteous and holy.

All, therefore, who would be in harmony with God must be repentant in respect of their own shortcomings and must be appreciative of His lofty standards--His holy standards. He,, in turn, in- forms these that they _have His sympathy, and that they shall have His succor. He appreciates the attitude of mind in which they are ; and, therefore, He is ready to revive the spirit of the humble and contrite ones. To such He will show. His salvation; to others He" will not. •

Only- the humble-minded can really appreciate their own condition. God not only will revive their spirit, but is willing to lift them up and to make them sons, with all that this implies. of blessing. He has this attitude towards the humble and contrite in the present time, and He has always had this spirit toward the humble and contrite ones. Throughout Christ's reign this humble class will have His favor and blessing. Only the humble and contrite ones have the opportunity of becoming joint-heirs with our Lord.

God resists the proud. To the humble He gives grace, and opens the eyes of their understanding. They become His children because they are in the attitude to receive His blessings and to be guided by His instruction. This applies not only in the present time, but will have an application in the next Age. "Go through, go through the gates ; prepare ye the way of the people ; cast up, cast up the highway; gather out the stones ; lift up a standard for the people." (Isaiah 62: 10.) These words are all intended to indicate the preparations for the incoming Age. There is no provision for the proud, none for the haughty, none for the self-conscious—but all for the humble-Minded.

If God has these blessings in store for the humble only, and if the humble are few in number at the present time, what 'of the others of humanity? God is allowing now a humiliating influence to work with people, which should teach them humility and lead them to be contrite of heart. But much more will this be the case in the next Age. "When Thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness." (Isaiah 26: 9.) All the blessings will be upon the contrite and humble. And this will be so markedly before the attention of the people that all will know a change has taken place.

Now the humble and contrite are trodden down in the street. Now the proud are happy. "Now we call the proud happy ; yea., they that work wickedness Are set up ; yea, 'even they that tempt God are delivered." (Malachi 3: 15.) But in the new Kingdom every one that exalteth himself shall be abased, and the • humble shall be exalted. (Luke 14: 11.) God has provided a thousand years for the education of all. A thousand years may seem a short period for this work when we know that for six thousand years things have been going wrong. But we must recollect that during the six thousand years, many of the people have lived but a short time—many dying in infancy.

In the new order -of things this will be changed, and each will live longer.. "There shall be • no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days; for the child shall die an hundred years old; but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed." (Isaiah 65: 20.)

"Judgment (justice) also lay to the line, and righteousness to the plummet : and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding-place." (Isaiah 28:17).

And then it will not be necessary for one to say to another, "Know the Lord ; for they shall all know Me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord." (Jeremiah 31: 34.) The high standard that God has for His people will be recognised. Then all who have humility and the right condition of heart will come into harmony with God. All who refuse to come into harmony with God will get the wages of sin—the Second Death.

The Sympathy of Jesus.

It is so sweet to know—

When we are tired, and when the hand of pain
Lies on our hearts, and when we look in vain
For human comfort—that the heart divine

Still understands these cares of yours and mine.
Not only understands, but, day by day,
Lives with us while_ we tread the earthly way,
Bears with us all our weariness, and feels

The shadow of the faintest cloud that steals
Across our sunshine—even learns again
The depth and bitterness of human. pain.
There is no sorrow that He will not share—
No cross—no burden for our hearts to bear

Without His help—no care of ours too small To cast on Jesus; let us tell Him all
Lay at His feet the story of our woes,
And in His sympathy find sweet repose.

UR OF THE CHALDEES, Light on Domestic Life.

Joint Expedition Completes Labors.

(British Official Wireless).

Commenting on the fact that after 12 seasons of careful and scientific exploration the joint expedition of the British Museum and the University of Pennsylvania has completed its labors at Ur of the Chaldees, “The Times” says, in a leading article, that the work has marked an epoch in archaeology. “For the first time,” it adds, “two distinct scientific institutions of two countries have cooperated, and their successive campaigns represent the longest continuous examination of the site that has yet been undertaken. Their excavations have carried back the record to the first human occupation of the Euphrates valley, when Ur was a hamlet in a marsh, and their discoveries have illustrated with an astonishing wealth of detail periods that were formerly known only in the barest outline. Abundant light has been thrown on the domestic life of the people of Ur 20 centuries before the Christian era. Of even greater importance has been the unmistakable confirmation of the Biblical tradition that a flood of gigantic dimensions—which left 11 ft. of silt at one point near Ur—once overwhelmed the lowlands of Irak and destroyed its settlements.”

“Christian World”:

IN answer to a correspondent who objected to his modernistic views the Rev: John Bevan, M.A., wrote as follows, in the “Christian World”:

“Are you right to base everything, as you do, on the infallibility of the Gospel records? You must know that they are not infallible. From your university training and subsequent study, you cannot but be aware of the many knotty problems for infallibility presented by the Synoptics and the grave question of the historicity of the speeches in the Fourth Gospel, to go no further. Frankly I cannot understand any educated minister, with the knowledge of the New Testament that the study of scholars during the last fifty years has made accessible, believing in the literal accuracy and historicity of all that the Gospel records. The Gospels were written by inspired men, but no degree of inspiration can make writers completely superior either to the limitations of their own nature or to the intellectual conditions prevailing in the age in which they write. Do consider the fact that the truth Christ had to declare to the world was bound to come through many different media before reaching us. Any medium inevitably modifies colours and sometimes even distorts the truth of which it is the vehicle: Inevitably so.

The flowering moments of the mind
Drop half their petals in our speech.

May one not even dare to think that this may have been true of Jesus?”

Thus Mr. Bevan speaks for the great majority of church ministers who have passed through the colleges in preparation for the church service, and he is undoubtedly right in his estimate that it is well nigh impossible for the student to come through these seminaries with his faith in - the Scriptures unimpaired.

What could be expected from, churches whose ministers no longer rely upon the teachings of the Lord and His Apostles. The gospel has certainly lost its “power unto salvation” in the churches of to-day, and no wonder that there is such a deadness apparent, and such a lack of spirituality, and that so much of sociality and worldly attractions are resorted to by way of trying to hold the people together.

While all will admit that the Scriptures have come down to, us through many agencies, and that we have no translation that can claim perfection, that does not invalidate the claim that the Gospel “at the first began to be spoken by the Lord and was confirmed unto us by them that heard Him” (Heb. 2: 3). These who confirmed the words of the Lord were previously chosen by the Lord to be. “witnesses of these things” (Luke 24: 48; Acts 1:8; John 15:

27). The Lord did not operate on the Apostles to make them express themselves aside from their personalities. The spirit brought matters to their remembrance in accord with the promise (John 14: 26), and they expressed themselves in their own way and the harmony and beauty of the Gospels is lovely.

The whole writings of the New Testament, as also of the Old. have the stamp of honesty. There is no attempt at forming a clergy class or at gaining a control or lordship over the people, even from Moses to John, and there is no shunning to declare the defects as well as the noble qualities of any of the characters mentioned. There is no other Book so old, and there is no other book so wise and so beautiful, and no other book that has been, so great an influence for good and for liberty and intelligence and progress. While admitting the possibility of additions and omissions and poor translations, as it has come down to our day and language, yet it is certain that it has lost very little or may be nothing of anything essential. We may still say with Paul, "The Holy Scriptures are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus," and "All Scriptures given by inspiration of God is profitable for doctrine, for-reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

It is, indeed, a sad fact, as Mr. Bevan intimates, that seminaries in which young men go to prepare for the ministry, instead of confirming in faith and the Word, are doing; the very opposite, and are sending out men not to preach the Gospel which Paul preached, "which is the power of God unto salvation," but to undermine faith in the Bible by their theories of evolution and "higher criticism," creating, doubts and fears, so that many have become infidels.

There is,, indeed, a famine in the land but not for bread, but for the Word of the Lord, yet to those who hunger after righteousness, the Bible shines clearer to-day, than ever, and reveals a Divine purpose through the sacrifice of Christ that satisfies both heart and mind, and leads to a true worship of God, "in spirit and in truth."

The fact that the, Scriptures of both- the Old and Testaments have :so miraculously survived attempts to destroy them during the dark days of Papal power, • and since by Scientists and Infidels, and have been preserved to us in such beautiful form, is evidence of a Divine providence, which has surely provided them as a revelation of God's purposes respecting mankind.

It was, we think, Dean Inge, who, speaking of the various modern translations recently said words to the effect that it was surprising how little of the import and beauty of the original Scriptures was lost in translating them into the English language, as in the authorised version. The "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scriptures," as Mr. Gladstone terms the Bible, has stood all the storms and we can still safely anchor our faith thereon. "The Word of the Lord endureth forever."

There is such majesty and dignity, yet simplicity and beauty along with such depths of thought, such wells of truths and such honesty of purpose with its prophecies of things foretold centuries prior to their fulfillments, that it is not possible to account for .the Bible, apart from a supernatural origin. Its own internal evidence sufficiently stamps it as of Divine inspiration and supervision.

In this connection the words of Rousseau, the celebrated Frenchman, are appropriate :

"How petty are the books of the philosophers with all their pomp, compared with the Gospels! Can it be that writings at once so sublime and so simple are the work of men? Can he, whose life they tell, be himself no more than a man? Is there anything in his character of the enthusiast or the ambitious sectary? What sweetness, what purity in his ways! What touching grace in his teachings! What loftiness in his maxims! What profound wisdom in his words! What presence of mind, what delicacy and aptness in his replies! What an empire over his passions! Where is the man, where is the sage, who knows how to act, to suffer and to die without weakness, without display? My friends, men do not invent like this, and the facts respecting, Socrates, which no one doubts, are not so well attested as about Jesus. Those Jews could never have struck this tone nor thought of this morality. And the Gospel has characteristics of truthfulness so grand, so striking, so perfectly inimitable, that their inventors would be even more wonderful than he whom they portray."

THE LORD BE WITH YOU.

“The Lord be with you!” steals the benediction.

With solemn splendor like a falling star;

In morns of joy and midnights of affliction.

It breathes its echoed sweetness near and far.

“The Lord be with you when the shadows hold you;

And prove His loving power to soothe(and: bless;

When dangers darken and when fears enfold you,

“The Lord be with you!” in His tenderness.

All things are Thy Servants

(Convention Address.)

“For ever, O Lord, Thy word is settled in heaven. Thy faithfulness is unto all generations. Thou hast established the earth and it abideth. They continue this day according to Thine ordinances : for all things are Thy servants” (Psa. 119: 89-91).

It is often thought that good people only, or the good things of life only, can serve God, but here the Psalmist tells us that all things, whether good or bad, are His servants.. That is, all things, no matter what their origin may be, are used of the Lord to accomplish His purposes, and all are made to work together for His designs. “And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to His purpose” (Rom. 8: 28). “All things are Thy .servants,”—not a few things only, not things on Sundays only, but all things on week days as well.

Both the Psalmist and the Apostle Paul spoke out of the midst of tribulation and persecution. The Psalmist had just been telling how he had been “almost consumed” by the proud, who had “dugged pits” for him, and “persecuted him wrongfully.” Yet, on the face of things, which must have seemed so mysterious to him, he could still declare that God’s faithfulness was unto all generations, and that all things were His servants.

The Apostle Paul, too, could declare, unhesitatingly, his faith, for, notwithstanding his trials, he still was sure that “all things worked together for good to them that love God.” In both instances it was their strong faith in the God who created and controls the worlds that enabled them to see this grand fact that all things are His servants, and that all things, therefore, must minister to the welfare of His children.

“Praise the Lord from the earth, ye dragons and all deeps : fire and hail; snow and vapours, stormy wind fulfilling His word” (Psa 148: 7, 8.) Here we have even fire and hail, snow and vapour, dragons and all deep fulfil His word and serve Him. And not only is this true of the fierce and cruel. things in nature, but of the wicked things in man as well.

“Surely the wrath of man shall praise Thee : the remainder of wrath shalt Thou restrain” (Psa. 76: 10). The wrath of man is altogether a wrong thing, yet even this becomes God’s servant, and is forced to accomplish His purpose and bring Him praise.

“Thou art my battle axe and weapons of war : for with thee will I break in pieces the nations,” etc. (Jer.. 51:20-23).

The common sense of this is simple, that while the Lord does not inaugurate evil in order to accomplish His will, He adopts it to fulfil His Word, using a heathen king as His “battle axe,” and His “weapons of war” to accomplish His purposes of discipline and chastening toward His people.

The story of Joseph is another striking instance of this. His brethren in their wrath and envy sold him into Egypt. Nothing could have seemed to be more plainly the result of sin, nor more utterly contrary to the will of God than this, and yet in the end how clearly we are shown that these wicked brethren, while acting out their own plans, were really used by God as His servants to bring about “a great deliverance,” and “to save much people alive” (see Gen. 45:4-8; 50: 19, 20). “Ye thought evil against me, but God meant it unto good.” His is the secret of all those trials, which come to us from the wrath and malice of men. They think evil against us, perhaps, but God means it for good. Can we, therefore, say with Joseph, “It is not you who did it, but God”?

With these thoughts in mind we can realise how Paul could assert so triumphantly his deliverance from all fear of what man could do unto him. “Be content with such things as ye have, for He hath said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee. So that we may boldly say, the Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me” (Heb. 13:5; 6).

The death of Jesus on the cross was another illustration of this truth. It certainly was “by wicked hands” that He was crucified and slain, and yet these “wicked hand’s” accomplished, all unconsciously to themselves, God’s “determinate counsel,” for the salvation of the world. “Him being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken and by wicked hands have crucified and slain” (Acts 2: 23). The multitude, who cried, “Crucify Him, crucify Him,” thought they were taking His life, but He had said some time before, “No man taketh it from Me, but I lay it down of Myself” (John 10: 17, 18). He knew that His Father was merely using those “wicked hands” to accomplish His purposes of love and mercy toward mankind, to bring about “a great deliverance,” and “save much people alive.” The Jews thought evil against Him, but “God meant it unto good.”

So I believe it is always,—all things are used by God. as His servants, let the agencies that started them be what they may. He does not inaugurate the evil; but when that evil. is directed against His children, He makes it His “servant” to carry them a blessing. When we consider our relationship to Him this must be the case, for He is our Father. His care of us is more watchful and more tender than any human father could be. All things are in His hands and He controls each one. “I am -the Lord, and there is none else. I form the light, and create darkness: I make peace, and create evil: I the Lord, do all these things” (Isa. 45: 6, 7).

In Acts 16: 16-31, we have another case how the Lord used “wicked hands” against Paul and Silas, who were faithfully preaching the Gospel, and a prison and an earthquake to accomplish the conversion of the keeper of the prison. From these Scriptures it is perfectly plain that all things, Whether kings or nations, light or darkness, peace or: evil, cities or rivers, all are under, His control ‘and all must accomplish His will.

And this God is our Father. All must serve Him, whether they know Him or not. Can we conceive of a good father allowing his servants to injure his children? Do we know of any good parents who do- not make their servants serve their children? Certainly not. Then we could not imagine our God and Father doing less than our earthly parents. Our heavenly Father’s servants must surely serve us, and since all things are God’s -servants, all things are, therefore, our servants as well. “Therefore, let no man glory in men. For all things are yours; whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours; and ye are Christ’s; and Christ is God’s” (1 Cor. 3: 21-23).

Now the question is, How are we receiving God's servants? Do we look for the message they bring us? Many of our choicest gifts from our friends come to us by the hands of very rough looking messengers, or may be wrapped in coarse brown packages. Do we, because of this, despise and misuse the messengers and refuse to receive and open the packages? My neighbour, who treats me unkindly, or my friend or enemy, who wrongs me, has a message for me as well as the Christian friend who gives me a tract or reads to me. Perhaps the gift of patience, for which we have prayed, is held in the hand of that very disagreeable inmate of our household, or employer under whom we must labor. Let us see to it, then, that it is not said of us, as it is of the Israelites of old, when God sent them messengers,— "They despitefully used them, beat some, and stoned others" (Matt. 21: 34-36; 2 Chron. 36: 15, 16).

In the story of Job we have a very striking illustration of the truth we are considering. All sorts of misfortunes came upon him, originated by various agencies,—Sabeans, lightning, Chaldeans, a great wind, and finally Job himself was smitten with sore boils from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot. (Job 1st and 2nd chapters.) All were God's "servants," to accomplish His blessed purpose of maturing the fruits of meekness, patience, submission and trust in the heart of Job. And he received them all as God's "servants," for he took no notice in any case of the "second causes," but referred his trials right back to God. "The Lord gave," he said, "and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

"Give thanks always for all things unto God the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ" (Eph. 5:20).
"In everything give thanks; for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you" (1 Thes. 5: 18).

Christ in You, The Hope of Glory.

(Col. 1: 26, 27). (Convention Address.)

THE Apostle in these few verses in Colossians intimates that this mystery, which God hid from man in past ages and generations, is now made manifest to His saints. And St. Peter, writing to the saints, would have us be able to express, "a reason to every man that asketh you, of the hope that is within"—the faith and hope in God. We will be able to do this just as much as we bring ourselves into holiness, having as our standard and pattern the Lord Jesus, and then His faithful Apostles and disciples.

The hope of glory is of no value to any, unless "Christ be in you." If Christ is within us, we, indeed, have a hope of glory; and who is going to rob us of this hope if we are abounding in the Lord? If God be for us, who can be against us?

Shall tribulation separate us from the love of Christ? Shall distress, or persecution, or famine, or lack of apparel, or any other peril, even a sword—nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us; and there is no power able to take from us the hope of glory, of life eternal, of bringing men to the Redeemer, if we will obey His word; not fashioning ourselves according to the former lust, which we practised in ignorance, but as children of God putting away every desire that would conflict with the message God gives to us through His precious Word—living and written.

We all know that for life and light we must appeal in simple faith to Jesus—the Word of God. We are favored above the residue of mankind in being able to appreciate the "precious promises" we enjoy in His light. Surely we have, in part, been "translated into the kingdom of His dear Son from the power of darkness." But when we are known, as He is known, when we come into that fulness of joy, to be with Him and like Him, and an habitation of God in the ages to come to show the exceeding riches of His grace in His kindness toward us, through Christ Jesus, what hope abounds in us to show His honor and glory even now. How many of us can say with the Apostle, "For me to live is Christ?" No wonder his prayer for the saints is, "that God would grant to us, according to the riches of His glory, to be strengthened with might by His Spirit in the inner Man; that Christ may dwell in (not visit) your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love may be able to comprehend with all saints, what is the breadth, length, depth and height, and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye may be filled with all the fulness of God.”

To be firmly grounded and taken root in His Word necessitates a growth, otherwise the plant is stunted and eventually dies. The plant must be watered, tended, and trimmed in every respect. Has God made this provision for us? The Apostle -says He has done exceedingly abundantly above all we have asked, or even thought of, according to the power that worketh in us. Yes, we find God has, indeed, “supplied all our need, according to His riches in glory by Christ Jesus.”

In these later years of our pilgrimage to the Holy City, the Church has found itself at the division of two roads, alike in every respect, and perplexed as to which one to take.

We recall how “Christian” on his journey met these roads, and was in difficulty as to which to take. One came along and confessed to be journeying as they were, and would lead them thither. They followed, and the result was that the road led them into entanglements, they knew not what to do, and they lay crying, for it was impossible to free themselves. Can we discern these roads, and which one to press on? If we discern the leading of the Lord, and are content to recognise whom He sets in the Body, we will not be shaken, nor moved, nor tossed to and fro with every wind of doctrine. “The fruit of the Spirit (of Christ) is love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance.” “If we live in the Spirit—let us walk in the Spirit,”—children of the Day, which the Lord hath made, and • we shall rejoice and be glad in it (our hope of glory). “Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to His abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the :last ye. continue in the faith grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel, which ye have heard.” “Faithful is He that calleth you who also will do it.” “Wherein we greatly rejoice being born again, not of corruptible .-seed, but of incorruptible, by the Word of God,” . . “Whereby are given unto us exceeding, great and precious promises, that by these ye might be partakers ‘of the Divine Nature,” . . . wherefore, we receiving a kingdom, which cannot be moved “-Christ in you, the hope of glory,—”Let us grow in grace and knowledge,” . . . “that we may serve God acceptably (in the Beloved) with reverence and godly fear.” “And beside this giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge; to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness, and to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness, love. For if these things be in you and abound, they Will make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful, for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.”

What grace we possess, to be justified by faith in our Redeemer’s sacrifice, to have peace with God and to rejoice in the hope of His glory, which is Christ in you—the hope of glory. “Blessed is the people that know the joyful sound: they shall walk, O Lord, in the light of Thy countenance. In Thy name shall they rejoice all the day : and in Thy righteousness (Christ in you the hope of glory) shall they be exalted” (Psa. 89:15: 16).

NOTICE.

Being unable to procure further stocks of the original “Daily Heavenly Manna,” and having enquiries for copies from time to time, we are wondering whether it would be well to reprint a supply in Australia (should the way be open), and would like the help of the brethren in the matter.

The “Daily Manna” is, no doubt, of much help in every home where the truth is appreciated, and provided the demand is sufficient to warrant its being printed again, the work may be undertaken. As the enquiries for the “Manna” have been mainly for the pocket edition (without the birthday recording pages), an estimate has been prepared showing that these could be printed, nicely bound in cloth, and posted to any address for about 1/9 per copy, with a reduction for three, six or one dozen copies, etc., in proportion.

It is desirable to hear from all who are interested in the above as soon as convenient, and if each will kindly indicate how many copies they would take if the “Mannas” are printed, that will be a good help in deciding for the best.

And many a weary traveller,
Whose wounded heart may ache,
Needeth the cup of water
Given for Jesus’ sake.

Our Bad, Goodness.

There are two famous prayers, apparently contradictory but really complementary, which I should like to put side by side that we may learn their lesson.

The first is Augustine’s anguished cry, “Domine, libera me—a homine malo—a me ipso,” which may be freely translated, “Lord, save me from that evil man—myself.” The second is the well-known prayer of an early Wesleyan preacher, James Spence, “Lord, save me from that good man, James Spence,” I confess that I do not know which of the two is the greater or betrays the deeper insight. They are both typically Christian prayers, perhaps at different poles of life and thought: but there are moments in our experience when each must be offered.

Every one can understand Augustine’s prayer. He had passed through the scorching fires of passion, and he was thinking of the downward pull of the lower desires. He knew the evil in himself, the evil that was himself ! For he knew that we men and women are our own worst enemies. the things that hurt us are not outside us; the men that wound us are not other men: we are despoiled by the “evil man” within us. God’s best salvation is to save us from ourselves—from the lower dream, the pet passion, the fond indulgence.

But James Spence saw as deeply. He knew that a true Christian must be rescued not only from his sins but also from his virtues—the virtues on which he prides himself, the virtues on which he is too apt to rely. There is no greater moment of spiritual danger for a Christian than when he admires himself, or is complacent about his fine attainments. That good man, James Spence, is actually James Spence’s worst enemy, especially when he is conscious how very good James Spence is as compared with other men. Thus I think that the Wesleyan’s prayer is the more discriminating of the two., “Save me from that good

Two men went up into the Temple to pray. One of them, a Publican, cried out in abandoned shame, “Lord, be merciful to me, a sinner.” This is the parallel of Augustine’s cry, “Save me from the evil that is in me—save me from that evil man, myself.” The other, a Pharisee, was a good man, undoubtedly a good man. He attended church, lived correctly, performed all his daily duties to his neighbour and his God, and was unquestionably the best kind of citizen of his own day. But alas, he knew it—and even told Almighty God all about it in his confessions! I think we must admit his virtues: every word he said was strictly true. It is quite nonsense to say he was a hypocrite. He was an ornament of that good class of men, the Puritans of their time, the Pharisees, But this should have been his prayer, “Lord, save me from that good man, James Spence,”

Our Lord never wearied of showing that a good man’s main danger lay in self-satisfaction,-which is a milder or disguised form of pride. I imagine that in our human weakness no honest man can be wholly unaware of his own virtues and attainments. We know that we don’t drink, or misbehave, or shirk our duties, or dodge the income tax. A man cannot help knowing his virtues as well as his faults and sins. But the finest Christian prays to be saved both from his virtues and his sins. Our deadliest sin is self-satisfaction and pride, as Jesus showed in His parable: it kills the very virtue it exults in. Let us do anything at all with our hands except pat ourselves on the back. “Lord, save me from that good man, James Spence.”--(Extract from “Christian World,” by Dr. J. Black).

PALESTINE.

Shortage of Labour.

Delegation’s Impressions.

London, June 12.—Mr. B. Janner, M.P., who has returned from Palestine with a small Parliamentary delegation, said that there was no unemployment in Palestine. Her present difficulty was lack of men for building. Tel Aviv was the wonder city of the Near East. The development of orange growing and the new enterprise to recover potash and bromide from the Black Sea were suffering from a shortage of labour.

Mr. W. F. Strickland, M.P., said that there was an enormous market for all kinds of British goods in Palestine.

“Lo, I Am With Thee.”

The “Lord of the harvest” be near thee,
To comfort and strengthen, and aid;
His “presence” be with thee to cheer thee,
In sickness and sorrow and shade!
May He lead thee to heights of ambition:
To service for great and for small;
The “fire” of the Christ-like within thee,
Consuming the sacrifice all.

Come Out of Her, My People.

“Come out of her, My people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues”
(Rev. 18:4.)

THE revelation of our Lord to St. John is a Book of signs, in which the things stated symbolise the things meant.

To illustrate: - In this Book a woman is used to represent a Church—a pure woman a pure Church, a false woman an apostate Church. In Rev. 17: 1-6 a picture is given of a false woman, disloyal to her engagement, and, therefore, no longer worthy to be the Bride of Messiah. This unfaithful woman is branded “Babylon.” We read that she sat upon a beast, a symbolic statement of her control of the power at Rome.

In her hand this woman held a golden cup full of abominations, and thus symbolically she is represented as making all nations drunk with the wine of false doctrine. The cup suggests that the unfaithful Church, symbolised by this woman, had once been the receptacle of Divine Truth—“Babylon hath been a golden cup in the Lord’s hands.” (Jer.

51: 7.) In Revelation 17: 5 she is called “The Mother of Harlots”—a term suggesting a mother church, and daughter churches which are said to closely resemble the mother. As the mother was called “Babylon,” the daughters—so like their mother—bear also the family name.

Babylon—Mother and Daughters.

All about us we see the fulfilment of this prophecy. We see that the daughter systems have proceeded out of the mother system; that they are all developed from her. Some years ago, a very prominent Presbyterian minister said, “Wince as you will, you must admit that this (the Catholic Church) is the Mother Church. She possesses an unbroken history extending back to the times of the Apostles. For every fragment of religious truth which we prize, we are indebted to her as the depository. If she has no claim to being the true Church, then are we bastards and not sons.”

A fair examination of the denominations shows that they are more or less in sympathy with the mother system. Revelation 18 traces the history of the Apostate Church and foretells that Babylon—both Papal and Protestant systems—will fall. But the Lord has a true Church, to which He says, “Come out of her, My People!” In other words, the saints of God are scattered throughout the denominations. But now, in the closing of the Age, God sends forth the Message that His people shall no longer remain in the denominations; for the time is coming when the doom of Babylon will be upon her and she will fall (Isa. 13: 1-22).

Prophecy a Graphic Picture of History.

When we examine the Scriptures with the purpose of understanding prophecy, we find that during the Jewish Age, God made various types and pictures. The Jews themselves were typical. The Scriptures also show that there are two Israels, one of which is to be as the “stars of heaven” and the other as the “sand of the seashore.” (Gen. 22: 17; Isa. 8:14; 1 Cor. 18; Gal. 6:16.) Natural Israel was used of God to make types of the spiritual things—the “better things.” Their Jubilee years were types of the antitypical Jubilee of better times; their Levitical priesthood was a type of the Priesthood in glory, etc.

During the great Babylonian captivity the Jews were compelled to live in Babylon, to be a part of her, to support her, although their bondage was not severe. So to-day God’s people are required to stay in Mystical Babylon, be a part and parcel of Babylon; to support some of her wards and denominations. Therefore, it becomes a difficult matter to flee out of Babylon. But we find in the Scriptures graphic pictures of what is coming upon Mystic Babylon, and those who would escape must flee. As Cyrus, a type of Christ, overthrew Babylon, so a part of the work of the Second Advent will be the overthrow of antitypical Babylon (Jer. 51:6; Rev. 18:21).

Originally “Babylon” signified “Gate of God.” But the word came subsequently to have the meaning of confusion, mixture; and in this sense it is used in the Revelation. Babylon is a symbol of confusion. God’s people in Babylon are dishonoured; they are held in restraint. Now, through the prophecy we hear the command, “Come out of her, My people!” This call applies not only to those in Babylon the Great, but to those in other denominations—mother and daughters. “Come out of her, My people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues.” (Rev. 18:4.) Be not of those who cannot see the errors of Babylon and who, consequently, are not of the called ones.

The object of the call to come out is not for people merely to withdraw from a nominal Church ; but whenever any true Christian comes to see the error in which he has been held, and which Babylon has taught, he will see that he will misrepresent not only himself and the denomination to which he belongs, but also the Heavenly Father and the Word of God, if he remains connected with what he sees to be error. As he realises his position, the voice of the Lord through His Word tells him that he must stand for truth and righteousness.

No one is called out of Babylon until he sees her true condition. So then, never urge anyone to come out of Babylon; for if they have “ears to hear,” God’s voice tells them plainly to take this step, and gives the reason why they should do so. This Book of Revelation shows us by symbols that dire trouble is coming upon Babylon. The nominal Church claims that Christ’s Kingdom was set up hundreds of years ago. Consequently, they are not looking for Christ to come to establish His Kingdom, for they think that He set up His Kingdom at the time of His First Advent.

“Gather My Saints Together Unto Me.”

The expression, "Come out of her," signifies that the Lord's people are to separate from all things which are in conflict with the Divine Word. We are to come out of the errors and systems of error which are contrary to the Word of God. But we are not to organise another denomination, for the original call was to membership in the Body of Christ.

"Come out of her, My people," is a call to associate with Christ, with Messiah. This call is given by the Lord through the Prophet when He says, "Gather My saints together unto Me; those that have made a Covenant with Me by sacrifice." (Psa. 50:5.) They were to be gathered, not to the Roman or other systems, but to the Lord, to become one with Him. Therefore, they could not be gathered to all these different denominations, nor to any one of them. Those who hear the call should come out of Babylon and take their stand with the Lord. They are no longer to be mis-representatives of God and of themselves.

Those who see these things and have sufficient courage will come out. Those who see these things and lack the courage to come out are more responsible than are the majority of people who are in Babylon, but who do not see. If those who see do not have sufficient courage to obey the Lord, they will surely receive of her plagues by remaining in, and will probably have a large share in the punishments of the day of vengeance.

Many Becoming Irreligious.

Many people who have been identified with the different denominations are not coming into the Truth, but are becoming irreligious. They are by no means bad people; and they feel convinced that there has been a great error connected with Christianity. They repudiate much that Babylon does and says. Babylon claims that she has civilised the world; but she forgets that civilisation existed before Christianity began. She forgets that Jews are just as civilised as Christians; and that Mohammedans are more temperate than many so-called Christians. By no means do we wish to say anything against whatever good people have received from her. If they get a still further blessing, they will probably find that while the blessing which they previously had was better than message from heathendom, yet Babylon's best is far inferior to the Truth, the Light.

The Lord's people are permitted to enjoy wonderful things! By the grace of God, we are privileged to see the meaning of things that were once mysterious, not only to us, but to our parents. While some in Babylon are going into infidelity, some out of Babylon are becoming stronger spiritually, entering by hope "into that which is within the veil." If Christ is our Forerunner, we shall enter there with Him. To do so will mean to become partakers of The Messiah, by becoming the Bride of Messiah, as symbolically represented. The true Church is to become associated with Christ in His Kingdom. Then will come the promised blessings to "all the families of the earth."

As we perceive the consistency of the Divine Plan of the Ages, our hearts are full of thanksgiving to God. We see that the New Dispensation will be ushered in with "a Time of Trouble such as never was"; and that this Time of Trouble located, among other ways, by that prophecy which tells that "Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased"; that there will be a time of trouble; but that "the wise shall understand." From what source do the wise receive their instruction? They will understand according to the wisdom from on high--in humility accepting the Divine Word and being blessed in so doing (Dan. 12:4, so).

Some Thoughts on the British-Israel Theory.

INTEREST in the above mentioned theory being definitely manifest from time to time the opportunity is taken of presenting the following thoughts from an unknown writer, which are considered to be very appropriate on the subject.

(1) —British Israelism is Historically Impossible and a Myth.

“No migration of a vast horde has ever occurred without carrying with it language, customs, physiognomy ; synagogues and circumcision (for example) mark to-day every city to which the Jew has wandered ; yet British Israelism supposes that two_ or three million Israelites poured into these islands, and somehow dropped everything— language, physiognomy, records, customs, even their names, their very memory; so that for two thousand years no one in the world even suspected this stupendous fact. The entire lack of evidence simply means that the event alleged never occurred. That a race which once wrote from right to left should (without government compulsion, which would have been impossible) silently, unanimously, with no conceivable motive, and leaving not a single trace of the process behind—that an entire race should thus revolutionise its penmanship by now writing from left to right, is one of the most extraordinary phantasies that can ever have entered the mind of man. Moreover, ten ‘tribes’ which inter-mix and inter-marry with countless other ‘tribes’ over a vast area of two continents for two or three thousand years, to such a degree as to lose their memory, their language, and their physiognomy— whatever they are after twenty-six centuries, they are not the ‘ten tribes.’ The Jew has gone through exactly such a scattering (without inter-marrying), and yet has preserved practically everything.

(2) —British Israelism is Irreconcilable with Explicit Scriptures.

“When Amos was sent to announce to the ten tribes their final doom, Jehovah said : ‘I will destroy (the sinful kingdom) from off the face of the earth, and I will sift the house of Israel among all nations like as corn is sifted in a sieve’ (Amos 9: 8). Therefore, no individual nation, on national territory of its own, can be Israel. So also Moses, speaking to the undivided nation, announced that, on the breaking of the Law, they should become few in number and flee before their enemies (Deut. 28: 62) ; the huge numbers of . the Anglo-Saxon race, and its enormous military prowess, therefore, at once disprove its identity with Israel. Again, until Israel shall be reunited to David risen from the dead, Hosea declares (Hosea 3:4), she remains without king, without prince, without sacrifice: Britain’s thousand years of royalty exclude her finally from Israel. These are but samples of numerous Scriptures decisively antagonistic.

(3) —British Israelism is an Unconscious Betrayal of the Gospel.

“All men to-day, whether Jews or Gentiles, are either believers or unbelievers ; if unbelievers, they are under the Curse; yet 150,000,000 of mankind—for America they say is ‘Ephraim’ —British Israel-ism declares to be as richly blessed of God as the Jews will be in the coming kingdom of Christ, Though uncircumcised, and, therefore (according to Jehovah Himself), self-excommunicated from the Covenant (Gen. 17: t), a hundred and fifty millions of unregenerate souls drifting steadily further from God, and ripening for apostasy, are -distinguished by God’s signal favour, because under the Covenant. ‘Israel,’ says ‘British Israel Truth,’ has been re-covenanted by being baptised into the one Catholic and Apostolic Church’; and now. ‘the Gospel of salvation must be preached by His now instituted agent, the House of Israel.’ That a nation can be baptised into the Church, still remaining a nation, with a destiny of imperial rule over all other nations, while simultaneously evangelising them as God’s sole embassy of the Gospel, is not only a conception profoundly un-Christian, but a direct negation of what the holy Spirit says the Church is: ‘where there cannot be Greek and Jew, circumcision and uncircumcision, barbarian, Scythian, bondman, freeman’ (Col. 3: 11).

(4) —British Israelism is a Profound Overthrow of Dispensational Truth.

“Anglo-Saxons, even if they be Israelites, are either saints or sinner ; if saints, then they. are Israelites no longer, but belong to the ‘holy nation,’ the Church, in which there is neither Jew nor Greek; if sinners, then they are doubly under broken law—both the Law of Eden and the Law of Sinai—and, therefore, doubly cursed. Nationalism—all favoured-nation claims before Jehovah—within the Church, and under grace, is a complete subversion of Church truth ; for it re-erects the barriers of the flesh which the Cross has thrown down ; it makes national prosperity and worldly greatness, instead of righteousness and truth, the hall-marks of God’s spiritual favour—an error negated even by the Law itself ; it ignores, and so implicitly denies, the individual regeneration and sanctity without which no man shall see the Lord and it concentrates the blessing of God on the British Empire becoming the mistress of the world. No spiritual truth is more radical, more elementary, than that ‘the flesh profiteth nothing’ (John 6: 63) ; and, therefore, no error could be more radical, more fundamental, than to attribute to blood, not grace, to the flesh, not the spirit, any standing whatsoever before God.

(5) —British Israelism is, Fundamentally, an Abandonment of Grace for Law.

“National blessing, it is true, still follows national obedience ; but to found that blessing, not on obedience but on blood, is something the Law itself never did, and is profoundly hostile to grace. Even if the claim be true, and proved up to the hilt, it founders on a fact swift and deadly as a submarine torpedo. Paul, himself a full-blooded Hebrew of the tribe of Benjamin, and out-soaring all possible rivals in purity of descent and Covenant privilege, gathering in one wide sweep the flesh in all its glory, sums it all up as dung (Phil. 3: 8) ; so that the very fleshliness which is the glory of the BritishIsraelite—birth, covenant relationship, national privilege, identification with the Law—the holy Spirit pronounces, in this dispensation, obnoxious refuse. The more the claim is established, the clearer is the proof of the worthlessness of the claim.

(6) —British Israelism Presents to the World a Pitiful Travesty of the Kingdom of God.

“ ‘The Prince of Wales—Prince David, as he is known at home—is in the hundredth generation from Israel’s King David.’ For the surrounding nations to be told that the British Empire is the Divine Kingdom on earth, and the British throne the Throne of David, to which all nations must ultimately bow, is too utterly tragic, and (to the nations) ludicrous, if it were not also so politically dangerous. For thus war on Britain, by any nation, is war on God, and Chinese resistance to imposed opium is sacrilege.

(7) —British Israelism, by Denying that the Coming Wrath is Upon All Nations, Robs the World of its Most Urgent Warning.

“The Most High has said, again and again, that He will ‘punish the world, for their evil’ (Isa. 13: II) ; that the hour of trial will fall ‘upon all the world’ (Rev. 3: 10) ; that ‘the Lord hath indignation against all the nations’ (Isa. 34: 2). British Israelism, on the contrary, affirms that one empire covering a fourth of the globe—the enormous majority of whose citizens are Hindu idolaters —has been so ‘re-covenanted into Christ’ as to become ‘the ministering angel to all kingdoms of the earth’ ; that the Ten (British) Tribes, ‘now basking in the smile of God,’ Christ Himself has sought as lost sheep, and brought back to the fold’ ; that Anglo-Saxondom ‘now embodies in itself the Church of Christ’ ; that this is ‘the Church which shall be spiritually used of God to evangelise the world,’ and that shall ‘draw all Gentiles to itself’ ; so that ‘after His advent, Christ will occupy the throne of David, and ‘will reign over the “stone” kingdom, which has been gradually growing, and which will then smite the “image”—i.e., all Britain’s enemies—and fill the whole earth.’ The sharp cleavage of the two prophecies is fratricidal. One or the other is false. The summary of British Israelism’s own handbook is unavoidable : ‘If contrary to Scripture, it may become a formidable obstruction to the true faith.’

In Thee I Trust.

Only for Thee, Lord, would I live, while here below;
It is my great delight, Thy love to show;
Use me, then, first as Thou seest best
Not mine to choose, but mine to trust and rest.

Only to Thee would I resign my will, 'tis all
I have to give, and Lord, it seems so small
A thing to offer unto Thee,
Who didst lay down Thy life for me.

Only to Thee, my Lord, I'd come when trials press,
Assured that Thou alone canst comfort best;
My deepest griefs, I need not to Thee tell,
Thou understandest all, dear Lord, so well!

Tis only Thou canst send the peace which soothes my pain,
That bids my weeping cease, and sunshine follow rain,
My every fear remove and doubt dispel—
I rest on Thee, and know that all is well.

“DAILY HEAVENLY MANNA.”

The responses from our brethren respecting the proposal to reprint the “Daily Manna,” while being comparatively few, are appreciated, and should the way be open to undertake this work, it is possible that a supply will be produced.

However, we believe that many more of our readers would find the “Manna” very helpful for themselves and useful to pass on to others who would appreciate them, and it is really necessary to hear from everyone in the near future who is interested and would desire one or more copies.

Word is expected from our brethren overseas in the course of a few weeks, and then, if all orders are in, a decision can be made as seems to be for the best. As mentioned previously, the price would be about 1/9 per copy (for the pocket edition, cloth bound), with reduction for three or more copies in proportion.

Buy up the moments as they go,
Sow love, and taste its fruitage pure;
Sow peace, and reap its harvest bright;
Sow sunbeams on the rock and moor,
And find the harvest-home of light.

All Flesh Shall See the Salvation of our God.

And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith the Lord, I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh : and your sons and daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall have the visions which your ancients dreamed of: and on My servants and on My hand-maidens I will pour out in those days My spirit, and they shall proclaim (Acts 2: 16-18.)

DURING the Gospel Age, God's spirit has been granted only to those who have been accepted as sacrificers with Christ. Our text, however, declares that the time is coming when the world will receive a share of the blessing, which was assured by the death of the Redeemer. But, its time of favour will be "after those days"—after this Gospel Age has come to an end, and the Millennial Age shall have come. The work of the present Age is to invite such as have "ears to hear," the call to joint-heirship with the Lord in His coming Kingdom, which is for the purpose of blessing mankind as a whole. So many as accept this "high calling" are probationary members of the Kingdom of heaven, and are exhorted to be diligent in making their election sure.

All who are thus heavenly minded are promised a spiritual birth in the first resurrection to glory, honour and immortality. The period between the 1st and 2nd advents of Christ is set apart, for the selection of the little flock to whom it is the Father's good pleasure to give the Kingdom as joint heirs with His Son. Such are to be highly exalted in the spiritual phase of the Kingdom and participate with Messiah in His great work of the next Age. This great gift is still obtainable, for the time has not yet fully come when the door, which leads along the narrow way to life must close. Close it will directly the full number of the elect Church shall have been completed. Thank God that another door will then open for the world : the door of Restitution to human perfection and to everlasting life on the restored earth, grand beyond the power of description.

St. Paul speaks of this Gospel Age saying: "Now is the acceptable time." This age alone is the time when God is accepting co-sacrificers with Christ. The call of the Gospel Age is not to the world, but to believers the class whom the Apostle addressed when he said, "I beseech you brethren . . . that ye present your bodies living sacrifices, holy and acceptable" (Rom. 12: 1).

Those who do not take this step of full consecration receive the grace of God in vain, not being begotten of the holy spirit of God they have never been in the position to win the prize of the high or heavenly calling. It is in reference to this "high calling" that our Lord said "Sit down first and count the cost" (Luke 14: 28.) After entering the "narrow way" the words of Heb. to: 38 apply : "If any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him."

It must be clearly understood that after having covenanted to sacrifice, a "drawing back" would mean a departure from God that places us beyond hope of recovery. All who undertake to be "dead with Christ" in order that they may live with Him, being the servants and hand-maidens on whom the Lord's spirit has been poured out "in these days" are being dealt with in advance of the world for a grand and glorious purpose. The Apostle speaking of these says : "It is impossible for those who were once enlightened and tasted of the heavenly gift and made partakers of the holy Spirit, if they shall fall away to renew them again to repentance, seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh and put Him to an open shame."

Our text, however, distinguishes between God's dealings with the Church and the world, and shows that while the Church's Pentecost pertains to the present dispensation, that of the world belongs to the incoming Age.

The testimony to the Church, and the high calling, have been open during this Gospel Age. The testimony to the world and the blessings under that testimony will be during the- Millennial Age, The death of Jesus is, “the propitiation for our sins and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world” (1 John 2:2). As the Apostle Paul declares: “There shall be a resurrection both of the just and the unjust” (Acts 24:15). That will be the time for the precious merit of Jesus’ sacrifice to be made known and to bring the blessed results of restitution to “whomsoever will.”

The spirit is now calling the Bride, and in due time “The Spirit and the Bride will say come.” It is then that God’s holy Spirit,—holy power,—will, through the Christ (Head and Body), be poured out upon all flesh—humanity. Messiah will inaugurate the new dispensation by sealing with Israel the New Covenant in His blood ; as declared by the Lord through the Apostle, “This is my covenant with them when I shall take away their sins” (Rom. 11:27.) But this outpouring of the Spirit is not only for Israel. It will include every nation desirous of coming into accord with God by becoming children of the promise by faith. And all rejectors of God’s grace having been destroyed in the second death, the world of mankind will constitute the promised seed of Abraham, whose number shall be as the sands of the seashore, even as the spirit-begotten ones of this Gospel Age are in number compared to the stars of heaven. The Prophets, St. - Peter declares, all spoke of these “times of restitution,” and it will be then that the Lord will pour out His Spirit upon all flesh and the people will then realise what the ancients had seen in vision and in dreams-- “the wilderness blossoming as the rose,” “fountains in the desert,” “the knowledge of the Lord filling the whole earth,” and none needing to say to His neighbour, “Know thou the Lord, for all shall know Him from the least to the greatest.

We have seen that the work of bringing back the fallen race into harmony with God, is divided into two parts, (1) the Church Class, (2) so many as will, during the thousand year reign of Christ, The basis of harmony is not that God condones Sin, but that the sinners are to put away sin and heartily accept the Divine standard of righteousness,

Not one iota of the divine law will be modified ; sin will not be excused and counted as righteousness. The world of mankind will be in the hands of Christ for reformation and, as a part of the means for bringing the world back into harmony with God, the influence of Satan (which is now upon the world), will be removed (2 Cor. 4:4; Rev. 20: 2.) Thereafter, instead of the world being under the spirit of deception it shall be under the spirit of truth.

Instead of outside influences being a pressure upon the hearts of men to fill them with anger and strife, the spirit of error will be restrained, while the spirit of goodness, mercy and love will be developed. Thus, through Christ, the holy Spirit will be poured out, giving the world enlightenment and strength to overcome their inherited tendencies and leading the willing and obedient back to the perfection that was lost through Adam.

While these prospective blessings for the world are glorious, they, nevertheless, offer no comfort to the wilfully wicked. The spirit will be poured out for all, but it will be necessary for those who profit thereby to avail themselves of its privileges, just as it is necessary for those who come under the influences of the holy Spirit during the Gospel Age to “eat the truth” that they may have the spirit of the truth. When Christ stands forth to bless the world it will come to pass that those who will not obey what they hear shall be destroyed from among the people (Acts 3:23).

“ ‘The arrangement or government of the next age Will be very different from the present order of things; for, whereas the prince of this age is Satan, the Prince of the Age to come will be Christ. Therefore, those who are disposed to come into harmony with the laws of Christ’s Kingdom will have every assistance, and will experience favour and blessing in proportion as they live in accordance with the spirit of truth.

The possession of the holy Spirit, during the Millennial Age, however, will not signify a begetting of the spirit to a spirit nature or lead to joint-heirship with Christ. That promise belongs only to the Gospel Age to the "servant and hand-maiden class," who, in consequence of the prevalence of evil, are obliged to suffer for Christ's sake and upon whom the spirit of glory and of God resteth M. Pet. 4: 14.) The blessings that Christ will give to the world are the blessings which He bought by the sacrifice of Himself. He gave Himself as the man Christ. Jesus, and not being a member of the sinful race, He was a corresponding price for the man Adam. So it was the life lost by Adam that was purchased by the world's Redeemer, and the things purchased are the things to be restored, an earthly life, and an earthly home, "the redemption of the purchased possession" (see Eph. I : 10-14).

Correspondence.

Dear Bro.,—

Loving greetings in our dear Redeemer's name. Time slips by and changes come quickly. It is sonic time now since I wrote, but you and the work have been in my mind and prayers, nevertheless.

Our dear Bro. Grubb has lost his wife in death, and is preaching a good sermon without words to those around him, in the way he is taking the blow with full assurance of faith and trust in Him who does all things well. How the truth helps us in respect of our dead. A loving God, yes, and One we can implicitly trust, when He tells us through His Word, that they, if Christians, are with their Lord, and if not, in a state of peaceful unconsciousness awaiting that time when "all in their graves shall come forth," at His Son's call, and receive every help to regain that which was lost.

One sorrows for those in distress, wondering if their dear ones are in heaven, purgatory or hell, because they know not God, and His infinite love. The current "P.P." is good, and its first article will suit our dear Brother's position. Now, dear Bro., God bless you and your work. With Christian love,

Your Bro. in Christ, —H. C. B.

South Australia, 23/7/34. Dear Bro.,

Greetings in our dear Redeemer's Name. Pleased to have your letter now sonic weeks ago, and it is good to hear of the interest of one here and there, and trust that you may ever realise the Lord's keeping power and blessing in all your endeavours to serve His truth and His people.

To me the truth is more precious to-day than ever; the heavenly hope seems brighter and I just want to lie ready for whatever the Lord may have in store for me in the days to come.

'Content whatever lot I see,
Since 'tis His hand that leadeth me."

This would express my heart's desire, but how we need to watch and pray, and seek heavenly wisdom and grace, that we lie not deceived by the old nature. It is only to the humble that God shows His favour, so we must guard well against the encroachments of the spirit of pride and vain glory, the spirit of Satan, and so common in the world.

The classes here continue to be very helpful; it is good to meet around the Word and try to get its meaning before us. We realise the Lord's presence and blessing according to His promise. A gent who came to our meetings had previously been meeting with the Christadelphians; he had been dissatisfied with their views and asked us to meet some of them and have a discussion on the Scriptures. For his sake we consented, and two brethren and myself met four of their adherents, and Mr. came along also. They were nice people, but we were surprised to find how little they understood. They seem to have no understanding of spiritual things whatever. They hold that Christ never lived before He was born of Mary. When He comes again He will occupy the literal throne of David. There is no personal Devil.

Of course, they twist and distort the Scriptures to fit their own ideas.

When we tried to show that our Lord gave His flesh for the life of the world, and was raised a spiritual being, they considered this a denial of the resurrection. They do not understand the breadth of the promise to Abraham —the blessing of all the families of the earth. When the Lord said in Ezekiel 16, that Sodom and her daughters would return to their former estate, He was not referring to people but to land. Imagine it! To what lengths some will go in twisting Scripture to suit the ideas they have fixed in their minds. Our friend, Mr. , was somewhat disappointed, because he thought it would be a discussion to try to see what the Bible did say; but, as he himself said, he could see that the Christadelphian folks came with the idea of pressing their own opinions upon us. Just as oil cannot mix with water, so their views cannot be mixed with ours. The natural man cannot perceive the things of the spirit. Some day their eyes will be opened, and they will be ashamed of their narrow views. We hope Mr. will be helped; he seemed to see the truth fairly clearly.

I called on Mrs. , whom you mentioned as having been on the "P.P." list. She seems thoroughly deluded by the Rutherford delusion. It is all wonderful to her; she upholds Mr. Rutherford; the churches deserve all he gives them, etc.; so I could not do anything but express disapproval of their doings, and suggest that our attitude should be one of helpfulness, rather than of destruction.

Well, now I must close; our love to you and to all the dear friends. Your Brother in Christ, by His grace.

—R. J. M.

Dear Bro.,—

I would just like to mention here how I enjoyed the study and reading of those two Convention addresses in the last "Peoples Paper," especially the one, "All things are Thy servants."

You will be pleased to know that I am still trusting in our Heavenly Father, and His dear Son, from whom cometh every perfect gift, and is good to all.

I pray God's richest blessings upon all you friends carrying on the Berean Bible work of the Lord. Your Bro., by the grace of God,

—A. E. E.

Dear Brothers and Sisters,

Thank you for your very nice letter, also for pamphlets and "Peoples Paper," which I enjoyed reading very much.

I think the address on "All things are Thy servants," is beautiful; what a different outlook one gets from such reading.

Would you please forward me the little books,—"Death,. Hell and Spiritism," and "Where are the Dead?"—for which I enclose 6d.

Wishing your Institute every success, and may its message reach many hearts.

The Lord bless thee and keep thee always, is the wish of your sincere reader.

—R. H.

Christ's Resurrection.

Yet He revealed Himself to them, according to the Records, not more than eleven times in all --and some of these instances are probably duplications. His interviews with the disciples lasted only a few minutes each, except on the walk to Emmaus. These manifestations were attended by circumstances and conditions which spoke of a great change which had occurred to Him. Evidently He was no longer the same being, although He had the same loving interest in them as before. He was still their Lord and Master, the same Jesus, though no longer Jesus in the flesh. He wits now "the Lord, that Spirit," "a quickening Spirit."

There is no Scriptural statement to the effect that Jesus arose in the flesh. We have noted the Scriptures very carefully, and find none of them to say that Jesus arose in the flesh. On the contrary, we find, as the Apostle declares, "Now the Lord is that Spirit." (2 Corinthians 3: 17). St. Paul_ in telling us how he saw the Lord Jesus, says that he saw the Lord, not in the flesh, but shining "above the brightness of the sun" "at noon-day" (Acts 26: 13-15).

The Apostle tells us that the Church is to be a spirit body : "It is sown in corruption; it is raised incorruption: it is sown in dishonour; it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness; it is raised in power: it is sown a natural body ; it is raised a spiritual body." (I Corinthians 15: 42-44.) He • tells us that our experiences in the resurrection must be similar to those of our Lord. In our Lord's case there was a sowing in dishonour and raising in glory ; a sowing an animal body and a raising a spirit body. St. Peter calls attention to this fact when he says, "Christ . . . being put to death indeed in flesh, but made alive in spirit" (T Peter 3:]8.) Rotherham.

The question then arises, "How could the Lord be raised a spirit body?" We can merely give you the Word of the Lord for it. He was raised so. The new nature began when our Lord was begotten of the holy Spirit at the time of His baptism, and was completed when he was perfected as a spirit being at His Resurrection.

The various Scriptures which are cited about Jesus' appearance in bodies of flesh do not prove that Jesus had a body of flesh; for angels have appeared among mankind in fleshly bodies. And when Jesus rose from the dead, He appeared, or materialised, in the same way that He had appeared to Abraham in olden times. (Genesis 18:1, 2; IS:4, 5.) One of His manifestations after His resurrection was when He took a walk with two of His disciples to Emmaus and sat down with them to supper. When He broke bread, He became known to them and vanished out of their sight ! (Luke 24:30, 31).

A Materialised Body.

In the case when He appeared to His disciples, it is stated that He came into the room where they were, “when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews.” We read further along, that eight days later He again appeared in the same room, in the same manner, “the doors being shut.” (John 20: 19, 26.) These things were evidently to show the disciples that He was no longer a flesh being, but a spirit being. During the forty days after His resurrection He appeared, probably, not more than three hours in all. He remained with them to establish their faith, so that they might be able to receive the holy Spirit at the proper time.

-In answer to a question about Philip’s vanishing from the sight of the eunuch, and being found at Azotus, we reply that God was able to take him away. But there was nothing said about his being made a spirit being. Philip will, no doubt, in due time share with the Lord the change of nature in the First Resurrection—“in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye”; for “Flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God” (1 Corinthians 15:52, 50).

When Jesus appeared in Jerusalem in the midst of His disciples and they were affrighted, He said. “Behold My hands and My feet, that it is I Myself : handle Me and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see Me have.” (Luke 24: 39). He was there impressing upon them that they were not SEEING a spirit being, a spirit body. They saw a materialised body. The Lord was a Spirit all the time, however, and the flesh and bones were merely agents of appearance. So our Lord appeared in flesh and bones, and He also appeared in clothing.

Body and Clothing Created for the Occasion.

Where did the flesh and bones come from? The same place that the clothing came from. The human body of flesh and bones, etc., and its clothing, which appeared suddenly while the doors were shut, did not go out of the door, but simply disappeared, or dissolved, into the same elements from which He had created them a few moments before.

“He vanished (Greek, ginomai aphantos, became non-manifest, i.e., invisible. Strong’s Exhaustive Concordance.) out of their sight” (Luke 24: 31), and was no longer seen of them when the flesh and bones and clothing in which He had manifested Himself were dissolved, though doubtless He was still with them—invisibly present; so also much of the time during those forty days.

The power manifested by our Lord to create and dissolve the clothing in which He appeared, was just as superhuman as the creating and dissolving of His assumed human body; and the body was no more His glorious spirit body than were the clothes He wore. It will be remembered that the seamless robe and other clothing which our Redeemer wore before His crucifixion had been divided among the Roman soldiers, and that the grave clothes were left folded away in the sepulcher (John 19:23, 24, 40; 20: 5-7), so that the clothing in which He appeared on the different occasions mentioned must have been specially created.

Our thought is that our Lord was perfect in the flesh when He was a man, and that He gave Himself an Offering, as a Ransom-price for Adam. “We see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor.” “A body hast Thou prepared Me.” (Hebrews 2: 9; to: 5.) That earthly, human body of flesh suffered death ; and God would not again make Him flesh, but He raised our Lord from the dead a New Creature of the Divine nature. After His resurrection our Lord said to His Apostles, "All power is given unto Me in Heaven and in earth" (Matthew 28: 18).

All this indicates to us the great change that came to our Lord at the time of His resurrection. If He is now merely a man, He is still "lower than the angels." And to think of our Lord as a man and lower than the angels is contrary to the Lord's Word that He is exalted far above angels to the Divine nature. "And being found in fashion as a man, He humbled Himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore* God also hath highly exalted Him, and given Him a name which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in Heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father" (Philippians 2: 8-11).

"Many shall run to and fro; and knowledge shall increase."

THE earnest exhortations of the faithful apostle to the Gentiles were most clearly illustrated in his noble course of life. He shunned no danger, shrank from no labor or reproach, and bravely and cheerfully endured hardness, and suffered the loss of all things temporal that he might win Christ and be approved of Him. As we look upon such a course and consider the fortitude and the strength of character necessary so to run, we may well conclude that, except we be similarly supplied with the help of Divine grace, we shall not be able to persevere to the end. St. Paul sped along in that race not in his own strength, but in the strength which God supplied, and the promise OF such aid is none the less ours as it was his.

The Divine grace is imparted to us through the exceeding great and precious promises of God, inspiring us with new and glorious hopes beyond the wreck and ruin of the present order of things. Permitting our minds to dwell upon these promises, we see in the now rapidly approaching dawn of the day of Christ 'a new heavens and a new earth' ; and by faith we may sit together with Him in the "heavenly places." By faith we see also the blessed privileges of that exalted station, and the Divinely appointed work in which the saints will be engaged together with Christ. A weary and groaning creation awaits this ministry of power.

In running in this race, a part of the conditions set down is the development of that loving and pitiful spirit of the Master, and the more we embrace this disposition the more will we be able to appreciate the privilege of being co-laborers together with Christ. If we are cold and selfish and untouched with 'the feelings of earth's infirmities, if the woes of our fellowmen do not awaken in us feelings of sympathy and a desire to help, we can have no real appreciation of the prize of our high calling in the great race in which we need one another's assistance.

When we realise fully our own failings and shortcomings, then only can we understand how to sympathise with the weaknesses of others and remember that many have hereditary causes, and, therefore, we are not to lay all shortcomings to their personal charge. We will be eager to clear their minds from the mists of ignorance and superstition, and the bias of prejudices, and to help all on to better ideas of life, its relationships and responsibilities. We will seek to gather out of their pathway as many as possible of the stumbling stones whereby so many are now falling headlong in their race-course. We will be ready to declare to them the everlasting gospel of salvation, and to open their deaf ears and their blind eyes. If such are our sympathies toward the world of sinners, which God so loved, then we are able to appreciate to some extent the privileges of our high calling, when, as joint-heirs with Christ in His Kingdom, we could put into actual execution all our benevolent desires for the uplifting and healing of a sin-sick world.

Any who have ever experienced the joy of converting one from the error of his ways, and of establishing his feet upon the rock of Christ, may have some idea of the joy that will attend the ministry of the saints when they are fully endued with Divine power ; for then they will not be hampered, but every effort put forth will be a success. But though inspired with such a hope of service for the whole world in God's appointed time and of blessed association with Christ in it, we must remember that we have yet to "strive" for the prize of our high calling; and not only so, but we must strive lawfully. We must run our race, not only with diligence, energy, patience and perseverance, but we must run according to the prescribed rules, as otherwise our labor will be in vain.

First of all we must enter into this course by the "strait gate" by a full consecration to the Lord, after exercising faith in the precious blood of Christ as our ransom price. If we do not enter by this door we are not counted in the race for the prize, no matter how zealously we run. This is the first rule for those who would so run as to obtain. The Scripture says, "Enter ye at the strait gate; because strait is the gate and, narrow is the way that leadeth to life, and few thereby that find it." Having so entered, the apostle now urges that we be filled with the spirit of Christ, that we may not be led by the desires -of the flesh a way from God and from the course which He has marked out. If we are filled with the spirit, with the same mind that was in Christ Jesus, we will act from the same motives ; it will be our meat and drink to do the Father's will.

Christ was so full of sympathy with humanity, and so thoroughly of one mind with the Father, that He could not do otherwise than devote His life to the good of others. In all His labors, He strictly observed the Divine plan. Though like the Father He loved the whole world, He did not go beyond Israel to bless the Gentiles with His ministry, because the appointed time for that work had not yet come. He observed God's times and seasons and methods. He never recklessly exposed His life until He recognised from the writings of the prophets that His hour had come to be delivered into the hands of His enemies. He taught His disciples not to go into the way of the Gentiles until the due time; and then they went forth. Likewise it is stated, He did not make long prayers on the street corners to be heard of men nor exhort the multitude with noisy harangue. As the prophet indicated, "He; did not lift up His voice in the streets nor cry, aloud." He chose God's methods, which are rational and wise, and which are effective in selecting out from among men the class which He desires to be heirs of the promised kingdom.

It is for those who would so run as to obtain the prize to mark these footprints of the Master and be filled more and more with His spirit. If so filled, we, like Him, will desire to be as free from the world and its enticements and have our time as free as possible for the Lord's service. To have the mind of Christ is, indeed, the one requirement of lawful striving, a mind which humbly and faithfully submits itself to the will of God as expressed in His great plan of the ages.

The Apostle says, "I, therefore, so run not as uncertainly ; so fight not as one that beateth the air." He had a definite knowledge as to what constitutes the prize: He was not uncertain about it, it was not a question with him as to its being one thing or another. He knew that the high calling in Christ Jesus is that we may be heirs with Him, if we suffer with Him.

Neither was the apostle uncertain as to the terms and conditions of the race. He knew that they were even unto death ; and that if he should seek to save his life he would lose it. Neither was he uncertain as to his own determination. He knew positively that he had entered the course. He was not of those who merely say, I hope to do so some time; he had made his covenant with the Lord,—of- sacrifice unto death. Nor was the apostle uncertain as to his opportunity to gain the prize. He knew that it remained with him to will and to do, in harmony with God's good pleasure. He knew that nothing impossible was required of him in this race, that the terms and conditions of the race include, "grace to help in every time of need;" and that this grace and help would come from the Lord. Hence, the apostle's expression, that there is no uncertainty from first to last for the runners in this racecourse. Thus it may be with all, under the guiding eye of the great Redeemer. We may each make our calling and election sure—"If ye do these things, ye shall never fall, for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" (2 Pet. 1:10, 11).

The apostle tells us that he kept his body under, lest having preached to others the good tidings, he himself should be a castaway. The body originally belonged to the natural man, the natural will. The new will cannot properly be served by the old body, because the new mind is perfect and the body imperfect. When the new mind, the mind of Christ, therefore takes into possession the mortal body, it has more or less difficulty. The mind is not suited to the body, nor the body to the mind. It is the work, therefore, of the new will to show its obedience to the Lord, its full loyalty to the Divine will. Not only are we all thus to brow-beat and mortify the body, but additionally we are 'to bring it into subjection. It is to be made to serve the new creature. The apostle says, "But if the spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ shall also quicken your mortal bodies by His spirit." The holy Spirit, which comes to us more and more as we feed upon the Lord, assists us to conform our lives to His will and 'also quicken our mortal bodies to the service of the truth. There are not two creatures, but just one, for we cannot be two creatures at once.

But the new creature has not its new body as yet. There is an outward man, which the world may think is the individual, but in proportion, as the outward man is brought into subjection and service, the new creature is growing stronger, until eventually, with the death of the human body, God will give the new creature a new body in the resurrection. Then the new creature will be satisfied when it shall be found in His likeness.

There is a tendency for the body to rise from its condition of reckoned deadness. Hence, the new mind needs to be continually on guard in the good fight of faith. These battlings of the new mind against the flesh are a good fight, in the sense that they are fightings against sin and weaknesses that belong to the fallen nature. The entire course of the new creature is the course of faith. It would be impossible for one to keep up this battle against the flesh and its propensities and desires, unless he exercises faith in the promises and in the Lord as His helper.

In Heb. 4: 1, the Apostle Paul says, "Let us fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into His rest, any of you should seem to come short of it." He had no thought of coming short himself, yet he knew how necessary it was to exercise this godly fear, and urged those to whom he was writing to make their calling and election sure. As we well know, it is a great help in overcoming the fallen nature to have rightly 'made a full enlistment of every power and talent of mind and body to the service of the Lord. How important it is, also, to realise that the service' is unto death and that there is no room even to consider any suggestion to withdraw and cease to fight the good fight of faith. We are to remember that it is not the flesh, the old creature, which has entered the school of Christ, and is under instruction and preparation for the kingdom, for flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom. —(To be Continued.)

A Lunatic World.

"It is not a pleasant thing to be living at the present time," Dr. Russell Maltby told a Liverpool audience the other day. If we read a record of the doings of the world, we should not credit it were it not that we are now living through it. It would read like the proceedings of a kind of lunatic asylum. There has never been such a state of affairs. All the experts have been beaten at their own trade. There is no statesman who knows the way out. "Don't let us throw stones at the statesmen to-day, who have difficulties such as no other statesmen ever had to face," added Dr. Maltby. "God is saying to the nations, 'You can have peace when you want it all together, but you cannot have it if you want it for yourselves.'"—"Christian World."

How Can We Doubt ?

No failure and no fear
Can baffle spring,

Nor quench the gladness
That the thrushes sing.

No heaviness of heart
Can dim the sight

Of wee green fingers
Stretching to the light.

Or dauntless courage
In the dark earth's beds,

From which triumphant
Snowdrops lift their heads.

God keeps His promise
To the smallest thing;

How can we doubt
In our immortal spring!

Some Thoughts on the Theory of Universal Reconciliation.

The following- thoughts, for which we are indebted to a Brother in New Zealand,. are presented at this time as being very helpful on the theory above mentioned.

“The crux of the whole question lies in the interpretation and understanding of two words in the New Testament, viz., ‘Ever’ and ‘All.’ The former we may pass, as the claim that ‘Ever’ does not mean finality, but age-lasting has long been admitted and so understood by the Christian Church ; but the latter ‘All’ lends itself to two distinct meanings. First, a complete total of everything in creation irrespective of conditions Second, a complete and finished work after cleansing and purging.

“Mr. A. E. Knoch, the translator of ‘The Concordant Version’ of the New Testament, claims that ‘All’ includes every created being, and once created, God will eventually, by various processes, bring each individual into harmony with Holiness.

“Does the Apostle Paul mean that? Let us consider one illustration, -Hebrews 6:4-8; ‘For those once enlightened and having tasted the heavenly gift, and become partakers of holy spirit, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers-of the coming age, and having fallen away, it is impossible to renew again to reformation, they having crucified, and are exposing to contempt the Son of God. For that land having imbibed the rain frequently falling on it and producing vegetation useful to those for whom also it is cultivated receives a blessing from God ; but that yielding thorns and thistles is disapproved, and near to a curse; the end of which is burning’ (Diag.).

“Paul there illustrates his point by ‘-’the figure of land receiving all the blessings of rain, etc., and • producing two results, i.e., ‘useful vegetation,’ also ‘thorns and thistles.’ The former receives a blessing from God; but the latter is disapproved, near to a curse, the end of which is burning. There is no thought of transforming, ‘thorns and thistles’ into :good vegetation. It may be argued that the text states ‘near’ but the meaning is distinctly that such a finality as ‘burning’ is possible.

“Again, in Hebrews 10:26-31, Paul clearly states (verses 26), ‘If we should voluntarily sin after having received the knowledge of the truth there is no longer a sacrifice left for sins.’ In verses 28 and 29, he compares the punishment of death under Moses’ law with the ‘sorer punishment.’ ‘Will he deserve having trampled on the Son of God and esteemed as a common thing the Blood of the Covenant by which he was sanctified, and insulted the spirit of favor.’ That ‘sorer punishment’ is ‘second death,’ not chastisement, as Mr. Knoch declares. ‘Capital punishment’ is the extreme of the law, consequently anything less could not be superior.

“Now I can understand how conditions in the creation may become such as described in Rom. 14: 11, because when the earth is cleansed of the ‘thorns and thistles’ God will have provided a kingdom in which these conditions will prevail. For example, is that not exactly how the perfect Church’ is to be formed? There is no doubt that when the ‘Body’ is complete it will be perfect. Yet in reaching that state, there will be loss. Our Lord pictures it as a ‘Vine.’ He says that in the development, branches will be ‘‘cut off entirely, others reduced by pruning to perfect the fruit, yet the Wine,” ‘The Christ,’ will be perfect, complete without these. If we apply the same principle to the Final Kingdom, in the development there apparently will also be a purging and destroying of those unfruitful thorns and thistles. God knows and ‘shall not the God of; all the earth do right ‘? To our present understanding of the Scriptures that is so, and we must be most careful and prayerful not to accept any ‘new light’ which we cannot prove from the Scriptures.

“On leaving Auckland, I sent home for a pamphlet I once received on ‘Universal Reconciliation,’ and reread it. Leaving, for the present, the points already mentioned, I will mention two or three conclusions Mr. Knoch has reached, which I consider are absolutely unscriptural. The pamphlet is entitled, 'What are the facts concerning Universal Reconciliation and Eternal Torment,' by A. E. Knoch. Published by Concordant Publishing Concern.. According to A. E. Knoch, the fundamental of 'Universal Reconciliation' lies in the non-possession of i.e., free-will, power of choice or decision.

"We have always believed that that was the basis of our Eternal salvation—viz., our God given power to accept or reject God's offer of Jesus Christ's salvation. We have believed that was the difference between man and the lower creatures, that, in that sense God made man in His image, and it has always appealed to us as the only way by which the Father could get His love responded to in a way which He could accept and enjoy, viz., 'A willing heart' (Exod. 35: 5).

"Now, while some seem to think that there are certain Scriptures which appear to give 'Universal Reconciliation' a basis of probability, and certain texts which lend colour to Mr. Knoch's belief, yet in absolute contradiction to these the Bible teems with statements that God has endowed man with a free will and power of choice. That, Mr. Knoch positively denies—after arguing that texts such as Rom. 11:32, Rom. 9:16-18, Eph. 1: 11, prove that 'man' is a mere pawn on a chess board, he concludes thus, under the heading 'Man's so-called 'Free Will.' —'Because he is ignorant of the forces which move him he imagines he is free to will as he pleases. A child's will can be altered by a bauble. A wise mentor knows how to change a man's environment so that he wants to do the mentor's will. God alone has power over the sources that contribute to form our wills, and He can easily turn man's will against Him or for Him. Free-will is a philosophical fable. Man is a creature not a creator.' Page 9.

"On page 10 he states 'Human Responsibility' and says, 'Because of His will, no creature has any jurisdiction over his own destiny, in order to be lost eternally and suffer endless torment. The word of the Lord to Jerusalem: 'And ye would not.' Mat. 23: 37, so often brought up to prove man's 'free-will,' clearly proves the opposite, for Jerusalem shall yet receive Him, and be saved. In Romans 11: 31 we are distinctly told why they were stubborn. It was 'that He may be merciful to them..' Again, page 1.0.—"The philosophical argument for man's free will evades God's plain declaration that God's favour 'is not of him who is willing but of God the merciful' (Rom. 9:16). It seeks scriptural support in the first chapter of Genesis, 'Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion (Gen. 1: 26), This likeness has to do with man's relation to the lower creation., not his wisdom, or his ;knowledge, his power or his will.'

"In these various passages quoted from the pamphlet, Mr. Knoch teaches that man is mere automaton, not drawn by God as Jesus said, but pushed. Indeed, the only result can • be the acceptance of 'Fatalism.' Man is then a creature forced to do evil, or forced to do right, so that God's purpose may be duly accomplished. To me there seems to 'be a much •deeper and grander meaning in God's- over-ruling providences and marvellous ways of working. He works all according to His will. His blessings are all gifts and graces, but he is calling for a willing obedience and love from hearts drawn to him, not forced to Him.

"In 2 Cor. 11; Paul warns, us very earnestly against deception, verse 3, 'but I am afraid lest, as the serpent deceived Eve by his craft, your minds may be corrupted from that simplicity and that pureness which is in the Anointed. For if he who is coming proclaims another Jesus whom we did not preach ; or you receive a different spirit which you did not receive; or other glad tidings which you did not embrace, you might well bear with it (or consider it).' And we must conserve that in its simplicity. Does there not appear to be a similarity between the doctrine of 'Universal Reconciliation,' and . that with which the serpent beguiled Eve? (Gen. 3:3, 4). 'God hath said, ye shall ,not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die. And the serpent said unto the woman, ye shall not -surely die.'

“There is no doubt that ‘Universal Reconciliation’ makes a strong appeal- to our hearts, and as a Brother said to me, ‘Can- our hearts be kinder or greater than God’s?’ That-is true—we cannot exceed our loving heavenly Father in His love, or mercy or justice; but our hearts and minds may not be able to appreciate’ the wilfulness and hopelessness of the mind that wilt deliberately spurn God’s goodness. In that matter, I hold, we cannot judge. God only can read the heart.

“Let me just mention two more peculiar conclusions Mr. Knoch has come to in following this doctrine.

“First (the Church, or body of Christ, only commenced with Paul). Our understanding is that it commenced with Jesus, and the disciples at Pentecost, where the eleven were baptised with the holy Spirit.--Yet Mr: Knoch’ teaches— page 12:=The Bible teaches that many of the saved will be on the earth and never go to heaven (Rev. 21:22). The New Jerusalem comes out of heaven and will be on earth. Peter and the twelve apostles will never go to heaven. Only Paul and those connected with his ministry have a celestial destiny.’ If that is so what did our Lord mean in John 14:

3,—‘I will come again, and receive you unto myself ; that where I am, there ye may be also.’ And the apostle in 1 John 3:2. Was John not included in the ‘we know that, when He shall appear, we shall be like Him ; for we shall see. Him as He is.’ “ “Second. (There are no unfallen holy angels in Heaven). On page 39, he says—‘The Son does not need to be reconciled. I know of no other exception.’ Unfallen angels are a figment of theology.’ His argument is, that if God is to reconcile all creation, then all creation must have fallen. I know of no scripture to that effect. (Jesus speaks of the. holy angels. There are clearly many angels who have kept faithful such as Gabriel.) Besides what about our Lord’s prayer? (Matt. 6:10). ‘Thy will be done in earth, as it is in Heaven.’ If there are no unfallen angels in Heaven, rather, if there are restored ones doing God’s will, then there must have been a previous salvation, and yet all salvation is through. Jesus, God’s Son. This doctrine seems to lead to confusion.

“I will conclude this attempt to explain my thoughts on ‘Universal Reconciliation’ by a quotation from a letter written to Mr. Knoch on this subject by our dearly beloved Bro. Russell. ‘It seems strange that there could be differences of opinion on matters so clearly stated in the Word of God. It must be that there is something wrong, something twisted, in some of our heads. To me it seems as plain as can be that the Bible declares that all the wicked will God destroy; again, that those who, during the’ Millennial age when brought to a knowledge of the truth, shall prove wilful sinners will be punished with everlasting destruction ; again, St. Peter’s statement, respecting the glorified Christ, Head and Body, and Millennial blessings. ‘Whosoever will. not obey that prophet will be destroyed. from among the people.’ Acts 3: 23, again, his statement, ‘they shall perish like unto brute beasts,’ It does seem strange that such plain statements can be made to signify the reverse to some minds! It does seem strange to me that any one understanding that the first death came upon all men through Adam, and that the second death is punishment for wilful personal sin, and that there is no redemption from the second death could think of all having everlasting life. I really cannot understand the mental processes by which they come to this conclusion. I confess that mine must be different.

“The Pastor further quotes Scriptures, which we have dealt with in this letter, so above is sufficient to give you his thought and opinion.

“Just one more remark in relation to ‘Free Will.’ If man has no was our Lord mistaken when he yielded His to His Father’s? (John 5: 30). seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which sent me.’ Was John wrong in admitting a ‘will of man’ and also ‘A will of the flesh,’ when he spoke of the second birth (john 1.: 13)? ‘Which were born, not of blood, not of the will of the flesh; nor of the will of man, but of God.’ Like Brother Russell, we feel, that the mental process required to transform these passages to mean ‘no will’ is beyond our weak powers. ‘Prove all things, hold fast that which is Good’,(1 Thess. 5:20).”

“The Plan of God—in Brief.”

A further supply of this fine little book is now on hand. Being a digest of “The Divine Plan of the Ages,” it will be found very useful to pass on the message of truth to those who have ears to hear. Posted to any address for 6d. per copy.

Regarding “Daily Manna.”

During the past month some further nice responses have been received from the brethren in Australia and overseas, and we trust to be able to announce very shortly that the work of printing is being undertaken, D.V.

As previously announced, the proposed “Daily Heavenly Manna” is to be cloth bound in the pocket edition, and the price for single copies will be about 1/9 posted. Further orders sent in right away will help in deciding what quantity may be printed.

Correspondence,

Queensland, 20th August, 1934,

Dear Bro.- I intended to write to you before this with regard to the printing of the "Daily Manna." Should the way open, if it is the Lord's will that you proceed with the printing, I will take one dozen. I would try and sell them here in the town at the cost price, when putting out tracts. I still have a little bundle of the "Voice" left, and when they are finished, I will send for more. I will know through the "People's Paper" if you should Print the "Manna," and will send the money then.

Well, dear Bro., I hope by the Lord's grace to do all I can in spreading His blessed and glorious truth, for the rest of my sojourn here. With Christian love; your fellow-servant by the Lord's grace. B.T.

Victoria.

The Secretary, Berean Bible Institute.

Dear Sir,-It was a most pleasant surprise yesterday to receive your kindly letter and the July issue of the "People's Paper." For these I thank you. I am only a newcomer to the Lord Jesus, who found me in my darkest hour of sin and trouble, and His Spirit has given me a most wonderful joy and light, and a desire to know Him and to serve Him.

I had not previously studied the Bible for some years, and then somewhat disinterestedly, but during the last five weeks (only) I have been "searching the Scriptures," and have found wonderful help and strength. Having surrendered! myself wholly to God,. I have faith in Him to fashion my soul as He will. A Christian brother has been of aid to me in this new life, and our last discussions centred largely 'around Christ's second coming, and seeing your coupon in the "Leader," I thought I might find more light on such Bible studies. In the pamphlets and the "People's Paper" which you have sent me, I have seen a means of a clear understanding of the teachings of God's Word.

I shall study the material you have sent me, and follow them with the Scriptural citations. I would be very grateful for any papers you can send me, that would assist me' in this new life which brings Christ very near to me.

I enclose the sum of 4/- to cover a year's subscription to the "People's Paper," and also some of your booklets, including, if possible, "Christ's Return," "Some of the Parables," and anything else that you would suggest.

Thank you for communicating with me. Wishing your Institute every measure of success in its work with the help of Christ Jesus. Yours faithfully, T.R.

Dear Sirs,—Receiving in my letter box your paper, namely, “The Voice,” and seeing that you would send copies of the following subjects while they last, kindly send me—”All About Hell,” “Where Are the Dead?” and “The Troubled World’s Hope.” Yours truly, V.A.

Victoria, 12th Aug., 1934.

Dear Bro.,—Greetings in our dear Redeemer’s name. As it is such a long time since I was last with you dear brethren, I thought I would write a little note, and let you know where I am. I had hoped to get into Class again before this, but as events turned out I was unable to do so. However, dear Bro., I am with you and the brethren each time in spirit, and pray always that God will richly bless each little one in the studies around His Word.

What a feast of beautiful spiritual things He provides for us from time to time; truly we are a privileged people, and it is a joy to be as to-day’s “Manna” text says, continually in that prayerful attitude of mind and heart, experiencing daily that cleansing from secret faults, and the spirit of God within us, keeping us from presumptuous, sins, letting Him control the words of our mouth, even the meditation of our hearts. (Psa. 19: 12-14).

I am about 90 miles out from Melbourne, and am camped in a tent by myself. It is very lonely, but affords me” great opportunities for prayer and study of the Word, which, I can assure you, dear Bro., I appreciate very much. It is good at times ‘to be alone with God, and He alone, is my sole Companion out here. As soon as convenient, I hope to get down for a week-end.

Will close now, with warmest Christian love to yourself and sister, and all the brethren. Your Bro. in Christ,

M.R.N.

Thy Will Be Done.

My Lord, Thy will not mine be done:
Whatever path Thy love shall choose for me,
Through desert sands, or if beside the sea,
Thy will be done!

Oh, may Thy will in me be done!
Should “harvest” labour be for me
Thy will, Or if I may but suffer and be still,—
Thy will be done!

My Father, let Thy will be done:
If sweet the cup Thou pourest for me to drink,
I’ll praise Thee; but, if bitter, I’ll not shrink,—
Thy will be done!

Forever may Thy will be done:
I would not choose, I leave it all with Thee,—
The pilgrimage, if short or long it be,
Thy will . be done!

Italy’s Achievement.

Italo Balbo, Governor of Tripolitania, has made his first report on the Italian North African colony since taking over his new duties recently, stated the Rome correspondent of the London “Morning Post.”

The report reveals that the Italian colonist, who formerly proved one of the best labourers when, as an emigrant, he landed on foreign soil, is now showing his quality of endurance in Africa, and on territory over which his own national flag is flying. The formerly arid sands of Tripoli, near the sea, comprise an area of about half a million acres, of which nearly one-third have already been brought under cultivation by the Italian colonists.

The latest statistics show that the concessions under cultivation already have more than a million forest trees, some 20,000,000 vines, 68,000 fruit trees, chiefly peaches, 58,000 mulberries for the cultivation of the silk worm, 2,200,000 almond trees, and nearly two million olive trees.

There are 2500 model farmhouses, more than 2000 artificial wells, fourteen electric power stations with a vast network of wire distributing the current all over the colony, and some 200,000 acres of land reclaimed for cultivation.— News Cutting.

[The above report gives some idea of the possibility of the earth “yielding her increase,” during the “times of restitution of all things.” Acts 3: 21. Surely, “the desert shall blossom as the rose.” Isa. 35.]

The serene, silent beauty of a holy life is the most Powerful influence in the world, next to the might of God. — Pascal.

Chronology and Bible Prophecy.

WHILE the development of the great Divine Plan of the Ages proceeds and the Bible shines brighter and brighter, and prophecy is fulfilled before our eyes, there are many who seem unable to appreciate the clearer light, because of being wedded to views which they have accepted from writings, the author of which they seem to think of as having been divinely inspired.

It would seem to be the Lord's purpose not to use infallible minds to interpret His Word, for His people are granted a measure of the holy spirit and this is to guide them into all truth, as it becomes due to be understood. The promise is that in these last days, "the days of the son of man," at the Second Advent, that servant who would be found faithful would receive the light upon truths clue and feast upon the good things provided by the present Lord and be used to dispense the same good things to others. However, we are all so fallible, all so prone to allow our zeal and earnestness to expect more at a given time than is warranted by the Word. Even our late Brother Russell, so rightly highly esteemed and loved by those who knew him, was no exception to this. His expectations respecting 1914 seemed very reasonable and most of the readers of his studies thought with him in most of those expectations, while they were still prospective.

It is much easier to look back and see where the mistake has been, than it was to find a fault at the time when every feature of prophecy he dealt with seemed so to corroborate the whole. What did happen at 1914-16 was that the "Times of the gentiles" ended. In Luke 21: 24, our Lord said—"Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the gentiles until the times of 'the gentiles be fulfilled.'" That surely indicated a definite period, for the punishment upon the Jews. Since then, the oppression of the Jews in Palestine has ceased, Jerusalem is no longer 'trodden down,' but is being built up and revived. In fact, the "fig tree" that had been cursed and withered away at the end of the Jewish Age is again "budding." "When his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh" (Matt. 24:32-34; Luke 21 ; 29-31).

The evidences of the revival in Palestine may be read from time to time in our daily papers, cities have sprung up and are prospering, and not only products of the land but manufactured goods are being exported. Wonderful developments are taking place, great undertakings entered upon, and colleges and other institutions are being built. During thousands of years the great wealth of the Dead Sea has lain there untouched, as though reserved to be discovered and developed at the right time. to provide the means 'of rejuvenating the land and gathering the ancient people of God back to the home of their fathers. Surely we have reached the time (the end of the. Gentile times) when we may sound forth -Isaiah's beautiful message, "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem and cry unto her that her warfare is accomplished, her iniquity is pardoned, for she hath received of the Lord's hand double (punishment adequate to her offences) for all her sins." How numerous and beautiful are the songs of Isaiah regarding this return of Divine favour upon Israel. (Isaiah 60; 61; 62; etc.):

Some may say, "How can the Gentile times be ended and the Lord's Kingdom not yet established on earth?" But the question then arises, where did we get the thought from that Christ's Millennial reign would begin immediately at the end of these times of punishment on Israel ? It does not seem to be so stated in the Scriptures. The great image of Gentile powers, in Daniel 2, evidently goes a little beyond the time when Israel's times of punishment end. The great image was complete from the head of gold to the clay and iron toes, but the destruction awaits the completion of the Church, the Body of Christ, "Thou rawest until a stone was cut out of the mountain without hands which smote the image upon his feet and brake them in pieces." There is no reason to think that as soon as Israel's seven times of punishment under Gentile rule would end, the Church should have been glorified and be in position to brake in pieces as a potter's vessel the corrupt rule of the nations.

It would seem clear then that the Gentile times were fulfilled in 1914-1916, but the “stone” is not yet ready to become the great and glorious kingdom of righteousness and peace. The fact that this prophecy of “Gentile Times” has reached its fulfilment, being a period of 2520 years, corroborates the date of 600 or 604 B.C. as the beginning of the times of punishment upon Israel.

B.C. 606 or 604 was the date of the subjugation of all that remained of Israel under King Jehoiakim by Nebuchadnezzar. There, 70 years captivity began, which ended in 536 B.C., the first year of Cyrus, who gave decree that the captives might return, and command to build the Temple (Ezra V: 2, 3). The 70 years desolation of the land began 1.9 years later, when Zedekiah was dethroned because he broke his vow of loyalty to the King of Babylon. That was in 587 B.C. That the 70 years desolation did not begin earlier may be seen from the fact that Jeremiah during Zedekiah’s reign was foretelling the event (Jer. 7: 34).

It might, apart from the passage in Daniel 9: 25, have seemed that immediately the 70 years desolation ended, the 70 Sabbaths, or 70 weeks, would begin to count, but the message to Daniel seems to be given specially to guard against such conclusion. Then, too, the accounts of Ezra, and particularly Nehemiah, appear to be supplied so that the time to begin to count the 70 weeks might be noted. It was to be “from the time of the going forth of the commandment to rebuild Jerusalem.” This command was given as recorded in Nehemiah 2; in the 20th year of Artaxerxes, which was 454 B.C.

“Those who claim that the first year of Cyrus was 454 B.C. cannot make it accord with the ending-,,,of the Gentile times and, therefore, labor to obliterate such a period and claim that the “7 times” in .Leviticus simply means 7 strokes more. Poor Israel has, however, suffered many more than 7 strokes. Besides, there is the mention of 7 times as a period in Daniel, which clearly refers to 2520 years, just as the 3-1 times in Revelation refers to 1260 years, or 42 months, or 31 years of days, equal 1260 days, a day standing for a year.

Some seem to think Chronology a vital matter to the Christian, but that does not appear to be the case. None of the time prophecies concerning and fulfilled in this “end of the age” are dependent upon Bible chronology. In fact it would seem that the Lord has kept the matter hidden, may be for the reason that there is strong evidence that at the end of 6000 years the great Sabbath of 1000 years—the 7th 1000 year day will begin. Christ is to reign during that time, also the Church is promised to reign with Him 1000 years, and Satan is to be restrained during that same time.

The fact that we have not yet reached 6000 years of human history of sin and death does not mean that we are not living “in the days of the Son of Man.” There are those who seem to have formed the opinion that Christ would. not be present until His Millennial reign was due to begin. The Lord’s own teachings are contrary to this thought. He speaks of coming to conduct a Harvest work, He speaks of a work to be done among His people still in the flesh. He says the “Harvest is the end of the age,”—not the beginning of the next age. He speaks of “the days of the Son of Man,” during which the world, and the religious systems, would be acting (just as • they are today), “as in the days of Noah,” before the flood.

We have thought of the period of Harvest as .being 40 years, but that has been a mistake, and we remember that when the first “world” passed away with the flood, it was after 120 years probation (Gen. 6:3), and it was to that period the Lord referred, as did also the Apostle Peter. It seems reasonable to suppose that the passing away of so much -greater a dispensation, covering 4000 years, should have a probationary period at least as long as was granted the few people on the earth in the days of Noah. The present great change involves not only the end of the “present evil world,” or 2nd dispensation, but also the ending of the Gospel Age, which has been for the selection of the Church class.

The question now arises can we locate the time when the “days of the •Son of Man” began. We had thought that 1874 was the date, that being the end of Daniel’s 1335 days. We suggest that that was not the date of our Lord’s arrival, but rather the time when He had prepared the great feast of truths promised in Luke 12: 37, and that He had been present for some years, in fact, ever since the parable of the 10 Virgins began to have its fulfilment, and which Brother Russell taught as being connected with the Millerite movement.

Some time ago, without any reference to this question, it was pointed out by some one that the Verses in Daniel 12 were out of order. Read as in the usual order nothing seemed to be indicated as going to happen at the end of the 1290 days, but if we read the verses in the following order,-5, 6, 7, 8, 9, .10, 11, 1, 12, 4, 3, 2, 13, we see that at the end of the 1290 days (verse 11), Michael is to “stand up” (verse 1). From this it would appear that the second presence or “days of the Son of Man” dates from about the Millerite movement (about 1829). If this is a correct understanding, then the 120 years of probation and the end of the present evil world should be reached about 1949. As Noah and his family entered the ark some days before the flood, so the Church’s deliverance and glorification will probably precede the climax of trouble by some years. The ark was certainly a figure of Christ (1 Pet. 3: 20, 21).

There are other instances where verses in the Bible have got out of place. Rotherham suggests it in Psalm 51; and, no doubt, Matt. 24: 28 ought to be after verse 41, as will be seen by comparing Luke 17: 34-37.

Some speak of the failure of 1914. There was no failure regarding anything that “was written” in the Word; we had jumped to certain conclusions beyond what was written. Since then events and conditions continue to help to a clearer understanding of revelation.

After all, while such matter is helpful and encouraging to the “watchers,” yet. the most vital matter is for us to be prepared in heart and mind to enter the “Ark,” to be changed into the glorious likeness of our Lord, to enter upon. the .happy work of the kingdom, breaking in pieces the systems of error and delusion and bringing the great times of refreshing and blessing to the poor groaning creation (Rom. 8: 19-22).

Cast Not Away Your Confidence.

WITH very many of God's people, as well as with the world's people, the ideal Christian life is one of constant peace and tranquility. They have never learned that "the peace of God which passeth all (worldly) understanding," promised to the Christian, is to rule in and keep his heart (Phil. 4: 7,; Col. 3: 15), but does not apply to his outward life. They forget or perhaps never learned, that our Master's words were, "In the world ye shall have tribulation, but in Me ye shall have peace" (in your hearts). "If the world hate you, ye know that it hated Me before it hated you." "If they have called the Master of the house Beelzebub, how much more them of His household?" "Yea, and, all that will live godly in Christ Jesus (in this present world, or dispensation), shall suffer persecution." It is of a wicked class, and not of the saints, that the Prophet declared, "They are not in trouble as other men" (John 10: 33 ; 15: 18 ; Matt. 10:25; 2 Tim. 3:12; Psa. 73:5).

Only to those who have some knowledge of God's great Plan is His dealing with His people understandable and readable. The world marvels that those whom God receives into His family, as sons by redemption and adoption, should be required or even permitted to suffer afflictions. But to the well-instructed saint the Apostle says, "Think it not strange concerning the fiery trial that shall try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you" (1 Pet. 4: 12). And this saint may now clearly discern the object and utility of present trials, afflictions and persecutions. He sees that these are in fullest accord with his high calling, his heavenly calling—to be an heir of God and a joint-heir with Jesus Christ our Lord, "if so be that we suffer with Him, that we may be also glorified together" (Rom. 8: 17).

But why should a share in the coming glory be made dependent upon present sufferings? We answer, For two reasons:—

Positive Character Necessary.

(1) Severe trials and testings of our love for God and for His Truth, and of our faith in Him and in His promises, are only a wise provision on God's part, in view of the very high honor and responsibility of the great office to which He has called us. If it was proper that our Lord and Redeemer should be tested in all points as to faith and obedience before His exaltation to the excellent glory and power of the divine nature, much more so it is fitting that we, who were once aliens and strangers, far from God, and children of wrath even as others, should be thoroughly tested.

We are not tested as to the perfection of our earthen vessels, for God and we well know that in our fallen flesh dwelleth no perfection; but tested as to our new minds, our consecrated wills, whether or not these are fully consecrated to the Lord, firmly established in the love of truth, purity and righteousness in general. We are also tested to see whether we will compromise any of the principles of righteousness for worldly favor, selfish ambition, or for any of “the pleasures of sin for a season.” Those who love righteousness and hate iniquity, who develop positive characters, these are the “overcomers” who shall, as members of Christ, inherit all things. The undecided, the lukewarm—neither cold nor hot—are far from having the spirit of the Kingdom class, and will surely be rejected— “spewed out” (Rev. 3:16).

Love, Not Selfishness, the Ruling Principle.

(2) A share in the coming glory is dependent upon present sufferings, for the reason that the coming glories are to be bestowed only upon those who have the Spirit of Christ, the spirit of holiness. And whoever has received this holy Spirit, or disposition, and has been transformed by the renewing of his mind, or will, so that no longer selfishness but love shall rule over his thoughts and words and deeds, that person, if in the world at all, could not avoid present suffering. His love for God, his zeal for God’s service and people, his faith in God’s Word and his uncompromising attitude respecting everything relating to these, would be so greatly in contrast with the prevalent spirit of doubt, selfishness and compromise that he would be thought peculiar, called an extremist and a fanatic, if not a hypocrite.

Evil surmisings, out of hearts not fully consecrated, will attribute every good deed to some selfish or evil motive, and, therefore, “Ye shall be hated of all men for my (Christ’s) name’s sake”; for “the world knoweth (understandeth) us not, because it knew Him not” (Luke 21: 17, 1 John 3:1). The reason for all this is evident: it is because “the god of this world hath blinded the eyes” of the vast majority of men; because the faithful, who appreciate the Truth, who have new hearts (wills) and the right spirit on these subjects, are but a “little flock.”

Present Conditions Most Favorable For Overcoming.

These conditions will not be changed until the testing of the “little flock” is finished. God will permit evil to be in the ascendancy until that testing, sifting, refining and polishing’ of the Bride of Christ is fully accomplished. Then Satan shall be bound for a thousand years, and not be permitted to blind and deceive the nations during the Millennial Age of blessing; but, on the contrary, the “little flock” of overcomers, with Christ, their Lord and Head, will bless all the families of the earth with a full knowledge of the Truth.

Therefore, dear brethren and sisters, let us give heed to the Apostle’s words, and not cast away our confidence— confidence in God, in the outworking of His great Plan, and in all who trust in the precious blood and are bringing forth the fruits of the Spirit in their daily lives--meekness, patience, brotherly kindness, love.

Confidence the Basis of Christian Effort.

With some of the Lord’s people, however, there is a tendency to become discouraged, to think that they may have been unfaithful and thus to lose their peace of mind. In some instances, this feeling of discouragement leads to such fear and distress that the Second Death is apprehended. The Apostle seems to have in mind this condition. We are surrounded with. imperfection of both judgment and conduct; and those. who have a proper estimate of themselves must know that they come far short of the Divine standard and of their own vow of consecration. This knowledge should tend to make all very humble, and very generous in considering others, but not to discourage us.

St. Paul exhorts all such, saying, “Cast not away your confidence.” Let such remember that the fact that they have received this Divine favor is an indication that their offering. has had Divine acceptance. Faith, or confidence, in God and in the “great and precious promises” is the very basis of all Christian endeavor. Without this faith one cannot fight a good fight. In proportion as the promises are before our minds, in that proportion we have strength and courage to run the narrow way.

If a follower of the Lord has been thus discouraged or has felt that his expectations have not been realised, he should not be weary in well doing. He should go to the Lord in prayer and renew his vow of consecration, He should rise from the ashes of discouragement and lift the cross with renewed zeal. He should endeavor to walk on a higher plane than ever. If he lose confidence, lose faith, he will easily be overcome by the Adversary.

The very ones whom God will approve are those who walk by faith. The rewards are for those who hold the faith even unto death. We must beware of everything that tends to weaken or destroy our faith. The Lord deals graciously and generously with us. He will do for us whatever is right. Knowing this we can have confidence in God, even though the decision of Divine Justice should bar us out of Divine favor. Those, whose hearts are right are submissive to the Divine will. The Lord wants us to have a faith that will continue in sorrow and in sunshine; that will trust where it cannot see, that will continue under all the leadings of Divine providence.

Communion with Christ in Suffering.

In ‘Hebrews 10:32-39 the Apostle clearly shows that there are two ways of enduring the afflictions of Christ: (1) to be made a gazing-stock both by afflictions and reproaches, and (2) by avowing our sympathy for the reproached ones and thus sharing their reproaches and afflictions. For if one member suffer, all the members of the Body of Christ suffer with it.

“Call to remembrance the former days,” and note that your afflictions and trials came principally after you had been illuminated with the light of the knowledge of God, shining in the face of Jesus Christ our Lord; and that they have increased as the light of Present Truth has increased with you. It is not difficult to discern the reason for this. The great Adversary is not interested in disturbing those who are “asleep in Zion”; but he is ever on the alert to mislead and entangle those who are awake. And the more active we become in the service of the Lord and the Truth, and, consequently, the more actively opposed to Satan and error, the more he will fight against us. And the more faithfully and vigorously we fight the good fight, as good soldiers of the Lord Jesus Christ, the more we shall have of the Master’s approval now, and the greater will be our reward in the Kingdom.

Increasing Severity of Trials.

No doubt there are many and more severe trials just before us. From God’s standpoint, having been blessed with greater light, we should be able to endure greater trials and afflictions. From Satan’s standpoint we, as a Gideon’s band, armed with the Truth, are more injurious to his cause than all others combined. The only wonder to us is that he has not assailed us still more fiercely in the past. Perhaps he was hindered; perhaps he will be granted yet more liberty to buffet us, as the night draws on. Such is our expectation, based upon the direct statements and the types of Scripture.

But such reflections should bring us no sadness, no fear ; for He that is on our part is more than all that be against us (1 John 4:4; Rom. 8: 31). His promises, as well as His providences, are walls of salvation and protection on every hand. What shall separate us from the love of God in Christ? Shall tribulation? No! It shall but cause us to draw closer to Him; and under His protecting care we shall rest. His grace is sufficient for us. His strength is made manifest in our weakness. -When we feel weak in ourselves, then we are strong in Him. He will never leave us nor forsake us. "Watchman, what of the night?" "The morning cometh, and also the night" (Isa. 21: 11, 12).

What Became of a Lie.

"First somebody told it,
Then the room wouldn't hold it,
So the busy tongues rolled it

Till they got it outside.
Then the crowd came across it
They onward did toss it,

Till it grew long and wide.
From a very small lie, Sir,
It grew deep and high, Sir,
Till it reached the sky, Sir,

And frightened the moon;
For she hid her face, Sir,
At the dreadful disgrace, Sir,

That happened at noon.
This lie brought forth others,
Dark sisters and brothers,
And fathers and mothers,
A terrible crew.

And while headlong they hurried,
The people they flurried,
And troubled and worried,
As lies always do.
And so evil boded,

Till at last it exploded
This monstrous lie goaded,
In smoke and in shame.

While from mud and from mire,
The pieces flew higher,
And hit the sad liar,
And killed his good name."

—Mrs. M. A. Kidder, in Jewish Gazette.

The Great Company.

THE Divine plan for human salvation is a perfect one, and God's provision for the great company on the spirit plane appears necessary in order that the full measure of that completeness may be made up.

We know full well that the invitation extending over the Gospel Age is to the end that we may form with Jesus the reigning power. Consequently the promises of sharing His nature and throne are absolutely definite.

The hope of obtaining spiritual life apart from the glory, honor and immortality promised to the body members of Christ, is, of necessity, not nearly so clearly stated, for "we are all called in the one hope of our calling," nevertheless, the hope of obtaining a spiritual birth, aside from the 144,000, is variously set forth in the Scriptures both new and old.

The fact that our heavenly Father has made provision for a great company who enter for, but fall short of winning the prize of the High calling, is not only prefigured by the scapegoat, but also alluded to in Psalm 45: 1,4, "The virgin and her companion virgins" (bridesmaids, as it were, making complete the wedding party), the same circumstance is supported by Rebecca and her damsels.

Then we may gather the same view from Matt. 25: 1-12. Verse 7 says, "All the virgins arose," not all the world, in fact, not any of the world. The parable shows the subsequent preparedness of the foolish virgins. They were "too late," or not ready in time. Is it either reasonable or scriptural to conclude that such a class as they, in losing the prize of the High calling, were lost themselves? If not, what is the only alternative? They 'surely cannot be dealt with a second time, when the time will have come for the world's judgment or trial. Having become new creatures (in Christ) all earthly rights were given up, and so that avenue to life cannot be opened to them. All who have started in the way now open to life, have left the world forever, and it seems unthinkable that any who have exchanged earthly hopes for heavenly, should eventually gain the former. Consecration to death with Christ can by no means lead on to life on earth.

The question then is; Where are those spirit-begotten ones to be who are not included in the Bride class, having not fully overcome, but later having been "saved so as by fire"? The Scriptures answer; "Blessed are they that are called to the marriage supper of the Lamb." Called to be the Bride but not chosen, the great company, in keeping with God's bounty, are the favored wedding guests. (Rev. 19:9; 7: 9-15).

A GREAT wave of unbelief is sweeping over Christendom to-day. Not only among the laity, but particularly among the clergy, it is apparent on every hand that it is not confined to one denomination or another. It is evident that it is no longer necessary for a minister to believe in the inspiration of the Bible, nor even in miracles, the virgin birth, or the resurrection of our Lord.

No doubt the great fulfilment of Paul's words was in the falling away from the true faith and the compromising with pagan doctrines and festivals, and the setting up of the great Papal system, but it is wonderful how many features of that great decline from Christian purity of doctrine, worship and practice seem to have a refulfilment in this end of the age.

So many examples of loss of faith in the New Testament by the clergy appear, but two are now before us. The Rev. H. Emerson Fosdick, speaking of the Lord walking on the sea of Galilee, said, “The fourth Gospel says that coming down (from the mountain) He walked upon the tempestuous waves of Galilee, and the other Gospels add that the winds grew calm. Many of you do not believe that such a thing really happened; no sea storm was ever stopped, you say, nor did any one walk on the water. No more do I believe it really happened.” Yet it is attested by witnesses chosen of the Lord to be, “witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem and unto the uttermost parts of the earth” (Acts 1: 8).

Dr. Bevan in the “Christian World” answers a questioner, whose wife had died, and who could not think that she lay unconscious in the grave, but felt she had gone to the safety of the Father's house; yet he was puzzled about the doctrine of the resurrection. In his reply Dr. Bevan says, “I do hope you will keep on believing as you do, for I am sure you are right. Do not argue about it with any one, nor let your mind be perplexed by the many and conflicting New Testament references. Your spiritual perception has shown you the truth, Don't be anxious, keep on believing as you do and put down everything in the New Testament that speaks of a time when graves are to be opened and those that sleep are • to arise, as evidence that though the Christians had grasped the truth of personal immortality (which is not • truth—Editor) they were at the mercy of their prescientific ideas and had but cruder thought with which to express and explain the truth.”

Thus it would seem that Dr. Bevan and such leaders claim to be more reliable authorities as to what is truth than the words of Christ, and the Apostles (John 5: 28; 1 Cor. 15, etc.). The difficulty, of course, is that they believe Satan's lie, “Thou shalt not surely die”; they do not believe in death but call it “transition” and think they become more alive than ever. If that were true, then, of course, there could be no resurrection from the dead, during the second. presence of Christ, when the trumpet shall sound (a proclamation) and the dead in Christ should rise first.” “Afterwards they that are Christ's during His presence,” when “all that are in the graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God and come forth.”

“If the blind lead the blind they shall both fall into the ditch” (of unbelief), and that is what is taking place to-day. Even in this the words of the New Testament are being fulfilled before our eyes. The trouble is that the false teaching of the “higher critics” has permeated Christendom's preachers and most of them no longer believe in Christ's death as being the necessary redemption price to redeem the human race.

One is reminded of Spurgeon's words and grave warning: “Dear hearers, never have any questions upon the vital point of redemption by blood. This is a fundamental truth, and he who is in darkness upon that subject, has no light in him. What the sun is to the heavens, that the doctrine of a vicarious sacrifice is to theology.”

We are living in a day of peculiar testing of faith and temptations to let go the anchor of faith in God's Word and thus drift into indifference. Many are falling on the right hand and on the left (Psalm 91). God's Word is our only sure foundation for faith, rest and peace. If 'we were to be guided by our own or some one else's "spiritual perceptions," we should indeed be floundering in the quicksands of doubts and fears.

"The Word of the Lord endureth forever."

"Daily Heavenly Manna" to be Printed.

After due consideration and waiting upon the Lord, it would now seem to be • beneficial for an edition of the "Daily Manna" to be printed at this time in the pocket size.

The work will be put in hand as soon as possible, and the orders received, also those coming in shortly, will have prompt attention when the books are off the press.

While appreciating the good interest of so many of the friends in this fine little hook, there are probably many others who would have them if they realised how helpful are the morning texts and comments with which to start each day. As a gift the "Daily Manna" is admirable, and some are undertaking to offer them for sale as they have opportunity. Additional orders may be placed at once, and we are pleased to state that the price will probably be less than 1/9, quoted previously, with Special reductions for half dozen and dozen lots.

Bible Study Meetings.

The members of the Adelaide Class desire to make known that their services for Bible Study; etc., continue to be held each Sunday afternoon and evening, also mid-week, in Liverpool Buildings, Flinders Street, Adelaide.

The meetings are quite unsectarian and a hearty invitation is extended to all desiring to join them in their helpful gatherings. Further information may be obtained from the Class Secretary, Mrs. H. H. Bartel, 10 Forest Avenue East, Clarence Gardens, Adelaide, South Australia.

Correspondence.

8th September, 1934. Dear Brother,

Many thanks for your kind letter of the 17th ultimo. I hope sincerely that you and all the dear friends in Melbourne are in the best of health. I mean, of course, physical health, for I feel assured that your spiritual, health is good and improving continually under the Lord's care and guidance.

As to ourselves, the Lord has been kind and gracious to us, far more gracious than we deserve, and we are striving earnestly to show our appreciation, though we know that even the little we accomplish falls far short; but the redeeming merit of His precious blood comforts and encourages us.

Dear Brother, there are so many questions I often would like to ask you, but when the time comes I seem to have forgotten them. But there is one thing that occupies my mind more than anything else, next to my own weaknesses and shortcomings, and it is the question, what am I doing with the light the Lord has so graciously granted me? What can I do? How am I doing it? Am I doing it in the way the Lord would approve? This is the harvest time, He is the Chief Reaper. No voice of disapproval seems to come to me, the Spirit seems to bear witness that my work is approved. When I was with the Rutherford people work was the principal thing. I had to thrust that which I considered holy upon people who rejected it with scorn and disdain, and my spirit felt horrified and revolted against such a profanation. This is not so now. I no longer "cast my pearls before swine," but on the other hand now my circle of activity is narrowed considerably, for those who appreciate and inquire after Divine things with a sincere heart are few. I teach my family,

I witness among my workmates (those who will give me a fair hearing) at every suitable opportunity, towards others, too, my feelers are always out, yet the opportunities are so small, I feel I am not doing enough. I ask myself, am I negligent? Do I lack zeal? I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; I am only too eager to spread the light; God, who can read my heart, surely knows it. The Rutherford people used to tell me that unless I went out and warned all and sundry about their coming doom God would require their blood at my hands, quoting Ezek. 3: 16-21. The matter is of too serious import to be disregarded, and it would be helpful if I could get your view on the matter.

Thanking you for the "Peoples Paper," which you so kindly sent me, and for all your kindnesses towards us. I ask the Lord to bless you and your house and so am as ever, Your Brother in Christian love, —B. E.

[While "faith without works is dead" there has always been a tendency to rest in works. It would seem pleasing to feel that we could do something that would bring its reward of justification, but all are imperfect and cannot do works that in themselves could be acceptable to God, but through faith in Christ's redemptive sacrifice we are justified and thence able to offer ourselves in willing sacrifice and service.

As new creatures in Christ we have responsibilities to live up to the light of truth we have received, and to allow its sanctifying effect in our hearts and minds, so that we may gradually gain likeness to Christ in our characters. That is the chief purpose of our being called, namely, that we should make our calling and election sure. By the close of the Gospel Age the Church will be complete as the Body of Christ. We have responsibility also to let our light shine out in good works, in kind deeds and in patience, gentleness and goodness. Then, too, we must let the light of truth shine through us, by seizing all opportunities of presenting the glad message to whosoever will listen.

The words of Ezekiel 3: 16-21, referred to, state a general responsibility that comes to all God's people favored with the privilege of His message. It does not mean that we are to assume that the Lord has sent us on an errand or has given us a message for some one or some Church or nation; we must be sure that we are "sent" before we embark on any warning or condemning work, otherwise we shall possibly be found doing harm instead of good.

The Christian's message is a message of good news, a message of peace,—"Into whatsoever house ye enter say, 'Peace be to this house.'" if the sons of peace are there tell the glad tidings, if you are not wanted, then go away;

"Cast not your pearls (of truth) before swine." It is nowhere suggested in the New Testament that we are to judge or condemn,—"Bless and curse not." Not until glorified with the Lord will the Church have any mission of judging.

The mission at present is the perfecting of the saints in the unity of the truth, and of the knowledge of the Son of God (Ephes. 4: 11-15). "Speaking the truth in love," "contending earnestly for the faith," as one has said,—"Our good fight of faith consists in a considerable measure in our defence of the Word of God, which includes also our defence of the character of God. This will mean our willingness to stand for the truth at any cost and against any number of assailants, against the creeds and theories of men which would misrepresent the good tidings of great joy, which the Lord and the Apostles have announced, and which shall, thank God, yet be unto all people. As the Apostle again says, "I am set for the defence of the truth" - "Heavenly Manna."

All should feel that burning zeal exemplified in Jeremiah 20:9; "Zealous of good works" (Titus 2: 14). We cannot have too much zeal, our poor hearts burning with love to God and the Lord Jesus Christ, but we need also great wisdom so that our zeal may be bent in right ways in line with the Divine will and exercised in the spirit of love and mercy. We are to work out our own salvation and assist all we call, also to reach the mark for the prize of the High calling of God in Christ Jesus.]

Formal Prayer.

"I often say my prayers;
But do I always pray?
And do the wishes of my heart
Go with the words I say?
I may as well kneel down
And worship gods of stone,
As offer to the living God
A prayer of words alone;
For words without the heart •
The Lord will never hear,
Nor will He to those lips attend,
Whose prayers are not sincere."

(1 Cor. 9: 24-27.)

OUR acceptance of the Divine call to the spirit nature means our begetting as new creatures,— • “sons of God.”

We shall never succeed in bringing our flesh into absolute harmony with the Divine law, because of its imperfections, inherited and otherwise, Hence, the necessity that it be covered with the robe of Christ's righteousness. He who looks for perfection of his flesh and who rests his faith therein, must of necessity have a poor hope of ever attaining to the likeness of Christ, of ever becoming one of the predestinated class, of becoming “the image of His Son.”

In joining the Lord in faith and consecration we are proclaiming ourselves, not as graduates and heirs, but as students, disciples, who desire to be prepared to inherit the things which God has prepared for them that love Him.

If this thought be kept in mind as the Divine teaching on the subject, it will tend to prevent our discouragement with ourselves when we find that unavoidably we do those things which we ought not to do, and leave undone those things which we ought to do; for in our flesh dwells no perfection.

It is necessary for us to point out that the new mind, in proportion as it develops in likeness to the mind of Christ, is to relax no efforts to keep the body under, to keep the will of the flesh dead. No spirit-begotten son of God could allow sin to reign in his mortal body. Should sin to any degree control him it will be but momentarily, until the new mind, the new creature, seeing the uprising of the flesh would conquer it, obtaining the promised grace and help in every time of need, from the heavenly storehouse of grace. This thought rightly entertained will help true disciples to appreciate their own position and not be utterly cast down if overtaken in a fault of the flesh, so long as they realise that their hearts are in sympathy with the principles and instructions of our Teacher and longing to be cleansed and acceptable in His sight. Moreover this thought will also help all such to exercise fervency of love amongst themselves, toward the brethren, who similarly are disciples, pupils in this school, not according to the flesh but according to the spirit of their mind.

If, therefore, one should see blemishes in the flesh of a brother, disapproved and striven against, he should remember that the evil which he sees, is his brother's enemy, and he may have confidence in the brother's overcoming, if so be that he gives the assurance that his heart is in harmony with the Lord and His law of love, and that he is daily seeking to fight a successful warfare against the weaknesses of the flesh.

When studying this subject we must keep two facts in mind. Firstly, the Scriptures ascribe no sin to the new creature and additionally no perfection in righteousness to our fallen flesh. This new mind, which is begotten of God, cannot sin ; for in its very essence, as the seed or germ implanted by the truth, “the spirit of the truth,” it is opposed to sin. It is so fully imbued with the spirit of the Lord, the spirit of holiness, that it delights in holiness and not in sin ; and this must be the case so long as this begotten or holy spirit condition continued. “He that is begotten of God sinneth not (willingly, neither approves of sin, nor takes pleasure in it), because His seed remaineth in him and that wicked one toucheth him not.”

The whole world is depraved and under the control of the spirit of selfishness, and largely, though unconsciously, the tools of Satan, “who worketh in the hearts of ‘the children of disobedience.’” To the children of God, the world has become an enemy and a tempter by reason of the fact that the church has been begotten again to new hopes, ambitions, aspirations and desires, which are along different lines from anything the world knows or with which it has sympathy. Our begetting is of the holy spirit, and its tendencies are heavenly and spiritual in harmony with righteousness and love. Yet it is only our hearts that are thus changed, our flesh is much more in harmony with the world than with the new order of things established in our hearts by grace and truth through Jesus Christ. Consequently, when the Lord's people come in contact with the world through the words or writings or general spirit of any of its children, they find that although their hearts are loyal to the Lord and to all the gracious things which He has promised them, and to the spirit of righteousness, love and truth, yet, nevertheless, their flesh has an affinity for, and some attraction toward the world, its views and arrangements. For this reason the Christian is called upon to reckon himself dead to the world, which is in harmony with sin and has perverted tastes and appetites. As the apostle intimates, there is a constant battle between the new and the old. He says, "the flesh desires contrary to the spirit and the spirit to the flesh." And even though the advanced Christian has reached the place where he is enabled to reckon his flesh and will completely dead and buried, nevertheless he has need continually to re-examine' himself lest the flesh should become alive again.

This was the apostle's method. He says, "I keep my body under and bring it into subjection (to the new mind), lest having preached to others I myself should be a castaway." As we well know St. Paul was a most successful soldier of the cross; and from his epistles we gain much information as to how to fight our weaknesses successfully. The thought is not that we are to keep each other under, but that a special commission is given to us in respect of our bodies, that we ourselves will be held accountable for our conduct. The statement, "I keep my body under," would be true only of one, who is begotten of the holy spirit. But although the individual is reckonedly a member of the body of Christ and called a son of God he has not as yet, of course, received the spirit body promised; but is awaiting to receive it in the resurrection. Meantime, God calls upon all spirit begotten ones to demonstrate their loyalty to righteousness and their faithfulness by practising upon their mortal bodies.

It is not sufficient, however, to declare our intention, for God allows the difficulties and trials of life to prove our faithfulness to the covenant of sacrifice we have made. And while making provision for the blemishes of our mortal body, He, nevertheless, holds us responsible for our words and actions. We must develop our characters to such an extent that the, new creature will fight down to the best of his ability everything opposed to the new will, that the body be kept in subordination, under restraint. We have an illustration given us in the writings of one where he says, "Those who deal in horses tell us that all horses must be broken; and that to break a horse is difficult of accomplishment and requires a great deal of force. The object in thus dealing with the horse is not to continue to break the animal every day, but to break him in once for all, that he might be put to some service." This illustration seems to fit the apostle's thought. As a new creature the apostle had a mortal body which was rebellious against God's will, and thus must be dealt with in a firm manner in order to bring- it under the control of • its master, the -new mind, whose head is Christ. If the body be taught this lesson of submission it may be a good useful servant of the new master and serve unto death, just as a horse may be broken in and serve his master well. This is the thought of the apostle's words, "I keep my body under."

When the apostle says that he would be in danger of being a "castaway" if he did not bring his body into subjection, and thus prove to be an overcomer, it is tantamount to saying that he would fail to make . his calling and election sure. He was called to become an heir of God and joint heir with Jesus Christ. If, therefore, he should fail to perform his part of the contract of sacrifice, he would become a "castaway" in respect of this election. He would not gain the election. He would lose in the race in which he had started. It is our duty • to watch ourselves, that we do no harm, that our body does. good service and not injury to ourselves.

We need to recognise that habits make character. In keeping the body under we need to exercise the fruits of the spirit, gentleness and meekness. Whoever fails to cultivate gentleness in the small things as well as the larger, is failing to develop a necessary trait of character. He is losing a glorious opportunity of practising upon himself, of keeping the body under, of getting himself into the way of doing things in a sensible and reasonable manner.

We realise the rising of thoughts are small at the beginning, and if they grow they come to words, and to actions.

The keeping of the body under, lest it should become alive again, is a constant necessity to those who would be overcomers, for it is the victory of the new mind over the old will of the flesh that constitutes us victors,—the developing in us of a strong, holy, character like unto that of our Lord and Redeemer.

The Tongue That Jesus Spoke.

To-day we are so accustomed to reading the Bible 'in English that we tend to forget that it was first of all written in a very different language, and the compiling of translations occupied the minds of the greatest scholars of utility centuries. This fact is called to mind by two manuscripts of the New Testament recently found in a Syrian monastery in Armenia, and written in the Aramaic language, which is the tongue that Jesus spoke. The manuscripts are in the authorised version of the New Testament used by the Syrian church, and the earlier of the two, which was written between the years 440 and 550, contains nearly the whole of the Gospels of Mark and Luke, and about three-quarters of John. The second manuscript contains practically all the -Gospels, and was written in the sixth or seventh century. No earlier Syriac manuscripts of the New Testament are known, but the British Museum has an imperfect fifth century manuscript of the Gospels of Matthew and Mark, while in the Vatican library there is one of the sixth century. It is believed that the earlier) of the newly discovered manuscripts is that translated from the Greek by Rabbula, who was Bishop of Edessa from 411 to 435, and it will be most valuable to students of the Bible, as it will throw light on disputed passages, and help to establish the accuracy of the text of our Gospels. It is interesting to remember that the words Jesus used on the Cross, "Eli, Eli, lama sahachthani," are Aramaic.—Melbourne "Age," September 14, 1934.

True Christian Liberality

LIBERALITY., generosity, is essentially a Christian grace. God is love, and all who partake of His spirit must be proportionately loving and generous. But as we are instructed not to be wise in our own conceits, nor to be wise above what is written in God's Word, so likewise it is well for all true children of God • to beware of assuming to have a greater, wider or deeper love than that clearly set forth in God's Word as the only real and true standard. God's people are to set up a standard neither for God nor for themselves; but as obedient children they should not fashion their minds and faith after their own defective conceptions, but according as the Lord has revealed.

Some err on one side of this question and some on the other ; but the remedy for both errors is the same—submit your heads and hearts unto the direction of the Lord through His inspired Word.

That -Word nowhere teaches that everlasting torment is the wages of sin, but that the wages of sin is death. Every plain (nun-symbolic) statement of the Scriptures agrees that, “the soul that sinneth, it shall die.” Surely, then, no one is justified in maligning, yea, blaspheming God's character and plan by teaching directly or indirectly the contrary--that He will keep the sinner's soul alive to all eternity in order to torment it. There would be neither love nor justice in such a course.

On the other hand, the Word nowhere teaches Universalism—that the entire human family will be everlastingly saved to divine favor and blessing. And those who rush from the one extreme of faith in an almost universal torment to the other extreme of belief in Universalism are carried from one human error to another human error. However, the finding of the one error to have been the result of a too careless handling of God's Word and a leaning to perverted human reason and judgment should put all upon their guard thereafter: but frequently it does not, as we see; and, getting filled with the thought of God's love, they seem to forget that God has more than one attribute of character and that these must all be coordinated in any plan that is His—that His wisdom and His justice each join with His love in His plan for man's salvation from sin and its penalty, death.

The Scriptures do, indeed, teach that the great ransom-sacrifice given by our Redeemer will sooner or later bring to every member of the human family fullest opportunity for the recovery of all that he lost in Adam. But they forget that although Adam had life, its everlasting continuance was not assured: for this he was on trial when he wilfully sinned and thus cut short his trial and brought upon himself, and upon us in his loins, the sentence of death.

It is what was lost, and all that was lost that our Lord came to save. The salvation made possible by His ransom-sacrifice is a new trial for life everlasting, the results of which are expressed in John 3:36, Rev. 21: 7, 8.

It is sufficient that God should grant a universal, impartial trial to all; that those who, under the favorable conditions of the New Covenant, will fully submit themselves to God may have life, and that others may be manifested and, as cumberers of the ground, may be destroyed in the second death. Love, wisdom and justice could never agree to let a wilful sinner live to mar the peace of the holy; nor could they consent that such should be deprived of their own wills in order to their everlasting existence, for their companionship is not sufficiently desirable; nor could they consent that they should be kept alive, and that their wills should be kept under divine restraints to all eternity. Such lives' and such companionship are undesirable: the remainder of God's universe would be blessed by their destruction in the second death. Let us not be more wise, more loving, or more just than the only living and true God who dwells in a light which no man can approach unto, and whose mind is communicated to us through His Word (1 Tim 6:16;

1 John 5: 9, 10).

Let us practice the grace of liberality according to, and not outside of, the boundaries laid down in the Lord's Word.

The Flight of Time.—From Two Standpoints.

To those whose hopes and aims are of this life it is a sad thought, so quickly the time flies. and so little is done. So many things they hoped for and expected to accomplish and to have, are still undone and are becoming more difficult and doubtful of attainment, and hope and interest gradually sink into a resigned disappointment, or worse still into bitterness.

How different with us,—the Lord's people. All we value most is still in the future and yearly growing nearer; it is certain and sure. Based upon the eternal promises there is no possibility of disappointment so long as we ourselves are true and faithful. The passing time we can smile at so long as we try to do our best each passing day, and even when we fail to do as well as we wish, we need not grieve but remember our unwilling faults are covered, and so rejoice and press on.

Sacrifice !

The richest quality of love is sacrifice, and the noblest credential of any work is the spirit which has laid every selfish interest down at Jesus' feet, and counts all things loss for Christ; which holds its money, its friendships, its life, all subservient to the Master's claim, and, living a dying life, at last gives life itself as a willing offering to Him who gave His life for us. In this selfish and luxurious age, it is the rarest quality found, but it is the most needed as the end approaches.—A. B, Simpson.

Have Faith in God.

(Mark It: 22).

IT is the Master who thus addresses us. How full of meaning are His words ! What life and spirit the words that He speaks will impart to us, if we will receive them, ponder them, and act upon them ! “Have faith in God”; just four short words, and though one may spend much time discoursing on the topic of faith, no more could be said than Jesus here says. How could anyone add anything to His message when every utterance comes to us glowing with the warmth of His heart of . love? Rather let us seek by reverent meditation to rivet His Word on our minds, to catch the meaning of His message, to engrave more deeply on our hearts His heavenly counsel, to our lasting profit.

“Have faith in God.” It is no new message that the Master sends. Throughout the Scriptures our attention is frequently called to the importance of this quality of faith—faith in God—and no one who accepts the Scriptures as being from the Lord would surely willingly underestimate the value of this admirable quality, of which it is, written, “This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith.”

Indeed, so highly does Jehovah esteem this quality of faith, faith in Himself and in His Word, that it is written of one who exercised this quality greatly (Abraham) that God counted his faith to him for righteousness. So much may be said of the heroes of those faith-battles of old, which surely should be an incentive to the Lord’s people during this time—a time of favour far in excess of that in which the fathers of Israel lived—but the words of the Psalmist will suffice for the present—“Our fathers trusted in Thee, they trusted, and Thou didst deliver them.” Psa. 22:4.

At the outset, it is well for us to have clearly in mind just what is meant by faith. On account of the darkness of the past through the activity of the Adversary, who delights in and is the author of confusion, many curious misunderstandings of the simple truths of Scripture have arisen in men’s minds, and of none perhaps more than that of the teaching respecting faith.

People have been urged to believe very unbelievable and unreasonable things. Others have been told that all that was necessary to salvation was to believe, and then are left to wonder and puzzle over what or whom they were to believe. Some, noting the Apostle’s statement, “all men have not faith” (2 Thes. 3: 2), have concluded that some people, either at birth or subsequently, have been endowed with this quality of faith and others not, and that the Gospel Message is preached merely to stir up this faith lying dormant, so to speak, in these specially favoured ones. This, however, is not the teaching of the Bible.

The Gospel does not stir up something that is already there. When the Gospel comes there is no faith, but the Gospel there and then creates faith in the message, and in the One of whom that message speaks. Surely nothing can be more apparent than that faith is not a quality that can be possessed apart from an object. It is not possible to merely have faith. There must be someone or something in which that faith rests. We may have faith in a bridge as we ride over it that it will bear the load ; we may have faith in a man that he will act uprightly, but we cannot have faith at all, apart from an object. We may as well speak of breathing without air, of swimming without water, or living without a body. Jesus did not say, "Have faith." Had He done so, it would be a proper enquiry for us reverently to ask, "In what, in whom, dear Lord"? His message leaves no room for such inquiry. It is complete, "Have faith in God."

How glad we are to be able to turn to God's Word of truth, as we would unto a lamp which shineth in a dark place, for light on this important subject. In John 6:28, we read of some who came to our Lord with these words :—"What shall we do that we might work the works of God?" In the next verse we read our Lord's reply :—"This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent." Let us notice these words very closely. It is evident that faith is a work, not a work of the hands, but a work of the mind. "This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent." In other words, their minds were to be exercised in respect of the One whom God had sent (Jesus) with the result that they would believe on Him.

In Rom. to: 17, the Apostle explains that "faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the Word of God.". Another translation renders the word "hearing," report. Faith cometh by a report. It would be proper to say that faith cometh by hearing a report, a message; and faith in God therefore' comes by hearing a report, a true report—a message, a true message—concerning Himself, His magnificent character, His glorious plans and purposes.

We can see, too, that this report or message which comes to us, must be understood ere we can intelligently believe it, before faith can be exercised in it. Moreover, from the Apostle's words, we see that while faith is not itself knowledge, it must nevertheless rest upon knowledge. From this standpoint, we are the more able to grasp the depth of meaning contained in the opening of the 11th chapter of Hebrews, "Now faith is the substance (conviction) of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." As water is not a solid upon which our feet can travel, except it be congealed in the form of ice, so, likewise, as we have seen, belief, in the ordinary sense of the word, is not sufficient as a foundation for our trust and onward progress unless that belief be congealed, solidified into a substantial faith.

Thus we should always clearly differentiate between credulity and faith ; credulity, which is reprehensible, and faith, which is commendable. A crystallized faith, such as will carry us safely over the quicksands of ignorance and superstition and bring us safely to the goal which God has marked out for us, needs more than human assurance, more than our own or other men's imaginations. True faith seeks for a positive Message from the Lord. It requires diligence in its endeavour to find that Message; then it becomes an evidence, or proof of things invisible.

The Christian life is a life of faith. Its first step is a step of faith, and its last step is the triumph of faith. That is why the Apostle exhorts us to "look unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith." We read of our Lord Jesus, "Though He were a Son yet learned He obedience by the things which He suffered and being made perfect (by His own faithfulness) He became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey Him." Then we have in the risen Lord the author (Leader) of our faith and one who shall ultimately be the finisher (Perfector) of our faith as we continue to abide in Him.

All of life's victories are victories of faith, and its joys are the joys of faith. Referring again to Heb. 11: 1, we note that the Apostle speaks of faith as a basis of hope, as something substantial upon which hope may build. Hope is not faith, but hope is that buoyant gladsome thing that is born of faith. A hope that is not based upon faith is a mere idle fiction which has no substantial comfort in it. Faith is the basis or substance out of which the living hope springs and grows naturally. Faith, then, must be a reasonable thing, well founded in that which is fixed, immovable, sure and steadfast, even in the Word of God, which liveth and abideth forever.

While faith depends for its earliest existence upon a right attitude of heart toward God and His righteousness, it continues to grow and thrive by a closer acquaintance and intimate communion with God and a continual striving to attain to His righteousness. Faith, in its beginning, is always comparatively weak, but we are glad that God does not despise the small things—"A bruised reed shall He not break, and smoking flax shall He not quench, till He send forth judgment unto victory." (Isa. 42: 3 ; Matt. 12: 20). So also the Lord's people' who are strong in the faith are taught to hear with the weaker ones. (Rom. 14: 1 ; 15:1 ; 1 Thes. 5: 14; Acts 20: 35).

Since faith must necessarily be at the very basis of Christian character, and is such an important element in its construction, even to the grand and, glorious finish, and since "without faith it is impossible to please God," the effort of every Christian should surely be toward a continual growth in faith. To do this, there must be a close walk and fellowship with God in all circumstances and under all conditions. Does the sunshine of prosperity make glad our hearts? Let us see that we are glad in the Lord ; that our hearts are lifted to Him in grateful adoration and praise for all His benefits, from whom cometh every good and perfect gift. Or, do the clouds gather and the storms of adversity beat upon the soul? Then call to mind the goodness of the Lord in times past and take courage, assured that the sun will shine again in due time, when the Lord sees best to arrange it so.

Nothing is more encouraging to faith than to consider the Lord's past faithfulness to us, and His promises that thus it shall be to the end. All our interests, temporal and spiritual, are in His hands if we are His, and "no good thing will He withhold from them that walk uprightly." "All things shall work together for good to them that love God, to the called according to His purpose."

How often, as the years go by, the children of God can see this. As they realise what the discipline of life, patiently and lovingly submitted to, has already wrought in them, they see, as perhaps they could not see while passing through much of it, how necessary it has been to the developing of character in them, and so they are thankful for the rough and thorny places, as well as for the smooth, because of the peaceable fruits of righteousness which they have learned to prize above all else.

There are many illustrations of faith all around us. Take, for example, that of the navigator in his chart and compass. Though no land is in sight, he takes these as his guides, fully expecting to reach port safely. Similarly, some people who are far out on the ocean of life are steadily steering by the aid of their chart, the Bible, the Word of God, for the promised haven, the New Jerusalem. We doubt not that if they continue in its teachings they will in due time land safely.

We exercise faith in many ways. We drop a letter in the mail box, never doubting but that it will reach its destination safely. We have plenty of faith and trust in our friends, and it is right and proper that we should. Nevertheless, letters do sometimes go astray, and there are instances in which confidence in a friend has proved to be misplaced. As we reflect upon these things our Lord's words take on an added meaning, "Have faith in God." No confidence in Him has ever proved to be misplaced. No confidence in Him ever will. "Have faith in God." Even though we ourselves were to become unworthy of trust, which God grant we never may, yet He will remain worthy. "If we believe not," says the Apostle (2 Tim. 2: 13) or rather as the Diaglott renders the passage, "If we are faithless, He abideth faithful. He cannot deny Himself."

In this connection, let us consider the Apostle's words in Heb. 6, from verse 13: "For when God made promise to Abraham, because He could swear by no greater, He swore by Himself . . . wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of His Counsel confirmed it by an oath : that by two immutable things in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation who have fled for refuge to lay hold of the hope set before us." What more could the Lord have given to confirm our faith in His wondrous promises, all embraced in the oath-bound covenant to father Abraham—not only His word of promise, but that, confirmed by an oath?

When the Apostle was with the Church at Corinth, he tells us that his speech and his preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the spirit and of power, that their faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God. What was it to speak in demonstration of the spirit and of power?

There is a wide distinction in the business world between an ordertaker and a salesman. An order-taker gets an order, but frequently the customer is dissatisfied and goes elsewhere for the next purchase. A salesman sells not for himself, but the house he represents, so that, even though he should die, the customer continues buying from the same source of supply. Now, the Apostle sold, or rather imported to his customers, real religion. He gave a display of spirit, of God's holy spirit of truth. He did not just tell them about it, but he showed them how it operated; he showed them how it was working holiness in his own life and in the lives of his associates; how it caused him to devote his life to speaking God's message, simply, earnestly, lovingly, courageously ; how it enabled him to endure all manner of evil things without losing faith in God; how it enabled him to fill up that which was behind of the afflictions of Christ. When the Apostle had the truth, and knew that he had it, he spoke it. He spoke it in love, he spoke it confidently, he spoke it as it is in Jesus, and the result was that the faith of his hearers, resting in the power of the truth, was in God Himself.

As we examine ourselves, let us make sure that our faith, too, rests in God. If, instead, our faith is resting in the wisdom of a man, it will lack strength under test. Should another man a little wiser appear on the scene, his greater ability in argument or debate will cause us to change our faith until such time as we meet with one of still greater persuasive powers, or it may be a little more experienced in subtle phrases and fine talk, when our faith will once again change. Such faith, standing in the wisdom of men, will cause us to be tossed to and fro by every wind of doctrine, and as a result of this unstable condition of mind we shall be unstable also in all our ways. With what care, therefore, should we examine ourselves to see to it, that for every item of our faith we have the unmistakable testimony of God's own Word. Such faith will show firmness, and that, we are told, is the literal meaning of the Hebrew word used in Abraham's case, when he believed God. Such faith will endure to the end. "Have faith in God."

"Darkest night will always come before the morning,
Silver linings shine on God's side of the cloud;
All your journey He has promised to be with you,
Nought has come to you but what His love allowed.
"Have faith in God. The sun will shine,
Though dark the clouds may be to-day;
His heart has planned your path and mine;
Have faith in God, have faith always"
Only a word for the Master,
Lovingly, quietly said
Only a word! Yet the Master heard,
And some fainting souls were fed.

He Cometh with Clouds.

THE Scripture in Rev. I:7 is generally quoted as a proof that our Lord Jesus at His Second Coming will be visible to the whole human family; that they will all have great mourning when they see Him; that it will be a sad day for them—especially for the Jews. Our thought respecting the passage, in the light of other Scriptures, is different from this. In the first place, the Lord Himself said, "Yet a little while, and the world seeth Me no more, but ye shall see Me." Only the Lord's faithful followers were to see Him. The Apostle Paul explains that Jesus' followers will see Him because they are to be changed in the First Resurrection, "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye." The Scriptures clearly indicate that our Lord's present condition is the Heavenly, the spirit condition, not only as high a condition as before He came into the world, but still higher.

-The Lord prayed to the Father that He would glorify Him with the glory that He had with Him before He came into the world—"before the world was." The Father assured Him that He had glorified Him and would glorify Him again. (John 17: 5; 12:28. Vatican MS.) The Scriptures also assure us that our Lord in His glorified condition is far above angels, principalities. and powers. (Philippians 2: 0, 10). When He was a man, He was "a little lower than the angels." (Heb. 2': 6-9). The Scriptures declare that the Lord is now the express image of the Father's person (Heb. I : 3), and also declare of Him, "Whom no man hath seen nor can see."

Another Scripture tells us that the coming of Christ will be for the blessing of the world. The very object of His coming will be for the lifting up of the poor and fallen race. St. Peter tells us that there will be "times of refreshing," "Times of Restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by, the mouth of ALL His Holy Prophets since the world began."—Acts 3: 20, 21.

How shall we harmonise this last statement with that of our text, which says that He shall come with, clouds ; that every eye shall see Him; and that all mankind "shall wail because of Him"? The answer is that in harmony with other Scriptures the coming with clouds would signify the coming in a period of trouble—the word "clouds" being used to signify trouble—in the dark Day. He is coming in clouds, in that the time in which He will first manifest Himself to the world will be a very dark Day to the world—"a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation," and, we are told,. never shall be again. (Matt. 24:21). That will be a dark, cloudy Day.

In that Day, ultimately all eyes shall be opened; and all mankind shall see Him with the eyes of their understanding—see Him in the sense that we see Him now, and have knowledge of Him and of the Father. A blind Man sees in the same sense. He says, "I see now"—meaning that he sees with his intellectual sight. It is far better to see with the intellect than with the natural sight.

Darkness now covers the earth. "The god of this world hath blinded the minds of all those who believe not." (2 Corinthians 4: 4). There are a great many blinded minds at the present time. They do not know the object of Christ's coming. They do not have the Scriptural teaching as to why He comes. But their blinded eyes shall be opened. Every human being shall come to an understanding of the fact that the Lord's Kingdom is for the blessing of "all the families of the earth" according to God's Promise made to Abraham and all the Prophets after his day.

The Jews will come to recognise Him. The Apostle Paul says, "Blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved" (Romans 11:25, 26) from their blindness, from their ignorance, from their misunderstanding at His presentation of Himself at His First Advent. Another Scripture says that when they see Him, recognise the "sign of the Son of Man in the heavens, then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." (Matthew 24: 30). The Prophet says that those that "pierced Him" shall mourn for Him as a man mourns for his only son. (Zechariah 12: 10). Thus they will appreciate Christ, and their eyes will be the first eyes that will be opened. But at that same time, when their eyes begin to see out of obscurity, there will not be anything that they can see with the natural sight.

There is first of all to be a parousia, or presence, of Christ, which is. known only to His Church, His Bride class. The culmination of His work in the parousia will be the gathering of the Church to Himself in the First Resurrection. The Scriptures go on to say that He shall be revealed in flaming fire, taking vengeance.

The "clouds of heaven" well represent the confusion in general. The world for a time will be in ignorance of His presence. But gradually they will come to know that they are in the time of trouble, the Day of wrath, in which this Age is to close.

Then they will mourn. The whole world will be in mourning. If the world has mourned in the past, much more shall we expect it to do so when the trouble will be general. In the midst of that trouble, they will gradually learn of the grace of God. Human selfishness, they will find, has been so overruled as to lead up to the glorious Kingdom of Messiah, through which are to come all the blessings which God has promised.

Earthly Way Finished.

EARLY last month the earthly course of an elderly member of our truth friends, in the person of Sister Bateson of the Dunolly (Vic.) district, was brought to a close, according to the Lord's good will.

While not widely known amongst the brethren, those who had met and become acquainted with our dear Sister could not fail to realise her sincerity and earnestness of heart and mind in her devotions to the Lord. For the past year or more particularly the spiritual progress of our departed member has been well in evidence, and in the closing hours such expressions as, "Though He slay me, yet will I trust Him," give assurance that her faith and trust in the Lord was full and complete, and so we have every hope of the heavenly inheritance with our Lord and Head having been gained, in harmony with His promise .to receive all faithful ones unto Himself, "that where I am there ye may be also."

Our warm sympathy and Christian love is extended to the bereaved members who suffer the loss of a very dear and loving Christian mother, and there is cause for thankfulness in realising that the life of our Sister Bateson now closed has been no small means, by the Lord's grace, of assisting her daughters and latterly one son to take their stand also on the Lord's side. It is a joy to know that these dear members have the comfort and consolation of the truth in their hearts, which surely relieves anxiety and grief as nothing else could do, and enables all God's people to praise Him in all things, for He doeth all things well. "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

The Bible Teaching concerning Death, Hell, Spiritism.

The stock of the above-mentioned booklet is now nearly exhausted, and a further edition will, be necessary shortly, as enquiries are continually received on the subjects dealt with in this work.

It has been thought that the friends generally may like a fresh copy of this booklet, and so in all probability it will take the place of the "People's Paper" for January, 1935. Should the new edition be ready in time, the copies shall be posted with our December issue of "People's Paper" to all readers. A supply will then be on hand for further use., at the usual price..

Correspondence. New Zealand, 22/10/34.

Dear Brother,

Greetings. I fully intended replying to your good letter of 18th September ere this, but, you know, time flies. In any case, my delay enables me to. report on my recent visit to Invercargill. On my way south I spent a week in Dunedin, and had good fellowship with Bro. and one or two others. At Gore, I only saw one sister, the other brethren are scattered too far off my line to visit, excepting a Bro. at Tuatapere, way down in the south-west corner of the island.

None of these, excepting Bro. , I think, get the “P.P.,” and have dropped the “Herald “ also. They are all badly in need (so it appeals to us) of a class to keep their interest alive in the work and brethren outside themselves. Still, they are holding on to the truth, and our heavenly Father knows their limitations and want of opportunity for fellowship with others. New Zealand is certainly peculiarly placed, but He knows!

I spent last week-end at Invercargill, and on Sunday looked up Bro. . I feel sure he is a consecrated brother, has a fair knowledge of the truth, and I was very glad of the privilege of helping him on some points he was not too sure about. Later, he took me to There we had a very interesting talk.

I had three of the “Divine Plan in Brief,” and have given them away; you might send me a dozen, and two or three more of the September “P.1’.”; also two or three hundred tracts, with a good proportion of “When Christ is King” and “Has the Bible a Message for To-day?”

This place is in the midst of the gold mining country, and the biggest river in N.Z. flows past my window. Along the banks are great mounds of gravel and stones. I sat on the top of one of these this morning, and thought that if man had spent the same energy in seeking for the true “Gold,” what a different world it would have been. Thank God that that great “Gold rush” will soon take place. “So Come, Lord, Jesus.”

I will enclose M/O against 12 booklets, the balance against tracts.

With much Christian love,

Your Brother by His grace, N.G.

Scotland, 26/9/34.

Dear Brethren,

Christian greetings. Another Sister and I will take two each of the pocket “Manna” when ready. Send them in one parcel to above address; I will send money to cover them when renewing “P. Paper,” which is very much enjoyed.

Yours by His grace, S.J.

New South Wales, 12/10/34..

Dear Sir,

In this month's "People's Paper" we read that the little hook, "Daily Manna," is to be printed. Will you please post to above address half a dozen of them as soon as you can? We think they would be a suitable Christmas gift, and may want more. I enclose 10/6, note and stamps.

And will oblige, yours respectfully,

D.J.W.

Sermon Books.

A few copies of "Pastor Russell's Sermons" are now on hand for disposal. Most of our readers know the value of these volumes of sermons containing 800 pages, and which are now difficult to procure. These are new copies, but slightly damaged on the covers. Posted for 2/9 per copy, while they last.

DANIEL, THE FAITHFUL.

Dan. 6.

At the time of this event, we are to consider Daniel was an old man. He had been long in service, wise and faithful in his administration of the government entrusted to him. He had seen the Babylonian Dynasty perish. In its place came the empire of the Medes and Persians. By these also Daniel's grand character was recognised—his loyalty to principle, his faithfulness as a public servant, his obedience to God and the principles of righteousness. The new Universal Empire was divided into one hundred and twenty provinces with one hundred and twenty governors. Over these were three presidents. Over these presidents was King Darius, above whom, as chief emperor, was Cyrus. Daniel was one of the three presidents, made such because of his recognised integrity and ability.

What a compliment was thus paid to this noble, consecrated Jew, and how the recognition of his ability marks the breadth of mind of some of the rulers of the past ! Their desire to have such a man in high repute and authority seems to evidence their good intentions in respect of the governing of the world. Indeed, we believe that this is true also of many noble-minded, modern monarchs—that they give to their subjects the best government of which they are capable, according to their own imperfect judgments.

That which will specially mark Messiah's Kingdom will be that it will not only have perfect ideals in respect of human government, but that it will be backed by Divine power, before which every knee shall bow and every tongue shall eventually confess.—Phil. 2: 10, 11.

Envious of Daniel.

From all that we know of the governments of the Orient, present and past, they have been full of dishonesty, of what in our day is designated "graft." A man like Daniel, in so important a place as that which he occupied as one of the three presidents or supervisors of a great empire, was sure to be in the way of grafters—a hinderer of their schemes. Realising that he could not be deposed, the first step was to find some fault with him which would secure his removal ; but the man's integrity and uprightness in general gave no hope in this direction.

Finally a scheme was concerted. They knew that Daniel's religion lay at the foundation of his entire course in life. They must involve him along the line of his devotion to his God or not at all. King Darius, like every other man, was approachable through flattery. It was a custom of the East to closely associate the king with religion. He was supposedly a favourite with his god, else he would not enjoy so high a station.

Working- upon this theory, the conspirators, high in office, approached the king with a project which they assured him would help to make strong and united the various parts of his empire. It was this : that the king should be recognised for a month as the only channel of mediation or access between his subjects and their god or gods. The claim was that such a recognition would elevate the dignity of the throne in the minds of the people. King Darius of course felt flattered and at once agreed to the arrangement and issued an order to that effect—never for a moment thinking of what might be the result in the case of Daniel; and never for a moment suspecting that his counsellors were seeking to entrap him and to legally accomplish the death of his most trusted officer.

Prayed Three Times Daily.

Daniel heard of the decree, but altered not his usual custom of praying three times every day before a window of his house which looked out toward Jerusalem. Morning, noon and night he remembered his God and remembered his vows of faithfulness to Him and called to mind the gracious promises respecting the Holy Land, that it would yet be the centre of the whole earth and of God's holy people; that eventually, through these, Divine blessings would be extended to every nation, people, kindred and tongue.

Some one has remarked that, as the sharpening of scythes in harvest time does not mean lost time or energy, so also time spent in prayer is not lost as respects the affairs of life. Unquestionably the best men and women in the world are those who pray, and pray regularly, who bow the knee, as did Daniel. Unquestionably the moments thus taken from earthly affairs are well spent and bring more than commensurate blessings upon the worshipper and all with which he has to do. Unquestionably it is impossible to live a consecrated life in neglect of prayer. What would Daniel have been without his praying time? How would his faith in God have persisted in that heathen land? How would his loyalty to principle have maintained itself in the midst of corruption had it not been for his communion with his Maker? To the Christian this privilege is still further enhanced by a realisation that "We have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ, the Righteous," in whose all-prevailing Name we may approach with courage the throne of heavenly grace, and obtain mercy and find grace to help in every time of need.—Heb. 4: 16.

Jehovah Sent His Angel.

The conspirators were on the lookout for Daniel. They had witnesses ready to testify, not that they had seen Daniel do anything wrong, but that he had violated the edict which the king had been entrapped into making and signing.

The matter was laid before the king and he was reminded that it was one of the principles of the empire that even the king himself could not change or alter an edict once sent forth. King Darius felt himself bound hand and foot and ensnared—trapped. All day he sought means whereby he could avert the consequences of his royal mandate, but he found none. He explained the matter to Daniel, assuring him that he believed that his God was able to deliver him. What a beautiful testimony to the uprightness of Daniel's life !

Daniel was cast into the lion's den and the stone for a door was secured with thongs, the knots of which were sealed with the king's signet, a safeguard against its being tampered with. That night, we are told, was one of great distress to the king. He could think only of his faithful officer, the noble man so unrighteously treated. He was ashamed of the part which he felt compelled to take in the matter. He was abroad early in the morning, after a sleepless night, to call to Daniel, to learn whether or not he were still alive. His joy of heart was great when he learned that he was still safe, that his God had sent His angel to stop the lions' mouths. Daniel was soon lifted from the pit ! Daniel was vindicated! His God was vindicated ! And the king now made another decree—that those counsellors who had thus sought the life of a faithful man should themselves be put to the test by being cast into the same den of lions ; and this, in their case, meant destruction, as the result proved.

Oh, that every Christian could and would live as high above the world's standards as did Daniel, so that their enemies might see clearly that they have no ground for charges except those to their credit ; that their God whom they serve is indeed the true God.

New Edition of "Daily Heavenly Manna."

The printers are now working on the new pocket edition of "Daily Manna," and in a few weeks' time the copies are expected to be ready, and shall be posted straight off to all who have ordered.

From present indications, the requirements of the brethren will now be met by the publication of a moderate number of these books, so the original price of 1/9 for single copies will apply. A reduction in price will still be made for three or more copies.

In addition to the cloth bound "Manna," a limited number will also be available good leather binding, and these should appeal to friends desiring a special copy for themselves, or for use as very nice and profitable gifts. These will be priced at about 2/9 per copy.

CHRISTMAS CONVENTION.

The members of the Melbourne Class are now making arrangements for their Annual Convention gatherings, and once again extend a hearty invitation to all friends who may be able to attend with them over the Christmas season.

The Convention will commence (D.V.) on Sunday, 23rd December, and will be continued on Tuesday and Wednesday, 25th and 26th December, with an outdoor gathering probably for the intervening Monday. A profitable and refreshing season may be expected by all who gather in spirit and in truth, in harmony with the Lord's promise to bless all who assemble in His name, from time to time.

The Melbourne friends will be pleased to hear as soon as possible from those members who contemplate being present at the Convention, so that the programme may be arranged to the best advantage. Accommodation can be secured for visiting brethren, and other information will be supplied as desired.

Pride of Heart Abominable.

PRIDE must take its stand with the other reprehensible qualities of the fallen human mind, character. The Scriptures recognise two conditions of heart, the right and the wrong. The one that God approves is called Love ; the other, the one that He disapproves, is Selfishness. All selfishness is opposed to God's Law. Anything selfish is contrary to the Divine purpose. The quality of pride is specially abominable to the Lord, because there is not a creature in the Universe that has anything of which to be proud. Everything that anyone has is a gift ;- it is not of his own manufacture or creation. God gives the blessing. "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights." (James 1: 17). It is of His fullness that we have received. Everyone, therefore, who is proud, is certainly very reprehensible in God's sight, for he has been only a recipient of favour, blessing. All God's creatures are dependent upon Him.

Wordly pride challenges faith in, God and obedience to Him. Only those of the Lord's people who are of good courage and full of confidence in the Lord can overcome this giant of pride. It is necessary that the victory should be made complete. Pride, in its every form, should be so thoroughly humiliated, killed, that it can never rise again to destroy us. This battle each one has to fight ; and the only proper weapon with which to overcome is the "Sword of the Spirit," showing us what is pleasing and acceptable in God's sight. "He that exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted."—Luke 18: 14.

Spiritual serenity is spiritual strength. It comes in by no softness of sentiment, but by thorough work. It comes by a faith that emboldens and energises the whole soul.—F D. Huntington.

What “Corrupt Communication” Signifies.

CORRUPT communication is the spreading of evil report or message instead of good. It might be understood to mean a corrupting communication according to the course of ordinary conversation. Our minds might get us into all kinds of difficulty with ourselves and with others, if we did not keep a rein upon them and hold them within certain bounds ; but our tongues might do even more injury than our minds. What we may think injures only ourselves ; but if our tongues come into the matter, not only are our own minds defiled, but there is contagion, there is rancor ; for the tongue spreads the matter all around. And whether the matter be true or false, the influence is corrupting, degrading, tending perhaps at times even toward immorality.

It would appear that not only amongst the worldly, but amongst the Lord’s people, there is a tendency to relate little incidents or make little remarks which, while not necessarily sinful, tend to cause sprouts of evil to develop.

It is along this line that the Apostle says we should let no corrupt communication proceed out of our mouth. If, by any mischance, any corrupting information has come to our attention, we should see to it that it goes no further. We sometimes wonder whether it is the quality of the natural mind to use the tongue to the disadvantage of others, or whether evil spirits have something to do with it.

Let us, as the Apostle enjoins, drop evil communications; shun them, and hold fast only to that which is edifying—the word “edifying” having in it the thought of an edifice, a building, the up-building of each other. .

But some, even of those who profess to love the Lord and to be trying to walk in His footsteps, will say, “I never speak anything but the truth ; and I mean no harm to anybody ; but I must have something to talk about when my neighbors come in, and many of them would think me tiresome if I should try to interest them in religious matters.” But it is evil speaking, slander all the same, and the scandal-monger, however refined his methods or words, well knows that so far from the scandal ministering grace to the hearer, it ministers evil; that the hearer, impelled by the forces of his fallen human nature, goes out to tell the scandal to others. The fallen nature feasts and revels in just such things, deluding many that they are thus moralising, preaching against sin, and that in thus discussing and impliedly denouncing the transgressions of another, they are mentioning matters abhorrent to themselves. Alas! their reasoning is seriously defective when the Lord’s counsels in righteousness are ignored.

There is surely broad scope for conversation among Christian people on the subject of the riches of God’s grace in Christ Jesus our Lord, expressed in the exceeding great and precious promises of the Divine Word. In these things we have indeed that which not only ministers grace to the hearer, but that which, adds also to the grace of the speaker. It showers blessing on every hand so far as the New Creature is concerned, and assists in deadening- the old nature with its evil desires, tastes and appetites.

This, evidently, is what the Apostle had in mind when he said that the Lord’s people should “show forth the praises of Him who called us out of darkness, into His marvellous light.” And a heart filled with the spirit of love, the spirit of God, the spirit of the Truth, and overflowing with the same will be sure to bestow it upon others; for, “Out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh”; “Blessed are the pure in heart.”—1 Peter 2: 9; Matt. 12: 34; 5: 8.

Finding and Losing.

To find my life in the sense in which the Master uses the expression, means to place myself first, and thus be carnally minded. It conveys the idea of loving and living for this present world, so that at the end of the course I shall find myself defeated rather than victorious; and finally fall short of that full reward which would otherwise have been mine. Therefore to find my life is to lose it.

In contradistinction to this, to lose my life for Christ's sake means to place Him first, and thus be spiritually-minded. It conveys the idea of living for eternity, so that at the end of the journey I shall prove victorious.

The Christian's Desire.

I want to be marked for Thine own;
Thy seal on my forehead to wear;
To receive that "new name" on the mystic white stone.
Which only Thyself can declare.

I want Thine own hands to unbind
Each tie to terrestrial things,
Too tenderly cherished, too closely entwined,
Where my heart too tenaciously clings.

I want, by mine aspect serene,
Mine actions and words to declare
That my treasure is placed in a country unseen,
That my heart and affections are there.

I want, as a traveller, to haste Straight onward,
nor pause on my way,
No forethought or anxious contrivance to waste
On my tent, only pitched for a day.

I want (and this sums up my prayer)
To glorify Thee till I die;
Then calmly to yield up my soul to Thy care,
And breathe out in prayer my last sigh.

The Babe of Bethlehem.

WHY were all men in expectation of Him at the time of His birth? What was to be peculiar about Him to lead Israel to expect His birth? The answer to this question is that God had made a certain promise centuries before and the promise had not been fulfilled. This promise contained the thought that a holy child would be born, and that in some way, not explained in the promise, this child would bring the blessing the world needed.

The promise behind the expectation was that which God made to Abraham, saying, "In thee and in thy Seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." From that time forward Abraham began to look for the promised Seed—the promised child. He looked first of all to his own children, and was finally informed that it would not be one of his children direct, but that through their children, at some remote date, this child should be born—the Seed of Abraham. From that time onward, all the Israelites were waiting for the birth of the child that should bring the blessing.

But why was a Messiah necessary? Why wait at all for the birth of the child? The answer to this question is that sin had come into the world; that God had placed our first parents—holy, pure and free from sin—in the glorious conditions of the Garden of Eden with every favourable prospect and everlasting life at their command if they continued in harmony with God. But by reason of their disobedience they came under Divine displeasure and sentence of death. This sentence of death has brought in its wake aches, pains, sorrows, tears, sighing, crying and death—all of these experiences as the result of sin.

Our heavenly Father said to our first parents—and this was the first intimation that He gave them of a deliverance—that "The Seed of the woman shall bruise the Serpent's head." The serpent in this expression means Satan—all the powers of evil, everything adverse to humanity, everything adverse to the blessings which God had given them, and which they had lost by disobedience. But the promise was vague and they understood little about the "Seed of the woman" and "bruising the Serpent's head." It merely meant in an allegorical way a great victory over Sin and Satan, without explaining how it should come.

So mankind continued to die; they continued to have aches and pains and sorrows; they continued going down to the tomb. They realised that what they needed was some Saviour to come and deliver them from the power of sin, to deliver them from the death penalty of sin—a Saviour who would be, in other words, a Life-giver. They were dying and needed new life. This is the meaning of the word Saviour in the language used by our Lord and the Apostles. They were hoping and expecting that God would send a Life-giver.

It was on this account that they were so greatly concerned regarding the promise made to Abraham —“In thee and in thy Seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed”—they shall be granted a release from sin and death. In no other way could mankind be blessed. It would be impossible to bless mankind except by releasing them from sin and death. Hence, the Scriptures tell us of God’s sympathy ; that God looked down from His holy habitation, and beheld our sorrow, and heard, figuratively, “the groaning of the prisoners”—humanity —all groaning and travailing under this penalty of death—some with few aches and pains, and some with more aches and pains; some with few sorrows, and some with greater sorrows, but all groaning and travailing in pain.

But God’s sympathy was manifested; and we read that, “He looked down and beheld that there was no eye to pity and no arm to save” and with “His own Arm He brought salvation.” This is what was promised to Abraham—that one should come from his posterity who would be the Saviour of the world; and because this promise was made to Abraham and to his Seed, they were marked out as separate from all other nations and peoples. To the Jewish nation alone belonged this great honour —that through them should come this salvation. Hence, from that time onward the Jews spoke of themselves as God’s people, the people whom God had promised to bless, and through whom He would bring a blessing to all others. Therefore, all other people were called heathen (or nations, which the word means).

Israel was thus separated because God’s Covenant was with them, and not with the others. But God’s Covenant with Israel was for the blessing of all the others : “In thy Seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed.” Now, we have the “Why” of this wonderful babe’s being born.

How was this Babe Peculiar—Holy, Harmless, Undeified?

How could He be a Saviour? In what way could He be different from any other babe? Why not use some other babe as the one through whom salvation should come? The answer of the Bible is that salvation could not come to mankind unless there should be a satisfaction of Justice on account of Original Sin. That must be the first consideration. The penalty, “Dying, thou shalt die,” pronounced against the first man, must be met before the world could be blessed.

Why not let any man die? Because all were ‘under the sentence of the original condemnation, and none could be a Ransom-price or a substitute. Hence the necessity for a specially born babe, different from any other babe. In what way was this One differently born? The Bible explains to us very distinctly that He was not begotten of an earthly father. Although Joseph was espoused to Mary, yet this child was not the child of Joseph. The Bible explains that this child was specially begotten by Divine power, in the mother, though she was still a “virgin” when she brought forth the child.

This is the Scriptural proposition ; and while it may not seem clear to some, yet the Word of God standeth sure. If the Redeemer was not perfect then He could not be the Saviour of the world. The promised redemption implied that Jesus would be perfect ; it implied that He would be as the first man was before he sinned. “For since by man came death, by man shall come also the resurrection of the dead”; “As all in Adam die, even so shall all in Christ be made alive.”

So this one must be, as the Apostle declares, “holy, harmless, undeified and separate from sinners.” (Heb. 7:26). He must be entirely distinct and separate from humanity so far as sinful features were concerned. If we had time it would be interesting to go into the scientific features--of how a perfect child could be born from an imperfect mother. If we can have a perfect life germ we can have a perfect child from an imperfect mother. And so, if we had perfect fathers, we would soon have a perfect race. But there is no father who can produce a perfect child. Hence it was necessary in this case (and the Scriptures declare it was accomplished) that God should beget this Son by power from on high. Therefore, that which was born of the “virgin” was separate and distinct from all humanity. His life came not from an earthly father, but from His Heavenly Father.

Who Was He Thus Born?

It is written that before He became flesh Jesus had an existence; as He declared, “Before Abraham was, I am.” Again, in one of His prayers, He said, “Father, glorify Thou Me with the glory that I had with Thee before the world was.” The Revelator tells us that “He was the beginning of the creation of God,” and Paul says that “by Him all things were made.” And so our Lord Jesus was not only the beginning, but also the active agent of the Father in all the creative work in the angelic world and in the creation of humanity, and in all things that were created.

The whole matter is summed up, by the Apostle John. We will give a more literal translation of “In the beginning Was the Word.” (This expression, Word, in the Greek is Logos. The thought behind the word Logos is that in olden times a king, instead of speaking his commands directly to his people, sat behind a lattice work, and his Logos, or messenger, or word, or representative, stood before the lattice work, and gave the message of the king to the people in a loud tone of voice. The king himself was not seen by the people—The Logos was the one seen. So this is the picture the Scriptures give us of how Jesus was the express representative of the Heavenly Father, the One through whom the[^] Heavenly Father made Himself known—the Word, or the Logos. So we read in the first chapter of John), “In the beginning was the Logos, and the Logos was with the God, and the Logos was a god. The same was in the beginning with the God. By Him were all things made, and without Him was not anything made.”

In other words, Jesus was the direct Creator of all things. He was the Divine Power, Agent, Word, Messenger, the Logos of Jehovah. He did all the great work of creation ; but He Himself was the first of God’s direct creation, the First-born of all creatures, that in all things He might have the pre eminence—the first place.

When the time came that our Heavenly Father made known His great purpose that He would bless the world, He gave opportunity to this First-begotten One—this One begotten of the Father—to be the servant in this great work He intended to accomplish for mankind. Consequently, the Scriptures state that “for the joy set before Him he endured the cross, despising the shame.” And now He has sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on high. He has this great reward because of His obedience even unto death, the death of the cross.

The Apostle speaks of Him as having been rich, but for our sakes becoming poor, that through His poverty we might be made rich. He tells us how He left the glory which He had with the Father and humbled Himself to the human nature. Why

Because, as already stated, it was necessary that some one should become man’s Redeemer ; an angel could not redeem man, neither could an animal redeem man. The Divine law is “an eye for an eye; a tooth for a tooth ; a man’s life for a man’s life.” This was to teach us a great lesson: that perfect human life having been condemned to death, it would require a perfect human life to redeem it. It was therefore necessary that Jesus should become the “Man Christ Jesus,” in order “that He, by the grace of God, might taste death for every man.”

What Results Have Followed?

The results that have followed have been that He Himself proved His own faithfulness. “Being found in fashion as a man, He humbled Himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross”—the most ignominious form of death. It pleased the Father thus to prove Him, not only by death, but by the most ignominious form of death —dying as a culprit, being crucified between two thieves. What a terrible ignominy to die thus !

It would be ignominy enough for us in our imperfection, but for Him, perfect, “holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners,” it must have been a cause for deep and poignant sorrow. Having completed the laying down of

His life, at the end of the three and a half years, He cried, “It is finished!” What? Not His work, for much of that lay before Him! He merely finished this part of the work, finished laying down His life a ransom-price.

What next? After His death came His resurrection ; and we read that “God raised Him from the dead on the third day.” According to the Scriptures He was raised up from death a glorious being—”Sown in corruption, raised in incorruption; sown in dishonour, raised in glory ; sown in weakness, raised in power; sown a natural body, raised a spirit body”; “Wherefore God hath highly exalted Him and given Him a name that is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, those in heaven, and those on earth, and those under the earth; that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.”—Phil. 2: 10.

But we see not yet all knees bowed to Him. Why not? The Scriptures tell us that before He begins His great work for the world of mankind, He first does a work for the elect, the Church, those who desire to walk in His footsteps, to gather out of the world a Bride, to be co-workers with Him in all the great work of the Father. This is the only work yet in process of accomplishment, and this has been going on now for over eighteen centuries. We see how He gathered out the saintly ones from amongst the Jews, “Israelites, indeed, in whom there was no guile.” Not finding enough to make the desired number, He proceeded to gather them from all nations, kindreds, tongues and peoples.

The Apostle tells us that when this Bride class is united with Him they shall be parts of the Seed of Abraham; as we read, “And if ye be Christ’s then are ye Abraham’s Seed, and heirs of the promise.” (Gal. 3 ; 29). This statement relates to the promise made to Abraham, that through him and his Seed all the families of the earth shall be blessed. Thus we see the work that Christ is accomplishing now.

The invitation to become the Bride of Christ is a very special invitation and those who would be His must walk in the “narrow way.” If they will sit in His Throne, they must suffer with Him. If they suffer with Him they shall also share His glory. So “the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that shall follow,” were not only to be accomplished in our Lord Jesus, personally, but He was an example for all the Church who are justified through faith in His blood. They have a share with Him in His sufferings, and will share in His glory; they have a share in the First Resurrection, as the Revelator declares, “Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the First Resurrection, on such the Second Death hath no power; but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with Him a thousand years.”—Rev. 20: 6.

Saint Paul says, “I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord,” “that I might know Him and the power of His resurrection” (the special resurrection) to the divine nature. How ? By being made conformable to His death ; for, “If we suffer with Him we shall also reign with Him.”

What About the Future?

All the families of the earth are to be blessed, as originally promised in Eden: “The Seed of the woman shall bruise the Serpent’s head.” Also, as St. Paul states in the 16th chapter of Romans, “The very God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly.” So, then, the next thing in order in the outworking of God's Plan will be to bruise Satan and destroy sin.

When will Satan be bound or restrained? Just as soon as this Age shall end; because this Age is merely for the development of the Bride class ; then will come the promised Free Grace to all the families of the earth. Messiah's Kingdom shall come. He has promised that when He shall reign, all His faithful shall reign with Him: "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in My Throne, even as I overcame and am set down with My Father in His Throne." All the Church will be associated with Him in His great Messianic Kingdom; and "He shall reign from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth"; and "Unto Him every knee shall bow and every tongue confess, to the glory of God the Father"; "The knowledge of the glory of God shall fill the whole earth." The whole earth will become as the Garden of Eden. Paradise Lost will be Paradise Restored. The divine image lost in Adam will be restored to man. Human nature will be brought to perfection. But the glorious reward to the Church will be the divine nature, to be like her Lord, to sit at His right hand, and to bless the world of mankind. Man will become not only perfect, having all that Adam had, but will have additional knowledge and character; and there is every evidence that this shall be an eternal blessing.

Shall None Be Lost?

Yes, the Scriptures tell us that some will be lost, and that the loss they shall sustain will be loss of life, and therefore all the pleasures of life. "They shall be as though they had not been"; "They shall be destroyed from amongst the people." St. Peter says, "They shall be destroyed as brute beasts."—Acts 3: 23 ; 2 Pet. 2:12.

When? When the eyes of their understanding shall have been opened to see the Lord and to understand His glorious character, and they shall have had opportunity to appreciate and enjoy His blessing. When such intentionally reject the grace of God, they shall die the Second Death, from which there is no resurrection, no hope of recovery. But, thank God, there shall be no knowledge of suffering for them; they shall be destroyed as brute beasts.

In proportion as we believe in this Babe of Bethlehem shall we rejoice to-day. In proportion as we believe He was manifested on our behalf ; in proportion as we believe He died for our sins ; in proportion as we recognise Him as the glorified Saviour ; in proportion as we have surrendered our hearts to Him and seek to do the things well pleasing to Him shall we have the peace of God. .

Our hope on behalf of mankind in general is that in God's due time His blessing shall reach all—not the same as that for the Church, but as St. Peter tells us in Acts 3: 20, 21, "He shall send Jesus Christ, who before was preached unto you, whom the heavens must retain until the Times of Restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all the holy Prophets."

"III that He blesses is our good
And unblessed good is ill.
And all is right that seems most wrong
If it is His sweet will."

"Looking Back We Praise the Way."

IT is fitting that the Lord's people should continually keep in mind the mercies and blessings they enjoy, otherwise the pressure of the cares of this life and the deceitfulness (of riches would so crowd in upon our minds and hearts as to cover from our observation and ultimately choke up completely the springs of divine grace, which, kept open, minister continually to our joy and refreshment in the holy spirit.

To this end it is appropriate that we have a daily review of the blessings we enjoy—that every evening we call to mind the privileges enjoyed, the providences which have guided our way, and the blessings, both temporal and spiritual, which have come to us; some of them in common with the world in general and others of a special kind known to and appreciated by those only who know the Shepherd and are known of Him.

It is appropriate, too, that we take weekly reviews, looking at the same mercies and blessings from a still broader standpoint of observation, reminding us of the rest into which we have entered through faith in the precious blood, and also of the rest that remains for the people of God, whereof God has given us assurance in that on the first day of the week He raised up Jesus from the dead.-- Heb. 4: 3, 9.

But it is with special appropriateness that at the close of the still larger cycle of a year we should take a still broader and more comprehensive view of our experiences, looking circumspectly at the way we have travelled and considering well which have been steps which have hindered progress, and which have been proper steps in the footprints of Jesus, bringing us nearer to the goal—the "mark" which we must surely attain if we would be accounted worthy of a share in the promised Kingdom.

Such an advanced Christian looks back through the year and recalls life's storms as well as its sunshine, its sorrows as well as its joys, its tears as well as its smiles, and sorrows not as others who have no hope. His troubles have been divested of their fearful features, and minimised by the spirit of a sound mind, and the instructions of God's Word, which assures all such that the trials, difficulties and adversities of life, rightly accepted as lessons, are blessings in disguise—which will work out "a far more exceeding and an eternal weight of glory" in the life to come.-2 Cor. 4: 16, 17.

He will perceive, too, that his joys have been of a purer and a more solid kind than any he ever knew before he was begotten of the holy spirit. They have not had commingled with them 'the bitterness of envy, malice and hatred, but have been unalloyed; because they have not been rejoicing in iniquity, but rejoicing in the truth. Moreover, they have been much more numerous than ever before ; because he not only is able to joy in the Lord, joy in His Word, joy in the holy spirit, joy in fellowship with brethren of like precious faith, but by the grace of God he has been enabled additionally to joy in tribulation also—not because he loved tribulation, but because he loved the patience, the experience, the character, which God assures us are a fruitage which all tribulations must yield us under His providence, if we are rightly exercised thereby--James 1: 3, 4; Rom. -5: 3.

Of whom are all these things true? Not of every one, surely, for we know many who have no such experience—the world that lieth in darkness knows not God. Nor are these experiences true of all people of intelligence—nominally Christians. Comparatively few of those who profess the name of Christ enjoy these precious experiences, or will be able to look back- upon the year with satisfaction of this kind, realising that God has crowned the year with His goodness. This is so, because they have not taken the necessary step of full consecration to the Lord, to bring them under His protecting care and under the enlightening influence of His Word through His spirit ; or, having taken the step of consecration, they have not been performing their vows, but seeking to serve both God and Mammon, without pleasing either, and without receiving satisfactory blessings from either.

The class which can and does look back through the year from the standpoint that we have described—the class which looking back can see that God's goodness has crowned every feature of life throughout the year, is the "little flock," the true Church, whose names are written in heaven—the body of Christ, the Bride class. They are the true Zion, which shall shortly be set up, filled with divine glory, the joy of the whole earth, and the divine channel of blessing to all the families of mankind ; "For out of Zion shall go the Law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." These are of the elect Church, of which Christ is the Head, and are the faithful "feet" members who, now fulfilling their vows of sacrifice, are companions in the sufferings of Christ, as by and by they shall be His companions also in the glory that shall be revealed. (Rom. 8:17, 18). They are God's choice, or His "elect," for, as the Apostle informs us, God has predestinated that this class whom He is selecting shall all be copies of His Son. (Rom. 8: 29). They shall dwell in His house —they will be members of the great Temple which the Lord God is building of spiritual stones, in and through which He will bless the world with a knowledge of Himself and /His grace.-1 Pet. 2: 4-8.

Is it any wonder that these can rejoice in spirit saying, "Praise the Lord, O my Soul, and forget not all His benefits"? "He hath put a new song into my mouth, even the loving kindness of our God." Surely, then, it is that these, in looking back, can see in the year that is past that that which has blessed and rejoiced them in every sense of the word has been of divine goodness, and that thus God has crowned the whole year with His favour toward them through Christ Jesus, and they thus appreciate it to the full.

Storms on the Sea of Life.

“He maketh the storm a calm.”—Psalm 107:29.

If there is anything in the world which causes a man to feel his own littleness it is a storm at sea. The voyagers realise that no human arm could calm that storm. The text, then, refers to the Almighty One, our Heavenly Father.

Our heavenly Father, however, always uses instrumentalities. The Scriptures tell us that after He had created one great being, He rested. This One was the Logos, the Only Begotten of the Father, the First-born of all creation. (Colossians 1:15; Revelation 3: 14). All the power the Father has since exercised has been through the Lord Jesus.

The passage of Scripture used as our text may not have been understood fully and completely by the Psalmist, the one who uttered this prophecy. Like many other Scriptures it has a special application to the Church of Christ. The Apostle Paul tells us that these things were written beforehand for our admonition, instruction. (1 Corinthians 10:11). We believe that nearly all the prophecies recognise the Lord and His Body first. There have been many storms permitted by the Lord to come upon the little company of His followers. Sometimes the whole journey of life has been a stormy one. We sometimes sing, “When the storms of life are raging.” in his Epistles, the Apostle intimates that those who do not have storms, trials and difficulties lack proof that they are God’s children ; for God would not be dealing with such as His children. —Hebrews 12: 7, 8.

If we are children of God, we need to have trials and testings, that these may make us meet for the inheritance of the saints in light. (Colossians 1:13). In all these experiences, the tendency of the trial is to drive us nearer to the Lord, to make us feel that we need the Divine shelter and care. And so a blessing comes out of these storms. We are not to think of God as making these storms, either literal or figurative. Satan is the great Enemy. While literal storms come about by natural laws, apparently, yet there may be a power exercised by spirit beings to produce them. During our Lord’s ministry, a storm of this kind was raised on the Sea of Galilee. The storm was so sudden and so great that, although the lake is not very large, the boat seemed in danger of going down, and the disciples, although experienced fishermen, were in terror. Jesus was asleep in the end of the boat. They came to Him and said, “Master! carest Thou not that we perish?”

Storms a Test of Faith.

Satan knew that Jesus and the disciples were in the boat on the sea. Perhaps he thought that by causing this storm he could destroy Jesus and thwart the Father’s Plan. Jesus rebuked the storm.

This lie would not have done, we suppose, if it had been caused by the Father. Then he applied the lesson to the disciples, saying, “O ye of little faith, why did ye doubt?”

The Lord’s evident intention in letting the storm go as far as it did was to test the faith of the disciples, and to give a lesson such as this text is giving us now. It would cause them to remember in future years, in all their difficulties, whether from their own imperfections, or the imperfections of others, or as the result of the work of fallen angels, that all things were under Divine oversight. This also we should remember : We have the assurance that all these things will work for good to us, and that He will with the temptation provide also a way of escape, that we may be able to bear it.-1 Cor. 10: 13.

This was illustrated in the storm on the sea, and the Lord's act in rebuking the storm. So if we have trials and difficulties, we should cry unto the Lord—we should exercise faith enough to cry unto Him. It should not be that blind faith which would say, "Whatever the fates have ordained, that is my portion; and there is no escape." This latter is the condition of the heathen, but is not the case with us. The Lord allows the storms to press us more and more so that we will cry unto Him. Then He will hear us and give us the necessary deliverance. He may not always make it a very speedy deliverance, but He will make a way for us to escape. We must remember also that it is the New Creature with which He is dealing. These storms may be right inside, in our own person—storms of passion, of anger, of resentment. These we are not to allow to go on; but we are to cry for the Lord's help, that we may be overcomers of these storms—trials.

Great Storm of Wrath Coming.

This incident on the Sea of Galilee pictures what the Lord is doing for the Church now, and what He will do in the future for the world. He intends to deliver the whole world from sin and death, which have had a long reign of six thousand years. This period has been one continuous storm, with occasional brief lulls. Meantime, the world is receiving certain great lessons as to the desirability of harmony with God. By and by they will come to understand, and will then greatly appreciate the importance of being fully in accord with God and very obedient to the Divine direction. Thus a foundation stone is being laid in their education for the next Age.

Finally, this storm on Galilee seems to picture very graphically the great time of trouble with which this Age will end. Then the reign of Satan will cease, and the reign of Messiah will begin.

We are not to think of Jesus' Kingdom as bringing about the great time of trouble. The Scriptural thought seems rather to be that Christ's work in the present time is with the Church, and that with the completion of the Church, with the glorification of the Church, Christ's Kingdom will be set up. This Day of Trouble will be more particularly the Day of Jehovah. In this, Divine Justice will have a hand.

We do not mean, however, to exclude the Lord Jesus, for He is the chief factor in all that God does. But when the Kingdom of Messiah comes, it will exercise a restraining power—will bring down the lofty, will turn the wrath of man so as to cause it to praise God: This wrath of man will bring "a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation." In some of the Scriptural pictures it is represented as a whirlwind, and in others it is represented as a great tidal wave—the sea and the waves will roar. Then in the midst of a great storm, which will be sufficient to wreck the whole human fabric, Messiah's Kingdom will be set up. It will cause wars to cease. Satan will be bound. The light of the knowledge of the glory of God will fill the whole earth. "The desire of all nations shall come," and will be recognised in the making of the storm a calm, by this Kingdom of Messiah.

The River Jordan

(Extract from Melbourne "Age.")

NO river has been so widely spoken about as the 'Jordan. The Bible very rarely mentions it, but its influence upon the imagination of man is unique. Other rivers attract larger numbers of pilgrims, but not from such various and distant lands. Its place in hymnology is conspicuous, and it gives its name to the stream which in Bunyan's immortal allegory divides this world from the next.

Sir George Adam Smith, in his "Historical Geography of the Holy Land," says there is nothing on this planet to match the Jordan Valley, no other sinks to 300 feet below the level of the ocean. "But here we have a rift more than one hundred and sixty miles long, and from two to fifteen broad, which falls from the sea level to as deep as 1292 feet below it at the coast of the Dead Sea, while the bottom of the latter is 1300 feet deeper still."

The Jordan River is nearly one hundred miles long, has two great lakes, one twelve miles in length, and the other fifty-three. Its source is in Mount Hermon and the surrounding hills, but there are four streams which unite before entering the so-called Lake of Huleh, and each claims the honor of being the source of the Jordan. Two of them, the Banias and the Leddan, have generally been regarded as the true sources.

The Lake of Galilee has been called the focus of the whole province. Galilee is a fertile land with world highways crossing it in all directions. One can travel by this route from the Nile to the Euphrates. The lake was a bustling centre 1900 years ago, and is for ever associated with the ministry of the Son of Man.

The lake is shaped like a harp, is nearly thirteen miles long, and eight miles in width at its broadest part. The view has suggested some resemblance to a Scottish loch, but Smith points out that the loch would require to have little wood on the hills around. These hills are bare, and Treves, writing before the war, called Palestine "the land that is desolate." British rule is changing everything of that kind. The Turk blighted the land. In the north of the lake the hills rise near Safed to 4000 feet, but below, at Gennesaret, they sink to 680 feet. At one time the lake boasted nine towns, each with no fewer than 1500 inhabitants. Some of their names were Tiberias, Capernaum, Bethsaida, Chorazin and Magdala.

Modern science and enterprise are working miracles in and around the Jordan. Drainage schemes are exterminating the mosquito and putting an end to malaria. The Rockefeller Foundation has contributed handsomely in men and money to secure the health of the people, and recent official reports show that agriculture is flourishing. Quite recently Palestine was the only country that complained of a scarcity of labor. As yet coal and oil are not found in great quantity, so the Jordan is being harnessed and made to work for its living. Wherever one looks now he sees steel pylons being erected to convey electrical energy generated by the waters of the river; a Russian engineer is in charge, and the power plant is south of the Sea of Galilee. Major Edward Keith-Roach, writing in the National Geographic magazine, says that regulating sluices and dams have been built across the Jordan River and its tributary the Yarmuk. "These two sources are connected with a mile long canal, and the flowing waters are diverted into turbines generating 8500 horse power each. The energy is transmitted across Palestine at 66,000 volts."

This development has created world-wide interest, because it includes a scheme for securing more power by damming up the waters of the Lake of Galilee. This involves the obliteration of such towns as Tiberias and others with equally sacred associations. The British Government, questioned about this in the House of Commons, has promised to make full inquiry. There is still a great deal of sacred sentiment in the world, and it has a claim as against utilitarianism.

From the Lake of Galilee to the Dead Sea is 65 miles. The Jordan loses itself in the Dead Sea, whose history opens ominously with Sodom and Gomorrah. It has no outlet, and finds relief only in evaporation, and to this is due its bitterness. Strange qualities are produced probably by springs in the bottom of the sea. Round about are sulphur and petroleum springs. The sea's salt content is five times that of the ocean. It looks a beautiful blue when seen from a distance. At a depth of twenty feet one can count the pebbles. A stick rests on the surface as on a mirror. It is difficult to sink the limbs deep enough for swimming. It is said that no fish can exist in the waters. The doomed cities lay on the floor of the Jordan, but no one knows where. The Dead Sea is now a resort of tourists from Jerusalem, and the return fare for the journey of 25 miles each way is only half a crown. A kiosk provides refreshments.

The Jordan has seen stupendous changes, and passed through a long history which furnishes material for endless moralising and many forceful metaphors. Its goal seems unworthy of its romantic origin, but out of the sea which it feeds there promises to emerge an industry which will provide new supplies for human need. Chemicals are stored in its depth, and await the enterprise and skill of man. The river had parted for chosen souls, but reached the zenith of its glory when at the Sea of Galilee it saw the glory of Divinity in human form walking upon the troubled waters.

GRACE SUFFICIENT.

Bear the burden of the present,
Let the morrow bear its own;
If the morning sky be pleasant,
Why the passing night bemoan?

If the darkened heavens lower,
Wrap thy cloak around thy form;
Though the tempest rise in power,
God is mightier than the storm.

Steadfast faith and hope unshaken,
Animate the trusting breast;
Step by step the journey's taken
Nearer to the land of rest.

All unseen, the Master walketh
By the toiling servant's side:
Comfortable words He talketh,
While His hands uphold and guide.

Grief, nor pain, nor any sorrow
Rends thy heart to Him unknown;
He to-day and He to-morrow
Grace -sufficient 'gives His own.

Then bear thy burden with good cheer.
Take promptly up thy daily cross;
Nor hesitate to shed a tear,
Nor reckon o'er thy present loss.

Beholding-- Changed.

I have in my life-time met people whose faces shone with the glory of God. What brings this bright look on the face? It is from living near to God, talking to Him, being one with Him and letting Him fight the battles; being taken up completely with God, forgetting one's self and living for others. Every one who lives a life of this sort will have a shining face and will not know it either.—Selected.

To-day's Paradox.

Want in the Midst of Plenty.

A Heartbroken Clergyman.

LONDON, 7th October.

IN the course of his sermon at the City Temple to-day, Rev. Cyril Norwood dealt with world conditions generally, and made particular reference to the paradox of want existing in the face of plentiful supplies of food.

"We have reached the end of the road," Mr. Norwood said. "We cannot persist in the paradox of simultaneously demanding plenty and scarcity. I am almost heartbroken with the prospect of the world's beauty, wonder and fertility side by side with its hunger, weariness and hate. We have conquered scarcity, but we have no technique for handling that abundance. The world, frightened of the earth's fertility, is practising contraception upon the seeds—wheat, wool, sugar, cotton, silk, rubber, rice, tin and coffee—stalling at birth man's fundamental necessities for fear of disturbing prices."

News.

How true it is that man in his fallen condition lacks the necessary wisdom and is blinded by selfishness so that he cannot bring about a happy condition of peace by a proper distribution of the bountiful provision for all.

It would seem to be part of the great Creator's plan to allow man to realise his inability, apart from Divine instruction, to arrange matters, and to reach his extremity. Then the new age will open up, the new Prince will take control, and a new spirit will influence the people.

Until now, as the Scriptures say, Satan is the prince and his spirit of malice, envy, strife, greed and murder prevails, and "the wicked prosper as a green bay tree." When Christ, the new Prince, takes control, and Satan is restrained, a new spirit of brotherhood, of love, mercy, kindness and care for one another will influence men and women. The wicked will be punished, and the righteous will be rewarded and "flourish like a palm"—"in that day."

Humility in Truth.

(Convention Address)

“Be subject one to another and be clothed with humility; for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God that He may exalt you in due time.” (1 Pet. 5:5, 6.)

IN His sermon on the mount our Lord said, “Blessed are the poor in spirit”—that is, divinely approved are the humble minded, the contrite ones, those who sincerely acknowledge their smallness and imperfection, lacking in selfconfidence and self-esteem. Further, we are exhorted, “Doing nothing from party spirit or vainglory, but in humility esteeming others as excelling yourselves.” (Phil. 2:3.) Also, in Col. 3:12, we are admonished as the elect of God to put on humbleness of mind, meekness and long-suffering. Further, the Apostle James assures us, “God resisteth the proud but giveth grace unto the humble,” and exhorts us, “Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord and He shall lift you up.”

We who have traversed to some extent along the straight way understand that lowliness of mind—humility—is a mental quality which enables its possessor to look up with appreciation, not only to God, but also to earthly beings, recognising their good qualities, and giving honour to whom honour is due. The Apostle urges that this lowliness of mind should be in all God’s people. Not all of the Lord’s people are lowly in mind; some think more highly of themselves than they ought to think. Some may be proud of having the truth, or their ability to serve the truth. Any such pride is very objectionable in the sight of the Lord and indicates that its possessor is very small in mind, for, with a proper estimate of matters, the best of us can see that we have nothing of which to be proud, nothing of which to boast. What does the Apostle say? “Who maketh thee to differ . . . and what hast thou that thou didst not receive? Now if thou didst receive it, why dost thou glory as if thou hadst not received it?” In receiving any-thing from the Lord we should acknowledge our receipts instead of glorying in something as if we had attained it of ourselves. So the Lord’s people should spend earnest effort to stimulate and encourage humility.

When we come to consider the Apostle Paul’s injunction, “In humility esteeming others as excelling ourselves,” it is a question as to what he meant. Those who have come into Christ should make progress, and should, therefore, feel that they are better than they were when they first came to the Lord. Such as are in Christ know that they are not lower than all others. Evidently the Apostle did not mean that the Lord’s people should rate themselves as inferior to other men; we certainly are not to bear false witness of ourselves. In what way, then, are we to understand the Apostle’s words? We are to realise that no two of the Lord’s people are just alike. If we have the right view upon the matter, we shall think of our own talents in a humble manner. We should feel that having something of this quality or that talent of grace, we would, therefore, have that much responsibility to the Lord. Then we would need to consider whether we are using as faithfully as we could all our talents which may be greater than those of our brethren. Though they may have less than we have, they may be using their all with more resolute purpose to succeed than we are using what we have. If this be so, then such are better in this respect than we. As we look round in the Lord’s family we are bound to see the weaknesses and frailties of its various members. We are not to allow our thoughts to dwell too much upon their undesirable qualities however, but are to remember all their good ones, especially their loyalty of heart. It is always a recommendation in any one that God has called and accepted him. Although at times we might not be able to esteem some so highly according to their natural qualities, yet we would do them good as we have opportunity. Some may not be so select as we would desire, yet God may esteem them more highly than we do, and we know that is what counts. Realising this we should try to keep very humble and learn whatever helpful lessons we might get from even the babes in Christ, as God may use such to test our humility of mind. In all persons there are certain qualities that may be esteemed and appreciated. We are not fully competent to read the heart, and, therefore, we are to think kindly and generously of all whom God has brought into His family; and let us not think that because some are young in the truth God does not approve them as much and perhaps more than ourselves.

Humility is the only path to glory; the heavenly Father has deep love for those who are humble. Since we find “God resisteth the proud,” and that humility is one of the basic principles of a properly crystallised character, we should more and more seek to develop this grace and attain to the attitude in which God can give us the greatest blessing.

In humbling ourselves we are not to think that we have no talent, no power, no ability; such an attitude would not be sound-mindedness. If, on the other hand, one who has by nature too low an estimate of himself, submits himself to God, He will show him the proper attitude of mind through permitting circumstances to come to pass for[^] his encouragement, possibly through the brethren, etc.

In proportion as we seek to become acquainted with God, and submit ourselves to His will, in that same proportion we become balanced in mind. He who receives the mind of Christ, the mind of God, the holy mind, is instructed more thoroughly by the Word. Thus we get the balance of a sound mind, the spirit of a sound mind; our reasoning faculties become more developed as we grow in grace and in knowledge of the truth. If we would ‘Make any true progress we must say from the heart, “Thy will, not mine, be done.” We know that God’s will is best, whether we understand that Will or not. A person with large self-esteem might, as a natural man, think his own will better, but when he comes to see the truth he will say, I have made mistakes before, but now I will do the Lord’s way as near as I can discern it. Such a course would evidence real humility. As one would progress in the good way and see more clearly ‘wherein he had made mistakes, his humility would increase: So’ we are to submit ourselves, humble ourselves, have no will of our own but merely seek the Lord’s will.

There is such a thing as a false submission which might even deceive the person himself. One might talk a great deal about submission to the will of God and yet be only nominally submitting, while he is really doing his own will. We are to watch, therefore, that we are carrying out the profession of submission. A person would certainly be of no importance who had no tastes or preferences; one may know what he would will for himself, but he is to ask and determine—Is this the course which the Lord wishes me to pursue? Is this the will of God for me?

We cannot suppose that our Lord Jesus, who was perfect, did not know that He had perfect powers, but no matter what His own ideas were He submitted Himself to the Father and said—“Not My will; but Thine, be done.” Sometimes the Lord’s hand is very heavy; God’s hand was pressed down heavy in our Lord Jesus’ case, but when He felt it heavy He meekly bowed Himself beneath its weight in humble acceptance of the will of the One whose purpose He had come to fulfil. But the hand did not crush Him, although it had an appearance that way. Instead of crushing it was the hand of love testing His obedience to the full. When His obedience was fully tested the same hand lifted Him up and “set Him at His own right hand in the heavenly places,” etc. (Eph. 1:20, 21.) Thus it will be with us, if we are found faithful, God will exalt us in due time.

As a further evidence of the Master’s great humility we are reminded of His pre-human existence. As the Logos,

He was in the form of God --the spirit condition. He was not ambitious, He was not self-seeking, but, on the contrary, He made Himself of no reputation, divested Himself of His former glory and honour that He might do the will of the Father. His spirit was directly opposite to that of Satan’s. Then, “let this mind be in you,” urges the Apostle. Consider that God has called you with the same high calling, that you might attain to a place with Christ in His Throne, even as He attained a place at the Father’s right hand. If we have become Jesus’ disciples, if we have accepted the conditions of the high calling, if we have received this mind, then we are to let or permit this mind to work out in us the character likeness of our Head.

We should not pass through life with the thought that we are running this, or regulating that. As children should be looking to their parents, so should our eyes be looking to the Lord, asking His guidance in all things. Perhaps some business complications arise, or some employee loses his situation. One who was not of the right, humble mind might be inclined to blame someone else or perhaps his employers for treating him badly. The right attitude for the Lord’s people, however, would be to say, “The Father knows all about this Matter, He could have prevented it and would have done so had it been for my best interests; there is some lesson here for me to learn and I must look for it.” In business affairs trade may fall back, then it is for those affected to realise the Lord’s hand to keep them, lest they be too much absorbed and forget their God. Then, again, a flourishing business is likely to draw attention away from the Lord and His Word.

Those of us who have inherited the greatest amount of stubbornness will find that there is accordingly the greater fight to acknowledge our necessity of the humble and tolerant mind. Though we may not see this necessity so much ourselves, it becomes apparent to others, and the fact remains that a correct diagnosis of our case is one of the first essentials to a cure. But who is sufficient for this? Who can understand his errors? Who is able to look into his own character and mark its defects? Surely none possessing the spirit of the world with a measure of pride, selfishness or vainglory. A sober estimate of self is a humiliating, not an exalting exercise, yet it is healthful and beneficial. It reminds us continually that we are “men of like passions” and thus enables us to strive against our own weaknesses and besetments and also to sympathise with those of others.

A sober mind will remind us also of our mental infirmities, however favourably we may compare with some other members of the dying race about us. How slowly and labouriously does the mind act; how dull are the perceptive faculties; how inert the reasoning powers; how unskilled the judgment; how feebly we discern the great principles of truth and how stupidly we go about applying them. How repeated are our mistakes and failures and how tedious and slow our progress. Surely no one, however favourably he may compare with some of his fellows, has anything whereof to boast in, a sober estimate either of his mental or his moral capacity or development as compared with the standard of perfection. In a sober estimate of character, how painfully manifest are those overestimates of pride which are due to the worldly spirit. How unlovely, how mean, and how effectually it impedes progress toward actual perfection. No man can make commendable progress in any direction who does not recognise his shortcomings. If we say we see, our blindness remains; if we say we are wise our ignorance remains and our folly is manifest to others while we glory in our shame. (Phil. 3:18, 19). Such is the spirit of the world; it is blind to the highest interests and noblest ends of life. Against this spirit it is the duty of the Christian to set a vigilant guard. Let us, therefore, be sober and watch unto prayer and let the burden of our prayer be, “Cleanse thou me from secret faults; keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins; let them not have dominion over me.” “Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me and know my thoughts, and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting.”, Psa. 19:1214; 1.39:23, 24.

It is in the diagnosis of our own case that we are most likely to err and it is here that sobriety of mind and weakness are so much needed. Self-love does not like to admit faults, nor particularise them looking them squarely in the face with the searchlight of God’s Word; it is much more conducive to complacent ease of mind to generalise and to overlook particulars; to say, yes, I know I am not perfect. However, it requires a great deal more of moral courage to say, yes, I see now in the light of God’s Word that I have been selfish or unkind or unfaithful to my obligations or whatever the fault may be. It requires meekness, humility; to admit these things even to oneself and still more to confess them to those who have been injured or grieved by them, yet how necessary is the recognition and also the confession of the matter to bring about the healing. “Confess your faults one to another and pray one for another that ye may be healed,” says the Apostle James. The recognition and the confession as well as the prayer are thus seen to be very important in order that the heart may be in a proper attitude to receive an answer to that prayer. Let as many therefore as would follow on to know the Lord, whom to know is life eternal, studiously apply their hearts unto instruction and in meekness and humility receive the ingrafted Word.

The Apostle also instructs the consecrated how they should deal with others who might be over taken in a fault.

The spiritual ones of the church should exercise themselves to bring about a restoration of the erring one. This they should do in a meek manner, remembering that they also are imperfect in the flesh and that they also may at some time inadvertently fall into sin contrary to their heart intentions. In this manner we are to “bear one another’s burdens,” assisting one another in battling against the weaknesses of the flesh, and the besetments of sin, and thus fulfil the general law of Christ. The law of Christ is a law of service and self-sacrifice in the interests of others. By this law of love, Jesus laid down His life, and all, therefore, who are disciples of Jesus should have the same mind, the same spirit and should seek to follow the same law. As the Apostle says, “We ought also to lay down our lives for the brethren.”

Sanctification is a growth under the sustaining and supporting influences of the Holy Spirit dwelling within us. —A. A. Hodge.

His power is sovereign to fulfil The noblest counsels of His will.

PEOPLES PAPER.

Published by the Berean Biblical Institute, at National Bank Chambers, 226 Glenferrie Rd.,

Hawthorn, Melbourne E 2.

Convention News.

IT is with much thankfulness and appreciation of the goodness of our loving heavenly Father that at the beginning of another year we report a very enjoyable and beneficial Convention of the truth brethren held in Melbourne over the recent Christmas season. From expressions of the friends generally and our own experience, we feel that the Lord's promise to bless His people who gather together in spirit and in truth was abundantly fulfilled throughout the four days of assemblies in His name.

The members of the Melbourne Class greatly appreciated once again the presence of the visiting brethren. Some were in attendance from South Australia, Digby (Vic.), and other parts, and added greatly to the helpfulness of the gatherings, as they manifested that earnestness and zeal that becometh all true followers of the Master. Messages with greetings from other dear friends who could not attend were received with pleasure, and throughout the Convention these were remembered in prayer along with God's people everywhere, for their blessing and keeping in the Christian way.

Each of the four days, commencing Sunday, 23rd December, two main sessions were held—afternoon and evening—with fellowship meetings of a shorter duration in between.

The afternoon meetings, after opening with praise and prayer, were devoted to the selected Bible studies as follows—James 5:7-11; 1 Thes. 5:4-8; Psalms 19:7-14; Heb. 3:16; and by meditating upon these passages it will be possible to approximate the many good exhortations, instructions and encouragement received as the friends cooperated together in the study circles.

Three very helpful fellowship meetings were conducted along the lines of the subjects; "Praise and Testimony,— God's goodness over the past year"; "The Consecrated Life—In the world but not of it"; and "The year ahead— Keeping ourselves in the love of God." The expressions at these meetings, being along the line of our every day experiences, were more of a heart to heart nature, bringing to mind the gracious over-ruling providence of our heavenly Father under all conditions past days and how we may by His grace and strength live a truly consecrated life, keeping ourselves unspotted from the world, redeeming the time, and allowing and invoking the spirit of the Lord, the spirit of love, to keep our hearts and minds in Christ Jesus.

The addresses of the brethren at the evening sessions added much to the general blessing, as the many good lessons and encouragements were brought out on the various topics, which were as follows:—"Humility in Truth"; "God is our Refuge and Strength"; "If ye do These Things," "Conscience Void of Offence"; "God preparing for the Harvest"; "Whatsoever Things are Lovely"; and "That He may establish your hearts." This issue of "Peoples Paper" contains some of these addresses, and others will follow as opportunity offers, so that our readers generally may participate in some of the thoughts given at the Convention.

It gives much pleasure also as we reflect upon the Baptism Service held on Christmas morning in the peaceful surroundings of Hawthorn. It was good to be reminded of the depth of meaning in Christian baptism—complete death baptism—of which the water immersion is a beautiful symbol, and we greatly rejoice with the five dear members who, that morning, symbolised their consecration to the Lord, that complete submission to His will, to be dead with Christ, which had previously taken place in their hearts. There was special cause for rejoicing in the fact that four of the members to symbolise belonged to the one family. Our prayers are offered on behalf of the three sisters and two brethren who have now "made their vows unto the Lord in the presence of His people," that they may be kept faithful unto death and enter into that reward which the Lord hath in reservation for them that love Him supremely.

The Melbourne friends much appreciated the messages from other Classes brought along by the visitors, and on the evening of the closing day of the Convention the passage of Scripture in Col. 3:12-17 was selected as a Convention message to go to the brethren everywhere with Christian love from the Melbourne Ecclesia.

The closing feature of another happy Convention was the Love Feast, during the singing of "Blest be the tie that binds," and finally, "God be with you till we meet again," concluding with thanks-giving prayer to the Giver of every good and perfect gift.

PASSOVER MEMORIAL.

For all who desire to celebrate the Memorial of our Lord's death on its anniversary, Tuesday, 16th April, after sunset would be the correct time this year.

Beware of a half-truth; you may have got hold of the wrong half.

If Ye Do These Things.

(2 Pet. 1: to.)

WHILE we desire to centre our thoughts more particularly around these words of the Apostle just at this time, it would be helpful to us if we can get the main thoughts from the whole of this Epistle, the theme of which seems to be an exhortation and warning to all who have obtained like precious faith through the righteousness of God and our Saviour Jesus Christ.

In the 17th verse of the third chapter we notice that the warning is against falling from grace, or the favour of God wherein we now stand (Rom. 5: I, 2). Surely we are in a privileged position having the hope of the glory of God and so we would do well to heed the Apostle's warning at all times. Then, along with this warning, the Apostle gives us strong and encouraging exhortation along the lines of growing in grace, this great favour of God (ch. 3:18).

In this connection there are perhaps three points well worthy of our earnest attention and careful consideration. These would seem to be:—(1) The source of growth; (2) the lines of growth; (3) the great need of growth.

We see in 2 Pet. 1:2-4 that the source of all our growth in grace and towards Christian maturity is in God Himself. Grace and peace is multiplied unto us only as we come to a heart knowledge of God and His divine attributes, and a thorough appreciation of the great loving plan through which He has purposed in due time to bring all mankind (who are obedient) into harmony with His will. His divine power grants unto us many other things that pertain to life and Godliness through a knowledge of Him, and it is through this knowledge that we become possessed of certain things. What are they? Verse 4—"Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises." Surely there is a wealth of meaning in these words to all who love the Lord in sincerity and truth. And it is through the possession of these promises, we are told, that we might be partakers of the divine nature. 1 John 3:2—"Beloved now are we, the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He cloth appear we shall be like Him and see Him as He is"—"Having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust."

We find that these qualities or fruits of the spirit referred to in verses 5 to 7 are such as, if developed in us and exercised daily, will make us, as the words of our text say, "so that we shall never fall." Let us note that the Apostle speaks to us as having obtained that faith in God (verse 5) which in a judicial sense declares us as righteous; not, however, of ourselves, but through the imputed robe of Christ's righteousness which we accept by faith to cover all our blemishes.

Some would tell us that all we need do to inherit the heavenly kingdom is just believe on the Lord Jesus Christ.

True, this is the first step towards it after having realised our sinful condition, but the Apostles tell us, as well as our Lord, that there is far more than this to be done in us. We are told to "work out our own salvation with fear and trembling" and also "to labour to enter into that rest," etc. (Phil. 2:12; Heb. 4:11). True, it is the spirit of God which does the transforming work in us, but only when there is manifest on our part that willing cooperation and an entire submission to His will.

Now follows the list of virtues we are exhorted to add to our faith in order that we might be perfected in Him and receive the great reward at the end of our earthly course. We must give all diligence, that is, we are to be actively and constantly. engaged, striving to acquire these graces of the spirit.

Virtue (in verse 5) seems rather to mean fortitude, and how very necessary it is to develop this quality—a moral courage to confess our faith before men. It would seem that one great difficulty with the Lord's people is that, even when determined for a right course and thus resisting the temptation they do not take sufficiently positive action.

Many say to the tempter, "I have decided not to yield this time." Thus they leave in their own minds an opportunity open by which the tempter may return. Our Lord's course was the proper one, and like Him we should dismiss the tempter once and for all. We should take our stand so firmly that even the great Adversary would not think it worth while to come back to us along that line. Let us then, as God's people walking the narrow way, add to our faith fortitude, and be very decisive in saying to the tempter, "Get thee behind me, Satan."

Then we must seek to acquire knowledge; not the knowledge that is only heady and which puffeth up and is proud, but rather the knowledge which becomes a heart experience and which draws us daily into a more intimate relationship with the Father and our Lord Jesus Christ. We must so learn as to show ourselves approved unto God, workmen that needeth not to be ashamed rightly dividing the word of truth (2 Tim. 2:15). And so it must be a knowledge of the things pertaining to life and holiness and which when given forth to others will be to the edifying and building up of our brethren.

We must also exercise temperance, that is, moderation or self-control, at all times, so that in our every line of conduct we are able to bring glory to God in this way, holding, as in all things, to Jesus as our great example.

Patience, the next mentioned of these virtues (verse 6), is surely a very essential part of the character development of all who are walking the narrow way. Patient endurance, long suffering, without murmuring, under all circumstances, is what is required of us. In Heb. 10:36 the Apostle says, "Ye have need of patience that after ye have done the will of God ye might receive the promise." Here we see that it is not merely to do the will of God that is the test, but that, after having attained to that point, that mark of character in our hearts and in our wills (if only partially in the flesh), we should by patient endurance establish God's righteous law, will within our hearts as the rule of life at all times and under all conditions. Then, and not until then, shall we be in the heart condition of fitness for the Kingdom. The Apostle James says, "The trying of your faith worketh patience." That is to say, if our faith stands the trial it will produce in us this character of patient endurance. On the other hand, if we do not attain to patient endurance, it will mean that our faith has not stood the test satisfactorily and that we are not fit for the Kingdom.

Then to patience we are to add godliness and brotherly kindness and love (verse 7). When we get the thought of Godlikeness and ponder over its meaning, what a realisation it brings home to us. Are we actually growing more like Him daily? We should be, should we not? If so, we shall find ourselves becoming more possessed of that same spirit of love and justice and brotherly kindness toward all mankind. We are told, "Do good unto all men, especially to the household of faith." And so, if we do not manifest always this kindly and sympathetic disposition toward all our brethren and to the poor groaning creation, having that desire to give them of the best we have, how can we expect to be accepted in the Bride Class, since we know that the great work to be done in the next age, by Christ and His church, is along the lines of love, justice and benevolence?

The chiefest among these qualities which must be characteristic of all of us who would be over-comers, seems to be love, as Paul says, "Without love we are nothing," and "Love is the fulfilling of the law." "If we love one another God dwelleth in us," etc. (1 John 4:12). What we are in God's sight is measured by our love for Him, for His brethren, for His cause, and for the world in general, even for our enemies, rather than by our knowledge or fame or oratorical ability. In the measurement of character, therefore, we must put true love first and consider it the chief test of our nearness to God and acceptance in Christ. We must be sweet tempered—in no way can we better show forth His praise than by exhibiting the spirit of love in the daily affairs of life.

Coming to the eighth verse and the third point in consideration of "our doing these things," we find the words, "If these things be in you and abound they shall make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus." We must produce that growth which will bear fruit. "Every branch in Me that beareth not fruit He taketh away." (John 15:2.) What earthly parent would be satisfied with his child if it did not grow and progress towards maturity; and what farmer would be satisfied with his grain if it did not reach the stage of corn in the ear.

And so, let us who have been planted in grace, which is a most fruitful soil, continue to do these things, so that we might make progress during the year ahead, towards Christian maturity. How carefully we are tended by the divine Husbandman and warmed by the Sun of Righteousness, and watered by the dew from heaven. Surely under such conditions we should bring forth fruit, some a hundredfold, some sixty and some thirty.

It is the presence of these fruits of the spirit in our lives that make us fruitful in Christ and bears testimony to the power of the cleansing blood. They produce also the strength of assurance of our salvation and secure for us an abundant entrance into the Kingdom of God. So let 1.15 do these things and we shall never fall.

That He May Establish Your Hearts.

ONE cannot read the Apostle's letters with out being impressed with the intense zeal which burned within his consecrated heart, and found expression in his words. In addressing the Philippian church (ch. 1:21) he says—"For me to live is Christ," and his conduct in life showed that this was no idle boast. Surely the desire of our hearts would be that we may all have more of that same spirit that dwelt so richly in Brother Paul. In the words of our text, the Apostle is addressing those who have already been begotten of the holy spirit of God; they had come into Christ through faith and consecration, and therefore had a measure of the Lord's spirit—the spirit of love. Paul's expressed desire is that the Lord would make His people to increase and abound in love one toward another. The thought of increasing in love signifies that love already has attained an ascendancy in the heart, a mastery in the mind, by which it is progressing, conquering and bringing into subjection A the thoughts and conduct of life.

And this thought that love is to increase in the hearts of God's people, is in full accord with the general testimony of the Scriptures, that we are to grow in grace and in knowledge and in love; approaching more and more and attaining and maintaining the "mark" which God hath set before us as the standard of character for which He will be pleased to award the Prize in due time. It is as though a cistern were being filled more and more with pure water from hidden springs, until, increasing and increasing, it overflows with its abundance. Thus the Lord's people are to increase in love continually, until the love abounds or overflows in all the thoughts and words and conduct of life; not only carrying blessings to their own refreshment and to the refreshment of all with whom they come in contact, but also redounding to the glory and praise of God, from whom this blessing is derived.

The Apostle specifies only abounding love toward the brethren and toward all, but this presupposes the love which, first of all, is due to God, our Father. Nor is it to be expected that 'any man will love his fellow-creatures to the extent indicated, unless he has first learned to love his Creator, has been taught of Him, and has to some extent become a copy of His dear Son. This is in thorough accord with' the Lord's statement of the full meaning (-4 the Law, "Thou shalt love the Lord, thy God, with all thy mind, heart, soul, and strength and (then) thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." No man can love his neighbour in this Scriptural sense, until he has first loved his God to such a degree as to be, not Only willing, but anxious to do those things which are pleasing in His sight; for God-is love, and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God. 1, Jno. 4) 16.(Convention Address).

The Apostle's words, "Even as we do toward you," are full of meaning and force. Paul and his associates were not teaching a Gospel which they did not appreciate and practice; on the contrary, they were exemplifying in their daily course of life this very abounding love, which, overflowing, was leading them to sacrifice their own interests and rights and privileges for the sake of the Lord's people everywhere. They were laying down their lives for the brethren—daily, hourly; they were sacrificing for the sake of others opportunities and privileges as respects their earthly life, earthly pleasures, etc. It is with particular force, therefore, that they exhort fellow-christians to follow after them in the same way of self-sacrificing, loving obedience, as imitators of Jesus.

And so it should be with all who exhort others to walk in the way of righteousness and love. - In order that their words may have force and meaning, they must exemplify them in their own lives. As they point to the "Mark" of perfect love they must approximate that mark in their own daily lives, and certainly possess it in their hearts, their wills, their intentions.

So we must always remember that the disciples of Christ are living epistles, read and known of all men who come in contact with us. The darkness may hate, and say all manner of evil against the Lord's followers falsely, yet it must "take knowledge of them that they have been with Jesus, and have learned of Him"; that they have the same spirit, the same disposition of heart, however crooked their natural dispositions.

As footstep followers of Christ the thought comes to us, how can we increase in this quality of love and overflow it upon others? What shall we do that we may have this overflowing love? The Apostle impliedly answers this question- - that it is not what we can do, but what the Lord can do in us and for us. His words are, "The Lord make you to increase and abound in love." It is the Lord's doing; we can accomplish very little for ourselves, and the sooner we learn this the better. The springs of our love must come from the fountain of love and grace and truth—from God, for "God is love." We began to receive of His spirit of love from the time we made our consecration to Him, and began to live unto Him, and not unto the flesh. He has various agencies and channels through which He is pleased to increase our love, and to cause it to abound and overflow and cleanse away the natural selfishness against which we, like all others, must contend.

These channels of grace are represented to us under various figures in the Scriptures. One channel or agency is. the Word of God; another is Divine Providence; another is the fellowship of the Body of Christ, the saints. The Lord uses all of these agencies in causing our love to increase and to abound. First, His Word, the basis of our faith and hopes, is also the basis of our love, for by giving ear to His Word, we taste and see that the Lord is gracious, that the Lord is loving; and in proportion as we see His love manifested, and discern His gracious character, in that same proportion, we have before us the pattern toward which we are to aim, and love serves as the incentive to our emulation; as our Lord expressed it, "Be ye holy, even as your Father, which is in Heaven, is holy." He is the pattern, and we are to copy that pattern as much as possible in our daily lives; but especially are we to have it as the accepted standard of our wills, our minds.

The Apostle refers to the Word of God as water= which cleanses us from defilements of sin and selfishness, speaking of the "washing of water through the Word," by which the Bride is to be cleansed and made fit for joint heirship with the Heavenly Bridegroom. (Eph. 5:25-27) The Word of Truth cleanses our hearts by showing us our imperfections, in contrast with the Divine perfections. And more than this, it encourages us with certain promises, the object of which the Apostle Peter declares, saying, "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these we might become partakers of the Divine nature." Were it not for these promises, these hopes held out, our strivings for increasing and abounding in love would, no doubt, succumb before the adverse influences of selfishness and sin in the present time; but by these promises of the Word the Lord invites us to press along the line "toward the mark for the Prize."

Divine Providence comes to our aid at various times, to assist us in making progress "toward the Mark"; to assist us in increasing and abounding in love; for if, peradventure, one who at heart is' fully consecrated to the Lord should tarry by the way; and become overcharged with the cares of this life, the Lord, in much mercy and love, will perhaps permit affliction or disaster of some kind to overtake him, to be a chastisement, a lesson, an assistance, and thus, as the Psalmist expresses it, "His rod and His staff they comfort us." (Ps. 23:4). It is by these providences of God that we are frequently taught lessons which we could never learn from the instructions of His Word alone. The lessons. are impressed, or embossed, so to speak, upon the tablet of our hearts, and do us Listing good.

Another channel of blessing and instruction which the Lord has provided and commended for the saints, and which surely has proven a blessing to all of the household of faith in running for the Mark, is the assistance which the Lord supplies to us through the "brethren." Sometimes it is "a word in season; how good it is"—perhaps a word of counsel, perhaps a word of reproof, perhaps a word of instruction. Perhaps it is merely the testimony of daily lives of the brethren, as we see them patiently enduring hardness as good soldiers, without murmuring—taking with joy, with thankfulness, with faith, with confidence, all things which Divine Providence may permit, assured that they are all working out future blessing. Although this channel of blessing might at first seem to be of the brethren we are sure, nevertheless, that it is of the Lord, though through the brethren. It is because the brethren who render such assistance in the. way are the brethren who themselves are receiving assistance from the Lord; and,so it has been from first to last; the Elder Brother, and all the brethren, as they become advanced members of the Body of Christ, joyfully assist, even to the extent of laying down their lives for the brethren, and all this is the work of God--the effect of His Spirit. By all these various agencies God is working in us to will, and working in us to do His good pleasure—that we may increase and abound in love.

But who are the "you" referred to by the Apostle? Does he mean that God makes all men to increase and abound in love? Surely not! The vast majority of men have no knowledge of the love of God referred to here. At the very most they know only the natural love, and frequently very little of that. When the Apostle says, "The Lord make you to increase and abound in love," he refers to the church; not nominal church members, but the members of the true church, "Whose names are written in heaven"; those who trust in the precious blood of Christ, and have made a full con, secretion of themselves to the Lord, And been begotten again by the holy spirit of love: These, and these only, are referred to. So long as we continue to be in and of this class we will be subject to the Father's discipline and instructions, for "What son is he whom the Father chastened not? If any be without chastisement . . . then are they spurious and not sons." (Heb. 12:7, 8).

These chastenings, providences, disciplines, instructions in the word of righteousness, and assistance through the brethren, will be ours as long as we are members of the Body of Christ; and here we are to distinguish between the Body of Christ in its embryo condition in the present life, and the Body of Christ in its perfected condition in the resurrection. We now join the Body of Christ, the Church, on probation, with the understanding that if we are faithful we shall be accepted fully, and be, members of the Body of Christ in glory'; and that if unfaithful to our vows, our covenant's, we cannot be members of that glorified Church. We are pupils in the school of Christ, ant } it is necessary for us to proceed to learn all the lessons appointed, of the Father, else we shall never be permitted to graduate—to enter into all the rewards which He has promised to those who attain to the character-likeness of His dear Son.

FOREWORD.

The subject of this brochure is undoubtedly of interest to all, not only from a personal viewpoint, but in the interest of loved ones who have died outside of Christ, and who, according to the creeds of the dark ages, are, therefore, doomed to an eternity of torture. Yet many of these loved ones have been noble characters, even much better than the majority of professing Christians. We know that they are too good to be consigned to any such condition by a God of justice and of love, and yet they have not taken the steps of faith necessary for salvation, they have not walked the narrow way in footsteps of the Master, and, therefore, they have no heavenly hope. The Scriptures clearly reveal that there is a provision for these in God's great purpose and plan. Space is too limited in this booklet to deal with this matter, but we invite all interested to write to us for further literature, which we shall be glad to provide either on loan or purchase. To the earnest seeker for truth, we trust that what is here presented will be found to satisfactorily explain the Bible teaching respecting the punishment of the incorrigibly wicked, the condition in death, and the phenomenon of spiritualism.

Christendom in Grave Danger !

SPIRITISM, CONDITION OF DEATH, AND WHAT ABOUT HELL?

“God shall send them strong delusions that they should believe a lie; that they all might be condemned who believe not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness.”—2 Thes. 2:11, 12.

THE statement of the Apostle James, that God tempteth no man, is not to be understood as a contradiction to the language of our text. God tempteth no man to sin, to do wrong, but He has at various times sent or permitted siftings and testings among those who are nominally His people—to separate the true from the false. Sometimes a great truth becomes the sifting or separating cause, as at our Lord's first advent. There our Lord's presentation of Himself in the flesh to the covenanted nation, Israel, as the long-promised Saviour, Deliverer and King, became to that people as a whole a test—separating the Israelites indeed from the mass of the nation—separating the wheat from the chaff.

Our text tells of the end or harvest time of this gospel age, and of how the Lord will permit or “send” strong delusions for the purpose of sifting and separating the true from the false among those who have named the name of Christ. We hold that, according to the Scriptures, we are living in this “harvest” period, and that the sifting of the “wheat” from the “tares” has begun, and that the strong delusions mentioned in our text are coming upon Christendom.

THE FALLEN ANGELS.

The Scriptures bring to our attention a class of spirit beings which fell from divine favor before the flood. These, we are told, have from that time until the present day been confined in chains of darkness in Tartarus—the circumambient air of this planet. The story of these fallen angels is briefly stated four times—in Genesis 6:2; 1 Peter 3:20; 2 Peter 2:4;

Jude 6. The Old and New Testament records are thus in agreement. Additionally, however, we have a multitude of scriptures, both of the Old and New Testaments, which refer to these fallen angels as “demons”—unfortunately mistranslated “devils” in our common version. Without exception these demons are represented as cunning, deceitful, treacherous, devilish, and as having a special malignant attitude toward mankind, and as taking special delight in misleading and deceiving humanity, particularly along irreligious lines and immoralities.

We call to your remembrance the Apostle’s statement regarding this matter, to the effect that God’s people have their struggle or contention, not with flesh and blood, but with wicked spirits in influential positions. Again the same Apostle points out to us that Satan is the chief leader of these spirits or demons, and declares that we are not ignorant of his devices, his intrigues, his deceptions; again he styles him as wily, adroit, cunning. He informs us that the heathen world, while thinking they are worshipping God, are really deceived by these demons; their religious theories and practices are really demonology instead of theology.—Eph. 6:12; 2 Cor. 2:11.

TWO OPPOSING GOSPELS.

The human family is in great distress through the fall, mental, moral, and physical imperfections are manifest everywhere; “there is none righteous, no, not one.” As a consequence, all are agreed to the Apostle’s broad statement. “The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together waiting.” (Rom. 8:22.) Naturally enough the groaning ones seek for the cause of their trouble as well as for a remedy. The Bible sets forth as the cause of all earth’s woes and sorrows the brief statement, “By one man sin entered the world, and death by sin, and thus death passed upon all men, for all are sinners.” It sets forth the remedy also, namely “Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures,” and at His second advent He will introduce “Times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began.” (Acts 3:21; Rom. 5:12; 1 Cor. 15:3.) This, in brief, is the Gospel of Christ.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE DEMONS.

The doctrine of the demons contradicts this from first to last. It denies that man ever was created in God’s image and likeness; denies that he ever fell from it into sin and death; denies that Christ ever redeemed us, and holds that we need no Redeemer; that a process of evolution is at work which is lifting mankind from a mean and low brute beginning upward, to ultimately make of the race gods, and that all that is necessary for this grand result is time. As for death, demonology denies that there is death, and claims that what seems to be death is really a change from a low form of life to a higher form. This demon teaching is to be found among all the heathen peoples, and in all their religious writings, but is not at all sanctioned in the Scriptures. They teach to the contrary, as we have shown, that death is the penalty for sin; that it is a real penalty, a real death; that the dead are really dead, and that there is neither wisdom, nor device, nor knowledge in the grave (sheol), whither all go, and that the hope of a resurrection lies in the redemptive work of our Lord’s first advent, and in the glorious power and authority which He will exercise at His second advent.

WHICH SIDE DO WE CHOOSE?

A pertinent question for each of us is, to which of these teachings do we give adherence? Are we holding fast “the faithful Word of God,” or are we giving heed to these seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, against which the Lord and Apostle gave so many warnings? Is our theological faith an anchor of hope holding us firmly to the truth as set forth by the Lord, or are we to any extent accepting the original falsehood told by Satan and perpetuated by the lying spirits—the falsehood that death is not death, that our dead friends are more alive than ever before, etc.? If this be the case let us at once begin a thorough examination of the Divine Word, assured that error never sanctifies, but is always injurious, and that our Lord was right when He prayed for His disciples, “Sanctify them through Thy Truth, Thy Word is Truth.”

GOD’S WORD AND PLAN REASONABLE.

How consistent is the Word and plan of God, which, so far from speaking of death as the angel God has sent, assures us that death is our enemy, which already has taken from us many of our loved ones, blighted our lives, and will ultimately destroy us except as we become united to the great Life-giver, Jesus. Those who do not see that the dead are dead do not catch the full weighty import of the blessed assurance that Christ is the Life-giver, and that He came into the world and died for our sins that we might have life, and have it more abundantly. Nor do they see the real beauty that lies in the promise of a resurrection from the dead, for if none are dead, how could there be a resurrection of the dead? Only those who clearly and distinctly see the Scriptural teaching on this subject are fortified against the delusions of these demons, built upon this erroneous feature of theology, which not only has permeated all heathendom, but similarly has permeated all the creeds of Christendom, and to a large extent has made of no effect the word of God respecting our redemption from the grave and the hope of the resurrection from the dead at the second coming of Christ.—1 Cor. 15:12, 13.

“CHRISTENDOM” RIPE FOR DELUSIONS.

The erroneous belief that the dead are alive has been to some extent for centuries offset by another error, namely, that the majority of them are confined to a place of torment—purgatory or otherwise—and a small minority were far off enjoying the bliss of heaven, all of which hindered the thought that they might be communed with through mediums. Besides there has been a kind of horse sense prevailing which has restrained many from having great confidence in spirit communications. While faith was expressed, a doubting fear was associated with it, and this doubting fear was increased by finding that some of the spirits seeking communion were “lying .spirits,” and, although others made different presentations, they were all more or less held in doubt and fear. Now, however, we are coming to a time when all intelligent people question the fables of the Dark Ages respecting hell and purgatory, fire, etc.

Consequently, it daily becomes easier for spiritists to find sympathy for their claims that the spirits of the dead are hovering around the living, that our atmosphere is full of them, that they are neither confined in heaven nor in hell.

This thought has been aided by many sermons on funeral occasions, depicting the dead as hovering over the friends gathered at the funeral, the assurance being given that if the dead could only speak he would say to the weeping ones; “Weep not,” etc. All of this unscriptural guess-work, presented as a Biblical truth, has had its effect upon the masses, who are now thoroughly perplexed as respects the place and condition of their dead friends. A growing intelligence forbids the thought that a God of love and justice has consigned them to eternal flames of fire or other torture.

CONFIDENCE IN GUIDES IS SHAKEN.

Inquiries of the clergy respecting the place and condition of the departed bring no satisfaction; the few who still tell of tortures in infernal regions are less and less believed, and the others of increasing number who deny that the dead are in tortures are unable to give any answer respecting their whereabouts. No wonder the confiding sheep are perplexed. Oh, that they would look to the Word of the Lord, that they would remember “the Lord is my Shepherd,” that they would seek from the inspired source the knowledge which their souls crave! Oh, that they might learn that the hope set ‘before us in the Gospel of Christ is the hope of the resurrection of the dead! Mark the clearness of the Apostle’s statement on this subject—’If there be no resurrection of the dead, then they that are fallen asleep in Christ are perished.’-1 Cor. 15:17, 18.

THE DELUSION IS SENT OF GOD.

The reason for the sending of the strong delusion mentioned in our text is plainly stated in the context, but before it can be appreciated it is necessary to have some grasp of the Divine plan of the Ages; it is necessary to see that the Lord’s work throughout this Gospel Age has not been, as many suppose, an attempt to convert the world, but, as the Scriptures declare, He has been merely electing or selecting out from the world a people for His name—to be the Bride of Christ. (Acts 15:14). We must see too, that this elect people does not include all who become nominal members of Christian churches, but merely those who through full faith and consecration become followers of the Lord Jesus in every truth, and receive the spirit of adoption from the Father. These, through the trials and difficulties of this life, shall be proved overcomers of the world and its spirit, and accepted as joint-heirs with Christ, as His Bride in His Kingdom. This class, the Scriptures distinctly tell us, is but a little flock. Our Lord’s words are, “rear not, little flock; it is your Father’s good pleasure to give you the Kingdom.” The apostle declares also, “Not many wise, not many mighty, not many noble hath God chosen” —“Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, heirs of the kingdom?”-1 Cor. 1:26; James 2:5.

After we once see that only the overcomers or kingdom class are being selected during this Gospel Age, we are ready to see that God’s great time for dealing with the majority of our race is in the future—after the second coming of Christ—during His Kingdom—whose reign of righteousness will bless and give opportunity of eternal life to all the families of the earth.

END OF THE AGE NOT END OF WORLD.

We are not of those who expect this world to be burned up. Quite the contrary, we expect its rejuvenation, its perfecting as the Garden of Eden, the paradise of God, the everlasting home of the majority of the human family—of all except the Church of this Gospel Age and those who shall ultimately die the second death. We have no sympathy of thought, therefore, with those who are looking for the destruction of the earth; but we nevertheless believe, as the Scriptures teach, that the present age or “aeon” will cease, and a new age begin. In error the translators have rendered the word aeon “world” and given a wrong impression.

More than this, we believe that the Scriptures clearly indicate that the present age is now ending, and the new age is about to begin. It is at this particular juncture that all the New Testament writings, as well as our Lord’s great prophecy of Matthew 24, centre, indicating a time of confusion, a trouble such as the world has never known before, and pointing out that these are judgments of the Lord designed to prepare the world for the next dispensation, and the reign of the Kingdom of Righteousness. Furthermore, the Apostle distinctly points out that these judgments will begin at the House of God—the nominal church. Our Lord also points out the same thing, calling it a separation of wheat from tares in the harvest or close of this age—Matt. 13:30.

HARVEST SEPARATING OF WHEAT AND TARES.

It is because Christendom as a whole, though nominally a wheat field, is practically a tare field with a scattering of wheat intermingled that there is to be such a commotion in connection with the separation of the wheat and the tares. True, the Lord, who knoweth the heart, who knoweth them that are His, could easily separate them from the others, but He has chosen to make a separation publicly to demonstrate His own justice in the matter. Hence in this harvest time—at the proper time to separate the wheat from the tares—the Lord not only sends the sickle of truth to gather the wheat, but He also sends the strong delusions to gather the tares.

The Wages of Sin is Death.

OUR LORD'S PARABLES AND DARK SAYINGS USED BY SATAN TO CONFUSE MEN.

MANY sincere Christians, while pained and shocked at the doctrine of eternal torment, and totally unable to reconcile such teachings with the justice and love of God's character, as portrayed in the Scriptures, are persuaded that the Scriptures so teach, and that to discard eternal torment would be to abandon faith in the Bible as GOD'S INSPIRED WORD.

To such specially we write, reminding them first of all of the Lord's words, "Their fear toward me is not of me, but is taught by the precepts of men."—Isa. 29:13.

As we begin to get our understanding opened on this subject it is surprising to find that most of our difficulty has resulted from attaching wrong meanings to words. For instance, 'die,' 'to be destroyed,' 'perish,' etc., many unconsciously pervert these when reading them in the Scriptures. They know the meanings well enough, yet somehow in the Bible they attach the very opposite thoughts i.e., live eternally, torment, flames and anguish unutterable, etc. Let us get rid of this wrong practice which has caused so much confusion to our minds, so much anguish to our hearts, and so much dishonour to our God.

Investigation will surprise you as to how little of "eternal torment" is left after correcting your estimation of the meaning of words. You will find not one suggestion throughout the Old Testament to confirm your false fears. You will find not one sentence in the writings of the Apostles that gives the least hint that the world's future is lurid flames, etc. True, they do speak of the demons, but always in respect of our danger from them in the present life—"seducing spirits," "wicked spirits in exalted positions," and "doctrines of devils," such as this doctrine surely is.

This must seem strange to those accustomed to thinking of the "torment" as the principal feature of the gospel,—those who have never appreciated the fact that the word gospel does not mean bad tidings, but the reverse, "good tidings of great joy for all people."—Luke 2:10.

We are to remember, too, that the Epistles discuss every phase of faith and doctrine, more than any other parts of the Bible; so that the Apostle could say, "I have not shunned to declare unto you the whole counsel of God" (Acts 20:27), and again to declare, "The Scriptures are able to make thee wise unto salvation"—and are "sufficient that the man of God may be thoroughly furnished unto every good work" (2 Tim. 3:15, 17.). Indeed, from all that we know of Peter and Paul, they would be the last of men to keep back any important truth, no matter how unpleasant the duty.

On the contrary, however, we find them continually using the words die, death, destruction, etc.; when referring to the end of the ungodly, who repudiate God's grace, and bring upon themselves "swift destruction." St. Paul, referring to the end of those of the Gospel Church, who repudiate Christ, says,—There remaineth for them no more a share in the sacrifice of Christ, but a sure and fearful outlook of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour them as adversaries. (Heb. 10:26, 27.) "Fiery indignation" no more means eternal torment than does "fiery trials," or a "fiery horse"; and surely "devour," like "destroy," means the reverse of preserve. In referring to the incorrigible of the coming age the same Apostle says, they “shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of His power.” Their punishment will be destruction, not preservation. It will be everlasting in that there is no resurrection for them.

DID JESUS ALONE TEACH ETERNAL TORMENT?

The thought would be painful if true, but we must make sure of it before so deciding.

When James and John, full of zeal for the honour of their Master, asked, “Lord, wilt Thou that we call down fire from heaven, to consume these Samaritans and their city?” Jesus answered and said unto them, “Ye know not what spirit ye are of. The Son of man is not come to destroy men’s lives, but to save them.” (Luke 9:56). We sometimes think that we and others who have held to the still more terrible thought of eternal torment, did not at the time know what spirit we were of—nor truly interpret the spirit of Christ.

Our Lord’s “parables and dark sayings,” not understood by the people of His day, and not generally understood yet, are very few. Excepting the figurative symbols of Revelation, which few claim to understand as a whole, these are fewer than many suppose; for they are repeated in the various gospels in varying terms. The fact is that the translators were befogged by the “smoke” of the dark ages on this eternal torment subject.

An examination of the Scriptures in regard to the Occurrence of the Word “Hell” in the Old Testament.

THE word “hell” occurs 31 times in the Old Testament. It comes from the Hebrew “sheol.” It contains no such meaning as has been suggested in Church creeds. Quite the reverse, instead of a place of blazing fire, it is described as a place of darkness.—Job 10:21. Instead of a place of shrieks and groans, it is described in the context as a place of “silence.”—Psalm 115:17. Instead of a condition of suffering and pain, it is “where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest.”—Job. 3:17. A place of forgetfulness.—Psalm 88:11, 12. See also Eccles. 9:10.

The meaning of “sheol” is, the hidden state as applied to man’s condition in death, in and beyond which all is hidden, except to the eye of faith, which looks forward to the glad resurrection morning. By proper association the word is often used in the sense of the grave. The word “sheol” is translated 34 times by the word grave, and once by the word pit; by the same translators who translated it 31 times ‘hell!’

When these translators of the authorised Bible used the word hell, it had a different meaning from what it has since come to convey, because of what has been read into it. The old English word simply meant to cover up, as thatching a cottage, or burying potatoes to ‘guard from frost.

The word “sheol” occurs 66 times in the Old Testament; 34 times it is properly translated ‘grave,’ and once it is rendered “pit,” and the 31 times it has been rendered “hell.”

” HELL,” ITS THIRTY-ONE OCCURRENCES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

On account of lack of space the entire texts here referred to are not printed, but the reader is urged to turn to the Scriptures themselves as the matter is dealt with. In the following passages it is obvious that the state of death—the grave—is intended. —Psalm 16:10, quoted in Acts 2:31; 3:15; Psalms 55:15; Job 26:6; Prov. 5:5; Prov. 7:27; Prov. 15:11; Prov. 27:20; Isa. 5:14; Isa. 14:9-15; Ezek. 32:27; Heb. 2:5. Job 11:8; Amos. 9:2.—Figurative expressions, certainly pits of the earth are the only hells men can dig into.

Psalms 116:3; Psalm 18:5; and 2 Sam. 22:6.—A sensuality going into premature graves from diseases which also hurry on their posterity to the tomb.

Psalms 9:17.—See Revised Version, “The wicked shall return to sheol.” (the grave). This will be the punishment of all who, having been brought to a knowledge of God and His righteous ways, still prefer their evil course. “All the wicked will He destroy.”—Psalms 145:20.

Psalms 86:13; Deut. 32:22.—The “lowest hell” would refer to utter destruction from which there would be no recovery. “Wrath to the uttermost as the Apostle calls it.” See also 1 Thes. 2:16.

Psalms 139:8.—Speaks of God’s unlimited power; even over those in “sheol,” the tomb, and He will exert it and bring forth “all that are in the graves.” —John 5:28.

Prov. 9:78.—Here the harlot's guests are represented as dying, and many of the victims of sensuality going into premature graves from diseases which also hurry on their posterity to the tomb.

Prov. 15:24.—This illustrates the hope of the resurrection from the tomb.

Prov. 23:14.—Wise correction will save a child from vicious ways which lead to premature death, and may also possibly prepare him to escape the "second death."

Isa. 57:9.—Is figurative of deep degradation.

Ezekiel 31:15. 17.—This is a figurative and prophetic description of the Fall of Babylon into destruction, silence, the grave.

Ezekiel 32:21.—This is a continuation of the same figure representing Egypt's overthrow as a nation to join Babylon in destruction.

Jonah 2:1, 2.—Jonah was buried in the fish, it was his grave for the time being.

Isa. 28:15-18.—God thus declares that the prevalent idea that death and the grave are friends will cease. Men shall learn that the wages of sin is death. It is now in Satan's power and not an angel sent by God.—Rom. 6:23; Heb. 2:14.

THE WORD HELL IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

The Greek "Hades" in the New Testament is the equivalent of the Hebrew word "sheol." This will be seen by comparing Acts 2:27 with Psalm 16:10, of which it is a quotation. Also 1 Cor. 15:54; 55, is no doubt derived from Isa. 25:8, and Hosea 13:14. "O death I will be thy plagues; O sheol I will be thy destruction."

HELL TRANSLATED FROM "HADES."

Matt. 11:23.—Capernaum had enjoyed much privilege of knowledge and enlightenment, and because of misuse of opportunities, and neglect of God's message, this prophecy was uttered. It has been literally fulfilled. This city has been buried so completely that there is difference of opinion today as to its site. Capernaum has certainly been brought down to the grave, covered up and lost to sight.

Luke 15:23.—The rich man in this parable represented the Jewish nation, which has been buried among the nations, cast out of Abraham's bosom, the place of God's favour, while the Gentiles, represented by Lazarus, have been brought into the Gospel favour, see Romans 11. Further explanation is given in a booklet on "Some of the parables," price 8d., posted.

Rev. 6:8.—Here the word is used as a symbol of destruction, or the grave.

Matt. 16:18.—Here is intimated that, though the church must suffer with Christ, and pass into the tomb, yet the grave could not hold the members in Christ. The dead in Christ shall rise first "at His coming."

Acts 2:1, 14, 22-31.—The Apostle Peter is here declaring that, though Christ had been slain and had gone to the tomb, "hades," yet it was impossible that He should stay there and go to corruption, for David had prophesied that "his soul should not be kept in hades," nor his flesh see corruption." (Psalm 16:10). In this way David spoke of the resurrection of Christ. While He descended to "Hades," the grave, He was raised again the third day.

Rev. 1:18.—Jesus, having died for humanity, declared that He had the keys of death and of "hades," that is that He has purchased the whole race, and can give life to whomsoever He will (John 5:21, 28; John 11:25; Rom. 14:9.).

The Scriptures give no support to the God dishonouring Papal tradition of "eternal torture" as the wages of sin. Had such been the penalty, then Christ has not paid such a price, none of us could have been redeemed, but the Scriptures are reasonable and just. The wages of sin is death. (Rom. 6:23.) "Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures. (1 Cor. 15:3, 20-22; 1 John 2:2).

Rev. 20:13, 14.—The lake of fire symbolises the second death. Satan and the incorrigibly wicked, both of men and angels, are to be everlastingly destroyed. Death and hell (grave) are then to be also destroyed, and then there shall be no more death.—Revl 21:4.

There is another word, “Gehenna,” which occurs twelve times:—Matt. 5:22, 29, 30; Matt. 10:28; Matt. 18:9; Matt. 23:15, 33; Mark 9:43-47; Luke 12:5; Jas. 3:6. Gehenna has reference to the “Valley of Hinnom,” which lay outside the city of Jerusalem. It served the purpose of a destructor of garbage. All waste and rubbish were cast in there and fires were kept burning to consume everything; brimstone was added to ensure complete destruction. No living thing was cast in, the Jews were not permitted to torture any creature, their laws prohibited cruelty to the lower animals.

Jerusalem was a figure of Christ’s Kingdom,, which is to be established for the blessing of all the willing and obedient, and this “Gehenna” is part of the figure showing how everything that is unclean is to be destroyed. Just as the Jews would cast in there the carcasses of vile criminals, with the thought that they were unworthy of any resurrection, so those who prove themselves incorrigible after the favourable opportunity of knowledge and life in the Messianic Age, will be destroyed in the “second death,” from which there is no recovery. “But the fearful and unbelieving, the abominable, murderers, whoremongers, sorcerers, idolators, and all liars, shall have part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; which is the second death.”—Rev. 21:8, 23-27.

In Rev. 20:10, 14, 15; Rev. 19:20, the same symbol is used in these passages. We notice that the symbolic beast, and symbolic false prophet, the devil and his angels, also death and hell (grave) are to be utterly destroyed. (See also Mat. 25:41).

When Christ’s Kingdom has done its work, all who will have been assisted by its righteous laws will be rewarded with eternal life, but those who, under such favourable conditions, love sin and wickedness, will go into the second death. As a consequence of Adamic transgression condemnation passed upon all men.—Rom. 5:12-21. As a consequence of the Ransom Sacrifice of Jesus-1 Tim. 2:3-6—all are redeemed from that condemnation, and are to have one perfect, full opportunity of life. As a result of Adamic sin all die, go into hades, (1 Cor. 15:22) but “Hades” will be destroyed in the great destruction at the end of Christ’s reign (1 Rom. 15:25, 26). Then any who die will go into “gehenna,” the second death prepared for the devil and his angels.—Matt. 22:41. Then there will be no more death, there will be no more Beast, the great Roman Catholic system, and there will be no more false prophet, such as the great Mahomimedan system. There will be no more devil, and no more evil spirits operating as they do to-day— through mediums in spiritism.

Matt. 10:28; Luke 12:5.—The Lord is here encouraging His followers against the persecutions which He knew would come upon them. He reminds them that all that man can do is to kill the body and send us to “hades,” the tomb, but they cannot send us to “gehenna.” Christ has the keys of “hades,” and will restore the soul in the resurrection morning. But God has power to send the soul to “gehenna,” to utter destruction, which will be the doom of the wilfully wicked after they have had the opportunity of righteousness and life, and rejected God’s grace in Christ. It is worthy of note that it does not say that God will preserve the soul alive in gehenna, so that it may suffer eternally, but that He is able to destroy both body and soul, and this is in line with Ezekiel 18:4. The soul that sinneth, it shall die, “all the wicked will God destroy.”—Psa. 145:20.

Matt. 5:21, 22.—The Lord is here showing that the Law, “Thou shalt not kill,” was even more exacting than they supposed, and that when the new covenant operates even malice and anger will be violations of God’s Law, requiring punishment, and those failing under that favourable time to bring their hearts and minds as well as hands and physical strength into harmony with righteousness and love, will be counted worthy of “Gehenna,” or second death.

Matt. 5:22-30.—A similar thought is contained in this connection. The Lord is impressing the lesson, the necessity of perfect compliance with the Divine Law, and the necessity of self control. That it matters not how precious some wrong course, some sinfulness, or some idol of self-gratification, which would hinder obedience to the Divine Law, may be, it must be overcome, even though it is precious as a right eye, or right arm. It would be better to go through life short of a right arm or right eye than to incur the second death, and be entirely destroyed in “gehenna.”

Matt. 18:9; Mark 9:43-48. Here again the Lord is impressing the thought of cutting off everything that would interfere with the attainment of the entrance into the Kingdom of God. He certainly does not mean that we should ever cut off our hands or pluck out our eyes, but He reasons that it is better to lose these members than to lose life entirely. So, however precious a thing may be to us, even as precious as a right arm or right eye(if it is a hindrance to our gaining life in the Kingdom of God, the reasonable and necessary thing to do is to cut it off. Otherwise, the whole body will be destroyed in “gehenna,” “where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.” This mention of the worms dying not and unquenchable fire, is also a reference to “gehenna.” In casting in the refuse, frequently the bodies of animals fell upon ledges and not into the fire below. These would be destroyed by worms as completely as the other matter which was burned. The worms and fire together did the work of destruction; the worms were always there and the fire was never quenched. The thought appears to be that the worms did not die before completing the work of consuming the body, nor did the fire go out until all was destroyed. So we say respecting a house on fire, the fire could not be controlled or quenched, but burned until the building was entirely consumed. In the same way Sodom and Gomorrah are said to have been destroyed by eternal fire.—Jude 7. That is that the fire was not quenched, but burned itself out in utterly destroying these cities, not that these wicked people are not to be resurrected, for we distinctly read that they are to be restored, and have an opportunity of learning righteousness and gaining life everlasting.

See Ezekiel 16:48-63. Here it is clearly stated that the Israelites were even worse than the Sodomites because the Sodomites had not had the advantage of light and knowledge with which the Jews had been favoured. Our Lord said the same thing in Matt. 10:15 and 11:24, namely, that it will be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment than for such as Capernaum.

Matt. 23:15, 33.—These words were not spoken to those who were ignorant, but to those to whom all the favours of the Law Covenant had been available, “to whom pertaineth the adoption, the glory, the covenants, the giving of the Law, the service of God, and the promises.”—Rom. 9:4. These were the leaders of the people and religious teachers, and instead of being true to their convictions, they were misleading the people, and were filled with bitterness and a murderous spirit against the Lord, although abundant evidences of the truth, and of His mission, had been given. They were thus resisting the holy Spirit of light and truth and grace “Though He had done so many miracles before them, yet they believed not on Him.”—John 12:37.

If such a wilful course were pursued in, it could but lead to the condemnation, to the second death “gehenna.”

James 3:6.—The Apostle is here explaining the evil influence of a tongue directed by an evil disposition. How often has it been that a few words evilly spoken in a malicious or bitter spirit have aroused evil passions with terrible results. Such words react upon the speaker, and a continuance in such an evil course will ultimately prove such an one unworthy of life, and bring him under the sentence of “gehenna,” the second death.

“TARTAROO “RENDERED “HELL.”

2 Pet. 2 A.—This is the only occurrence of this word, and it has no reference to mankind at all. It is spoken with regard to the “angels who sinned.” These angels had sinned in association with man kind. Compare Jude 6; 2 Pet. 2:4; 1 Pet. 3:19;20; Genesis 6:2-4.

These angels are reserved unto judgment, and are to be judged by the glorified Church of Christ.—1 Cor.6:3. In the meantime their power to openly materialise has been taken from them. They are degraded, and restrained in chains of darkness. These evil spirits can only operate through spiritualistic mediums, who give their will over to them. The word Tartaroo is translated “Cast down to hell”; its meaning is simply that they are restrained, imprisoned in chains of darkness. They cannot operate in the daylight, and irrespective of mediums.

Thus we conclude the examination of all the occurrences of the word “hell,” and find that there is no place of everlasting torture taught in the Scriptures. The teaching is but the tradition of men, and comes to us from the heathen mythological religions, added to the church creeds of the Dark Ages. We have found that “sheol” (Hebrew) and “hades” (Greek) refer to the condemnation of all our race on account of Adam’s sin—all go to this “hell,” or the tomb, “the great prison house of death.” God through the prophet Hosea 13:14, declared, “I will ransom them from the power of the grave (sheol). “As all in Adam die (go to hades), so all in Christ shall be made alive again.”—1 Cor. 15:21-22. Then we have seen that there is another “hell,” “gehenna,” which means utter destruction; it is called the second death. This is the penalty which is inflicted upon those who, having been delivered from the first or Adamic death, refuse the opportunity of life, and choose a course of wilful wickedness. Surely our hearts and minds agree that it is but just that such should be “cut off.” —Acts 3:22, and be as though they had not been.

Just and true are Thy ways, Thou King of Saints, who shall not fear Thee, O Lord, and glorify Thy Name.--Rev. 15:3-4.

A DARK CLOUD AND ITS SILVER LINING

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

In the Minister's morning sermon he told of the primal
And how, henceforth, the wrath of God rested on each and all ;
And how, of His will and pleasure, all souls, save a chosen few
Were doomed to eternal torture, and held in the way thereto.

Yet never, by Faith's unreason, a saintlier soul was tried.
And never the harsh old lesson a tenderer heart belied.
And after the painful service, on that pleasant, bright first day,
He walked with his little daughter thro' the apple bloom of May,

Sweet in the fresh green meadow sparrow and blackbird sung;
Above him its tinted petals the blossoming orchard hung,
Around, on the wonderful glory, the minister looked and smiled:
"How good is the Lord, who gives us these gifts from His hand, my child,

"Behold in the bloom of apples, and the violets in the sward,
A hint of the old lost beauty of the garden of the Lord."
Then up spake the little maiden, treading on snow and pink,
"O father! these pretty blossoms are very wicked I think,

"Had there been no Garden of Eden, there never had been a fall ;
And if never a tree had blossomed God would have loved us all."
"Hush, child !" the Father answered, "By his decree men fell ;
His ways are in clouds and darkness, but He doeth all things well,

"And whether by His ordaining to us cometh good or ill, Joy or pain, or light or shadow, we must fear and love Him still."
"Oh I fear Him !" said the daughter, "and I try to love Him, too;
But I wish He were kind and gentle—kind and loving as you."

The minister groaned in spirit, as the tremulous lips of pain,
And wide, wet eyes, uplifted, questioned his own in vain,
Bowing his head, he pondered the words of his little one.
Had he erred in his life-long teachings, and wrong to his Master done ?

To what grim and dreadful idol had he lent the holiest Name?
Did his own heart, loving and human, the God of his worship shame?
And lo ! from the bloom and greenness, from the tender skies above,
And the face of His little daughter, he read a lesson of love,

No more as the cloudy terror of Sinai's mount of law,
But as Christ in the Syrian lilies the vision of God he saw,
And as when, in the clefts of Horeb, of old was His presence known,
The dread, ineffable glory was infinite goodness alone,

Thereafter his hearers noted in his prayers a tenderer strain,
And never the message of hatred burned on his lips again.
And the scoffing tongue was prayerful, and the blinded eyes found sight,
And hearts, as flint aforetime, grew soft in his warmth and light.

That He May Establish Your Hearts.

(1 Thes. 3; 12, 13). Convention Address. Continued from last issue.

The Object and Necessity for such Development.

THE Apostle in our text tells us why it is necessary that we progress. It is “to the end,” or with the object in view of our hearts being established, fixed, settled, rooted, grounded in holiness. It is not sufficient, from the Divine standpoint, that we learn something about love, and have the feeling of love thrilling our hearts, and that generous emotions shall occasionally be ours; what the Lord seeks is a “peculiar people,” “a royal priesthood,” thoroughly established, firmly fixed in love for righteousness—so that all unrighteousness, all sin, all injustice, would be an abomination to them. Not only will they not love iniquity, but, as the Scriptures declare, they will hate iniquity.

And whoever truly loves righteousness must in the same proportion hate iniquity. But this is only the result of fixed character, and time and experience and many lessons from the Word of God, and from the book of experience, are necessary before character becomes so settled, so crystallised, that it is fixed and unwavering in its loyalty to righteousness. It is for this reason that the Lord has hedged up the way of His people during this Gospel Age, and made the way of life, the way to the Kingdom, a “narrow” one, full of difficulties, full of trials, which thereby become tests, and sift out those who do not develop the character which the Lord approves, and for which He promises a share with Christ in His Kingdom.

But some may say, if the standard of character is so high as to be unblamable before God, who is perfect, how can I ever hope to attain it? And so all of us might say, if the perfect standard were a standard for the flesh; for all of us have learned, as did the Apostle, that “In my flesh dwelleth no good (perfect) thing”; and we have the inspired Word for it that “There is none righteous; no, not one.” So, then, we may rest assured that God is not seeking to find in any a perfection of the flesh, and that if He should seek perfection in the flesh, He would not find it.

It is not such an unreasonable and impossible thing that the Apostle teaches, but something quite reasonable, viz., as he says, that our hearts may be established, fixed, in holiness before God our Father. Ah, yes ! To have a heart (will-motive—intention) that is blameless, is a very different thing from having flesh that is blameless. The heart, standing for the will, the intention, the desire represents the “New Creature.” The flesh stands for itself. In its imperfection and its 6000 years of degradation as the slave and servant of sin, the flesh has become so imperfect that it is impossible to have it serve the law of God perfectly; impossible to have it obey all the good desires of our consecrated hearts unblamably. It is the New Creature, the new mind, that must reach this stage of development, where it will be unblamable before the Father. Not only is this a possible attainment, but we cannot conceive of any other condition being acceptable to God, in harmony with our calling. He has called us to be His Church, His Royal Priesthood, that He might fit and prepare us for the great work of blessing all the families of the earth as members of the Body of Christ, otherwise called the Bride, called to association with the Heavenly Bridegroom during His Millennial Kingdom. Surely, God could ask nothing less than that our hearts, our intentions, should be in accord with the principles of righteousness, and that these principles should control our daily lives to the extent of our ability; and that thus we should seek to put away all filthiness of the flesh and of the spirit, and to perfect ‘holiness in the reverence of the Lord ! (2 Cor. 7:1). Anything less than this good desire and endeavour could not possibly be acceptable in the sight of God; without these we could not possibly be acceptable in His sight; without these we could not hope to be of the finally acceptable Elect Church.

But how reasonable is this arrangement! How gladly do we accept the Divine will! How earnestly we wish that every imperfection and blemish of the flesh were done with, that the testings of our new minds were accomplished in their full establishment in righteousness.. How we long to have our new bodies, promised to us in the First Resurrection—bodies in which the new mind can act perfectly, without hindrance, without restraint, and glorify God perfectly in every act and word, as well as in our hearts, intentions. This is acceptable to God. He counts it, through the merit of Christ, exactly as though we were absolutely perfect in word and in deed, since such a condition is the desire of our hearts, our wills; He is merely waiting until this character is fixed, permanent.

“That We may be Established—Fixed—in the presence of our Lord.”

We perceive that this lesson comes up to date, in the sense that while it has been applicable to the Lord’s people all through this Gospel Age, it is specially applicable to us who are now living in the Harvest time, in the time of the Presence of the Son of Man. For mark the Apostle’s words in our text, that all this development in the spirit of love is to the end that we may be established, fixed, “in the presence (parousia) of our Lord Jesus Christ, with all saints.” We are now living in this time of His presence, and it behoves us to inquire carefully of our hearts to what extent we are established in righteousness, in love for it, or to what extent our loyalty to righteousness is still unsettled—wavering.

The statement of the Prophet Malachi (ch. 3:2-3) is full of significance. The meaning of this text we understand to be —”Who shall stand the test at the time of His appearing”? As, for instance, at the first advent, He came unto His own, the Jewish people; but they rejected Him and crucified Him. There were only a few who stood the test. John, the baptist, said, “He will thoroughly purge His floor and gather His wheat into His garner.” (Matt. 3:12). We understand this text to -be a reference to this work of purification.

Similarly, to-day, in this Harvest time, more fully than throughout the Age, there is a testing and trying and proving of the Lord’s people. Who will stand the test to prove who are the people of God? The Lord is now determining who are the truly consecrated class. Like Gideon’s little band these are now being chosen. The Prophet clearly intimates that there might be disappointment in connection with the much longed for Messenger or Mediator of the New Covenant, in whom the Jews so delighted and hoped. The declaration is that His Day will be a strenuous one: “Who shall stand when He appeareth?” “Who will abide. the Day of His coming (presence) ?” The intimation is that not many will abide, not many will stand—the majority will fall.

The reason is given. He will require such purity, such holiness, that few will. come -up to- His requirements. The tests He will impose will be like “fullers’ soap,” which is the foe of every spot upon a garment white. His requirements will be like those of a refiner of silver-all the dross must be eliminated in a furnace hot enough to ensure its separation. The test will last a considerable time, for He will sit as a refiner sits, giving close inspection, that the heat be neither too great nor too little, the time neither too long nor too short.

We may be sure that all who (1) not speedily come to the condition of establishment in righteousness will thus be tested, sifted, and, if found unfaithful, rejected; for the time for the completion the Body of Christ is at hand. The Apostle asks, “Who shall be able to stand?” This is the question, “Who shall be so thoroughly established in love that the trials and testings necessary to prove Him so will he passed successfully?” According to this we are not to wonder if various special trials are permitted now to come, thick and fast —trials which will test and prove our loyalty to the Lord and to the principles of love. Yet we are not to be discouraged with this thought of testing, but are to remember that He who began the good work in our hearts, began while we were yet sinners, by giving for us the great ransom price; that if He so loved us then, while we were yet sinners, much more does He love us now that we have accepted His grace, and are justified from all sin by faith in His blood, and are seeking to walk in His footsteps. And all who have this desire to receive the Lord’s lessons, and to profit by them, and to become more and more copies of Jesus— all such have the assurance that it comes not by their strength, but by the Lord’s strength; and that if they submit themselves to Him, He will perfect in them His spirit of love and righteousness and holiness; that they may be “meet for the inheritance of the saints in light.”

The Indecision of the Modern Church.

I AM increasingly convinced," writes Dr. Lamont, "that the weakness of the modern Church is due to indecision towards Christ. It is intended to give Him the pre-eminence in all things, and, except here and there, it is not doing that.

"The Word of God to man is not taken seriously, and therefore it is heard faintly where it is heard at all. For the Cross will not tolerate the observer attitude towards itself, It demands the great decision. It calls the proud man from his pride, the learned from his learning, the rich man from his gold. It calls us all to discover that we are poor and ignorant sinners in the sight of God. We all needed Christ to die for us. I had rather be a shepherd on the moor or a charwoman at her washtub, if their hearts, as I have known them, are rejoicing in the light and love of their Lord, than be the most learned person on earth, if his mind be filled with a spiritual fog which he persistently emits to the darkening of souls around him. The spiritual air to-day is thick with smoke."

The above is quoted from the "Christian World." It is good to know that there are some still in the pulpits of Christendom who mourn for the sad condition to which the churches have fallen. The cross was the "stumbling block" to the fleshly house of Israel. The builders rejected that "stone" which is the chief corner-stone and the foundation stone of the Divine plan of salvation, It has become a stone of stumbling and rock of offence to both the houses of Israel, the fleshly house and the spiritual house or the Israel of God.

The Apostle Peter also indicated that faith in the precious blood of Christ would be lost by many, "There shall be false teachers among you who privily shall bring in damnable heresies even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction. And many shall follow their pernicious ways by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of." 2 Pet. 2:1, 2.

Another minister, having returned to Canada from China and the far East, says, "The tragedy out there is that communism is breeding greater heroes than Christianity." Still another minister, writing from Canada, says, "Youth sees the greed, the cruelty, the injustice of the existing order, and it will not stand and wait until the Church of Christ makes up its mind what to do . . . our young men are dreaming dreams, but our old men have no vision to pass on to them . . . The Church of Christ is on trial at the bar of civilization."

But these facts have been evident now for many years. Christendom has been on trial; she has been found wanting—the verdict is written in Rev. 3:15, 16. How true it is that the churches have no vision—they are blind respecting the great Divine plan, which is gradually working out. They rejected the message of present truth, because it did not come through their channel. As at the first advent, the message came quite apart from the Priests or Jewish leaders, so to-day the message proclaiming the end of the Age—the harvest—the presence of Christ and the new age of opportunity for the blessing of all the willing and obedient, has gone forth apart from the clerical class. How often does the Lord choose to use the weak and feeble instead of the highly esteemed. "Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise." "I thank Thee, O Father, that Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent and revealed them unto babes."

Had Israel received Christ at His first advent, there would never have been the terrible calamity—the destruction of Jerusalem and if Christendom, nominal spiritual Israel, had received the message of present truth, so widely proclaimed for many years, the great catastrophe with which this present evil world (age) will end, might have been avoided. As it is, the blind are leading the blind, and falling more and more into the ditch of confusion and unbelief. One has said, "The crisis is upon us and even the Church of Christ is still committed to national loyalties, and within those loyalties to denominational preoccupations." "Weighed in the balances and found wanting." "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins and that ye receive not of her plagues." Rev. 18:1-4.

Conscience Void of Offence.

(Convention Address)

“Herein do I exercise my self to have always a conscience void of offence toward God and men.” Acts 24:16.

WE could not have the working principle of a Christian expressed in a clearer or more concise form than that in our text. It goes right down to the foundation of a man, for the conscience is that faculty or principle within which the character of our thoughts, words and actions are decided, whether for right or wrong. If this part of a man is right, then the whole relationship of that man with his fellow-men will be right.

Right or righteousness consists of justice and truth, and when these principles prevail there is peace and harmony.

This was the law—“Love thy neighbour as thyself”—do unto him all things that you would he should do unto you. This will produce deep and lasting friendship, happy associations, good relationships of real value and joy, and build up solid character. This is the relationship that should exist among mankind; a purpose which is worthy of our best efforts. It means discipline—the training of the faculties—also alertness and watchfulness, a mind and heart ever willing to search for and learn the truth, regarding life as something above the gratification of fleshly desires.

Truth teaches that each individual has responsibilities and obligations, and each knows within himself whether or not, he is doing those duties conscientiously. Wilful neglect brings condemnation. God desires truth in the inward parts, a mind and will to be true to what righteousness requires. To evade or neglect duty will not keep the conscience void of offence. With continual exercise, conscientiousness will increase and develop. The knowledge of justice and truth will become clearer and deeper. There will be growth in grace and knowledge of Christ, and so the spirit and mind that was in Him will become manifest.

Some strong effort will be required to follow this way of life, for the Apostle was ever exhorting his hearers to be firm and steadfast, to not be weary in, well doing, but ever press on. He knew human nature well; and where it was likely to fail. A strong resolution is required, assisted by an equally strong faith in God, who will supply every need, according to His riches in glory. The Apostle met with difficulties and perplexities; in fact, his life was full of them, but he was not discouraged on that account—he rather rejoiced in them as affording opportunities for proving his faithfulness and the development of all the graces necessary in ‘the character of a Christian. He met with difficulties in the churches, some of the members of which did not appreciate him, but preferred other leaders. He was not concerned on that account; he took no offence, not allowing his dignity to be upset, but rather took a reasonable view of the matter. He had a duty to perform, he was the minister of Christ, and to him that came first. He saw the error; it was his duty to point out the right, and in doing so he was true to his ministry of Christ, to the churches, and to himself. Had he allowed his feelings, his dignity to come first, his ministry and the churches would. have suffered.

What a beautiful example the Apostle has set. In such a case as this, there was a threefold duty—to God, to the members of the church, and also to himself—and in the faithful observance of this duty he had the approval of his conscience. Here he exercised that charity that suffereth long’ and is kind, that beareth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things and never faileth. His viewpoint was not self or personal interests—his feelings and dignity were all brought into subjection unto Christ. Having a deep knowledge of spiritual matters, he knew the value of things regarded by many as important; he was willing to restrain himself; in fact, regarded it as his duty to do so rather than become a stumbling block to his weaker brother.

When writing to the Corinthians concerning meat offered to idols, he says, “Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no meat while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend.” It might be thought that no such responsibility attached to anyone, the weak brother should look after himself. The Apostle, however, recognised the power of example, and, where knowledge was lacking, example might be misinterpreted and evil result. Looking beneath the surface he saw the underlying principle—self-denial—in the interests of others. “The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister.” Service rendered brings its reward. “Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of My little ones, ye have done it unto Me.”

Doing good is the work of every son of God. “Therefore, as ye have opportunity, ‘do good unto all, but more especially unto them of the household’ of faith.” “Acts of kindness are to be rendered where possible, and where such are not possible, then good will and good wishes may take their place -and so show forth the fruits of the spirit. Words and acts are outward evidences of the spirit within; they are prompted’ from within—truth in the inward parts. “A mind and heart in every thought renewed, and full of love divine.”

Being in truth, is being in harmony with God; in agreement with that which is right—true in heart and mind—a love for God and man, and a desire to do good to all, according to opportunity. The benefit is not only to him who receives the good, but also to the doer, inasmuch as it tends to cultivate kindness, goodwill, love, joy and peace. Who has not experienced the pleasure that comes from doing an act of kindness for others? The performing of those little acts of grace and courtesy, for which some are noted, have their effects upon the doer as well as the receiver. The Apostle says, “be kindly affectioned one towards the other.”

Justice is a very necessary thing, without which there can be no approval of the conscience, but love and kindness goes further, and brings joy and peace to the heart and mind. It is giving more than the demands of justice, it is generosity, and is to be done heartily as unto the Lord. To the churches at Ephesus and Colosse, the Apostle wrote, “Children, obey your parents . . . Honour thy father and mother, which is the first commandment with promise.” This is a natural duty, and only what is due to the parents; fathers had their obligation in caring for their children, not provoking them to wrath, but bringing them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. To servants, he said, “Be obedient to them that are your masters., according to the flesh in singleness of your heart, as unto Christ; not with eyeservice as men-pleasers”—which, would be deceitful and deceptive and quite inconsistent in a servant of Christ—”Doing the will of God from the heart.” Adding as a special word of encouragement, “That whatsoever good thing any man doeth, the same shall he receive of the Lord whether be he bond or free.”

The lot of the bond servant probably was hard, and, for them the Apostle felt it necessary to point out particularly that their service should be rendered in a good, hearty spirit. Unwillingness and discontent cannot produce a peaceful heart and mind; indeed, they are not at all the outcome of the spirit of God; or the mind that was in Christ, whose servants they were. The Apostle did not remind them that their condition was an unjust one; it was permitted of the Lord, so he reminded them that by doing God’s will they would receive the reward of the inheritance, “for ye serve the Lord Christ.”

The masters were reminded that they also had obligations, their servants should be treated justly and, considerately, they themselves having a Master in heaven with whom there is no respect of persons.

“If ye be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above; set your affections on things above and not on things on the earth.” Here, affections mean love for, and attachment to. “Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy strength, with all thy mind, and with all thy heart”—God shall be first. This, evidently, was the Apostle’s thought, and the admonition is good, We are surrounded by the material; it is on every hand, engaging the greater part of our time, this being necessary for our existence, but on that account all our time and thoughts should not be absorbed. Natural things have their place and value, and are to be estimated and appreciated accordingly, as the gifts of God. In so doing, God is glorified. To the consecrated, it is but a step in the realm of thought, from the created to the Creator. God is not far from us, as we seek Him and the things that are above. What spiritual delight there is in knowing that progress is being made by trusting in God, abiding in Christ by fellowship with Him, and having the peace of God rule and reign in our hearts. This is for those who will seek it in faith, in spirit and in truth.

The Apostle had no earthly ties, no family, no, home, nothing to bind his affections to this earth. Here, he had no abiding city but sought one to come; he laid up treasure in heaven, for, where a man’s treasure is, there will his heart be also. So, he counted all but loss and dross that he might gain the excellency of Christ—the high qualities, the virtue, the mind which was in Christ, who was his Lord and Master and Pattern in all things. The love of Christ constrained him, led him on and inspired him under all circumstances and conditions, enabling him to carry out his purpose. Behind his desire to maintain this pure state of conscience, there was a great and rich reward upon which his heart was fixed, and which was not to be gained, except at great sacrifice. The sacrifice of all that the world values and holds dear, is as loss and dross; it vanishes and fades away as the grass of the field, when compared with the glory, honor and immortality promised the Apostle and also to those who likewise are prepared to sacrifice.

Amid all the trials and difficulties of life, there is nothing that should separate us from the love of Christ, or prevent us from maintaining a good conscience towards God and man. It rests entirely with ourselves, and resolution under the power of the Lord’s spirit is required to keep the natural tendencies in subjection and to prevent selfishness from obtruding itself. The rich promise is to him that overcometh. The word overcome is suggestive of conflict, and this must be continued to the end. The contention may be hard and difficult, but with the Apostle we may say, “I can do all thing through Christ, which strengtheneth me,” All sources from which he gained strength and inspiration are open to us, and, if availed of, we shall be able to say with him, at the close of life’s journey, “I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith,” and look forward with the same hope to the crown of righteousness which the Lord has promised to those who love His appearing.

Question Box.

Question:—In regard to 1 Peter 4:8, How does love in practice cover a multitude of sins?

Answer:--The connecting- verses show that while the Lord's people are being judged according to the flesh, i.e., by their actual doings, by the world generally, they are, from God's viewpoint, being judged according to the spirit, their intention, their real desire as new creatures. The earnest desire of these is to be holy, but they cannot act perfectly under present disabilities, so an advocate is provided, even Jesus Christ, the righteous. Our heavenly Father therefore views His consecrated children as though perfect through the merit of His dear Son. Our sins, through inherited weaknesses, are covered.

So, wherever the true love of the Lord prevails, and surely all who love God must love those be-gotten of God (1 John 4:20, 21), that love "will cover a multitude of sins," i.e., weaknesses, imperfections, awkwardnesses, and peculiarities in their brethren in Christ. Above all things, the Apostle urges, "have fervent love among yourselves"— seek more and more to look at others from God's viewpoint, not according to the flesh but according to the spirit.

There are various degrees of inherited weaknesses in the Lord's people in common with man-kind. A Christian may be more noble and just in character, either born or developed, than his brethren, and thus may discern unrighteousness in others, which other brethren do not recognise. What should be the attitude of the "more noble" - under such circumstances in applying the principle of the above Scripture? Have we not the answer to this in the example of our Lord. He was perfect and holy; and how the imperfections of His disciples, not to mention those of the fallen race around Him, must have jarred on His perfect heart and mind, had it not been for the spirit of the heavenly Father, the spirit of love, abiding in Him so fully. He said, "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick," so He ministered to the poor, the sick, the publicans and sinners.

So we may be sure that those who may be of more noble birth or attainment need the same spirit of love in their hearts, if they will be kept from viewing others less noble in any other light than that in which the Lord views them.

It is so easy to find fault when often the only unrighteousness in another is that which we all have to some extent— inherited weaknesses resulting in unintentional offences, all of which will pass away when "that which is perfect is come." "The end of all things is at hand, be ye, therefore, sober, and watch unto prayer"—desiring more and more of the Lord's spirit, which. "shall keep your hearts and minds in Christ Jesus."

Question:—Should we forgive offences even when the offender shows no regrets and perhaps continues the offence?

Answer:—There is nothing in either Old or New Testament to indicate that God will pardon un-repentant sins, nor that He would expect us to express forgiveness of offences while the offender has no regrets.

It would seem that God longs to forgive and. restore to favour all who will return and seek His pardoning grace, through the means He in His mercy has provided in Christ Jesus. We have this' expressed in the prophet's words, "Why will ye die, O House of Israel. Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die, saith the Lord, and not that he should return from his ways and live:" Ezek. 18:31, 23.

If the sinner will not repent he must die, for "the soul that sinneth, it shall die." Ezek. 18:20. That is, the second death from which there is no recovery. God expects us to act similarly in regard to those who do us wrong. Our hearts must bear no malice, no hatred, no bitterness; we are to love even our enemies, and have pity and good-will towards those who have offended or done us wrong. It would, however, not be like God, nor right for us to act as though there had been no wrong, until there was some apparent sorrow for the wrong done. Then the whole matter must be put away, as the Lord has promised to cast all our sins behind His back and put them away as far as the east is from the west.

It is a miserable life that harbours ill-will and bitterness towards anyone. The hard heart that seems never able to get over some trifling or big offence is to be pitied. "So likewise shall my heavenly Father do unto you, if ye front your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses." Matt. 18:35.

On the other hand, if we were to treat one as though there was nothing wrong when there was, we would be hypocrites, and also do injury to the wrong doer by making him feel that he had done no harm when he had. Thus, he would learn no lesson, and quite likely continue in his 'evil course.

The above Scriptural course would be the only correct and proper way in connection with a real offence; all should be quite sure they do not imagine some wrong doing towards themselves, and so unnecessarily keep it in their hearts, where it would interfere with their own growth in grace and knowledge of the Lord. The Lord's directions in Matt. 18:15-17 should also be followed; if any matter is not big enough to take to- the one concerned, it is too small to think about.

God is Our Refuge and Strength.

(Psalm 46.)

(Convention Address)

IF we accept God as our refuge, what do we become? Nothing less than refugees and aliens fleeing away from the power of Satan and the pomp and vanity of this evil world. We abandon the life of sin and God is then indeed our refuge.

In fleshly Israel, God appointed that there should be seven cities of refuge, so that anyone committing a crime of homicide, or accidentally killing a person, could flee to one of these where his case could be heard, and if his crime was not one unto death, he would be given the chance to retrieve his past, but he was bound to live in the city of refuge till the death of the high priest, after which he would be free to go where he liked. It was the custom of the inhabitants of those cities to go out and meet a refugee and to help and intercede for him if he was in danger of being overtaken.

In this picture we can see the wonderful provision God made for fleshly Israel; what, then, is the provision His love and bounty has made for spiritual Israel, His house of sons? We trace the overwhelming love of God in that He has placed Himself as our refuge, and has promised to be our strength in every time of need, and according to the faith of the Christian this refuge becomes more real, more necessary, and more vital to our walk with God in this evil day. Could it be possible for us to have a greater refuge than God Himself, while here we are only refugees and aliens with no abiding city?

To true Christians everywhere—those who have made a covenant of sacrifice unto the Lord after seeking Him in the divinely appointed way—God has prepared another city of refuge and has set His messengers all along the lonely way to encourage and to assist any who may stumble or become lame or halt, and to comfort those that mourn and to cheer and hearten the ones whom the Adversary has been specially tempting and who are in sore distress. It is from the sweet influence of these divinely appointed messengers that we get the strength and courage to walk the narrow way. We note their patience and labor of love, we receive the blessedness of their sympathy and the strength of their example. If we look deep enough into their hearts -we see the development of that self-same character- of the Lord, and note that “they have been with Jesus and have learned of Him—they are developing the love and patience of Jesus by the things which they have suffered.

Everyone who has accepted God as his refuge must suffer - persecution, but by the eye of faith each are to “look upon Zion, the city of our solemnities: thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be broken down; not one of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken.

But there the glorious Lord shall be unto us a place of broad rivers and streams, no galley with oars shall go thereon, neither shall gallant ships pass thereby.” While these words of the Prophet Isaiah would seem to apply to the earthly phase of God’s kingdom (in which all God’s people rejoice), the grandeur and beauty of the spiritual inheritance is what appeals most to all who have their hope “as an anchor of the soul . . . within the veil, whither the forerunner has for us entered, even Jesus.”

God is the Christian’s strength, and this privilege is not the property of one individual, but its power lies in the unity of all the members. God has so placed the members in the Body as has pleased Him, and every one is absolutely necessary for the strength and life of another member, and so precious is the life and welfare of each member that the Father has likened them unto precious jewels, costly beyond price, and further the Father places these members on the same pedestal as Jesus. To give you an instance of this wonderful truth, you will remember the time when Saul of Tarsus made havoc of the church, entering into every house, and, haling men and women, committed them to prison. Read Acts 9:1-5, “And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest.” It was not the trembling Christian Jew, hiding in an upper room or cave; it was not the wretched fanatic who worshipped a crucified felon, but it was Jesus, the beloved Son of God, whom Paul was persecuting, in the deeper sense.

It is only as we develop the character of Jesus, His love, His patience, tenderness and meekness, that our heavenly Father, our great Refuge, will recognise us in this wonderful way, that when our troubles and persecutions come because of faithfulness to our covenant, faithfulness to the Lord, His truth and the brethren, that it can be said of us, as of Stephen of old, “It is Jesus whom thou persecutest.” And it is for these glorious fruits of the spirit that the great Husbandman waiteth with great patience. The flesh profiteth us nothing, we should know no one after the flesh, we should look only for the humble Jesus in each other and we will most assuredly find Him there in certain degrees of loveliness.

“Sir, we would see Jesus.” The Greeks were wishing to see Jesus and to hear more of His gracious words (John 12:20-22). And we come here to-day to see Jesus and to feel the warmth of I-Tis ‘divine love, and we see this developing in each other—some trait of meekness or gentleness, some work of patience or tenderness, etc. In this way we see Jesus as God sees Him in each one of us. So we should look only for the spirit of the Lord in one another, for the more we see of Jesus in each other, the greater becomes our strength and growth, • till we come to the blessed knowledge that we are one with God, one with Jesus and one with the brethren. What a thought! “I am Jesus whom thou persecutest.” Would we willingly persecute our divine Saviour? Yet, as surely as we persecute the least of these, His brethren, we persecute Jesus.

The thing most precious in God’s sight is for Him to see each one trying to imitate Jesus. What brings us here today? The love of Jesus. What warms our hearts, and binds and cements our hearts together? The love of Jesus. And in this unity of spirit lies the secret of our strength; this pyramid of righteousness and holiness with Christ, the head corner-stone, perfect and beautiful and beloved of the Father, and so precious are these in His sight that He calls them by the one adorable name--Jesus.

We have reached the clays when we see the fulfillment of this Psalm 46 coming to pass all round us. Though the earth—the social order of things —fade away, and the governments be cast into a whirlpool of disorder and anarchy, when the night cometh when no man can work, when evil shall increase and goodness decrease, when the nations are angry for their kingdoms ore moved. Is our faith in God strong enough to carry us through this dark night of trouble, which is right upon us? Have we made God our strength? Is our love for Him so strong that we can say with joy, “The Lord of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge.”

Correspondence,

Victoria,
8th. February, 1935. The Secretary, Berean Biblical Institute,
Dear Brother,

Thank you very much for the “Manna Texts” and “Hymns of Dawn” I received just before our vacation. The “Mannas” made very acceptable Christmas gifts, and my friends showed much interest in the comments, so of course I felt doubly pleased.

I find that I am familiar with 64 of the tunes in the Hymn book, so I do not think I shall have much difficulty in learning any of them.

I am enclosing — to pay for “Hymns of Dawn” and for subscriptions for “Peoples Paper.” Kindly send me any booklets, similar to that sent in January, that you might have on hand, and should there be a balance please add the amount to the funds of the Institute.

With best wishes,

I am,
Yours sincerely, G.F.

Dear Friends,

Please find enclosed the amount, which I wish you to use in spreading the Glad Tidings the way you deem the best.

I rejoice, dear friends, as I see evidences about me of the approaching victory. I trust in His love, remembering always His promises, “As thy days, so shall thy strength be,” and “Earth hath no sorrows Heav’n cannot heal,”

A Believer.

[The above letter with help to the work was received some little time ago from an unknown friend, and the opportunity is taken of expressing our appreciation of this kindly co-operation in service of the truth. The Lord will, undoubtedly, much more than compensate all His people who delight to spend and be spent in His service.]

Queensland, 31/1/1935. Berean Bible Institute, Melbourne.

Dear Brethren,

I received your letters, also two parcels of books and papers for which I thank you. I am enclosing — for payment of books “What Pastor Russell Taught” and “Desolations of the Sanctuary.” With the balance I shall be pleased if you will forward me the book “Foregleams of the Golden Age,” as advertised in the booklet “Hell, Spiritism,” etc.

I understand that there is a book, “Questions and Answers,” by Pastor Russell, so, if you have any for sale I shall be pleased if you will forward one, advising me the cost.

I have read half of the book “Desolations,” and I am pleased with its just criticisms. It confirms the opinion I have had for some time regarding the Watch Tower Society.

I regret that I did not know of your existence whilst I was in your city during Xmas vacation, as I would have liked very much to have had fellowship with you. Anyhow, if I am fortunate enough to again visit your city in the future, I certainly will be most pleased to call on you.

With much Christian love,

I remain, your brother by His grace,

ML.

Tasmania.

Dear Brother,

Loving Christian greetings in His dear name. Thanks for receipts, etc.

Well, dear brother, I hope your Sydney visit was of profit to all concerned. Much points to the thought that many who have been in the truth for varying periods, do not really understand consecration, and mix up class attendance and acquiescence in the Divine Plan as being of the Church class. Thus Classes are mixed and it is the shakings that are real blessings, separating these from the Lord's own, who are, after all, only a few. These, rooted and grounded in the truth, have become part of it and are therefore steadfast and immovable, safe from the allurements of the “scarlet woman and her daughters.” Truth is sown only for the righteous, and its joys for the upright in heart.

I'll close now, with Christian love to self and all the friends, and thank them for nice message in Colossians. Your brother in Christ. B.C.H.

This One Thing I Do.

THE talented Apostle Paul gives his testimony as to the wisdom of shaking off our plans and arrangements and of relaxing efforts in various directions in order to concentrate our energies upon those things which we can best bring to perfection, saying, "This one thing I do." (Phil 3:13). The Apostle's one business in life was to be, so far as he was able, acceptable to the Lord, personally, and to do with his 'might what he could to assist others into the -same condition.

In harmony with this, the thought seems to be that whatever the Apostle knew respecting other matters prominent in his day—customs of the Age, scientific questions, etc.—he would ignore. He would be a specialist. He would confine his thoughts, words and teachings along this one line; for he thought it was worthy. He had been at Corinth as an ambassador of Christ. He was not there to air his knowledge, but to tell the message of the Kingdom. He would make preaching the Gospel his one[^] business, to accomplish which he felt that all of his knowledge and energy were too little.

The Apostle did not determine to ignore all of his knowledge without having a good reason, or purpose therefor. It was because he wished to concentrate all of his attention and influence upon one great subject. That subject was Jesus Christ, Jesus the Anointed; Jesus the Messiah was the main thought of all his preaching. He realised that the great Messiah was a part of the Divine Program which had been promised—the "Seed" which was to bless all the families of the earth; that Jesus was that great Messiah, and that all men should recognise Him, should flock to His standard.

But St. Paul would preach, not only that Jesus was the Messiah, but that He was the crucified Messiah, for he would not be ashamed of the Divine teaching. He would preach that God sent forth His Son; and that the Son had left the glory He had with the Father, had lived on the earth, and had "died, the Just for the unjust," for this very purpose--that He might manifest His obedience to the Divine arrangement. In thus preaching Christ and His crucifixion, the Apostle was not ignoring the fact that there was to be a Church; Jesus was the Anointed Head over His Body, the Church. In preaching Jesus the Anointed One, St. Paul was showing how the Divine Plan was being outworked under Divine supervision, and what the glorious results would be. To these things he had determined that all his time and attention should go.

How evident it is that to-day many ministers have lost something possessed by the Apostle, who thus recognised the importance of the Gospel of Christ! This loss very largely accounts for the various peculiar topics advertised for religious meetings; sometimes the topic is politics; sometimes temperance; sometimes national recovery, etc. The reason for this change from the old-time style of preaching is that during the Dark Ages the Gospel became perverted, misrepresented; and that now people are ashamed of what was formerly preached—"Be good and go to heaven; be bad and go to hell!" It is not a great message. We cannot wonder that an astute mind grasps the whole thing in a few minutes. We are rather glad, indeed, that ministers are ashamed to preach what their creeds profess, and that, therefore, their creeds must be kept in the background.

"Not Ashamed of the Gospel of Christ."

For us, however, who see the importance of the Gospel, the case is different. We know that this Gospel of the Kingdom, of which the Apostle was not ashamed, teaches that the elect Church is, to be the Bride of Christ; that Messiah is to bless the whole world; that Jesus is the Messiah; that He was crucified, dead, buried, raised from the dead by His Father; that His crucifixion was a part of the great Divine Plan, and that without this very arrangement no salvation could be effected, either for the Church, or for the world in the future. Therefore, as the Apostle did., we are preaching Jesus, the Crucified One, who died for our sins, who rose again for our justification, and who, coming in glory with His Church, is the great Messiah, to bless the world through natural Israel.

Because we have found the Truth we, like St. Paul, feel constrained to preach nothing but this Message. The same truth that influenced Him should influence us. If, therefore, any of the brethren feel disposed to go out after the manner of Babylon and preach something else, here is the reproof—"Not . . . anything save Jesus Christ and Him crucified."

This is the only subject. St Paul would be as though he knew nothing else. This subject would be the one thing to which he would give his time and attention. Let it be so with us!

Beloved, as you value the glorious hope set before you., we beseech you that you give no heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, as the Apostle terms them (1 Tim. 4:; but that with fixedness of purpose you apply yourselves to the one thing to which you are called, and which as prospective heirs of Messiah's Kingdom you are privileged to do. Let us not forget that we are a "peculiar people," separate from the great body of nominal Christians, as well as from the world, having higher hopes, aims and ambitions, and favoured with a clearer insight into the deep things of God, having been called out of our former darkness into His marvellous light. Thus separate from the world and from Christians who partake largely of the spirit of the world, what wonder if we find them all out of harmony with us, and either ignoring or opposing us!

We expect such opposition; and we know that 'it will continue until our course has been finished in death. If we endure hardness as good soldiers for the Truth's sake, no matter how that hardness may come, in our efforts to do the Lord's will and to advance the interests of His Kingdom, then we are presenting out bodies as living sacrifices in the Divine service. To be really in His service includes both the careful and continual study of God's Plan, and the imbibing of its spirit, leading to an enthusiastic zeal' for its accomplishment, and to activity to the extent of ability in its service, whatever the cost or sacrifice it may require.

If faithful in this service we have neither time nor disposition to give heed to other themes having no bearing on the one thing to which we have solemnly dedicated our lives. If we have consecrated all to God our time is not our own; and consequently we have none to spare for the investigation of theories built upon any other foundation than that laid down in the Bible. Nor have we time to devote to the ideas and pursuits which engross the world's attention, many of which are harmless or even elevating in themselves, but which would be harmful and degrading to us if we allow them to occupy consecrated time and to divert our attention from the one thing we ought to be doing.

The Apostle warns us to "Shun profane and vain babblings; for they will increase unto more ungodliness"; but counsels, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth"; "Teach no other doctrine, neither give heed to fables and endless genealogies, which minister questions rather than godly edifying which is in faith."-2 Tim. 2:16, 15; 1 Tim. 1:3, 4.

How Narrow This Way!

Is not this a very narrow way? Yes, so narrow that our Lord foretold respecting it, "Strait (difficult) is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto (the) life, and few there be that find it!" (Matt. 7:14). It is so narrow that it is wide enough to admit only the Lord's Plan and those who are willing to discard all other plans, projects and questionings, and to devote themselves fully to its service; and who are quite willing to hear any reproach it may bring.

Are you endeavouring from day to day to vindicate the Divine character and to make known God's righteous ways? Are you diligently studying to make yourself thoroughly familiar with the Truth, so that you may indeed be a living epistle known and read of all men within the circle of your influence? Are you indeed a workman that need not be ashamed (2 Tim. 2:15) ? Are you of those who have really given themselves to the Lord, saying truthfully to Him:—

"Take myself—I will to be Ever, only, all for Thee"?

If so, you are just narrow-minded enough to say, "This one thing I do; and • I make everything else bend to this one thing of showing forth God's praises and of helping others into His marvellous light; and to this end I cultivate and use what talents I possess as a wise steward of my Heavenly Father."

Dearly beloved, we impose neither vows nor bondage upon each other, but the call has its own limitations; the Master has directed us to teach all nations (for the Gospel is no longer confined to the Jewish nation), not astronomy nor geology nor any of the vain philosophies about which the world speculate, but—"Observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you.”—Matt. 28:20.

This is what the Apostle Paul did. Hear him in his zeal for this one thing to which he had devoted his life: “And I, brethren, when I came unto you, came not with the excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the mystery of God; for determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ and Him crucified. (I riveted your attention on this one thing! I kept this one thing continually before you.) . . . And my speech and my preaching were not with enticing words of man’s wisdom, but’ in demonstration of the Spirit and power (of the Truth), that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of Cor. 2:1-5,

St. Paul was an outspoken, uncompromising teacher. When he knew that he had the Truth, he spoke it with confidence, and boldly declared that everything contrary to it is false doctrine. He also taught believers that it was not only their privilege, but their duty to be established in the faith, to know on the evidence of God’s Word, why they believed, and to be able to give to every man that inquired a reason for the hope that was in them.

Let it be so with us also. Each consecrated believer should ask himself, “How carefully have I studied that which I recognise as Divine Truth? How fully capable am I of handling the Sword of the Spirit?” Few indeed are those who can say they have fully digested and assimilated all they have received; and that they have let none of these things slip from memory; that they have so treasured it up in their hearts that it is their meditation by day and by night; that they have a ready answer—a “Thus saith the Lord”—for every man that asks them a reason for the hope that is in them, concerning any point of doctrine; that they can clearly and intelligently portray the Divine Plan, quote the Divine authority for each successive step of it, and, if need be, point out its place in the Divine system of types. To gain such proficiency in the Word is the work of a lifetime.; but every day should see a closer approximation to that proficiency, and will if we are faithful students and faithful servants of the Truth.

If all the consecrated were thus busily engaged in putting on the armour of God, and in proving it by actual use in zealous endeavour to herald the Truth and to help others to stand, there would be no time left for even good temperance reform work, nor for work among the slums of the great cities, nor for the doctrine of healing, nor any such things. We have no consecrated time for these matters, which are only side issues and not harmful in themselves, except as they divert attention and consume time which has been consecrated to another and higher use. All these works will be effectually accomplished in the “Times of Restitution” (Acts 3:19-22), now in the near future. Besides, there are others engaged in these works; we recognise and seek to accomplish the work set before us in the Divine Plan.

In all the history of the Church there has never been a time in which the great Adversary has been so active in diverting attention from the Truth by introducing unprofitable and irrelevant questions as at present. Just now, when the exaltation and glory of the Church are soon to be accomplished, and when the faithful are about to be received into the joy of their Lord, Satan is resorting to every device in order to beguile them of their reward and to frustrate this feature of the Divine Plan.

But really to frustrate any part of the Divine Plan is impossible. God has purposed to take out from among men a “little flock,” “a people for His name”; and such a company is assuredly being gathered. Yet whether all those now in the race for the prize will surely be of that company, is still an open question. Take heed, beloved, that no man take thy crown. (Rev. 3:11). If any come short of their privileges and prove unworthy of the rich inheritance, there are others who will quickly fill their places.

Our observation of those consecrated ones who have permitted other themes than this “Gospel of the Kingdom” to engross time and attention, leads us to advise such to be very jealous in husbanding time and talent for the ministry of the Gospel, leaving all subjects outside of this, however interesting they may be, to those who prefer to devote time to them now; and to the future life for ourselves, when all knowledge shall be ours. We have invariably observed that those who, for any avoidable cause, have turned aside from the true and only Gospel, are quickly turned out of the way or greatly hindered in their course toward the “prize” of our “high calling.”

May we, dear brethren, be able truthfully to express our position in the words of the Apostle: “This one thing I do; forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus”; “I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified.” —Phil. 3:13, 14; I Cor. 2:2.

“The Lord Thinketh on Me.”

(Psalm xl., 17.)

Art Thou thinking of me
Yea, I know that Thy heart goeth forth to Thine own—
That thou thinkest of me as if my life alone,

O, my God, were of value to Thee.
Thou art thinking of me!
Ah!! shall I, on whom surely Thy love hath been set,

Shall I ever grow cold ? Can I ever forget,
Though the earth claims about me may be
That Thou thinkest of me ?—

Nay, Thy love and Thy thought, O my Father, shall call,
With a charm that is sweeter and dearer than all,
And my thought shall be drawn unto Thee.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

EACH year, as the Anniversary of our Lord's death recurs, the propriety of its commemoration is more and more impressed upon the Lord's true followers, as they particularly bring to mind the Master's own words at the institution of the Memorial, and such as written by the inspired Apostle—"Christ, our Passover, is sacrificed for us."

Various Scriptures clearly show that Jesus, "the Lamb of God," was the antitype of the Passover lamb, and that His death was as essential to the deliverance of "the Church of the first-born" from death, as was the death of the typical lamb to the first-born of Israel. Thus, led of the spirit, we come to the words and acts of Jesus at the last Passover, which He ate with His disciples.

Jesus knew the import of the Passover, but the disciples knew not. He was alone; none could sympathise, none could encourage Him. Even had He explained to the disciples they could not have understood or appreciated His explanation, because they were not yet begotten of the spirit. Nor could they be thus begotten until justified from Mantic sin—passed over, or reckoned free from sin, by virtue of the slain Lamb, whose shed blood ransomed them from the power of death.

Thus alone, treading the narrow way, 'which none before had trod, and in which He is our Forerunner and Leader, what wonder that His heart at times was exceedingly sorrowful, even unto death. 'When the hour had come, they sat down to eat the Passover, and Jesus said unto the disciples:—"With desire I have desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer. I say, unto you, I will not any more eat thereof until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God." (Luke 22:15, 16). Doubtless He longed to have them understand how it would begin to be fulfilled a little later on in that very day, by the slaying of the real lamb.

Probably one reason why He specially desired to eat this Passover with them was, that He there designed breaking the truth of its significance to them to the extent that they could receive it; for, "As they did eat, Jesus took bread, and blessed and brake it, and gave to them and said, Take (eat), this is My body." (Mark 14:22). "This is My body, which is given for you: This do in remembrance of Me." "And He took the cup and gave thanks and said, Take this and divide it among yourselves . . . '17 his cup is the new covenant, in my blood, which is shed for you." Luke 22:17-20.

We cannot doubt that the design of the Master was to call their minds from the typical lamb to Himself, the antitype, and to show them that it would be no longer proper to observe a feature of the Law which He was about to fulfill.

And the bread and wine were to be to them thereafter the elements which, as remembrancers of would take the place of the typical lamb. Thus considered, there is force in His words, "This do in remembrance of Me"—no longer kill a literal lamb in remembrance of a typical deliverance, but instead, use the bread and wine, representatives of My flesh and life, the basis of the real deliverance, the real passing over. Hence, let as many as receive Me and My words henceforth, "Do this in remembrance of Me."

The Import of the Emblems.

Of the bread, Jesus said:—"It is My flesh;" that is, it represents His flesh, His humanity, which was broken or sacrificed for us. Unless He had sacrificed Himself for us, we could never have had a resurrection from death, to future life; as He said, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man . . . ye have no life in you." John 6:53.

Not only was the breaking of Jesus' body thus to provide bread of life, of which if a man eat he shall never die, but it also opened the "narrow way" to life, and broke or unsealed and gave us access to the truth, as an aid to walk the narrow way, which leads to life. And thus we see that it was the breaking of Him who said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life, no man cometh unto the Father but by Me."

Hence, when we eat of the broken loaf, we should realise that had He not died—been broken for us—we should never have been able to come to the Father, but would have remained forever under the curse of Adamic sin and in the bondage of death.

Further, the bread was unleavened. Leaven is corruption, an element of decay, hence a type of sin, and the decay and death which sin works in mankind. So, then, this symbol declares that Jesus was free from sin, a Lamb without spot or blemish, "holy, harmless, undefiled." Had Jesus been of Adamic stock, had He received the life principle in the usual way from an earthly father, He, too, would have been leavened, as are all other men, by Adamic sin; but His life came unblemished from a higher, heavenly nature, changed to earthly conditions, hence He is called the bread from heaven. John 6:41. Let us then appreciate the bread as pure, unleavened, and so let us eat of Him; eating and digesting truth, and especially this truth; appropriating by faith His righteousness to ourselves we realise Him as both the way and the life. -

The Apostle, by divine revelation, communicates to us a further meaning in this remembrancer. shows that not only did the loaf represent Jesus, individually, but that after we have partaken thus of Him (after we have been justified by appropriating His righteousness), we may, by consecration, be associated with Him as parts of one loaf (one body) to be broken for, and in a like manner, to become food for the world (1 Cor. 10:16). This same thought, of our privilege as justified believers to share now in the sufferings and death of Christ. and thus become joint-heirs with Him of future glories, and associates in the work of blessing and giving life to all the families of the earth, is expressed by the Apostle repeatedly and under various figures; but when he compares the church as a whole to the “one loaf” now being broken, it furnishes a striking and forcible illustration of our union and fellowship with our Head.

He says, “Because there is one loaf we, the many (persons) are one body; for we all partake of the one loaf.” “The loaf which-^ we break, is it not a participation of the body of the Anointed One?” 1 Cor. 10:16, 17.--Diaglott.

The wine represents the life given by Jesus, the sacrifice--the death. . “This is My blood (symbol of life given up in death) of the new covenant, shed for many for the remission of sins”; “Drink ye all of it.”—Matt. 26:27, 28.

It is by the giving up of His life as a ransom for the life of the Adamic race, which sin had forfeited, that a right to life comes to men. (Rom. 5:18, iv). Jesus’ shed blood was the “ransom for all,” but His act of banding the cup to the disciples, and asking them to drink of it, was an invitation to them to become partakers of His sufferings, or, as Paul expresses it, to “fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ.” (Col. 1:24). “The cup of blessing, for which we bless God, is it not a participation of the blood (shed blood—death) of the Anointed One?” (1 Cor. 10:16.— Diaglott). Would that all could realise the value of the cup, and could bless God for an opportunity of sharing it with Christ that we may be also glorified together.—Rom. 8:17.

Jesus attaches this significance to the cup elsewhere, indicating that it is the cup of sacrifice, the death of our humanity. For instance, when asked by two disciples a promise of future glory in His Throne, He answered them:— “Ye know not what ye ask; are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of?” On their hearty avowal, He answered, “Ye shall indeed drink of my cup.” Wine is also a symbol of joy and invigoration: so we share Jesus’ joys in doing the Father’s will now, and shall share also His glories, honor and immortality —when we drink it new with Him in the Kingdom.

Let us then, dear brethren, as we surround the table to commemorate our Lord’s death, call to mind the deep significance- of the Memorial; and being invigorated with His life, and strengthened by the living bread, let us drink with Him into His death and be broken in feeding others. “For if we be dead with _Him we shall live with Him; if we suffer we shall also reign with Him. 2:11, 12.

“According to Thy gracious word,
In meek humility,
This will I do, my dying Lord,
I will remember Thee.

Thy body, given for my sake,
My bread from heaven shall be;
Thy testamental cup I take,
And thus remember Thee.

When to the cross I turn mine eyes,
And rest on Calvary,
O, Lamb of God, my Sacrifice,
I will remember Thee.”

Memorial Service in Melbourne.

The Melbourne Class has arranged to assemble on Tuesday evening, 16th April (D.V.) to commemorate our Lord's death, this date being the anniversary of the institution of the Memorial.

The service is to be held at 7.45 p.m. in the usual meeting rooms at "Towler House," 18 Queen St. (near Flinders St.), Melbourne. All consecrated followers of Christ will be welcome at this service, "in remembrance of Flint."

Easter convention.

The Adelaide brethren have arrangements well advanced for their Convention to be held throughout the Easter season, from Good Friday to Easter Monday. The first three days of Convention are to be held (D. V.) in the usual meeting rooms, at Stott's Building, Flinders St., Adelaide, with Easter Monday to be spent at Gawler.

All able to attend and partake of the spiritual good things at the gatherings, will be very welcome.

The Memorial Service in Adelaide has been arranged for Thursday evening, 18th April.

Further particulars and programmes may be obtained from Mrs. H. H. Bartel, 10 Forest Avenue East, Clarence Gardens, Adelaide.

Jews Return to Palestine.

Engineer Sees Progress.

BRISBANE—The prophecy that the Jews would return to Palestine was being fulfilled, as they now numbered 250,000, while the Arab population, Christian and Moslem, totalled 700,000, said Major C. V. Quinlan, a civil engineer, who has returned to his native Queensland in the Orsova after having spent three years in Palestine.

Major Quinlan investigated Palestine's water resources and surveyed the route of the pipeline now under construction for Jerusalem's £400,000 water supply. The pipeline is 40 miles long, and extends from Jaffa on the coast to the ancient capital.

He considers that Palestine had a wonderful future. Tel Aviv, the only all-Jewish city in the world, was only 12 years old, but it had a population of 110,000.

Splendid bitumen roads were being constructed, and a bus service linked important centres. Trams were unknown. Southern Palestine, including Gaza and Beersheba, should support a population of a million.

THE MYSTERY OF THE KINGDOM,

THE salvation open at the present time has been obtainable only through faith, and faith is dependent upon a measure of knowledge, or revelation, and this knowledge, or revelation, came to us from God, for said St. Peter, “Holy men of old spoke and wrote as they were moved by the holy spirit.” God in this Age is calling a class possessed of ears of appreciation for His Message. These are mainly the weary and heavy laden and sin-sick, chiefly the poor of this world, rich in faith.

It is not enough that they hear the Message, not enough that additionally they accept it, turn from sin and consecrate their lives to God and His service and be accepted of Him, through the merit of Jesus, and be begotten of the holy spirit. From that moment they may be said to be saved and to have everlasting life, if they follow a certain course.

That course includes a continual study of the Divine instructions and promises and the exercise of faith and prayer, and obedience and trust, even unto the end.

The point of this lesson is to show the importance of having the right kind of spiritual food, and of using it and not allowing the new nature to become choked by earthly hopes, aims or ambitions. Such as thus overcome will be inheritors with Jesus of His glorious Messianic Kingdom of a thousand years, which is to bless Israel and, through Israel, all the families of the earth.

Jesus gave the parable of the Sower of the “good seed,” some of which fell by the wayside, and was devoured by the fowls; some fell on rocky ground where it had no depth of earth, and brought forth no fruitage; some amongst thorns, which choked it; some into the good ground, which yielded thirty fold, sixty fold and one hundred fold. The disciples were perplexed and unable to understand it and inquired of the Great Teacher its meaning.

His answer was that He was quite willing that they should understand the parable, and that it related to the Kingdom of God, but it was not to be understood by outsiders. He explained that it was for this reason that He always spoke in parables, so that the general public might see and hear and not understand, because the masses even of the Jews were not in a heart condition to understand and be profited by these lessons respecting the Kingdom. Only such persons as desired to become members of the Kingdom class and were also willing to undertake the stringent conditions of the “narrow way”—only such were to fully and clearly understand the parables of the Kingdom. This is in harmony with all of God’s dealings in the present time. We read again, “None of the wicked shall understand, but the wise (toward God) shall understand.” And again we read, “The secret of the fiord is with them that reverence Him, and He will show them His Covenant.”

In Mark 4:13, the Master indicates that this parable would serve as a general key to His followers for their interpretation of all His parables. “Seed” does not mean literal seed, “birds” do not mean birds, “thorns” do not mean thorns, etc. Proceeding, the Great Teacher expounded the parable as follows: (I) The seed that was sown represents the Word of God. More than this, it represents that particular element or feature of God’s Word which relates to the Kingdom.

This is shown by St. Matthew’s account of the same parable (Matt. 13:19): “When anyone heareth the Word (Message of the Kingdom), and understandeth it not, then cometh the Wicked One and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart. This is he that receiveth the seed by the wayside.” Our lesson says that the Wicked One meant is Satan. Satan and his evil agents are therefore represented in the parable by “birds,” and the lesson is that however much of the Gospel of the Kingdom we may read or hear preached, we lose the benefit of that which we do not understand.

Evidently, then, much of the Bible study and much of the religious reading is lost, because not understood. The secondary lesson is that one reason why the “good seed” does not enter into the understanding is that the heart is not in a receptive attitude. Like the wayside path, it is hard. Such hard hearts, selfish hearts, proud hearts, are of the kind which the Saviour does not wish to have understand His parables nor understand the glorious Kingdom Plan which they expound.

The seed sown in the stony place represents those who, when they hear the Message of the Kingdom, are delighted. They say, how good that sounds! What a grand time there will be when Messiah rules in righteousness to bless the world and lift up the poor, degraded members of Adam’s family! And how great is the privilege of becoming members of the Bride of Christ, to be associated with Him in His glorious Kingdom work! But the class represented by the stony ground have little depth of character; they are merely emotional.

The “Seed,” or Message of the Kingdom, which these heard with such delight at first, never matures in their hearts, because they are too shallow, too superficial in their love of righteousness. Below the surface those are hard hearts and selfish, and so, when they find that the good Seed of the Kingdom is unpopular and that it will bring them a certain amount of reproach •and contempt and perhaps persecution—then all their ardour fades out, their zeal is at an end. The Kingdom Message fails to produce in them the fruitage desired. The trouble was not with the Seed nor with the Sower, nor with the sun of persecution necessary for the ripening—the fault lay in the fact that their hearts were not right; they were hard, stony.

The seed sown in the thorny ground represents those who have good hearts and have heard the Message of the Kingdom and appreciate it and rejoice in it, but their hearts are divided. They allow the cares of this life and the love of riches to have such a share of their heart's affections that the Kingdom Message does not have the opportunity to bring forth such fruitage as will be pleasing to the Lord.

Let us note carefully that these thorns do not, as some suggest, represent gambling devices, card parties, saloons and other places of ill-repute, nor secret sins and vices. None of those things should appeal to Christians at all. The Master distinctly tells us that the thorns represent “the cares of this life and the deceitfulness of riches.” Thus every Christian man or woman who has received the Message of the Kingdom and has allowed the cares of this life and the deceitfulness of riches to choke and frustrate his prospects as respects the Kingdom is represented in this parable. Very nice people, hospitable, educated, etc., belong to this class of the parable represented by the thorny ground.

(4) According to the parable there will be three classes of believers who will attain the Kingdom—or we may say, they will all be one class in the sense that they will bring forth the one kind of fruitage and be acceptable to the Lord as joint-heirs in His Kingdom, but the differences between them will be in the amount of fruitage such yield —some thirty fold, some sixty fold and some a hundred fold.

The Lord does not explain the differences between these fruitages, but we may well understand that the amount of fruitage will be measured by the amount of love and zeal in the heart. The fully appreciative and the fully loving will be the most energetic to know and to do the Master's will., and they will bring forth the largest fruitage —a hundred fold—and they, too, will have the chief places in the Kingdom.

St. Paul declares that as star -differs from star in glory, so it will be with those who attain unto the First Resurrection—all will come forth glorious, but some will blaze with a more resplendent brilliancy, because of their great zeal, and therefore their great likeness to their Redeemer and Lord. Jesus likewise mentions the distinctions amongst those who will sit with Him in His Throne, He assured James and John that, if they were willing to drink of His cup and be baptised into His death, they should surely sit with Him in His Throne; but as to whether or not they would have the chief places of honour and distinction was not for Him to say. Those places will be given according to the Father's determination; that is to say, according to principles of justice, of merit.

Those will have the places of honour next to the Redeemer, who, in this life, will manifest to God the greatest harmony with His character, in their zeal, their love for God, the Truth and the brethren.

We are not to understand that those people represented by the thorny ground and the wayside will suffer eternal torments because of their unfaithfulness in respect of the Kingdom, nor are we to understand that others, who do not hear about the Kingdom in the present life at all, will on this account suffer eternal torment. They- will all, however, lose the grand privilege and glorious blessing of participating in the Kingdom, whatever they may obtain under the restitution blessings which that Kingdom will inaugurate for the blessing of mankind in general.

Immortality and Incorruption.

THE following from a reliable source should be of general interest to our readers:

The Greek word Aphtharsia is rendered immortality in Rom. 2:7 and 2 Tim. 1:10; sincerity in Eph. 6:24, and Tit. 2:7; and Incorruption in 1 Cor. 15:42, 50, 53, 54.

The Greek word Aphthartos is rendered immortal in 1 Tim. 1:17; uncorruptible in Rom. 1:23; incorruptible in 1 Cor. 9:25, and 15:52, and 1 Pet. 1:4, 23; and not corruptible in 1 Pet. 3:4. These are the only occurrences of this word—(Aphtharsia is from Aphthartos).

The Greek word Athanasia is translated immortality but three times--1 Cor. 15:15, 54, and 1 Tim. 6:16. Both these words are given the sense of immortal, by lexicographers. Liddell and Scott, standard authorities, give it thus. Plutarch uses Aphthartos as incorruptible, immortal. And it seems to be the exact word corresponding to our words, incorruptible (not liable to corrupt or to be corrupted), and immortal (not mortal—not subject or liable to death).

Athanasia, while it is properly translated immortal, according to usage, does not so much have the sense of not liable to die, as that of unchangeability. Hence, Aphthartos is the word which most closely corresponds to our word immortal, i.e., not mortal, not perishable, not corruptible. This is shown by the relationship between corruptible and incorruption in 1 Cor. 15:53, and 54, which, in the Greek, as in the English, stand related, of the same root, the Greek being Phthartos and Aphthartos. Not so, however, the words mortal and immortal in the same verses. In the English, these words are closely related, but the Greek uses words totally distinct and not related—Thnastos and Athanasia, the sense being, “This mortal (dying condition) shall put on (or assume) immortality.” (A lasting or unchangeable condition).

So, then, the attempt of some to make out that incorruptible refers to one state, and immortality to another, is without foundation and probably the result of lack of thoroughness in the examination of the subject. Prof. Young, Liddell and Scott, and all translators are right in using the two English words immortal and incorruptible interchangeably.

As above suggested, however, we would have preferred it had Athanasia been translated unchangeability in the three cases where it occurs, although our word immortality covers the idea of unchangeability.

With this change, 1 Cor. 15:52-54 would read thus:—“The (special) dead (i.e., the saints) will be raised incorruptible (i.e., immortal, not liable to corrupt, decay; or perish) and we (of the same special class) shall be changed.

For of necessity this corruptible (perishable condition) must be invested with incorruptibility (imperishable quality) and this mortal (dying condition) must be invested with immortality (unchangeability).” And when this corruptible (perishable condition) shall be invested with incorruptibility (imperishable quality) and this mortal (dying condition) shall be clothed with unchangeability (immortality) then will that prophetic promise be fulfilled (which says) “Death will be swallowed up in victory.” That is to say, when this special class, the dead and we, the overcomers, the saints, are changed to undying changeless conditions, then will that prophecy of Isaiah 25:8 begin to be fulfilled to the world—the Millennial work of abolishing death and restoring life will then go on successfully.

The Days of These Kings.

THE Melbourne daily "Herald," of early last month, in reporting the abduction of the King of Siam, gave the list below of sovereigns who have vacated their thrones over the past thirty years.

While we, as the Lord's people, are far from advocating and desiring to bring about the overthrow of the kingdoms of this world, the Scriptures clearly indicate that this must surely come to pass, when, in God's due time, this "present evil world" passes away, as "the elements melt with fervent heat." 2 Pet. 3:10.

It would seem to be the Lord's design to permit mankind to try every form of government to see if they can bring in happiness and goodwill upon the earth. After all man's efforts have failed in great distress and disaster, God's Word assures us that Christ's Kingdom will bring order and blessing- out of chaos and ruin for "all the families of the earth." "We, according to His promise, look for new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." 2 Pet. 3:13.

As we look back over the past three decades, and especially since the Great War, the events in every land have surely confirmed our faith and understanding of Bible prophecy. While in the world at large "men's hearts are failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth" how favoured is the position of the Lord's people, who rejoice in and desire only His will to be done in all things. "In the days of these kings shall the God of Heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed, and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever." Dan. 2:44. "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh . . . And take heed to yourselves, lest, at any time, your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and that day come upon you unawares . . . Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man." Luke 21:28, 34, 36.

The Keeper and the Kept.

(Psa. 121. Convention Address).

AS we journey along the Christian way, what hills are there to which we shall lift our eyes? There are some hills we can look unto with profit, and especially one on which we must fix our eyes, not- only when we first turn to God, but we must never lose sight of it all along the way. Whom do you see upon that hill? There is One there who was lifted 'up upon that hill, as Moses lifted up -the serpent in the wilderness. A look at Him is the remedy for the sting of gin and death, "There is life in a look at the crucified One; yes, there is -life there for thee."

Upon that Hill of Calvary was slain "the Lamb of God- which taketh 'away the sin of the world." if our love should get: cool towards God or the brethren, then lift up your eyes 'to the Hill of Calvary. Think of His broken, pierced 'body, His agonizing cry, "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me." Listen to the bitter words of sarcasm from those who mocked Him, and let our hearts be filled with love and devotion. "Hereby perceive we love because He laid down His life for us, and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." 1 -John 3:16.

When Satan, the flesh, self-will or the world tells you not to -deny yourself so much, or to have your own way and will a little, just look again at -Calvary's Hill, and that special sacrifice, trial or suffering of yours will be as light afflictions in comparison -with Christ's sacrifice for you. Glory in nothing but the Cross of Christ, trust in nothing -else for your help, for the help of all mankind cometh from there.

But let us- look higher still; the Psalmist says - hills. Can you see another -hill—another hill of sacrifice? - It is there where-the father of the faithful received his greatest blessing. It is believed that upon Mt. Moriah . Abraham. gave up his all—his Isaac to God. And it is true to say that we cannot "be filled with the fulness of God" (Eph.:19) until we go to "Mt. Moriah,"- and there lay our all upon the altar of sacrifice. There is nothing to fear in giving our all, for see the Lord returns Isaac to his father.. We surrender all, He accepts it, but returns everything multiplied a hundred-fold. Our Lord says, "And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake, shall receive an hundred-fold and shall inherit everlasting life." (Matt. 19:29).

There is still another hill; lift up your eyes to the Mount of Olives. It was there where Christ spoke His great prophecy of His Presence, the end. of the age and the coming Kingdom. The Mount of Olives would seem to be a symbol of the Kingdom of light, peace, joy and Divine blessings to come. In Zech. 14:4, we read that Jehovah's feet •shall stand upon this Mount in the latter days, "and it will cleave in the midst." Remember, then, that coming Kingdom for which all saints have looked. Our vision in these last days is much clearer, we see it will cleave in the midst representing the heavenly and earthly phases of the one Kingdom of God, for the help of all mankind.

Further, there is another hill—a mountain—which the Apostle says we are approaching, from whence cometh our help. "But ye are come unto Mount Zion and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels; to -the general assembly and church of the first-born, which are written in heaven, and to God, the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus, the Mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel . . . Wherefore, we receive a kingdom which cannot be shaken." Heb. 12:22-24, 28. Lift up your eyes, then, and also as the Master said, "Lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh." "Our help cometh from the Lord." Although He may use various agencies and dispensations, yet we all see that Jehovah is the source of all things—He made heaven and earth, and is called the Saviour of all men, the Great Judge of all.

When we get a little knowledge of the heavens through those who have made the discovery of thousands and tens of thousands of vast planets much larger than our own earth, all moving with wonderful exactness (if one moved out of its appointed course, possibly this little earth of ours would be dashed to atoms), we marvel at the power of the Keeper of the heavens. Our help, then, cometh from the Lord, who made these and keeps them in their place.

But let us come down to earth; there is nothing so common upon the face of the earth as a blade of grass, yet how wonderfully it is formed, with pores to breathe and receive the moisture, and Jesus takes our thoughts to it for the very purpose of teaching us confidence in Him who is our Keeper. "Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall He not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?" Matt. 6:30. The Scriptures inform us that He has prepared a seat in the heavens for those who do His will always, much rather than will He care for us, than the grass or many sparrows. "He will not suffer thy foot to be moved, He that keepeth Israel neither slumbers nor sleeps."

Satan knows the Lord is the Keeper, most people know He is the Keeper, but only those who have given themselves to Him can say, "He is my Keeper," as though there were no other sheep for the Shepherd's care.

The love and care of our Keeper is clearly taught us in the 23rd Psalm. It is said that in Palestine the chief shepherd goes in front of the sheep and sometimes he has following behind two under-shepherds to care for any lame or weary and straying sheep and to carry the lambs. Now these two under shepherds are mentioned by name in this Psalm, 23. Do you know their names? Have they not often ministered to you? They are "goodness and mercy," "goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life."

Have you felt faint or weary in following the steps of the Chief Shepherd? Then surely goodness has come to your aid—"I had fainted unless I had believed to see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living." Psa. 27:13. Have your feet ever slipped? Then you know that mercy has come to your aid. "Unless the Lord had been my help, my soul had quickly dwelt in silence. When I said, My foot slippeth; Thy mercy, O Lord, held me up." Psa. 94:17, 18. Surely, then, we would be in a bad way without the assistance of the angels, "goodness and mercy." If we give ourselves to Him always, every moment, we shall find our Keeper a perfect Keeper, and we can confidently say, "I shall not be moved."

Not only does He promise to keep us as a whole, but as individual portions also. "He will keep our soul" (Psa. 121:7), i.e., the New Creature. Although we have this treasure in an earthen vessel, that which is begotten of Him, He will surely keep until the clay when He shall give it a body as it pleaseth Him.

"The peace of God shall keep your hearts," Phil. 4:7. From the heart proceeds all manner of evil, so our hearts especially need keeping. If we give Him our hearts, as He invites us—"My son, give Me thine heart and let thine eyes observe My ways"—He will surely keep it for Christ to reign there; He will keep or garrison and fill it with His spirit, and sin shall not have dominion over us, "Therefore, sanctify the Lord God in your hearts." (1 Pet. 3:15).

If our Lord will keep the heart, then He will also keep the mind, the thoughts. Shall we not claim this promise and expect Him to bring every thought into captivity? But some one may say, I find it hard to keep my thoughts for Him; well, give them up to Him, He will keep them for you. "Commit thy way unto the Lord and He shall bring it to pass." "Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth, keep the door of my lips." Psa. 141:2. This implies that the writer of this text had tried to keep his lips and could not do it himself. This is an important matter, then, to commit our lips to our Keeper, because by our words we shall be justified or condemned. Perhaps no member needs more careful, constant watching; it is the thoughts harboured, the evil, unbrotherly surmises indulged in, that finally must have an outlet, and what havoc the outflow causes—not so much to the accused ("For who shall harm you if you do that which is good"), but to the accuser, for such things undermine their peace, joy and progress, however much they might tell you they are increasing in these fruits.

If we follow that which is good, nothing can harm us (1 Pet. 3:13), and this you can claim. In the light of this text, should an accusation be made against you it implies that the accuser has not been following or thinking that which is good, otherwise he would be able to say with us, If I am following that which is good, nothing that can be said or done against me can harm me. Therefore, let us commit the keeping of the door of our lips to the Keeper and have faith that He will keep them for His use, which is the building up of the Body of Christ in love and unity: Satan's use for them is to sow discord among the brethren and disrupt the fellowship. This reminds us of "Christian," in "Pilgrim's Progress," where two men, "Prejudice" and "Ill-will," continually throw dirt up at him, but the dirt would not stick, it would soon fall off and his garment remained clean. Often, too, the mud cast at another acts like a boomerang and flies back.

Then, perhaps, someone is afraid to work or speak for Jesus for fear of saying something wrong, but give your lips to Him, then. He will use them or close them according to His will. No doubt you have noticed sometimes when you were about to say something that it was right on the tip of your tongue and just then it was kept back and how glad you were later that you did not say it. That is the Lord, as it were, putting His hand over your mouth. On the other hand, you have probably had occasion to make a defence for the truth, and how easily thoughts and Scripture texts came out of your lips; that is the Lord using your lips. Further, you may have sat long over a study at home and yet not come to any satisfactory meaning until you had assembled in fellowship, and suddenly while you were speaking, the right thought has come through you. See Matt. 10:19.

“He will keep the feet of His saints . . . for by strength shall no man prevail.” 1 Sam. 2:9. He will secure the ground and establish their going that we may neither stumble in the way nor wander out of the way. It is only if we keep God’s way that He will keep our feet. “The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord; and he delighteth in His way. Though he fall he shall not be utterly cast down, for the Lord upholdeth him with His hand.” Psa. 37:23, 24.

“He will hold thy hand.” Isa. 42:6. Our hands too are consecrated to Him, and if we want them kept we must often ask ourselves, “What is that in thine hand?” Are your hands in the hand of the Keeper? If so, then say, “I will not let Thee go until Thou bless me.” But if they hold something that is earthly or cause offence by hindering us in the service of our Lord, then, as the Master said, “Cut it off.” Rather, let us give our hands into the Keeper’s hand, and He will lead, then we can well walk in the dark with God.

A father once had an occasion to visit a house at night, and took along with him his two little sons. The path leading up to the house was bordered with large trees, and as they entered the avenue the darkness became intense. The father said to the boys, “You had better take my hands.” One came at once and gave his hand; the other preferred independence. Soon there was a bump; he had run into a tree. The father offered his hand, but no, off he went again. Shortly there was a scramble and a cry; he had run up against a sharp stone. This time he quietly put his hand in his father’s and walked along in silence. Presently, he said, “Father, can you see in the dark?” The answer was, “No, but I know every step of the way.” Let us take the hand of the One who has gone every step of the way, then we shall avoid many self-made experiences with which often comes the delusion that we are suffering for Christ’s sake and Christian principles. Along with this comes another delusion—we settle down and congratulate ourselves on our spiritual progress, especially so if we imagine we have been hurt by someone. Never mind so much about the little boy on the other side of his father; he may be smaller and weaker, but the father holds his hand, and is not that sufficient for our concern? These two delusions are really Satan’s counterfeit for goodness and mercy; they are in reality spiritual pride and hardness. Beware of self-made experiences.

Where will the Keeper keep us? “I am with thee and will keep thee in all places whither thou goest.” Gen. 28:15; Josh. 1:5. How careless, i.e., free from care, we may be, then, for in whatever position God has placed us we may be sure of His keeping. The kept ones’ position is that of trust, satisfied with His leading, His feeding and His protection. To know that we have given ourselves over to Him means we have perfect confidence that He can and will manage us and everything concerning us, then we can be without care.

Supposing you had deposited your money in a trustworthy bank, but after a few months you began to get anxious about it, until you could not rest, but must go and see the manager, finally going to him every day because you had imagined that the money was not really safe and that you would soon have to starve and be in rags, etc. Now, what would the manager of the bank think of you? Trusting God, as He said, in all places and with everything, then, is the common-sense way, and do we not do it continually every day with our fellowmen. We step in a railway car, motor or steamer with the utmost unconcern, trusting ourselves to the driver.

Our Part.

Of course, being kept by Him depends on our obedience. Israel’s obedience to the law meant blessings, but disobedience brought disaster to themselves. We may say, therefore, that obedience is mainly a matter of self-interest. It is not so much a duty imposed upon us, but as a privilege offered for our highest, spiritual good.

No-matter how great the trial, how dark the perplexity, or how grievous the sin, yield it fully to the Keeper’s management and He will straighten it out in His own time and way. “Be careful for nothing,” covers the whole ground—the all places—are in, sorrows, perplexities, anxieties, friends, brothers, sisters, children, prosperity, health, business, past; future, height and depths. “Therefore, Wait -my ‘soul upon the Lord.” Let us not too hastily form ‘our own plans and conclusions, nor despise His two angels, “goodness and mercy,” saying this certain experience is not for our good, or that of others, and imagine we had better manage this affair ourselves right away. Neither let us exalt ourselves as being above instructions, “For who will harm you if you follow that which is gold?” So, “be not afraid of their terror.” If we follow-the Good Shepherd and behind us follow ‘goodness and mercy,” and on either side are the walls of salvation (Psa. 23:6), how can we have any. terror of being defiled?

When does He keep us? “I, the Lord, do keep it . . every moment . . . I will keep it night and day.” Isa. 27:3; 58:11. Not sometimes, but every moment, in the day and in the night, from this time forth, even for evermore.- “I will be as the dew of heaven” (Hosea. 14:5), “then we shall grow as the lily.” To be fully kept, we must be fully yielded to Him every moment; one moment of independence is. one moment of falling. “I will keep thee in the hour of temptation.” Rev. 3:10.

- From what will He keep us? “From all evil,” verse 7, of our Psalm. Also Psa. 91. If we are kept from, then we must be kept in something else. “Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee.” (Isa. 26:3). “Therefore, let them that suffer according to the will of God commit the keeping of their souls to Him in well doing as unto a faithful Creator.” 1 Pet. 4:19.

Convention News.

Easter Convention arranged by the Adelaide and Gawler Classes is once more in the past, and we are thankful to the Lord and to our Heavenly Father for the many evidences of love and care, and for the helpful fellowship enjoyed in company with some who are striving to walk in His steps and attain to His character-likeness. Those privileged to attend this Convention freely expressed their appreciation of the feast provided for our New Mind by the Giver of every good and perfect gift. Our Bible studies in 1 Tim. 6:6-12; 1 Pet. 3:8-17; Eph. 4:1-6; Prov. 3:1-7; were very helpful indeed, and we trust that the many beautiful thoughts and loving exhortations from the various brethren will long remain with us, being received into good and honest hearts and bring forth fruitage to the glory Of God.

At the best attended meetings, those present numbered about forty, and the brethren seem to fully realise the need for the perfecting of ourselves in Christian character and grace, knowing that before very many years the Bride will be complete and the Kingdom of God established in the earth for the blessing of all mankind.

Our study in 1 Tim. 6:6-12, gave us the lesson of contentment with the Lord's provision for us. Though a man should acquire great riches—all this world could offer—there would be no satisfaction, no contentment, unless Christ is enthroned in our hearts. The selfish desire for gain undermines good character, and it has been the means of causing some to err from the faith. The man of God must "flee" the love of selfish gain; and "follow after" righteousness—the foundation of all proper character, and then cultivate the various graces of meekness, patience, love, faith, etc.

To gain the prize, we must strive for it; "fighting the good fight of faith," laying hold on eternal life—grasping it with both hands—keeping our calling well in view and allowing nothing to hinder us or turn us aside. ,

Our fellowship meeting On "What constitutes real humility?" gave us some good thoughts on this important subject. „It is only when we realise our own smallness that we can rightly appreciate the beauty of the Lord's character of justice; wisdom, power and love. So we must walk with meekness and lowliness, and in reverence before God, because the reverence of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom. Another meeting of this kind on the "Advantages of waiting on the Lord," showed that courage and strength, wisdom and grace will be given to those who wait upon the Lord in prayer and in meditation upon His Word. This will not mean inactivity, but rather we must ponder the pathway before us, making straight paths for our feet; still doing with our might what our hands find to do while looking to Him for further counsel and guidance. The opportunity for expressing thanks and praise to God was freely used by the brethren and sisters in the praise and testimony meetings.

The addresses by the various brethren were much appreciated. The opening topic was, "A house of God's building," and some good thoughts were given along this line. Then we were reminded of the "necessity of prayer," a timely exhortation in these days when earthly things tend to crowd in upon our consecrated time. Again the value of building up a right kind of character was emphasised; "adding to self-control, patience"; while another brother spoke from Jer. - 6:16. In his address on Psalm 121, "The Keeper and the Kept," our brother dwelt on the Lord's power and ability to keep His people and showed how we must trust Him fully, as a child does his parent. In the address, "Take My yoke upon you," it was shown how we each become united with our Lord in His yoke when we take the step of full consecration. He assists us individually and personally. No trouble of ours is too small for Him to notice, and we should ever draw near to Him in all our trials, realising His love and sympathy and willingness to help us in every time of need.

In his closing address, our brother spoke on the need of keeping our Lord's commandments. Jno. 14:21. If we do this, it proves that we love the Lord, and then He will love us and manifest Himself to us. Have we the proof of our love for Him? Is Christ manifested to us? Our love for the Lord is shown by our love for His brethren—the members of His Body. We are to keep His words—allow them to dwell in us and we in Him. Jno. 15:7-12.

Messages of love and goodwill from Classes in Victoria were gladly received, and it was a pleasure to have present with us some members from Classes at Melbourne and Digby, Vic. Our prayers go with these dear brethren as they return to their homes and various duties. We trust they will be richly blessed and strengthened in their Christian walk.

A pleasing feature of the Convention was the baptism service on the Saturday, when a brother and two sisters symbolised their consecration to be dead with Christ by immersion in the waters of baptism. We rejoice with our dear brethren that they have taken up their cross to follow Christ, and trust that they may each one find just the needed grace and strength to so run that they may obtain the heavenly prize.

Memorial Observances.

ON Tuesday evening, 16th April—the anniversary of the institution of the Memorial of our Lord's death—the majority of the brethren assembled together in the various little gatherings, or in the twos and threes in solemn remembrance of Christ, our Passover Lamb.

At the service in Melbourne, over twenty were in attendance, while some other dear members were prevented from being present on account of sickness. The prayers of the brethren, the hymns, and thoughts expressed, while bearing especially on the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world, were also appreciative to our loving heavenly Father for all His goodness in bringing us to an understanding and rejoicing hope in the “so great salvation, enabling us to walk in the footsteps of our Master after full consecration “if so be that we suffer with Him, that we may be also glorified together.”

The following passages of Scripture were read for meditation:—Isa. 53; Matt. 26:17-46, John 18:28-40; 19:119; and the “Christian Hymns” 322, 164 and 31 were sung. Following the short address, hymn 2 was sung, and the emblems were partaken of after blessing on both the bread and the cup. The closing hymn, 155, was sung with much feeling, and Memorial 1935, “in remembrance of Him,” was in the past, and by His grace we endeavour “to keep the- feast” each day of the pilgrim way.

Burnie, Tasmania.

The little Burnie Class met together at 7.45 p.m.. to celebrate our dear Lord's Memorial Supper. We were seven in all, and the little room was the one at the rear of Bro. Grubbs store. We have always kept it on the evening of 14th of Nisan, our corresponding date being this year 16th April.

It was a blessed time, the words—”In remembrance of Me”—seemed to have an added significance as we see the day approaching and realise that soon, indeed, if faithful, we shall be drinking it anew with our present Lord in the Kingdom.

A glance at the dear ones partaking brings the thought, this may be the last time possibly, for the Kingdom seems even at the door. Our thoughts and prayers went out especially to those celebrating at the same time, the time that our Lord indirectly asked us to keep it when He said, “Do this in remembrance of- Me.” Our thought is that if He instituted it on a certain day and on no other could it be instituted, then the same date is equally important in its remembrance.

May all the Lord's people feed and drink His precious body and shed blood until they, too, shall appear with Him in glory.

Digby, Victoria.

We at Digby celebrated the Memorial of our Lord's death on Tuesday evening, the 16th. There were six of us in attendance (the brethren at Merino were prevented from joining with us), and each experienced and appreciated a very blessed time.

The solemnity of the occasion—as we review not only our Lord's death, but our own. covenant to be broken with Him also—means more and more as the years go by, and our prayer was, and is, for the Lord's sustaining grace and help that we may indeed be able, as the days go by, to “keep the feast.” Surely as the Lord is faithful who promised we will find that it will be according to our faith, as we, by His grace, keep ourselves in the attitude to -be profited by all the lessons and experiences He sees fit to come upon us.

Each of the brothers -took part in the service, and their prayers, while mindful of our own need, were not unmindful of the need of the Lord's people everywhere. We sang hymns 7, 164, 118, 253 in “Christian Hymns,” and read the 26th of Matthew's Gospel and the Apostle Paul's account in 1 Cor. 11:23-32.

The brother who had charge of the meeting decided that he could not put together more appropriate thoughts than those given us in April “P.P.,” so used them by way of a little address.

May each and all of the Lord's people not only continually eat of that bread—appropriating to ourselves the merit of our Lord's pure life—but also be ready and willing to drink of His cup, appreciating the privilege of suffering now, in order to be made meet to share the joys of His future glory.

Sydney, N.S.W.

The various brethren that came together at Rawson Chambers to celebrate the Memorial on this occasion were very thankful for another privilege granted by our heavenly Father. Although a very solemn occasion, it is to the Lord's people an enjoyable one if they participate in the right spirit.

Our number on this occasion was twenty-five, and the members came from all points of the compass—some, fairly long distances. We were pleased to see in our midst a Brother that had not met with us for some years past, also some elderly brethren came in cars, so desirous were they to be present at this year's Memorial.

Our thoughts and prayers were with those of like precious faith, those in Classes, and the few scattered here and there in their several homes.

Another little assembly of four members is reported from Sydney. Ailments so often prevent travel even on such special occasions, and the Lord surely adds His rich blessing wherever His people "remember" Him, and worship in spirit and in truth.

Here, O my Lord! I see Thee face to face;
Here faith can touch and handle things unseen;
Here would I grasp with firmer hand Thy grace,
And all my weariness upon Thee lean.

Here would I feed upon the Bread of God;
Here drink with Thee the royal Wine of Heaven;
Here would I lay aside each earthly load,
Here taste afresh the calm of sin forgiven.

I have no help but Thine the righteousness;
Another arm save Thine to lean upon;
It is enough, my Lord, enough indeed;
My strength is in Thy might, Thy might alone.

Mine is the sin, but Thine the righteousness;
Mine is the guilt, but Thine the cleansing blood:
Here is my robe, my refuge, and my peace
Thy blood, Thy righteousness, O Lord, my God.

Too soon we rise; the symbols disappear;
The feast, though not the love is past and gone,
The Bread and Wine remove, but Thou art here—
Nearer than ever—still my Shield and Sun.

Feast after feast thus comes and passes by;
Yet passing, points to the glad feast above:
Giving sweet foretaste of the festal joy,
The Lamb's great bridal feast of bliss and love

Add to Self-Control, Patience.

(Convention Address).

ALL right-thinking people realise the value and necessity of self-control. It is one of the most important elements of good character. "He that ruleth his spirit is better than he that taketh a city" is the counsel of the Wise Man.

Self-control has to do with all our sentiments, thoughts, tastes, appetites, labours, pleasures, sorrows and hopes. It is that quality which governs and regulates the life and conduct along lines of justice, goodness, purity and truth. The Apostle tells us (2 Tim. 1:7) that God has given us (consecrated believers) "the spirit of power (courage), 'and of love, and of a sound mind.'" It is this spirit of a sound mind—the wisdom from above—which directs and assists us to exercise self-control in every direction.

From the Word of God we learn more and more what His will is for us, and our development in self-control will depend largely upon the extent to which we yield our hearts, our wills to God's will as expressed in His Word. "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not to thine own understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths. Be not wise in thine own eyes; fear the Lord, and depart from evil." (Prov. 3:5, 7). Surely these are words of wisdom; and we think that if we as disciples in the school of Christ could always bear the thought of these verses in mind and allow the spirit of them to control • our hearts, we would be spared many a heart-ache.

The spirit of a sound-mind teaches us to "be not wise in our own eyes." The Apostle Paul, in Rom.12:3, gives us some good advice along this line; he says:--"For I say, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think soberly according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith."

We need to get a proper, sober estimate of ourselves, and it is the spirit of a sound mind, the wisdom from above, that enables us to see that we have nothing of which to boast in ourselves. We have nothing but what we have received, and if we have received it, why should we glory as if we had not received it? (see 1 Cor. 4:7). How foolish we must seem in God's sight when we begin to think ourselves important. Let us guard against the evil influence of pride and self-conceit. God can use us only when we keep little in our own eyes, for His Word assures us: "He resisteth the proud and showeth favour to the humble." Let us then exercise self-control in suppressing the tendencies to pride and self-conceit; and let us ever seek to humble ourselves under His mighty hand. Humility is that quality which inclines men to serve others. Our Lord had the humble mind, and so He was ready to lay aside the glory of His pre-human condition as the mighty Logos, and become a man in order that He might pay the ransom-price which would secure our deliverance from the bondage of sin and death. What fine self-control the Master showed at all times. We do well to consider Him, because He is our Pattern as well as our Counsellor and Guide. For 30 years He was subject to His parents, waiting patiently until the time appointed for Him to commence His ministry. The secret of His success was that He was fully consecrated to do the will of the Father. Then after His baptism at Jordan He was filled with the holy spirit and manifested the Father's character of love and mercy in all His words and actions, even under the most trying circumstances. "When He was reviled He reviled not again; when He suffered He threatened not, but committed His cause to Him that judgeth righteously." (1 Pet. 2:23).

In Hebrew 12:3, the Apostle urges us to "consider Him that endured such contradiction of sinners against Himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds." Christ is our example, and to carefully consider His course will greatly assist us in ruling our own spirit. We are to rule our mind, our natural impulses. This means that if a thought present itself to the mind, or if we feel a certain impulse, we should be quick to perceive the nature of the thought or impulse; and if it is not in harmony with the principles of righteousness, or with our covenant as children of God, we should at once resist it, seeking the Lord's promised grace to help in every time of need. There is a grave danger of saying things, or of doing things, under a momentary impulse, that our heart, our consecrated judgment, would not approve; hence the necessity of bringing our thoughts and impulses into subjection. We are to consider, what would be the effect of my words or my actions upon another. Would it bring harm? Would it be an injury, or cause needless pain, for me to say or do this thing, or would it do good? By thus scrutinising himself, by thus taking himself in hand, and ruling his spirit, the child of God is showing his earnest desire of heart to be pleasing to the Lord and true to his covenant. And those who learn to rule their own spirit according to the will of the Father are the ones whom He will be pleased to make joint-heirs with His Son in the Kingdom.

In what way can a Christian cultivate this control of his own spirit? At first he has not the power to control himself in everything; but as he learns to exercise self-control in the little things, more and more doing what he can in this direction, in thought and word and deed, he will gain in strength of character. If we daily practise self-control, we shall gradually attain a strong character along this line, which will be of great advantage to us in our Christian warfare.

There is no place where the proof of our ability to rule our spirit is better shown than in our own home. With husband and wife,. with parent and child, with brother and sister, this is an important matter: The battle with self is the greatest battle we have to fight; and the Word of God declares that “he that ruleth his own spirit is greater than he that taketh a city.” He is, greater because he has learned to exercise the will, the determination, of a true character in the right direction, in the direction of control of self.

Moral strength is much more to be desired than the greatest degree of physical strength or the keenest strategy. And it is only after we have conquered ourselves, and cast out the beam from our own eyes, and subdued anger and malice and strife in our own hearts, that we are able, by means of these severe battles with our own weaknesses, to assist the brethren, to assist our neighbours, to aid them—by our example—in overcoming their besetments and infirmities.

To rule one’s own spirit, disposition, implies a conflict similar in some respects to that of taking a city; for no matter where we begin, we find entrenched within us many armed and opposing powers. They have possession by heredity—they are there as the result of the fall. And if we have passed the days of youth they are the more strongly entrenched, and it requires the greater skill to rout. them. But whether one has begun early or late, he that would succeed in ruling his Own spirit must “war a good warfare.” He must “fight the good fight of faith,” down to the very end of the present existence.

The ruling of one’s own spirit is by no means an easy task; and it cannot be done single-handed and alone. Consequently, the wise “general” will invoke all the assistance at his command, remembering the words of the Apostle, “We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against wicked spirits in high places.” (Eph. 6:12). These powers of the world, the flesh and the devil are closely allied, and therefore, he who plans for conquest and an established reign thereafter, must seek alliance with another and stronger power. This power is tendered to all who earnestly undertake this great work: It is none other than the almighty arm of our God, who says to those who accept His strength, “Greater is He that is with you--that is for you—than all they that be against you; gird yourselves like men, be strong, fear not.” (see 1 Jno. 4:4; Isa. 35:4).

The Apostle Peter urges that we add to self-control, patience. The Scriptures everywhere represent patience as an important element of character. The meaning of the word “patience” in the text under consideration is cheerful, hopeful endurance or constancy. In every phase of human experience we can see the need for the exercise of this quality. To be just under present conditions, one must be patient, not rash; for it would be injurious to be impatient and severe with the unavoidable imperfections and weaknesses of our fellowmen. Therefore, the spirit of a sound mind demands that we be patient in dealing with fallen humanity. God Himself possesses this quality of patience and has long exercised it. In dealing with the world in the next age, the Church will need to have much patience, and under our present environments we need it constantly in order to develop a character pleasing to the Lord.

Patience is closely allied to love and mercy. If God was unloving, unmerciful, He would be without patience. In man’s present blemished, fallen condition, patience is sadly lacking. This Godlike quality, like all the other qualities of character inherent-in God and in all perfect beings created in ‘His likeness, has been largely obliterated in humanity by the fall of our first parents.

It will surely be profitable for us to cultivate carefully this; element of Christian character of which our Lord speaks in such high commendation, and without which, His Word assures us, our Character cannot be perfected. The Christian requires patient endurance to put on the. whole armour of God, and to keep it securely buckled. We need it in dealing not only with others, but also with ourselves,.with our own blemishes:: We should always take into account the various circumstances and conditions surrounding ourselves and others. As we look around we see that the world is in a condition of blight, of sin. This knowledge should give us great sympathy with humanity, without which we would have but little patience. All of our brethren in Christ, like ourselves, are by nature members. of this fallen human race. Therefore, we should have a great deal of patient endurance with the Lord’s people, as we would have them exercise this grace towards us.

As the quality of justice will always persist, so will the quality of patience, though not in the sense of patient endurance of evil. God patiently works out His own glorious designs, in perfect equipoise, of mind. At present, this requires the exercise of patient endurance with evil, sinful conditions; and in the ages of glory to come, God will, we believe, still work out His purposes in perfect patience.

But in the exercise of patience under present evil conditons, wisdom must have a voice. God has declared that in His wisdom the time will come when He will cease to -exercise patience toward the world. That is to say, He. will no longer bear with the world in their present sinful imperfect condition. That time is now near at hand. The great time of trouble will sweep away the present order of things preparatory to the establishment of the Kingdom of God under the whole heavens. Then God will give men the fullest opportunity of coming into harmony with Himself and righteousness before He will deal with them summarily.

The time is coming when there will be no more sin. God will have a clean universe by and by. But He will first give everybody an opportunity to rise out of it. If they will not avail themselves of the opportunity, then God's patience, long-suffering, will cease to be operative toward such. This will not mean that God's patience has ceased, but that its activity has ceased in that direction.

God's patience has arranged the thousand years of Messiah's reign for man's blessing, and His wisdom has decided that those thousand years will be sufficient for the elimination of evil. Whoever will not learn to live righteously under those favourable conditions would never learn, and it would not be the part of divine wisdom longer to exercise patience with such.

Likewise also, in our dealings with ourselves and others, there is a limit to the proper exercise of patience—long-suffering. We should not be patient with ourselves beyond a certain point. There are circumstances in which we would properly feel that we should have known better and should have done better than we did.

If a child of God realises that he has been derelict with himself, he should say, I will not be patient with myself any further. I will take myself in hand and conquer this weakness which I have permitted in a measure to assert itself to the weakening of my own character and probably to the discomfort and pain of others. I cannot do this in my own unaided strength, but by the grace of the Lord I am determined to overcome— in this matter.

Our ability and strength to patiently endure should increase as we progress in the narrow way. We should grow “strong in the Lord and in the power of His might.” But we cannot develop this essential trait of character without trials—experiences intended to call for the exercise of cheerful endurance. So let us not think it strange if we are called upon to pass through protracted trials which make necessary the nerving of ourselves to bear. We can see a reason for the Lord's arrangement that we should have our trial as our Master had His—under an evil environment— that we might not only have all the necessary qualities of Christian character, but have them rooted, grounded, fixed, established.

How much we all need to hear the Master's words, “Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation.” Let us hold fast to our blessed hope in Christ. Let us learn to wait patiently upon the Lord. He has promised never to leave us nor forsake us, and He is able to make all things work together for good to those who love Him. And God's promise is the foundation upon which all that we hope for, either of character or coming glory, is built. Let us prize this truth so that we will not compromise it in any sense or in any degree; let us not only hold the truth in the letter but in the spirit—in the love of it, because it is true as well as because it is beautiful and grand. And let us ever remember the importance of patient endurance, that we may not only cultivate the Christian graces, and practise them, but that we may take joyfully the trials, persecutions or difficulties which our Lord may see proper to permit to come upon us for our testing and for the development of this character which He explains to us is of paramount importance, and without which perfect love could neither be attained nor maintained.

The Necessity of Prayer.

(Convention Address).

“Praying in every season with all prayer and supplication in spirit, keeping watch with all perseverance and entreaty for all saints.” Eph. 6: T (Diaglott).

What is the full definition of prayer? We know very well how the poet defines it, as “the soul’s sincere desire, uttered or unexpressed.” The translators define it, to request, beseech, supplicate, petition, entreat and ask. Among the Old Testament Prophets the thought is given as “cry unto”—expressed by the Psalmist, 30:15, “Call upon Me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee and thou shalt glorify Me.”

All, therefore, who have come unto the Father through Christ have the opportunity and privilege to appeal unto God for help in every time of need. We are continually in need of His aid to keep us in all our ways, and our Lord told His disciples to ask the Father in His name that they might receive and that their joy might be full.

We read, however, of some who pray without watching; surely we would think they could not be very zealous prayers. Then the Apostle James speaks of a class that ask amiss; we would think these would be selfish prayers, because he says that they wish to bestow it upon their desires.

We realise that this great advantage of having access to the throne of grace is only for those who have devoted themselves to God—to those who have accepted the call, according to His purpose. Such may come boldly to the throne of grace and find consolation in Him. Others have no Advocate through whom to approach unto God.

The Scriptures inform us that no man can come unto Christ except the Father draw him, and can we think the Father will draw any one except there be an affinity for Him? The Apostle James, 4:8, says, “Draw nigh to God and He will draw nigh to you.” The original Greek for “draw” gives the thought “to coil and wrap,” and the word “nigh” means to “approach” and “come near.” So we get the thought that the closer we approach and wrap ourselves in God, the closer will He draw us unto Himself. We have the words of our Lord in Luke 18: “That men ought always to pray and not to faint ;” that we are not to become weary or faint in heart.

Our Lord tells us also how we are to approach unto God, as we read John 14:6:--“No man cometh unto the Father but by Me . . . I am the way.” Then He gave an illustration of the manner in which we should address the Father, in that which is known as “the Lord’s prayer”—Matt. 6:9-13. This teaches that all true believers in Christ, having consecrated themselves to God, may consider that they are reinstated through faith in Christ, as sons of God, and may confidently address Him, “Our Father.” It indicates on our part worshipful adoration of the high and lofty One whose name is Holy.

“Hallowed be Thy Name.” This would signify holy and sanctified is His name, and as such it should be esteemed and revered.

“Thy Kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven.” This would express a full appreciation of His coming Kingdom of righteousness, which will be according to His will. It shows the attitude of heart to be toward righteousness and fully submitted to the Divine will and purpose, that God may work in it to will and to do His good pleasure.

The necessity of praying—"Give us this day our daily bread," shows in simple expression our dependence upon God for all daily needs and our confidence in Him to supply every good thing out His abundant fullness. It embraces also our daily need for the "bread" which came down from heaven—the ample and all-sustaining "food" for all our requirements. Our Lord said, "I am that bread of life. This is that bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof and not die." How necessary, therefore, for us to pray for this daily bread.

It is necessary, further, for us to pray for forgiveness for our trespasses, and we must also recognise our obligation to do the same to those who trespass against us. We pray, "Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors: Abandon us not to trial, but preserve us from evil." We truly need to seek aid to be guarded against temptations; how we need the abounding grace of God to protect us from all the insidious wiles of the Adversary. One of the "Daily Manna" comments expresses our position in this matter as follows

"In brief, our prayers, to be acceptable to God, "must express confident faith, loving esteem and "reverence, full sympathy with the divine plan and "submission to the divine will; childlike dependance "upon God, acknowledgment of sins and short-comings and desire for forgiveness, with humble "craving for the divine guidance and protection. "These may not always all be expressed in words, "but such must at least be the attitude of the soul."

We would believe that all coming to God in this manner would be specially privileged, to have their interests considered at the throne of grace. If we were not thus assured, we might well hesitate to come before His mighty throne, but the Apostle says, "Let us come boldly (with confidence) unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy and find grace to help in time of need."

The Lord knew how necessary to our spiritual life would be this communion with Himself; how much we would need the Father's care and the comfort and consolation which His presence and sympathy imparts. Have not all the meek and contrite in heart the promise not merely, of an occasional attentive hearing, but of the abiding presence of both the Father and the Son? Our Lord said:—"If a man love Me, he will keep My words, and My Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him." The thought which this abiding presence of the Father and Son conveys to our minds is that their thought and care and interest will be constantly upon us.

The Apostle Peter gives us the same encouragement—"For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous and His ears are open unto their prayers." (1 Pet. 3:12). How consoling then, are the exhortations to be "instant in prayer"; "to pray always, and not to faint"; "to pray without ceasing." "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that reverence Him; for He knoweth our frame; He remembereth that we are (lust . . . As the heaven is high above the earth, so great is His mercy toward them that reverence Him." (Psa. 103:13, 14,

So necessary is genuine prayer, that we cannot come too often to the throne of grace, if we are of those who keep His Word. And if any be "overtaken in a fault," so that from the outward conduct he might be judged as not loving the Lord, yet if he repent, let him remember that we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ, the righteous, who maketh intercession for us. It is our privilege to do as our Lord indicated—"When thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly."

Further, our Lord says:--"But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions." This would be praying mechanically, as do nominal Christians and the heathen. Many seem to think that prayer should be conducted after the manner of oratory, and some have been known to remark that one had the gift of prayer. What a jarring sense of formality ! How could we think of the Lord accepting a prayer of "words," when everything must be truly humble and sincere. At any instant, in the midst of cares and perplexities, we may turn our prayerful thoughts to Him for wisdom, strength (Christian fortitude), comfort and consolation, to be guided aright, both for others and ourselves.

Our Lord at one time used a parable concerning a certain woman continually coming to the judge until her request was granted, thus showing that though the answer might tarry long, we are to manifest patience and hope, demonstrating our faith in His willingness to help us whenever it is according to His will, which we know is always best for us, though we may not always realise this at the time.

Jacob wrestled all night until the break of day in prayer, saying, "T will not let thee go unless thou bless me," and St. Paul informs us that he besought the Lord three times until he was assured His grace would be sufficient for him. According to record, the Lord Himself spent whole nights in prayer—"earnestly with strong crying and tears." Heb. 5:7.

The Apostle says, “In everything by prayer and supplication (earnest pleading) with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known to God.” He acted on this principle himself when he urged in Rom. 15:28-32, that the saints “strive together (Gr. agonize) with me in prayers to God for me,” that he might safely accomplish a certain work which seemed to be of the spirit’s leading. When he says “in everything,” this signifies that God is deeply interested in everything that relates to His people. What thing is too small for His notice when even the hairs of our heads are numbered? Matt. 10:30.

In the daily routine, if cares of various kinds seem to annoy and perplex us, we have His caution to “be not overcharged with the cares of this life.” Let us watch and make straight paths for our feet, that we may have His loving sympathy and helpfulness to restrain and guide aright any wayward course of impetuosity in the world’s temptations. His wisdom and providence may be invoked to shape circumstances and surroundings to show us the sure and safe way, and the foolishness of pursuing any other.

Remembering these things, let us come to the throne of heavenly grace for wisdom and direction as to how to adjust all our affairs. It is right to be charged with affairs of this life to the extent of diligence (Rom. 12:1) and the utilisation of such diligence in the Lord’s service, but it is the over-plus, the corroding cares that interfere with peace of mind and communion with God that are to be avoided. Let us live in the presence of the Father and the Son who have promised to abide with us. So doing, it will brighten our days, comfort our nights, ease our burdens, lighten our cares, encourage our hopes, and it will lift us up above the world into a higher and purer atmosphere. Let us appreciate and avail ourselves of the privilege which is His will concerning us.

By all the encouragements received, we are assured that “the fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much.”

At the same time, it must be understood that all petitions are subject to divine wisdom, and therefore the answers to prayers, though always sure, might not always be in the way expected, but will be answered in some way for our highest good.

Let us also view the prophet Daniel and his method of approach to God; see Dan. 9:20-23. On another occasion, we see the patience and persistency of Daniel when he had mourned three weeks, fasting and praying because of his inability to understand, and the angel of the Lord came and said:—“Fear not, Daniel, for from the first day that thou didst set thine heart to understand and chasten thyself before thy God, thy words were heard, and I am come for thy words.” Even so shall it be with all the beloved of the Lord. At the beginning of our supplications, God begins to set in operation the influences to form the circumstances which are designed to work out the intended blessing for us if we faint not. But we must continue instant in prayer, thereby showing, forth our continued earnestness of desire, as we confess our sins and set our hearts to understand and chasten ourselves before Him.

How many prayers are not heard, or are hindered because the one who asks does not first purify himself of evil in his own heart? The person who does the proper amount of watching will have very little difficulty in determining when he ought to pray. If he watches properly, he will continually see something about which to pray. The Lord’s people are to watch in every direction.

We are to watch our own temptations and to seek to control self and guard against our own weaknesses, as well as those of others—no one may know where the small temptations may lead. The Scriptures warn us to take heed, for what may seem a small matter, may lead to something great.

May we always realise the necessity of praying for that “fervency of spirit, serving the Lord”; watching against the world and its temptations, against our own flesh and its weaknesses, against the Adversary and his delusions. All of us must know from experience that of ourselves we are not wise enough to guide our matters aright.

The Apostle James, 1:5, advises us:—“If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him.” How specially necessary then, is this wisdom, that the words of our mouths and the meditations of our hearts may be acceptable in the sight of the Lord. We may pray for guidance from the Lord as may be best in His sight and in accordance with His will, but we may not tell Him what to do, for we cannot tell exactly what is His will for us. If we are truly submissive, our prayers will be more and more messages of thanksgiving and indicating an increasing desire on our part to walk in the Master’s footsteps. We can understand that everything will be according to His plan, and therefore we could not ask Him to alter His plan for us, but we are to humbly submit to whatever may come to pass, without murmuring.

We are also not to ask the Lord to do things in a miraculous manner, but must co-operate in, working, as well as praying, realising that He works in an ordinary manner—using the natural course of things. The Lord may present opportunities to us for our general welfare, and it is for us to watch and grasp these, lest they be removed from us and given to others, for we cannot expect that any amount of prayer will bring them back. On the other hand we must not run before the Lord and think we must put our efforts in to help Him before His due time. We need to bear in mind Zeph. 3:8:—"Wait ye upon Me, saith the Lord, until the day that I rise up." Therefore, let our prayers always be like the Master's—"Nevertheless not My will be done, but Thine."

Another Berean Biblical Institute Year

IT is with grateful thanks to God that another year for the Berean Biblical Institute is reviewed at this time. At the end of April each year the twelve months' term closes, and an outline of the work, together with the Tract Fund Account, is presented so that our readers may know of the general position. •

The past year, again, has brought much of blessing from the Lord in connection with the efforts from the centre here in Melbourne. We realise daily the many privileges granted of serving the cause of Him who is "the way, the truth and the life," along with the dear friends everywhere. In addition, then, to expressing thankfulness to God, "the Giver of every good and perfect gift," there has been due appreciation of all the co-operation and loving assistance of the brethren in every way, which has been encouraging indeed by the Lord's overruling providence.

The work undertaken has been similar to past years—mainly in the interest of the brethren appreciating present truth, through the literature and correspondence; and also endeavouring to assist others who are drawn by the message of truth, if haply they also may enter fully into the Christian way.

Visits of the monthly "People's Paper" have continued throughout the past year to about the same number of subscribers, and free copies go to those desiring it who are unable to provide the subscription. This latter arrangement will be gladly continued so long as we hear from these friends at least annually. The efforts of the brethren to obtain new subscribers are appreciated, as also the action of some who subscribe for their friends, and others may like to co-operate along these lines. New names on our list have made up for those dropping off from one cause or another from time to time. Extra copies of the "Paper" are always available to pass on wherever there may be a receptive mind and heart, and our readers may also feel at liberty to forward lists of names and addresses where they would like the "People's Paper" sent free for a few months.

The quantity of free literature sent out has not been as great as in some past years; nevertheless, some thousands of tracts have been placed in the hands of the people, resulting, in some cases, of interest being found. The free literature is made available from the Tract Fund, which is supported by the brethren generally, so all who have a talent of time and desire to co-operate in this work may feel free to send for tracts to be used as wisely as possible in the Master's service. Undoubtedly it is far better to place a few tracts with the message, wisely, than to engage in wholesale distribution without knowing who receives them.

Coupons in suitable newspapers, offering free literature on various topics, have again been used throughout the year with profit; in fact, this method of reaching those who may still be longing for the glad message of truth has brought very good results over a number of years. Among the enquiries from this source, quite a few have appreciated deeply the Bible truths and continue in touch with us. The brethren in Adelaide have continued the use of coupons in their State, in addition to our efforts in Victoria, and other friends may like to co-operate similarly in their localities.

The financial assistance received towards the work from the brethren in all parts is shown by the Tract Fund Account. We are grateful for this help, which undoubtedly represents much sacrifice of the good things of this world, and which enables the Institute's work to continue by the Lord's providence. The expenses met are those that we feel have been incurred to best advantage, and a small balance is added to the previous credit, as a little standby for use in the service of our Master.

During the past year a pocket edition of the "Daily Heavenly Manna" has been published, and these books are apparently supplying a need amongst the brethren, both in this land and overseas. A further edition of the booklet, "Hell, Death, Spiritism," was also published early this year. Should any of the brethren have opportunities of doing colporteur work with such as the "Daily Heavenly Manna," "Divine Plan of the Ages," "Foregleams of the Golden Age" and "Some of the Parables," etc., they are invited to communicate with us.

It has been encouraging to know that we have the prayers of the brethren for guidance and blessing on the work, and ask for a continuance of same that all may be done to the praise and glory of our Father in heaven. In conclusion, we desire to express sincere Christian love to the Lord's people everywhere, and assure each and all of deep interest in and desire to assist to their highest welfare. "Let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works: Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; for He is faithful that promised."

TRACT FUND ACCOUNT.

A Wonderful Promise of Jesus.

(Convention Address.)

“He that hath My commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me: and he that loveth Me shall be loved of My Father, and I will love him, and I will manifest Myself to him.”—John 14:21.

The narratives of our Saviour’s life, words and works are provided by four worthy evangelists. While being guided by the holy spirit to bring matters to their remembrance according to promise, yet each had their own personal ways of expression.

When we remember that John was peculiarly the “disciple whom Jesus loved” and seemed to be favoured by such tender nearness to his Lord, it is but natural that in his record of the acts and words of Jesus he should seem, perhaps, to reveal more really the sublimity of His manner, and of His doings and the graciousness of His words.

Neither the Apostle nor our Lord attempted any flowery language by which to work upon the feelings of the hearers, which method is so often used to-day by evangelists. They spoke in simple language to those who had ears to hear. They spoke in a direct way—not going round about the issue for “fear of man.” Facts are clearly stated, conditions faced and logical conclusions demonstrated in such firmness, yet gentleness, as the occasions demanded.

How clear are the statements of our text. “He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me: He that loveth Me shall be loved of My Father, and I will manifest Myself to him.” Surely this is one of the most precious promises of God’s Word. What more could be desired than that we have an assurance of God’s love and of the love of our Lord Jesus. And evidence of this is here promised—“I will manifest Myself to him.”

It depends upon ourselves whether we have this manifestation, for the promise is sure if the conditions are met.

What joy, what peace such assurance brings; just to realise that “the Father Himself loveth us”; that His sheltering wings are over us, and underneath are the everlasting arms; that He careth for us. How it lightens our burdens of sorrow, our troubles, our cares and throws a sunshine gleam upon our path, for we know “that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them that are called according to His purpose.”

“Blessed are the people who have heard the joyful sound” that gives such refreshing streams in the desert and makes it possible to sing the songs of Zion in a strange land. And it rests with each one of us as to whether we are to have this fullness of joy and assurance. The condition is simply that we have and that we keep the commandments of Jesus. If we keep our part we are certain God will keep His part; we shall be “kept by the power of God unto salvation.” I Peter: 1:5.

What are the commandments of Jesus? There are those who seem to think that every time the word “commandment” is used in the Bible it must refer to the Ten Commandments given to Israel at Sinai. This is quite a mistake. “The law came by Moses but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ.” The Law Covenant was given to Israel and is suitable for human beings in an endeavour to gain a standard of living worthy of eternal life on earth. Paul in Galatians 4 informs us that the Law was suitable for a house of servants, and it was therefore couched in such language as “thou shalt” and “thou shalt not.”

When Jesus came it was that He would select a very favoured class; “As many as received Him to them gave He the privilege to become sons of God.” Paul in Hebrews says, “Moses was faithful in all his house (as a house of servants) but Christ as a son over His own house (a house of sons whose house are we)” So it was that Jesus, in John (5:15), said, “Henceforth I call you not servants, for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth.”

Again referring to Galatians 4, Paul says that those under the Law Covenant were prefigured by Abraham’s son Ishmael, the child of the bondwoman Hagar, i.e., the house of servants, those in Christ, the Israel of God, was typified by Isaac, the child of Sarah, the freewoman.

Jesus Himself contrasts the commandments of Moses with His own commandments or instructions in Matthew 23-24 and Luke 6:27-38. It is such instructions or commandments to which our Lord refers in our text, and they are fairly well comprehended in His words: “A new commandment give I unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you . . . By this shall all know that ye are my disciples if ye have love one to another.” John 13:34, 35. Also John 15:12, “That ye love one another as I have loved you.”

Thus the matter is before us. We have His commandments, i.e., we understand His will; are we keeping His commandments, are we living out His instructions? Do we love one another as Jesus has loved us? He so loved us that He gave 'Himself for us—He died for us,—bore our sins on the tree. He who was rich in glory with the Father left His glorious abode, became poor that we through His poverty might be made rich. 'He ransomed us that we might be brought to God and made sharers with Himself in His Kingdom—as His Bride—to be joint-heirs with Him in the glories and service of His throne.

That is a great love: one cannot conceive of a greater. We cannot do all that for one another, but We can have the same love that will seek to lay down our lives for the brethren. Jesus said, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends"; yet He demonstrated a greater love—a love like the Father's love. "God commendeth His love toward us in that while we were yet sinners (enemies) Christ died for us."

The Apostle, in 1 John 4:7-13, exhorts us to develop the same love as Jesus manifested, and says further, "Hereby perceive we the love of God (Christ) because He laid down His life for us and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." 1 John 3:16. "And he that keepeth His commandments dwelleth in Him and He in him, and hereby we know that He abideth in us by the spirit which He hath given us." 1 John:24. That is the spirit of love, willingness to sacrifice self for the good of other members in Christ and for the service of the truth, the proclaiming of the glad tidings of the kingdom.

Another of God's commandments is mentioned in 1 John 3:23—"That we should believe on the name of I His Son," and "Blessed are they who do His commandments." Another commandment[^] of Jesus is in John 1 2:26—"If any man serve Me, let Him follow Me." The Law came by Moses, but grace and truth by Jesus Christ. The words and 'instructions of Jesus are more to us than the commands of the Law. We learn to love God because He has so manifested His love to us, and to love Jesus because He too first loved us and gave Himself for us. That spirit of love urges us to try and please Him, and to do God's will—to do those things pleasing in His sight.

The Sermon on the Mount contains what we may term the will of Jesus for His followers—His instructions, His commandments or words of counsel for our guidance, and concludes (Matt. 7; 15-27) warning us against false teachers who may be recognised by their fruits—their results. Not every one who says Lord, Lord, we have done this and that—great works according to their own estimation—will be recognised by the Lord; but he that heareth and doeth these sayings of His. He that heareth these sayings of the Lord and doeth them not, is likened to a foolish man who built his house without a proper foundation.

One cannot help feeling that there are many of this foolish class, many who have heard the message of the truth and the commands of Jesus: "Go ye and teach all nations, baptising them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the holy spirit. Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you," who have been unable to stand the time of trial. The winds and storms of false teachings, theories and fancies and vain imaginations have carried them away—they have lost the clear perception of the great Divine Plan, have become confused respecting the time of harvest—they know not the time of their visitation and fail to recognise the presence of the Lord of the harvest. They fail to hear the knock of the Lord at the door--deaf to His voice, they open not the door of their hearts and fail then to enjoy the feast that has been prepared.

Our text intimates that it is no use professing to love the Lord unless we endeavour to keep His commandments.

If we love God we will keep His commandments; if we love Christ we will keep His words, and we realise "His commandments are not grievous." If we love God, we will also love those who are begotten of God. Our love for Christ will involve our love to all whom He loves and for whom He especially loves those now called and chosen to be joint-heirs with Him in His throne.

Do we find difficulty in this matter? It is no doubt because of looking on the outward appearances. Let us do as the Lord did when choosing a king for Israel—try and see the heart, the new creature, the real will and intention.

Where should we be if the Lord looked upon us by just outward appearances or even took our acts and faulty words into account? How glad we are that He is selecting the members in the anti-typical David class, as indicated when He chose David—"The Lord looketh on the heart." We cannot afford to judge by outward appearances. Some noble members in Christ have very peculiar make-ups and are apt to be misunderstood. We need patience to understand each other, to see the real desire the heart—then we will pay less attention to the rough exterior.

The promise of our text is: "He that loveth Me shall be loved of My Father and I will love him and will manifest Myself to him." Jesus requires a manifestation of our love to Him by our keeping His commandments, and promises then, to manifest Himself to us. This is indeed a wonderful promise. To realise its fulfilment will bring to us a power of realise its fulfilment will bring to us a power of way—to endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ, to hear the many trials which are sure to come and to suffer with Him that we may reign with Him. Here is the source of power to enable us to be overcomers.

To what extent are we fulfilling the conditions of this promise and enjoying this wonderful promised blessing?

We have certainly the words of Jesus; are we keeping them, living them out? If so, we must have the manifestation promised. We have the experience of God's love (John 3:16 and Rom. 5:8), and we also realise the love of Jesus in that He died for our sins and is our advocate on high.

The first step in the Christian way could not be taken without appreciation of such love, drawing us away from the world and sin and bringing to us the opportunity of becoming a member in Christ. However; our Lord is here speaking of a further experience—"I will manifest Myself to him." What does manifest mean? Some seem to think that "manifestation". always means "appearance," but that is not so. This manifestation is not to the human eye but to the eye of faith the spiritual sight of the new creature. Likewise, when the Apostle in Romans 8: to speaks of "the manifestation of the sons of God," to the world in the Kingdom Age, he does not mean that the world of mankind will see the Church in glory, by human eyesight, but the work and effect of the reign of Christ (I-lead and Body) will be manifest to all.

How does the Lord manifest Himself to us? John 14:16, 17—"I will pray the Father and He will give you another comforter that he may abide with you for ever, even the spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive because it seeth him not, but ye know him, for he dwelleth with you and shall be in you." It is, then, by the holy spirit in our hearts and. enlightening our minds through the Word that the Lord manifests Himself to His people and has been with them throughout the age. Verse 26: "The comforter which is the holy spirit whom the Father will send in My name, he shall reach you all things and bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I. have said unto you.- How good it is to have this manifestation, this witness of God's spirit -ivith our spirit whereby we are assured that we arc His. "As many as are led by the spirit of God, they are the sons of God." (Rom. 8:16) "Hereby we know that we that we dwell in Hm and He in us, because He bath given us of His spirit." (1 John 4: ;3.)

So again, John says: "Hereby we know that we are of the truth and shall assure our hearts." (I John 3:19) That is, if we have that spirit of love deed and in truth, then we have the manifestation of Jesus in:the fact of having His spirit and in hearing much fruit. We cannot bear the fruits of the the spirit. unless we abide in the vine; so Christ is manifest in His people.

How happy the fellowship where Christ's sweet spirit pervades all heads and directs all thoughts and words and deeds

"O blessed they and greatly blessed,
Where Christ is Ruler and confessed;
O happy heart s and happy homes,
To whom this King of triumph comes

Mere we find fulfilment of the promise, "where two or three are gathered in My name, there am I in the midst." In this way the Lord has manifested I himself to His people in little companies, as well as to each personally.

"The more we develop the fruits of the spirit, the more assured we are of the indwelling of the Father and the Son in our hearts by the holy Jesus is thus manifestly in us, we have received of His spirit and need not for any one to tell us, for we all know it. "He that keepeth His commandments dwelleth in Him and He in him, and hereby we know that He abideth in us, by the spirit which He hath given us." John 3:24. Also John 15:7-12.

Redeemer come I open wide .my heart to Thee,
Here Lord abide ;
Let nut Thy constant presence feel,
Thy grace and love in me reveal.
"I am with thee He hath said it,
In His truth and tender grace;
Sealed the promise grandly spoken
Of His love and faithfulness."

I am enclosing you herewith money order to cover; if this is not sufficient, kindly let me know. I wonder if you could also spare me a few more copies of your free literature, which would be greatly appreciated, as they are 50¢ handy and the message so clearly, yet concisely presented.

Thanking you for 'Your kindness and praying that our Heavenly Father may bless you in your labours of love in His vineyard, and remembering you dear ones as we meet to celebrate our blessed Lord's Memorial. With much Christian love, I am, by His kind favour,.

Your brother in Christ, P.H.

Dear Brother, Tasmania.

Warmest of loving greetings in the name of our Lord and Redeemer.

I am writing just to tell you how I appreciate the little paper and assure you that you are often in my prayers that the good Lord will bless you abundantly in the privilege you have of its production.

We are living in the time when “they will not endure sound doctrine,” except one here and there; yet is that sufficient reason to lower our standard of truth? To eliminate doctrine and controversial subjects is in effect to compromise the truth (by which alone we are sanctified), and to that extent following in the footsteps of modern Babylon, living peaceably with all men at any price, forgetting the “if possible.”

The Prophet of old said, “My people are destroyed through lack of knowledge,” and the Master: “This is life eternal to know Thee the only true God and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent.” Bro. Paul stated he had not shunned to declare all the counsel of God, saying he was not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ which was so controversial a subject at that time, that it was the cause of his persecution even unto death.

Possibly there never was a time when sound doctrine was more needed and controversial subjects, so called, dealt with, for they indeed do the shaking work.

Away back, our Lord at the end of His ministry gave out some deep truths and some walked with Him no more. it is good to see the little paper boldly upholding the truth and judiciously combining doctrine, exhortation and the subjects that have become controversial through lack of once for all being persuaded in their truth or error.

Will conclude now, dear brother, with Christian love to yourself and sister, and by God’s grace may you, as Paul admonished Timothy, “continue in the things thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them.”

Your brother, by His grace, B.H.C.

Dear Brother,

Your kind letters of the 9th and 15th inst. have arrived, for which many thanks.

I am glad and thankful, dear brother, for the assistance and encouragement you are giving me in the work I am attempting to do. I feel sure you are sympathetic and will be patient with me. It is not about myself I wish to speak, but about that which lies nearest to our hearts —our Master’s service. I need guidance and help; I find have a lot to learn yet. You understand; you sympathise. My consecration vow is ever before me, and I wish it to become a yet greater spur in my life.

Now I find that my activities are divided under three heads—(1) Character development; (2) duty towards the brethren and my family (3) duty towards my fellow men. In my situation the two first headings must naturally take up the greatest part of my time; but about once every three weeks I find time to go out with the literature. I want to do this as effectively as possible and already I have had an idea, When I can engage anyone in conversation and I find interest I shall make it my business to look them up again with more literature. I have already one; it is the preacher I told you about. Anytime you have something interesting to send him, I think he will be pleased to receive it. I have come to the conclusion that it is not the amount of literature distributed that matters, but the manner in which this is done. The more earnest the effort, the surer the Lord’s blessing.

With best Christian love and greetings,

I am, your brother by His grace, B.F..

“A Cup of Cold Water.”

“The Lord of the Harvest walked forth one day,
Where the fields were white with the ripening wheat,
Where those He had sent in the early morn
Were reaping the grain in the noonday heat.

He had chosen a place for every one,
And bidden them work till the day was done.
“Apart from the others, with troubled voice,
Spake one who had gathered no golden grain:

‘The Master hath given no work to me,
And my coming hither hath been in vain;
The reapers with gladness and song will come,
But no sheaves will be mine in the harvest home.’

“He heard the complaint, and He called her name:
‘Dear child, why standest thou idle here?
Go fill the cup from the hillside stream,
And bring it to those who are toiling near;

I will bless thy labour, and it shall be Kept in remembrance as done for Me.’
“ ‘Twas a little service, but grateful hearts
Thanked God for the water so cold and clear;

And some who were fainting with thirst and heat,
Went forth with new strength to the work so dear;
And many a weary soul looked up,
Revived and cheered by the little cup.”

Take My Yoke upon You and Learn of me

“Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take My yoke upon you, and. learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For .My yoke is easy, and my burden is light.”—Matt. 11:28-30.

WHEN our Lord spoke these words, we would understand He was addressing those to whom He was especially sent—the children of Israel—with the one desire of finding those with ,burden of heart and sin-weariness which all true Israelites must have felt if they were honest with themselves.

For generations these Israelites had been under the Law Covenant given by God through Moses at Sinai. We are told by the Apostle that this Covenant was added. to the Abrahamic Covenant “because of transgressions, till the Seed should come,” and so, while serving a good purpose during the centuries intended for it, on the other hand it was really a burdensome arrangement for all who were striving to keep its just requirements and gain everlasting life.

It is unnecessary to go into the matter fully as to how the finest of the Jewish race could never keep God’s law perfectly, strive as they would, as it was the measure of a perfect man’s ability. This was demonstrated by the fact that our Lord, the only perfect man since Adam’s transgression, was the only one able to fulfil the demands of the Law Covenant. How true it is, that when our Lord came to Israel they were under the yoke and burden of the’ Law, which, while promising, life under certain conditions, was really found to be unto death for the reason before mentioned. “For if there had: been. a law. given which’ could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law.”

So, we may suppose, that amongst the Jews at that time, while the majority were professing to be holy, law-keepers who did no sin, there were some who honestly admitted that they did not, could not keep the Law perfectly, and who, therefore, felt burdened and wearied with their fruitless endeavours. Such felt their need of a Burden-bearer, such felt their soul-sickness and need of the good Physician, and to such Jesus addressed the words of our text, inviting them to come to Him and receive rest.

What a relief, then, it must have been to those sincere Israelites who, trusting in the God of Abraham and looking for the promised Messiah,. heard these words of Jesus: “Come unto Me all ye that labour and are heavy laden . . . Take My yoke upon you and learn of Me and ye shall, find rest unto your souls.”

The time had conic for all sincere Israelites’ to be transferred from Moses into Christ. This is so beautifully shown in John’s Gospel, where John the Baptist, in carrying out his mission of introducing the Bridegroom to his own disciples, declared, “Behold the Lamb of God,” and the disciples heard him speak and they followed Jesus. In the same first chapter of John, the call of Nathaniel, which is also a beautiful incident, is a further indication of the change of dispensation, when those in right heart condition could, receive the true One, sent of God. See John 1:45-47-- “Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile.” And so the Lord would reveal to them’ the true and only possible way of gaining justification in the sight of God, leading them out from the yoke and bondage of the Law where there is no rest,. and: inviting them to take a very different yoke upon them, “His yoke,” which would bring rest unto their souls.

This, then, would be the position of those whom our Lord addressed directly at that time; but it may be asked how these words of. our Lord would apply down the Gospel Age, to our own day,. to us, who have never been under the Law of Moses. The fact of our living at a time when the Jewish Age has long closed does not relieve us of contact with worldly yokes of various kinds, and from one or another of these, all who have any standing before God have been graciously called by the same Master, that we also may enter into rest. "For we which have believed do enter into rest."

This coming to Christ for rest is the first step toward a Christian life; it is justification, the acceptance of Him as the satisfaction for our sins, and from the time we thus accept Him, as the Apostle declares, we have joy and peace through believing. But having been thus received and blessed, there is something more for us to do, namely, to learn that there is another burden and another yoke which we should take upon us, voluntarily, even as did the Israelites indeed in our Lord's day.

A yoke is a symbol of servitude and so our Lord implies that those who are set free (either from the yoke of the Law Covenant, as were the believing Jews, or from the yoke of Satan, as were the believing Gentiles) should become His servants, should take His yoke, should learn to do His will. A yoke generally is arranged for two, and our Lord speaks of it as His yoke, by which we are to understand that He also is a servant. Having come to do the Father's will and having put on the yoke of servitude, He invites us to become true yoke-fellows with Himself in the doing of the Father's will, co-labourers together with Him in the great work of the world's deliverance from sin and death.

The secret of the ability to wear this yoke and to have companionship with Christ in His service, and to have as a result a great blessing in our own hearts, a rest unto our souls, lies, He explains, in our learning to be meek and lowly of heart as He was. "Learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly in heart." It will be impossible for those who are proud, haughty, self-willed, ambitious and worldly-wise to labour in the same yoke with Jesus, or to find true rest of soul which we properly seek. But if we are meek, teachable, humble-minded, ready to know and to do the Lord's will at any cost, then, indeed, we shall find rest to our soul's satisfaction--"the peace of God which passeth all understanding" will rule in our hearts.

We do well to consider the difference between the two "rests" of verses 28 and 29. Of the first, it is said that the Lord will give it to him who comes to Him in faith. Of the second, it is said that he finds this rest to his soul through becoming a yoke-fellow with Jesus. And so it is; there are two blessings; the first blessing is that of justification--the joy of having our sins forgiven, realising ourselves no longer strangers and foreigners from our Heavenly Father, but brought nigh by the blood of Christ. The second is the joy which comes more gradually, a fruitage, a grace, a development in the heart, the growing and abiding peace and joy of the holy spirit. This second blessing, however, is attained by very few; the majority of nominal Christians know nothing of it, and yet it is the very object of the calling of this Gospel Age. Those who fail to come to the Lord, and to take His yoke, learning of 'Him in the fullest sense, to become thus "copies of God's dear Son," will fail utterly of the special purpose and call of this Gospel Age and will have neither part nor lot in the spiritual kingdom. The blessing of justification by faith is merely to fit and prepare us to take the yoke-complete consecration—and to become a co-labourer with the Lord in the Father's service.

This yoke which Jesus invites us to conic under with Him is a very formidable affair from the standpoint of the world. To them it seems to be a most unreasonable yoke, a most 'terrible burden to consecrate life, time, means, everything to the service of God; but from the standpoint of those who have come unto Jesus and to whom He has spoken peace and rest through justification, the matter is very different. To such it must seem a "reasonable service," that since the Lord has graciously redeemed our lives, our all, we should use what remains of that life to His praise and glory. After we have fastened the yoke upon ourselves, we find that it is an easy one, and that with it any duty, any trial, any difficulty, any vexation of spirit, any burden of any kind, that could come to us, should be light indeed because of this yoke. Every burden is light, because our yoke is appreciated, and is so easy, so reasonable; and additionally it is so light, because the Lord is with us in this yoke. He is the great Burden-bearer, and will not suffer us to be tempted or to be pressed with more of the burdens of life than we should be able to endure. He is watching out for the interests of all those who take His yoke upon them; their burdens are His burdens, their trials are His trials, their interests are His interests; yea, all things shall work for good to them because they love Him.

And now, the important question is: Is this so with us? Since we have taken the Lord's yoke upon us and sought to learn of Him, have we found rest unto our souls? Have we found His yoke easy, and His burden light, or have we at times been restless, upset and disturbed with one or another experience? Probably all of us will admit that we have not always been as restful in spirit as we should have been, considering the One whose yoke we have taken upon us. Often, we have perhaps been taken unawares and a hasty word is spoken, or a little or greater resentment comes into the heart under this or that trial, and it is even worse in some cases, for these hindrances are apparently allowed to remain and then come very sad experiences upon the members of the Lord's household. Upon examination, it will be seen that the reason for this unsettled condition within is that such have not yet learned of the Lord sufficiently, and so lack the true rest of soul which comes only from a complete and abiding knowledge in the fullest sense of Him who was meek and lowly of heart.

So, may we realise what a work there is in each and all of us, after taking the Lord's yoke upon us, in becoming copies of Him in spirit and truth. However, if we, as members in the pilgrim way, are endeavouring to give heed to these words of the Master—"and learn of Me"—and such efforts are backed up by a constant waiting upon the Lord in prayer and supplication, and supported by a constant meditation upon His Word, it surely will be only a matter of time when the periods in which we find rest unto our souls will increase more and more until it will be "all my days and all my hours."

On the other hand, let us not be discouraged if after repeated effort there be still some failure on our part. We cannot hope to have so much accomplished in us without some failures and these should just draw us nearer the source of our strength, even to the Lord Himself. And how different it is living under the Lord's yoke, in comparison with all the yokes of bondage in the world. If this fact be kept uppermost in mind, we shall find that it will help greatly towards that complete rest in Christ. We should, then, always be mindful of our privileges, with grateful appreciation of our Heavenly Father in lifting us out of the bondage of corruption and setting our feet upon a rock.

Let us view, now, as well as we are able, the life of Him to whom we have become yoked and of whom we[^] are learning as pupils in the school of Christ, of Him who was "meek and lowly of heart." The very entrance of our Lord upon the earthly mission could not have been more lowly and meek, than as the little babe of Bethlehem, and right throughout His course in life the most pronounced feature in delighting to do His Father's will, was this adoring grace of meekness and humility, coupled with fervent zeal in pouring out His soul unto death.

How strange it seemed to the Jewish people as a whole for their promised Messiah to come as the lowly Nazarene. They were looking for one to come in power and great glory and so they stumbled at that "stumbling stone." As a nation their minds had become so absorbed with the spirit of the world, even though they were God's chosen people for generations, that the One clothed in humility was overlooked, despised and rejected of men. See Isaiah 53: 1-3.

And so "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin 'of the world'" was thought to be of no importance because He was meek and lowly in heart. "He made Himself of no reputation and took upon Him the form of a servant and being found in fashion as a man. He humbled Himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." (Phil. 2:7, 8.)

When we thus view the life and conduct of our Master in enduring the contradiction of sinners against Himself, do we not realise more than ever what is required of us, who have taken His yoke upon us to learn of Him. Are we likewise prepared to be of no reputation in the eyes of the majority of mankind, and especially those in Christendom to-day? We remember how it was foretold that our Lord would be a stone of stumbling and rock of offence to both the houses of Israel, 'and what wonder, then, that the Lord's people should find themselves out of accord with so many at this time, corresponding to those in our Lord's day who were not able to learn of Him. If this is our condition as we press along as pilgrims and strangers, then we are coming more and more to atonement with our Lord, in learning of Him, and we shall find such rest to our souls that we shall never want any other way.

On the other hand, how sad it is when some who had apparently taken the Lord's yoke upon them in past times, have failed to learn of Him sufficiently, and so are turned aside by one cause or another. We call to mind the words of our Master: "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink His blood ye have no life in you . . . For My flesh is meat indeed and my blood is drink indeed. He that eateth My flesh and drinketh My blood dwelleth in Me and I in him.

As the living Father hath sent me and I live by the Father, so he that eateth Me, even he shall live by Me." How these words continually remind us of our participation with our Lord in the likeness of His death, if so be that we may be also in the likeness of His resurrection, and especially emphasised in our Memorial and Baptism Services. When our Lord spoke these words, indicating the true significance of taking up the cross to follow Him, taking His yoke upon them, many of His disciples said, "This is a hard saying, who can hear it?" "And from that time many of His disciples went back and walked no more with Him." In other words, they were unable to learn of Him who is "the way, the truth and the life." And so it has happened down to our own day. How many there have been who seemed to rejoice in "present truth"—the presence of our Lord and features of the harvest work for the consummation of their sacrifice—who have now "gone back," so to speak, "and walk no more with Him."

We remember how Daniel has told us that at a certain time there would be brought to light such truths as would bring a great blessing to those able to receive them. "Blessed is he that waiteth. and cometh to the thousand, three hundred and five and thirty days." From our studies, we are conversant with these "days of Daniel," and know that they were fulfilled following on the presence of our Lord, during the "time of the end," the harvest of this Gospel Age. So it has been that each one coming to the Lord in the right heart condition, and having the eyes of their understanding enlightened, 'have partaken of this blessedness of harvest truths due, especially over the past half century. It would seem that for any to have appreciated the presents truth in the first place, there must have been a meekness and humility of heart, so we realise that there must be a falling away from this -condition by all who fail to continue in the Word and be disciples indeed.

"The meek will He guide in judgment and the meek will He teach His way." Yes, indeed, but it will. not do if- such a condition is not preserved. One .would think that as the Lord's followers progress .along the way, learning more and more of what He has .so graciously done for them, that this very fact would increase their humility and meekness in His sight. And so it does in all who are learning: of the Lord aright and appreciating to the full the privilege of taking His yoke upon them; but when the contrary spirit takes hold, however, small in the beginning, and is allowed to remain, the spiritual vision is beclouded, the beautiful, simple, Gospel truths become dimmed, and the.: very One who was overlooked at the first Advent is likewise set aside, now, and the words of John the • Baptist .are fulfilled again: "There standeth one among you whom ye know not." The fact of .not knowing the Lord—of not learning of Him—is therefore the cause of all failure, for where there is not progress into more of oneness with Him, His light, His keeping power is unable to enter our hearts to the same degree as formerly, and the spirit so prevalent in the world for some-thing new, something entertaining and ambitious in the sight of man, thus finds entrance, with the result of .certain loss.

How, then, we need to guard well our "first love"; that love that prompted us to take the Lord's yoke upon us and learn of Him and which has brought rest unto our souls. No matter how long ago we .first entered upon this life ,of being yoke-fellows with Christ, whether it be one, five, ten, twenty or more years, we shall be safe only as our first love is preserved and increased, as we continue to learn of our Lord, who was meek and lowly of -heart.

We shall also find the Lord's 'yoke easy and His burden light. The reason for this is evident only to those who experience this yoke. it is easy because the Lord is with us in the yoke, and He has promised neither to leave nor forsake all thus united to Him.

Only those who understand the consecrated way would say, in viewing the Apostle Paul's experiences, that the yoke of Christ on his shoulders was an easy one, or that the burden of Christ's work which he bore was a light one. The Apostle himself thought it was, for he counted it an inestimable privilege to endure hardness as a good soldier for Christ's sake. He joyfully suffered the loss of all things, and counted them but dross that he might win Christ and be found in Him. He rejoiced to be made a partaker of His sufferings that he might also be made a partaker with Him of His glory and share with Him in the blessed work of His kingdom.

Stephen had the same rest and joy even while his. enemies were stoning him to death, and many more of God's saints can testify to the same thing in the midst of poverty, sickness, affliction, temptation, and enemies on every hand, and even in the flames of violent persecution. And through all this there has been a rest of mind, and is still, for all truly abiding in the Lord. "Thou wilt keep him in, perfect peace whose •mind is stayed on Thee."

May it be, then, that in all the days ahead, we shall realise what a privilege is ours in having been invited to participate in the^Lord's -yoke, learning of Him, our Lord and Head, who, through His humility and meekness has been exalted to the Father's right hand, and may the language of our hearts ever be in harmony with His. If this is so, we shall indeed find abiding rest unto our souls.

"I love Thy will, O God!
It is my joy, my rest;
It glorifies my common task,
It makes each trial blest.

"I love Thy will, O God!
The sunshine or the rain.
Some days are bright with praise, and some Sweet with accepted pain.

"I love Thy will, O God!
O hear my earliest plea,
That as Thy will is done in heaven
It may be done in me."

Review of the New Covenant,

A correspondent has invited our views respecting some expressions in a letter to him bearing on the New Covenant. (Jer. 31:31.) It is said that it is -"the only covenant under which provision is made for the forgiveness of sins."

There is, however, no such statement in the Scriptures, but there appears much to the contrary. In fact, it seems only when speaking or writing to the Jews that there is any mention of the "New Covenant." it is only to those who had been under the old "Law Covenant" that the New Covenant is promised. In Romans, chapters 3 and 4, Paul speaks of a righteousness attained by faith—"Being justified freely by His grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus: whom God hath set to be a propitiation through faith in His blood," etc.—then goes on to show how Abraham was accounted righteous because of faith and also that David speaks of the blessedness of the man unto whom God imputeth righteousness without works, saying, "Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven and whose sins are covered," etc.

While Jesus said, "This is my blood of the New Testament," He was speaking to Israelites, who, being in bondage of the Law Covenant, needed to be redeemed so that in due time the New Covenant may be established, and it will be through the operation of the New Covenant that salvation will come first to restore Israel and then through them to the whole world.

During the Gospel Age, however, God is taking out the full number for the Church from Gentiles, and these are not dealt with in the way of a collective covenant, but each needs to enter into a personal consecration—a covenant by sacrifice—and so they become members in Christ. "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise." (Gal. 3:16, 29.) They thus come into the "blessedness of the man to whom God imputeth righteousness," under the original Abrahamic Promise (to which the Law was added but did not disannul). See Heb. 6:13-19; Gal. 3:3-8, 17, 18; Acts 3:25; Gal. 4.

It would seem • strange if the New Covenant had been established and by it only could sins be forgiven, that the Apostles should have so omitted mention of it in their preaching either to Jews or Gentiles. Note Paul's noble address before Agrippa, yet no mention is made of any New Covenant. Acts 26 (vide verse 18.) Jer. 31:31, 32 distinctly states that it is to the house of Israel and the house of Judah, who were under the old Law Covenant, that the New Covenant is promised. How foolish, then, is the statement that is made, "If it (the New Covenant) did not go into operation at Calvary, then no one's sins have been forgiven."

Another expression is that Paul tells us that "Jesus set aside the first old Law Covenant that He might establish the second," inferring, here, that the New Covenant must be at once in operation. What the Apostle appears to have in mind in this verse is, that Jesus was the great antitype of the Aaronic priest, and that the typical arrangement had now passed away and the antitype was being established. The antitypical sacrifices had begun. Christ, as typified by the bullock, was slain, and the Church, as typified by the Lord's goat, was following "in His steps." See Heb. 13:12, 13, which sacrifice must be offered in the spirit of praise as indicated in the sweet incense that burned on the typical altar. So says the Apostle, Rom. 8:36, "For thy sake we are killed all the day long" (all down the Gospel Day). "This is the day of salvation, this is the acceptable time" (for such offerings). So the Body of Christ must be complete and each member be conformed to the great Head, "filling up that which is behind of the affliction of Christ in my flesh for His body's sake." (Col. 1:24.)

We are referred to 2 Cor. 3:6, "Who hath made us able ministers of 'the New Testament,'" and it is suggested that this means that the New Covenant is being operated by these able ministers. The failure to understand this expression seems to be in regard to the largeness of the antitype in comparison with the type. The type is spoken of as a shadow compared to the reality. The selecting and anointing of the Aaronic priesthood occupied a very brief time, but it shadowed or typified the Gospel Age of nearly 2000 years. The ministers of the New Covenant are being chosen;

Paul was one, and others have been selected all down the age, but not until they are ready will the New Covenant be established with Israel and the blessing of all the families of the earth begin.

It would be indeed a sad thing to think of the New Covenant as having been in operation all down the age, for under it everyone is to be personally responsible, and if he dies, he will die for his own sin (not Adam's), and there would be no resurrection for any who had died apart from Christ during the past 1900 years.

When the "prophet like unto Moses" (Acts 3:22) begins His work, He will rewrite God's Law in the inward parts and write it in their hearts. That is, all mankind will be led up the highway, and taught not only to do, but to love righteousness, so that it will become their nature to do right, and to abhor that which is evil.

With the Church it is different; while we learn to love righteousness and to hate iniquity, yet our human nature is not led up to perfection. It still remains, as says the Apostle, “in my flesh dwelleth no good thing.” We are granted the holy Spirit to help our infirmities and have to continually keep our bodies under restraint. We do not have God’s law written in these fleshly hearts, but we received new mind—the mind of Christ--and have to conquer all the tendencies of the human nature that would hinder our progress as new creatures.

There will not be that continual, personal fight under the New Covenant, when all difficulties will be removed.

No lion will be in the path, the stones (of temptation) will be taken out of the way, and everything made easy. All environments will encourage righteousness, which will have its happy, rewards of health and prosperity. Evil and its consequences will gradually be blotted out and the human hearts of the obedient will be brought into happy accord with likeness to God. The law of God will have then rewritten in the heart of the human family.

Know of the Doctrine.

“If any man willed, to do His will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of Myself.”--John 7:17.

WE are living in a day when the very word doctrine seems to be offensive to the majority of Christian people. Each denomination realises that its own system of doctrines is imperfect, unsatisfactory, undependable. And the same is believed in respect of all other doctrines. Hence, by mutual consent Christian people seem disposed to henceforth and forever ignore doctrines; for they believe that, if after nineteen centuries they are thus confused, the matter never was clear and never will be clear to anybody.

All this is a great mistake; the doctrines of Christ, as presented by the Great Teacher and His Apostles, was a great message, of which none of them were ashamed. The difficulty with the Lord's people to-day is that we gradually fell away from those doctrines—we gradually put darkness for light and light for darkness, and thus gradually got into the spirit of Babylon, and into the spirit of bondage to human traditions and creeds. Instead of shunning doctrines, we should realise that they are the very things needed to cause the scattering of our darkness and superstitions, and to draw all of God's people nearer together.

The doctrines of Christ and the Apostles are what we need to inspire us to break down all our creed fences, which so long have separated us as God's people, the one from the other, in various denominational folds, all which are contrary to the Divine arrangement; for God hits but the one fold for all His “Sheep” of this Age, as He will have another fold for the Restitution “sheep” of the next Age—the Messianic Kingdom Age.

“One Lord, One Faith, One Baptism.”

Can we doubt that if as God's people we put away sectarianism and the creed spectacles of our forefathers, and if we go with pure, sincere hearts to the Lord and His Word, we will there find again the “one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism, one God and Father over all, and one Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ,” and “one Church of the First-Born, whose names are written in heaven”? (Eph. 4:5, Heb. 12:23). Let us hearken to the words: “Cast not away therefore your confidence, which bath great recompense of reward,” “But remember the former days, in which ye endured a great fight of afflictions; partly whilst ye were made a gazing stock both by reproaches and by afflictions; and partly whilst ye became companions of them that were so used.” “For ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise.” (Heb. 10:35, 32, 33, 36).

The time seems long to all of us, even though we remember that “a day with the Lord is as a thousand years.” When we think of the fact that it is thirty-nine hundred years since God's promise to Abraham, that his Seed should bless all the families of the earth—when we think of the fact that Israel (lid not receive that great privilege of being the spiritual Seed from which primarily that blessing should go forth, and that the “elect” are receiving it; when we think of the fact that God has been nearly nineteen centuries in selecting the “elect” from Israel and from all nations, it is enough to stagger our faith unless we hold firmly to the Divine promise and remember that God confirmed it with an Oath. By these two immutable, unchangeable things, the Divine Word and the Divine Oath, we know that the Seed of Abraham is to be developed, and that eventually it is to bless all the families of the earth. It is the Divine will that we allow our faith in this great promise of God to be “an anchor to our souls, sure and steadfast, entering into that within the veil.”— Heb. 6: to.

The Doctrines of Christ.

-What we all need as God's people is to put away human theories and other gospels and take hold afresh on the Gospel of Christ. These other gospels are other messages of hope, aside from the one which the Bible presents. For instance, Theosophy is one of these; Evolution is another; New Theology is another. These all hold out a different gospel from that which Jesus and the Apostles presented; the one that was given to us for our sanctification, and through the holding fast of which, and the obedience to The Faith, we are to be saved and given a share with Messiah in His glorious Empire of the world.

The doctrines of Christ mean those doctrines presented in the Bible by Jesus and His mouthpieces, the Apostles. These doctrines relate to the Church and to the world, and God's blessing for each; these doctrines relate to sin and its forgiveness; the terms of that forgiveness, the basis of that forgiveness—the death of Jesus—and the hope of that forgiveness, release from Divine condemnation, fellowship with God, and everlasting life obtained through resurrection of the dead.

A Prerequisite to Knowledge.

But some one will inquire, Why is it so difficult to understand the doctrines of Christ? Why are there so many different denominations of Christians? Why do they all so misunderstand the matter—that these different denominations have resulted from the differences of theory respecting the teachings of the Bible? The simple explanation is that, shortly after the death of the Apostles, when the Church began to be in a measure of prosperity, the Adversary came in and sowed the seeds of false doctrines, using human lips and human pens in his service, through pride and ambition. The darkness became so great that, looking back to-day, we speak of the period as the “Dark Ages.”

The various denominations of Christendom are evidences of honesty, perseverance and love of the Truth, because our forefathers, who made these creeds, were each trying to get more and more out of the dark and back to the “True Light.” They all made the mistake, however, of holding too much to the creeds and theories of the past. Let us not make the same mistake; let us cut loose entirely from every authority outside the Word of God. Whoever can help us understand God’s Word—we should be glad to have his assistance; but we cannot acknowledge as inspired or authoritative the teachings of the “Fathers” of the early times, however conscientious they may have been, because we cannot recognise that there were any such authorised successors to the Apostles.

God, who foretold through the Prophets this long period of darkness, and who has blessed and guided His_ saintly children throughout it, without removing- all of their blindness, has promised that with the end of this Age will come a great blessing. and enlightenment upon His people, when the “wise virgins” will find their lamps burning brightly, and be able to understand and appreciate the deep things of God: “The wise shall understand, but none of the wicked shall understand.” In the end of this Age the curtain was to be drawn, and the “true light” was to shine forth, scattering all the darkness. We are in the close of this Age to-day, and therefore may see much more clearly than did our forefathers, the Divine character and Plan for human salvation.

Willeth To Do His Will.

Our text is a message from the Master’s Own lips. He gives us the key to a clear knowledge of His doctrines, namely, that the student must be fully consecrated to God and fully desirous of. knowing His Will and His Plan. In order to see light in God’s light--to see the Truth, from the Divine standpoint of the Divine revelation, we must draw near to God in the spirit of our Minds, consecrated in our heart. We must will to do His will.

But what does this mean? What is it to will to do His will? God’s will represents actual perfection of thought and word and deed, toward God, toward our fellows in the Body of Christ, and toward all mankind. This is the Divine Standard set up, but we are no more able to fulfil its demands than were the Jews. As St. Paul declares, “We. cannot do the things that we would.” Weakness of the flesh, frailty and imperfection, we all have with the world; the best that we can do is to will to (16 right, and to the best of our ability carry out that covenant with the Lord to do His will. At the very best all will come short of perfection.

But for those who have come into harmony with God, through Christ--for those who have made a covenant with Him by sacrifice--for those who have Jesus for their Advocate, a provision has been made, whereby the willing, all desiring to do the Divine will, and manifesting endeavours so to do, are counted as righteous—as though they did the Divine will perfectly. This class, in the Scriptures, is known as the “saints”; they are the prospective members of the Body of Christ. It is to these that the promises of our text apply, that they shall know to do the Divine will, shall know whether Jesus merely made up these teachings of Himself, or whether He was the active agent of Jehovah in what He did and in what He taught. .

Shall we not, then, determine to give our hearts, our wills, fully to the Lord—determine in our wills to do God’s will? If so, following the instructions of the Word of God, we shall doubtless be blessed and enabled fully, to know, to, appreciate, to understand, the doctrines of Christ—the deep things of God, which are revealed to this class by the Spirit of God.

Justification by Faith.

IN Romans 5: 1, where the Apostle says, "Being justified by faith we have peace with God," his thought is that our peace or harmony with God began with, our faith and led on to this condition of grace wherein we stand as sons of God, begotten of the. holy spirit and rejoicing in the hope of Kingdom glory, honour and immortality. Our justification by faith began with the first element of our faith; that is to say, when first we saw the Lord even imperfectly.

From the time we first approached God we began to have a measure of peace, which continues with us as long as we are walking in the right direction, growing in knowledge and obedience. Those whose faith or obedience stops find their peace with God diminishing. If the faith and obedience extend to the point of full consecration and begetting of the holy spirit, it becomes the "Peace of God which passeth all understanding," ruling in our hearts. (Phil.4:7.) The latter text refers to the perfected peace imparted by the holy spirit, which results from a full consecration to the will of God.

After trust and obedience had increased to the point where we were willing to present our bodies living sacrifices to the Lord, then we entered into this fuller blessing, wherein we now stand. But in order to enter, we must first have our faith vitalised by the great High Priest, who imputes to us as much of the merit of His sacrifice as is necessary to perfect us; and, secondly, we must be accepted as sacrifices by our Heavenly Father, who indicates his acceptance by begetting us of the holy spirit to newness of life.

The vitalisation is that which makes justification complete and unchangeable. The person whose justification has been vitalised has received his full share in- the merit of Christ. To such there would remain no more an interest in the great atonement if he were to turn back, like the sow to the wallowing. If he fails to go on to perfection as a New Creature, the only thing for him would, be a "certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation which shall devour the adversaries."— Heb. 10:27.

By way of illustration, let us consider a person not in harmony with God, but feeling after him. Typically he recognises the Divine Presence as represented in the Tabernacle. He draws near to God. As' he approaches the Tabernacle he finds but one gate for entrance from the Camp to the Court. After he enters that gate he beholds the brazen altar with its sacrifices, representing the Redeemer's meritorious sacrifice. Passing the altar implies faith in the redeeming work. From the time he enters the "court" condition of faith his faith. continues to increase with each onward step of obedience. Next the first veil is seen, representing consecration to death. If the stoop of full consecration to pass under the veil be made, the result is full or perfect peace, such as our Lord referred to when He said, "My peace give unto you."— John 14:27.

His faith is no longer merely a faith in the Redeemer's work; more than this, it has become "peace, the gift of God's love," the begetting of the holy spirit, which passeth all understanding, ruling in his heart. But if, after the first veil is reached and seen to represent the sacrifice of all earthly interests, that step is not taken, the result will be a lessening of the peace, and possibly a more or less retrograde movement toward the gate, toward the world.

The difference between the justification of those now justified through faith in our Lord Jesus Christ and that of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and the other Ancient Worthies who were said to be justified by faith. is this: The Ancient Worthies lived at a time when their faith could not be vitalised. Hence, nothing that they could do would give them more than the privilege of having the Divine approval and a better hope for the future, according to the amount of knowledge they enjoyed. They could never gain eternal life actually, except through the Redeemer. Hence they received only the promise of eternal life. Their full justification will come when the Redeemer shall have made application of His merit to the world.

During the Gospel Age matters are different. Whoever would be justified by faith and similarly approved of God now, must present his body la living sacrifice. Those who do so, in this "Acceptable Time," will be accepted, of the Lord and begotten of the holy spirit. Such then cease to be of the earthly, and get their reward with the heavenly class, with our Lord, on the spirit plane.

“PLAN OF GOD - IN BRIEF”

This booklet of 96 pages is very useful for making the plan of salvation available to others. Good stock now on hand at 6d. per copy.

CORRECTION.

In our last month's issue, on page 47, first column, the 8th line of the second paragraph is a repetition of the previous line. The sentence should have read:—”To realise its fulfilment will bring to us a power of strength, enabling us the better to run the narrow way—to endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ,” etc.

A Blessed Hope for Suffering Humanity

“We know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together, until now. And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we groan within ourselves waiting for the adoption, -to wit, the redemption of our Body.”—Rom. 8:22, 23.

ONLY for a short time will any thoughtful person question the declaration of the Apostle -that the human family, taken as a whole, is’ a groaning creation. He does not include the “church, for reasons which we shall see shortly, yet He points out that the Church also groans under present conditions. As we pass along the streets and hear the strains of music which occasionally come to us from public and private performances, on instruments of music, as we hear the laughter and see the throngs going to theatres, expositions, games, etc., we might be inclined at first to say there is a good share of the creation which does not groan much. But, as we look more closely at the facts as they come to us in the daily course, we find that much of the laughter is hysterical, and an offset to tears, that much of the music is paid for on business principles, to cheer and enthuse others, and some of it indulged in with the desire to drown care.

Similarly, those who attend places of amusement do so, not because they are happy, but because they are unhappy. Groaning in spirit, ‘they are seeking something to drive dull care away—to assuage their disappointments and heartaches. We believe that the experienced in life will generally agree with us that childhood is life’s happiest hour, and that with the coming of greater knowledge and responsibility, come cares, disappointments, heartaches and crosses to the world of mankind in general. Let us remember, too, that what we know of the world is in many respects the best, most favoured, and least burdened section.

Looking into the Bible, we are informed respecting the angels and the joys of heaven, and given to understand-that no sorrow enters there, nor any tears, nor any dying. We inquire, did not the same God who created man create the angelic hosts? Why, then, should there be so wide a distinction, so wide a difference between the conditions on earth and in heaven, that our Redeemer should teach us to pray that ultimately God’s Kingdom should come to earth and His will be done on girth as it is done in heaven? Why .does He tell us that the faithful in the resurrection will be made like unto angels, neither shall they die any more? Why are we not like the angels now? Why do we die? \\Thy are we sick? Why are we imperfect in our mental, moral and physical powers? Why are we deficient in our physical strength? The answer to these questions requires superhuman wisdom. There must be a reason; otherwise, the same just, loving, gracious God Would treat His human creatures, His human children, as kindly, as generously as His spiritual. Why is it that all of our blessings are of hope while all the blessings of the angels are actual and present?

“God Looked Down and Beheld.”

Still seeking information, we inquire of the Bible respecting man's condition, why it is as it is and how it came about. We note the prophetic declaration that God “looked down from the height of His sanctuary; from heaven did the Lord behold the earth; to hear the groaning of the prisoner; to loose those who are appointed to death.” (Psa. 102:19-21). This is in full conformity with the Apostle's statement, and adds the further explanation that the groaning is because man is a prisoner and under death sentence. But when did he become a prisoner? When did the death sentence come upon him?

The Scriptures answer that our race was sold under sin—became the slave of sin—and that the experiences of sorrow, degradation, imperfection and death are all parts of the wage of, this great taskmaster, sin. The Apostle declares that “the wages of sin is death,” and personifies Sin and Death, representing them as the great monarchs that are now ruling the children of men. He declares that Sin and Death have reigned, and as a matter of fact we know that the whole race is subject to these monarchs. (Rom. 6:23; 5:14, 21). The tomb, into which both good and bad go, is the great prison-house where all are figuratively said to sleep, waiting for the morning of the blessed Millennial Day, when Messiah shall come, and shall deliver the captives from the chains of sin and from the prison-house of death, Sheol, Hades, the grave.

Mark the Redeemer's words, “I am He that liveth and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore, and have the keys of death and of Hades (the grave).” (Rev. 1:18). Note again the prophetic statement along the same line, referring to Messiah and the work of His gracious Kingdom, when it shall be established. We read, “I, Jehovah, have called Thee in righteousness and will hold Thine hand, and will keep Thee and will give Thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles—to open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison; and them that sit in darkness out of the prison-house.” (Isa. 42:6, 7). And again, “The Spirit of Jehovah is upon Me, because Jehovah hath anointed Me to preach the good tidings unto the meek; He hath sent Me to bind up the broken-hearted; to proclaim liberty to the captives and the opening of the prison to them that are bound.”—Isa. 61:1.

Our Lord personally preached from this text, and declared Himself to be the One who would fulfil this prophecy—who would release our race from its slavery to sin and its bondage to death. The assurance of the Word of the Lord is that we have Divine sympathy, and that a Saviour adequate to all the conditions has been supplied by the Heavenly Father, and that the world merely awaits the proper time for Him to act, to strike off these shackles, to unlock the prison door and to let all the prisoners go free from this condemnation.

Origin of Man's Slavery to Sin.

A matter which is so general as to include every member of the race in this slavery to sin and death conditions is very noteworthy, and it is profitable that we hearken carefully, to the Word of God for an explanation for it. The Apostle gives the explanation, saying, “By one man's disobedience sin entered into the world and death as a result of sin, and thus death passed upon all men because all are sinners.” (Rom. 5:12). Turning back to Genesis we find the Apostle's words abundantly supported by the history of Adam and his deflection from obedience to God and his rejection from Divine fellowship, including his expulsion from Eden, that he might be thus subjected to dying conditions because of his disobedience, his sin. There the slavery began; there the groaning and dying of our race had its start. The Creator's words were, “Thorns and thistles shall the earth bring forth to thee; in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return.”—Gen. 3:18, 19.

Nothing could be plainer, simpler, more easy of comprehension to those who had no human philosophy and smoke of the Dark Ages to becloud their vision. It is most evident that the groaning began with father Adam, and that it has continued ever since, as his posterity has lost more and more the perfection of the image and likeness of God in which Adam was created, and has become more and more depraved mentally, morally and physically, until now, “there is none righteous, no, not one”; none perfect either in word or deed. (Rom. 3: to). To will aright may be present with us, as the Apostle suggests, but how to perform all that we will is another matter. As he again declared, “Ye can not do the things that ye would.” (Gal. 5:17). The difficulty is that the dying conditions have left us incapable as respects absolute good, and weakened as respects resistance of the temptations of the Adversary. The explanation is sufficient, as is no human speculation on the subject. Thank God that with the explanation, the Bible holds out before us the hope referred to—the hope of the deliverance of our race from this bondage of the prison-house.

Our context notes these facts, saying, “The-creature (humanity) was subject to vanity (frailty, imperfection, weakness), not of its own will, but by reason of him that subjected it (by reason of Adam’s transgression).” Nevertheless, we read that this subjection to .frailty was not without hope, a good hope, a great hope, a blessed hope, and-this in the Bible is called

We note the context which declares that although the creature, mankind, was subjected to sorrow, imperfection, dying, through another — through father Adam--he is not without hope; for “the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption (death) into the glorious liberty of the sons of God.” (verse 21). This is a remarkable declaration, for be it noted that it is not referring to the Church, the Elect, the Little Flock, but to the creation, the world in general. Do other Scriptures support this declaration that God proposes ultimately to deliver the human family from bondage to sin and death—from bondage to corruption? Yes, we reply, this was the very statement of the angels promulgated at the time of the announcement of our Saviour’s birth, “We bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be unto all people.”—Luke 2:10.

Moreover, the Scriptures give us a reasonable explanation, not only of why the reign of .Sin and Death has been permitted, but of how and where their reign shall be annulled and humanity be delivered. The declaration is that the Lord Jesus paid the penalty for Adam, and that this works not only a release of Adam himself from Divine condemnation to death, but works also the release of all those who came under Divine condemnation through Adam’s sin—the entire groaning creation. All the Scriptures, in speaking of the deliverance of the groaning creation, point to Messiah as the Divine Agency in effecting this deliverance. We have already quoted the declaration of Jesus and the prophets to the effect that He shall open the prison doors and set the prisoners at liberty. We remember also the words of the angels on the subject of good tidings of great joy which shall be unto all people, that it was ‘because a Saviour had been born—the anointed Lord, Messiah. Thus, all through the Scriptures, every hope of the race as respects deliverance from sin and degradation to eternal life is based upon Messiah and His work—His sacrificial work, finished at Calvary, and His work of glory during the Millennial Age, which will be begun at His Second Advent.

In the context which has been quoted, the Apostle declares that the groaning creation shall yet be delivered from its bondage to corruption into the liberty of the sons of God. The meaning of this is clear. The corruption came upon all through Adam, the deliverance from that corruption is to come to all through the second Adam. All are to be delivered from such bondage, however they may use the deliverance, or the privileges of liberty. Those who use it rightly will come into harmony with the Redeemer and with the Heavenly Kingdom, and will be blessed eventually with eternal life. Those who reject it after they come to understand fully, and comprehend its lengths and breadths, will thus be choosing for themselves the Second Death. The liberty of the sons of God, their freedom from corruption, death, is here distinctly shown. The angels are not subject to, not bound by, such corruption, such dying conditions. They, as sons of God, are free from corruption, from death.

Adam, in his original perfection, was a son of God, as the Scriptures declare (Luke 3:38), but he lost his sonship for himself and for all of his race and received instead degradation and bondage to corruption. The hope for Adam and for his race, then, in Christ, is deliverance from the power of sin and death into the liberty proper to them as sons of God. The entire Millennial Age, as the Scriptures show us, will be devoted to this work of setting free the human family from the various bondages of ignorance, superstition, weakness, heredity, and of bringing back all who will, by restitution processes, to the original image and likeness of God, and making them again human sons of God, like unto father Adam before he sinned, plus a large and valuable experience gained during the six thousand years of the fall, and also through the one thousand years of the [^]raising up — the Millennial Age, the Resurrection Age.

Note the Apostle's argument on this subject in a preceding chapter leading tip to our 'text. After telling 'that sin entered Eby one man's disobedience and that it was communicated 'to all of the race, he declares, "For as by the transgression of 'due many died, much more did the grace of 'God and the gift by the grace of the one man, Jesus 'Christ, abound unto many. For, if by the transgression of one, death reigned through the one, much more shall they that receive the abundance of grace and of the gift of righteousness, reign in life through the one, even Jesus Christ. So then, as through one transgression the sentence came upon all men to condemnation, even so 'through the one act of righteousness the free gift came unto all men to justification of life. For as by the disobedience of one man many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous." —Rom. 5:12, 15, 17-19, R.V.

How beautifully clear is this statement by the Apostle! We wonder how it was that we so long overlooked the true import 'of these words. We perceive that our eyes were holden and blinded 'by the unscriptural theory that when the Church, 'the "little flock," the saints, should be selected, all the remainder of mankind would be condemned 'to an eternity of torture! Since we have gotten rid of that delusion, our eyes are opening more and more to behold the lengths and breadths and heights and depths of God's great plan of salvation, which first deals with the Church during this Gospel Age and subsequently will deal with all the redeemed—all of the children of Adam condemned for Adam's disobedience, and bought with the precious blood of Christ, and to be justified from their condemnation and set at liberty by the great Redeemer when He shall in due time 'take unto Himself His great power and reign.—Rev. 11:15-19.

Why So -Long Delay?

The question is frequently asked, why should God so long delay to bring these blessings to the world? If God's Plan indeed be higher and nobler than any of the plans and theories of men, why has it not 'yet been demonstrated? Why has He permitted the world to remain so long in its slavery to sin and death—4000 years and more before he sent the Redeemer—nearly 2000 years since that Redeemer has purchased the world, and yet only a mere handful of the race has, as yet, even 'heard of the only name given under heaven and amongst men whereby we must be saved? Why the delay? Does it not contradict God's claim of love and sympathy and power? If He has the love which longs to help the world, does He lack the power? Is He unable to accomplish His good purposes? Or, if He has the power, does He lack the love, the will?

The Scriptures assure us that the love of God is boundless, and that He has already accomplished for mankind a redemptive work at the cost of the life of our Lord Jesus. They assure us, too, that God's love is the same to-day as it was eighteen centuries ago, that Divine Power is almighty, and that it only waits for the proper time to come to exercise itself for the full accomplishment of the Divine will and for the full blessing of all the families of the earth, through the Messiah, the Redeemer.

The explanation of the delay is fully given in the Scriptures,. which assure us that before the Divine Plan shall extend to the world for its blessing and uplift another work must first be accomplished; that:God's purpose to bless Adam and his race is a restitution promise and that the Millennial Age will be "times" or years of restitution, uplifting mankind. from the mental, moral and physical degradation into which it was plunged during the six thousand years of the reign of Sin and Death. It will also be a time for blessing the physical earth, and making it the proper home for the perfect race, the footstool of God, filled with his glory.

But before doing this, God purposed a work, if possible, still more wonderful, namely, the selecting of the Little Flock, the elect Church, who, instead of being restored to human perfection, will prove her loyalty to the Lord by her self-sacrifice, even unto death, and be granted a share with Christ in the First Resurrection—a change from earthly nature to Heavenly nature—far above angels, principalities and powers, like unto her glorified Redeemer and Head. This work of selecting the Church has been an important one, and has occupied a long period; and those who now have the privilege of becoming members of this elect Church and joint-heirs with the Redeemer cannot esteem the privilege too highly, but should with the Apostle, count that any loss or sacrifice would be ,as dross in comparison with the excellency of the blessings promised.

"We, Ourselves, also Groan."

Turn again to our text and context. Note again how the Apostle differentiates between the Church and the world and the groanings of each. Of the Church he says, "We, ourselves, also groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the deliverance of our Body." The world, without God and without hope, groans in doubt and despair, but the Church—having a good hope as an anchor to the soul, sure and steadfast, entering into that which is within the veil— cannot groan after the same manner as the world.

But notwithstanding all our hopes, all our joys in the Lord, all our fellowship, one with the other, we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened. All of our joyful anticipations of the future, and our realisation of the present that all evil things even are working together for our good and preparing us for the glory to come—all these do not hinder us at times from feeling a measure of the trouble, sadness and discouragement of our earthly environment. Our physical, mental and moral weaknesses at times assert themselves so strongly that we cannot as New Creatures do as we would; we cannot exult in tribulation, even though in our hearts we may rejoice. As the Apostle suggests, we are at times "in heaviness through manifold temptations." (I Pet. 1:6). But ours is not an outward groaning, or should not be. As our text suggests, we "groan within ourselves." it is a subdued groan, a modified one, because of the offset of our glorious hopes.

Note again that the Apostle shows that while both the world and the Church groan, they are waiting for different things. We are waiting for the deliverance of our Body (riot bodies in the plural); we are waiting for the deliverance of the Church as a whole. Some of the members have gone before, but finally the entire Body of Christ, which is the Church, will be completed. Then we shall see our Lord, and will be with Him and share His glory, a united Church, a united Body of Christ beyond the veil. For this we wait, we hope, we pray.

But the world, the groaning creation, knows not of the Divine Plan. Its groaning is of a hopeless character; but we may know what God has provided for mankind even though ,the world be blind and in ignorance of this. We know that through the Christ, during the Millennial reign, all the families of the earth will be blessed with recovery from death, and with enlightenment and restitution assistances to righteousness and eternal life, and that only the incorrigible will die the Second Death.

And so the Apostle says that the groaning creation is “waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God.” We are the sons of God. As the Apostle says, “now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be (how glorious); but we know that when He shall appear, we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is.” (I John 3:2). We see, then, that the world’s hope is in the glorified Church, whose glorious Head is the Redeemer Himself. When this Church shall be exalted in Millennial glory, the world’s time of blessing will begin. Then all the groaning creation shall be liberated and have the opportunity of coming out of the corruption of death, mental, moral and physical, and into liberty and perfection of life as the sons of God, all of which privileges have been secured for them through the merit of the precious blood.

How glad we are that in this dawning time of the New Dispensation the true light is shining from the Divine Word, as well as throughout the realm of nature! How glad we are that we no longer must think of the Church alone as the subjects of salvation, and the world as a whole the subjects of condemnation and eternal torture! How just, how reasonable, how loving, are the Divine arrangements! To see these things should draw our hearts near to the Lord in appreciative love, and we should worship with the greatest devotion One whom we thus see worthy of praise and adoration.

We are not, however, to expect the world to be able to realise these things just at present. It is not the Divine purpose that they should grasp the Plan until the selection of the Church is complete. As the Master said to the faithful disciples of old, and still says to us, “To you it is given to know the mysteries of the Kingdom of God”; but to outsiders, all these things are spoken in parables and (lark sayings, that hearing they might hear and not understand. They will both hear and understand in due time, but now is the time for the calling out of the elect, the perfecting of the saints, etc.

Let us, whose cars and eyes have been blessed of the Lord, respond with all gratitude and humility, not merely with outward praise of our lips, but also with our hearts, let us confess His loving kindness and tender mercy; and let this appreciation more and more sanctify our hearts and separate us from the world, its aims, its selfishness. Let us fight a good fight against sin, especially in our own mortal bodies; for even though the imperfections of the flesh be not counted against the New Creature, begotten of the spirit, nevertheless, the fact that we possess the spirit of the Lord should lead us more and more to desire that perfection which is most pleasing and acceptable to Him, and to strive, therefore, to the extent of our ability; not trusting to the attainment of that perfection, but relying upon the merit of that great Atonement Sacrifice, offered once for all and sufficient for the sins of the whole world.

Thy Word is Truth.

A RECENT experience of one of our brethren is expressed by the following:—"Passing along the river side one afternoon, I came to what is termed 'The Mars Hill,' though from what I heard, as well as the location, it might better be termed 'Mars Vale.' I stood a few minutes, amused at the jangle, though grieved at the sight and the words I heard. Three men, all vehement in shouting their egotistical opinions, seemed to want to speak at the same time, for there was no semblance of order, either in their utterances or meeting.

"Each spoke with great authority, and that authority was himself. Their opinions were evidently based on some empty assertions of others; calm reasoning seemed absolutely out of their reach. They uttered all sorts of blasphemous expressions about the Bible, making many absurd assertions, such as, for instance, that the Book had been concocted by priests so as to keep the people clown; that it was by this means that the world had been so long oppressed by the upper classes, etc., etc." flow absolutely opposite is the truth. It is a fact that where the Bible has gone and been made free to the people the result has been education and liberty, and slavery in every form has been attacked and is gradually being obliterated.

It was the Bible that made England what she is, the bearer of the torch of liberty, and the nation that seeks to act justly and whose word can be depended upon. England has been the land where the open Bible has had freest course. Look at those lands where the Bible has been denied to the people by the priests of Rome, who were always afraid of letting the people read and form their own conclusions, and what do we find? What of Spain, of Mexico, and of Italy, until they turned down the Pope?

If the Bible had been compiled by priests, would these priests be afraid of the people reading it? Besides, how often the Bible upbraids the priesthood for its hypocrisy and sinful doings. It is indeed sad to see poor, ignorant men discussing and condemning the most beautiful and helpful Book in the world, which they have evidently never tried to understand. If they would seek aid in the right direction, they might see how harmonious is the Bible, from Genesis to Revelation. Though written by so many writers, covering a period of fifteen centuries at least, there is a wonderful plan revealed, showing what steps of progression have been accomplished in each Age, i.e., before the flood, the Patriarchal Age, Jewish Age and Gospel Age, and how the plan will be completely successful in its purpose at the close of the next age on which the world will soon enter.

There is one theme running throughout the Book—"Without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sin." The ransom sacrifice of Christ is the centre. The first three chapters of Genesis show the fall of mankind into sin, so that "death passed upon all," and the last three chapters of Revelation show that because of the "Lamb" that was slain, the "Lamb of God," there is to be the "restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets."—Acts 3:20-22.

Among all the recent discoveries in ancient lands there has been nothing to undermine faith in the Bible, but everything to substantiate it as a divinely provided revelation of God to man.

The following paper cutting is interesting:

"In the course of a sermon recently, the Rev. Canon Crotty, D.D., said that one of the most wonderful stories of modern times had been revealed by the spade of the archaeologist, because of the remarkable way in which it had verified the narratives of Holy Scripture.

“ ‘Very many sites, referred to in the Scriptures, had been identified in recent years,’ he said. ‘Indeed, we may truly say that, in the last 15 years, more progress had ‘been made by archaeologists in Palestine ‘than in the previous 1500 years. Fully 75 per cent. of the places ‘west of the Jordan, mentioned in the Scriptures, had ‘been identified.’

“ ‘Professor Yahuda, a life-long student of Oriental languages in Berlin and Madrid Universities, declares that every archaeological discovery in Palestine and Mesopotamia, contemporary with the Bible period, bears out its historical accuracy.’

“ ‘This,’ said Dr. Crotty, ‘should help to confirm Our faith in, and increase our reverence and love for, the Holy Scriptures.’”

Fall of Walls of Jericho.

BIBLE STORY CONFIRMED.

Archaeological Discoveries.

The, story of the fall of the walls of Jericho, which many regard as a nursery tale, has been most remarkably confirmed by an archaeological expedition, financed by Sir Charles Marston in 1930 and carried out by the professor of archaeology at the Liverpool University (Professor John Garstang),” said the Rev. Dr. D. E. Hart-Davies, rector of St. Thomas’s, Edinburgh, in an address to a large audience at the Assembly Hall, Collins Street, recently.

“We may reach the conclusion without a doubt that the Bible story rests on a solid bedrock of historic fact,” proceeded Dr. Hart-Davies. The Bible represented Jericho as a city having .only one gate, and Professor Garstang had confirmed that by his investigations. The area of Jericho, which was more a fortress than a city, was less than six acres, so it was easy for an army to march round the walls seven times in a day. There were two walls, 15ft. apart, built of some dry brick. Professor Garstang had suggested that the term jerry-built might have been derived from Jericho-built.

“Garstang says definitely that the walls did fall outward, as the Bible says,” added Dr. Hart-Davies. “What was the cause of the collapse? It is always dangerous to speculate. Garstang says that the collapse was not attributed by the Bible to a physical agency, but we should not overlook the possible effect of an earthquake. A hotel collapsed with fatal consequences in Jericho in 1927. We know that Palestine is subject to earthquakes, and that Jericho particularly is in the earthquake zone. I believe that God does not hesitate to use natural means for the accomplishment of His purposes.” •

A noteworthy feature of Garstang’s investigations was that he found an abundance of pottery and foodstuffs and evidence of fire in the ruins, but he found no metals. That aspect confirmed most remarkably the Bible narrative; “And they burnt the city with fire, and all that was therein: only the silver and the gold, and the vessels of brass and of iron, they put into the treasury of the house of the Lord” (Joshua, 6, 24).—Melbourne “Argus.”

Why Should I Fear

Where'er the storms come down on thee,
And days of peace all seem to flee:
This thought thy peace again shall bring,
Why should I fear?—the Lord is King.

“E’en when the tempest rages high,
And darkest clouds are drawing nigh.
With hands of faith to this, O! cling—
Why should I fear?—the Lord is King.

“Amid the stormy waves of life,
Above the tumult and the strife,
The chimes of hope still sweetly ring—
Be not afraid—the Lord is King.

“Thy ship is tossed by wind and wave,
But there is one whose power can save;
Across the sea he hastes to bring
Both rest and peace—the Lord is King.

“Yes, Jesus walks upon the sea,
And in the storm He comes to thee;
Then trust in Him, rejoice and sing;
He calms the waves—the Lord is King,

“He stretches out His hand to thee,
And from thy fears He sets thee free;
Beneath the shadow of His wing
He keeps thee safe—the Lord is King.”

The New Creature's Good Fight.

THERE is a duality in Christians that is not to be recognised in others. The natural man has no distinct entity aside from his body. The New Creature is recognised as having a life and. entity distinct from the body; and this New Creature is temporarily being developed and nourished in the old body. The old body has its will, its desires. The New Creature has its interests, its desires. Consequently, there is a conflict between them.

In the passage of Scripture, "I keep my body under" (1 Cor. 9:27), we see the thought of mastery. The New Creature should say, "I am the master—I will not allow my body to master me," as though there were fear lest the old creature should get the New Creature down and strangle it. It is a battle to determine which will win, which will live and not be destroyed.

The first thing, then, is for the New Creature to get the body under, and thus have the mastery. The New Creature, having gained the mastery should, as a secondary step, bring the old nature into subjection and not do its bidding. The old creature is continually trying to assert itself. Very frequently it argues as to how it should be treated and how it should not be treated. Sometimes, through false sympathy, it might be treated too well.

We must remember that the life of the old creature means the death of the New Creature. We must vanquish the flesh, and we shall not be the victor until the flesh is entirely destroyed. Our victories as New Creatures will, not be gained until we, as old creatures, die. So the battle is unto the death, and there should be no particular sympathy between the two natures.

That which would enliven, encourage the flesh in any way is a foe, and must be banished from our hearts. This might lead in some cases to extremes of conduct, and we might be judged as extremists by the world. But the world is not our judge. The world has no "exceeding great and precious promises" before them. They are a different class from us altogether. We are not to take our instructions from them, nor to allow them to shape our view of the matter, but we are to use the spirit of a sound mind in all things.

Death of the Flesh Essential,

The Apostle says that we, are to be dead, with Christ, to suffer with Him. The master invites us to take up our cross and follow Him. This means the complete subjection of the flesh—the death of the flesh. if we fail to gain the victory over the flesh, we shall fail to gain the great prize. The ones who are to gain the prize of the High Calling are those who will crucify the flesh, who will put it to death. We are to be "more than conquerors."

This is what the Apostle means keep my body under and bring it into subjection; lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway. All the preaching to others will not get me into the Kingdom.

I must keep my body under and bring it into subjection, using all diligence. Whatever I would get out of it, by pampering it in any way would be to my disadvantage. I am to be on the lookout to accomplish the victory, lest I should be a castaway.

Knowledge of the New Will Conditional.

Elsewhere the Apostle has told us that the Church is a New Creation of God;_ and that to those begotten again of the holy spirit old things pass away and all things become new. (2 Corinthians 5:17). Addressing the same class, he says, “Ye have put off the old. man. with his deeds.” We have put off the old man, the natural, fallen man, with his privileges as the successor of Adam, in the same sense that we put off the old will. and have received a new mind, in Christ. instead, therefore, of belonging to the human family, we have stepped into membership in the Body of Christ out of the old into the new.

The Body of Christ is not human, but spiritual. We have made this. transfer from one family, with its hopes and interests, into the other. The old man is in a fallen and dilapidated condition in every way; and we realise that its deeds were far from satisfactory to ourselves, and especially unsatisfactory in God’s sight. We, therefore, by our wills, stepped out of this condition, under. guidance from on High. We^ have made a full consecration of all the old rights and interests, which we had in the old nature, in order that we may be in the New Man, Christ.

As we have come into membership in the New Man, Christ, of which Jesus is the Head, we have under this Head an increase of.. knowledge. “We are renewed. in knowledge after:the image of Him that created us.” The New Creature comes to a more and more clear knowledge of the new will in proportion as He seeks to put down the human will and to be directed: by the holy spirit.

It would seem, therefore’, that we put. off the old man, Adam, and the , human nature in general, in order that we may put on Christ, and, be found in Him, as members of His Body, and’ may receive with Him a share in the exceeding_ glory, and ultimately be accounted worthy of a place in the Kingdom of God. In proportion as we grow in grace, in knowledge, our appreciation of the Heavenly things increases. Thus our renewing progresses.

The new will recognised by God in the begetting of the holy spirit is the New Creature, which thus puts off the old and puts on the new. Its existence depends on this transformation. Failure means Second Death. Barely to overcome would -mean a lower place on the spirit plane—in the “Great Company.” Only the “more than conquerors” will get joint-heirship with their Lord —with exceeding glory and the divine nature.

Dear Brother,

I received your letter of some time back, and was Pleased to hear from you. I still look back on your brief visit here with pleasure; it was so good to have had you here, if only for such a brief time, along With the visits of the Sisters.

Bro, and Sis. -- and Bro. still continue their fortnightly visits to our home, and we have good studies:together.. It is all such a help along the way: the world and 'its spirit crowds upon us, but we hear the Master 'say, "Come ye yourselves apart and rest awhile." It is so good to have the dear friends here; we are now in the 5th of 1 Mess,

Was pleased to have the comments on the New Covenant in last "P.P." Literature along this line is also coming our way; perhaps the Adversary is seeking to attack on this matter similar to his attack of late years along the lines of the Harvest work—the Lord's presence and manner of His return. However, there is no Scripture that really supports the theory, but much to the contrary. Thoughts as follows have been in mind lately, so will put them briefly.

The New Covenant is definitely to be made with the House of Israel and Judah; how, then, can it have yet been sealed when Israel and Judah are cast off and 'in disfavour Until the fullness from the Gentiles be come in. 'It is claimed that the Apostles and early Church were representatives of Israel and Judah and the New Covenant was sealed with them. Could this be so when. they were in Christ transferred from the house of servants to the House of Sons? Again, the seed of Abraham is not many seeds. but one—Christ,, Head and Body. Christ, the Head, was not 'developed under the New Covenant because His sacrifice was necessary to seal it. How, then, can we take the One Seed and divide it, developing the Head under one Covenant and the Body under another Covenant?

Also, how can one Covenant produce two different results? Can we suppose a Covenant operating in one Age 'and leading in a' way of sacrifice to glory, honor and 'immortality, to lead in another Age up a highway of holiness to human perfection? It would seem like sowing wheat "One 'year and reaping -a crop of wheat, and the next year sowing similar wheat- and expecting a crop of potatoes.

I -trust,: dear Bro., the foregoing thoughts have not .wearied you, but I had them in mind and thought to write them down. I trust this finds you and Sister well. Perhaps we' shall not be so long in seeing each other again, or the way may open for us to come to. Convention.

With Christian love from us both,

Berean Biblical Institute, Dear Friends,

I am sorry to keep you waiting for a reply to your letter; I received all the books, and thought that I would like to know something of their contents before writing, hence my delay.

I have finished the “Desolation,” and can honestly say that I thoroughly enjoyed reading it. Having had some experience of the Watch Tower Society’s ways, means and methods, I can vouch for the truth of what this book has to say, and it is pleasing to find that there is someone who has the courage to expose their doctrines and untruths.

I have made a start on the Rev. Vols., and so far I like it, and am sure that as I get further along I shall still continue to enjoy the help I shall receive.

Thank you for papers forwarded to me; later on I may subscribe to you to send them regularly. You certainly will hear from me again. For the present, I will close, thanking you.

Yours, etc., PH.A.

To Secretary,

Berean Biblical Institute,

Dear Sir,

Some few weeks ago Bro. --, of --, kindly wrote you, and asked the price of Pastor Russell’s books of “Scripture Studies” for me. I am very much interested in them, thanks to Bro. , who happened to be my neighbor when I came to live here some two years ago, although I only came to know him personally a few months before he left for Queensland. He was the first man in all my life to teach and point out the Scriptures to me. Although I had been a churchman all my life I never learned anything like Pastor Russell’s teachings.

I would like the set of “Scripture Studies” (the six), also the “Book of Sermons” and “Tabernacle Shadows”—the second-hand ones will do. You can hold them for me or forward them on, which ever suits you best; I cannot pay for them till a few week’s time. Not being able to work this last few years, I find it hard to pay my way.

I am very grateful to Bro. -- for the help he has given me, and for loaning me books and tracts; he thinks no trouble of riding four miles here and back on his hike to help me.

Yours in Christ, B.J.A.

The Oath-Bound Covenant.

“In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed.”—Gen. 22:16-18.

IN various terms the Lord eight times repeated to Abraham His Covenant, and St. Paul calls our attention to the fact that these numerous repetitions and specifications of the Covenant, as well as God's oath attesting, were intended specially for us -- for Spiritual Israel—“that . . . we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay held upon the hope set before us (in the Gospel); which hope (expressed in the Covenant made with Abraham Aid confirmed with an oath) we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil.”—Hebrews 6:18, 19.

Thus the Apostle declares that this Covenant has not yet been fulfilled and that Christians, no less than the Jews and the whole world of mankind, are vitally interested in its fulfilment. We may have wondered, Why did God repeat the ‘Promise so frequently to Abraham, and then confirm it to Isaac and to Jacob, etc.? But when we see that this Promise, as a nutshell, contains the entire Plan of God for human Redemption and-Restitution, as an acorn contains an oak tree, this explains to us the Divine particularity. It explains to us also why this Promise made to Abraham is continually referred to by the Apostles in, their presentation of the hope for the Church and for the world.

The Promise primarily was to Abraham himself —“Lift up now thine eyes, . . . to the north, and to the south, and to the west, and to the east; all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and thy seed after thee.” Although God's providence led the children of Israel into that land, and although it was given to ‘them by Joshua ,to be their inheritance, this did not fulfil the conditions of the Promise. The Israelites did not have permanent possession of the land. Time and again it passed under the rule of the Philistines, the Egyptians, Assyrians, Babylonians, etc.; and for many centuries it was under the rule of the Turks.

The Jews have had (until recent years) no more right to that land than had the Canaanites, Amalekites and others whom they drove out, except through this great Oath-bound Covenant made to Abraham. How foolish, therefore, do those intellectual Jews appear who disclaim Abraham as a mythical character, and who wholly distrust God and the promises that He made to Abraham, and who, nevertheless, claim the Land of Promise! It is not their Land of Promise, and never will belong to any except those who hold to the Promise.—Romans 4:11-14.

Abraham's Three Wives Typical.

While Abraham and his wives were all real personages, their affairs were so supervised by the Almighty that they became types. Thus Abraham was a type of God, and Isaac a type of Messiah. Isaac's wife, Rebecca, typified the Church, the Elect Little Flock of this Gospel Age, for whom God has provided joint-heirship with the Redeemer in His great Kingdom, and through whom, as the Seed of Abraham, all the families of the earth will be blessed. Galatians 3:29.

As Abraham was a type of the Almighty, so his wives were- types of God's three great Covenants, through which all of His blessings will come by and by: St. Paul explains that, as Sarah was barren, -so the primary, or chief Covenant of God was barren for a long time--until Jesus came. Meantime, Hagar representatively became the wife, and attempted to bring forth the heir of promise, but failed. St. Paul declares that in this Hagar typified the Covenant made with Israel at Sinai, which failed to bring forth the real Seed of Abraham, competent to bless all the families of the earth.

As Hagar was a bond-maid, she typified the bondage of the Law Covenant; and her child, Ishmael, typified the Jewish people. They were, indeed, related to God, but as children of a Covenant of bondage. As later on the barren Sarah brought forth the son of promise, so, St. Paul explains, God's original Covenant in due time brought forth the true Heir, Jesus—Messiah.

In one figure, all the followers of Jesus are reckoned as His members, under Him as their Head, as the Apostle says, "We brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise." In another figure, Jesus is pictured as a Bridegroom, and His followers a Bride company. This picture is shown in Rebecca, who became Isaac's wife, and joint-heir with him to the riches of Abraham and the promises to his seed. In the type, Sarah died prior to the time that Isaac married, which signifies that this primary Covenant of God, made with Abraham, will reach its fulfilment in the bringing forth of the completed Messiah, Head and Body, Bridegroom and Bride. These will be the Seed of Abraham, through whom all nations will be blessed.

Abraham's All Given to Isaac.

In the type Abraham gave all that he had to Isaac, through him making provision for Ishmael and for his other children by his third wife, Keturah. In the antitype, God bestows all His fullness upon Christ, The Messiah, and through Him makes provision for the Natural Israelites and for all the families of the earth—all who are to be blessed through the antitypical Isaac—The Christ.

The inspired interpretation is that Hagar and Sarah were types of the Law Covenant and of our covenant of this Gospel Age, which gives us assurance that Abraham's third wife, who was taken after the death of Sarah, and who bore him many children, typified the New Covenant, which the Bible declares will soon be inaugurated—at the close of this Gospel Age. Under that New Covenant and at the hands of the Spiritual Seed of Abraham, The Christ, during the thousand years of the Messianic reign, all the families of the earth will be blessed. Such is the length, the breadth, the height and depth of God's Love for humanity, and His provision for their future !

Thus seen, God's promise to Abraham had only a partial beginning at Mount Moriah, and the development of the real Seed of Abraham had only its start in Jesus, and the real Seed which is to bless the world, according to His Promise, is not yet complete. Our hope is that this Spiritual Seed will soon be completed by the First Resurrection. Then, the secondary part of the Promise, which relates to the natural man—the world in general—will begin to be fulfilled; because then the Messiah class, the Spiritual Seed of Abraham, in power and great glory beyond the veil, will set up a Kingdom —begin to exercise Messianic power and authority and thus begin to bless the world.

Messiah's reign, according to the Scriptures, is to last a thousand years. Its effect will be the binding of Satan, the restraining of sin, the scattering of ignorance and superstition, and the general enlightenment of mankind. Under that enlightening influence, the "knowledge of God will fill the whole earth as the waters cover the great deep,” until none shall need to teach his neighbour, because all will know, understand and appreciate the Divine arrangement and the privileges then possible to them.

Under that reign, not only the living will be blessed and led back to health, perfection and everlasting life, but all that are in their graves will be awakened and come forth to similar knowledge, privileges and opportunities. Only thus could those families of the earth be blessed who died, before Abraham’s time and since, in utter ignorance of God and His glorious arrangements.

As the Stars and as the Sand.

Only of late have Bible students discerned that Abraham is to have two seeds, exclusive of the Ishmaelites of the Law, or Hagar Covenant. “Thy Seed shall be as the stars of heaven, and as the sands of the seashore.” The stars of heaven fitly picture to us a glorified Christ and His Church, the Spiritual Seed of Abraham, changed from human nature to Divine nature, from earthly conditions to heavenly conditions. These are the heirs of Galatians 3:29, and are referred to by St. Paul again when he says, “As star differeth from star in glory, so is the resurrection of THE dead.”—11 Corinthians 13:41, 42.

But God’s glorious Plan will only begin its accomplishment in the glorification of the Church. All the families of the earth, like the sands of the seashore, will be privileged to come into relationship with God under Messiah’s Kingdom. All who will then knowingly and wilfully reject the Divine arrangement will be cut off in the Second Death. But all who then will accept the terms of Messiah’s Kingdom and become obedient thereto will be gradually brought to perfection, and because of faith and obedience become identified with God and become the earthly, or human seed of Abraham, blessed with human perfection and everlasting life in an earthly Eden.

God’s Oath to Abraham.

It is understood (Gen 15:5-18) that the procedure of cutting animals in two parts and passing between them was an ancient form of solemn obligation or contract—an oath. Thus God adopted the strongest possible symbolism for assuring Abraham and all his posterity that His Covenant to bless Abraham and his Seed will never be broken. Incidentally, a prophecy was made, showing that it would be four hundred years before Abraham’s posterity would have even a semblance of Divine favour, and that meantime they would be under the yoke of bondage to Egypt, and then would be brought forth.

St. Stephen, evidently voicing the sentiment of all the Apostles, noted the fact that God’s promise to Abraham had not been fulfilled up to that time, even though the Israelites had possessed Canaan off and on for centuries.

The promise reads that the land shall come to Abraham and to his seed after him. St. Stephen noted the fact that Abraham never owned enough of Canaan to set his foot upon. His reasoning is that after Messiah and His Bride shall be glorified as the Kingdom, then Abraham will come forth from the dead to inherit the land and bestow it upon his posterity. But the antitype, we have seen, will be larger; for the whole earth shall be the Paradise of God and the Land of Canaan, to all who shall return to harmony with God, and through faith and obedience be accepted as the Seed of Abraham.

God and Reason.

THE Dawn Publishers, of Brooklyn, U.S.A., have recently produced a book entitled “God and Reason,” and which we believe will be found very useful in bringing Biblical truths before the minds of enquiring people in an interesting manner. The first chapter of this book is reproduced in the following lines for the purpose of making known a little of its contents to the friends generally.

Chapter x.—The Way Out.

“This is a day of amazing paradoxes. Scientists say that we have wondrously scaled the ladder of learning since the days of the ‘dawn man.’ Evolutionists insist that we have made steady progressive strides since the first ‘crude’ beginning of civilization on this planet. Men of to-day boastfully point to the marvelous achievements of this modern ‘brain age.’ Yet our highly ‘civilized’ world is to-day faced with the undeniable fact that its boasted civilization now stands at the very brink of utter destruction. With all our learning, we are not able to maintain the standards of civilization to which we pretend to have arrived through centuries of evolutionary progress.

“No longer is it possible to prevent a knowledge of these startling facts from edging in upon the public mind.

Serious statesmen are frankly pointing out the necessity of something drastic being done if civilization is to be saved; politicians everywhere are admitting it, and prominent religious leaders of all schools of ecclesiasticism are earnestly announcing that unless the people now quickly return to God, the whole world will be plunged into the greatest and most deadly cataclysm of all human history. But how this hoped for return to God is to be accomplished has not yet been made clear, either by political potentates or prelates.

A Candid Investigation

“This far-flung appeal to the people by which they are urged to depart from sin and selfishness, as a last resort to save society, is possibly prompted in many cases by about the same motive that causes almost any drowning man to offer a frantic prayer. But regardless of motive, the suggestion of returning to God, nevertheless, is worthy of consideration. Indeed, with the Present and future welfare of the world’s two billion population now at stake, anything that purports to be a way out of the present world-wide debacle of human selfishness and foolishness is worth investigating. The purpose of this book, therefore, is to enquire candidly and dispassionately into various religious claims and proposals of Christendom, comparing them also with the Bible, in order that we may ascertain, if possible, to what extent men may be justified in looking in this direction for a solution to present world problems.

“When the outstanding religionists of the day declare that the world is doomed unless it returns to God, what do they mean? In a Christmas message delivered last year by the head of the Roman Catholic Church, the Pope admitted to a group of Catholic prelates that about the only advice he had to offer was to ‘pray, pray, pray.’ This was very good advice, certainly; but for what good Catholics to pray? Both Catholics and Protestants have been praying and striving for centuries to bring the world to God. Just what does the Pope want his people to do now, different from what they have been doing right along? He doesn’t say!

“Yes, the Protestants as well as the Catholics are telling the world that it must return to God. In a sermon broadcast over the National Broadcasting Company’s network of radio stations on January 7th of this year, Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, in calling upon the people to decide whom they shall serve, said, 'I press for the decision because the wisdom of the Highest has been made known to Christian believers in Christ' . . . 'not only those who confess the ancient Faith of the Christian Church, but also those who belong to the still more ancient Faith of Israel, are now feeling that the people at large must return and walk in the light of the Lord.'

"Now just what does the good doctor mean by this? The Protestants, of course, are divided into two great groups -- Fundamentalists and Modernists. Are these two groups returning to God by the same route, or is each going its own way; and if so, will both reach exactly the same objective eventually? Then is one way just as good as another?

"And if it isn't out of place to ask a few more questions, laymen would like to know just what a Modernist could mean by getting back to God. If man has gradually evolved from protoplasm, on up from one species to another until he has reached the present 'brain age' stage in his development, just how is he to return to anything? Honest confession is supposed to be good for the soul, and we are frank to confess that it appears rather difficult to understand just how returning to God, or to any former 'condition, could 'possibly hell) a creature of evolution.

"Everybody knows that Catholics and Protestants have been opposed to each other for centuries, yet from each of these groups of sincere religionists now comes the admonition to pray. But for what? If the _Papal viewpoint is entirely right, as every, good Catholic honestly believes then of necessity all earnest adherents of that faith must be praying for the defeat of Protestantism. On the other hand, the word 'Protestant' implies -that those composing. the. group which bears that name are protesting:, against what they consider to be wrong in Catholicism. Therefore, is the Protestants' prayer and effort supposed to be one of protest against Catholics? If both of these groups pray and work consistently, according to the tenets of their creedal dogmas, will the Lord answer both, or either, of them? Or, if both groups are willing to pray and labor unselfishly for the blessing of all others,- what then will be accomplished in the way of -saving the world from the threatened 'doom' which seems so rapidly approaching? This is - an important question!

To .Whom Shall We Go?

"And there is another vital matter. Two 'decades or more ago there was a lot of agitation about 'converting the heathen'; but to-day, while probably all in Christendom still would. like to see the heathen converted—and some effort still is being made to that end—it would seem rather that the heathen are now, making, considerable progress in converting us.-. Various forms of Hindu worship are springing up all over Christendom—some quite openly, others under the. mantle of mysticism, or other guise. Some of these Hindu philosophers and worshippers also claim that it is necessary to get back to God. But their deity evidently is different from either the Catholic or the Protestant God. To whom, then, shall we go?

"When Jesus was on earth He suggested to His disciples something very definite for which they should pray. He said.: 'Pray ye, Thy Kingdom come, and Thy will, be done on earth, as it is done in heaven.' All down through the centuries earnest Christians have been repeating that prayer and patiently awaiting its answer:

"Is it ever to be answered? This Messianic prayer is very definite—more specific by far than a general instruction to 'pray, pray, pray'—but will. such a universal Kingdom ever really come to this old earth ? Will the Lord, in answer to this prayer, ever establish a new social order on this planet that will, be. based upon absolute justice and love?

"None of these questions is being asked with any desire to make light of the various religious beliefs and efforts put forth in this sickened world

to-day. No one should ridicule the conscientious religious beliefs of another, especially concerning the very praiseworthy and important matter of getting back to God. These questions are being asked from the standpoint of the average layman in a sincere effort to arrive at their solution, and in the hope of coming to understand what should be expected in the way of ending earth's difficulties if all should make an earnest effort, through prayer and otherwise, to get back to God. With the world facing ruin, unless something, is done, and done quickly, almost everybody wily want to fall into line with the right thing if they can be made to see just what is required. Doubtless, everybody would be glad to pray if that is the real solution; but in this day of enlightenment, most people will insist on having something definite suggested for which to pray; and if they are to return to God most folks will want to know how it can be done and what it involves.

How can the world return to God?

“Agreeing that it does look doubtful if mere human diplomacy will be able to prevent the cataclysm which every statesman sees coming, the necessity for hunting for some other solution naturally becomes obvious and imperative.

If prayer is the true solution, we want to know and do it. But both Catholics and Protestants should remember the Apostle James' words: 'Ye ask and receive not, because ye ask amiss.' Hence it seems that we are quite within our right in seeking an explanation of this important matter from a religious viewpoint, in order that meaningful prayers to God and intelligent co-operation with Him may be possible.

“Do these apparent religious difficulties mean that we should give up our quest in this direction for a satisfactory solution of the world's problems? And should we conclude that the great Intelligence who brought into existence the countless billions of heavenly bodies, and who causes them to move about ceaselessly in their orbits with such absolute accuracy, has signally failed in His attempt to produce a race of sentient creatures here on this small planet that can continue to exist under conditions of uninterrupted peace and happiness?

“If there is a God who really has the power and disposition to lastingly bless those who come to I-Tim, or those who return to Him after having strayed away, just what should be expected if such a return on a world-wide scale should be effected? What changes would be wrought thereby in economics, and in other national and international matters?

“Does it mean believing blindly in a conflicting and superstitious system of theology?

“Does it mean that everyone must join a church; and, if so, which church?

“What kind of laws will the world be required to obey if, and when, it does return to God?

“These are but a few of the many important questions that must be considered if we are to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion in the discussion of this very vital subject that now confronts a distraught and imperiled human family.”

Progress in Palestine.

LORD Melchett's description of Palestine at a recent gathering of London Jewry as "the potential Singapore of the Near East, projected not by English battalions, but by 3,000,000 grateful Jews," sounds like a fairy tale, yet the facts are in favour of its coming true. An even safer prediction, perhaps would have been that the new port of Haifa is destined to become the Singapore of the Mediterranean. Built by British firms at a cost of £1,500,000, obtained from Palestine Budget surpluses, Haifa was opened at the end of 1933. It is already the entrepot for the inland trade of Palestine, which is growing amazingly every year, and it promises to serve countries farther to the east. The Palestine Jews aim at making their country the supply depot for the whole of the countries between the Mediterranean and the Persian Gulf. Haifa is the terminus- of the Palestine and Hejaz railways, and, it is the outlet for the oil pipe line from Persia and Irak. An aerodrome is being built to serve as an intermediary stop between London and Calcutta on the Imperial air route from Australia to England. In 10 years the population of Haifa has quadrupled. It now stands at 100,000. It is still growing. Even more startling has been the growth of Tel Aviv. In 1911 a few scattered settlements among, the sand dunes north of Jaffa contained only. 500 people. To-day there is a thriving modern city, Tel Aviv,. with 120,000 inhabitants.

Unlike most other countries, Palestine has encouraged: immigration, with the result that in the last four years nearly 200,000 Jews and many thousands of Arabs have entered it. One of the grievances of the Zionist leaders 'is that Great Britain, which administers the mandate over Palestine, restricts immigration, the quotas being fixed on the principle of "the economic absorptive capacity of the country." There are the interests of the Arabs, to be considered, though in recent years there has not been the fear felt at first by the Arabs that they were in danger of being swamped by the new-comers. The great new Jewish undertakings that have sprung up everywhere have given employment to the Arabs, and new agricultural methods -have been brought under their notice. Indeed, there is said to be no unemployment at all in Palestine.—Melb. "Argus."

Jews in Travail.

Greater Effort. in Palestine,- German “Jew-Baiting.” London, 23rd August.

The Lucerne correspondent of the “Times” states that the Jewish Congress agreed on the necessity for intensified efforts in Palestine in view of the catastrophic position. of Jewry; and criticised the restrictions on Jewish immigration.

Delegates contended that Great Britain’s sympathy with persecuted Jews justified the hope that the gate to Palestine would be opened at least a little wider.

Congress is considering the floating of a Jewish national loan for 15,000,000 to extend settlement in Palestine and supplement the Government’s public works schemes. Part may be raised in London, but it is hoped the funds will be obtained in Palestine.

The conference has shown remarkable restraint in its criticism. of the Nazis. The general feeling is that the only. effective way to deal with “Jew-baiting” is to settle .as many German Jews as possible in Palestine.

Refugees in Terrible Plight.

The Warsaw correspondent of the “Manchester Guardian” states that numbers of Jewish refugees have arrived at Danzig, victims of the unprecedented Nazi campaign to turn Jews out of East Prussia. Bakers have been warned not to sell bread to Jews, and flour mills and vegetable, fruit and grocery shops have also been forbidden to serve them. Two bakers who protested against the inhuman injunction were arrested.

The Jews were obliged to go to surrounding villages to save themselves from starvation. They were able to obtain food only at night, as the peasants feared to trade in the day time.—Melbourne “Age.”

The Song of our Syrian Guest.

AN interesting little booklet, bearing the above , title, and written by W. A. Knight, was brought along by one of our visiting brethren recently. In this article it is reprinted in full, for the benefit of our readers.

““FADUEL MOGHABGHAB,” said our guest, laughing, as he leaned over the tea-table towards two little maids, vainly trying to beguile their willing and sweetly-pursed lips into pronouncing his name. “Faduel Moghabghab,” he repeated in syllables, pointing to the card he had passed to them. “Accent the u and drop the g’s, which your little throats cannot manage,” he went on kindly, while the merriment sparkled in his lustrous’ dark eyes, and his milk-white teeth, seen through his black Moustache as he laughed, added beauty to his delicate and vivacious face.

He was a man of winsome mind, this Syrian ‘guest of ours, and the spirituality of his culture was as marked as the refinement of his manners. We shall long remember him for the tales told that evening of his home in Ainzehalta, on the slope of ‘the Syrian Mountains, but longest of all for what he said out of the memories of his youth about a shepherd song.

““It was out of the shepherd life of my country,” ‘he . remarked, “that there came long ago that sweetest religious song ever written—the ‘Twenty Third Psalm.’ “

After the ripple of his merriment with the child-ten had passed, he turned to me with a face now serious and pensive, and said:—

“Ah, so many things familiar to us are strange to you.”

“Yes,” I answered, “and no doubt because of this we often make mistakes which are more serious than mispronunciation of your modern names.”

He smiled pleasantly, then with earnestness said:

“So many things in the life of my people, the same now as in the days of old, have been woven into the words of the Bible, and into the conceptions of religious ideas as expressed there. You, of the western world, knowing these things as they are, often misunderstand what is written, or at least fail to get a correct impression from it.”

“Tell us about some of these,” I ventured, with a parental glance at two listening faces.

After mentioning several instances, he went on:

“And there is the shepherd psalm; I find that it is taken among you as having two parts, the first under the figure of shepherd life, the second turning to the figure of a banquet, with the host and the guest.”

“Oh, we have talked about that,” said my lady of the tea-cups, “and we have even said that we wished the wonderful little psalm could have been finished in the one figure of shepherd life.”

“It seems to us,” I added, wishing to give suitable support to my lady’s declaration of our sense of a literary flaw in the matchless psalm, “It seems to us to lose the sweet, simple melody, and to close with strange, heavy chords when it changes to a scene of banquet hospitality. Do you mean that it actually keeps the shepherd figure to the end ?” “Certainly, good friends.”

With keen personal interest, I asked him to tell us how we might see it as a shepherd psalm throughout. So we listened and he talked, over the cooling tea-cups.

“It is all, all a simple shepherd psalm,” he began. “See how it runs through the round of shepherd life from first word to last.”

With softly modulated voice, that had the rhythm of music and the hush of veneration in it, he quoted: “‘The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want.’ There is the opening strain of music: in that chord is sounded the keynote which is never lost till the plaintive melody dies away at the song’s end. All that follows is that thought put in varying light.”

I wish it were possible to reproduce here the light in his face and the interchange of tones in his mellow voice as he went on.

Finding Still Waters.

“ ‘He maketh me to lie down in green pastures’; nourishment, rest.

“ ‘He leadeth me beside the still waters’; refreshment. You think here of quietly flowing streams, and get only another picture of rest. But streams are few in that shepherd country, and the shepherds do not rely on them. To the shepherd ‘the still waters’ are wells and cisterns, and he leads his sheep to these still waters, not for rest, but to bring up water to quench their thirst.”

Then he talked of how the varied needs of the sheep and the many-sided care of the shepherd are pictured with consummate skill in the short sentences of the psalm.

“Each is distinct, and adds something- too precious to be merged and lost,” he said.

“ ‘He restoreth my soul’; you know,” he said, turning to me, “that ‘soul’ means the life of one’s self in the Hebrew writings.”

Then, addressing all, he went on:

“There are private fields and gardens and vineyards in the shepherd country, and if a sheep stray into them and is caught there, it is forfeited to the owner of the land. So, ‘He restoreth my soul,’ means ‘the shepherd brings me back, and rescues my life from forbidden and fatal places.’ “

“ ‘Restores me when wandering,’ is ‘the way it is put in one of our hymns,’ I interposed.

“Ah, sir, that is it exactly,” he answered, “ ‘Restores me when wandering;’ ”

“ ‘He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness, for His name’s sake’; often have I roamed through the shepherd country in my youth, and watched how hard it is to choose the right path for the sheep; one leads to a precipice, another to a place where the sheep cannot find the way back, and the shepherd was always going ahead, ‘leading’ them in the right paths, proud of his good name as a shepherd.”

With quiet animation he lifted his thin hand and continued:

“Now, here is where you drop the shepherd figure and put in a banquet, and so lose the Climax of Completeness in the shepherd’s care.”

It need not be said that we were eager listeners now, for our guest was all aglow with memories of his far-off home, and we felt that we were about to see new rays of light flash from this rarest gem in the song treasury of the world.

“‘Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies.’”

In the same hushed voice in which he quoted these words, he added:

“Ah, to think that the shepherd’s highest skill and heroism should be lost from view as the psalm begins to sing of it, and only an indoor banquet thought of !”

Again he sat in silence.

Then he said:

“There is no higher task of the shepherd in my country than to go from time to time to study places and examine the grass, and find a good and safe feeding-place for his sheep. All his skill, and often great heroism, are called for. There are many poisonous plants in the grass, and the shepherd must find, and avoid them. A cousin of mine once lost three hundred sheep by a mistake in this hard task.”

“Then there are viper’s holes, and the reptiles bite the noses of the sheep if they be not driven away. The shepherd must burn the fat of hogs at the holes to do this. And round the feeding ground which the shepherd thus prepares, in holes and caves in the hill-sides, there are jackals, wolves, hyenas, and tigers, too, and the bravery and skill of the shepherd are at the highest point in closing up these dens with stones, or slaying the wild beasts with his long-bladed knife. Of nothing do you hear shepherds boasting more proudly than of their achievements in this part of their care of flocks.”

“And now !” he exclaimed, with a beaming countenance and suppressed feeling, as if pleading for recognition of the lone shepherd’s bravest action of devotion to his sheep, “and now, do you see the shepherd figure in that quaint line, ‘Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies’ ?”

“Yes,” I answered, “and I see that God’s care of a man out in the world is a grander thought than that of seating him at an indoor banquet table.”

“But what about anointing the head with oil, and the cup running over? Go on, my friend.” “Oh, there begins the beautiful picture at the end of the day.”

“The Psalm has sung of the whole round of the day’s wanderings, all the needs of the sheep, all the care of the shepherd. Now the Psalm closes with the last scene of the day. At the door of the sheepfold the shepherd stands, and the rodding of the sheep takes place. The shepherd stands, turning his body to let the sheep pass; he is the door, as Christ said of Himself. With his rod he holds back the sheep while he inspects them one by one as they pass into the fold. He has the horn filled with olive oil, and he has cedar-tar, and he anoints a knee bruised on the rocks, or a side scratched by thorns. And here comes one that is not bruised, but is simply worn and exhausted; he bathes its face and head with the refreshing olive oil, and he takes the large two-handled cup and dips it brimming full from the vessels of water provided for that purpose, and he lets the weary sheep drink. There is nothing finer in the Psalm than this. God’s care is not for the wounded only, but for the worn and weary also. ‘He anointeth my head with oil, my cup runneth over.’”

“And then, when the day is gone, and the sheep are snug within the fold, what contentment, what rest under the starry sky! Then comes the thought of deepest repose and comfort: ‘Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life,’ as they have through all the wanderings of the day now ended.”

“The song dies away as the heart that God has watched and tended breathes this grateful vow before the roaming of the day is forgotten in sleep. I will—not shall, but will; for it is a decision, a settled purpose, a holy vow—I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever.’ And the song ends, and the sheep are at rest, safe in the Good Shepherd’s fold.”

Do you wonder that ever since that night we have called this Psalm “The Song of Our Syrian Guest?”

‘The True Church.’

ONE Sabbath morn I roamed astray
And asked a Pilgrim for the way:
“O, tell me, whither shall I search
That I may find the one true. Church?”

He answered, “Search the world around,
The one true Church is never found.
Yon ivy on the abbey wall
Makes fair the falsest Church of all.”

But, fearing he had told me wrong,
I cried, “Behold the entering throng!”
He answered, “If a Church be true,
It hath not many, but a few!”

Around a font the people pressed,
And crossed themselves on brow and breast,
“A cross so light to bear,” he cried
“Is not of Christ, the Crucified!

Each forehead, frowning, sheds it off:
Christ’s cross abides through scowl and scoff!”
We entered at the open door
And saw men kneeling on the floor;

Faint candles, by the daylight dimmed,
As if by foolish virgins trimmed;
Fair statues of the saints, as white
As now their robes are, in God’s sight;

Stained windows, casting down a beam,
Like Jacob’s ladder in a dream.
The Pilgrim gazed from nave to roof,
And frowning, uttered this reproof:

“Alas! who is it understands
God’s temple is not made with hands?”
We walked in ferns so wet with dew
They splashed our garments trailing through,

And came upon a Church whose dome
Upheld a cross, but not for Rome.
We brushed a cobweb from a pane
And watched the service in the fane.

“Do prayers,” he asked, “the more avail,
If offered at an altar rail?
Does water sprinkled from a bowl
Wash any sin from any soul?

Do tongues that taste the bread and Speak truer after such a sign?”
Just then, upon a maple spray,
Two orioles perched, and piped a lay,

Until the gold beneath their throats
Shook molten in their mellow notes.
Resounding from the Church, a psalm:
Rolled, quivering, through the outer calm.

“Both choirs,” said I, are in accord,
For both give praises to the Lord.”
“The birds,” he answered, “chant a song • -
Without a note of sin or wrong:

The Church’s anthem is a strain
Of human guilt and mortal pain.”
The orioles and the organ ceased,
And in the pulpit rose the priest.

The Pilgrim whispered in my ear,
“It profits ‘not to tarry here.’”
“He speaks no error,” answered I,
“He teaches that the living die;

The dead arise; and both are true ;
“Both wholesome doctrines, neither new .
The Pilgrim said, “He strikes a blow
At wrongs that perished long ago; -

But covers with a shielding phrase
The living sins of present days.”
We turned away among the tombs—
A tangled place of briars and blooms.

I spelled the legends on the stones,
Beneath reposed the martyrs’ bones, .
The bodies which the rack once brake
In witness for the dear Lord’s sake,

The ashes gathered from the pyres
Of saints whose zeal our soul inspires.
The Pilgrim murmured as we passed,
“So gained they all the crown at last.

Men lose it now through looking back,
To find it at the stake or rack;
The rack and stake are old with grime;
God’s touchstone is the living time!”

III.

We passed where poplars, gaunt and tall,
Let twice their length of shadow fall.

Then rose a meeting-house in view,
Of bleached and weather-beaten hue.

Men, plain of garb and pure of heart.
Divided church and world apart.

Nor did they vex the silent air
With any sound of hymn or prayer.

God's finger to their lips they pressed,
Till each man kissed it and was blessed.

I asked, "Is this the true Church, then?"
He answered, "Nay, a sect of men:

And sects that shut their doors in pride
Shut God and half His saints outside.

The gates of Heaven, the Scriptures say,
Stand open wide, by night and clay.

So, then, to enter, is there need
To carry key of church or creed?"

IV.

Still following where the highway led,
Till elms made arches overhead,
We saw a spire and weathercock,
And snow-white church upon a rock—.

A rock, where centuries before,
Came sea-tossed pilgrims to the shore.
My sandals straightway I unbound,
Because the place was holy ground.

I cried, "One church at last I find,
That fetters not the human mind."
"This church," said he, "is like the rest;
For all are good, but none is best."

V.

Then far from every church we strayed—
Save Nature's pillared aisles of shade.
The squirrels ran to see us pass,
And God's sweet breath was on the grass.

I challenged all the creeds, and sought
What truth, or lie, or both, they taught.
I asked, "Had Augustine a fault?"
The Pilgrim gazed at heaven's high vault,

And answered "Can a mortal eye
Contain the sphere of all the sky?"
I said, "The circle is too wide."
"God's truth is wider!" he replied.

"Though Augustine was on his knee,
He saw how little he could see;
Though Luther sought with burning heart,
He caught the glory but in part;

Though Calvin opened wide his soul,
He comprehended not the whole.
Not Luther, Calvin, Augustine,
Saw visions such as I have seen."

While yet he spake, a rapture stole
Through all my still inquiring soul.
I looked upon His holy brow,
Entreating, "Tell me, who art Thou?"

But, such a splendour filled the place,
I knew it was the Lord's own face!
I was a sinner and afraid!
I knelt in dust and thus I prayed:

"O Christ, the Lord! end Thou my search,
And lead me to the one true Church."
He spake as never roan may speak—
"The one true Church thou shalt not seek,

Seek thou, for ever more, instead,
To find the one true Christ, its Head!"
The Lord then vanished from my sight,
And left me standing in the tight.

The Ransom and Sin Offering.

THAT all men are sinners from the Divine viewpoint no one who accepts the word of God would question. The Bible uniformly declares so, and attributes the present reign of evil with all its accompaniments of sickness, pain and death, to the entrance of sin into the world; as the Apostle declares, "by the disobedience of one man sin entered into the world and death by sin," and so death "passed upon all men." (Rom. 5:12). It tells additionally of a time when there was no imperfection, no sin, and no death; of a time when the human family, as represented in the first pair, were in fullest harmony with their God and Creator; but when sin entered, all fellowship with God ceased, the death sentence was pronounced, and man became an easy prey to the great adversary—Satan (Gen. 3:19-24). As a consequence, the history of the race during the past six thousand years might be briefly summed up in the words of the Apostle Paul when he declares "the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now." (Rom. 8:22).

Hope for All.

While this is true of the race generally, at the same time, God assures us in His word that the case of the human family is not a hopeless one. The present disabilities of the race are not of their own desire but form part of the curse imposed by a wise Creator, who meanwhile has not left them without some hope for the future. (Rom. 8:20). What that hope is, He further informs us, viz., that the "creation itself (human family) also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." (Rom. 8:21). Now, it is concerning this hope and the method which God has adopted to bring about their deliverance, in which we are specially interested in this connection. •

The Divine Law Unchangeable.

While from a purely physical standpoint nothing is impossible with God, yet from the moral point of view there are certain things which God could not and would not do. The Apostle tells us that "He cannot deny Himself." (2 Tim. 2:13). "He cannot lie." (Num. 23:19). To do so, would be to act contrary to His own law.

God is loving and wise, and therefore could not act in an unloving or unwise manner towards any of His creatures. He is also just, and therefore could not override or set aside His own law. To do so would be a violation of Justice, the underlying principle of the Divine Government (Psa. 69:14). How, then, could there be any hope for the human family under such circumstances. The trial in Eden was fair and impartial, and the penalty a just one, and since God changes not and cannot set aside His own law, how, then, can there be any hope whatever?

Divine Wisdom to the Rescue.

The scriptures inform us that God's wisdom, prompted by love, has devised a scheme whereby He can be merciful to the sinful race and yet not violate any principle of His own government. We are further informed that in carrying out this plan, He will be "just and yet the Justifier of all who believe in Jesus." (Rom. 3:26). The Plan adopted provides for a Redeemer—one who could correspond in value to, and provide a Ransom for the sinner — and thus meet the requirements of the Divine Law. This Plan for man's recovery, though the essence of wisdom from the Divine standpoint, is regarded from the viewpoint of the worldly wise as altogether foolishness (1 Cor. 1:18). This hope of a deliverer who would thus ransom the condemned race, is not only an established doctrine of the New Testament, but is also clearly taught in the Law and by the Prophets of the Old Testament, (Hosea 13, 14; Exodus 30:12). The result of the operation of this Plan towards the human family is scripturally termed atonement (at-one-ment) (Rom 5: It). The term "atonement" literally means a covering, and suggests the thought of covering or hiding, in the sense of removing an offence which separates two parties. So far as God and the human family are concerned, atonement, from the legal standpoint, will be completed when the Adamic offence, which brought the death penalty upon all mankind, has been removed (Rom. 5:17-19). Atonement, however, as outlined in the Divine Plan, implies more than merely the providing of a Ransom; it implies the additional thought of a work done or accomplished by means of that Ransom price. In other words, to effect an atonement it is not only necessary to provide a Ransom price, but it is additionally necessary to offer and pay that price as a means of propitiation. These two aspects of atonement are generally termed the "Ransom" and the "sin-offering." The "Ransom" is the price or valuable thing itself, while the sin-offering represents the work accomplished by means of that price. The outcome of both is an atonement (Exodus 30:11-15). Failure to note this clear distinction between these terms often leads to their misapplication, and consequently, to a misunderstanding of the whole subject.

Jesus the Ransom.

In the case of the human family, a perfect man sinned and committed the offence which brought the death penalty. Consequently, Justice would not be appeased by anything less than the life of another perfect man, which would atone for that offence. God's law demands an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, and a life for a life, therefore, no member of the imperfect or fallen race could be a "Ransom," or corresponding price, to offset the offence of the perfect man who sinned (Psa. 49:7). An angel, though perfect and sinless, could not be a "Ransom" for the race because angels are of a higher plane of life and therefore would not correspond to a perfect man. John the Revelator calls our attention to the fact that no one, either in heaven or earth, or under the earth was worthy to be the "Ransom" and thus open the Book of the Divine Plan (Rev. 5:3). When there was thus no eye to pity and no arm to save, God Himself provided the "Ransom" in the person of His own Son (Rev. 5:6). In this we have one of the grandest exhibitions of God's love. There was no obligation on God's part, from the standpoint of Justice, to provide a "Ransom," or even to accept one, had the human family been able to provide it. It was because God so loved the world that He gave His only Begotten Son (John 3:16). Jesus was not the "Ransom" in His pre-human state. As already indicated, the Law of God required that the Ransomer should be one on the same plane of life and thus be a price to correspond to the one who sinned (Heb. 2:14). Nor was He the "Ransom" as the Babe of Bethlehem. It was only when He had come to manhood's estate, having kept the law and demonstrated His right to eternal life, that He was in a position to offer Himself as the Divinely-provided Lamb (John 1:29).

Jesus, the Sin-Offering.

Though Jesus, as a perfect man, was the “Ransom” or equivalent value to satisfy the broken law, yet had he retained his human life, none of the race would have been benefited. It is one thing to possess a “Ransom,” or price sufficient to purchase any object in view, but quite another matter to secure that object by relinquishing the price to the owner, thus making payment for same. The sin-offering pictures the latter thought. Our Lord offered His human life rights (blood) to Justice in order to purchase the life rights that were lost. The ransom is the valuable thing—the price; the sin-offering shows what is done with that value or price. In the tabernacle picture, the Most Holy was the place where the blood of the sin-offering had to be taken in order to make satisfaction for sin, so too in the anti-type, in order to make satisfaction to divine Justice as the anti-typical sin-offering our Lord had to ascend into heaven itself (anti-typical Most Holy), and there relinquish for ever all claims to His human life rights, typified by the blood of the bullock (Lev. 16:14). The sacrifice and sufferings of our Lord, which began at Jordan and culminated on the cross, were all essential and incidental to the payment of the “Ransom” price. This was accomplished when our Lord appeared in the presence of the Father. That He might be fitted to accomplish this work for the race, our Lord had to receive a spiritual nature, first the begetting of the spirit at Jordan and later the full spiritual life at His resurrection (I Peter 3:18). From the foregoing, it will be seen that the price was not paid, nor was satisfaction made for anyone when the Lord died upon the cross. His death was a necessary step towards that end, and corresponds, in type, to the High Priest passing under the second veil. Nor was Justice met for anyone when our Lord on the third day was raised from the dead. This was also a necessary step, and corresponded to the Priest rising from under the second veil. It was only when He ascended upon high, which was represented by the Priest approaching the Mercy seat, that our Lord’s sacrifice was presented to, and accepted by Justice, on behalf of Himself (His members—the consecrated). (Lev. 16:6, Heb. 9:24).

Sharing His Afflictions.

Just as the afflictions of our Lord and Head, incidental to His becoming the sin-offering, are pictured by what was done with the bullock on the typical Day of Atonement, so also the share which the members of the Body have in His affliction and sin-offering, is portrayed by the experiences of the Lord’s Goat. It will be noted, too, that as in the type, the bullock was offered for the Priest and His house, and the Goat for the People; so now, our Lord, as the anti-typical bullock, has so far only made an offering of His blood (human life) for the consecrated—His prospective members (Himself). Later, during this anti-typical day of atonement, He will, through His members (goat class), offer for the people, the world in general. (Lev. 16:15). Failing to keep in mind the clear distinction between the “Ransom” and the “Sin-offering,” some have concluded that there is no practical difference; and that to teach that the followers of Christ share in the Sin-offering would be tantamount to claiming for them a share in the Ransom. There is no reasonable ground, however, for such a conclusion. The Ransom represents the value provided in our Lord, to make atonement possible for the race. Whilst all Bible students will agree to this, yet only the few can appreciate the fact that there is a feature of the Plan (mystery) hidden in types and parables, etc., relating to a class who not only share with our Lord in His glory but also in His sacrificial sufferings and death. (Rom. 6:3).

Our Lord alone possessed that inherent value (Ransom price) necessary to start the work of atonement, and which constitutes the basis of atonement for all mankind; but if, in His matchless wisdom, our Heavenly Father has so arranged the Plan that a class who had already received the atonement, should be associated with our Lord and privileged as His members to carry forward that atonement already begun, why should that be considered as in any degree either adding to, or detracting from the Ransom value of our Lord? The Lord’s merit, of itself, was sufficient to atone directly for all, had it been so arranged in the Divine Plan, and it is purely a matter of grace and mercy on the part of our Heavenly Father to permit the members of Christ to share with their Head in the world’s atonement. The same lesson is taught in the typical day of atonement. The bullock alone had the value necessary 'to start the work of atonement for Israel, but having thus opened the way for atonement, the Lord's goat--an animal of much less value—was permitted to join in the national sin-offering of Israel (Lev. 16:15).

The Church Shares in the Sin-Offering.

That the Church shares in a sacrificial sense in the sufferings of her Lord, all who accept the Scripture will agree. (Rom. 12:1). What some, however, do not so readily appreciate, is the fact that this sacrifice in its collective sense, as representing the body of the world's High Priest, forms a part of this anti-typical day of atonement sin-offerings. (Isa. 53: to).

The Apostle in Rom. 6:10-at tells us that our Lord died, not because he was sinful in any degree, but unto or on account of sin. In other words, he was a sin-offering. Then, addressing the Lord's followers, he says, "Likewise, reckon ye also yourselves (as His members) to be dead indeed unto Sin." The death referred to in this and the previous verses of the chapter is not the Adamic or penal death but the sacrificial death—"buried with Him by Baptism into Death." (Rom. 6:4). All who are dead with the Lord in this sense, the Apostle tells us (verse 7), were previously justified from sin, consequently, there is no other sense in which they could be said to die unto sin, other than that in which the Lord Himself died— a sin-offering. (2 Cor. 5:21). A similar thought is given us in 1 Cor. 15:29, "Baptised for the Dead." The dead world of mankind is evidently referred to in this verse, and there seems no other way in which the Lord's followers could be baptised for them, except as above suggested, i.e., by being baptised into the Lord's death and sharing with Him, as a part of the sin-offering, to purchase them from under the death penalty. The same Apostle, in speaking of the Memorial Cup (wine) (1 Cor. 10:16), tells us that it symbolises the communion (common union) of the blood of Christ. Likewise, the loaf in symbol represents the communion of the Body of Christ. This deeper and secondary meaning does not, of course, preclude the primary thought expressed elsewhere, viz., that the eating of the bread and drinking of the cup represent the believer appropriating to himself the life and blessing now available through our Lord's sacrifice and death. (Matt. 26:26-28). It will be the privilege of those, who in this age, follow in the Master's steps to share with Him in every aspect of His Kingdom, Glory and Office, and it is also their blessed privilege here, not only to share in His sufferings in a general sense, but to have fellowship with Him in every work and office in which He participated this side of the veil. The "Ransom," which is neither a work nor an office, but an inherent value, was found only in our Lord Himself. (Rom. 5:6).

This He did Once. (Heb. 7:27).

It has been suggested that this text is in direct opposition to the thought, that the Lord's followers share with Him in the atonement work. When rightly understood, however, we do not think that this verse reveals any lack of harmony on this point, but rather emphasises what has already been stated. The Book of Hebrews, generally, is a book of contrasts between type and anti-type. This verse contrasts what was done by the High Priest on the typical day of atonement, with that which the greater High Priest (Christ) does in the anti-type. Paraphrasing the Apostle's words, it would read somewhat as follows:—Israel's typical High Priest, in making atonement for the nation, required to offer the same sacrifices— a bullock for Himself and a goat for the People—year by year, continually. The reason for this was that the sacrifices of bulls and goats could never really cancel the sins of the nation. They were merely a shadow of the better sacrifices. The world's High Priest, on account of His superiority of office and ability to cancel sin once for all, requires to do this same thing only once in the anti-type. The bullock for Himself and the goat for the people offered in the type, continually, represented in this anti-typical Day of Atonement, our Lord offering first His human life at Jordan, and later his members at Pentecost. No repetition of this will ever be required. By placing the emphasis of contrast on the proper words, the thought of the verse is easily followed: This High Priest needeth not daily (continually), as those High Priests (in type) to offer up sacrifice (first for His own sin and then for the people) for this He did once when He offered up Himself (Head and Body). It will be noted that the pronoun “this” agrees with the word “sacrifice”; while the intervening words. “First for His own sins and then for the people” are parenthetical, and merely explain, in detail, of what the Day of Atonement sacrifice consisted both in type and anti-type._

We have an Altar. (Heb. 13:10).

Here we have a further contrast between the typical and the anti-typical atonement days. We (Christians) have an altar of (consecration and sacrifice), corresponding to the typical day of atonement Altar, whereof they had no right to eat, who serve the tabernacle (as Priests). The Law of Moses’ prohibited the Priests from eating any part of the sin- offering on the Day of Atonement, whereas-it was. definitely specified that those offered on other days had to be partly eaten by them. The significance of this will be appreciated when we see that on the typical day of atonement, the Priest was, in figure, offering Himself representatively in the animals. To eat of the sacrifice on that day would, from the anti-typical standpoint, imply that the professed Christians of this Age, whilst claiming to have consecrated their all to the Lord, were seeking some earthly advantage in so doing. The blood (life value) of the sin-offering on that day was offered to Jehovah on behalf of the nation. We then, as .anti-typical Priests, if we make a proper consecration to the Lord, have the anti-typical atonement day altar, and may not eat—appropriate any benefit from the sacrifice laid thereon. Ours, like our Lord’s life, is given up for the benefit of others.

Without the Camp. (Heb. 13:13).

The three aspects of the sin-offering—type and anti-type—are shown in this connection.

1. The Altar in the Court (verse 10) representing our consecration and that of our Lord’s as living sacrifices, faithful unto death.

2 In verse 13, the camp condition, outside of which our Lord went and where his followers are also exhorted to go.

3 The Golden Altar in the Holy (verse 15), where the Priest offered incense before passing beyond the veil.

This represents praise, prayer and fellowship with our Heavenly Father. In verse 12, Jesus is said to sanctify—make holy and free from sin—the people. To some, this statement seems out of harmony with the record of Lev. 16:5, 6 and 15—a bullock for “Himself” and a goat for the “People.” There is no real lack of harmony, however, when we realise the two standpoints from which the relationship of our Lord to His members may be viewed. From the Divine standpoint, they are regarded as only one sacrifice—one Priest, while from the viewpoint of their actual outworking, as shown on the Day of Atonement, we see two distinct offerings. In Heb. 9:7, a similar view is given; the offering for “Himself” and the “People” is said to be one blood; whereas, the same thing is typically represented in Lev. 16:14-15, as the blood of the bullock for “Himself” and the goat for the “People.” The Divine viewpoint is also expressed in 1 John 2:2. The Ransom value in Jesus was essential to the propitiation for all, but this does not preclude the thought, that in the outworking the body members share with their head.—Extracts from “Old Paths.”

Laid on Thine altar, O my Lord Divine
Accept this gift to-day for Jesus' sake,

I have no jewels to adorn Thy shrine
Nor any world-famed sacrifice to make.

But here I bring, within my trembling hand.
This will of mine—a thing that seemeth small,

And Thou alone, O Lord, canst understand
How, when I yield Thee this, I yield mine all.

Light Shall Yet Prevail

MILNER, in describing the condition of the world of mankind when the Saviour was born and The Church established at Pentecost, says: "Christianity found mankind in a universal state of sin and misery. In Judea alone something of the worship of the true God existed. The forms of the Mosaic economy subsisted, but were greatly obscured and corrupted with Pharisaic traditions and Sadducean profanities. The ancient people of God had defiled themselves with heathen profligacy, and though there wanted not a multitude of teachers among them, yet when He who knew what was in man saw the spiritual condition of this people, He was moved with compassion because they fainted and were as sheep without a shepherd."

. . . "Such was the dismal. night in which the 'Sun of Righteousness' made His appearance in the world. Scarcely in any age had ignorance and wickedness a more general prevalence."

Such was the dark night of sin, ignorance and superstition at the first advent of Christ. "He was in the world and the world was made by Him, and the world knew Him not. He came unto His own, and His own received Him not." John 1:10,11 Even the people of God had fallen into error and paid more attention to their own traditions than to the Word of God. Indeed that is just of what Jesus accused them, "Ye have made the commandments of God of none effect by your traditions." (Matt. 15:6-9; Mark 7:5; 6.)

The Scriptures clearly show that the world would be in similar darkness at the second coming of Messiah. The Master's own words are: "When the Son of Man cometh shall He find faith on the earth?" The prophets and Apostles all agree concerning the godless condition that would prevail at that time. "As in the days of Noah, so shall the days of the Son of Man be"; and those even who profess to be the Church of Christ will, while "having a form of godliness, deny the power thereof." Peter says, "even denying the Lord that bought them," and the majority of preachers today deny that the Lord bought them with His precious blood. (1 Peter 1:18, 19.) The Gospel that Christ proclaimed and that Paul so clearly taught, i.e., that "the wages of sin is death," and so "Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures," is being discarded, and the churches are more like societies for social enjoyment and teachings calculated to encourage good citizenship.

Some little time ago Cardinal MacRory, the Papal Legate, speaking in Auckland, New Zealand, referred to the godless conditions, and said: "The campaign against Christianity and God which had begun in Russia was fast becoming world-wide. The laying of the foundations of a new paganism, worse than that of Greece and Rome, could be counteracted successfully only by the concerted action of all Christian people. That was why the Pope was urgently calling upon the Catholic laity to engage Catholic action, as an organised campaign had to be met by organised forces."

When we consider the extent to which the Papal Church is based on pagan teachings, practices, ceremonies and festivals, and the wicked doings and cruelties enacted during the Dark Ages, when the Pope claimed to be King of Kings and Lord of Lords and many other great swelling titles, one wonders how much worse the "new paganism" can be. The paganism of the Roman Catholic Church is and has been bad enough—it is more pagan than Christian. Indeed, the great Papal system is a wonderful masterpiece of Satan. When Christianity began to take hold of the people and its success could not be prevented by persecution, it seems the great Adversary adopted a method of inducting pagan teachings and practices, vestments, titles, etc., and thus what he could not do by persecution he accomplished in this way. The Gospel was so polluted, its light was dimmed—"the sun was darkened" and the "dark ages" followed; History tells the story and demonstrates that the Roman Church was no longer Christian, but is referred to in the Revelation as the great Antichrist,

As education and enlightenment increased, with such foolish teachings and absurd stories of miracles such as St. Francis preaching to the fishes, who listened with their heads out of the water, etc.; the empty ceremonies and doctrines of demons, purgatory, etc., a great number of people have turned away from the Christian religion altogether, and, without searching for themselves to see what the Bible teaches, have simply become agnostics and atheists. It was because of the same condition in the Greek Church that Russia flung the whole thing aside and has taken the sad step of ignoring God. Thus there is the “no God” propaganda. So, to-day, we may observe the spectacle of one system of Satan fighting against another system of Satan. The Lord’s words are that “if Satan cast out Satan he is divided against himself; how shall then his kingdom stand?” All this is a further indication that the Gospel Age is about ended and the “heavens” (the religious systems) will pass away with a great noise, and the “earth” (national and social structure) will be destroyed in a fiery time of trouble.

Certain it is that the world is getting more and more ungodly, more and more pleasure loving and self-seeking, and utterly careless respecting religion, thus fulfilling many Scriptural prophecies. (1 Tim. 4:1-3; 2 Tim. 3:1-6, etc.)

It was when darkness prevailed in the beginning that the spirit of the Lord moved upon the waters and commanded, “Let there be light.” It was when the world was spiritually, socially and morally in gross darkness that Christ the “Light of the world” appeared, and now again “darkness covers the earth and gross darkness the people,” notwithstanding all the advantages of our day, and soon the Sun of Righteousness will arise and scatter all the vapours of superstition and error. The Kingdom will be established just in its right time; man’s extremity will be God’s opportunity to turn their hearts from idols to serve the living God.

The Lord's Kingdom at Hand.

IN studying the matter of the establishment of Christ's Kingdom on earth, of which so much is stated in the Scriptures, it is well that an understanding of Biblical predictions be first of all gained, and then the events transpiring in the world may be viewed in the light of such Scriptural authority. That we are at present, and have been for some time, living in a period of extraordinary happenings throughout the whole world, most people will admit, but the Lord's people are not dependent only upon worldly conditions—"men's hearts, failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth"—in arriving at right conclusions, for they have "a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place until the day dawn." The fact that "men's hearts are failing them," at the present time, is merely a confirmation of our faith in the sure Word of Prophecy.

Taking, then, "Thy Word as a lamp unto our feet and a light unto our pathway," we are led to see at least four or five important and clearly marked signs or indications which would necessarily need to be in evidence and completed before the Lord's Kingdom would be established on earth. One of the first of these signs, given us by the prophet Daniel, is the increase of knowledge. "Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased . . . in the time of the end." Dan. 12:4. It is needless to elaborate upon these words; our daily papers testify to their fulfilment. The fact to be noted is that it would be in "the time of the end" when this fulfilment would take place, and the record of many being "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God"—"in the last days" (2 Tim. 3:1-5)—seems so closely linked with "running to and fro."

A second sign revealed from God's Word is to be found in Christendom, nominal Christianity, indicating the Lord's favour withdrawn. The message in Rev. 3:14-22, to the Laodicean Church, undoubtedly refers in its historical application to the days in which we are living—the last or seventh period of the church's history. How sad a state is revealed by the words—"These things, saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness (the Lord Himself, who sees all things) . . . I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot. So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth. Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked." Christendom as a whole, Roman Catholic and Protestant, is surely rich in wealth of this world, possessing beautiful cathedrals, churches, and institutions, but yet she is poor indeed concerning the real riches of Christ—"The light of a candle shall shine no more at all in thee; and the voice of the bridegroom and of the bride shall be heard no more at all in thee." Rev. 18:23, 1-3. Within the last few days we have heard from two new readers who have certainly observed this "sign," and quote their words in brief—"I do not go to church, as there is so little of the Gospel truth given out from the pulpit, but an embellished address or a little fine oratory from an apt young clergyman which he feels will please his congregation, rather than the simple truth." Another says—"Re literature pertaining to the Bible, cannot procure anything of that kind here, and being attached to a church which will not teach me, am searching on my own."

Another sign to be observed, and one of great importance, closely connected with the previous one is that of the presence of the Lord and harvest work—the calling out of the Lord's people from the various systems and their testing as to faithfulness and loyalty, even unto death. Our Lord's parable (Matt. 13:30) clearly explains the position—"Let all grow together until the harvest" and as "the harvest is the end of the age" (Matt. 13:39), that is the time for the separating of the wheat from the tares. Our Lord indicated that this important work would take place "in the days of the Son of Man" (Luke 19:12, 15; Rev. 3:20), so that He could supervise the gathering of the "wheat" into His barn, by His angels—messengers-- (Matt. 24:31), who are exhorted to "gather My saints together unto Me, those that have made a covenant with Me by sacrifice.” (Psa. 5). Other Scriptures, such as Luke 17:33-37, explain the harvest work at the close of this Gospel Age and which must all be accomplished before the Kingdom can be established on earth. The question was asked, “Where, Lord?”—where are these taken who are divided from others — “and He said unto them, ‘Wheresoever the body is, thither will the eagles be gathered together.’ “ In other words, those desiring the truth of God’s Word, those who hunger and thirst for it, shall be truly supplied with meat in due season, as they assemble together with others of like precious faith or through the printed page. (Luke 12:37). See also Rev. 18:4; Acts 15:14, etc.

Further signs clearly in evidence and pointing to the closing down of the present order may be summed up in the distress of nations, mentioned previously, and the progress of natural restoration in Palestine. With regard to the former, there never was known a time of such instability in worldly affairs as to-day. Luke 21:25, 26 explains this very condition, which will culminate in the “great tribulation such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time,” and to which our Lord added, “No, nor ever shall be.” (Matt. 24:

It is grand to know that this severe trouble will never need to be repeated, for “the day of the Lord will come . . . in the which the heavens (ecclesiastical systems) shall pass away . . . the earth also (social and financial order) and the works that are therein shall be burned up.” (2 Pet. 3: to). Then the Lord’s Kingdom shall be established, for we read— ‘Nevertheless we, according to His promise, look for new heavens (Christ’s reign begun) and a new earth (new order of society), wherein dwelleth righteousness.’” (2 Pet. 3:13).

Concerning the latter of these two signs, that our Lord intended us to understand the restoration of Palestine to be of importance preparatory to His Kingdom reign is shown in Matt. 24:32. The term “summer” is used to denote the time of God’s favour, which will be manifest so fully towards Israel under the New Covenant and extend to “all families of the earth,” just as the term “winter” gives the opposite thought, representing the dark, troublous times with which this Age will close—before the “summer” (Matt. 24:20). While, then, the Lord’s people recognise that God’s time of favour is near at hand, as demonstrated by the “fig tree” (Jewish nation), “putting forth leaves” (restoration commencing) there is also to be “a time of Jacob’s trouble” first, corresponding to the “great tribulation” upon the world. The prophet Jeremiah assures us, however, that “he shall be saved out of it” (Jer. 30:7), and other Scriptures, such as Zech. 14:1-3, show that Jehovah will mightily deliver Israel from the hands of their enemies, as He did in past ages. See also Rom. 11:26, 27, etc. Then all Israel will recognise the Lord in control of earth’s affairs, their summertime of favour will have come with Christ’s Kingdom established and which shall gradually extend throughout the whole world, “that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom My name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things.” (Acts 15:16, 17). “Thy Kingdom Come; Thy will be done on earth, as in heaven.”

“What doth it profit me?” Malachi 3:14-18.

I hear a weary Pilgrim say, As he sinks beside his burden upon the “narrow way!”
“What do I gain,” he, plaintive moans, “in service of my God,
Save weary pain and labour, bearing this heavy load?
For many dreary years I’ve toiled through sunshine and through rain,

Through chilling winds and wintry blasts I’ve suffered keenest pain,
The rocks have cut my weary feet, I’ve left a bleeding track,
I cannot climb this mountain side my feet are slipping back.
“Why should I suffer day by day, bearing this heavy cross?

Why may I not the ‘promise’ gain without this pain and loss?
I see so many all around who do not serve the Lord,
Yet they are not thus burdened and their lives hold rich reward;
Their barns are filled with plenty and their vats with wine o’erflow,

While I am made to drink the dregs of bitterness and woe.”
And thus he faints upon his way, and darkness tills his heart.
O, foolish one, with “armour” loosed, and pierced by Satan’s “dart.”
Dost thou not hear the Master: “The servant’s like his Lord,”

O, listen to His message and heed His Holy Word:
“If ye will suffer with Me, then with Me ye shall reign,
He who would shine in glory, is perfected through pain.”
We cannot walk with Christ our Lord and still find flowery ways,

The path that leads to Heavenly heights finds many sunless days;
The “narrow way” to life Divine oft leads through shadow-land,
Yet the loving Master walks beside, and holds our trembling hand.
The “shield of faith” we must not fail to use as on we go,

For “darts” are flying thick and fast from the Christian’s wily foe;
The world has not been “called” to walk upon our “narrow way,”
The shallow pleasures they enjoy are only for a day.
O, who would covet their poor joys, or look with envious eye

Upon the flowers which deck their path and blossom but to die?
Happy your lot, ye sons of God! O, “jewels” of the Lord,
Press on! nor faint upon the road that leads to your reward!
The way is weary, yet it ends in life, in bliss, in God! Press on!

Nor longing look ye back o’er the path that ye have trod.
Keep looking upward toward the “Prize,” and let its glory wake
Glad “Hallelujahs” to our King, who suffered for our sake;
Who died to give us life, that we might also with Him die,
Then share “His resurrection” and His glorious throne on High! —Alice G. James.

Correspondence,

New South Wales. Dear Brother,

Greetings to you in the name of our Redeemer. Just the day before I received your letter I had been out again with the papers. I had visited sixty people, also have been out once more, yesterday, and visited forty-five people. It is strange the various, different answers one gets to the question: "Do you love the Word of God?" Some say straight out, "No"; they are at least honest. Others say, "Not much," or "a little bit"; they are either the lukewarm ones, or those who have never been touched by its power. Then there are a few who just bubble over (a very few); they say, "Oh, I love it very much," and they thank me for the little paper I hand them, and with them I generally tarry a while. Then, again, there are some who give an evasive answer by saying: "I believe in my church," or "I am a Roman Catholic, it is enough for me." It is useless to waste time with such people.

Well, dear Brother, I need some more literature. You can, if you think best, send a larger parcel by boat. I would like to get the following:—"A Blessed Hope for Suffering Humanity," "All Flesh shall see the Salvation of God," "Why Sorrow, Sin, Death and Evil are Permitted," "The Two Salvations," and "When Christ is King."

I have been at Brother — last Monday; we had a real blessed time together, finishing Study I of the "Divine Plan."

I am, as ever, in Christian love,

Your Brother in Christ, B.E.

P. S.—I always refer people to' the address on the papers and invite them to write for more literature.

19/9/'35. Dear Brother,—

I noticed on the back page of August "People's Paper" a letter from one who is desirous of having sent to him Pastor Russell's books, "Scripture Studies," "Book of Sermons," and "Tabernacle Shadows." Please find enclosed postal note to pay for them; if any money is left over, use it as you deem best. I remain,

Your Sister in Christ, T.M.

New South Wales,

7th September, 1935.

Dear Brother,—

I liked the “People’s Paper” very much this month. Will you please send me a copy (paper bound) of the book “God and Reason,” which you review in this issue, and also a copy of “God’s Covenants” by Bro. Barton. I enclose postal note. Any balance please put to the funds.

The affairs of this present evil world seem to have taken another definite step towards the end since last I wrote to you. Exactly how this Abyssinian affair is going to develop in the light of prophecy I wouldn’t like to say; but one or two things stand out clearly—it will either break the League of Nations or make it into a formidable alliance capable of developing on the lines foretold in Revelation, but it will never be the same as before. A different spirit has entered into the world. We seem to be standing at the threshold of great events, and, as Bible students know, even fearful events.

I believe that prophecy should be taken in the spirit of our Lord’s words when He said: “I have told you these things, that, when they come to pass, ye may know that what I have told you is true.” We know that great things will come to pass, because the words of our Lord and the prophets tell us so; we know that they will come to pass shortly, and are even at the door, because we see the signs of which our Lord foretold us being fulfilled. But as regards the exact method and time in which they will be fulfilled, I don’t think God intends us to know. Looking back through history, we can see the way in which prophecy has been perfectly fulfilled, but to those who lived then it was vague; they saw, but not clearly. We, who live in these last days, see much more clearly than they; but it is not until all the turmoil and the strife is over and we are gathered together at last, as one, in the presence of our Lord, that we shall truly realise the wonderful glories of the purpose of God, which we but glimpse now. Then we shall see how perfect have been the prophecies and how perfect the fulfilment; then shall we sing: “Glory, Praise and honour to Him that sitteth upon the throne.”

With sincere Christian love to all the brethren,

Yours very sincerely,

N.W.

Consecration.

“Consecration is not a religiously selfish thing. If it sinks into that it ceases to be consecration. We want our lives ‘kept’ not that we may feel happy and be saved the distress consequent on wandering and get the power with God and man and other privileges linked with it. We shall have all this because the lower is included in the higher; but our true aim, if the love of Christ constraineth us, will be far beyond this. Not for ‘me’ at all, but ‘for Jesus’; not for my safety, but for His glory; not for my comfort, but for His joy; not that I may find rest, but that ‘He may see of the travail of His soul and be satisfied,’ Yes, for Him I want to be kept; kept for His sake; kept for His use; kept to be His witness; kept for His joy; kept for Him that in me He might show forth some tiny sparkle of His light and beauty; kept to do His will and His work in His own way; kept, it may be, to suffer for His sake; kept for Him that he may do just what seemeth Him good with me; kept so that no other lord shall have any more dominion over me, but that Jesus shall have all there is to have; little enough, indeed, but not divided nor diminished by any other claim. Is not this, to you who love the Lord is not this worth living for, worth trusting for?”—F. R. Havergal.

“Awake ! Arise ! and Christ shall Give thee Light.”

“Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light!” (Eph. 5:14.)

THE world in general is asleep. In one sense of the word it is dead. As we know, the death sentence passed upon all men because of Adam’s sin. (Rom. 5:12.) Since that time all of the human family have been going into the tomb; and even those still having a measure of life are spoken of in the Scriptures as “dead in trespasses and sins.” (Eph. 2:1.) But this death sentence resting upon all mankind has been transmuted by the Lord to be a sentence of a period of sleep, to be followed by an awakening. God had this arrangement in His glorious Purpose from the beginning, from before mankind came into existence. For this reason the Bible refers to the death state as a “sleep.” God purposed the redemption and restitution of mankind, and so in the Divine programme our Lord Jesus was the Lamb slain from before the foundation of the world.

When God spoke to Moses at the burning bush, He called Himself the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob, although these men had long been dead. Our Lord Jesus referred to this statement, and declared that the fact that God so spoke of them when they were dead proved that there is to be a RESURRECTION OF THE DEAD. (Luke 20:37, 38; Exod. 3:6.) He did not say that this proved that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob were not dead, but alive in some other world, but that it proved that they were to be raised from the dead; “for all live unto Him” [God]. In other words, it is God’s purpose that all shall yet live (John 5:28, 29); and He can properly speak from the standpoint of His predetermined purpose. In both Old and New Testaments death is spoken of as a sleep, because of the redemption and the deliverance from the Adamic death penalty purposed through Christ’s sacrificial death on the cross.

An understanding of the Plan of the Ages given in the Scriptures reveals the fact that all mankind will be awakened from the Adamic death state, in order that they may “come to a knowledge of the Truth,” which will be made plain to all during the Messianic Reign of our Lord. (I Tim. 2:3-6.) This will be the individual enlightenment then brought to all mankind; and the attitude of each towards God’s revealed provision for all will determine his case, whether he shall have life everlasting or shall be cast into the death state again. This will be the Second Death—eternal destruction. In the Bible the Second Death is never spoken of as a “sleep.” This term is applied only to the Adamic death.

“Awake, Thou that Sleepest!”

Our text applies especially to those who, although still having an existence, are dead in trespass and sins, who are sleeping so far as the highest interests of their souls, their being, are concerned, those who are under the benumbing influence of the power administered by the great Adversary. (2 Cor. 4:4.) Since our Lord's death as the great Sacrifice for sin, the call has gone out in a general way to all who have heard the Gospel Message that they should repent of: sin, should arise from their dormant condition, and', live in accordance with the purpose for which they were created. To those who heed this Message comes the special Call of the Gospel Age.

The majority of the human family seem to be passing through life in a sort of maze. They are not (I awake; they seem to be in a dream. As a rule, they are not thinking about the more important things of • life, but of the trivialities- -what they shall eat, what • they shall drink, wherewithal shall they be clothed, where they shall find pleasure or amusement, how they can multiply their money. These matters are indeed very trifling compared to the weighty question—"Why am I living? What was the purpose of my creation? What are my responsibilities to my ..

God and my fellowmen ? What is to be my eternal destiny ?"—Matt. 6:31-33.

In the experience of practically all who have come to the Lord there has been first a soul awakening. Their coming to Him has been preceded by an awakening of their inmost being, their nobler self, a dissatisfaction with the things of this world, and a yearning for something that will satisfy, a hungering and thirsting for God. To the one who is beginning to experience this soul-stirring, the words of our text should be especially effective: "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light !" First must come the awakening, the realisation of our need, the hungering for God. Then the light will come, as the heart comes into the right attitude to receive it.

An Important Crisis in Life.

This thought of the need of an awakening should give us sympathy for those who have never yet heard the voice of the Lord. They need our sympathy. "Blessed are your eyes, for they see; and your ears, for they hear," said our Lord to His disciples. (Matt. 13:16, 17). This benediction is for the disciples of Jesus to-day as well as for those to whom the words were directly spoken. These have had the soul awakening; they see and hear things unknown before— things of incomparable value. A very large number of the poor world of mankind are steeped in sin and degradation. They are living merely for the things of time and sense. They seem to do very little profitable thinking. Although they have heard of God and of Heaven, yet what they heard seemingly has made but little impression upon them.

To some who have lived thus for years there comes a time of awakening. Suddenly, through the experiences of life, they are aroused from their lethargy to a realisation that there is something to live for beyond what they have heretofore seen. They come to realise that they are sinners needing a Saviour, that they are helpless and need a Helper. Perhaps they get the right view--that the sentence resting upon fallen man is death. (Gen. 3: to.) More likely they get the wrong view—that it is eternal torment. But from the moment of their awakening they faced a crisis in their lives. How would they respond? Would they come near to God and receive a blessing? Or would they turn from Him and the voice of conscience, and wander off into greater darkness, greater sin, and thereafter be more difficult to reach than ever before?

In the case of others, however, it was not an awakening to a realisation of sin; for from childhood they had been children of the Lord, accustomed to the Bible, the hearing of prayer, and the singing of hymns. They were Christians: yet their soul was not really awake. They were going through the form of singing hymns, of reading the Bible, and of offering prayer, without thinking seriously what the words meant. They were asleep, in a sort of somnambulistic condition, as it were, going around in a stupid way, having a form of godliness with little or none of its power.

Then, in the Lord's providence, they were brought to a sudden standstill. They received a mental shock which shook them out of their torpid condition. They were brought face to face with a crisis in their lives. They saw in just what condition they were. They heard the Call to a higher, nobler life.

Suggestions to Parents and Teachers.

This time of soul-awakening is an important period in the life of the young. About this time there seems to be a great change in human nature. It is the -age when conditions of thoughtfulness are reached, the time when the forces making for spirituality have the most favourable effect upon the youthful mind. This is a thought which parents, guardians and teachers of youth do well to have before them. By this we do not mean, however, that no special attempt should be made to bring the child to the Lord previous to this time. Quite to the contrary, from birth the child should be trained in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

In speaking of the importance of the period of life at the age of fifteen years or thereabouts, it would seem that at about that time the child's mind is sufficiently developed to begin to reach out as never before to wonder, to question, to see things in a new light, to look beyond the trivial things of the present time, to lose interest in previous childish diversions. Parents and teachers should use much wisdom in dealing with children at this crucial age. They should neither reprove nor seek to check these first stirrings of the mind toward higher, more important things.

It seems somewhat remarkable that at this age children reason with a great deal of accuracy, about as accurately, perhaps, as they will ever reason; but experience seems to show that this is true. It is afterward that their minds frequently become perverted by false reasoning, and their brain power becomes so confused that they do not know how to think or what to think. From their elders they learn deceit, and get improper views of life and its responsibilities. They imbibe erroneous teachings, which are often difficult to unlearn.

Parental Responsibility Very Great.

Strange to say, there are parents—and some of them professedly Christian—who say, "All children must sow their wild oats." How surprising that any parent could so reason ! Whosoever sows wild oats will reap in kind. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." (Gal. 6:7.) There is no escape from this inexorable law of • nature.

From the first dawn of its understanding the child should be kept very near to the Divine standard. The parents should be able to express to the child in sympathetic terms those qualities of nobility and righteousness which the opening mind is so ready to receive, just as a sponge sucks up water. The child mind is ready to absorb very fully the thoughts which are given to it by sincere parents or by anyone in whom it has confidence. But children soon lose confidence in one whom they find to be deceitful, one who tells them untruths.

Children are very quick to note whether the parent is untruthful or unjust. Thus their confidence is destroyed; and in time they learn to deceive others, to practise falsehood and injustice. We regret to say that there are parents who seemingly think it wise and proper to teach their children to be shrewd and "thrifty," as they call it—to take advantage of others, and to fib a little. We are sure that all who come to a real knowledge of Divine Truth, and who have imbibed its spirit, will have no such sentiments. Having learned the right way themselves, they will be very desirous that their children and all whom they can influence shall take the same Godlike viewpoint as themselves.

After Awakening, Remain Awake.

Those who have experienced an awakening of soul should be very watchful lest they fall asleep again—drift back into the old worldly ways. After one has awakened in the morning, and his senses have become fully aroused, it is possible for him to turn over and fall asleep once more. Upon a second awakening, however, the energies are sluggish, and the mind is more or less dull and stupid. Upon first awakening after a refreshing sleep, there is a freshness of mind which seems to be lost if one permits himself to doze off again; and perhaps after his second awakening there is a languor or torpidity of feeling for the entire day.

So it is with those that fall asleep again after having been awakened to a realisation of the higher and nobler aspirations and enjoyments. Such may be awakened a second time; but if they are, the perceptions of the soul are likely to be less acute, the conscience less sensitive. For this reason we should encourage those who have awakened to arise at once from the dead world, and to be separate from those around them who are still asleep.

After one has awakened and begun to arise from the dead world, the soul is in the attitude to receive the light of Heaven. “Christ shall give thee light.” “Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart.”

(Psa. 97: t.) Those who are arising from the dead world are approaching this condition of uprightness. The dead are represented as being prostrate. (1 John 5:19.) Arising to a standing position represents an entire change of sentiment.

The awakened one should at once seek to know what the Lord desires him to do. He should begin to study the Word of God. There he finds that the Way to God is Christ—the only way. The path that leads to God is by way of the Cross of Calvary. The soul must lay hold upon Jesus, by acceptance of the merit of His sacrificial death and by a complete surrender to God through Christ Jesus as the great Advocate. When he has taken this step, the light will begin to dawn upon him. Heavenly things can now for the first time be grasped by the soul. Light, increasing light, is his portion; for each step of obedience brings greater knowledge. “The path of the just is as a shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day.” (Prov. 4:18.)

In the past many of us made the great mistake of supposing that we became Christians when first we awakened, when first we arose from the dead world about us. But we were merely looking toward Christianity, merely awakening to the fact that there is such a thing as harmony with God, and an escape from the condemnation that is upon the world because of sin.

There is still condemnation upon all except those who are in Christ. The apostle truly says, “There is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit.” (Rom. 8:1.) From the moment we come into Christ we are counted members of His Body, and we lose all condemnation of Adamic death. His sacrificial merit has been imputed to cover all our imperfections, as well as the sins of the past. Arising from the dead, in this sense of the expression, means that we are living the resurrection life, that the new life in Christ is begun in us. (Rom. 6:4.) This life will, if we continue in the good way, be completed when we receive our glorious spiritual bodies in the First Resurrection.

On Trial for Life or Death.

From the time that we lose the condemnation of death that came upon mankind through Adam's disobedience, by taking the steps of faith in Jesus as our Redeemer, and of full consecration to God through Him, we are again placed on trial for life. The first trial for life was given to Father Adam: and when he failed, condemnation came upon all his posterity. But no one can be tried twice for a capital offence unless in the meantime he has been cleared of the previous condemnation. Therefore no one can have a second trial until he gets from under the condemnation that came through Adam.

Only the Church of Christ is now on trial for life eternal. They are reckoned as having passed from death unto life, but this is a salvation only by hope. They have yet to be proved, to be developed as New Creatures in Christ. They are now on probation. They have entered the School of Christ, to be perfected in character, to be made copies of God's dear Son, who is their great instructor. They must be prepared for their future work in the Kingdom; for, if they prove faithful even unto death, they will become the teachers of the next Age—instructing, uplifting, encouraging, blessing, the whole world of mankind, who died in Adam and who are to be awakened and dealt with during the incoming Dispensation.

When spiritual comfort is given thee from God, receive it with thankfulness; but understand it is the gift of God, not any desert of thine. —Thomas A 'Kempis.

Palestine Old and New.

To Emmaus by Motor Car.

THE following account of conditions in the Holy Land, by Albert Peel, D.Litt., is quoted from "The Christian World." " 'I am sorry you are going to Palestine; you will certainly be disappointed.' How many times were those words said to me--so many that I began to think they might be true, and that there would be no thrill in a visit to' the Holy Land.

"We approached Haifa in the early hours of the morning, and I made my way on deck in a dressing gown to get my first glimpse of Mount Carmel. As the morning wore on I soon concluded that While there may be disillusionment in some places, the thrill would certainly be there. To descend on to the Plain of Esdraelon, across which armies had marched through the centuries, to pick Palestine's flowers for the first time, to look across to 'cities' with familiar names like Nain and Endor—I. wondered in those first hours if the Holy Land would mean a lump in the throat all the time. That feeling passed away, and at times there was resentment at the sight of conflicting creeds and superstitions, and at the monstrosities under which some of the most sacred places have been buried. There was, too, continually the consciousness of the fact that the country is honeycombed with history, and that it is remunerative to make sites significant.,

"When all that has been said, however, the Holy Land remained a Holy Land. The. Bible began to live afresh as one saw a city set on a hill, or the lilies of the field, or the road on which the traveller from Jerusalem to Jericho fell among thieves. There was no longer doubt about the meaning of the came] and the needle's eye as one saw laden camels passing along the narrow streets of Jerusalem.

"But it may be said, 'Do not the crowds of tourists altogether destroy the atmosphere?' The tourists can be escaped; not many of them are to be found in the Garden of Gethsemane, or on the Mount of Olives, or on the hill above Nazareth in the early dawn, easily the best time of the day in which to see Palestine; and there are places altogether off villages, if one is to get the real feel of the land as it was twenty centuries ago.

the beaten track where one gets back to the time when the Master walked the streets and hills. I was determined to walk to Emmaus: that proved to be impossible for lack of time, and a visit to Emmaus is not in the average tourist's programme. My visit, however, was one of the unforgettable experiences of my life. St. Luke speaks of Emmaus as sixty furlongs from Jerusalem. Without looking at a road map I chartered a car with a ride of about eight miles in mind. Four friends joined me, and all agreed that afternoon was one of the most memorable experiences. For the first two miles we passed through the 'New Jerusalem,' about which the less said the better; then for six miles or so on the fine main road to Jaffa. Then we turned along a road on the like of which I have never ridden before. No car, I should have thought, could have stood it, but ruts. a^ foot deep, and the hefty stones, seemed to make no difference to car or driver, and after eleven miles we arrived at Emmaus.

"We did not spend long in the village or in the Franciscan church, but made our way to the Hospice, now kept by three Sisters. They gave us tea in the garden made there a generation or two ago, and a place of more perfect peace I have never known. There were magnificent views across the valleys to Mizpah and other places with familiar names, and one desired nothing better than to remain for a long time for meditation and quiet. Once upon a time the Hospice was largely used by pilgrims travelling on foot to Jerusalem; now it is rarely visited. It remains in my mind as one of the gems of unspoiled Palestine, to which I should recommend every visitor to go. Another is Tabgha, the site of the ancient Bethsaida, where it is possible to stay for a few- days in the monastery under the charge of Father Tapper. Its garden spreads along the Sea of Galilee, and either in the garden or on the lake one can experience that communion with nature and with God which Jesus Himself knew.

“One of the strongest impressions the visitor receives is the amalgam of East and West, ancient and modern. I made my way on one occasion to a Bedouin encampment not far from Jordan and Jericho. Anything more primitive seen from a distance could scarcely be imagined, but as one drew near to it the noise of a gramophone came floating over the air. The main roads are equal to those in any country in the world, and the skill of the Arab drivers is beyond all praise. The motor has certainly enabled the visitor to see Palestine in a way impossible a few years ago. One must, however, get away from these main roads on to the hills, away from Zionist colonies and into Arab

“And here I must say something about the political situation, for the mandate which Britain holds entails great responsibility. The Balfour Declaration, with its support of the’ Zionist Movement, has placed us in an invidious and unfortunate position. The Jews are pouring into the country, and the money which backs them enables them to buy land from Arab owners, with the result that the Arabs employed on the land find their way into the cities and towns with a bitterness in their hearts that increases as the process is continued. At Tiberias I saw something of a counter Moslem movement. Hundreds of Arabs were crowded together to welcome a Moslem leader, whose purpose in haranguing them was to persuade them to sell their lands ‘to the Mosque’ instead of to Jews, that is, to an organisation parallel on the Moslem side to the Zionist Society of the Jews. It was when one got into familiar conversation with the educated Arab that one realised the tension underlying the superficial calm. I dined one night with one who had had peculiar opportunities for estimating the whole situation, and his emphatic and unqualified view was that if Britain were to give up the mandate the Arabs, pouring in across Jordan would massacre all the Jews within twenty-four hours.”

[This last reference is surely very significant and in confirmation of Bible prophecies—See Ezek. 38.]

Blindness Beginning to Pass.

THE Rev. I. Livingstone, speaking at the meeting of "The Fellowship of Faiths," said: "The Jews believe that Jesus was undoubtedly a Jew and held the faith of His fathers and founded no religion. Christianity, the Jews believe, was founded by Paul."

Thus the Jews appear already to realise that it was a great mistake to have crucified Jesus, but they have still a long way to go before recognising, as Paul did, their long promised Messiah in Jesus of Nazareth. What a compliment is unwittingly paid to Paul's zeal, in thus accrediting him with the founding of Christianity. They fail, however, to see that all that Paul taught is built upon the teachings of Jesus, who said that the old bottles could not contain the new wine, i.e., the Jewish teachings and system of religion would be burst by the new truths.

Again we have the Lord's instructions to His disciples, "Go ye into all the world, teaching all nations and baptising in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the holy spirit." Then, too, when Peter declared, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," Jesus had said, "Upon this rock will build My Church." Paul loyally refers to this when he says, "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." (1. Cor. 3: II.)

The Church was founded at Pentecost before ever Paul was converted and it must be completed before blindness will entirely pass away from Israel. (Rom.:25-27.) "They shall- look upon (perceive with understanding) me whom they have pierced and they shall mourn for him as one mourneth, for his only son and shall be in bitterness for him, as one • that is in bitterness for his firstborn." (Zech. 12:

“A Saviour and a Great One.”

“A ghastly sight shows in the shivering air
On Calvary’s brow;
The Saviour of mankind, in love, hangs there,
While followers bow
The head low on the breast and sadly sigh,
‘How can He be Messiah—if He die?’

“A jeering mob surrounds the cursed knoll,
And mocks the Lord;
Yet to His lips and from His stricken soul
Cometh no word
Of vengeance or reproach—ah, no; and when
In anguish came the final moment, then “‘Tis finished!’ rings in triumph through the sky;
He bows His head;
And, while the querying soldiers mark the cry,
‘The Lord is dead.’

All anguish past, His triumph doth begin,
The world is saved, a death blow dealt to sin.
“Jerusalem, amazed, hears fishers tell,
With courage bold,
How Christ has vanquished Satan, death and hell,
As He foretold.

Humble disciples forcefully proclaim,
‘There is Salvation in no other name.’
“A Sabbath’s journey from the city gate,
With sorrow shod,
Two sad disciples bear their sorry weight
To their abode.

The Christ appears, while holden are their eyes,
And cloth expound wherefore Messiah dies.
“Emmaus reached, the Lord would further go;
They gently chide
‘Thou hast beguiled our grief and tears, and so
With us abide.’

He brake their bread—then vanished from their sight—
Their hearts did burn with holy joy that night.
“Still thus He comes; and though the faulty sight
Of clouded eyes
Perceives Him not; He makes the burden light,
And stills our cries;

For, like weaned babes, we mourn, the while
He would Our hearts sustain with stronger richer food.
“The tale is old but ever sweetly new,
Why Jesus died;
The nail prints, doubting one, He shows to you,
And in His side

A spear thrust gapes—a passage rent apart
For easy access to your Saviour’s heart.
“It was for you my brother,
that He shed His life so free;
For you, you, for me,
He bowed His godlike head
On Calvary’s tree,

That trusting in the merit of His Name
We might be saved from sorrow, sin and shame.
“The past sufficeth, surely, to have spent
In sinful deeds.

Come, join our band; and be our footsteps bent
Where Jesus leads.

So, in His righteousness serenely dressed,
We’ll meet Him face to face among the blest.” —

The Blessings of the Lord Maketh Rich

THE Bible declares that there are not many rich, not many wise, not many learned, who enjoy God's special favour, but chiefly the poor of this world, who are rich in faith. But whoever concludes from this that God is prejudiced against the rich, or that all the rich are iniquitous and have gained their wealth through fraud, errs grievously. What it does teach is that God is no respecter of persons. Whether one be rich or poor, learned or ignorant, God's estimation of him is from the standpoint of the heart. There are both good and bad rich men, just as there are both good and bad poor men.

Abraham, though the youngest son of the family, at the death of his father, Terah, doubtless inherited all that remained of his possessions, including the share of Sarah, his wife, who was his half-sister. The chronology of the narrative agrees with this; but some have erred in the study of it. Abraham is mentioned first amongst his brethren because of his greater prominence, and not because he was the elder.

Added to Abraham's rich inheritance was the blessing of the Lord upon him. After he had accepted the Divine call and left his homeland to become a wandering shepherd and herdsman in Canaan, his flocks and herds increased greatly. He was, under God's blessing, very rich. Others also of God's servants in the past were greatly blessed with riches—for instance, Job. We are not, however, to apply the lesson in this way at the present time. The blessing of the Lord very rarely makes wealthy His saintly people during this Gospel Age. Jesus and the Apostles and the specially saintly all clown through the Age and to-day are poor in this world's goods.

It may be asked, Why this change in God's dealings? The reply of the Scriptures is, that in the past, up to the time of Christ, God's blessings were to men as men; but since the time of Christ, God's saints are "New Creatures in Christ." The terms of discipleship are that they exchange all earthly favours, riches and blessings, and sacrifice their claims to these in order that they may become heirs of God and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ, their Lord, to the Heavenly inheritance—and share in the Messianic Kingdom and its glory, honour and immortality.

God dealt with Abraham as a friend and gave him earthly blessings and promised him earthly blessing in the future life. Jesus and His followers God accepts not as friends, but as sons. His promises to these are not earthly, but Heavenly, spiritual privileges and hopes in the present life, and spiritual glory and immortality — far above angels — in the life to come. God's favour to this House of Sons, of whom Jesus is the Head (Hebrews 3:6), is manifested often in the trials, difficulties, chastisements and earthly losses and afflictions which they experience, all of which are designed to work out for them "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." The beauty and harmony of the Bible can be understood only by those who thus "rightly divide the Word of Truth" and differentiate between the blessings and promises to the Ancient Worthies as distinct from those which appertain to the followers of Jesus.

Abraham's Friends Not Joint-heirs.

Lot was a man of nearly Abraham's age, his nephew, the son of his brother, Haran. They were friends and companions. God did not call Lot, nor any other of Abraham's relatives, but merely himself, to be the recipient of the promises—the channel through whom they would be fulfilled. This did not hinder Lot from being with his uncle, but indeed permitted him to share the blessings of Divine Providence, which guided Abraham's affairs. God's Covenant and promises were not made with Lot, but with Abraham only. Similarly, the spiritual children of Abraham alone are the heirs of the Abrahamic promise, and not their friends or relatives, although the latter may share a reflex blessing of spiritual influence through association with them.

These spiritual children of Abraham, Christ and His consecrated followers, are particularly specified as the heirs of the Abrahamic promise by St. Paul (Galatians 3:29). They all have a faith similar to that of Abraham, and a spirit of obedience similar to his. Jesus is their Head, Captain and Leader, as well as their Redeemer, and they become His disciples by a covenant of sacrifice similar to His own. His promise to them is, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in My Throne"—the Kingdom which is to fulfil all the gracious promises which God made to Abraham—to Jews and Gentiles.

Riches Often Bring Troubles.

God's blessing upon Abraham, shared by Lot, led on to more or less of ambition and strife, not between the two men themselves, but between their servants. Abraham loved peace, and perceived that it would be wise that the two families should part company. Lot assented. Abraham gave him his choice as to the section of country; and Lot chose the most fertile—the plain of Sodom, in the Valley of Jordan, and the Plain of Sodom, afterward devastated as a judgment from the Lord; is now the Valley of the Dead Sea.

Lot made his home in Sodom, while his herds and flocks were pastured in the fertile regions surrounding. Doubtless Lot's wife had to do with the choice. She loved a beautiful home. To her the surroundings of Sodom were very attractive. The family lived there three years, although the riches of the country had a debasing effect upon the people. Lot's righteous soul was vexed, more than offsetting the charm of the country, which his wife so loved. Looking back with longing heart at the time of its destruction, she was overtaken in the catastrophe which her husband and daughters escaped.

Abraham, on the contrary, fixed his heart and hopes upon the gracious promises of God, which appertained less to the present and more to the future life. Sarah, his wife, was a real helpmate, who shared her husband's hopes and desired to co-labour with him faithfully for their accomplishment. In these two families, both well-intentioned, we see illustrated the difference between seeking chiefly the Divine approval and seeking chiefly earthly welfare and ease.

Many Christian people to-day make similar mistakes to that which Lot made. They allow conflicting earthly interests to separate them from the blessings of God's greater favour. They thus involve themselves and their families in the snare of the wicked, while at heart preferring righteousness.

The Master's advice should be remembered, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His Righteousness." Do that which is in harmony with that aspiration and leave to God the oversight and care of earthly interests, that He may give you the lessons and experiences most helpful for you. Those who follow His advice find peace and joy which the world can neither give nor take away—"the peace of God, which passeth all understanding."

God's Blessing Makes Rich.

Whoever has the Lord's blessing is rich indeed, regardless of the amount of this world's goods which he possesses. Of what value is all the wealth of a Croesus if it bring not peace, joy and happiness? Wherever we go we find all—rich and poor—seeking pleasure, seeking the springs of joy; but how few of these seekers ever find it! Alas! it seems impossible for the world to understand the great fact that the blessing of the Lord constitutes the true fund of riches and pleasures for evermore—more than the life that now is, and the coming one!

Those whom the Lord makes rich with His promises and His favour, His guidance and His blessing, have the joy which others are vainly seeking. These true riches during this Gospel Age are obtainable by all who have the "hearing ear," and who learn of God's favour in Christ. In Christ are hidden all the treasures of Divine Wisdom, Love and Power.

The only ones who obtain a share of these blessings at the present time are such as become followers of Jesus through faith and consecration of their lives to His service. Nevertheless, in Him are also restitution blessings for the world of mankind, which will be dispensed during the thousand years of His reign. -St. Peter tells us- of this, and points us to the fact that it has been “foretold by all the Holy Prophets since the world began.”--Acts 3:20, 21.

Early Morning Devotion..

THERE is no time like the early morning hour for feeding on the flesh of Christ by communion with Him, and pondering His words. Once lose that, and the charm is broken by the intrusion of many things, though it may be they are all useful and necessary. You cannot re-make the broken reflections of a lake swept by wind. How different is that day from all others, the early prime of which is surrendered to fellowship with Christ! Nor is it possible to live to-day on the gathered spoils of yesterday. Each man needs all that a new day can yield him of God's grace and comfort. It must be daily bread.

All true prayer has a transfiguring influence. It brings us into the immediate presence of God. The holy of holies in the ancient temple, where the Shekinah was no holier than where you bow every time you pray. You are looking up into the face of Christ, Himself. John was not nearer to Him, lying on His breast, than you are in your praying. One cannot thus look up into the face of Christ and not have some measure of transfiguration wrought in him.

Then prayer is the reaching up of the soul toward God. It lifts the life for the time into the highest, holiest frame. A prayerful spirit is full of aspirations for God. Its longings are pressing up Godward. it is the transfiguring of the spirit which purifies these dull earthly lives of ours, and changes them, little by little, into the Divine image.

Rise earlier to be more alone with Christ in the morning. Let neither the pressure of business, nor the allurements of pleasure, nor the tendencies of the flesh, nor the drowsiness of spirit, keep thee from thy morning interview and converse with the King of kings.—Selected.

Convention Notes from Digby, Vic.

IT is with much praise and thankfulness to the Giver of every good and perfect gift that the Bible Class at Digby and Merino places on record its first little Convention. Having in mind the Apostle’s exhortation, Heb. 10:25—”Not forsaking the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some, but exhorting one another; and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching”—three days (Sept. 27th to 29th) were set apart for praise, study and fellowship, and every moment of the time was utilized to that end. Fourteen assembled, and as one Brother expressed it, it is indeed wonderful to think of the Lord so blessing a little isolated place like Digby, that fourteen people could thus gather.

Regrets were expressed that one Brother was absent on business, and much sympathy went out to a Sister who was kept away through sickness until the last sessions.

Seven visitors travelled many miles and at much expense to be with us, thus exemplifying the well proven fact—”It is more blessed to give than to receive”—and without doubt (and as expressed) receiving also the promised blessing, for “He that watereth shall be watered also himself.” Prov. 11:25. Our prayer is that the memory of the time spent together will be an impetus to each one of us to put up a better fight against our great foes, the world, the flesh and the devil, showing forth in a larger measure more of His spirit, who has called us from darkness into His marvellous light.

The closing exhortation was a brief resume of our studies from John’s Gospel, 15:1-14; 1 Cor. 3: it-16; a John 4:6-11; Psa. 97; I26 _and 23; and reminded us of the need of esteeming truth above every person, thing and consideration, realising that the knowledge is given to develop in us the fruits and graces of the holy spirit. The need also to remember that truth alone sanctifies was impressed, and so we should continue to put and keep on the armour provided, that we may be able to stand in these last days and ultimately say with the Apostle Paul, “I have kept the faith.” We were also reminded of the need of developing in large measure brotherly love, appreciating one another more and more, developing and maintaining His spirit in our hearts and showing it forth in our daily walk that others may benefit; appreciating, too, the feast provided in this harvest period, and so continue “proving all things and holding fast to that which is good.”

Greetings from other Classes, with their expressions of love, were appreciated, and which included hymns 219 and 282 in “Christian Hymns”; Psa. Too; 2 Tim. 3:13, 14; and Gal. 6:16, 18; the thoughts impressed being those of “walking” and “progress.” Rom. 15:13, Heb. 13:20, 21, and Prov. 3:6 were chosen by those assembled to go as messages of love to the Lord’s people meeting, or isolated elsewhere, and our elderly Sister asked that hymn 271, “Take time to be Holy,” be in-eluded. Many were heard expressing the hope that we would have more of such gatherings, one Brother remarking that never before had he realised the value of fellowship.

"But who may abide the Day of His Coming?—and who shall stand when He appeareth ? is like a Refiner's Fire and Like Fuller's Soap."—Malachi 3:2. For He

THE words of the Prophet given in our text refer to the close of the present Gospel Age. It is the same Day prophesied by the Apostle Paul when he declared, "The fire of that Day shall try every man's work of what sort it is." (1 Cor. 3:13). It is the Day of which the Apostle Peter wrote so graphically when he said that in that great Day of the Lord the heavens should be on fire and the elements should melt with fervent heat, and that the earth and all the works therein should be burned up. (2 Pet. 3:10). It is the Day of which the Prophet Zephaniah spoke when he said that in the great Day of the Lord all the earth should be devoured with the fire of God's jealousy. (Zeph. 3:8). Isaiah, Jeremiah, and many of the faithful Prophets of God prophesied of this day. The Prophet Daniel was instructed by the angel of the Lord that in that Day there should be a "Time of Trouble such as never was since there was a nation." (Dan. 12:1). Our Lord Jesus Himself verified this prophecy, and added that never afterwards should there be such a time.—Matt. 24:21, 22.

The Scriptures call this Day "the Day of the Lord," "the Day of Jehovah," "the Day of God," "the day of Christ," "the Day of Vengeance," "that great and notable Day," etc. It is the Day in which the Old Order is to perish and the glorious New Order is to be ushered in. In foretelling this Day, both, the Prophets and the Apostles speak of the class which will stand in this Day when all others shall fall. St. Paul says that everything which can be shaken down will be: and that only the Kingdom which will then be set up, and which cannot be shaken, will remain. (Heb. 12:25-29). The present order of society—the nominal church systems, financial institutions, political institutions—will go down in this time of trouble.

During this Gospel Age many who have not been Christians have associated themselves with the Church. The civilised people of to-day call themselves "Christians," in contradistinction to the nations which they call "heathen," though from the Scriptural standpoint they are all heathen—Gentiles. Among all these various nations we find many religions, whose devotees claim that they have consecrated themselves to God. But the touchstone by which these claims may be tested is the Word of God. See Gal. 1:6-9. To the true Church of Christ alone will God give the Messianic Kingdom. Some who really have Christ and His work of sacrifice as their foundation will be saved, but at the expense of all their works, their character-structure which the "fire" of this Day will consume. The tare class in the nominal churches will be bundled and "burned," not as individuals, but as professed Christians; that is to say, their professions will be seen to be without foundation.

Saved as Through Fire.

The ones who are upon the Rock Christ Jesus, the only true Foundation, are those who have accepted Jesus as their Ransom-sacrifice, and have consecrated themselves wholly to God through Him.. All these “have been called in one hope of their calling.” (Eph. 4:4). Many of these will fail to make their calling and election sure, and will suffer great loss. They (did not build properly upon this Foundation, Christ, a structure of gold, silver, and precious stones of Truth and of whole-hearted loyalty to the Lord. They will suffer the loss of the Kingdom, and through much tribulation will take a lower place, before the Throne—not rulers, but honourable servants of the ruling class. All who have been begotten of the holy spirit must either be born upon the spirit plane or lose life altogether. Those who prove wholly faithful will be born Divine beings. Those not wholly faithful and who miss the great “prize,” though not denying the Lord that bought them, will be born spirit beings of a lower order.

The tribulations which characterise the end of this Age will thoroughly awaken these careless ones. Certain special tribulations, we understand, have come to those who were of this class all through the Age. But apparently a large number of these are living now, at the close of the Age; and these must go through “the great tribulation,” and must wash their soiled robes and make them white in the blood of the Lamb. (Rev. 7:9-17). They will have a blessed portion after their purification, but far less glorious than that to which they were called.

The Apostle Paul in his writings lays special emphasis upon the fundamental importance of correct doctrinal teaching. It made no difference whether Paul or Apollos or even an angel from Heaven, taught anything, it must be in harmony with the foundation doctrines which had been given them by the Lord. (Gal. 1:6-12). He assured the Church that what he had taught them was from God; and that even if an angel should bring them another gospel, it would be a proof that such angel had deflected from loyalty to the Lord. That Jesus Christ died to secure the Redemption-price for, Adam and his race is the foundation doctrine of the Church, which was received from Jesus Himself and from His faithful mouthpiece and which was shown in the Divinely given types of the Law. Whoever taught this fundamental truth faithfully was a real help to the people of God. Yet even such a teacher might help them to build, even on this proper foundation, a faith and character structure which would not stand the tests of the great Day of the Lord.

Invulnerability of the Truth.

This prophecy of our text is still in process of fulfilment. The “refiner’s fire” is even now doing its work, and thousands and tens of thousands are falling all about us. The Prophet’s query is very pertinent at this time. We see that the false teachings which have come down during these many centuries since the Apostles fell asleep have made humanity incapable of reasoning correctly on religious subjects. In the past we have had our own experiences along this line. Whenever anything religious was mentioned we seemed to lose our common sense. Now we have lost our fear of the dread penalty of using our reason. We have come back to the teachings of Jesus and the Apostles, and we find them grand and beautiful.

Those who have been teaching errors will soon be ashamed (Isa. 66:6), while the fire of this Day will only manifest the Truth to all. No power, no tongue, no pen, can successfully contradict the Truth, It is strong before its enemies and before all who make assaults upon it, and ere long the folly of its foes shall be made known to the whole world. “There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.”

Significance of the Presence of the King.

The coming of the King to possess His Kingdom will mean a personal as well as a national and a church examination, judgment and treatment. It will mean, when the Kingdom is fully inaugurated, the suppression of vice in a manner and- to a degree never attempted by any earthly reformer. There will be no license to do evil in any form. The only liberty granted will be liberty to do right. It is no wonder that so few experience joy at the proclamation of the return of earth's rightful King to reign! To many it will mean the loss of their present advantages over their fellow- men. To many it will mean the prohibition and cutting-off of sins now indulged in and enjoyed.

Nevertheless, the King is not only coming, but is here; and the present troubles -and -shakings in church and state and the general awakening of the people are the results of influences emanating from that King. Though men know it not, it is the work of the Lord that is even now preparing for the wreck of all the kingdoms of the earth, that the way may be opened for the establishment of righteousness in the world, that men's hearts may be humbled and prepared for the righteous Government which is to take control of earth. Worldly men cannot realise this; for this Kingdom cometh not with outward observation—with outward show and display. therefore they cannot say, "Lo, here," or "Lo, there."

In spite of the increasing trouble, socially and industrially., these continue to hope for peace, trying to convince themselves and others that the trouble must soon be brought to an end, and that matters will then go on as formerly. They blind themselves to the true conditions and refuse to believe that God has determined to permit this trouble to spread and involve the entire World, and., to bring about the utter overthrow of the Present Order of things. Selfishness, pride, and love of money have closed their eyes. We give here an extract from a poem written some years ago by a Christian minister, which forcefully describes present conditions and the judgment of God which is now to be visited upon the world for their lasting good:-

"Woe to the Age when gold is god, and law a solemn jest, That helps the boldly vile to crush the noblest and the best; When Mammon o'er cheap millions flings his gilded harness strong,

And drives them tame beneath his lash clown broad highways of wrong;
While Truth's shrill clarion down the sky peals faintly o'er the rout,
And dust and fumes of earth and sin shut Heaven's blest sunlight out!
When Mammon o'er cheap millions flings his gilded harness gloom,
In righteous wrath to purge the world in Sodom's fearful doom!"

But we are thankful that while the judgments of a righteous God against sin must come at this, time, yet the ultimate results will be glorious, when the world will come forth chastened, subdued, purified by the awful baptism of fire and blood when they shall come and see that sin, selfishness, and corruption have wrought their legitimate outcome. Then mankind will be ready to cry to the Lord and to long for His deliverance, and He will be entreated of them and will lift them up and bless them.

But the coming of the King means much trouble and the general overturning of the kingdoms of this world which, while professing to be kingdoms of God, are really under the control of the "prince of this world," Satan, "the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience." (John 14:30; 16:11; Eph. 2:2). It means the shaking of society in a manner and to an extent never before known, and so thoroughly that another shaking will never be necessary. (Heb. 12:26, 27). It means the breaking in pieces of the empires and governments of the world as a potter's vessel. It means the passing away of the present ecclesiastical "heavens," and the fall of many of its bright "stars." At present the sunlight of the true Gospel, and the moonlight of the Law with its types and shadows, are obscured by the thick clouds of worldly wisdom. "The sun shall be turned into darkness, the moon into blood."—Joel 2:30, 31.

While many would rejoice to see society relieved of many of its selfish, life-sapping ulcers, they seem to realise that so just and impartial a Judge as the Lord Himself might cut off certain long-cherished sins to which they desire to cling; they fear to have their personal selfishness touched. And their fears are well-founded. He will bring to light all the hidden things of darkness, and correct and suppress private as well as public sin and selfishness. He will expose depths of corruption never before realised. He will make "Justice the line and righteousness the plummet; and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding place." (R.V.). He will "bring down them that dwell on high, the lofty city. He layeth low . . . even to the dust." He will bring down them who have "made lies their refuge." Isa. 28:15, 17, 18; 26:5, 6.

Lift up Truth's Glorious Banner.

It is written that the Day of the Lord would come as a thief and a snare upon the whole world, and that only God's fully consecrated Church would be in the light and not be taken unawares. Many of the consecrated have been deceived by looking for the Heavenly King to come again in the flesh. They forget that the only reason for His coming in the flesh at His First Advent was "for the suffering of death" as man's corresponding-price; and that now He is highly exalted, a glorious spirit Being. "He was put to death in flesh, but made alive in Spirit." (1 Pet. 3:18). They forget that the Apostle Paul also said, "Though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet henceforth know we Him so) no more." (2 Cor. 5:16). The true children of God are coming more and more to see how the Master comes at His Second Advent, and not expecting to see Him in the flesh and with their natural eyes.

We who know that the King of Glory and His blessed Kingdom are the only remedy for the wrongs and woes of man should be pointing the' groaning creation to this Kingdom, rather than to the poultices of their own contriving, which can do no real good. Tell them the meaning of present world-wide conditions, and how, beyond the troubles now over-spreading the world, will come the glorious Times of Restitution foretold by all the holy prophets since the world began. Tell them that the death of Jesus was the Redemption-price for the entire race of Adam, and that His return is for the purpose not only of delivering His Church, but to bind Satan and set free all his captives, including all who are in the graves, giving all who will an opportunity to come into the liberty of sons of God, under the terms of the New Covenant, soon to be established.

Question Box.

Question.—What is the understanding of Matt. 27:52, 53.

Answer.—That these verses do not teach that some of the saints were resurrected at the time of the earthquake, etc., at our Lord's crucifixion, is evident from other Scriptures, such as Acts 26:23—"That Christ should suffer and that He should be the first that should rise from the dead." Also Col. 1:18, "The first-born from the dead, that in all things He might have the pre-eminence." The one or two, who, like Lazarus, were brought back from death, were not resurrected to life, but merely brought back to this dying condition and in course of time again passed away, and were buried to await the resurrection.

This passage in Matthew seems quite out of accord with other Scriptures. The oldest M.S.S., the Sinaitic, omits the words, "and the graves were opened," in verse 52, also "and went," in verse 53. It is possible that when the earthquake occurred at the time of our Lord's death that the rocks being rent some bodies were raised up and came to view, and yet were not noticed until after the resurrection of Jesus. The day following our Lord's death being the Jewish Sabbath, when all would be quiet, and Jesus being raised early the next morning, would seem to support this view of the matter.

If our Father seems distant, it is because we have taken our portion of goods and travelled into a far country to set up ourselves, that we may foolishly enjoy rather than reverently serve.

My Desire.

I would that my soul might love
Thee more;
I hunger and thirst to be
For ever at rest and satisfied,
O Jesus, my Lord, in Thee. --E.H.D.

—Martineau.

Christmastide.

It-; we draw on towards another Christmas season; it is surely good to' call to mind the many blessings, both spiritual and temporal, that have been bestowed upon us again over the past months by our loving Father in Heaven. "Every good and perfect gift is from above, and ,cometh down from the Father of Lights," and while we do praise God for them all, no doubt we cannot be thankful enough for the greatest Gift of all time, the gift of God's dear Son, who, over nineteen hundred years ago, came into the world in the likeness of men, and "gave Himself for us that He might redeem us from all iniquity and purify unto Himself -a peculiar people, zealous of good works" this being the first portion of the great redemptive work on behalf of poor, fallen humanity. The words of the hymn seem so fully to express our thoughts:—

"O Lord of heaven and earth and sea,
To Thee all praise and glory be;
How shall we show our love to Thee,
Who givest all?

"Thou did'st not spare Thine only Son,
But gav'st Him for a world undone;
And freely with that Blessed One,
Thou givest all.

"To Thee, from whom we all derive,
Our life, our gifts, our power to give;
O may we ever with Thee live,
Who givest all."

Happy, then, are those whose hearts are thus in tune with praises and thanksgiving to God for His priceless Gift, even "in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation among whom ye shine as lights in the world, holding forth the word of life."

While at our Lord's first advent "many were in expectation of Him," how few really appreciated the angel's message, "Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people, for unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour which is Christ the Lord," for, thirty years later, when "He came unto His own (the Jewish people) His own received Him not"—only a remnant received Him. How similar is the position to-day; how few there are of those in expectation of Him, even at the present time of general enlightenment, who are receiving their Lord, now in the days of the Son of Man. This fact just bears out our Lord's own words, "When the Son of Man cometh, shall He find the faith on the earth ?"—indicating that comparatively few would possess the true faith.

The Lord's people, however, instead of feeling discouraged with the general trend of conditions, amongst professed Christians and the world at large, should, surely, lift up their heads and rejoice as they discern the outworking of the various features of the plan in harmony with the written Word. "Lilt() you, therefore, which believe He is precious . . . the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner . . . Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthoods, an holy nation, a peculiar people, that ye should show forth the praises of Him who hath called you out of darkness into His marvellous light." 1 Pet. 2:7, 9.

And how best may we show forth the praises of the Lord? Though He be not with us in the flesh, He is present in greater reality to His members than at His first advent, and His brethren are with us—the last members of His Body, whom He recognizes as part of Himself. (Mark 9:41, 1 Cor. 12:12). These, it is our privilege and responsibility to assist along the way in every possible manner, bestowing our love and kindness upon them, laying down our lives as unto the Lord Himself, who thus set us this example (John 15:12). The following lines, under the heading “Alabaster Boxes,” seem especially ‘appropriate at this season of the year, calling to mind the beautiful incident recorded in Matt. 26:6-13, which surely comes down to us, “for a memorial of her.” The words are as follow:—”Do not keep the alabaster boxes of your love and tenderness sealed up until your friends are dead. Fill their lives with sweetness. Speak approving, cheering- words while their ears can hear them and while their hearts can be thrilled and made happier by them; the kind things you mean to say when they are gone, say them before they go. The flowers you mean to send for their coffins, send to brighten and sweeten their homes before they leave them. If my friends have alabaster boxes laid away, full of fragrant perfumes of sympathy and affection, which they intend to break over my dead body, I would rather they would bring them out in my weary and troubled hours and open them, that I may be refreshed and cheered by them when I need them. I would rather have a plain coffin, without a flower, a funeral without an eulogy, than a life without the sweetness of love and sympathy. Let us learn to anoint our friends beforehand. Post-mortem kindnesses do not cheer the burdened spirit. Flowers on the coffin cast no fragrance backward over the weary way.”

Victories of Faith

WE are living in a day when faith is greatly discounted—in a day when people seem disposed to say, “I care not what a man believes, if only his life be honourable.” And by this generally is meant that faith is of no consequence. Those who so hold usually put honour of men as the highest goal. Their sentiments, translated into plain English, would be, “With all your getting, get money and prosperity; for without these, no matter what you believe, or whom you worship, you will never prosper in the present life, success in which is the only goal now recognised by an increasing number.”

The Bible standpoint, however, is the very reverse of this. God’s Word puts faith first, and builds character upon that faith. God declares that no human being can do perfect works. Hence He has not made works the standard. Faith is God’s standard, and He assures us that whoever has the proper faith must of necessity have works which will correspond to his faith. In line with this principle, we note that God’s favourites of the Bible have all been men of faith. Their faith did not make them perfect, -nor were their works always acceptable in God’s sight, but He punished them for evil works and rewarded them for their great faith.

Thus we find in the Bible record that some of God’s favourites committed grievous sins and made serious mistakes, and still, for all that, maintained themselves in God’s favour, by reason of their faith.

God Loves Not the Wicked.

Of all religious books ever written or ever read, the Bible is perhaps the most candid. It tells of the mistakes and sins of the very characters which it holds up as models and examples of men after God’s own heart. Yet the Bible leaves no room for any one to assume that God loves wickedness, or that the friends of God are the depraved of mankind. Quite to the contrary, the highest possible standards of righteousness, in word, in deed and in thought, are inculcated, and we are distinctly told that full acceptance with God can be only along the lines- of truth and righteousness.

God tells us that we and all mankind are by nature sinners. He tells us that we could do nothing to clear away our own guilt and the sentence that stands against us as members of the fallen race. But He also tells us that He purposes to adjust that matter for us satisfactorily; and hence that our responsibility is not for what we cannot avoid, but for what we can avoid—not for what we cannot do, but for what we can do. He tells us that the foundation of all our noblest endeavours will lie along the lines of confidence in Him. This confidence He calls faith. He assures us that without faith it is impossible to please Him, and he has shown us this in all the lessons of the Bible.

Faith is not Credulity.

Many make the mistake of supposing that faith is credulity. Under this delusion they are ready to swallow any and everything of a religious kind, if they are told that God says so. But this- is not the faith which the Bible encourages. On the contrary, the Bible would have us know definitely the things that God has promised, and exercise a definite faith in those things and give no heed whatever to the seductive vagaries of Satan, of our fellow men, or of our own ,imagination.

It is not for us to quarrel with those who take a different view of matters and who in the. name of faith bind their followers with ignorance and superstition, and seek to prevent them from using their reasoning faculties. It is for us to address those who are feeling after God if haply they might find Him—those who are not content with superstitions, but whose hearts and minds cry out after the living God and His definite Word, His solemn statement of His will respecting us, and of His Plan, and of the part which we may have therein. So Jesus and the Apostles attempted not to teach everybody, but merely those who hungered and thirsted after righteousness. In the language of Jesus, "He that hath an ear to hear, let him hear."

The Faith Before Christ Came.

Let us look into the past, and note the method by which God has all along sought His peculiar people. The first proclamation of God's purposes respecting our race was made to Abraham. God spake to Abraham, saying, "Walk as in My presence, and be thou perfect"—i.e., Do your best to be perfect. After Abraham had manifested some faith, God gave him further tests. When in obedience to those tests Abraham left his native land to live in Canaan, he manifested so great a faith that God called him His friend, and made to him the very first revelation of the Divine purposes in respect of humanity.

Abraham knew that there was a curse upon the race, under which the whole creation was groaning, going down to the tomb, and God's declaration to him was that the time would come when, instead of the curse, He would send a blessing. This meant to Abraham that, instead of men becoming more imperfect and wasting away in death, a change would come, by which they would be rescued from the dying condition, and resurrected from the power of the tomb.

This was a wonderful proposition, even for God to make; yet Abraham, with childlike faith, believed the Message. God declared to him that, because of his own faith, He would greatly bless him and his posterity, so that through him as a father eventually would come children who would accomplish the great work of blessing mankind, and would rescue all from the power of sin, Satan and death. The briefly epitomised statement of all this was in the words, "In thee and in thy Seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed."—Genesis 28:14.

What was it to have faith in that Promise? What did it mean to Abraham? Assuredly it meant that thenceforth Abraham's mind would take in a larger horizon—the world of humanity, instead of merely his own immediate family and flocks and herds, and his nearest neighbours. It meant that if God would—SO honour his posterity, Abraham would seek in everything to co-operate with God and that great Promise.

For years God tested Abraham's faith. Yet he still believed. "His faith staggered not." After Isaac had been born and as yet had no child, God directed that this son of promise, the one in whom the whole Promise centred, should be sacrificed. What a test of faith! What a grand development of faith Abraham had acquired when he was ready to obey the Voice Divine, accounting that God was able to raise Isaac up again from the dead! Oh, for such a trust in God! Oh, for such a faith! Oh, for such an appreciation of Divine Power! What could not be accomplished in the world through the Divine Message if such faith prevailed amongst God's children! What would God not do for children who would trust Him thus!

It was the same with Isaac and with Jacob. They trusted that same Promise. It influenced the whole course of their lives. It made them more like God. It shaped every interest of life. Although they understood practically nothing of how God would accomplish so great a blessing, their faith laid hold upon the fact. From their posterity God would raise up a holy people to be His agency, His channel, for instructing the world, ruling the world, uplifting the world, resurrecting the dead, bringing mankind back to all that was lost through Adam's disobedience.

Their faith might have had plenty of opportunities for stumbling, if it had been weaker. If they had been more worldly-wise, they might have said, How can God do this thing and yet be just? Having once pronounced a sentence, how can He clear the guilty? But their faith wavered not. In their hearts they said,

“God has promised; and what God has promised, He will do, and He will have His own way of accomplishing it.”

By and by, the nation of Israel as a whole was called the people of God. The nation as a whole entered into a Covenant with God, and He with them, through Moses, the mediator of the Law Covenant. Israel was impulsed by faith—faith in the Promise made to Abraham that God would use his posterity and through it bless all people, all of Adam’s race—the living and the dead.

The Covenant of Sinai pledged the people of Israel that they would be a holy nation, that they would keep God’s Law blamelessly. God covenanted that in that event he would fulfil in them the Promise made to Abraham. God knew that imperfect human beings could not keep His .per-feet Law. • But He would let them try; He would let them learn the lesson; He would through that lesson -give instruction to the angels respecting His own righteousness. He would also through it give instruction to Spiritual Israel, who later He would develop and through whom the blessings actually would come. This St. Paul explains, saying, “The Law Covenant was added because of transgressions, until the promised Seed should come.”—Galatians 3:19.

In other words, God started this work with Israel, in a typical manner, long centuries before the real Spiritual Israel would be developed. But He did not thereby do injury to the people who had covenanted to keep the Law, but who were unable to do so. On the contrary, they as a people were blessed by their endeavours to keep that Law, and blessed also by the chastisements which came upon them because of their failures and lack of faith.

But God especially blessed all of that people who shared Abraham’s faith, so that the Apostle Paul could enumerate, in addition to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, a considerable number who pleased God because of their faith, long centuries before Christ, the Spiritual Seed of Abraham came. Those Ancient Worthies, although they will not be the Seed of Abraham in the highest sense, on the spirit plane, will be the seed of blessing on the earthly plane—the channel through which the heavenly blessings will ultimately be extended to all nations.

What was it that impulsed the Jewish people during all those centuries past? Was it not faith in God—faith that He would fulfil the Promise made to Abraham? it surely was! And it is that Promise that still actuates such of the Jews as have not lost their faith such of them as are still Jews. Those who have lost the faith of Abraham are no longer in any sense of the word related to the Promise; for the Promise was according to faith.

St. Paul speaks sympathetically of the Jewish Nation, in respect of that original Promise which God made to them, saying: “Unto which Promise our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night, hope to come.” (Acts 26:7). And all the Jews, in proportion as they still maintain that hope, may still expect to come to a realisation of all and more than that of which they ever dreamed.

Faith Since Christ Came.

The coming of Christ did not change the Divine Purpose, and therefore did not change the faith of God’s people. Jesus and the Apostles believed and taught the very Gospel which, St. Paul says, God preached in the beginning to Abraham. (Galatians 3:8). The Apostolic Message also was that all the families of the earth were to be blessed through the Seed of Abraham. But there was an additional feature then to be proclaimed and to be believed; viz., that God had begun the work of providing this Seed of Abraham, The Messiah—that God had sent the Logos, His Sun, into the world, that He might become the Seed of Abraham on the spirit plane, and eventually fulfil every feature of the original Promise.

All the Jews were in expectation of the Messiah, but they were not all Israelites indeed; they did not all have the proper faith. God preferred, therefore, to allow some of them to remain in a measure of blindness on the subject, while others were granted a special anointing of the eyes of their understanding, their eyes of faith. To this class Jesus said, “To you it is given to know the mysteries of the Kingdom of God” — the Messianic Kingdom, through which the Seed of Abraham to bless all the families of the earth.

Then came another step of faith. The early disciples said: We desire to believe that Jesus, the Son of God, is the foretold Seed of Abraham, but we do not see Him doing the work of blessing the world. Instead of reigning in triumph to dispense to the world the blessings secured by His sacrifice, He has gone to Heaven. How shall we understand this?

The Mystery — Christ in You.

The answer of God through the Apostles was that “the faith once delivered to the saints” was still the same, but that now, under the guidance of the holy spirit, they were to understand that The Messiah would not be one person, but many persons—not Jesus alone would be the Seed of Abraham, but Jesus as the Head and the Church as His members, or Body, would be that Seed. St. Paul says, “Ye, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of Promise.”

Jesus was represented by the head of Isaac, the Church was represented by the body of Isaac, in that figure. it has taken the entire Gospel Age to develop, the Body of Christ, the Church.

Under another figure, Jesus was represented in Isaac, and the Church was represented in Rebecca, his bride. According to this figure, the antitypical Isaac has entered into glory, but waits for the development of the antitypical Rebecca. At the appointed and appropriate time the Seed of Abraham receives His Bride to Himself, and they twain will be one. And through the One, through the Kingdom of Glory, will come to all the families of the earth the blessing promised nearly four thousand years ago to Abraham.

This is “the faith once delivered to the saints,” the hope set before us in the Gospel—the faith that God will use the Seed. of Abraham to bless all humanity, and the hope that we, by faithful perseverance and trust, may become joint- heirs with Jesus, the Redeemer, in all that glorious inheritance of the Messianic Kingdom.

Let us not doubt the Wisdom of God in the arrangement which He has made, and which He has caused to be set forth in the Scriptures, viz., that this faith, based upon the Abrahamic Promise, is the Power of God by which it is His will that all His people shall be sanctified—separated so far as possible from the world and from sin; sanctified to Himself in Christ Jesus, their Lord. This is “the faith once delivered to the saints.” This is the faith which enables us to gain the victory over the spirit of the world, and to be separate, sanctified to God, for service here and hereafter.

Correspondence

Tasmania, 14/11/35. Dear Brother,

Loving Christian greetings in our dear Redeemer's Name. Thanks for cards; they are very good this year; enclose — for them.

Regarding the harvest; I quite think we have the same. thought. The harvest being the end of the age, I do not think it will be over till the last stone is permanently and quietly fitted into its respective place and the New Jerusalem is complete. In simple language, not until the last member has passed the veil.

Perhaps we cannot take the type too literally, as harvests differ in different countries, and again the harvest has its different phases; but always the wheat has to be in a fit condition to be harvested. "That faithful servant" was given power to send out the truth world-wide and the truth or sickle gathered out many. That the harvest was in full swing was obvious to the watchers, who were rearwarded by a bounteous repast, which has continued to the present by their girded and present Lord.

But have we not gone into another phase of the harvest? Is it not indicated by (1) The cessation of this world-wide dissemination of the truth, and cannot we envisage the result if once more it was sent out on a large scale, i.e., little or no interest; the Lord is in charge of this work we know. (2) The shaking, testing and polishing of those who have been reaped; in other words, the Bride making herself ready by gladly and joyously submitting to and learning the lessons intended by the great Master — learning to be the willing clay. (3) Do we not see now small scattered groups of God's children principally engaged in helping each other to make their calling and election sure, and thus truly assisting in the present phase of the harvest work.

How many have stood the tests to whom the truth at one time appealed. Few have heard and obeyed Rev. 18:4, except in a perfunctory manner, yet this separation, profound and complete, this coming out of the filthy, immoral thing, unto Christ, constitutes that which will distinguish the very elect from others. Rev. 14:9 15:2; 19:20; climax Rev. 20:4.

Perhaps concluding thoughts suggested by what has always surprised us, i.e., so few that we have seen have been sound on "the come out," but had apparently got only as far as resignation from their church. That they could not have fellowship or association directly or indirectly with what Christ calls harlots, seems to be unseen, missed, yet these will be counted as partakers of her sins, etc., going into her darkness.

With much warm Christian love to yourself and Sister.

Yours in Christ's Service, B.C.H.

Within the Holy Place.

“Truly God is good to Israel, even to such as are of a clean heart. But as for me, my feet were almost gone; my steps had well nigh slipped. For I was envious at the foolish, when I saw the prosperity of the wicked. For there are no bands in their death ; but their strength is firm. They are not in trouble as other men ; neither are they plagued like other men.” (Psa. 73:1-5).

“When I thought to know (or understand) this, it was too painful (difficult) for me; until I went into the Sanctuary of God ; then understood I their end.” (Psa. 73:16, 17).

“He that dwelleth in the secret place (sanctuary) of the Most High shall abide under the shadow (protection) of the Almighty.” (Psa. 91 ; 1).

WE have all doubtless, like David of old, observed many things, not only in the world, but also in our own experiences as the Lord’s followers, that we have found difficult to understand and to harmonise with a right conception of God’s wisdom and greatness. For example, why God permits evil, and why the righteous suffer and the wicked flourish, are problems which the natural mind cannot understand or appreciate.

These are among the deep things which -do not lie on the surface of the Divine revelation, but which can be appreciated only by those who, like David in figure, have gone into the Holy place or Sanctuary of God—the consecrated and spirit-begotten condition. The spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. (1 Cor. 2:10).

The Greater and More Perfect Tabernacle.

Israel’s Tabernacle, as well as its High Priest and. sacrifices, were all shadows, or types, of greater and more important things to come in the Divine plan. Their Day of Atonement sacrifices were typical of the better sacrifices of Christ—Head and body—offered during the present Age. Their High Priest, who offered these sacrifices, we are informed, served unto the example and shadow of heavenly things. (Heb. 8:5).

It is not our purpose, however, at present to consider the Tabernacle types in detail, but in order to obtain a proper setting of our subject, it is necessary, just to refer briefly to the general divisions of the Tabernacle.

The Court.-The Court, as all are aware, formed no part of the Tabernacle proper, but surrounded it on all sides. It was separated from the Camp by a wall of white linen curtains. Of the entire nation, only the Levites had access to the Court, in which they performed their allotted services. All the articles of furniture in the Court were either of copper, or of wood covered with copper.

In anti-type, we understand that the Court represents the justified condition and that the Levites who performed the services therein represent justified believers. Copper, which is peculiar to the Court, is a fitting symbol of the human nature, and thus it is indicated that the justified condition is a purely human condition. It is seen, moreover, that justification does not in any way change the nature of the believer, in the sense of giving him a spiritual nature, nor does it give him any claim to a heavenly hope or reward. All that justification can do for one is to cover the sins and imperfections of the human nature, in the sight of God, and if that one is still desirous of walking in the light, it serves as a wedding garment, whereby the believer may enter into consecration as a priest and become a new creature in Christ—a member of the Bride Class.

Accepted in the Beloved.

The Holy Place.—Within the first veil was the Holy place, or first apartment of the Tabernacle proper. Into the Holy place the Levites were not permitted to enter, nor even to look therein. All the furniture in the Holy was made either of gold or of wood covered with gold, which fittingly indicates that the Holy represents a condition which is something more than human. Gold, as is known, symbolises the Divine nature and thus, it would seem to teach, that those who enter the Holy place, are no longer human, from God's standpoint, but spiritual — begotten again as new creatures in Christ Jesus. (2 Cor. 5:17).

Into this condition the believer enters at consecration, and the passing of the first veil represents consecration and surrender of the human will to the will of God. The Altar in the Court represents the will of God, and upon this Altar all the human rights and privileges of the consecrated one are placed. The priests alone had access to the Holy place, and of the antitypical priests, the Apostle could say—"Ye are not in the flesh, but in the spirit if so be that the spirit of God dwell in you." (Rom. 8:9). The Holy, then, represents the present condition of all who are begotten again, as new creatures in Christ, and whose hope it is to be born of the spirit, in the first resurrection. (1 Cor. 15:49).

Beyond the Veil of the Flesh.

The Most Holy.—The Apostle informs us that the Most Holy, which lies beyond the second veil, represents heaven itself. (Heb. 9:24). Just as the passing of the first veil represents the consecration of the human will of the believer to God, so the passing of the second veil represents the actual end of the human being in death and its entrance into the heavenly condition, as a spirit being.

Our Lord was in the Holy place during the 3-1- years of His ministry, from Jordan to Calvary, and the change of nature which he received through His death and resurrection was, in His case, the passing of the second veil—His entrance into the presence of God, the antitypical Most Holy. It was into the Most Holy that the typical priest had to bring the blood of the Day of Atonement sin-offerings, in order to make satisfaction for sin. Likewise also, our Lord, after passing the veil of death, had to ascend into "heaven itself," there to appear in the presence of God for us. (Heb. 9:24).

Dwelling in the Secret Place.

It has already been noted that the priests only were permitted to enter the Holy place, or spirit-begotten condition. The fact that the Levites in the Court had not access to the Holy and dared not even to look therein, harmonises with the Apostle's statement, that the natural man (even though justified) cannot understand the things of the spirit, for they are spiritually discerned. (1 Cor. 2:14).

The Levites in the Court, however, had access to the Laver at which it was their privilege to wash. The Laver is understood to represent the Word of God as viewed from the standpoint of the natural mind, by those who are in the Court, or justified condition, and is evidently referred to by the Apostle when he speaks of the "washing of water by the word." (Eph. 5:26). The washing at the Laver by the Levite (justified believer), would indicate his recognition of the moral obligations contained in the Word of God and a consequent striving, on his part, to put away sin and all the defilements of the flesh. Otherwise, Stated, washing at the Laver would represent the efforts and desires of the justified believer to cleanse the flesh and live a righteous and moral life, in the sight of God.

In passing, perhaps it is well to remind ourselves that no amount of washing or cleansing of the human nature can make it spiritual, nor give to the believer a heavenly hope or spiritual enlightenment. Such privileges belong exclusively to the Holy place, and are the portion only of those who enter there through a consecration of the human nature to death and a begetting to a new and spiritual life in Christ. (2 Cor. 5:17).

Israel's High Priest, who alone had access to the Holy place on the typical Day of Atonement represented Christ—Head and body—in the consecrated and spirit-begotten condition during the Gospel Age. Within the Holy, the Priest had access to the special light of the golden candlestick; to the table of shewbread and to the incense altar. These represented spiritual blessings and privileges, enjoyed by all who are new creatures in Christ during the present Age—privileges and blessings to which the spiritually begotten only have access. , Privileges of the Holy Place.

The Golden Candlestick.—The light from the golden candlestick was the only light within the Holy, the natural light of day having been excluded by the curtains and walls of the Tabernacle. This illumination, which was for the benefit of the priests, represents the inner light of the spirit of God which comes to all who are begotten of the holy spirit. (1 John 1:7).

As illustrating the difference between the Court, or justified condition, and that of the Holy, or spirit-begotten condition, we may take the example of the Lord's followers before and after the day of Pentecost. Before receiving the begetting of the spirit at Pentecost they were naturally-minded men, though justified, and could appreciate only the things that belong to the Court, or justified condition. Their hope of a kingdom was an earthly and material one, and their ideal of the long looked-for Messiah was a mighty ruler, who would sit upon a material throne. (Acts 1:6).

After Pentecost the vision changed from the material to the spiritual plane, for they had then, in figure, entered the Holy place. John, the Revelator, recording in symbol. this transition in the hopes and outlook of the Lord's followers at Pentecost, describes it as a "door opening in heaven," followed by a trumpet voice saying, "Come up hither." Prior to this there had been no heavenly hope and no call to a heavenly kingdom. (Heb. 3:1).

It was at Pentecost that the acceptance of the members of the Body of Christ began, and in describing this experience, the Revelator says :—"Immediately I was in the spirit." From this time onward, the hopes of the Lord's followers were no longer centred upon an earthly kingdom, but upon a throne, or government, which was spiritual— heavenly in its origin. (Rev. 4:1, 2).

This spiritual illumination, which is the privilege of all who enter the Holy place is ours, but only so long as we abide in Christ. Should we lose our standing in Christ as a member of the High Priest, or leave the Holy place, we go out again into what the Scriptures describe as "outer darkness"—the darkness of the human mind unilluminated by the Spirit of God. (Matt. 25:30). Obviously, but few of those who have heard the call to-membership in Christ during the present age have made their calling sure by complying with its terms. The majority of professing Christians, it would seem, from various causes, have never entered the Holy place and thus have never been accepted as new creatures in Christ, nor have they received the spiritual illumination. (Heb. 10:32).

Meat in Due Season.

The Golden Table.-The shewbread, or bread of presence, placed upon the golden table in the Holy place, was for the sole use of the Priest. This bread represents the spiritual food, placed upon the table of the Lord and specially provided for the priestly class of this Age. (Heb. 5:14). While the Laver in the Court represents the Word of God, as appreciated by the natural mind which simply comprehends its moral, or surface truths, the table Of shewbread in the Holy represents the Word of God, as appreciated by the spiritually-minded Priest. "The spirit searcheth , all things" (hidden in the word), "yea, the deep things of God." (1 Cor. 2:10). There is a great difference between "washing through the water of the word" and feeding upon the "strong meat" on the table of the Lord. The Levite could wash his flesh in the Court, and be clean, but he could neither see nor handle the spiritual food upon the table of the Lord in the Holy place, which was set aside for the special use of the consecrated Priests.

The water of the Word represents the moral precepts and teachings of the Scriptures, which can be understood and should be appreciated by all who make any profession of following the Lord, or of putting- away the sins of the flesh. (Rev. 1:5). The shewbread, on the other hand, represents the deep and spiritual truths or doctrines which reveal to the consecrated one the basis of his faith and hope as a member of Christ and as a joint-heir in His Kingdom. This strong meat, which reveals the "mystery of Christ," does not lie on the surface of the Word of God, but is hidden in the types and figures of the Law; in the visions and dreams of the Prophets and in the songs and ecstasies of the Psalmist. (Luke 24:44).

As new creatures we cannot grow strong spiritually, except by feeding upon these deep and spiritual doctrines, and to this end we have the assurance that the spirit of truth will guide us into all truth (now due) and additionally show us things to come. (John 16:13). The difference, then, between the Court condition and that of the Holy place is the difference between morality and spirituality, or the Christ life. (2 Cor. 5:17). Morality relates to the rudiments of the flesh and human mind, whereas spirituality relates to rudiments of Christ—the new creature.

The Flesh Profiteth Nothing.

Minding Earthly Things.—The danger with many to-day who, as new creatures have "begun in the spirit," is, lest they should "end in the flesh." From the standpoint of faith the new creature in the Holy is said to be "living in the spirit," which means that he is spiritually-minded, and views matters from the standpoint of the mind, or spirit of God. Just as the health and strength of the natural man depends largely upon his daily food, so likewise the strength and development of the spiritual man, or new creature, depend upon his supply of spiritual food. As already indicated, that spiritual food is represented by the shewbread on the golden table, and corresponds to the deeper truths, or doctrines, which the Apostle terms the "strong meat" of the Word of God. (Heb. 5:14).

Christendom has long ago forsaken and lost sight of this spiritual food and could not be regarded to-day as having any standing before God—not even that which is represented by the Court. The fact that one might declare that he believes in God or in Jesus would not justify him. Nothing less than a living and obedient faith in the promises of God through Christ will justify one and give him a righteous standing in the sight of God. (Jas. 2 :17).

Many of the brethren to-day are fast discarding the spiritual food of the Word of God, and like Christendom in general, are rapidly settling down to an earthly viewpoint of things which could only be described as efforts of the flesh along the lines of morality—living a good life. It is quite a rare and uncommon experience to-day to hear the brethren exhorted by their leaders to search for and feed upon the deep and spiritual doctrines represented by the shewbread of the Holy place. The result is that there is a famine amongst the brethren and through the lack of spiritual food many are weak and spiritually sick, and the great majority have gone to sleep.

The Meek Shall Eat and be Satisfied.

Days of Famine.—Famines, in the natural order of things, do not necessarily imply that there is a shortage of food in the world. Indeed, it often happens that whilst one section of the race is suffering famine conditions, others are enjoying a superabundance and have more than enough. The chief cause of a famine is failure on the part of those concerned to distribute properly nature's bountiful supplies. The same might be said regarding the spiritual food, for there never was a time when there was such an abundance of spiritual food upon the table of the Lord as at the present moment, and yet, it must be admitted that the vast majority of the Lord's people are to-day suffering famine conditions through lack of spiritual nourishment. (Psa. 37:19). If it be asked why there should be a famine in a land of plenty, we can only answer that the chief cause is the lack of distribution of the spiritual food amongst the brethren by those who profess to be their spiritual guides and teachers.

What would be thought of one, placed in authority over the natural food, if, when asked for bread by one who was physically starving, he prescribed for his immediate needs a bath? Doubtless in its proper time and place the bathing and cleansing of the flesh of the natural man is an essential adjunct to his health, but a hungry man requires more than the cleansing of his flesh in order to satisfy his hungry cravings and thus sustain his physical health and strength.

Figuratively speaking, that is what is taking place amongst the brethren to-day. There is a famine for the spiritual food, or sound doctrine, and instead of breaking to the brethren the bread of life—the spiritual food of the Holy place—they are warned by their leaders not to touch or handle these deep and spiritual doctrines of the Word lest they get puffed up Or suffer spiritual indigestion. On the contrary, they are instructed that what they really need is continuous and plentiful washings at the Laver—the Laver as already noted represents the moral and surface aspects of the Word of God.

In plain language, it is not the truth that is being dispensed to the spiritually hungry to-day but a kind of spiritualised morality. They call this building up a character, but a more appropriate term would be a striving to be “made perfect by the flesh.” (Gal, 3:3). The new creature is not nourished and developed by works of the flesh but by feeding upon the spiritual food of the Word of God. In order that the natural man may grow in physical health and vigour he requires not only the cleansing of his flesh with pure water, but also an abundant supply of pure and wholesome food. Likewise also the spiritual man requires much more than merely washing at the Laver with the water of the Word. He requires the spiritual food of the Holy place that he might grow up into Christ and thus, becoming spiritually matured, be able to overcome all the enemies of the new creature. (Eph. 4:12, 15). The development of character, therefore, so far as the new creature is concerned, is something more than mere morality. It is the transformation and development of the mind, in harmony with the will of God, as revealed by the deeper things of the Divine Word. (Rom, 12:1, 2).

It will be seen, then, that just as in the natural world there is a vast difference between bathing the flesh with water and eating a substantial meal so also is there a similar distinction in the spiritual world. The teaching of morality, with all its efforts to cleanse and control the flesh, while good and necessary in itself, should not be confused with the spiritual truths or doctrines of the word, which as the channel of the holy spirit feed and transform the new mind of the spiritual child of God.

Offer a Sacrifice of Praise.

The Golden Altar.—Another privilege which the priests in the Holy enjoyed was the offering of incense at the Golden Altar. Just as the laying of the sacrifice upon the Altar in the Court represented the consecration of the believer to do the will of God, so the offering of incense upon the Golden Altar, in the Holy, represented the continued and willing subjection of the mind of the new creature to the will of the Heavenly Father.

It is one thing to promise to be dead with Christ, but it is another and still more important. matter daily to pay our vows of Consecration unto the Most High and to be faithful unto death. The incense ascending into the presence of God from the fire on the Altar represents the spirit of praise and thankfulness to God for the privilege of following in the Master's steps and suffering with Him here below. It represents how the Heavenly Father views the faithful devotion and loyalty of the new creature, and is termed by the Apostle, a "sacrifice of praise." (Heb. 13:15). —"Old Paths"

Kept by His Power.

"Kept by the power of God, through faith, unto salvation." 1 Pet. 1:5.

With kindest wish, and prayerful thought this morning
I offer thee these simple words of cheer,
Whate'er may meet thee, in life's future dawning ;
May they afford thee comfort year by year !

Kept by His power no human arm upholding
No human hand outstretched to point the way.
But God's great love, His feeble child enfolding
Is all-sufficient for thy need each day.
Be not afraid, for as each need arises
With strong, absorbing, self-important claim;
God it will meet, with His divine surprises
If thou but call upon His Holy Name.

"Kept" when the world for thee its smile is wreathing,
When skies are fair, and life with roses spread ;

"Kept" when its frowns to thee it is bequeathing,
And clouds are darkly massing overhead.
His power to keep is strong, and true as ever,
No length of years can e'er its force abate,
His will to keep can never fail, no never ;
Whilst mercy stands at Heaven's wide open gate.
Then journey on, leave fear and anxious worry
To those who know not that the Lord cloth reign ;

Keep step with Him, forego impatient hurry,
Trust Him to make the rough, steep places plain.

The New Year.

“This New Year Thou givest me, Lord,
I consecrate to Thee,
With all its nights and days;
Fill my hand with service blest,
Fill my heart with holy rest,
And fill my life with praise.”

FR.H.

IT is fitting, that as another year is entered upon, we, as the Lord's people, should continually keep trace of the mercies and blessings enjoyed, otherwise the pressure of the cares of this life and the deceitfulness of riches would so crowd in upon our minds and hearts as to cover from our observation and ultimately choke up completely the springs of divine grace which, kept open, minister continually to our joy and refreshment in the holy spirit.

To this end it is appropriate that we have a daily review of the blessings we enjoy—that every evening we call to mind the privileges enjoyed, the providences which have guided our way, and the blessings, both temporal and spiritual, which have come to us ; some of them in common with the world in general and others of a special kind, known to and appreciated by those only who know the Shepherd and are known of Him—who hear His voice and to whom the instruction and guidance are continually a comfort and a joy.

It is appropriate, too, that we take weekly re- views, looking at the same mercies and blessings from a still broader standpoint of observation, reminding us of the rest into which we have entered through faith in the precious blood, and also of the rest that remains for the people of God, whereof He has given us assurance in that on the first day of the week He raised up Jesus from the dead.— Heb. 4:3, 9.

But it is with special appropriateness that at the close and opening of another larger cycle of a year we should take a still broader and more comprehensive view of our experiences, looking circumspectly at the way we have travelled and considering well which have been the steps which hindered progress, and which have been proper steps in the footprints of Jesus, bringing us nearer to the goal — the “mark” which we must surely attain if we would be accounted worthy of a share in the promised kingdom.

A year may seem a longer or a shorter period, according to the circumstances. To the mind of childhood it is a very long period, while to more developed minds, filled with the activities of life, it seems much shorter—speeding all too rapidly to permit the accomplishment of all the things desired to be achieved. Then again, the year will seem proportionately long as it has contained draughts of bitter experience or sufferings, mental or physical; and proportionately short, as it has contained joys and pleasures which seem to slip away all too quickly. To a certain extent such experiences are common to all mankind, yet the Christian, especially if he has been for some time in the school of Christ and is somewhat developed both in knowledge and in grace, has a larger capacity than others for grasping and appreciating life ; because, no matter how unsound his natural mind may have been, he has now “the mind of Christ,” “the spirit of a sound mind,” which is far better able than the natural mind to estimate matters at their true worth.

Such an advanced Christian, in viewing the year ahead, considers well the lessons over the year just closed, and recalls life's storms as well as its sunshine, its sorrows as well as its joys, its tears as well as its smiles, and sorrows not as others who have no hope. His troubles have been divested of their distressing features by the spirit of a sound mind and the instructions of God's Word, which assure all such that the trials, difficulties and adversities of life rightly accepted as lessons, are blessings in disguise—which. will work. out “a far more exceeding and an eternal weight of glory” in the life to come. —2 Cor. 4:16, 17.

He will perceive, too that his joys have been of a purer and more solid kind than any he ever knew before he was begotten of the holy spirit. They have not had commingled with them the bitterness of envy, malice and hatred, but have been unalloyed ; because they have not been rejoicings in iniquity, but rejoicings in the truth. Moreover. they have been much more numerous than ever before, because he not only is able to joy in the Lord, joy in His “Word, joy in the holy spirit, joy in fellowship with brethren of like precious faith, but by the grace of God he has been enabled additionally to joy in tribulation also—not because He loved tribulation, but because he loved the patience, the experience, the character, which God assures us. are a fruitage which all tribulations must yield us under His providence, if we are rightly exercised thereby.—James :3, 4; Rom. 5 :3.

Is it any wonder that these can rejoice in spirit, saying, “Praise the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all His benefits?” “He hath put a new song into my mouth, even the loving-kindness of our God.” Is it any wonder that these, looking back, can see in the year that is past, that that which has blessed and rejoiced them in every sense of the word has been of divine goodness, and that thus God has crowned the whole year with His favour toward them? These can say with faithful Joshua, “Not one thing hath failed of all the good things which the Lord your God spake.” (Joshua 23:14).

And what confidence does the fulfilment of all past favours and blessings from the Lord give to us, as we stand at the opening of another year—“Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I shall dwell in the house of the Lord forever,” should be our continual song as we press along under the protecting care of Him, who “numbers the very hairs of your head.”

After 1900 Years.

To the Rev. Howard J. Charter, B.A., RD., is attributed the following statement :—

“The world has now reached the stage when Christianity has more adherents than any other single religion, yet it remains a fact that 1.900 years after Calvary two-thirds of the world’s population, say, 1,200,000,000, are still without the saving knowledge of Christ.”

From the usual teachings of the churches—that unless a man is saved during the present life there is no hope beyond the tomb—what a dark, sad condition this would be. Two-thirds of all at present living would have to be considered as eternally lost, but not only two-thirds of the present generation, but of all previous generations. That would indeed be a terrible thing, but again be it remembered that one-third reckoned as having received the saving knowledge of Christ includes everyone in what are called Christian countries. Who that understands the Christian faith will claim that even one-twentieth of the population of any of the large cities of our so-called Christian lands is truly Christian? How many are seeking to carry out the teachings of Christ or to walk in His steps of consecration?

Yet we read that Christ “tasted death for every man”; He “gave Himself a ransom for all,” and that “God will have all men to be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth.” Again, that He who “poured out His soul unto death,” “shall see of the travail of His soul and be satisfied.” Isa. 53.

How could our Lord be satisfied at such a result of His great purchase price for the human race? Surely, there would be some great lack or failure in the Divine purpose if only so few out of earth’s millions were to be benefited by Calvary’s sacrifice, of which it is declared that “God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish but have everlasting life.” How void of meaning would be the glad message of the angels at the birth of Jesus, “Behold I bring you goodtidings of great joy which shall be to all people,” and also the promise to Abraham and others—“In blessing I will bless thee, and in thee and thy seed shall fill the families of the earth be blessed.”

However, the Bible reveals a plan and purpose wider and more reasonable than the creeds of the dark ages, still held by so many. It shows that far from any intention of converting the world (luring this present age, God has been selecting only “a little flock,” to whom “it is the Father’s good pleasure to give the Kingdom,” or, as Paul calls it,

“the seed of Abraham,” Gal. 3. When the full number of the Church or “the elect” is completed, then the new age will commence; the Church will reign with Christ to bless and restore to perfect human life all the willing and obedient. Rom. 8:19- 22; 11:25-27; Isa. 35; Acts 15:14-17, etc.

Christian Experience.

Christian experience is not the exaltation of feeling, or ecstasy that finds expression only when inspired by the ardent songs, prayers and exhortations of Christian fellowship.

Christian experience is “putting off the old man with his deeds, and putting on the new man which is renewed in knowledge after the image of Him that created him.”

Christian experience is growth—”To grow in grace and in knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ”; to be rooted and grounded in Love, and grow up in all things like unto Him who is our Head.

Christian experience is to build up a character, “adding to faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness love.”

Christian experience is to be labourers in the Lord’s vineyard, workers together with God; and it is to be soldiers of the Cross armed cap-a-pie with the whole armour of God, following the Captain of our salvation.

Christian experience is visiting the widow and fatherless in their affliction, and keeping ourselves unspotted from the world.

As an example of true Christian experience, you are referred to the experience of Paul as recorded in 2 Cor. 11 and 12.

It is in such schools as these that the Christians gain experience, and this is the true experience that worketh hope that maketh not ashamed because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts.—Selected.

Least in the Kingdom.

IT would be difficult to express a higher tribute to John the Baptist than that which Jesus paid him in the words of Luke 7:28. Again he said, "There hath not risen a greater Prophet than John the Baptist." If -then John was so holy a man, so great a man from the Divine standpoint, why did our Lord in this text declare that the least in the Kingdom of Heaven would be greater than John? This text has puzzled Bible exponents for many a day. It has seemed to many to be contradictory.

But just as soon as we turn on the light contained in that word "Kingdom," the entire subject becomes clear. God had promised a Messianic Kingdom, and Jesus had come that He might be the Head of that Kingdom. The steps leading to the Kingdom honours and glories were steps of obedience to God, even unto death, and these steps Jesus had begun to take. On the cross He declared, "It is finished." He had finished the work of proving Himself loyal to God and to the Truth even unto death on the cross.

Jesus thus became the Great Conqueror, the great High Priest, the great King of Glory, being exalted to the heavenly state in His resurrection. But, as the Great King, He was to have associated with Him in His Throne His Bride class. As the Great Priest, He was to have an under-priesthood, a "Royal Priesthood." As the Great judge of the world, He was to have associates; as St. Paul declares, "Know ye not that the saints shall judge the world?"--1 Cor. 6:2.

In the Divine Plan this company of associates with Jesus in His glorious Kingdom were as much fore-known and fore-ordained as was His and His share in the Kingdom. As it was necessary for Him to undergo trials and testings of loyalty unto death, so it must be with the class called to be His associates—"He was tempted in all points like as we are." Thus His Message is, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in My Throne, even as I overcame and am set down with My Father in His Throne" These would be His followers in His footsteps, none could precede Him. His work was necessary first, to open up for His followers a new and living way, through the veil—that is to say, through His flesh — through His sacrifice.

"Some Better Thing for Us."

While about five hundred brethren became Jesus' consecrated followers during His earthly ministry, they were not then accepted of the Father as sons, and not begotten of the holy spirit until Pentecost. God would not recognise any as sons until Jesus had finished 'His sacrifice, and, as the great Advocate, "Appeared in the presence of God for us"—as our Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the Righteous. John did not belong to this class, just as Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and all the Prophets did not belong to it. In God's providence their reward will be different from that of the Church—theirs will be an earthly reward. They will be resurrected to human perfection. They will have to do with the human phase of the Kingdom, which amongst men will represent Messiah and the Church, who will be spirit beings, but invisible to men, and whose dealings with mankind will be through those noble characters, the Ancient Worthies.

We are not to infer that those glorious characters mentioned in the Scriptures who lived before Christ's time were ignoble or less faithful than the Gospel Church, but merely that God promised them the earthly perfection, while He has promised the Bride of Christ the heavenly perfection. They will not, like the remainder of mankind, come forth to imperfection, to attain perfection gradually (during the thousand years of Messiah's reign; the record is that they will come forth as perfect human beings. That will be the reward of their faithfulness. St. Paul explains the entire matter in Hebrews, the 11th chapter. He tells of the faith and heroism of those Ancient Worthies and that "they had this testimony, that they pleased God." There will be no necessity for testing them in the future. Their acceptance with God is already proven and declared.

Nevertheless, in God's order the earthly Kingdom and restitution blessings for the world cannot begin until the Kingdom class, Christ and the Church, shall first be completed. Thus the Apostle declares, "All these died in faith, not having received the (earthly) things promised to them, God having provided some better thing for us (the Church), that they, without us, should not be made perfect." The glorification of the Church, her resurrection to perfection, must first be accomplished before the blessings through them can proceed to the natural seed of Abraham, and then through Israel to all nations.—Heb. 11:38-40.

Not the Bride but the Friend.

John the Baptist seemed to either comprehend the situation or else he spoke the truth by prophecy when he declared, "He that hath the Bride is the Bridegroom, but the friend of the Bridegroom hearing His voice, rejoiceth greatly. This my joy therefore is fulfilled.” He perceived that in God’s providence lie had a very honourable and blessed station and work to accomplish, but lie was to be neither the Bridegroom nor a member of the Bride class.

This does not imply that John was disappointed at the time, nor that he and the other Ancient Worthies will be disappointed when they come forth in the resurrection to find a Bride class selected to a higher place than theirs. On the contrary, their cup of blessing being full, and never having been begotten of the holy spirit to a spirit nature, they will not be able to comprehend or appreciate any blessings higher than their own. Just, for instance, as a fish in the water, seeing a bird dying in the air, would not be jealous of the bird and its greater freedom, but, on the contrary, would be better satisfied in the water, its natural element, so all natural men, not begotten of the holy spirit, will appreciate more the earthly blessings which Divine providence has provided for them.

In this very lesson Jesus intimates all the above, saying, “The Law and the Prophets were until John.” He was the last of the Prophets. He introduced Jesus, the Head of The Kingdom class. Jesus further declared, “If ye are willing to receive it, this is Elias which was to come.” That is to say, those of you who are able to appreciate the matter may understand that John the Baptist did a work which was in full accord with the prophecy which declared that Elijah must first come and do a reformatory work before the Messiah would come.

Curiosity is not Religion.

Addressing the multitudes the Great Teacher inquired, Why did you go out to the wilderness to see John? Was it to hear his message? Was it because God spoke through him as a Prophet as the wind makes music through the reeds? Or did you go out to see a man in fine clothing and of kingly state?

What really drew to the wilderness to John’s teaching was that he was God’s Prophet; as it is written, “Behold, I send My messenger before Thy face, who shall prepare the way before Thee.” This preparation for Jesus John made with the Jewish nation. His message was that the Kingdom of Heaven was about to be offered to them, and that only the holy would be ready to receive it.

But neither John nor his hearers fully realised in what way the Kingdom would be offered to the people, namely, that it would be an offer, first, of a place or share in the Kingdom, and that the terms would be full consecration to the Lord, to walk “the narrow way.” Jesus again testified, “If ye had received John ye would have received Me.”

In other words, all who received John’s message were such as were in heart condition to receive Jesus; and the same spirit of indifference which permitted Herod to imprison John and to finally behead him marked the Jewish leaders and their unbelief. John as a Prophet was abstemious to the extreme, and they said, “He hath a devil.” Jesus presented Himself less peculiarly, eating and drinking and being clothed as other people, and of Him they said, “Behold a gluttonous man and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners.” Thus was it demonstrated that the fault was not in the manifestation of God’s providence, but in the hearts of the majority of the Jews.

Rivers of Living Water.

(John 7:37, 38; Ezek. 47 :1-12).

(Convention Address).

HERE we have an invitation from Christ Himself to thirsty ones, to come and drink of Him and find complete comfort, refreshment and satisfaction—"he shall never thirst." But that is not all; it teaches much more than that. It is Jesus' ideal of what a Christian should be down 'here in this parched world, as also in the world to come. Everyone who is vitally connected to that great Fountain of truth and life becomes himself the centre of a spiritual influence. There is in him a power of life, which, when quickened by faith, flows forth as a river, carrying life and refreshment to others.

The occasion of this gathering, mentioned in our text, was the Feast of Tabernacles. The heart of the sentence is in the last word, "water." Water is an essential of life, plenty of water means life; absence of water brings suffering and sickness, dearth and death. The history of the world reveals that mankind has always clustered about the watercourses. Look at the rivers, seashores and lake edges, and you will see life, cities and fruitful fields.

Those men who heard Jesus speak would probably think of their favorite river—the Jordan. It is said that no valley exceeds in beauty and fruitfulness that of the Jordan and the hillsides sloping down to the edge of that stream. Now, plainly, Jesus is talking of something that may, through us, exert as decided an influence upon the lives of those with whom we come in contact, as water has exerted and still does on the history of the world, and as the Jordan does in that wonderful land of Palestine.

"If any man thirst." Thirst means desire, intense desire; it is perhaps the strongest word to express desire. Physical thirst will completely control your actions. If you are very thirsty you can do nothing till the gnawing desire is satisfied; one cannot read, study or talk. It is said that it is agony to be intensely thirsty; to die of thirst is extremely painful. Jesus used that word "thirst" to express interest desire. Are you thirsty? Is there a yearning down in our hearts for something we have, but desire in fuller measure? Yes, indeed, we have already drank of that life-giving stream, "My thirst was quenched, my soul revived, and now I live in Him." "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst." Pitiable are they that need, and do not know their need. You know there is a special promise for thirsty ones—"I will pour water upon him that is thirsty." (Isa. 44:3). It is not only a present satisfaction, but a continual comfort flowing from Christ — "He shall never thirst"; "Of His fullness have we received and grace for grace."

Take notice of the quantity of water—"Rivers." Not a Jordan merely; that would be wonderful, but Jordans and Niles and Euphrates, etc.—"rivers of water." There is in the Christian a power of life everlasting, carrying with it influence and fruitfulness; it lives and flows in heat or cold, pain or pleasure. Now notice the kind of water, not like that water in the River Jordan but "rivers of living water"—"water of life as clear as crystal." you remember that in Ezekiel's vision the waters constantly increased in depth and that everywhere they went there was healing, abundant life, prosperity, beauty, food and a continual harvest the year round, and all because of the waters of the river. Truly they were indeed waters of life (in the vision), which will flood the earth over in the Millennial Day.

Now mark that little but very significant phrase "out of." It is not "Into," but "out of." All the difference in the lives of men lies in the difference between these two expressions. "Into" is the world's preposition; every stream turns in, and that means a "dead sea." Many, a man's life is simply the circumference of a dead sea, and the same is true of many professing Christians, of whom Paul says, "Their God is their belly, whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things." (Phil. 3:19).

Jude also speaks of those who have once known the truth, who once drank of that life-giving stream, but had turned from it. "Clouds are they without water . . . raging waves of the sea." "They have hewn out cisterns that can hold no water." (Jer. 2:13).

But "out of," are the Master's words; His thought is of others. The stream must flow in and pass through if it is to flow out; it is judged by its direction and Jesus would turn it outward. There must be, nevertheless, good connections upward, and a clear channel inward, but the objective point is outward—outward toward a parched earth, to those who have a thirst and especially to where the trees of righteousness grow. But before it can flow out it must fill up. An outflow in this case means an overflow. There must be a flooding inside before there can be a flowing out, and bear in mind that it is only the overflow from the fullness within our own lives that brings refreshing to anyone else. However, someone may say, "I cannot hold much." Well, what if you cannot, you can overflow greatly though—this life-giving water is a running stream. There may be some little seedling nearby that is thirsty for a few drops, and that is exactly the Master's thought—"Out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water!:"

Another may say, "I would like to be able to speak out fluently and be able to explain the truth." We are apt to be like Moses in Exod. 4:10-12, but the Lord does not want your gifts and ability as much as your personality as a channel. Then turn to Dent. 31, 32 and 33, and read the chapters in your spare time. This passage does not reveal one of slow speech and tongue then, does it? It fairly burns with eloquence. The Lord does not promise a new tongue, but, "I will be with thy mouth, and teach thee what thou shalt say."

You know in_ past days, the baby days of our Christian experience (my own) when our faith was not very strong because we could feast only on the milk of the Word, we would come in contact with well rounded out Christians and would say, "I wish I was like so and so, he or she is a well established Christian"; not daring to entertain the possibility of being like the Master, Himself. But I find now that there are living illustrations He has given us in the Gospels that go down to the very edge of human inability; He goes down to the lowest so as to include all. What proved to be true in this case may prove true with you and me.

The case in mind is found in John 4:5-30, 39, and is that of a woman, ignorant, prejudiced, without social standing, even worse—of a bad reputation. She probably had less influence in her town than anyone, she was a very unlikely person to be used of the Lord to bring a message to others, however, she took the message, telling plainly and earnestly what she knew and believed, and a real revival began. The record is, "Many believed because of the word of the woman"; — a simple witness with wonderful results. She had tasted a drop of that living water and it flowed on.

Next notice the source of the stream—"Out of his belly." It is usually understood that this means Out of his heart, or out of the midst of him. The Bible is always very exact in the choice of words. The blood is the life; the heart pumps the blood, but the stomach makes it. If you look at a book of physiology, and find a chart showing the circulation of the blood, you will see a wonderful network of lines, spreading out in every direction, but all running through lighter lines into heavier, and still darker, until every line converges in the great stomach artery. And everywhere the blood goes there is life:

Now turn to a book of physical geography and get a map showing the water system of some great valley, for instance, like the Mississippi, and you will find a striking reproduction of the other chart. Imagine now what is represented in this chart—hundreds of cool, clear springs, flowing into runs, brooks, creeks, large streams, river branches and rivers, and finally into the great river, the reservoir of all. Similar to the blood stream, everywhere the water goes there is life. The only difference between these two streams is in their direction. The blood flows from the largest toward the smallest veins; the water flows from the smallest toward the largest streams, but both bring life with its accompaniments of beauty, vigour and fruitfulness.

This is Jesus' picture of a Christian down here in this world. As the red streams flow out, propelled by the force- pump of the heart through a marvellous network of minute rivers, they take life to every part of the body, so, "he that believeth on me"—that is the vital connecting link with the great source of this stream of life — out of this supply of life within him shall go a flood-tide of life, bringing refreshing, cleansing, beauty and vigour everywhere within the circle of his life, even though he be unconscious of it.

There is a phrase in Joshua 3:15—"For Jordan overfloweth all its banks all the time of harvest." When there was a flood in the river there was a harvest in the land. Has there been a harvest in our lives? A harvest of the fruit of the spirit—love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness and temperance. If there has been a flood-tide in our hearts, a filling-up from above until the stream had to find an outlet somewhere, then surely there has been a harvest. A flooding of the heart always brings a harvest in the life.

St. Paul reminded the Roman Christians (Rom. 5:3-5) that when the holy spirit has a free flow in the life and takes possession of the heart there is love. "The love of God floods (Weymouth) our hearts"—there is a flood of love. Have you ever seen a flood? If so, you know something of its power. How the waters rush along cutting out new channels, widening old ones, washing down rubbish and often tearing away valuable property. It will rule the valleys and men stand back helpless. This pictures what the love of God will do when it floods our hearts. Love flushes the channel- ways of our hearts, often cleaning out some things we preferred keeping. It will tear with quite ruthless strength some prized possession from its mooring, and happy are they who can say with Paul in Rom. 5, "We glory in tribulation, for tribulation worketh patience," and count them but light afflictions.

The using of this flood tide will put out some fires on the lower levels of our old natures. It will cut new channels and broaden and deepen old ones; it will sweeten and make fragrant. Have you noticed how luxuriant the growth is where flood waters have stood and how great the harvest? So in the wake of this flood-tide of the love of God, there is sure to be an abundant harvest. Love flooding the heart will wash out the friction and grit. It does not dull the tongue but washes the bitter out of the mouth (See Prov. 10:1). It leaves one deaf and blind in some matters, but much keener-sighted and alert in others. May we all know more of the power of this wonderful flood. And know it we can if we but yield ourselves fully to God and allow the holy spirit to carry on its work of cleansing and sanctification, "For this is the will of God concerning you."

You know that a small plug in a pipe will stop the flow of a great quantity of water. The reservoir up yonder is full to overflowing of life-giving water, so keep the channel clear. It is so easy at the present time to get it choked. We have seen some good connections to the life-giving stream which later have become clogged. Why? A plug has been put in the pipe by themselves or someone else. Then some have endeavoured to cut their own channels, new and better they call them, but what sickly water lies in them. Sometimes it may be painful to clear out of our lives that which displeases the Master, but He said, "My grace is sufficient for thee."

Now, to fit all this into the present life only would be missing much for which we are intended, as "rivers of life-giving water." While Christians are spoken of now as "wells of water," "rivers," "lights in the world," "salt of the earth," "living stones," "the temple of the holy spirit," etc., yet much joy and beauty would be missed if we did not see the larger fulfilment of these wonderful figures. We realise there is to be a grand future age of blessing and Ezek. 47:1-12 especially applies then. In this chapter in Ezekiel the waters issued out from under the door of the temple and constantly increased in depth and healing powers. Note Psa. 46:4—all the "rivulets" when brought together make glad the city of God (Acts 3:20, 21). Now is the time when the living stones are being prepared for the temple. Each stone must be shapen, squared and polished by such instruments and tools as the Lord may be pleased to use and then finally measured for the required size and fitted into place.

Again in Rev. 22, we have the same picture of a pure river of water, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and the Lamb, not only making glad the city of God with its avenue of trees of life, but the leaves of them are healing and health-giving to the nations. In Ezek. 47, the river runs down to the "dead sea," healing its bitterness, causing life—humanity restored. You know how water will find its way into every corner and crevice, fill every place and overflow, so "the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea." The waters produce a multitude of fish; out of water fish will soon die, so it will be with those who refuse to drink of that water when "the spirit and the Bride say come." Rev. 22:17. We are now being prepared to gladden the city of God and in due time to make the parched desert a fruitful field, which will not only be a joy to us to pour out the water of life, but it will give joy also to those who will then "draw the water out of the wells of salvation." Then it will be seen by all why that "Rock" was smitten, that whosoever will, may drink of that flowing stream and have their thirst completely satisfied. Isa. 55:1-13.

Peter's Pence affected by Sanctions.

Vatican Severely Hit.

LONDON, 30th December.

THE Vatican has been severely hit by the sanctions, according to the Rome correspondent of the "Daily Express." The remittance of Peter's Pence has been rendered impossible. As the Vatican does not possess separate banking institutions foreign money must pass through the Italian banks to which the financial sanctions apply.

The Cardinals' commission for the administration of Vatican property reported to the Pope recently that there had been a tremendous decrease in the Papal income, The Papal Nuncio at Berne has twice seen the Secretary-General of the League on the matter, and it is understood that his complaints have been passed on to M. Laval, who promised to endeavour to arrange that the Vatican shall receive special consideration.

The close financial links between the Vatican and Italy has given rise to reports that Italy is using the Vatican's "frozen credits" abroad with which to make purchases from non-sanctionist countries. The "Osservatore Romana," however, strongly denies that there is any arrangement between Mussolini and the Vatican by which Peter's Pence could be used to finance Italian purchases.

[Peter's Pence is the term applied to the annual voluntary contribution made to the Holy See by Roman Catholics.]—Melbourne "Age."

The above report is very significant and comes in full agreement with expectations in the close of this present evil world. (2 Pet. 3:10).

Convention News.

IT is not easy, to express in words a report that will adequately explain the assemblies of the Lord's people extending over four days, in which we were privileged to participate, over the Christmas season in Melbourne recently. Such Convention gatherings need to be experienced to be able to appreciate all the good things that the Lord bestows upon those who come in the right heart condition, seeking to give and receive a blessing, as they enter into His gates with thanksgiving and into His courts with praise.

This Convention was held at the usual meeting rooms of the Melbourne Class on the days of 25th, 26th, 28th and 29th December. Full afternoon and evening sessions were held with Bible Studies and Addresses, while Fellowship Meetings between added to the general benefits.

In the first place we are very grateful to the Lord for His blessings and over-ruling providence in connection with every feature of the gatherings, and also for making it possible for some visiting brethren to attend from other States and distant parts of Victoria. To these dear friends themselves we add our thanks, appreciating greatly their presence and help with the programme, involving the sacrifice of time and means.

The afternoon of Christmas Day found the friends gathered together in expectation of a feast of spiritual food, and it was early in evidence that none were to be disappointed. After the words of Welcome on behalf of the Melbourne Ecclesia to all in attendance, and the singing of appropriate hymns, followed by fervent prayers, the afternoon Bible Study in Col. 7:12-19 provided a very fitting exercise for heart and mind. Many beautiful thoughts were brought out on this fine passage of Scripture, beginning with thankfulness to our Heavenly Father for our present position of favour in expectation of the gracious inheritance, inasmuch as He "bath delivered us from the power of darkness and translated us into the kingdom of His dear Son," on account of our faith. Our minds were then taken back to the time when our Lord Jesus was created, and who as the Logos was the Father's Agent in the creation of all other beings and things, and lastly, Himself being raised to be the Head of the New Creation, because of His obedience unto death, "for it pleased the Father that in Him should all fullness dwell."

Following the tea adjournment, a fellowship meeting- of "Praise and Testimony" was held, at which many messages of Christian love with passages of Scripture and hymns were received from the visiting members representing Classes and individuals in other parts. Also a goodly number of similar messages received through the post were read out from brethren situated throughout the Australian States, New Zealand and England. All these kindly greetings were very much appreciated by the assembled brethren, especially as we realised that so many, though absent in person, were present in spirit, and remembered us in prayer. The time allotted this meeting was then fully taken up with the individual testimonies of praise and thankfulness, and which proved of much encouragement and refreshing to all.

At the evening session a helpful and instructive address entitled "Obedience" was given by one of the visiting brethren. Space will not permit an explanation of the addresses here, but we are arranging to print some of them for the benefit of our readers. Thus, with concluding prayer the friends dispersed to their homes well satisfied and thankful for the first day of Convention.

The meetings on the following day were opened in the afternoon with praise and prayer, followed by a short address by one of our elderly brethren on the topic, "The Greatest Thing in the World," in which some very good thoughts were brought out on that beautiful chapter 13 of the 1st Corinthians. Next came the Bible Study in I Pet. 1 :3-8, enabling all present to enter into the discussions with much profit. From this passage we were reminded again of the great mercy and goodness of God in begetting all the elect class to the wonderful hope in Christ Jesus, even to that inheritance which will never decay or fade away and which is reserved in heaven for those who so abide in the Lord that they are kept by His power and endure to the end. However, during the pilgrim journey, we were led to see that, “for a season, since it is necessary” (verse 6, Diaglott), many and varied are the trials encountered so that the faith of each one who will ultimately attain the great inheritance may so come through the fiery experiences as to be found unto praise and honour and glory of the Lord.

The fellowship meeting this day on “Helpful Thoughts from Favourite Hymns,” brought good response from almost every one present, and indicated how the thoughts in our hymns of thankfulness and praise to the Lord may constitute a very real portion of air worship and devotion to ‘Him. The addresses that followed and closed another happy day were given by three brethren on the Bible characters of “Peter,” “Daniel” and “Moses.” The lives of each of these godly men were reviewed and special occasions of interest were well presented which could not help but encourage and stimulate to greater zeal in our love and service for the Lord.

Assembling again on the afternoon of Saturday, 28th December, the opening- hymns and prayers were followed by a very spiritual address given by a visiting Brother, entitled, “The Lord’s Sanctuary,” and was most helpful. Bible Study on Psa. 63:1-8, then impressed what should be the attitude of all the “David Class,” who, having seen the Lord in the sanctuary, by faith, are not influenced by this present evil world “in a dry and thirsty land where no water is”--but press on sacrificing to His name and cause “because His loving kindness is better than life.” We were led to see, also, that at any hour of the day or night it is our privilege to lift up our thoughts to the Lord in meditation sweet, and thus to be seated in the heavenly places, resting in the shadow of His wings, and following close and attentive to His good will for us.

A Question Meeting for fellowship on this third day of Convention proved helpful also, giving opportunity of, free expression on the questions handed in and which were summed up nicely by the chairman. The evening session was again taken up with addresses, though one Brother to speak. was unavoidably absent. The Bible character, “Jacob,” was well explained, many good lessons being impressed to us from his life. Another visiting Brother then spoke on the topic, “Walk about Zion” (Psa. 48: [2, 13], and many very fine thoughts and illustrations were given to impress the necessity of a pure and noble life and which did not fail to add much encouragement, as we journey on to the heavenly Zion. The friends seemed loath to part after such a happy and profitable day again.

Then came the final day of the gatherings, and after appropriate praise and prayer the afternoon Bible Study in Rev. 20:1-6, engaged our attention. In this highly symbolic passage our minds were directed to the close of this age, when “He shall come whose right it is,” to take the Kingdom, together with the faithful overcomers who reign with Christ 1000 years. Before the Lord could reign it was seen that the great Adversary must be bound, completely restrained, that he should deceive the nations no more. However, it was pointed out that the process of binding may cover a period of time during our Lord’s presence, as indicated by the many deceptions to-day, which show that the evil one is seeking by every possible means to hold continued sway, as permitted during this “present evil world.” The fact that the nations are still being- deceived seemed to indicate that Satan is not yet fully bound, but He who has the “key” of authority and the restraining “chain” will not fail to accomplish all His good pleasure in due time. Most of the study centred round the first three verses, there being time only for concluding thoughts on the remaining verses in which the overcoming saints, those “beheaded for the witness of Jesus” are pictured having part in the first resurrection—entering into the joys of the Lord and reigning to uplift poor, fallen humanity throughout the Millennial. Age.

After the usual evening tea the fellowship on “Helpful Thoughts from the Convention” was a further profitable session, as the brethren brought to mind many of the treasures of thought given out by one and another during the season, together before the Lord. At this time also, the Convention message contained in Col. :12, 13, and 2 'Tim. 3:14, together with our Christian love, was passed on to the visiting friends to take back to their brethren in other parts, and now we ask all dear friends everywhere to accept the same from the Melbourne Christmas Convention, 1935.

This brought us to the Closing Address, given by a visiting Brother, entitled "Rivers of Living Water," which was a fitting and much enjoyed message at the close of a most refreshing season. There was yet the closing Love Feast and final hymns, "Blest be the tie that binds," and "God be with. you till we meet again," with concluding prayer of thankfulness for all rich blessings and supplication for continued grace and strength for all dear brethren the world over.

Passover Memorial, 1936.

The 14th of Nisan (Jewish date) falls this year on Monday, 6th April, commencing at sundown on the previous day. Sunday evening, 5th April, after sundown; would therefore be the anniversary of the institution of the Memorial, and the appropriate time to celebrate by all consecrated members in Christ.

The Jewish National Home

Development Exceeds Forecasts.

SIR Herbert Samuel, in a Lucien memorial lecture at University College, London, described as poor minded the allegation that the Balfour Declaration favouring the creation of a national Jewish home was a violation of a pledge given to the Arab leaders.

“In 1920 I took up office as the first British High Commissioner in Palestine,” said Sir Herbert, “and the work of building the complete edifice of a modern State commenced. From the outset the Arab question was the Predominant feature, and it was plain to me that the establishment of a Jewish national home must be conditioned, not only by the existing rights of the Arab population, but also by constant and active care on the part of the mandatory power for their economic and cultural Progress. Development in Palestine had exceeded all forecasts.”—’Liverpool Daily Post,’ 26/11/35.

Oldest Manuscript of New Testament

Found in Manchester.

A RAGGED piece of papyrus, measuring 31in. x found among a pile of musty manuscripts at the Rylands Library, Manchester, has been proved to be the oldest New Testament manuscript in any language dating from the second century.

It is 200 years older than the Codex Sinaiticus, and the earliest witness of the Gospel of St. John, varying slightly from the text of the present accepted version.

The valuable document was found by Mr. C. H. Roberts, a Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford, who is in charge of the ancient manuscripts from the Rylands Library. He told the Daily Mail: "It is written in Greek, and it is likely that it came originally from the ancient city of Oxyrhynchus, in Upper Egypt. It was this site which Dr. B. I. Grenfell and Dr. A. S. Hunt excavated for the Egypt Exploration Society, and where, in 1897, they found a famous document giving new sayings of Jesus.

-The papyrus, in the form of a Greek codex or book—as opposed to the commoner 'roll' form of ancient documents, comprises only verses 31 to 33 and verses 37 and 38, of Chapter 18 of St. John's Gospel, but its importance is out of all proportion to its size.

"This is undoubtedly the earliest known fragment of any part of the New Testament in any language. It varies slightly from the present version, and the variation constitutes no material difference in meaning between the two texts.

"The fragment evidently belongs to the first half of the second century, and its real significance lies in the fact that St. John's Gospel, hitherto regarded as the latest of the Gospels, was known so far afield as Upper Egypt, so soon after the beginning of the Christian era."

1700 Years Old.

Dr. Henry Guppy, librarian of the Rylands Library, said:

"It was probably written before the ink of the original had dried. It was certainly written in the early part of the second century, or even, perhaps, in the last part of the first century."

The fragment includes the famous passage in which Pilate asks Jesus:—"Art Thou the King of the Jews?" and also:—"What is truth?"

Sir Frederick George Kenyon, former director and principal librarian of the British Museum, and author of the Catalogue of Greek Papyri in the British Museum, said:

"I have little doubt that it does in fact date from the second century after Christ, possibly from the early half of the century.

Of Vital Importance.

"To my mind, the vitally interesting part of the discovery is that it would appear to correct a widely held view as to the date when the Gospel of St. John was written.

“Naturally, the only way of arriving at the date of the fragment is by an examination of the writing, but several eminent experts on ancient manuscripts are satisfied that it is correctly described.”

Mr. Roberts, in his examination of the manuscript, has had to adopt similar methods to those used by modern handwriting experts in providing evidence of the authorship of disputed notes.—Melbourne “Sun,” 2nd Jan., 1936.

The Apostle Peter

(Convention Address).

Of the twelve Apostles of Christ, perhaps there is no more interesting character than Peter, and probably, too, he is the most helpful. His life is interesting because we find that, although he made many mistakes, some of them small and others big, our Lord showed that He had a great amount of confidence in him, perhaps more than He had in any of the other disciples. We find his life helpful because although he was naturally weak he filially overcame this. It may be that we can see in ourselves the same weakness, or somewhat similar to Peter's, or perhaps we can see it in another, but what gives us great encouragement is to know that we, too, can overcome as did Peter, in the strength of Christ and by allowing the holy spirit to have full control.

Peter's mistakes can all be traced to two perverse elements of character, namely, he was naturally very impulsive and also he was afraid of the disapproval of men. His impulsive nature often caused him to act very quickly; often he acted rightly, but there were times also when in his excitement or in fear of men, he acted wrongly. Yet, even from the first time Jesus spoke to him, He seemed to see in Peter one who some day would be great, one who would be amongst the staunchest of His followers.

Our Lord's words to Peter and his brother, Andrew, were, "Follow Me and I will make you fishers of men," and to Peter He added, "Thou art Simon, son of Jona, thou shalt be called Cephas." Cephas is the Hebrew word for Peter, and means a stone. Jesus did not change his name because he was at that time anything like a stone, but He knew Peter's heart was right; He saw in him honesty and sincerity and knew that he was one in whom His teachings and the holy spirit would make a great change.

In the three and a half years that Peter was with Jesus we cannot see that he became very strong. Jesus often found it necessary to reprove him, but we find also that He very often commended him for his faith and wisdom. On one occasion, we remember when Jesus asked His disciples who they thought Him to be, Peter at once answered, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." (See Matt. 16:16-18)—"Thou art Peter (a stone), and upon this rock (this foundation rock or truth that he had just confessed, namely, that Jesus was the Christ) will I build My Church, and the gates of hells shall not prevail against it, and I will give to thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven," etc. No doubt Peter wondered at this promise, probably he felt rather elated. It showed that the Lord had great confidence in him, whatever the meaning of His words, but strange to say a very short time afterwards he was severely reproved by the One whom he had just previously confessed to be the Son of God. This incident cannot be explained better than in the exact words from Matthew's Gospel—(see Matt. 16:21-23). Poor Peter! His love for Jesus had caused him to attempt to place before the Lord a suggestion that may have saved Him from trouble, but the Master, knowing that His suffering and death were necessary, refused to hear him, and gave a severe reproof.

However, we find this same disciple enjoying the love and favour of Jesus. We remember that it was he, in company with James and John, that Christ took with Him to the Mount of Transfiguration, and it was the same three whom He took with Him to the Garden of Gethsemane to keep watch, on the night of His betrayal. It was also Peter and John whom our Lord sent before Him into Jerusalem to prepare the Passover.

We are told of another incident in which Peter and Jesus were the chief actors. The disciples were on the sea in a boat, the water being very rough and the wind boisterous, when they saw Jesus coming to them walking on the water. We can well imagine the wonder of those in the boat at seeing their Lord walking on the sea, but it was only Peter who spoke, it was only he who thought of going on the water to meet Jesus. His joy and amazement at seeing Jesus were too much for him; he could not wait, but cried, "Lord, if it be Thou, bid me come to Thee on the water," and when the Lord had bid him come, he tried. For a moment his faith was strong and he kept up, but soon he became afraid and began to sink. Then his first thought again was to call for the Master's help, and we read that "Jesus stretched forth His hand and caught him, saying, Oh, thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?" This shows again Peter's impulsiveness, but it indicates also that he was a man of action, a trier, and one who had comparatively a great amount of faith. It was partly because of these virtues that Jesus trusted him on so many occasions, and also because he was the oldest of the Apostles and the one who acted as their leader and spokesman.

Perhaps Peter's character is revealed to us at no time as favourably as it is in the events that took place at about the time of our Lord's death. Shortly before Jesus was betrayed by Judas, Peter expressed his determination to follow Jesus to the end, even though it would mean death. "Though all men be offended because of Thee, yet will I never be offended," were his words. Jesus said to him, "Verily, I say unto thee, before the cock crow thou shalt deny me." But Peter was quite confident and said, "Though I should die with Thee, yet will I not deny Thee." He seemed determined to carry out his promise, for that same night when Jesus was being taken prisoner, he drew his sword in his Lord's defence and cut off the ear of the high priest's servant, and also followed Jesus into the court where He was to be accused and tried. Yet, strange to say, only a few minutes later, this same man denied that he had ever known the Lord, and that three times.

It was not because Peter had changed his mind and decided to turn against Jesus that he denied Him there in the court where he had gone with John. He loved his Master or he would not have been there at all, but it was just on the spur of the moment, when popular opinion had declared Jesus to be an imposter that Peter's strength failed him. On being asked if he was not one of Christ's blinded and misled followers he declared that he never knew Him. Peter still had in him the fear of the disapproval of men. However, we read that just as he had denied the Lord the third time the cock crew, and Peter remembered Christ's words,

"Before the cock crow thou shalt deny Me thrice." Jesus now thought of Peter and turned and looked at him. It was not a look of anger or of disdain, we may be sure, but a look of loving sympathy. We can well imagine the thoughts that Hooded Peter's mind at that moment; he remembered his good intentions and his rash promises; he remembered the Lord's words and realised that he had failed. When he saw the Lord's loving eyes looking at him it was too much for him, and he "went outside and wept bitterly." Yes, he had a tender and loving heart, and his intentions were good, but he had been tried on a weak point and had failed sadly. The Adversary had entrapped him on the very point of his boasting, he had been too sure of his own ability, too confident of his loyalty, but just one look from the Master had gone right to his heart, and he learned a lesson that he never forgot.

No doubt Peter wondered if he would ever have the opportunity to express his sorrow to Jesus, and when He was risen from death and had shown himself to His disciples we may be sure Peter longed for a chance to tell Him. Before the opportunity came for him to express his regret in words the Lord assured him of His forgiveness, and continued favour of feeding His sheep (John 21).

We all remember the occasion in this last chapter of John's Gospel, and doubtless will agree that the Lord's reason for asking Peter the question three times "Lovest thou Me?" was to remind him of his thrice repeated denial. It was a very gentle reproof on the Lord's part, and no doubt Peter's tender heart was touched again, for on being asked the third time he seemed grieved and answered, "Lord, Thou knowest all things, Thou knowest that I love Thee." Yes, Jesus knew all things; He knew that Peter loved Him knew that it was not lack of love that caused the denials; He knew that Peter was too sure of himself at that time, and now asked the question three times to remind him of his weakness. We may be sure that this had the effect of humbling the Apostle in his own eyes.

However, the Master's words to Peter, "Feed My sheep," assured him that he was still acceptable to God; they assured him that he was still counted as one of the Apostles, and the events which followed show us clearly that he was not only an Apostle, but one of the chiefest of them—he still continued to be the[^] chief speaker, and we find him still acting as their leader. Only a few weeks after he had denied the Lord we find him diligently attending to the Lord's business, and taking the lead in selecting another to take the place of Judas Iscariot. Although we know that He was not quite right in doing this, as the twelfth Apostle (Paul) was later chosen by Christ, it shows his zeal and energy.

But the greatest change in Peter's life took place a few days later, when he, in company with many others, received the holy spirit on the day of Pentecost. We find him there standing up boldly and addressing the Jews, quoting the Scriptures to prove that Jesus was truly the Christ, accusing them to the face of killing the Messiah, and telling them that God had raised Him from the dead. So forceful was his preaching that we read that many of the Jews who had assisted in bringing about the death of Christ were "pricked in their hearts," and asked Peter, "what shall we do?" His answer was, "Repent Ye and be baptised every one of you for the remission of sins and ye shall receive the gift of the holy spirit," and as a result of this great man's preaching three thousand were added to the Lord's ranks in one day (Acts 2).

This reminds us of Jesus' promise to Peter some time before his denial, namely, "I will give thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven." On this occasion Peter used the first key and threw open the door to the Jews and from that time many entered the kingdom. Then three and a half years later we find he unlocked the door for the Gentiles. He it was who was sent to Cornelius, the first Gentile convert, to explain to him that he and all the Gentiles may enter the kingdom by faith in Christ (Acts 10).

After the spirit was given Peter was bold in preaching the Gospel; he learned what it meant to take up his cross and follow Christ. He was taken prisoner, and was persecuted and afflicted, but through it all he was strong in the Lord, and very often his accusers were converted by his teachings. Peter performed many miracles, too, healing the sick and blind and lame, but always giving the glory to Christ.

However, even after the Apostle Peter had received the spirit he was not infallible; he still was desirous of the approval of men, for, although he had preached that there was no difference between the Jews and Gentiles—that they were all acceptable to God through faith in Christ (Acts. 15:7-9)—he later, through fear, dissembled and refused to eat with the Gentiles. This error God at once corrected through the Apostle Paul, who kindly but firmly "withstood him to the face." (Gal. 2:11-14). Still it is quite noticeable that Peter's two epistles show no trace of wavering on the subject of equality of Jews and Gentiles in Christ, nor any fearfulness in acknowledging the Lord. It is plain also that St. Peter had no ill-feeling against St. Paul for reproving him, but speaks of his brother Apostle as one greater than himself as, "our beloved Brother Paul." (2 Pet. 3:15, 16).

Oh, that we all could take reproof as did Peter; that we could look upon all of life's experiences as from the Lord, and see in them such as will cause us to grow more and more like our Lord Jesus. The experiences of Peter's life had the effect of humbling him in his own eyes; so truly was this so, so truly did he look up to Christ, that tradition tells us, when he was ordered to be crucified by Nero, by his own request he was executed head downwards, thinking himself unworthy to be put to death in the same manner as his beloved Master.

So, we see Peter, a man with a quick, impulsive nature, always loving but wavering; now defending his Master at his own peril and again disclaiming and denying Him; now boldly preaching the truth and again compromising with Jewish prejudices, calling for the faithful reproof of Paul, but at the same time humbly receiving it.

Therefore, brethren, if we have weaknesses of our own let us not be discouraged, let us with more determination put our shoulder to the wheel as did our faithful brother and Apostle, Peter; and if we see in another a weakness or a fault, or even small offence or sin, let us not be harsh, let us not condemn another, for our Lord did not reject Peter because of his sins. Peter's heart was right, and if we, like him, can look up and say from our hearts. "Lord, Thou knowest all things, Thou knowest that I love Thee," then we, too, are acceptable to God.. May our aim ever be to build up and not to discourage another who may be trying just as hard as ourselves to please God. Let us be triers like Peter, trying to overcome our own weaknesses and helping others to overcome theirs, and we can overcome as did Peter. He overcame finally, for the risen Lord Himself declared his name to be written with the other Apostles in the very foundations of the heavenly city, the New Jerusalem, the Kingdom of God. (Rev. .

Bible Characters: Daniel and Jacob.

(Convention Address).

The Prophet, Daniel: (James 5:10; Ezek. 14.:14).

BY way of introduction, please read Dan. 1:1, 3, 6. Daniel at this time was about fourteen years old, and his companions were about the same age. These four boys were chosen by the King because of their brightness and general intelligence to be specially educated with others in his college for three years. From this college the king drew his assistants and counsellors of the State; his idea was evidently to associate with the empire the learning and skill of the world.

The first thing the king did was to change their names (see Dan. 1:7). The reason for this was that they may be identified as Babylonians, because their Hebrew names would remind everyone of their nationality and also of their religion and relationship to God. The king evidently thought also that the new names would influence them to forget the God of their fathers and adopt the idolatrous religion of the Babylonians.

Another thing that occurred was the giving to these boys of food and drink from the king's own table. Amongst some of the food provided were certain kinds of meat that were used amongst the Gentile nations, but to these Hebrews, who had been brought up by religious parents under the Law Covenant, they were forbidden. Verse 8 says, "Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the portion of the king's meat, nor with the wine which he drank." He therefore requested that he be permitted to have a plain diet of vegetable; if the request could be granted, Daniel would thus preserve himself from defilement under the Jewish law. (See Dan. 1:10-16). So the plan was carried out, and at the end of the three-year course of special study this proved to be to their benefit.

This was a severe test of faith to Daniel and his companions; they had been taken captive from their native country to Babylon, and were identified with the king's court, and even their names had been changed. They could have quite easily neglected the laws of God under which they had been brought up; they could have quite easily turned into real Babylonians, but they were determined not to disobey God's laws or violate their conscience.

This firm stand that Daniel took for God, his obedience to conscience and faithfulness to the Lord proved to be the foundation of his wonderful career of seventy years of political life, during which he kept himself unspotted from the world. And so it is with us, for if we would be followers of Christ, we must be willing to give up all, and even life itself, rather than be influenced by any earthly ties or ambitions.

In chapter 6, we have another incident of importance in Daniel's life. He was nearly 90 years old at this time, and the Babylonian kingdom had been captured by the Medes and Persians. The new Gentile kingdom had been set up, Darius the king setting over the kingdom 120 princes, and over these, three presidents, Daniel being chief of these three (see verse 3). It would seem that because of Daniel's honesty and blameless character the Other presidents and princes sought to find fault with him. It was his good qualities that brought upon him the envy and hatred of his associates, evidently because of his standing in their way of accomplishing selfish ambitions. So his enemies sought his downfall, but could find no fault with him, nothing that they could bring against him as a crime. However, they still hated him, and decided, as verse 5 reads, "We shall not find any occasion against this Daniel, except we find it against him concerning the law of his God." They knew of his strength of character and could see that he would not swerve from the course his conscience approved, so they began to set a trap, as we read in verses 6 to 9, which please note. "Now when Daniel knew that the writing was signed he went into his house, and his windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem, lie kneeled upon his knees three times a day, and prayed and gave thanks before his God, as he did aforetime." (Verse 10). This is what Daniel's enemies were waiting for, and they immediately went to the king (read verses 13 to 23).—"So Daniel was taken up out of the den of lions and no manner of hurt was found in him because he believed in his God."

What a wonderful faith in God Daniel showed in this narrative; he evidently realised that his enemies were endeavouring to bring about his death, but this did not stop him from carrying out his religious duties—he continued as usual to pray to God three times a day. We can be sure it was this constant communion with God that enabled him to endure the trials and persecutions that were brought upon him. We see, then, the necessity of prayer, for, as it would have been impossible for Daniel to maintain his faith and loyalty to principle had it not been for his communion with God, so with us. What a wonderful privilege is ours—"we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the -Righteous," in whose name we approach with courage the throne of heavenly grace, and obtain mercy with grace to help in every time of need. (1 John 2 :1; Heb. 4:16).

We note that in no case did Daniel boast of his deliverance, but knew it was through God that help came to him. "God hath sent His angel and hath shut the lions' mouths and they have not hurt me," were his words. There is a good lesson for us here, and we remember the words of the Psalmist, "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear Him and delivereth them." (Psa. 34:7). We have the assurance of God's ever-present power to help, and that He will never leave us nor forsake us (Heb. 13 :5), but we must be like Daniel and have faith. Not faith in ourselves, nor in our own righteousness, but faith in God's love, faith in the great redemption price that love has provided, and faith in the great and precious promises that are ours through Christ.

We must remember that Daniel was one of the Ancient Worthies, and the promise to all these was earthly. Under the influence of the promise made to Abraham and his seed, Daniel was looking forward to the time when all the nations of the earth would be blessed, and was seeking to develop a character that would prove him worthy of a position to assist in bringing about these blessings (Psa. 45 :16). If the tests of character, of faith, obedience and loyalty to God were necessary to develop those who will be "princes" in the earthly phase of the kingdom, how important they are also to us, who, by the grace of God, are living during this Gospel Age, and have been called of the Lord to be joint- heirs with the Lord in the spiritual kingdom. As ours will be a higher reward, we cannot expect that the trial of our faith will be less, maybe it will be more severe, if possible, than that of the Ancient Worthies.

Although all of God's people are not in such prominent positions as was Daniel, yet we can all have the same spirit as he, the spirit of devotion to principles of righteousness, which will be tested as we progress along the narrow way —as we endeavour to walk in the footsteps of our Lord Jesus. So, then, if we have experiences similar to Daniel's, and we surely will, let us keep in mind the words of our Lord in Matt. 5:11, 12. "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and persecute you, and say all manner of evil against you falsely, for My sake. Rejoice and be exceedingly glad: for great is your reward in heaven : for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you." Let us be like Daniel and take our stand for God, no matter how great may be the opposition, and let us rest in the sure promises of God. "If God be for us who can be against us?" (Rom. 8:31, 28). "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering, for He is faithful that promised." (Heb. 10:23).

The Patriarch, Jacob.

“God is a rewarder of those who diligently seek Him” (Heb. 11 :6).

ALTHOUGH those faithful ones who lived before our Saviour’s day were not invited to the high calling to which the Church is called in this Gospel Age, yet their lives are an inspiration and ensample to the Lord’s people now, because of their great faith and earnest endeavours to serve God acceptably. It is in this way that we shall consider the life of Jacob and endeavour to draw the lessons there from.

Upon looking over the life of Jacob one cannot but notice his great faith, which is typical of all the Ancient Worthies. He did not seem to doubt God for a moment, but relying entirely on Him and His promises, it was this simple trust that ordered all the affairs of his life. He had trials and difficulties, like all God’s people, but these were overcome one by one, and although often he seemed to lose much as respects worldly things, yet we see him always confident that God would work all things together for his good.

Jacob had great faith in the promises God had made to his grandfather, Abraham, but because he was not the firstborn, he knew that unless he could obtain the birthright privileges from, his brother, Esau (who was the first-born, and to whom the major part of the inheritance would rightly go), he would have no special part or lot in those promises.

He must often have dwelt on the possibilities of so great an inheritance--the blessing of God—and that his posterity would be used of God to bless every kindred, nation and tongue. Because he saw that his brother Esau laid little or no value in those promises, Jacob sought an opportunity to obtain the birthright from Esau. So one day Esau had been Out hunting and came in feeling very hungry and exhausted, almost on the point of dying, and desired some of Jacob’s pottage that he had prepared for his own dinner. Then Jacob grasped the opportunity and bartered with his brother for the birthright. And Esau said, “Behold, I am at the point to die and what profit shall this birthright do to me?” Thus Esau despised the birthright and all its wonderful possibilities and sold it for a mess of pottage.

The Apostle Paul refers to this incident in Heb. 12:16, and seems to apply -it especially to the Church, and the danger of our losing our birthright as new creatures. Esau pictured those Christians who despise the wonderful promises of God and the glorious inheritance as prospective heirs of the divine nature. They sell them for a mess of pottage—a few earthly good things, which, like Esau’s meal, last but for a short time, and then are gone forever.

But what of Jacob ? He went without his meal, but that did not concern him. What he wanted was the birthright, and he was willing to sacrifice all in the attainment of it. Not that he valued the temporal inheritance which came under the birthright, but he laid all the value on the future inheritance with which it was connected.

Later on, when his father, Isaac, was nearing the end of his life, the time came for him to bestow his blessing on his first-born as was the custom. Then Jacob, instructed by his mother, took the place of Esau at his father’s bedside, and his father knew it not, for he was blind. Esau was absent hunting, and later came in to receive the blessing, but his father had given it to Jacob. Then Esau became very angry, and purposed to kill his brother, but Jacob, hearing of this, decided to leave home and all the earthly inheritance and go and dwell in the country of Haran, where his uncle lived.

Here, Jacob pictured those Christians of this Age, who, through faith in God’s promises, despise all the earthly things, and forsaking all, go forth into the world as pilgrims and strangers. Jacob had no earthly possessions, but in all he was rich, for wherever he went he carried the birthright with him and all the wonderful blessings pertaining thereto.

As Jacob journeyed toward Haran he must often have felt lonely and wondered whether he was doing the right thing or not. God, seeing this, sent him a vision one night as he slept (See Gen. 28:10-15). Thus did God encourage one who sought earnestly the better things, for Jacob was always ready to exchange the pottage of earthly advantages for the future inheritance. And if we, through faith in God's promises to us, have forsaken all to follow Him, and if we endeavour to please Him to the best of our ability, He will surely reward us also, and the peace of God which passeth understanding shall keep our hearts and minds through Christ Jesus.

Jacob journeyed on, and eventually came to his uncle's place and dwelt with him there for a period of fourteen years, in which time he had some very severe trials, but in all these his faith never seemed to give way. Although at times it must have seemed as if God was going against him and working contrary to His promise to be with him and bless him, yet Jacob seemed to have confidence that God was working all things together for his good. Indeed, He seemed to work what would seem disadvantageous conditions to advantage for Jacob, inasmuch as when he left his uncle's place to return to his home, he had great possessions. Here again we have the example. Although at times things may not seem to work out as we thought they would; and in the way we felt sure would be the Lord's will, yet we should never be discouraged, but member His words in Isa. 55:8, 9, which please read. (See also Job. 23:8-10). How much better then, are God's ways, and as we come to realise this more and more as we meet our trials and difficulties, we come to that condition of heart in which we are able to say, "I delight to do Thy will, O God."

And we, too, like Jacob, although our hearts are full of rejoicing in God's promises, should not expect results to come to us without effort. "Faith without works is dead," says the Apostle James. Work requires effort, and a faith that expects to receive blessings without effort or works is dead, being alone. But sometimes the great Adversary may interfere, our best efforts may seem to go unrewarded, and like Jacob we may meet with much disappointment, but we should trust and hope and labour on, patiently waiting for the Lord, knowing that He is on our part and greater than all they that be against us. "Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth them out of them all." (Psa. 34:19).

Laban, Jacob's uncle, would fain have had Jacob stop with him, for he realised that the blessing of the Lord was with him, but Jacob's mind was full of the Abrahamic promises, and he desired to return to the land of promise. Upon announcing his intention to his uncle the first time, he was hindered by an unfair advantage, but the second time he was allowed to go on his way in peace. As Jacob approached home, his confidence in God, and reliance upon Him to bless him, did not hinder him from taking a wise and reasonable course to obtain peace with his brother. Although he knew he could force his rights on his brother if he so desired, because he possessed the birthright, yet he did not do this. He did quite to the contrary; he sent his brother a gift of many sheep, goats, horses and camels, and knowing that his brother would probably still be angry with him at his arrival home, Jacob offered a prayer to God for guidance.

In this prayer, Jacob shows the beauty of his character — his wonderful trust and confidence in God. He recounts God's promises to his grandfather, Abraham, and his father, Isaac, and the renewal of the promises to himself. He mentions the promise of God to bring him again to his homeland and He would deal well with him. Then he shows his humility in the words, "I am not worthy of the least of all Thy mercies." He tells the Lord of his fear of Esau, but shows his fear is offset by his confidence in the Almighty. It was at this time, -and no doubt in answer to his prayer, that God sent His angel to Jacob. (See Gen. 32:24-30).

What a beautiful example of faith and persevering prayer we have here. We note Jacob's persistency and how he earnestly desired the Lord's blessing, and, are reminded of our Lord's words, "Men ought always to pray and not to faint.” God wishes us to be persistent in asking for His best gifts, for if we really desire anything of the Lord we shall ask Him again and again for it. But God may withhold our desires for a time, with the view of our becoming the more earnest in seeking them. We cannot suppose that God was not willing to give Jacob the blessing, but he prevailed to obtain it by manifesting the energy, the zeal and patience which God was pleased to see and reward. Truly, God will reward those who seek for Him diligently, and no good thing will He withhold from those who walk uprightly.

We also have the beautiful example of our dear Saviour when, in the garden of Gethsemane, He wrestled alone in prayer with strong crying and tears unto Him whom He believed was able to save Him out of death. Our Lord laboured for hours and finally received the blessing.

And again Jacob gave the lesson, for after he had offered his prayer to God he took reasonable steps to obtain the answer, for he sent a gift to his brother. So, we too, if we desire anything of the Lord, should do all in our power to ensure an answer, for, if after praying to God to help us to better our position in His sight, we did not watch for opportunities to help ourselves, our prayer would be useless. We must “continue in prayer and watch in the same with thanksgiving.” (Col. 4:2).

Through all the difficulties and trials of his life we can see Jacob emerge with his faith still holding firm to the promises made to Abraham. Although he may have been disappointed that the promised blessings had not yet come, yet we see his faith unmoved. Lying there on his bed and realising that his time was near, he found strength enough to rise up and bless both of Joseph’s sons and to worship God who had led him his whole life through. And so Jacob passed the wonderful promises on. Now, that promise, “in thee and thy seed,” has passed down to the Church through Christ, for the Church is the spiritual seed of Abraham, as Paul points out in Gal. 3:29. Let us endeavour, as did Jacob, to keep our faith firmly fixed, even unto death, so that we may receive the crown of life that the Lord has promised to them that love Him and trust Him implicitly.

The Way of Peace. Two Primates issue appeal.

An International Endeavour.

ALL Archbishops of Canterbury and York have issued an appeal on “the way of peace,” which is published in the “London Diocesan Chronicle.” The letter states “Moved by the situation of the world at the present time, the leaders of various Christian communions throughout Europe have agreed to send forth to their own people in their own terms during the present week a solemn appeal in the interests of peace to Christian conscience and loyalty. In writing this letter and asking that it may be read in our churches, we, with the approval of our brother bishops, are taking part in this international endeavour to build the peace of the world on a true and lasting foundation.

Things That Are Not Enough.

“No thoughtful men can view the present situation without grave anxiety. It is acknowledged that the supreme need of the world is a settled peace. Yet the minds of men everywhere are restless, confused, fearful of the future.

“It has been made plain that international treaties, pacts and covenants are not of themselves enough to ensure the peace which the world needs. It is plain that past experience is not enough. We might have thought that the experience of the Great War had proved once for all the horror and foolishness of war. But a new generation has grown up forgetful of that awful lesson.

“It is plain that the natural instincts of men are not enough. For these instincts still cling to old and deep-rooted suspicions and jealousies. They are too easily stirred by the excitements of a self-regarding patriotism.

The Solution.

“It is plain also that what we call civilisation is not enough, for the very science on which it relies is forging weapons of war, which, if they be let loose, may accomplish its own destruction.

“Must it not then be equally plain that if these natural influences are not enough, it is only a supernatural power which can ensure peace—in a word, the incoming of the kingdom of God, God’s rule of righteousness, truth, honour, justice, brotherhood among men?

“Christian people in every country, our own included, seem, no doubt unconsciously, to put their natural patriotic instincts, prejudices, emotions first and to regard the claim of the kingdom of God as a ideal true indeed, but remote from the actual affairs of men. But any real loyalty to the kingdom of God demands that this process should be reversed.”

Thus it is only too true that international confidence does not exist. While for a short time after the Great War there seemed to be a desire on the part of the nations to reach some arrangement that would make such a barbarity impossible of recurrence, selfish aims have come along gradually and broken down the machinery on which such hopes relied.

Italy, following Japan’s grasping greed and standard-of might against right, reveals how little reliance can be placed in the most solemn contracts when opportunity for gaining selfish aims or self-aggrandisement presents itself. The beastly element is seen to preponderate, and contracts become but “scraps of paper.” Human life is not considered, indeed, the slaughter of many relieves the unemployment that is draining the resources of overpopulated countries. How appropriately are the kingdoms of this world represented by the prophets as ferocious beasts.

The Bishops recognise this, and that the only hope for mankind is Christ’s Kingdom. However, they seem to think that the setting up of the kingdom depends on the efforts of Christian people to convert the world. If such were the case, how hopeless it would be. After nineteen centuries of Christian teaching the world to-day is less Christian than it was a century ago. Many are saying that Christianity has failed and Paganism has been fast making progress in so-called Christian lands. The trouble is that the teachings of the churches are so confusing and inconsistent, and so often contrary to plain Bible truths.

With reference to a memorial service nicely conducted by a Bishop and addressed by a free church minister, one wonders how men like these fail to see the contradictions in their own utterances. The church creed reads :—"I believe in the resurrection of the body," yet, in the beautiful chapter, 1 Cor. 15, the Bishop read, "But someone will say, with what body do they come? . . . that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be .

But God giveth it a body as it hath pleased Him." Then, again, the speaker referred to God as the great Father who received the souls of the faithful at death, yet he read through the chapter which most beautifully speaks of the resurrection—"So, also, is the resurrection of the dead." How absurd to speak of a resurrection from death if the departed are not dead, but enjoying the bliss in the presence of God in heaven.

"How one longs for that day when the sun of righteousness will arise and dispel all the vapours of ignorance, superstition and false doctrine, when the great time of trouble shall have broken down the present systems of error and unrighteousness, and then shall be turned to the people the pure language—the true Gospel, apart from human dogma and creed. God will reveal Himself as a God of love, as well as of wisdom, justice and power, "that they may all call upon the name of the Lord to serve Him with one consent." Zeph. 3:8, 9.

The End of the Way.

THE passing of our dear Sister Best, of Adelaide reminds us again of the brevity of the present life and of the words of the Psalmist—"So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom." Much sympathy is expressed toward the members of our late Sister's household, in the loss of such a true friend and devoted mother. The knowledge which we have of the Word of God enables us to sorrow not as others who have no such hope as we have. Our Sister's life showed that she was truly given up to the Lord ; she delighted in doing acts of kindness and service for others, and was zealous in witnessing to the Truth and in attending the Class meetings. For some weeks before the end Sister had suffered a good deal, but she showed much grace in the way she bore the pain and discomfort. We are glad that her sufferings are past and that she has gone to her reward. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth : yea, saith the spirit, that they may rest from their labours ; and their works do follow them." Rev. 14:13.

Obedience.

(Heb. 5 :1-9).

(Convention Address).

THIS word “obedience,” as defined by the translators from the original, contains the thought of attentive hearkening, compliance, submission. How necessary it is that we all hear and obey the voice of our Good Shepherd; .we should give attentive hearkening to what He commands (John 10:27; 14 :15), for, of Himself, it was said, “He learned obedience by the things which He suffered.”

:Now, in regard to the disposition of obedience, we all need to attain a properly balanced viewpoint. Professed followers of the Lord seem to be susceptible to the disposition of leaning to one extreme or the other, and in this there lies a danger not generally recognised. The building up of the Church in the most holy faith, and her preparation to meet the Lord; the telling out of the glad tidings to others as the Lord’s providences may open doors, are all important matters. However, the same Bible which urges upon us the fact that attention should be given to doctrine, also impresses the truth that, “if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of His.” It follows, therefore, that through obedience one may attain that knowledge of the Lord which will adjust every feature of his Christian life, and he will be living by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. The unchanging doctrines of the Word will be devoutly Rived and cherished, and the structure of Christian character will be free from wood, hay and stubble.

None more than the Apostle Paul insisted upon clearly defined doctrine as a basis for fellowship with God and His people. He did not multiply doctrines to confuse the Church but adhered strictly to the simplicity that is in Christ Jesus. A careful study of the. 1;T,pistles of Paul will reveal the intensity of his desire to bring the brethren to the feet of Jesus and keep them there. How positively he spurns any attempt to have himself set before the Church as an object of worship. The Apostle had no fear for the doctrinal standing and the approval of those of his brethren who really knew his Saviour and Lord, but he did have anxiety and burden of soul for those who never seemed capable of rising above “first principles” into the regions of deeper knowledge’ of God. So, is the great longing of our hearts that of wanting others to know our Jesus in His altogether loveliness, as He Himself was consumed with a longing that others should really know of His Father?

Note the Apostle’s words in Col. 2 :6, 7, and 1 Cor. 3:11. The One referred to here is not the nominal Christ spoken of so much in the world, but Him in reality, who is a Redeemer in reality, the true foundation upon which we can build with confidence, not substituting a shadow for the substance. Sound theology ought to be the glory of all the Body members of Christ. Woe to any, if by indifference or worldly lives, they turn into a dishonour that which should be the strength and security of the Christian life.

We notice what sufferings the Master endured through obeying the Father’s will ; how it must have grieved Him when so many walked no more with Him because of the new light He brought—the teachings setting at nought the traditions of men. His claims of relationship to God, and Himself as the “Bread from heaven,” which they were to feed upon, constituted that which they termed a “hard saying.” Through obedience, to the best of his ability, the Apostle Paul suffered similar things ; some deserted him after all he had striven to do for them. If we, in obedience, pass through these experiences, let us keep heart and meet them as did our Lord and the Apostle, and think it not strange when some who walked with us, turn in another direction.

Let all rejoice in the privilege of acquaintance with God and the Truth, and by their life work and devotion to God manifest their continued worthiness. This worthiness is inquired for not only at the early stages, but all along the path of light, and if one is not found worthy through the various searching tests that are applied from time to time, he cannot proceed in the path of light and fellowship with the Lord. Our possession of this heart acquaintance with God has thus far proved us able and meek enough to renounce various errors of belief and unbecoming traits of conduct, and to loyally espouse the cause of our Master at the cost of reproach and earthly loss, looking forward to the great joy of the Lord's approval ultimately. But the Apostle exhorts, "Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall," for subtle and sharp are sure to be the tests applied to prove our continued faithfulness.

These tests God will permit, and He desires to have come upon us, in order that we may be thoroughly tried and proved either worthy or unworthy of the great reward He has in keeping for those who remain faithful unto death.

The words of one seem specially- appropriate, and are as follows ; "You know that you have weaknesses, special points. upon which you are aware by past experiences you are specially liable to fail, under trial and temptation. It may be the pride of life and love of the world which seem to draw your feet from the narrow way oftenest. It may be that business has such. an attraction to you that you have at times been almost swallowed up with its ambitions and cares; that its demands upon your time and talent have been for a season almost overwhelming; that you found your appetite for spiritual things forestalled by the earthly, and your consecrated time absorbed in labour for the meat that perisheth. Or it may be that your special weakness is a love of approval which absorbs consecrated time in making your person, your home and your family charming, as well as hinders you from engaging in service for the Lord and your fellow saints in carrying them spiritual food, lest some should think you strange and peculiar and should cut your acquaintance. Or you may have uncongenial family relationship and opposition to study and Christian growth from that quarter. Further, it may be that seeming duties and necessities in your circumstances demand your time and keep you, as they did Martha, from communing with the Master and engaging in and enjoying the higher and grander privilege of breaking to others spiritual food. No matter in which particular direction your besetment lies, rest assured that yours is not an exceptional case. Every soul knoweth its own burdens, and before each one Satan is permitted to lay obstacles and hindrances, in order that each may be tried and thus have opportunity of overcoming and proving his love and appreciation of the prize and of the Lord's approval by faithfulness under adverse conditions."

To be forewarned is useless, unless it leads us to action, that we may be forearmed for protection. What are we going to do about it? Are we determined to obey? Then we must break all bondage at any cost ; though it be as dear to your heart as your eye or hand, pluck it out or cut it off. We must either overcome these besetments by changing our course and cutting them off, or they will overcome us and bring us more and more under their control.

How consoling in the midst of the battle of life are the words, "No good thing will He withhold from them that walk uprightly." It is one of those promises that guarantees to the faithful of God that all that comes to them in life is "good"—on the grounds, of course, if accepted in faith and in the right spirit. Of all the high and good favours enjoyed by the children of God, none is greater than the privilege of dwelling in His presence and of holding communion with Him. The exercise of this exalted position or privilege is most vital and necessary to spiritual health and to the preservation of a proper and holy relationship with God. "This is life eternal to know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom Thou hast sent."

One thus in right relationship with God is in a position to think of Him intelligently and acceptably. Revelations of knowledge are given to help the devout believer to think of God as he should, and to assist him to approach very close to the heart of the Eternal. Our thoughts of God growing out of His revelation to us, form the basis of our communion with Him.

It is an evidence of growth in grace, when, having realised our unworthiness of Divine favour, we have, nevertheless, become so intimately acquainted with the Lord as to have a full assurance of faith, full confidence in Him and His providential care over all our affairs. The Apostle James says that the one who looks into the perfect law of liberty and continues therein as a doer of the Word, who obediently performs what he sees to be God's will, shall be blessed in his deed. The Master said, "Man shall not live by bread alone but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Those who thus feed upon the words that proceed out of the mouth of God are nourished and strengthened in the journey of life.

In this journey of life we need to walk circumspectly and to have our desires in line with the Psalmist when he said, "One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after ; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord and to enquire in His temple." Expressions like this manifest why he was a man after God's own heart. God ever delights to show special favours to such characters as this. When troubles assail and every support seems to be withdrawn, while the fire burns and the waters seem likely to overflow, what comfort and strength may he found through God's abounding grace.

Then comes a prayer of David's, which is really a confession of a deep sense of responsibility and an utter dependence on God for guidance and instruction. He says, "Point me out Thy Way, O Lord, and guide me on a level path, because of those that regard me enviously." How suggestive such an appeal is of one who recognises his lack of wisdom. The Apostle James urges us to ask God for the enlightenment He waits to dispense liberally to all who acknowledge their need of it. The Scriptures abound with assurances that only such as are thus painfully aware of their poverty in this matter, may entertain any hope of having all their steps ordered of the Lord. And who that recognises the burden of responsibility resting upon him, because there are those who observe him and over whom he may exercise an influence for good or evil, can fail to feel that it is most important that his own vision of God and His will should be clear. Therefore, there must necessarily be a constant vigilance and obedience to the Word of the Lord.

'Gentle words fall lightly, but they have great weight.' —Anon.

The Times and Seasons.

(1 Thes. 5 :1).

THERE has been, particularly of late years, so much written regarding Bible Chronology and date-fixing in connection with events expected in the closing of this dispensation, that it would seem seasonable to suggest that such matters are not the most necessary things to spend our time and thought upon.

The Bible evidently was not written, and prophecies were not given in order that Christians should be able to show superior wisdom in being able to declare dates for events prior to their occurrences. It would seem rather that, as with symbols and types which are not understood until the reality appears, time prophecies are given that when the prediction is fulfilled the faith of the watchful, prayerful Christian shall be so increased and strengthened that He may be enabled to endure the greater trials that may still come along.

One thing seems sure, i.e., that God has not provided us with a certain connected chronology. Again we find that we are not dependent upon Bible Chronology in order to know how near we are to the end of this age and the setting up of the kingdom of God—the dethronement of Satan as the prince of this world and the beginning of the reign of peace and righteousness under Christ and His Church.

All the time prophecies of the Bible have their beginnings within the recorded years of secular history, and these also have had their fulfilments. These time prophecies comprise:-The seven times of punishment upon Israel, which began to count when Nebuchadnezzar subdued Israel in B.C. 606, or 604, and ended with 1914 or 1916 when the Great War resulted in establishing Palestine as the national home for Israel Jerusalem is no longer “trodden down of the Gentiles.” Daniel’s 2300 days (years) began B.C. 454, and ended in 1846. The 1260 years, 1290 years and 1335 years all began in A.D. 539 and found fulfilment in 1799 when the persecuting power of Rome was broken, and the Pope was taken prisoner to France by Napoleon ; in 1829 by the proclamation, particularly through the Millerite movement regarding the second advent, and in 1874 by the promised feast which the Lord had foretold He would provide when He came again. (Luke 12:36).

The fulfilment, of these prophecies and also the evident signs promised by our Lord in His great prophecy, Matt.

24, and in Luke, are quite sufficient to assure the watchers of our Lord’s presence —that we are actually living “in the days of the Son of Man.” The Lord clearly indicated, that just as Noah was present as a preacher of righteousness, declaring the calamity impending, so He would be present and sending out His messengers, gathering His saints into His garner.

How great is our privilege thus to know the workings of God’s great plan, and while it is our part to especially declare the message among Christian people everywhere and witness to all men as we have opportunity, yet we must never forget that the special work of our day is the preparation of the Bride of Christ for the great Marriage.

Then, while we must all help one another, our each particular work is the preparation of ourselves. We are assured by the Apostle that we might have faith to do wonderful things, and though we had all knowledge and understood all mysteries, yet if we have not the Christian grace of love, we are nothing. We must daily keep before our vision the beauties of the character, the disposition, the qualities of His heart and seek to do as He would do and be just like Him. That is the best way of preaching, our light will then shine to the glory of God and the edifying of those about us.

It was in this way that Jesus “preached to the spirits in prison”—the angels, who, in Noah’s day, had left their own habitation and committed folly with the daughters of men ; instead of instructing the human family they corrupted it. Jesus gave them a lesson in obedience — He became obedient to death—and preached to them by His death and resurrection. Quite possibly some of those angels have profited by the lesson.

“So let our daily lives express
The beauties of true holiness;
So let the Christian graces shine,
That all may know the power divine.”

Be of Good Courage.

Child of God, wait patiently and calmly, tho' steeper grows thy path,
Committed to His care whose grace thus far hath kept thee;
And tho' the night of trouble draweth on, with clouds both black and dense,
Follow faithfully the Lamb; the morrow will be light!

Child of God, rest fearlessly in Him whose arm securely holds;
Thou may'st trust Him as a child doth trust because thou art His own.
And tho' the night be very long, thou art His child, he not dismayed,
Confiding in His Word, for it proclaims the light of morn.

Child of God, does His commission send thee out in all the world;
Thou shalt feel, yea, very surely, how He in His love upholds.
Proclaim in North, South, East and West the Kingdom now in sight,
And gather in what still remains of children of the light.

Child of God, pursue thy journey, as doth a star;
And when thy plea to Heaven ascends, let us remembered be;
With thee, relying on His might, we come before His face;
No fear can trouble in the night, through which we pass to light.

The Gifts of Whitsuntide.

(1 Cor., 12).

WHITSUNTIDE, or Pentecost, marks a very special period in God's great Program respecting mankind. It stands next in importance to the great events connected with our Lord Jesus ; viz., His baptism at Jordan and the anointing of the holy spirit there, His finishing of His vow of consecration at Calvary, His resurrection from the dead on the third day—His glorious spirit-birth, as partaker of the Divine nature.

All that Jesus did necessarily preceded the acceptance of any members of the human family to joint-heirship with Him, or to any recognition of God as His children. God acknowledged Adam as His son on the human plane, "a little lower than the angels," so long as he remained obedient and loyal ; but when he disobeyed and came under the Divine sentence of death, he broke the covenant between God and himself. (Hosea 6:7, margin). From that time onward, God had no sons amongst men until Jesus' time, because all were imperfect, sharing in father Adam's imperfection by laws of heredity.

Then God sent forth His Son, born of a woman, with a life uncontaminated, a life that was not derived from father Adam and was therefore not involved in his sentence. This One, "holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners," God recognised as His Son. When He made consecration of His life at Jordan and symbolised it in His water baptism, God accepted the sacrifice and bestowed upon Him the holy spirit in begetting power.

Thenceforth He was the Son of God in two senses —first, according to the flesh ; and second, according to the spirit. But in God's, order the spirit-begotten One was to triumph by fully offering up the fleshly one. This work of Jesus was accomplished at Calvary, where He laid down His life on behalf of the sins of the whole world.

But still God could not recognise the world. They were all sinners, and continued so to be until Jesus ascended on High, appeared in the Father's presence, and made satisfaction for sins. Be it noted, however, that He did not make satisfaction for all sins then, but merely for the sins of the Church—for the sins of those who would be called of the Father, and who would accept the call and walk in the footsteps of Jesus. As for the world, their sins are still on them.

The only way to obtain forgiveness of sins during this Age, therefore, is to become a disciple of Jesus.

Thus, as the Apostle says, we, Jesus' followers, have escaped the condemnation that is still on the world. The Scriptures show us that God has a different way for dealing with the world, and a different time. He will deal with the world through Christ's Millennial Kingdom, for a thousand years, to scatter their darkness, to forgive their sins and lift them, up, to human perfection. Meantime, God deals with the Church only; and it is the Church class that the Apostle discusses in respect of the gifts.

This Church class began its existence at Pentecost—Whitsuntide. Hence, we say that this marks a most important era in the affairs of the Church. It is true that Jesus called His disciples and told them various things during His ministry ; but when He left them, He instructed them to tarry and not to begin their work at all until they should be duly authorised by the Father, duly anointed with the holy spirit. This anointing which they would receive would be their authority, and would give them necessary qualifications to be the mouthpieces and ambassadors of the Father and of the Son.

The Father could not recognise them sooner than Pentecost, for until Christ's presentation of His merit on their behalf, they were like the remainder of the world—still sinners, still condemned. When the Pentecostal blessing came, it manifested the fact that Jesus had ascended to the Father's presence, and that the Father had graciously received Him, had appreciated His great work of sacrifice, and had accepted it as satisfactory for the sins of the Church —the Household of Faith. It was on the basis of this forgiveness of sins, as well as on the basis of the consecration of the disciples to God and His service, that the spirit-begetting of Pentecost came upon them.

The Gifts of the Spirit.

We 'are to distinguish between the gifts of the spirit and the fruits of the spirit. The fruits of the holy spirit are developments of the heart and character, which come more or less slowly, according to the personality and the environment of each of the spirit-begotten ones. These fruits of the spirit, the Apostle tells us, can be seen; they are manifest -- "Meekness, gentleness, patience, long-suffering, brotherly-kindness, love."

These fruits must be developed in our hearts ; and this will mean more or less of a manifestation of them in our words and deeds, as well as in our thoughts. The riper the Christian, the riper these fruits; and if no fruits, then no Christian; for as the Apostle says, "If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of His." But this spirit of Christ, these fruits of the spirit, may be more or less overshadowed by weaknesses of the flesh ; and all may not be able to see to what extent the brother who is weak in the flesh is really fighting a good fight against the spirit of the world, the spirit of the Adversary, and the mind of his own flesh.

God alone knoweth the heart ; therefore, we are to judge nothing as respects the degree of faithfulness. We may, however, and should judge, as to whether or not we see good fruits or bad fruits in ourselves, or in others who profess to be followers of Jesus. The Master said, "By their fruits ye shall know them. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?" Surely not! The thorns and the thistles are bad fruits, belonging to the evil nature, and not fruits of the spirit, of the Lord, appertaining to the New Creature,

But when Pentecost came, those disciples who had already accepted Jesus were not prepared to manifest immediately rich, ripe fruitage of the holy spirit. It requires days, weeks, months, years, for such development. Up to this time they were natural men. Only a few days before Jesus had said to them, "Except ye become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter into the Kingdom." He perceived that there was strife amongst themselves as to which should be greatest; and that this was entirely contrary to the proper spirit which they must have if they would finally be accounted worthy of participation in His Kingdom. We see then why the brethren waiting at Pentecost in the upper room could not have a manifestation of the fruits of the spirit at that time. But it was very necessary to them and to us that they should have some manifestation of God's favour; that there should be some way in which God would show that Jesus had accomplished the Father's work, and that His sacrifice had been acceptable to the Father on our behalf. God manifested this acceptance by the bestowment of certain gifts, which were not fruits of the spirit, in any sense of the word.

Those gifts were widely distributed in the early Church, and were miraculous. Some who had received the gift of the spirit spoke one language and some another, of which they had previously no knowledge; some had the gift of interpreting the foreign languages which the others spoke; some received the gift of healing; and some had power to work other miracles.

These gifts served a three-fold purpose: (1) They proved God's favour, and that it had come through Christ, and therefore proved that He had ascended, and that His entire work of redemption had been satisfactory to the Father. (2) They were proofs to the public that God was with these people. This would lead lovers of God to investigate the Message they bore. (3) They were an assurance to the disciples themselves that they were following in the right way, and that God was blessing them and leading them.

All these experiences, indispensable for the establishment of the early Church, came at a time when such manifestation was most necessary. The early Church could not walk by faith as we do. They needed the assistance of sight, to the extent that was there granted, for they had no Bibles. They had no instruction from God except such as came through these channels.

St. Paul explains the matter to us. When they,, came together, one would speak in an unknown tongue. Another would arise in another part of the audience, and with a power not his own give an interpretation of the foreign language used by the speaker with "tongues." This drew the brethren together every day, especially on the first day of the week. They wanted to have fellowship and instruction ; and in this way they obtained it, God guiding in respect of the messages delivered in unknown tongues and to the interpretations.

Thus God taught them in almost the only way they could have received instruction at that time, but very differently from the way in which He now instructs His people, or has ever instructed them since the Apostles' day. Such instruction is no longer necessary, and is therefore no longer given. Instead, we have something much better. We have the Gospels, recording our Lord's words, parables, dark sayings, etc., we have the Epistles of the New Testament, comments of the inspired Apostles on the Old Testament writings; and we have the prophecies of the Old Testament, to which St. Peter declares, "We do well to take heed, as unto a light which shineth in a dark place, until the Day dawn." —2 Peter I :19.

Ours a Better Experience.

With these Divinely provided helps, the man of God, as St. Paul declares, "may be thoroughly furnished unto every good work." Through these channels the holy spirit is instructing the Church. But the gifts of the spirit were necessary at Pentecost. Instead of those gifts, we now have the fruits of the spirit, as testifying God's favour, and our own progress in the good way. With our further enlightenment the Lord requires of us more than was required of the early Church—that we walk by faith and not by sight.

St. Paul points out that all these variations in the manifestations of the spirit meant, not different spirits, but the one Spirit, working in the entire Church, with the one purpose of building them all up as various members in the one Body of Christ. He says, "There are diversities of operations, but it is the same God that worketh all in all. To one is given by the spirit the word of wisdom ; to another, the word of knowledge; to another, faith; to another, gifts of healing; to another, miracles; to another, prophecy ; to another, discerning of spirits; to another, diversity of tongues and interpretations."

"Ye Are All One Body."

The oneness of the Church with each other and with their Lord, the Head, St. Paul repeatedly sets forth. He shows that the different gifts enable the different members of the Body to co-operate for their mutual welfare, edification and upbuilding, in preparation for the glories of service in the coming Kingdom. He says that as the human body is one, but has many members, all under the control of the head, so also is the Body of Christ. The Church is one Body, but composed of many members, all under the control of the Head, Jesus, operating through the spirit of truth, by the Word of truth and by Divine providences.

The object of the organisation of the Church is not the conversion of the world, but it is the up-building of herself and preparation for a future service. That future service is to be the blessing of the world. But before that service for the world can be properly begun, the Church herself must be developed, proven, approved of God, and glorified by a share in the First Resurrection.

A More Excellent Way.

St. Paul, further on in the chapter, tells how the various members of the Body should co-operate with each other, offsetting each other's imperfections, compensating for each other's shortcomings and weaknesses, and seeking only the welfare of the Body as a whole. There should be no schisms, no division, no sectarianism in the Body of Christ, the Church, and all the members should have the same love one for another. Sectarian love and sectarian pride should be unknown. Likewise, if any of the members suffer, all should feel a sympathy. He points out that God set the different members in this Body ; first, the Apostles; and secondarily, prophets, or orators; and thirdly, teachers ; after that, miracles, gifts, helps, diversities of tongues. All have not the same office given them of the Lord, but each should seek faithfully to use the talents which he possesses; and while using these gifts they should seek the best they are- capable of exercising.

Then the Apostle adds, "Yet shew I unto you a more excellent way," still better than any of these gifts. Following along (chapter 13), he declares that one might have these gifts, and yet make shipwreck entirely ; and that it was necessary, even with the gifts, to cultivate the fruits of the spirit. For though we should have the gift of prophecy, understanding all mysteries and knowledge, ...and have all faith, but have not love—the great fruit of the spirit—we would be nothing. Moreover., he declares that the gifts would vanish away, but that the fruits would last eternally.

It is important, then, in our 'consideration of Whitsuntide blessings, that we remember that without the fruits of the spirit we would be nothing, and would have no share in the glorious Messianic Kingdom, for which we are waiting and praying, "Thy Kingdom come ; Thy will be done on earth as in Heaven."

“This Do in Remembrance of Me.”

JESUS was a Jew, and was, therefore, obligated to every feature of the Mosaic Law. He came not to destroy the Law, but to fulfil it. This study points us to the fulfilment of one feature of the Law—the Passover—not that it is already entirely fulfilled, but that the antitype has been in process of fulfilment for nineteen centuries, during which time the Church of the First-born remains covered by the blood.

To appreciate this study, we must have clearly in mind the type :—Approximately 3500 years ago God delivered the people of Israel from the despotic power of Pharaoh, King of Egypt. Time after time Pharaoh had refused to let the people go, preferring to hold them as chattels, slaves. Time after time God had sent plagues upon Egypt as chastisements. Under the influence of each plague Pharaoh repented, and through Moses entreated God for mercy for himself and the people for relief from the plague. Nevertheless, every manifestation of Divine mercy tended only to harden his heart, until finally the tenth plague, the severest of all, was necessary. That plague consisted in the execution of the death sentence against all the first-born of Egypt. But the Israelites in Egypt were exempt from its provisions under certain conditions. Each family ‘Was required to have its own lamb, not a bone of which was to be broken. Its blood was sprinkled on the door-posts of the house, and the family, assembled within, partook of its flesh, with unleavened bread and bitter herbs, pilgrim-like, with staff in hand, ready for departure out of Egypt in the morning.

Israel’s First-borns Passed Over.

When that night the Divine sentence slew all of Egypt’s first-borns, the first-borns of Israel were passed over or spared ; hence the name Passover. And this ceremony, as a reminder of the great blessing of the Lord upon Israel, was commended to be observed yearly as a memorial of God’s goodness, and because it typed, or illustrated, a still greater mercy and blessing yet to come.

A little later on those spared first-borns were exchanged for one of the tribes—Levi. Thereafter the Levites were the passed-over first-borns, and were specially devoted to God and His service.

The Antitypical Fulfilment.

Those experiences of the Israelites and their firstborn ones were very real, and properly very interesting to them; but they are still more interesting to Christians, who themselves are antitypes now being passed over. By Christians we do not mean all who merely make profession, nor all who attend Church, however regularly. We mean merely the saintly few who are now being called and being tested as to faithfulness to the Lord, and by faith being passed over—from death unto life. These are Scripturally styled “The Church of the firstborn, whose names are written in heaven” (Heb. 12:23). As the deliverance of the nation of Israel from Egypt took place after the sparing or passing over of the firstborn, so, correspondingly, the Divine blessing will come upon the world of mankind directly after the completion of “the Church of the first-born”—directly after their passing from death unto life, by the power of the First Resurrection. If there is a first-born class, it implies that there will be an after-born class. Thus the Scriptures everywhere distinctly teach that the present call, trial, testing, proving and final rewarding of the Church will not be the end of Divine mercy toward humanity, but, on the contrary, will be only its beginning; for since the saintly are spoken of as the “Church of the firstborn,” or, as the Apostle declares, “the first-fruits unto God of His creatures” we are assured thereby that afterfruits are equally part of the Divine Programme.

Amongst the Levites were several divisions, representing different ranks and grades of the Church of Christ. But the principal division or section of the Levites was the priestly family of Aaron, just as there is a special class amongst the antitypical Levites, the faithful few, known in the Scriptures as the Royal Priesthood.

The Antitypical Lamb And His Blood.

In Jesus' day the time had come for the fulfilment of the antitype of the Passover. Jesus Himself was to be the Passover Lamb. By faith the merit of His sacrifice, His blood, was to be sprinkled upon the door-posts of His people's hearts, and His flesh, the merit of His earthly perfection, was to be eaten or appropriated by them in their minds. With it they were to eat the unleavened bread of the Divine promises, and bitter herbs of trials and adversities, and withal they were to drink wine, the blood of the grape, symbolically implying their participation with the Lamb in ignominy and sufferings.

The Lamb of God, Jesus, the antitypical Passover Lamb, was slain nearly nineteen centuries ago on the exact anniversary of the killing of the typical lamb. The sacrifice of Jesus needs not to be repeated, for by faith we all sprinkle this same blood to-day, and in our hearts feed upon the merit of the same earthly sacrifice, and have plenty of bitter herbs of persecution, and drink of the blood—share the Master's spirit and its reward of suffering for righteousness' sake.

Not many have appreciated these privileges during all these nineteen centuries—in all hilt a “little flock.” Nor are there many who envy them their present experiences ; nor are there many who appreciate how great will be their reward and blessings in the life to come. Then, instead of suffering with Christ, they shall reign with Him in glory, honor, and immortality.

“This Do in Remembrance of Me.”

Jesus, about to begin the fulfilment of this type by dying as the antitypical Passover Lamb (Christ our Passover is slain for us.-1 Cor. 5:7), instituted for His followers an annual remembrance, which, in their minds, would take the place of the type, and continually remind them of the great Antitype. Instead of the literal flesh of the Lamb, our Master used bread, and instead of the blood, the fruit of the vine, and instead of a further commemoration of the type, He directed that this be done in remembrance of the antitype--”the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world,” and the passover coming to the Church of the first-born, as precedent to the great blessings for Israel and all the families of the earth.

Our Lord, as a Jew, was obligated to keep the typical Passover, eating of the literal lamb, etc., first ; but subsequently, after that Passover supper, He instituted with the bread and fruit of the vine His substitutionary memorial of Himself, saying, “Take eat, this is my body. And He took the cup ; and when he had given thanks, he gave it to them ; and they all drank of it. And he said, . . Verily I say unto you, I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new in the Kingdom of God”—until His second coming in power and great glory to receive the Church as His elect Bride and Joint-Heir in His kingdom, and to shower blessings richly upon Israel, and through Israel upon the whole world of mankind.

Judas, the, Selfish Betrayer.

The hour for the betrayal was drawing near. The Master knew by some power unknown to us who would betray Him, etc. Breaking the matter to the twelve, He said, “One of you will betray me.” Each said, “Is it I?” Even Judas brazenly challenged the Master's knowledge of his deceitful course and said, “Is it I?” The answer was, “It is as you have said--you are the betrayer.” The Divine programme was carried out by the traitor, and the Scriptures were fulfilled, which declare that Jesus should be sold for thirty pieces of silver ; but the coincidence marks the Divine fore-knowledge with-. our implying that God in any manner instigated the traitorous conduct, hence the statement, “Woe unto that man by whom the Son of Man is betrayed.” From this standpoint we are to understand that there is no hope for Judas in a future life. His sorrow and anguish before his death were such as found no compensation in any happiness he had enjoyed in previous days.

In My Father’s Kingdom.

In giving the disciples the bread which represented His flesh, and the cup which represented His blood, the Master pictorially offered them justification and sanctification, and, as St. Paul explained, He did more than this—He offered them a participation with Himself in the sufferings of the present and in the glories of the future (1 Cor. 10:10, 17; Matt. 26:29). The antitype of the cup in its higher sense will be the new joys of the kingdom which all the faithful in Christ will share with the great King of Glory, when he shall take unto Himself His great power and reign.

“Lord, I would keep Thy Holy feast,
Like Israel when His bondage ceased;
And safe beneath the sprinkled mark,
His every home became an ark.

Only the Lamb which Israel slew
I need not to make bleed anew:
Because the blood which stained the Cross
Is mark of which there ne’er is loss.

I’d keep the feast with bread from heaven,
Free from all taint of earthly leaven:
Yet find some sad resemblance glide,
Which sets the bitter herbs beside.

I seek the feast with upgirt mind,
As for immediate work assigned;
And eat like one on passing stay,
Impatient to resume the way.

That sprinkled blood hath had the power
To hold me safe in judgment’s hour;
But still for me a task remains,
To haste and flee from Egypt’s plains.

With Thy refreshing viands fed,
I shrink not, Lord, wherever led;
And still with pilgrim’s staff in hand,
Plod firmly tow’rds the promised land.”

The Lord's Sanctuary.

Psa. 73:2-17.

(Convention Address).

THE Psalmist was in great discouragement as he looked out on the world and beheld its injustices, its inequalities and its evils. It was all so out of harmony with his conception of God's love, justice, wisdom and power. As a consequence, his "feet were almost gone, his steps had well nigh slipped"; in short, his faith had almost failed, he was in doubt and perplexity. The age old question of why evil is permitted was troubling him, as it has thoughtful minds from the beginning, for, as the prophet says, man's ways and thoughts are not God's ways and thoughts, and the answer to it ail can be seen only from God's standpoint.

And so the Psalmist continued, "until he went into the Sanctuary of God." What a change was then wrought; there he got God's viewpoint—the mind of the Lord, the wonderful soul-satisfying, peace-bringing, elevating vision of God's ways- - to be found only in His Sanctuary. Psa, 65:4; 84:10.

So it is with us. Although formerly in similar perplexity, the same wonderful privilege is open to us also, by God's love and mercy and grace. We, too, may come into His Sanctuary; we, too, may thus obtain the wonderful vision of God's ways and Plan.

How, then, may we gain admission to God's Sanctuary ? It is only, if, like the Psalmist, we realise our need, that we can gain admittance. We need that humility of heart and mind that divests us of our own wisdom that we may seek only God's ways, for "God resisteth the proud but sheweth favour to the humble." And again, "He knoweth the proud afar off." God thus knows the proud, but He knows them afar off ; they are not close to Elim in His Sanctuary—the secret place of fellowship and communion. How sweetly the Master's words have rung clown through the age to His humble ones with the hearing ear—"Come unto Me all ye that labour . . . and I will give you rest." The Psalmist (Psa. 91) tells us that it is the secret place of the Most High, and the Apostle, speaking of the spirit-begotten ones of this age, says, "We are seated in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." it is the antitype of the Holy Place of the Tabernacle to which the priests alone had access.

As the Psalmist's feet were almost gone until he went into the sanctuary—so with us. Without, all is dark, slippery and uncertain, and we need to make the sanctuary our continual abode. Here alone is the true wisdom obtained that wisdom from above, of which the Apostle speaks (Jas. 3:17 ; Col. :9; 2:3), and that knowledge of the truth that alone can sanctify us (John 17:17). Like David, this one desire should fill our hearts—"To dwell in the house of the Lord, to behold His beauty, and to enquire in His temple."

The Psalmist says, "Strength and beauty are in His sanctuary" (Psa. 96:6). Here, then, is our source of strength, and which is in harmony with the Apostle's exhortation to be "strong in the Lord." Isa. 40:31, tells us "Those that wait on the 'cud shall renew their strength ; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary ; they shall walk and not faint." Thus is our strength restored and renewed continually. Like our physical strength, our spiritual strength needs to be continually replenished. The Lord does not give us strength for a long period ahead, but He continually renews us, if we wait on Him. Like the manna in the wilderness, it needs to be gathered day by day,

The Prophet tells us that this strength will enable us to mount up with wings as eagles. How high the eagles mount up ; we see them sometimes like mere specks in the sky. How does the eagle get so high? His great strength enables him to. mount up on the invisible air, and so with us. In the Lord's strength, renewed day by day, we, too, can mount up on the things invisible to the natural eye, the things seen only by the eye of faith and spiritual understanding. And what a wonderful view this gives us, our scope of vision is enlarged, our horizon stretches out until we can behold the land that is very far off (Isa. 33:17).

In addition to strength, the Psalmist tells us that beauty, also, is in the Lord's sanctuary. The word "beauty," here, has also the thought of comeliness, fairness, honour and majesty. This was the one great desire of David, to dwell in the House of the Lord, and to behold His beauty (Psa. 27:4). Again, in Isa. 33:17, we have this promise—"Thine eyes shall see the king, in His beauty"—the perfection of beauty and holiness. "Who is like unto thee, glorious in holiness?" (Exod. 15:11).

So, the Lord desires us to attain this beauty of holiness also, and to this end He has brought us into His sanctuary. There He covers our uncouthness with His beautiful garments—the garments of salvation, the robe of righteousness and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness. "Awake, awake ; put on thy strength, 0 Zion ; put on thy beautiful garments." (Isa. 52:1).

Not only does the Lord desire us to be thus outwardly adorned, but He desires us to be beautiful within. The Psalmist says, "The King's daughter is all glorious within," and so David prayed, "Create in me a clean heart, 0 Lord, and renew a right spirit within me."

The Lord looks on the heart and the Apostle tells us how we may be changed and made glorious within when he says, "We behold as in a glass the glory of the Lord, and are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the spirit of the Lord" (2 Cor. 3:18).

Let us, then, seek to dwell in the Lord's sanctuary, to make it the place of our continual inquiry and source of strength, joy, peace and fellowship with the Lord. "Lord, I have loved the habitation of Thy house and the place where Thine honour dwelleth" (Psa. 26:8).

River of Water of Life.

IN Ezekiel we find that the Lord gives us a picture of the Messianic Age, .very similar to the one given us in the Book of Revelation, seven hundred years after.

Ezekiel's picture shows Jerusalem and the Temple of God as the starting point for the River of the Water of Life ; so in the Revelation account. Ezekiel shows the river deepening and broadening from a rivulet to a mighty river. He pictures it as flowing down to the Dead Sea, and carrying life whithersoever it goes.

He pictures the Dead Sea as being revived, recovered from its deadness, and full of fish. No such river has ever yet sprung forth from Jerusalem, nor can we imagine how the river would ever have its start in the mountain top and reach such proportions in the short distance.

This description, picturing a great spiritual truth, is in full accord with the picture in Revelation. It represents beautifully, forcefully, the blessings of refreshment and restitution which will issue forth from the New Jerusalem, the Kingdom of Messiah, when it shall be established amongst men. Gradually the mighty influences of the reign of Messiah will extend blessings to all mankind, even to the submerged class, steeped in ignorance and superstition and degradation, fitly represented by the Dead Sea.

Revelation pictures this river as flowing from under the Throne, the New Jerusalem, clear as crystal, and having trees of life on either side of its banks, good for food. Ezekiel has the same picture in mind; he tells of the same trees, whose leaves shall not fade and whose fruit shall not fall, but which will bring forth good fruit every month, because the water which refreshes them comes from the Sanctuary. "The fruit thereof shall be for meat, and the leaves thereof for healing." Similarly, in Revelation, we are told, "The leaves will be for the healing of the people; and the fruit for the sustenance of everlasting life; and the Water itself will be for their refreshment." Then, we are told, "the Spirit and the Bride" shall give the invitation—a world-wide invitation; "Whosoever will" then may come, and he who hears the invitation may say to others, "Come, and drink of the Water of Life, freely"!

No "River of Water of Life" Now.

We are certain in our application of these symbolic pictures, that they belong to the future and not to the present time. There is the Water of Life of Revelation now? Where have we anything corresponding- to the life-sustaining trees and their healing leaves? On the contrary, we have the Lord's Word for it that "No man can come unto Me except the Father which sent Me draw him." (John 6:44). In other words, there is a measure of selection or election as respects the class invited to constitute "the Bride, the Lamb's Wife." "No man taketh this honour unto himself, but he that is called."

But with the end of this Age will come the end of the elective process; then the Divine Message will be Free Grace, an offering and opportunity to every creature of Adam's race. All blind eyes will be opened that all may see; all (leaf ears will be unstopped that all may hear; and the knowledge of the glory of God shall fill the whole earth; none will need to say to his neighbour, "Know the Lord, for all shall know Him from the least unto the greatest of them."--Jer. 31:34.

No Bride to say "Come."

The Revelation picture tells us that the Bride of Christ, as well as the holy spirit, will give the invitation to every creature to come and partake of the Water of Life, freely. But how could the Bride give this invitation before she exists? That there is no Bride at the present time is manifest. Now is the time for calling the Bride class. Now is the time for those invited to make their “calling and their election sure”; but there will be no Bride until the Incoming Age. The name “Bride” implies a marriage; the Church is already espoused . to Christ, but the marriage is promised to take place at His second coming. Then there will be a Bride, and shortly after, the Bride, in association with her Lord, will be in Kingdom power, in the New Jerusalem—the heavenly. From that city, that new Seat of earth’s Empire, will go forth God’s Message, gradually deepening and broadening until every member of the race shall have had an opportunity to share in its blessing of life everlasting.

In thinking of these glorious favours coming to mankind, let us remember that they will all be earthly — a restitution to that which was lost. Earthly, splendour and human perfection are God’s provision for the willing and obedient of mankind in general. The invitation to become members of the Bride of Christ is a limited one, having a limited time;; and if our understanding of the Scriptures is correct, the end of this special opportunity is nigh —the time for the change to the condition of glory is at the door—the time for the blessing of all the families of the earth is at hand.

Correspondence.

March, 1936. Dear Brother,

You recently published a very helpful article from the “Old Paths,” and until recently I had enjoyed the reading in these pamphlets, although perhaps not endorsing all they taught; but in the last few issues, instead of keeping to the “Old Paths” they have wandered into “By Paths.” One recently declared, “The end is not yet,” and another states,

“The Millennium is here.” How can the era of Christ’s reign of 1000 years have begun if the end of the present evil world has not yet been reached? Surely there was no doubt when the “Old World” of Noah’s day ended and the New Era—the “Present Evil World”—began. While there were 120 years of warning, yet the ending of one world and the beginning of another world or age only occupied a short time—seven days to end, and in fifteen months the New Age had begun.

It seems absurd to say “the Millennium is here.” In the pamphlet the writer acknowledges that “man’s troubles have increased a hundred-fold” in the last sixty years, during which, he says, Christ has been ruling. He bases his claim on a chronological chain which is faulty. The period allotted to the Judges, 450 years, is not warranted; in fact, is contradicted by 1 Kings 6:1. The period of 450 years mentioned in Acts 13:20 refers to the time from Isaac to the division of the land. See Tichendorf’s New Testament rendering from the Sinaitic MSS. The period of the Kings is also incorrect, as may be seen from a careful scrutiny of dates of reigns, comparing the Kings of Israel and the Kings of Judah.

There does not appear to be sufficient Scriptural and other evidence that 1874 was the time of our Lord’s return, let alone that ‘He set up His Kingdom from that date, or 1878. There is strong evidence that our Lord would be present for some time prior to the establishing of His Throne and the opening of the New Age.

Quite possibly “the days of the Son of Man,” at the end of this “present evil world” prior to the “great time of trouble,” would be about the same length of time as were “the days of Noah which were before the flood.”

There are several points in the pamphlet I do not agree with. I will just mention one or two:—(1) Regarding the Parable of the Ten Virgins: Although claiming “the Millennium is here,” the writer expects earth’s trouble to go on increasing and that it will be in these troubles that “the virgins will awaken from their slumber.” But Bro. Russell has shown that the virgins were awakened in 1829-44 by the Millerite movement. Besides, when the Millennium begins, the Bride of Christ will be with Him complete as “the queen in gold of Ophir.” She must reign with Him 1000 years (not 900 odd). Just so Satan’s kingdom must first be overthrown and Satan bound for 1000 years (not In view of these coming blessings foretold by the Prophet and by the Lord Himself, can we not join with the poet in singing:—

“Rejoice! rejoice! the promised time is coming!
Rejoice! rejoice! the wilderness shall bloom!
And Zion’s children soon shall sing,
‘The deserts all are blossoming!’
Rejoice! rejoice! the promised time is coming!
Rejoice! rejoice! the wilderness shall bloom!
The Gospel banner wide unfurled,
Shall wave in triumph o’er the world,
And every creature, bond or free, hail hail the glorious Jubilee!”

900 odd). Satan and Christ cannot both rule concurrently, See Matthew 12:29 and Luke 11:21.

(2) The writer uses the figure of deliverance of Israel from Egypt as though to illustrate that the Kingdom is set up before the time of trouble. It would seem rather to prefigure the opposite—Moses had been quite a long time negotiating the deliverance and preparing Israel, but it was not until Pharoah’s hosts were drowned that the Law Covenant was established; and just so, not until Satan is overcome will Christ establish His throne, inaugurate the New Age, establish the New Covenant with Israel and open up the Highway. Much more could be said.

I regret having to take such exceptions to this publication, but loyalty to the truth appears to require it.

Yours in Christian love and service,
Scotland.

Berean Biblical Institute.
Dear Brethren,

Christian greetings. Once again it is our privilege to send you our annual subscription for the “People’s Paper,” and, as usual, half the amount enclosed is forwarded by our Bro. and Sis.

We sincerely trust that the interests of present truth are progressing favourably with you in Australia, and that the brethren are continuing to recognise the advantage of a centre for getting in touch with one another.

We are glad to say that the Associated Bible Students’ Class here is continuing to hold well together, and progressing in the spirit of brotherly love. The number in the class is about the same; a few new brethren have joined us, but some of the older ones have passed away, or are unable to meet regularly with us through ill-health. We have three regular meetings each week—Sunday morning, a study in Daniel, with Bro. Streeter’s book as a text-book; Sunday evening, a study in the Parables; Thursday evening, Hebrews. Each type gives plenty of strong food if we like to dig for it, and often the ability to agree to disagree is a good test of Christian character. We find the study of the parables is often the most difficult, although always interesting. We are endeavouring to adopt the Question and Answer method of Berean Study so well advocated by Bro. Russell; but, as usual, it is easier to ask the question than find the correct answer. One of our recent questionnaires is enclosed, just to show how one verse of Scripture may provide an hour’s study for at least three Sun-clays. We also have an address by one of the elders once a month, and a Praise and Testimony meeting every quarter.

With Christian love from us all,
Sincerely in the one Hope of our Calling,

Signs of the Son of Man.

(Matthew, 24th chapter. Convention Address.)

AS our Lord's earthly ministry began to draw to a close, He seemed to endeavour to prepare His disciples gradually for the new dispensation. in the 24th chapter of Matthew's gospel we have recorded our Lord's great prophecy. This prophecy of our Lord's is of great value and importance to the followers of Christ because it throws much light on the closing of this Gospel Age, and enables God's faithful, watching people to discern the signs which indicate our Lord's Second Presence.

In Matthew 24 :3 we read, "And as Jesus sat upon the mount of Olives, the disciples came unto Him privately, saying, Tell us—When shall these things be? and, What shall be the sign of Thy coming, and of the end of the Age?"

We call attention to the word rendered "coming" in this text. It is from the Greek word "parousia," which means presence.

The word "parousia" occurs 24 times in the New Testament. The translators of our Authorised Version have obscured the meaning of this word by rendering it "coming" no less than 22 times. Only twice has the correct thought of presence been given in this Greek word "parousia." In 2 Cor. 10:10 the word "parousia" is properly translated "presence"; again in Phil. 2:12.

With the aid of the helps which God's providence has placed in the hands of His watching people, we are now able to discern that there are three words of distinctly different signification used in respect of the Lord's second advent, namely, "parousia" and "epiphania" and "apokalupsis." "Parousia" is used in respect of the earliest stages of the second advent, while "apokalupsis" relates to the same advent later—not that "apokalupsis" and "epiphania" relate to another or a third advent, but merely to a later feature of the second advent.

The Lord's watching people are now able to see that the word "parousia" translated in our Common Version "coming" does not mean what our English word signifies ; namely, to be on the way, approaching; but that on the contrary it signifies presence, as of one who has already arrived. It is discerned also that the Scriptures predicate certain things respecting the Lord and respecting His parousia (His presence) which clearly intimate that He will be present and doing His work, His great work (of setting up His Kingdom and smiting the nations with the sword of His mouth) wholly unknown to the world—"as a thief in the night." The Scriptures clearly indicate that after the Lord has done certain things during His presence (parousia) and unknown to the world, He will later make a manifestation of His presence ;—a manifestation which will be discerned by all mankind ; and the outward manifestation is designated His "epiphania" which signifies "shining forth" or "bright shining."

The Lord's watching people get the two thoughts respecting the Lord's second coming; that first, although really present, a spirit being like the angels (who, we are told, encamp round about them that fear God and deliver them), our Lord, now a glorious spirit being, of the divine nature, will not be manifest to the natural eye during His presence— His parousia. Hence the necessity that the Lord's faithful ones shall "watch," because they, no more than the world, can discern a spirit being with their natural eyes. The watching ones in due time are to discern the presence (parousia) of their Lord by the eye of faith. The eye of faith will in due time take note of the "sign of the Son of Man"—the indications of the presence of the King.

Viewed in the light of the clearer understanding which we now have of the meaning of the word "parousia," the question which the disciples asked of the Lord is full of meaning to us. Their question was not "How will we know when you are on your way—approaching?" but rather "How will we know when you are present?" "What shall be the sign of Thy 'presence' (parousia) and of the end of the Age?"

It would seem that the questions as well as the answer which follows were of divine providence; for the prophecy was surely meant more for the instruction of God's people living in this "harvest" time, than for those who asked the questions. In answer to their question the Lord warns His disciples to "take heed that no man deceive you. For many shall come in My name saying, I am Christ and shall deceive many."

Gamaliel mentions two of these false Christs in his speech referred to in Acts 5:36, 37; and history tells us of several others who deceived quite a few Jews. Most notable among these was Sabbathai Levi, of Smyrna, who announced himself A.D. 1648 Sabbathai Levi styled himself "The first-born Son of God, the Messiah, the Saviour of Israel," and promised a restoration of the kingdom and prosperity. Altogether, there have probably been fifty or more false Christs, male and female, and many of them would seem to have been demented—possessed of evil spirits. But none of these, nor all of them together, can be said to have "deceived many." Yet it is against this kind which "deceive many" that our Lord cautions us here, and again, later on in this prophecy, in which connection we will consider particularly the anti-christs which have deceived many.

In verses 6-8 the Lord briefly summarises the secular history of the Gospel Age, and teaches the disciples not to expect very soon His second coming and glorious Kingdom. And how aptly ; surely the world's history is just this—an account of wars, intrigues, famines and pestilences. Our Lord separates the history of the true church and states it with similar brevity (see verses 9-13). How true is this description of the Church's experiences throughout the Gospel Age. "Whosoever will live godly shall suffer persecution," says the Apostle, and history attests the truth of these words.

In verse 14 the Lord assures His disciples that the gospel of the kingdom must be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations (not to Israel only) before the end of the age would come. The Lord did not say that all the nations would be converted by the preaching of the gospel during this age; rather, it was to be "a witness to the nations," and to call and perfect and gather out of all nations "the elect." Later on "the elect," When raised to kingdom power, will bless the nations, opening their deaf ears to the gospel, and their blinded eyes to the True Light. This witness has already been given; the Word of the Lord, the gospel of the Kingdom has been published to every nation of earth. Each individual has not heard it ; but that is not the statement of the prophecy. It was to be, and has been, a national proclamation, and the end of the Age has now come. "The harvest," as our Lord explained (Matt. 13:39), "is the end of the Age."

Thus our Lord briefly summed up the eighteen centuries of trials and persecutions upon His Church, and the fruit of their labour, in successfully witnessing to all nations, and hastened on to answer the important query respecting how the living would know of the time and the fact of His second presence.

It was with evident intention on God's part, though unknown to the Evangelists, that the record of our Lord's prophecy at this point is given piecemeal—here a part and there another; here a reference to the typical trouble on typical Israel in the close of the typical harvest, there a reference to the similar though more general and greater trouble in the end of this Age upon antitypical Israel—Christendom. The prophets declared of our Lord that He opened His mouth in parables and dark sayings, and “without a parable spake he not unto them.” Yet in harmony with the divine intention, the dark sayings and parables are now becoming luminous to all whose eyes are anointed with the true eye-salve.

(Read verses 15-22.) Four points in this narrative show that while it may have had a typical application to the trouble in the end of the Jewish Age, its real or most important application belongs to the trouble with which the Gospel Age terminates. (1) The reference to the “desolating abomination” mentioned in Daniel's prophecy. (2) The statement that the trouble will be the most severe the world has ever known or will ever experience.

(3) That unless the duration of the time of trouble should be shortened there would be no flesh saved.

(4) The context succeeding unquestionably ‘describes events at the end of the Gospel Age—events which could not be applied to the end or harvest of the Jewish Age and were not fulfilled there. Two of these points deserve special examination.

The prophet Daniel 9:27 did record that after Messiah would be “cut off” in the midst of the seventieth week of covenant favour, He, by establishing the antitypical sacrifices of atonement, would cause the sacrifices and oblations of the law to cease; and that then, because abominations would prevail, He would pour destruction upon the desolate (rejected nation), as God had previously decreed.

All this had its fulfilment in the destruction of fleshly Israel's polity. From the time our Lord said, “Your house is left unto you desolate”—“ye shall see Me no more until that day when ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of Jehovah,” their religion became an abomination, an empty form, a mark of their repudiation of the one sacrifice for sins which God had provided; and resting under the curse they had invoked upon themselves when they said, “His blood be on us and upon our children,” their course toward destruction was rapid as God had decreed and foretold.

But Daniel's prophecy has much to say about an Abomination that maketh Desolate in nominal spiritual Israel; which was set up in power representatively in Papacy, and which has exercised a great and baneful influence of spiritual desolation in the spiritual house or temple of God, the church of Christ. This abominable system of error was to continue until the cleansing of the sanctuary class; and beyond that it was to prosper greatly and lead many in nominal spiritual Israel to repudiate the ransom-sacrifice, given once for all; and the result of its overspreading influence would be the desolation of rejected Christendom. Dan. 11:31; 12:11.

The great abomination of desolation whose foundation rests in the doctrine of the Mass (which substitutes human performances instead of the great sacrifice of Calvary, for the cleansing away of sin) is now being supplemented by theories of self-atonement, and these overspreading abominations are backed by such influence and sophistry as will deceive many—“if it were possible the very elect,” and be precursors of the destruction of Christendom.

Looking back we see in this another parallelism between the end of the Jewish harvest and the end of the Gospel harvest. Fleshly Israel's rejection of the true sacrifice for sins, and their retention of the typical sacrifices which were no longer acceptable to God, but abominations, was an important incident in connection with their national and ecclesiastical fall. So here, the rejection of the doctrine of the ransom and the acceptance of either masses or good works or penances instead, is abomination in God's sight and is an important incident in connection with the fall of Christendom, civil and ecclesiastical.

The abomination of desolation which defiled God's holy place or true temple, the Church, was the papal one, the cornerstone of which is the blasphemous doctrine of the Mass. The abomination, defilement and desolation are old; but so gross was the darkness of error during centuries past that few, if any, could see it. That the Mass was not seen to be the abomination, even by the Reformers, is evident; for although the Church of England in her Articles denies the power of the priests to create Christ out of bread and wine, to sacrifice Him- afresh, yet we have no intimation that the enormity of this sinful practice was seen. And Luther, while full of denunciation for many of Papacy's sins and falsities, did not see the great abomination of desolation to be the Mass. On the contrary, on his return to his church after his stay at Wurtburg Castle, finding that the Mass as well as images and candles had been discontinued, as being without scriptural authority, Luther re-established the Mass.

In this view of the matter there is much significance in our Lord's words—"When therefore ye see the abomination of desolation having stood in the holy place, as foretold by Daniel the Prophet (reader, consider), then let them which be in Judea flee to the mountains." Here we must remember the parallelism between the two harvests, the two times of trouble and the two flights; and must consider that Judea would represent Christendom of to-day.

The Greek word rendered "mountains" may with equal or greater propriety be rendered in the singular—mountain ; and it is so rendered in a majority of cases in the Common Version. Indeed, to flee out of Judea (literal) to either a mountain or many mountains seems peculiar, since Judea was in fact "a hill country," and Jerusalem is described as set in the top of the mountains. But to apply our Lord's words to the present time, and to His people in Christendom, who now, in the light of present truth, see the Abomination stand where it ought not—in the holy place—in the stead of the true sacrifice, is a very simple matter. They should at once flee from the influence of the Abomination and from the system falsely styling itself Christ's (mountain) kingdom, to the true mountain or Kingdom, which at this time Christ has returned to set up in glory and power.

But to leave Christendom, repudiating her temples, her forms of godliness, her social enchantments, her flatteries and honours, and to brave her denunciations and anathemas and her various powers of boycott, and to flee to the Lord and the true Kingdom, repudiated, ignored and denied by the worldly-wise and worldly-good, is surely quite a flight, quite a journey; and few but the "saints" will even think of starting on it. The perils of the way are portrayed by our Lord in a manner that would seem overdrawn and contrary to His usual custom if applicable only to the physical sufferings of the believers who fled from Judea in the close of the Jewish harvest ; but His words are manifestly appropriate to the spiritual flight and trials of. this present harvest time. In a word, this command to flee, and the description of its trials, can only be properly understood in connection with the command of Rev. 18:4—"Come out of her, my people, so that you may have no fellowship with her sins, and that you may not receive of her plagues."

Verses 17-18. These verses indicate the propriety of haste in flight out of "Babylon" as soon as each. sees the abomination of desolation. The Lord's word is, that all temporising or parleying or human reasoning will be dangerous ; no time must be lost in obeying as soon as He causes us to see the abomination of Babylon, and its relationship to all who have named His name. We must each watch and preserve our liberty in Christ even after having left Babylon and her defiling errors. We must preserve our liberty of conscience; our right of individual judgment. No man or set of men must be permitted to take the place of Christ our only Head. We must promptly resist any tendency to force upon us teachings contrary to the 'Word and spirit of our Lord. Alas ! how many, failing to heed the Master's word, have suffered themselves to be bound hand and foot, so that now flight is almost impossible. But the Master says—"My sheep hear My voice and they follow Me."

There is another lesson in these verses; they show that some of the Lord's people are in the houses or organised systems of Babylon—but, as intimated here, they are generally house-top saints, who have a higher life and experience and faith than merely nominal church members. These in their flight are not to go down into the house (nominal church systems) to seek to carry with them their "goods" -- their valuables in human estimation, such as titles, dignities, respect, commendations of good and regular standing, etc., but are to forsake all for Christ, and flee to the true Kingdom. While some of the Lord's people are in the "houses," others are in the "field," labouring in the interest of some earthly organisation. These should not think it proper to tarry in the field of their labour; but using their liberty should flee from their condition of bondage to sectarianism and become one with the Lord as members of His Kingdom. These verses show the need for prompt and positive action on the part of each and all of the Lord's people who find themselves in any danger of sectarian bondage.

Verse 19. This verse indicates that those engaged in the work of bringing forth and nourishing spiritual children in nominal Christendom will find many difficulties confronting them. How necessary it is to study carefully in order to understand the kind of work God would now have His people engage in. Some are so busy "winning souls for Christ" that they seem to neglect the higher call of this Age—to sacrifice earthly good things in order to run the race and attain the mark for the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus. The nominal church of to-day is full of "babes," some indeed babes in Christ; but many not sons of God; begotten of error instead of truth—"tares." How difficult it seems for those engaged in this work to leave all and follow Christ. They seem to want to bolster up the tottering walls of "Babylon"; but the message of the Lord is, "Come out of her, My people." Rev. 18:4. "We would have healed Babylon, but she is not healed : forsake her." Jer. X1:9.

Verses 20-22. This gathering of the church occurs in what is called a "harvest" time, at the close of a summertime of favour. Our Lord explained that in this harvest He would garner His wheat and burn the tares in a great time of trouble following. It is still the custom in country places to leave the burning-off of refuse until the winter. We understand our Lord to mean, then, that we are to seek help and strength to escape from Babylon before the wintertime of her trouble comes upon her.

We are to remember that there are two classes of wheat saved in this harvest—contrary to nature though it be. (1) The "overcomers," the faithful and promptly obedient who get out before "winter" and are "accounted worthy to escape all those things that shall come to pass." (Luke 21 :36.) (2) Those loyal, but not promptly obedient children of God, overcharged, having a zeal not according to knowledge, and more or less contaminated with the spirit of the world. These will be helped out of Babylon when she is falling, and will flee in the winter-time, saying in the words of the prophet, "The harvest is past, the Summer is ended (Winter has come), and we are not saved." (Jer. 8:20.)

The Lord very graciously indicates that all the truly loyal of these shall ultimately "come up out of great tribulation" and be before the throne (not in the throne with the "little flock" who inherit the kingdom as joint-heirs with Christ), having washed their robes in the blood of the Lamb. (Rev. 7:14-15.) Let us pray and labour accordingly, that we be through our flight before the "winter" of trouble comes. We are to pray and strive that our flight be not on the Sabbath day. What Sabbath day is meant? The Sabbath day here is the great antitypical Sabbath—the Millennium, the Seventh- thousand-year Sabbath. This present Gospel Age is the time during which the Church, the Bride, is being called and selected. The completion of the Bride class will mark the full end of the Gospel Age; if, therefore, we are hoping to reign with Christ as joint-heirs in His future Kingdom, how necessary it is that we get through with our flight from Babylon and all her worldly ways before the antitypical Atonement Day--the present Gospel Age closes, and therefore before the Millennial Age (the Sabbath Day) begins. Does not this remind us of the need for hastening our preparation, giving "all diligence to make our calling and election sure."

Convention News.

THE Easter Convention arranged by the Adelaide and Gawler Classes was again a season of real blessing and spiritual refreshment. Our hearts go out in thankfulness to our Heavenly Father for the blessings received, and we trust that the many helpful thoughts contained in the various addresses, as well as in the fellowship meetings and Bible Studies, will long continue with us, and serve to strengthen our faith and love and zeal in the narrow way. •

The portions of Scripture chosen for Bible Studies were Gal. 6 :1-10 ; 1 Peter 4 :8-14; Heb. 2 :9-14 ; and Rev. 3:14-22 ; and the consideration and discussion of these passages gave us much food for thought. The usual Praise and Testimony and Fellowship meetings which were entered into by various brethren were also appreciated. The Fellowship meeting on “Helpful Suggestions from Experiences in the Overcoming and Sacrificing Life” proved helpful. In this connection we were reminded of the necessity of keeping our thoughts on the things that are pure and good and true ; exercising at all times a good strong faith in God ; and then watching and praying at all times ; and when temptations are forced upon us by evil influences it is found helpful to shift our thoughts to other lines and refrain from dwelling upon undesirable lines of thought. Sometimes mistakes and failures. help us to be more aware of our weaknesses and more on guard against them ; also the necessity of taking time for reading and meditation on the Word, and the meeting together with others of like faith must not be overlooked or neglected.

The Question meeting was also found helpful, there being not sufficient time to consider all the questions brought forward ; those dealt with were well discussed by the brethren and then nicely summed up by the chairman.

The addresses by various of the visiting and local brethren were much appreciated, the topics being “Watching unto Prayer,” “Wisdom,” “Mat. 5 :3-4” and “5 :5-7,” “Signs of Christ’s Presence,” and “Times of Refreshing and Christ’s Return.” The public were invited to hear the latter address given at Gawler on Easter Monday evening. While much appreciated by the brethren, regret was expressed. that the public attendance was small; this was probably due to the holiday and the glorious weather conditions which attracted so many from their homes. .•

The usual Love Feast and singing of “God be with you till we meet again” brought another helpful Convention to its close: - It is felt that much of the helpfulness of these gatherings is due to the presence of visiting brethren from other States and country centres. While giving the Lord all the praise for the blessings bestowed, we would also express our appreciation of- the loving efforts of the brethren and sisters of the local classes in entertaining the visiting friends in their homes and in attending to their needs in other- ways ; our thanks and appreciation is also expressed to the dear friends from the Digby, Vic., and Melbourne Classes, whose journey involves quite a sacrifice of time • and means to share with us the blessings so richly bestowed from the Heavenly Father’s hand. We trust that each and all realise the fullness of God’s blessing as they return once more to their homes and various duties. Num. 6:24-26; Rev:3 :1M2 1 Cor. 15 :58.

Memorial Observances.

IT is with much pleasure that the following reports of some of the Memorial Services held throughout Australia are included in this issue, and which we trust may be the means of stimulating the faith and zeal of all dear members, especially those in isolated places. The ones and twos have also been heard from in various parts, and we rejoice that they also have celebrated in the presence of their Lord, in spirit and in truth.

Melbourne and Digby, Victoria.

Sunday, 5th April, being the anniversary of the institution of the Memorial of our Lord's death, the brethren of the Berean Bible Class in Melbourne solemnly yet gladly observed this sacred ordinance left us by our Master : "This do in remembrance of Me."

In the afternoon the Apostle's words in 1 Cor. 11 :23-26 were considered, which impressed and refreshed our minds concerning the primary and deeper significance of the Memorial, as it comes down to us these centuries later from the faithful Apostle who had, through revelations beyond measure, as he says, "Received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you."

At 7 p.m. the Memorial Service was opened with appropriate hymns and prayer in which all the Lord's people everywhere were remembered. Helpful Bible readings also provided much thought for meditation, and the Passover in type and antitype was reviewed for the benefit of all. Just as our Lord's body was broken and His blood poured out for us; we realised that the value of this sinless offering was the one and only means of our approach to, and justification in the sight of God. Then, further, we realised again, that our Lord's invitation to drink of His cup, and be broken with Him was really the revealing in full of the wondrous high calling, whereby those who suffer with Him, faithfully unto death, shall also reign with Him and "drink anew in the Kingdom."

With thanksgiving and blessing, upon both the bread and the cup 24 members partook in quietness and confidence, thus renewing their consecration to God, to follow in the Master's footsteps, by His grace and strength. With a closing hymn (the words of which are given at the close of these reports) the friends dispersed as did the Lord and His disciples on that memorable night so long ago — "When they had sung an hymn they went out into the mount of Olives."

The Memorial of our Lord's death was held at Digby on Sunday evening, 5th April. Six assembled and availed themselves of the privilege of partaking of the emblems.

We were reminded of the solemnity of the occasion—the privilege of partaking—and realised a blessing from heeding the Master's words, "This do in remembrance of Me." The Apostle also surely expressed the mind of the Lord for all His members, when he exhorts that we "keep the feast" because "Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us." How we should appreciate the privilege of celebrating the most important of all events—the death of the Redeemer of the whole world.

We reviewed the type and were reminded that in the Divine Word every ceremony, ordinance and sacrifice pointed forward to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world, and not one more strikingly than the Passover— "When I see the blood I will pass over you." Nothing more required but faith in God's promise to that effect, to keep them at peace and safe, on that awful night. What a forceful illustration of the sole, ground of our peace. The blood of Christ alone is sufficient for our past sins, as well as for our daily shortcomings. How prone we are to look at self and something done ; but it is well to continually remember that faith alone in Christ, His blood alone gives us our standing with God. What a privilege to feed on the Lamb, to have fellowship and communion with Him; and not without the bitter herbs is this possible, for we cannot enjoy, communion in the sufferings of Christ without trial.

We sang from Christian Hymns numbers 253, 118, 294 and 286. All of the Lord's people were remembered—the brethren in their prayers being mindful of the need of all, as well as that of our local ecclesia.

Adelaide and Gawler, South Australia.

Here in Adelaide we again experienced another blessed season of fellowship with our Lord and with one another in breaking of the Bread and drinking of the Cup which our dear Redeemer enjoined, as representing His body and His blood given for us.

We were deeply impressed with the sense of sacredness of the solemn hour and occasion, especially so as we kept the feast on its anniversary.

It was a renewing again of our consecration to be dead with, Christ, and to endeavour by His grace to walk humbly and more earnestly in His steps of self-sacrifice, even unto death.

This privilege was especially brought before us in our study and discussions during the week previous to the Memorial. As we looked upon Him in His hour of sorrow and loneliness and conflict, it makes our little sacrifice and trials light indeed.

It was a privilege to meet with the Class at Gawler on Sunday, 5th April. During the afternoon we considered the Apostle's words in 1 Cor. 11:23-32, which prepared our hearts for the evening service when we met to keep the Memorial of our Lord's death in harmony with His request, "Do this in remembrance of Me."

How full of precious significance is this ordinance, and how thankful we are that the Lord gave us this opportunity of refreshing our hearts and minds especially at the appropriate season each year, concerning the deep significance of His great sacrifice for. our sins and also for the sins of the whole world.

There were just nine members present who partook of the emblems, signifying our acceptance of Christ's death as the only means of securing our justification before the Father, and also renewing our pledge of consecration to be dead with Christ and to be broken together as fellow-members of the one Body ; sharing each other's burdens and seeking to devote ourselves to God in humble service for one another.

Burnie, Tasmania.

On the evening of the 5th April the friends gathered together at Sister , and at 7.30 p.m. commenced the little service that culminated in partaking of the emblems in memory of our beloved Lord. and Saviour.

As we would expect, our dear Redeemer could have thought of nothing else so helpful to His followers, than this simple act done in remembrance of Him.

Truly we find each year the heavens are opened to us wider and wider, enabling us to understand and appreciate more and more both the primary simple significance, -and the wondrous secondary and deeper lesson. Truly our hearts burn within us as our dear elder Brother teaches and expounds our common-union with Him, until it is a heart appreciation, not only a head knowledge, and we say with fervency, "Even so, come Lord Jesus," that we may drink it anew with Thee in the Kingdom. Members worldwide were remembered at the throne of grace. As you know us all, a list of names is included, seven in all.

Sydney, New South Wales.

We held our Memorial Meeting on Sunday evening, 5th inst., and for the afternoon session we suspended our usual study and substituted that portion of the Sixth Volume dealing on that subject. So simply and beautifully was the subject explained that a blessing came from reading it, even without studying, as time did not permit of our so doing.

All present seemed to realise that we had come to another milestone of our Christian journey, and were grateful to our Heavenly Father for another privilege of celebrating the solemn occasion, but still rejoicing in the fact of being called to the honour of being part of that loaf, to be broken with our dear Lord. I think of the Apostle in 2 Cor. 4 :15, 16, "All things are for your sakes," etc. Oh ! what a privilege to be called the sons of God, and to be joint-heirs with our blessed Lord, to all things. "If we suffer with Him we shall also reign with Him"—happy thought.

In the evening 21 friends partook of the emblems, the service being conducted as usual with humility and reverence. The chairman made a few remarks as to why we took it yearly, and who were privileged to partake of it, and what the sacrifice of our Lord had made possible to us, even to laying claim to all our Heavenly Father's promises.

A Brother then gave an address reviewing the general meaning of the Passover as it was instituted to the Jews, tracing the relationship between the typical passover lamb and Christ, the Lamb of God our Passover, and saw in the firstborn of Israel passed over in that night, a type of the Church of the Firstborn, which God is passing over during this Gospel night. We saw that subsequently these firstborn ones became the leaders of Israel as a whole and their deliverers from Egyptian bondage, and that the antitype of that deliverance will be the ultimate deliverance of all who love God and who desire to serve Him, from the bondage of the world, of sin and of Satan, the antitype of Pharaoh. This ultimate deliverance would be during the Millennial Age, when the "Church of the Firstborn" will be associated with Christ in the Millennial Kingdom.

Then the Brother viewed the matter from the other standpoint, the secondary one, mentioned by the Apostle in 1 Cor. 10:16, 17, namely, that the entire church is one loaf, and that it is the duty and the privilege of all who have become members of the one loaf, the one Body of Christ, to be broken in the service of the Head, and in the service of each other, that thus we might have fellowship with Christ in His sufferings and ultimately be sharers in His glory. We saw that the cup of blessing is indeed our communion or fellowship in the blood (sufferings) of Christ, our mingling of our lives with His life, our joining with Him in "filling up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ."

We sought the understanding of the deep meaning of the beautiful symbol, and to have it in our hearts, a power of God, leading us to a keener appreciation of our dear Saviour, and a more earnest desire as His disciples, to walk in His footsteps. Then after a prayer of thanksgiving on the bread we partook of same. After this we gave thanks for the cup and partook of same, thanking God that by His grace we have been called to fellowship with Jesus, and that we may run our course with faithfulness and eventually be received to joint heirship with our Master in His glory, when we are partakers with Him of the joys of the Kingdom.

A home gathering is reported as follows :—Once again we kept the Memorial feast, when eight of us assembled around and claimed His promised blessing; our clear elderly Sister of 82 years entered into it with deep appreciation, and in prayer all who draw near in such reverence and thankfulness were remembered.

The Brother who directed our little home gathering spoke most fittingly, reviewing the type as shown in the institution in Egypt which only reckonedly justified Israel from the annual sins, but in the antitype we saw that Christ our Passover Lamb's sacrifice was efficacious not only for individual, but also it broke the power of cancelled (Adamic) sin, and would lead us off as over-comers. And one Brother reviewed the Master's ministry during His last week on earth and exhorted us to "consider Him." It all was so impressive, and we wondered who of our little party may join Him before next time and entering the joy of the Lord, drink the wine anew with Him. We are sure the Lord would suit a blessing to each one celebrating this Feast of Love and thankfulness, and we go forward in the spirit of renewed consecration, realising the great privilege of son-ship.

Perth, Western Australia.

Last Sunday, 5th April, brought us together in the afternoon to study Exodus 12—the Passover in Egypt, and salvation of the firstborn. Then in the evening we observed the ordinance left us by the Lord, in memory of our Saviour's death, who gave Himself for us, leaving us an example that we should follow His steps. "Follow the Lamb whithersoever He may lead."

There were but sixteen present, and no doubt as we near the end of the call of the Church and the closing of the door of the marriage chamber, numbers are likely to grow smaller on this side of the veil as the antitypical temple of living stones is being completed at the other side. We rejoice, however, in the thought that when the Kingdom is set up, and the pure language—the truth--turned to the people they will all turn to the Lord with one consent and all shall know the Lord from the least unto the greatest.

A brief report of another gathering states :—We had a good meeting on the fifth of the month. We were all there, fourteen being present. • Brother presided, and it was a heart-searching time. I think we all resolved to try and do better in the year entered upon.

"Lord, I am Thine, entirely Thine, Purchased and saved by blood of Thine; With full consent Thine I would be, And own Thy sovereign right in me.

Thine would I live, Thine would I die, 'Be Thine through all eternity;

The vow is past beyond repeal,

And now I set the solemn seal.

Here, at the cross where flows the blood That bought my dying soul for God, Thee, my dear Master, now I call, And consecrate to Thee my all.

Do Thou assist Thy feeble one The great engagement to perform; Thy grace can full assistance lend, And on that grace I dare depend."

The Berean Biblical Institute, . South Australia. Melbourne.

Dear Sir,—

I received the free literature safely, also your letter. Thanks very much for same. I was pleased to find someone continuing the good work on the same lines as the late Pastor Russell. I have the six volumes of Scripture Studies and was a subscriber to the “Watch Tower” for a few years before the Pastor’s death, but have since withdrawn my support as I consider its teachings unscriptural.

I am enclosing postal note for —. Please send me the book, “What Pastor Russell Said”—his answer to hundreds of questions.

I might say I am very interested in the Book of Revelation, and would like to know the price of the two volumes mentioned in “People’s Paper.”

With kind regards, Yours sincerely,

Berean Biblical Institute. South Australia, 20th April.

Dear People,-- -

I write once again to trespass on your generosity by asking you to forward to me pamphlets entitled ‘Perplexed Humanity’s Only Hope’ and “Do the Dead Know Anything: Where Are They?”

I am very pleased with what I have already received. They are very interesting. Thanking you in anticipation,

Most respectfully,

Dear Brethren,— Queensland, 19/4/36.

Please find enclosed and please renew our subscriptions to the “Herald” and “People’s Paper” for twelve months, and the balance to be used as you wish.

We received your good letter of November, 1935, also; I have been away from home working, but I’m one of the unemployed again.

Yes, we are being tested along the lines of the truth, and the “many” are losing their “first love.” But the Lord knew that at the end it would be just the few that go in to the “marriage of the Lamb.” We rejoice with you that we are “able to stand” in His strength alone, and are “more than conquerors” by His kind favour; like Bro. Peter, “to, whom shall we go?” We do not seem to have to travel far ere we cross the wilderness of confusion, so let us hear each other up, until we meet Him, “whom having not seen we love,” in glory and beauty arrayed.

We conclude now, and with love to the Melbourne Church. Your Brother and Sister.

New South Wales, 21st April, 1936. Dear Brother,—

Greetings in the name of our dear Redeemer.

Enclosing for our Lord’s work, and the balance to pay for the “Herald” and “P. Paper,” and also would you send me a little book—“God and Reason”? It is just lovely, and I want this one to give away.

We have be-en away for some months, and one place we went to was a very lonely spot near the ocean, something like where we live. So while we were talking to an elderly man, and another man with him, well educated, to my great joy we found they were followers of what Brother Russell taught, and had been for over thirty years, and had attended the Class in Melbourne. He is very poor, and only has the “Studies,” so I want the book for him; I have plenty of “P.P.,” and will pass on the “Heralds.”

Unrest seems to be gathering quickly, and yet the people seem in the dark, and no doubt some prefer it—the gaiety is their idol.

Hope you and Sister are quite well; with kind regards, Your Sister in the One Hope.

Dear Brother,— Perth, West Australia. You will be glad to hear of the good meetings we have had here. The first began by a Baptism Service at the river side. This was about 10.30 a.m. in the morning, and a nice little company gathered for the occasion when a Brother and Sister thus symbolised their “baptism into Christ”—”Into His death.”

All seemed to get a blessing in again having brought to our minds just what our consecration means.

In the afternoon we had the study on the Holy Spirit, as dealt with in the Fifth Volume of the Studies, and in the evening a talk on “We beheld His glory, the glory as of the Only Begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth.”

It is a happy little Class, holding firmly to the present truth, just seeking to build each other up in the faith and encourage one another in the way. They each exercise their minds and that seems so necessary in this day (Heb. 5:11, 12), when we must individually stand the tests of all sorts of questions, theories and false doctrines, etc. Spoon feeding may do a little while for babes, but we must develop and have our senses exercised to discern both truth and error. With Christian love to you both,

Yours in Christian Fellowship.

Signs of Christ's Presence.

(Convention Address : Continued from last Issue).

THE great tribulation of this "winter" time is to be unprecedented ; and our Lord's assurance is, that nothing to compare with it has or shall ever come upon the world. This positively identifies His language with the trouble at the close of this Gospel Age, of which the prophet says, "At that time shall Michael (Christ) stand up . . . and there shall be a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation." (Dan. 12 :1). It identifies it also with the period mentioned in (Rev. 11 :17, 18), when "the nations were angry and Thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged." So great will this trouble be that without some restraining power to cut it short the entire race would eventually be exterminated. But God's power is exerted on behalf of His saints ; and for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened. Rev. 7:1-3 gives us the picture of the four angels standing on the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds to prevent them from "blowing" on the "earth" (society), "nor on the sea" (the restless masses of mankind) "nor on any tree" (church system). Then is seen in the vision another angel having the seal of the living God, and he cries with a loud voice to the four angels, "Saying, hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of God in their foreheads." It would seem that we are now living just at this period when the destructive forces which will ultimately precipitate the great time of trouble are being restrained—"for the elect's sake"—until the servants of God have all been sealed in their foreheads ;—given an intellectual appreciation of the divine plan and purpose.

Verses 23-25. "If any man shall say unto you then, lo, here is Messiah, or there, believe it not. For there shall arise false Messiahs, and false teachers, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that if it were possible they would deceive the very elect." The deceivers here described are not the fanatics who from time to time have claimed to be Christ and have deceived but few. The Anti-Christ, the great deceiver, the Papacy, the great mother of harlots and her apostate daughters would seem to be here indicated.

Various Protestant denominations, although they acknowledge no head except Christ, nevertheless practically make their Synods, Conferences and Councils into heads, from which they take their laws, usages and confessions of faith, instead of the one only Head of the one true Church. It may be that there will yet be further deceptions by false teachers claiming special power and showing great signs and wonders which, if it were possible, would deceive the very 'elect. How each of the Lord's people will need to watch and “prove all things,” holding fast to that which is good.

Verses 26-27. These verses show that our Lord at His second presence will not again appear as a man, that they could say, “He is in the desert,” or that, “He is in the secret chambers.” If anyone should tell us that He is here or there, that He can be located anywhere, then we are not to believe them. The presence will be everywhere, just like the sunshine that comes from east unto the west. The word “lightning,” used in the authorised version, allows of a wrong thought, and has misled many to think that the Lord will come like “lightning,” which stays not a moment.

The Greek word means “bright shining,” and is so translated in Luke 11:36. It is used in Revelation for lightnings, but it undoubtedly here refers to the “bright shining” of the Sun of Righteousness. It is a beautiful illustration of the presence of Christ. Those awake and watching may see the glories of the rising sun for some time, even before it rises above the horizon. How it dispels the gloom and darkness, just as the Sun of Righteousness arising will disperse the dark night of sin and sorrow, of superstition and error, and bring healing in its wings. (Mal. 4:2).

Thus the Lord would guard us from the many deceptions which were to be, and undoubtedly are, prevalent in this, our day. The question of the disciples was, “What shall be the sign of Thy ‘parousia’—presence”—not a sign of His arrival and departure, like the lightning. The Lord adds, “So also shall the presence of the Son of Man be.” Lightning has no presence ; it is simply a flash and is gone.

Verse 28. This indicates that there is to be a feast; just as eagles feed upon flesh, so those who hunger and thirst after righteousness and truth will be found where the food is. (See Luke 12:37; Rev. 3:20).

Verses 29-31. The tribulation “of those days,” would seem to refer to the tribulation of God’s people during the dark days of Papal persecution; and should be distinguished from the tribulation at the end of those days, in which this age and harvest will close. The great desolating power of Papacy was broken by Napoleon, who marched to Rome, and took the Pope prisoner. Papacy’s power to “tread down the saints” was broken in 1799. Then there have been the literal demonstrations, in the literal heavens in the notable dark day of 19th May, 1780, when the sun was darkened, and in the wonderful showers of falling stars of 13th November, 1833, as though to draw attention to the more important fulfilment of this prophecy in the fact that the Gospel light has been darkened by false teachings, such as Evolution, Higher Criticism, etc., and that the clear shining of the writings of the apostles, the twelve stars, has been beclouded by destructive heresies.

In the Scriptures the sun, as a symbol, would represent the light of the Gospel. The moon would represent the Mosaic Law. The stars as symbols represent the inspired teachers of the Church—the Apostles. The heavens represent the ecclesiastical powers of Christendom.

We can see how the clear sunlight of the Gospel has been darkened by the false teachings of Evolution and Immortal Soulism.

The Apostle Peter foretold that there would be false teachers among the church who would bring in false teachings even denying the Lord that bought them.

The teachings of the inspired Apostles are not now recognised as the guides or stars of the nominal Christian Church but, as it was foretold, many are departing from the faith and giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils. There is much of the form of godliness, but denying the power thereof. Higher Criticism has done much to undermine true faith in God. False teachers (stars) have taken the place of the true stars (the Apostles).

But there comes a time at the end of the Gospel Age when the powers of the heavens (the religious systems) are to be shaken. There has now been a general disintegrating process at work throughout Christendom. When we see such processes at work we may take that as a sign of His presence. This is in line with our Lord's parable, "Let both (wheat and tares) grow together until the harvest" (the end of the Age), when He would send His messengers to gather the tares in bundles to burn them, and to garner the wheat.

We should bear in mind that the whole of this prophecy was given in answer to the question, "What shall be the sign of Thy presence?"

Our Lord's answer assured them that His people would not be left without a suitable and sufficient sign; but of its character He said nothing. "Then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven." It will be a sign which only the faithful, humble disciples will be able to discern. It is in the symbolical heaven that this sign will appear, the same heaven which the previous verse tells us is to be so terribly shaken as to shake out its stars. It is in this heaven, among the professedly spiritual class, that the sign or evidence of our Lord's presence will first be apparent. In Luke 12:37 the Lord said, "Blessed are those servants, whom the Lord, when He cometh, shall find watching; verily I say unto you that he shall gird himself, and make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them." The clear unfoldment of the Divine Plan—the rich spiritual feast set before the Lord's people during the past half-century is an evidence of the Lord's return.

Also the judgments upon nominal Christendom is another sign of the Son of Man — a sign of His presence. In one of His parables in Luke 19:12 the Lord said, "A certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a Kingdom and to return." It would seem that the return of the nobleman of this parable represents the second coming of our Lord; His first work at His return was to deal with His servants, rewarding those who had made faithful use of their talents, and taking away the privileges of those lacking in appreciation. "Judgment must begin with the House of God," and while the clear knowledge of the Divine Plan which comes as the result of the Lord's presence, brings joy and comfort to His faithful, humble followers, at the same time it causes confusion among the clergy class, because they cannot reconcile their doctrines and practices with the truths now due to be understood.

The realisation that the Lord is dealing with His servants and separating the wheat from the tares is an evidence, a sign of Christ's presence.

"Then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven." (Verse 30).

The tribes of the earth will not be able to see the sign, which only the faithful followers of Christ will discern. On the contrary, they will see the clouds of trouble and confusion in which the heavens and earth will be so severely shaken; and at that time also there shall be a general mourning of all, incident to that great time of trouble which marks the end of the present dispensation.

Verse 31 is a brief description of the harvest work ; the closing work of this present dispensation. We can see that this harvesting work has been progressing for some considerable time now. The Lord's true people are being gathered out of Babylon, and away from her confusing theories; they are being gathered from the four winds—from the four corners of heaven—nominal Christendom. Can we not see this gathering work in progress? Is not the message of present truth gathering the Lord's people together unto Him? And is not this condition of things a sign or proof that we are living in the harvest period of this Gospel Age, and that Christ is present as the Great Chief Reaper? (See Rev, 14 :14-16).

Verses 32-35 give another sign, this one on earth. The separating of the wheat from the tares is a work in the “heavens”—the religious world. The sign of the fig-tree budding is of the earth, and refers to the nation of Israel, which must come again into divine favour. The cursing of the fig-tree by our Lord just previous to the giving of this prophecy— seems to be a picture of the casting off of the nation of Israel—their rejection by our Lord because of their unfaithfulness, God’s special favour was withdrawn from Israel as the Lord said, “Behold, your house is left unto you desolate.” But this does not mean that God would never show the Jews any further kindness or favour. No, as ‘Paul says, this nation of Israel is beloved for their fathers’ sakes. God had made certain promises to the fathers of Israel.

To Abraham it was promised that through him and his seed a blessing would come to all the families of the earth, and as the time draws near for the fulfilment of that promise, we see preparations being made to carry it out. We can see the budding of the fig-tree—the awakening of the Jewish hopes and aspirations toward national life. Much has already been done to establish the Jews in Palestine again, but still a great deal remains to be done by way of removing the blindness from their eyes. The fact that indications of God’s returning favour to the Jews can be discerned, is another sign of the near approach of Christ’s Kingdom. “When ye shall see all these things know that it is near.” The generation seeing all these signs of Christ’s presence shall not pass until the great time of trouble has occurred, and the Kingdom of Righteousness and Peace has been established.

Verses 36-39. These verses clearly indicate that just as Noah was a preacher of righteousness for 120 years before the flood, so Christ would be present for some time before the great calamity which is to destroy the world systems of this evil day. Noah preached and warned, but they went on with their own selfish pursuits, regardless of the message they “knew not.” 2 Pet. 3:3-7, 10, 12, 13, foretells similar conditions, and are not these conditions with us to-day?

Luke 17:26, 27 also mentions the conditions in Sodom and Gomorrah, and they also refused the message in the days of Lot, and both Matthew and Luke state that “as it was in the days of Noah,” and “as it was in the days of Lot, so also shall it be in the days of the Son of Man.”

Thus the Scriptures clearly declare that Christ would be present for some time prior to the great calamity, although only the watchers would know of His presence. All others, as in the time of Noah and Lot, are not to know. The world goes on in its usual way, unaware of the Lord’s presence until He reveals Himself in the fiery judgments of the great time of trouble. (See Luke 17:28-30). This Scripture speaks of the time when the Son of Man is revealed. In 2 Thess.

1:7 we read that the Lord Jesus shall be revealed in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. It would seem that our Lord’s reference to the deliverance of Lot out of Sodom, and the fiery destruction that came upon that city immediately afterwards, is intended to mean that as soon as the last members of the Church finish their earthly course, the great time of trouble will burst in all its fury. “Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of Man is revealed.”

Verses 40, 41. These verses show a separating work going on amongst the professedly spiritual class. “Two in the field” would represent a class in the field of labour in Babylon; “one shall be taken”—(gathered with the sickle of truth) ; “the other left.” “Two grinding at the mill; the one taken and the other left.” The Lord knoweth them that are His, and all his faithful people will be drawn to Him during this Harvest period of His presence.

Verse 42. Here our Lord emphasises the need for watchfulness, for no one would know the day nor the hour of the Lord’s arrival, nor of the actual time when the great time of trouble will overwhelm the world.

The Lord did not inform the disciples so that the church might fix dates for future events. In answer to the question, “when shall these things be?” He simply has given the signs of His presence and told us to “watch,” so that we may discern His presence when He has come. Then we may enter the feast of spiritual things, which He has promised to His waiting people, and may be gradually called away to be with the “Lord in the air.”

Before He will set up His Kingdom He will gather His elect from the four winds of heaven. Then the saints are to share the glorious work of that Kingdom of Peace. Satan, however, must first be bound, and the Church are to have something to do in this connection, for the promise is, “The God of Peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly.” Then, the time of trouble over, the Prince of Peace shall reign from shore to shore, and the prayer be answered, “Thy Kingdom Come; Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven.” (Rev. 21:1-4).

Verse 44 indicates the need of continued watchfulness. “Be ye also ready ; for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh.” (See Rev. 3 :3 Diaglott).

Verses 45-47 speak of the blessings that accompany faithful service. The faithful, loyal servant will be made ruler over all the Lord’s goods. He will have clear understanding of things new and old, and will be able to minister the truth to others of the household of faith, giving them meat in due season.

Verses 48-51 give us a warning of the danger of falling from our steadfastness. If we should lose faith in God, and lean to our own understanding, there is the possibility of becoming blind to the signs of Christ’s presence.

The smiting of fellow-servants would indicate a loss of grace’ on the part of those so doing; and eating and drinking with the drunken would mean having fellowship with those who are intoxicated with the wine of false doctrine.

How we each need to heed the Master’s direction to watch and pray and keep our hearts in the attitude of faith and trust, so that we may be counted worthy to continue to enjoy the light of the Master’s presence. Those who grow careless and neglectful are in danger of losing the light and of suffering the disappointment of having their portion with the hypocrites.

Faith and Feeling.

FEELING should never be mistaken for faith, yet there is as much connection between faith and hallowed feeling as there is between the root and the flower. Faith is permanent, just as the root is ever in the ground. Feeling is casual and has its season. Just as the root or bulb does not always shoot up the green stem and beautiful flowers, so faith does not always produce ecstasy of feeling. Our faith may be just as strong when we are despondent as when we are filled with joy. As we feel the calamities of war, the pangs of disease, and the hardness of poverty, our feeling sinks down to zero, while our faith may be as firm as the granite that underlies the cloud kissing hills. Measure not God's love and power by your own feeling. The sun shines as clearly in the darkest day as it does in the brightest; the difference is not in the sun, but in some clouds that are between you and the sun. So God loves as well when we see not the brightness of His countenance as when we do.

If our faith is founded on the immutability of God, our Christian life and love will flow steadily on like a deep river, not easily affected by a cold blast nor obstructed by despondencies.

Moses was not governed by feeling when he stood on the margin of the Red Sea, neither was Abraham when he offered up Isaac, nor Israel when they compassed Jericho seven days.

Have faith in God, move forward all along the line, and we shall have the victory.—Selected.

ANOTHER YEAR

ANOTHER year for the Berean Biblical Institute has terminated with the close of April, and it is with thankfulness to the Lord for all His continued blessings over the past twelve months again, that this report is placed on record for the benefit of our readers and helpers in the work. 'While the assistance of the dear friends generally has no doubt been rendered as unto the Lord Himself, the opportunity is taken of expressing our sincere appreciation of all the loving co-operation on the part of those having the talents and who have used them in the service of the Lord. Many are the privileges granted to those who, like the Apostle, delight "to spend and be spent" in the cause of truth.

Each of the branches of service have continued nicely, even though not in big ways — we are still in the day of small things, and as it was with our Lord, so it is felt now that nothing is too small, if it be of service to our brethren scattered here and there, and also to those still desiring the comfort of heart and mind which the truth alone can give.

A goodly number of the friends have availed themselves of our stock of Biblical literature, including various translations of the Scriptures, Concordances, Bible Studies and Booklets, which are supplied on almost every Bible topic. Recently the edition of pocket "Daily Heavenly Manna" has become almost exhausted, making a second edition necessary, and which is now in preparation at the printers. These new books should be ready in both leather and cloth binding in the course of a few weeks and some improvement will be found in the binding of the cloth books, thus making them more durable. Friends able to dispose of these "Manilas" in quantities, also any of the other Bible helps, are asked to write us for particulars of this work. An announcement in regard to the greatly reduced price of "Studies in the Scriptures" will be found in this issue.

The "People's Paper" has continued to take its message to all desiring it, irrespective of whether the yearly subscription could be provided or not. The number of subscribers to the "Paper" remains about the same, but more are now on the free list. This expense is made up from the Tract Fund, and it is thought that more of our readers could probably help towards making the "People's Paper" self-supporting by encouraging others to subscribe. What is done by some friends in this way is much appreciated, and back numbers and extra copies of current issues of the "Paper" are provided free to those who can help by passing them out, and all are welcome to forward lists of the names and addresses of likely cases of interest. We assure all who, not being able to provide the subscription, are receiving the "People's Paper" free, that they are very welcome to have it continued, and all that is necessary is to let us know of the desire to receive it regularly.

In the witnessing work, all the methods of past times 'have again been used to advantage, as quite a number of new cases of interest have been found through the free literature coupons and general tract distribution. Most of our friends are acquainted with the coupon system, and it is a first-class means of reaching people who are desirous of understanding the Bible message of salvation. The brethren in Adelaide, South Australia, have been doing a good work with the coupons, in addition to our efforts; others may also like to co-operate. Supplies of tracts may be had by all who will wisely distribute, and so, those who possess a talent of time only, may engage in this service. A letter in the "Correspondence" from a Brother in Canada, who is diligent in the witness work there, will be of much interest.

The Tract Fund Account which follows indicates the amount of financial support received from the brethren towards the general work, as also the items of expenditure for the same period of time. No doubt the donations received represent many sacrifices of the earthly good things and these voluntary offerings have been used as wisely and economically as we know how, in the service of the Lord. It will be noticed that the balance at credit of the Tract Fund has fallen considerably, as the expenses exceeded the amount received by 119/14/2 over the past year, but we are glad to have been able to meet all requirements for the free literature, etc.

The kindly messages from the brethren bringing good wishes and assurance of their prayers for the Lord's blessing on the work are very encouraging, and we trust for that continued interest on our behalf to the end that the Lord may be glorified. Our prayers are also offered and efforts directed on behalf of all the Lord's dear people wherever situated for their highest good. "Now our Lord Jesus Christ Himself, and God, even our Father, who bath loved us and hath given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace, comfort your hearts, and stablish you in every good word and work."

Correspondence.

Canada, 11th April, 1936. Dear Brother,

Loving greetings in the name of our dear Lord and Head!

Thank you very much for the little parcel of cards and papers, which arrived safely to-day — also for your very kind letter.

Just a few words to explain about our renewed efforts. For some little time past we have wondered just what we could do and what the Master would have us do — in His service here in this District. Our friends in the I.B.S.A. (now called Jehovah's Witnesses) have made themselves very unpopular with their high-pressure sales methods—and have brought reproach on the Truth and all things pertaining thereto. For many years we have been known as Bible Students in this District — in fact — we were the first to start the work in this District and hold classes, with the result that though we left the I.B.S.A. many years ago—still the people at large do not quite understand what the difference is—and while some notice a difference, still they are very reluctant to accept any tracts from us—as they are prejudiced against Brother Rutherford and the methods of his followers.

We, therefore, gave the matter very serious and prayerful consideration, and finally decided that we would adopt our dear Brother Russell's method--when he changed the name of the volumes from the Millennial Dawn to the Studies in the Scripture—and so we decided to take ourselves right out of the picture altogether. We rented a Post Office Box and had letterheads prepared. Then we obtained 500 of a set of six tracts from "THE DAWN" office—and we selected, for a start, fifty of the most sincere and reasoning minds in this locality—and we commenced to mail them ONE tract each week, regularly, with our own rubber stamp thereon—and kept it up until the full set of six was mailed. The regularity of the work has already had some results. We have been requested for copies of "GOD AND REASON," and been advised what a comfort some of the messages have been, and others have said that the regularity of the tracts made them that they went looking for them and sat down and read them before doing anything else.

You are, no doubt, in receipt of some of these tracts from the "DAWN" office. They are got up very much along the line of your little tract, "THE VOICE"—they are just the right size for handling in the way we have been doing. That is why we like your little tracts, and we hope to be able to obtain a supply of yours to follow on with this work which we have commenced. Our circulars went out (1) "The Divine Plan"; (2) "Earth's Coming Glory"; (3) "The Soul Defined"; (4) "The Resurrection Hope"; (5) "Coming Back from Hell Soon"; (6) "Why Not Live Forever?" This last tract went out this week. Then next week (D.V.) we are following it up with a letter—as per the attached copy—and to those who reply we are intending mailing your little tracts: "A Blessed Hope for Suffering Humanity"; "Why Sorrow, Sin, Death and Evil are Permitted"; "All Flesh Shall See the Salvation of our God"; just as long as our supply lasts out.

Of course, dear Brother, we are fully aware that this is NOT a sowing of seed, because the time for the sowing of the seed is past; but, we might be able to glean another grain of wheat. The Lord richly blessed our deliberations last year, and gave us the privilege of gleaning ONE grain of wheat into His garner—and, additionally, we are able to give a little message of comfort and joy to some poor hearts in these dark, troublesome days, when people are so severely bewildered. Furthermore, we KNOW the DARK NIGHT has not, AS YET, set in, when NO MAN can work. We realise that — that time is very close — BUT IT HAS NOT STRUCK THIS PLACE AS YET—and so we are trying to do as the Scriptures advise: "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand: for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike, good”; therefore, “Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do — DO IT WITH THY MIGHT.” Therefore, dear Brother, we ask an interest in your prayers, and thank you for your help in doing a little service in the Vineyard—and if, as you state, we have a slight balance in our favour—could you mail us some more tracts and use the balance to cover postage?

With much Christian love to you and all the dear ones over there; I am, by His kind favour,

Your Brother in Christ.

[A supply of tracts has been gladly forwarded to our Brother in Canada].

England, 30/3/36.

Dear Brother in Christ,

Loving greetings in His precious name. Many thanks for sending “Foregleams” to Canada, also for our four received to-day. We are enjoying the study of these books daily with those who are coming along in the truth, as it is put so simple and easy, and the questions are so good.

Would you kindly send some of those free tracts you mention in your leaflet, which was around the books; they are just what the poor world needs—“God’s Great Plan of Salvation”; “Our Lord’s Return”; “Where are the Dead?”; “All about Hell”; “Our Lord’s Parables.”

Praying the Lord’s blessing on your work and labour of love.

Your Sisters by Grace Divine.

Victoria, 7th May, 1936. Dear Friend,

I am sending you payment for “People’s Paper,” which I continue to find both helpful and instructive, and please send a copy of “Plan of God — In Brief” to the address as under. I hope the message in the little booklet may be to him as seed sown on good soil.

From Your Brother in the Lord.

Victoria, 14/5/36. Dear Brother,

You will please find enclosed — for payment of the “People’s Paper” for another term; the balance you may use for what purpose you deem necessary.

I greatly appreciate the little paper, and look forward to its arrival; I enjoy reading the thoughts there expressed, and often find helpful aid from them.

In this time of doubt and trouble is it not splendid to be able to look forward to the one sure hope in Christ our Lord?

May all things be prosperous with you in your work, and God’s blessing be with you.

Yours in Fellowship.

South Australia, 5th May, 1936. Dear Brethren,

I received the papers “Oath-Bound Covenant,” in good order, and thank you very much for same, and please find a postal note, value — to be donated for the general work of the Institute.

Trusting you are all well and rejoicing in the Lord and His glorious promises, with Christian love from Sister and myself.

Yours in the Anointed.

Wisdom.

(Convention Address.)

“The reverence of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom.”--Psalm 111 :10.

SOLOMON, generally referred to as the wise man, writes : “The commencement of wisdom is the fear of the Lord and the knowledge of the Most Holy is understanding . . . Give to the wise instruction and he will become yet wiser, impart knowledge to the righteous and he will increase his information.” (Leeser.) How may we obtain this wisdom? (See Job 28:12-15, 20, 21, 23, 28; Prov. 1:5, 7; 2 :1-12.)

From these passages of Scripture we are advised respecting the beginning and a measure of development of wisdom. Then the Apostle James gives us some advice how to gain wisdom. (James 1:5, 6.) We may rest assured that the Lord would grant the right kind of wisdom, but we need to know how to ask for it, otherwise it would not be extended to us. The Apostle says we would need to ask in faith, nothing wavering. Such as would ask for knowledge out of vainglory would certainly ask amiss; only by having a truly humble mind, in all sincerity, could we expect wisdom from the Lord.

The Apostle Peter says : “Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that He may exalt you in due time.” How necessary that we might all have this lesson deeply impressed upon our hearts and minds, that it may be true of us and we in harmony with the instruction—“In all thy ways acknowledge Him.” While such an acknowledgment of the Lord is proper in all the affairs Of life, it certainly is especially appropriate in connection with the study of the Divine Word and in any attempt to give an interpretation thereof.

May we always acknowledge Him—His Word and His arrangements in connection with His truth, To whatever extent self-seeking is indulged in, and the honour of men is craved, while the Lord, as the fountain of wisdom, and the channels which He uses in dispensing His truth are ignored or belittled by any of us, to that extent we may be sure we are in a dangerous situation and cannot make real progress in the right way.

Who could choose more wisely, or as wisely as God? The Apostle James says, “The wisdom from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality and without hypocrisy.” First it is pure --that is, it is sincere, honourable, guileless, open; it loves the light, being utterly opposed to secret and underhand works and ways. Further, this wisdom is peaceable—that is, as far as it is possible in harmony with purity and honesty. It loves peace and unity ; but as wisdom is first pure, it can only be fully at peace and in harmony with that which is pure, honest and good. Then, it is gentle—it is not rude, coarse, rough and cannot sympathise with such methods and spirit. Its gentleness follows its purity and peaceableness.

Those who receive this wisdom from above are then primarily pure, sanctified with the truth and thus are peaceable and gentle, and the result of these fruits is further expressed in the words, “easy to be entreated.” Additionally, the wisdom from above is “full of mercy and good fruits.” It appreciates mercy because it is a part of its very self ; all the good fruits • of the spirit of the Lord—love, honesty, purity, peaceableness, gentleness and mercy—are sure to proceed from the heart in which the wisdom from above rules.

Furthermore, this wisdom is “without partiality,” which is quite foreign to the spirit of the world. There is to be no respecting of persons other than What is demonstrated by character in line with the spirit of the Lord. And finally the wisdom from above is “without hypocrisy,” the Apostle thus completing in detail a description of this great quality so as to impress it upon the minds of all who are in anyway open to receive it. Let us be wise and continue to examine ourselves, endeavouring to be of those of whom the Master said, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

In self-examination may we not see whether we are using our time, talents and influence wisely ? Are we peaceable, seeking to cultivate peace, as we are exhorted : "Follow peace with all men and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord"? Are we easy of entreatment or are we hard-hearted and cold, or indifferent? Are we gentle, sympathetic and kind to those with whom we come in contact ? Even though we may think we can answer these questions satisfactorily, let us not too hastily arrive at this conclusion. Does not the Psalmist say, "Who can understand his errors? Cleanse Thou me from secret faults"? (Psa. 19 :12.) Seeing that we have secret faults, our understanding has perhaps not developed sufficiently to discern them, and as there are others similar to ourselves, who, having not discerned their secret faults need forgiveness from us, therefore, let us be forgiving. "Mercy and truth are met together." "His mercy endureth forever." (Psa. 85:10; 106:1.)

The Apostle says,. "Who is a wise man and endued with knowledge among you, let him show out of a good conscience his works with meekness of wisdom." (James 3:13.) He speaks of a wise man ; he is putting it in a way which would indicate that some with knowledge are not wise. Around us in the world we may find people who acquire knowledge by education, learnt by what others have discovered, yet of themselves are very deficient in wisdom.

We remember the record of the Apostles, how that the great majority were unlearned men, but had taken hold of the wisdom from above, to which those learned in the Jewish schools had not attained. So, likewise, we are to walk in wisdom. (1 Thes. 4 :1.)

Again we read in 1 Cor. 3 :18, "Let no man deceive himself. If any man among you seemeth to be wise in this world, let him become a fool, that he may be wise." There was a clear line of separation drawn between the Apostle Paul and 'the world, and anyone observing him and his. manner of life was not left in doubt as to his firm purpose and faithfulness in carrying it out. And there was no misunderstanding that the wisdom to which he referred pointed to the narrow way of sacrifice, in which on matters of principle there was no compromising, but as far as liberty was concerned, as great a man as he was, he was willing to humble himself and become all things to all, that he might gain the more. To the weak he became as weak ; he could sympathise with them in their infirmities. How great must have been his tact and patience, and what wisdom he must have exercised—surely a worthy example to all. (See 1 Cor. 4:9.) Seeing that the disciples of Christ are being made a spectacle to all those outside as well as within their own company, the Apostle urges that we walk wisely, so that as far as possible our conduct may be helpful and uplifting to all, being transparent before the world.

If it happens that we are unavoidably placed amongst disagreeable and contentious people, here a good opportunity to show them a calm and benevolent disposition. Such a spirit will rebuke the world and show the more excellent way, whether they are inclined to walk that way or not. Sometimes it may be wise to warn and speak plainly of a coming time of reckoning when the present actions must be accounted for. Even a strong worldly man like Felix trembled in view of the time of reckoning of which the Apostle Paul spoke.

How much wisdom is required in guarding the tongue, because of the many misunderstandings and misinterpretations of our well-meant words. It stands to the credit of wisdom that we think well! before we speak.

"Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt." (Col. 4:6.) Moderation should characterise all our conversation, in all our dealings with people of the world as well as Christians ; liberality and kindly consideration for their interest should be in evidence, though their lack of consideration toward us may be glaringly manifest.

Our Lord said, "Be ye therefore wise as serpents and harmless as doves." (Matt. 10:16.) What could have been the reason for our Lord to use the serpent as an example of wisdom? It must have some special peculiarity to be used as a lesson of instruction. Why not have used the picture of a faithful and intelligent dog or such like? As we consider the habits of a serpent we realise that it does not rush after its victim so as to frighten it away. It glides along in a very silent and cautious manner, so as not to cause needless alarm. It is supposed to set its eyes upon its victim with a certain fascination which causes a bird to fly into its mouth. According to record a snake can wait long and patiently while it brings its victim under its spell. There is some drawing influence which is very effective. And so with the Christian. The Father draws him and this drawing influence will attract like minds unto Christ. Our Lord said, "And I if I be lifted up from the earth will draw all men unto Me." (John 12 :32).

Thus, by exercising wisdom, a few words in their proper place may do much more good than a multitude of words. The wise man says : "A word at the proper time how good it is." On the other hand, how much injury can and has been done to the cause of truth in the past by some being too ready to speak when they should mind their own business, and have thus hindered instead of helped. How true that some have a zeal for God but not according to knowledge or true wisdom. It is good to follow the directions of St. Peter-- "Be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and reverence." The other class will not wait for any to ask them the reason of their hope; they do the asking and press it upon people against their wishes and make it distasteful to such an extent that their ears cannot be reached again.

Another necessity for the exercise of wisdom is when we meet difficulties hard to understand; we need to wait and consider awhile. The Psalmist says, "Wait patiently for Him." We take the incident of the Apostles wishing to install one in the place of Judas. They prayed unto God and cast lots and it fell upon Mathias. Probably they believed their prayers answered; we would believe that they were sincere, but we know it was not God's will. They had not waited patiently, as we know they had been told to wait, until they should receive power from above. How we can rejoice that God's choice and not theirs was the result. We may come to conclusions and believe it is God's will, yet if we had exercised the wisdom from above and waited patiently for Him, the results may have been more helpful and we could accomplish more good.

Let us always do the things we can do and perhaps greater opportunities may arise for us; but if we aspire to greater things and neglect the smaller, we may miss both. If we fail to do unto the least of these His brethren we fail to do unto Him. Thus we see how wisdom begins, how we develop in it, and become "knit together in love and unto all riches of the full assurance of understanding to the acknowledgment of the mystery of God and of Christ ; in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge."

The Deep Things of God.

“The spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God.” —1 Cor. 2:10.

WHEN we say that a book or a thought is “deep,” we mean that its full significance does not appear on the surface ; there are parts or phases of it that lie beyond the range of our ordinary vision or comprehension. This is the case with many of the narratives and statements found in the sacred Scriptures. Take for example the Garden of Eden story.

It does not seem at first to be more than an ordinary narration of an ancient occurrence ; yet there are things in this apparently simple narrative that do not appear to the casual reader at first glance—we must study it carefully and “read between the lines.”

As we probe into the story we see inordinate ambition, the lure of increased knowledge and power, the subtle suggestion that “the end justifies the means,” the desire for self-aggrandisement on the part of Lucifer, and other factors which since that time have found an integral place in the world and its affairs. We find this time-worn tale replete with information regarding the motives that commonly underlie human action; so true indeed that it bears in itself the undeniable marks of veracity.

Another instance is the account of the birth of the Lord Jesus. Perhaps no story within the Bible seems more sweetly simple than that of the Babe of Bethlehem. To be sure, the announcement made to Mary, and the angel’s message to the shepherds and the angelic chorus, introduce the element of the supernatural; yet outside of these things, all the rest of the story appears to be easily within the comprehension of any average person. But when we look more carefully we behold much greater depths.

We see in the heavens the mighty Logos before He took upon Himself the human nature. We try to understand the meaning of His leaving the heavenly courts and coming to this earth, humbling Himself to take on the human form, bearing human infirmities, and finally dying at Calvary. To some this is an impenetrable mystery, but enlightened Bible students can solve and understand it by means of the wonder-working alchemy of divine love revealed to them. Indeed, it exemplifies the eternal love that underlies the whole plan of God, from beginning to end ; and causes our thoughts and the imagination to become “lost in wonder, love and praise.”

Love and Sacrifice.

The death of Jesus may be regarded as one of the “deep things of God.” It causes us to ask : Why should sacrifice find so large a place in the divine scheme of things? As the mighty monarch of the universe, could not God save people without involving suffering? The answer suggests the fact that there always has been what may be termed a divine “law of necessity” operating in connection with all divine affairs. In other words, God cannot do things that are out of alignment with the principles of His own character and constitutional “modus operandi.”

God does not cause trees to grow with their roots in the air and their leaves and branches in the ground. Such an anomaly would be entirely contrary to the divinely ordained law of nature that governs all vegetational growth. We cannot annul or reverse that law, and we have no reason to believe that God will ever do so. Behind everything is an intelligent controlling principle that emanated from the Creator. The student of natural science tries to find out what this is in connection with the affairs of the natural realm; and the student of God’s Word endeavours to ascertain its function from the spiritual standpoint.

Many people say that the “law of sacrifice” simply means that it takes sacrifice to prove love and loyalty—that God requires it merely to set noble examples before others. It takes no intricate philosophy to elucidate this theory. It is not “deep,” but appreciated by the worldly, and extolled in books and the public press. Recently a story appeared in the papers of a man and a woman who had started to cross the street. An unseen car came upon them. The man could have saved himself, but he thoughtfully and nobly pushed the woman to safety and in so doing lost his own life. Then there was the young boy who carefully placed his baby brother into the hands of the fireman at the upper storey window, and then fell back into the house, overcome by the smoke and flames--though he might have saved himself at the cost of his little brother’s life.

Once in a while we hear of noble “sacrifices” of this kind, and such stories tell us that the world is not all bad, but that there are some capable of extreme unselfishness in time of peril. Such examples manifest the fact that there still lingers in humanity some of the fine qualities which God placed in man in the act of creation, and also suggest what restored man will lie like when his latent powers for good once more find development in the Millennium. But Jesus’ sacrifice was more than an example—it was vicarious. The greater the sacrifice, the greater is the degree of love revealed; and His was the greatest of all sacrifices. Therefore it is that the love of Jesus ranks so high in God’s sight. There was no pride, there was no selfishness, in His love. Verily, it was the purest of the pure.

Hidden Springs of Faith. -

One of the things that reaches down to hidden depths, and up to wondrous heights, is Christian faith. The outsider does not see the source of its supply. We remember an apt story from Bunyan’s “Pilgrim’s Progress.” While in the House of the Interpreter, Pilgrim came to a grate where a fire was burning. A certain man was pouring water on the fire; but this in nowise diminished its strength, for it flamed forth with great intensity of heat. Inquiring why this was, Pilgrim was led in behind the fireplace where he discovered a man secretly feeding the fire with oil. Then the Interpreter explained that this showed the grace of God in the heart of the Christian, and revealed the fact that he was in contact with the deep things of God which no opposition could avail to destroy. Thus real faith is ever fed by deep well-springs of truth; and at the time when it is needed it is always available.

The following story once appeared in the “New York Observer”:—“In a place where we once had our home there was a spring, famous in all the country round from the fact that it was never known to fail, or even to vary to any perceptible degree, either in volume or temperature. It bubbled up at the base of a very high mountain. And there it may be found to this day, always the same, offering to every passer-by a precious draft of clear cold water.

“Other springs dry up, and even the river becomes a poor, insignificant thing, crawling along in the middle of its wide channel, the very shadow of its former self. But this spring—THE spring—keeps up its steady flow in defiance of the sun's withering rays and the torrid atmosphere. It seems insensible to climatic changes; to it all seasons are alike . . . neighbours have great faith in this spring. They would as soon expect the mountain to be removed as not to find it giving forth its bounteous stream. And when all other sources fail them, they feel sure. that they know one which will not deny their thirst

“What an illustration we have here of constancy --a spring that never fails. But so many professing, Christians are like mere surface springs, that are but the mere drainings of the upper soil. They give much promise in rainy seasons, and gush and flow in copious streams when the air is full of moisture and the ground is soaked with water. It is easy enough to be a spring then. But where are they when the dry season comes, when the sun is high and the ground is baked with heat? We may seek them, but alas, they are not to be found. When springs are needed most they disappear, and where their waters once flowed there is now nothing but arid sand. It is not so hard for them to keep appearances of spiritual strength in times of revival, but (during the rest of the year, under the scorn or influence of the world, under the burning heat of opposition, of fiery trial, of persecution, they dry up. How is it with us? Does love remain, giving out as before the gracious influences of truth, with a meek and lowly spirit, or does it disappear and fade away in sin and worldliness?

“Oh, how good a thing it is to be a constant Christian a Christian in all times and seasons, in public and private, in all circumstances, and conditions of life. Do you know such souls—sweet tempered, gentle, gracious souls always near to God, always with their faces shining with truth as a light from heaven ? You always know where to find them—at the foot of the cross—ready to give you, a weary, thirsty seeker, a precious draught of truth from the overflowing chalice of their own faith-filled loving hearts. And the reason why the temperature of the spring is always the same is because its sources are deep. It has its origin far down below the surface of the earth among the very foundations of the mountain (Kingdom) itself. It is not fed by the drainage of the surface, but by the ever-living rock-hewn reservoir down in the secret places of the Most High. All its constancy and sweetness and purity is owing to the fact that its sources are deep.

“Herein we have the explanation of a mystery in spiritual things. The faith that is firm and changes not to suit the fashion of the times, that soul is ever full of grace and truth, the character that is Christ-like, conforming not to the ways of the world, must have its sources deep--deep down in the bosom of the mighty rock. It is no wonder that many fail to walk as He walked, after professing faith in Christ.= because they are depending merely upon transitory emotions, upon shallow convictions and passing excitement. They cannot endure a spiritual drought, because they have no depth. They are not rooted and grounded in the truth. They have no real vital union with the only One who is able to keep them from falling, and to present them faultless before the presence of His glory with exceeding joy.”

Understanding the Deep Things.

A thing is not necessarily hard to understand because it is “deep.” A fifty-foot well of water is 110 harder to understand than a ten-foot well. It is no harder to understand the ocean where it is a mile deep than where it is a hundred feet deep. When a person is a Christian for a few months he is not likely to have the depth of character that he will have after years of walking in the strait and narrow way. In the latter case he has had a greater amount of experience. He can look farther down into the depths of divine love that has followed him. But it is no harder for him to understand the mystery of life, or to appreciate the divine guidance that has directed his way.

Just as there is more water where the ocean is a mile deep than where it is a hundred feet deep, so there should be more substance in the life of the Christian who has been serving the Master for years than in him who has been in the racecourse but a few months. For the former life has been deepened, broadened and enriched. The “deep things of God” have become practical realities to him, for he has come to look “not at the things that are seen, but at the things that are not seen,” knowing that the “things that are seen are temporal, but the things that are not seen are eternal.”

“The spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God,” says the Apostle. The meaning of these words is evident, viz., that he who has the spirit of the Lord will search into the deep things of God the great vital things that God has set forth in His Word; things essential to salvation. and that reveal the plans, purposes and, above all, the character of God. Among these things are the divine attributes—wisdom, justice, love and power. These are all very deep. Some who are developed in love would quickly change their conditions on the earth for heavenly conditions, if they had the power. Well, God has the power, yet He allows conditions to remain as they are. Why is that? Because He has a wisdom that is very deep. His wisdom looks to the grand outcome of human affairs. He wants all creatures, “whosoever will,” to finally have the best.

Justice is deep. A sage of Israel once said, “Because divine sentence against evil work is not executed immediately, therefore the hearts of the sons of men are set in them to do evil.” Evil-doers do not recognise the working of the principle of justice; but in the age to come they will know all about it, and will wonder that they had not known it before. “An eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, a life for a life.” Thus is God’s law of justice. It is mathematically exact, and it would go hard with the sinner if love had no place in the divine programme. All who appreciate justice will practise it now, and will abhor its opposite.

God’s power is “deep” in the sense that it is immeasurable. It cannot be computed in foot-pounds of energy, - it in any earthly unit of dynamic strength. It is so great that it will reject the systems of the world that have existed so long, yea, “break them in pieces like a potter’s vessel.” It will lift mankind out of the condition into which the race has fallen. It will clothe the earth in the garments of endless praise. It will break the power of sin and death, so that these shall not exist anymore forever.

Divine Love.

God’s love, manifested in His provision for the world and in His dealings with His children, is one of the deepest of all things.

“For the love of God is broader
Than the measure of man’s mind,
And the heart of the Eternal
Is most wonderfully kind.”

A poet tells of a little child who was playing on the shore of a beautiful bay along the Atlantic. He was much impressed by the white-crested waves as they rolled in toward him. When he returned to his distant inland home, he told his companions that he had seen the sea. But how much of the ocean had he actually beheld? Only the small part that lay near the shore. The vast thousands of miles of the mighty Atlantic he had not seen, nor could he imagine its scope.

Then the poet goes on to say that in like manner we say we know the love of God; and so we do. But how much of that wondrous ocean of love do we know? Only the part that we see near the shore of our present life. The mighty ocean of redeeming love lies far and wide, filling eternity and heaven and earth with its vast tide. We know it now by a brief experience; but hereafter we shall be able to explore its heights, lengths, depths and breadths for evermore.

Other Deep Things.

While the parables of Jesus are simple stories told to teach truth, there is a depth to them that calls for thought and analysis. Without giving the matter due consideration many persons take the parable of "The Rich Man and Lazarus" as a literal statement ; and by so doing they entirely miss its import. The parable of "The Sower and the Seed" also is a most comprehensive one, taking in, as it does, all those who hear the Word of Truth during this age, and setting forth their response or lack of response to the voice of God. As for the parable of "The Ten Virgins," this, too, is a wonderful story; and its complete fulfilment evidently has not yet taken place. The "Eleventh Hour" parable seems to apply to the past and present, and manifestly the last call for workers is now going forth.

The test that God applies to the Christian is full devotion to Him, and the possession of that love that "is not provoked to anger, thinketh no evil, rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth ; hopeth all things, beareth all things, believeth all things, endureth all things." Those possessing such love are the ones with whom God is most highly pleased and who will win out in the end. He lets us know "the deep things of God" for the one great purpose of deepening and enriching our characters, so that we may become more God-like. If the truth fails to accomplish this in us, then we are not using the truth as it should be used. "Sanctify them by Thy truth," prayed Jesus ; "Thy Word is truth." And Paul said, "Be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds, that ye may know what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God."

The "deep things of God" always maintain their depth. They never become shallow pools by the wayside. As we gaze far down into them, we behold the reflected stars of hope and promise, and can behold the image of the church of Christ as it struggles on and upward toward the goal held out before it. Always we catch the vision of Jesus as the great exemplar of divine love. His cross is there, too, and it glows with a celestial light as the world withdraws from us and we find ourselves more and more realising the divine presence. Ere long the veil of the flesh will be passed, and then we shall enter into His house above, there to feed more fully on "the deep things of God," with enlarged capacities to receive and appreciate them.

And how we should long to be nearer to Him now, to be enriched with the heavenly treasure ever more abundantly. At times the partition that separates us from Him and His personal presence seems very thin. But in all things we know that He is leading us, dealing with us, loving us, though still invisible to human eyes. We are glad that He is faithful, and that "none can pluck us out of our Father's hand." We want to sink so completely into His will that in all circumstances of life we can say:

"Nearer, my God, to Thee, Nearer to Thee;
E'en though it be a cross That raiseth me.
Still all my song shall be, Nearer, my God, to Thee;

Nearer to Thee."

Clergymen Smoking and Mawkish Hymns.

FROM Sydney comes the news that after a speaker at the Methodist Anti-Smoking League this week had declared that "three-quarters of Methodist Church ministers indulged in the vicious habit of smoking," the league decided to change its name to that of "The Christian Anti-Smoking League." . . . In contrast to other days, when the Methodist Conference is sitting at Wesley Church a "smoking room" is now provided for ministers.—Melbourne "Age," June 3rd.

SYDNEY, Friday, June 5th.--"There is a fountain filled with blood, drawn from Emanuel's veins: and sinners placed beneath that flood lose all their guilty stains."

This verse was quoted by the Rev. N. C. Goss, of the Croydon Congregational Church to-day, in support of his statement that many hymns are "pagan, gloomy, amorous or mawkish."

"That hymn is purely pagan," he said. "That's not Christianity. You find that idea in all pagan races."

—Melbourne "Herald."

The above extracts from recent press reports give further emphasis of the deplorable condition existing amongst professed ministers of the Gospel. In the first instance, how little the true Christian life is understood by the reverend gentlemen mentioned. Surely those who intelligently read their Bibles could never harmonise it life of worldly indulgence with that of the Lord's and the Apostles' they claim to follow and represent.

Our Lord's own words are, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow Me"; and of Himself He declared, "The foxes have holes and the birds of the air have nests but the Son of Man hath not where to lay His head." (Matt. 16:24, 25; 8:20.) All the Apostles likewise set the same standard for Christian discipleship. The following are samples of the numerous quotations to be found in their writings :—"But what things were gain to me those I counted loss for Christ.. Yea, doubtless, and I count all things loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but refuse, that I may win Christ." "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." (Phil. 3:7, 8; Gal. 6:14.) "Love not the world, neither the things in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is, not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world." (1 John 2:15, 10.) What place then should smoking or "smoking rooms" have in the lives of those claiming to be the Lord's consecrated people?

The second statement, reported as coming from the: Rev. N. C. Goss, is even worse, as it strikes at the very foundation of the Christian's hope—"the blood of Jesus Christ (which) cleanseth, us -from all sin." (1 John 1:7.)

It is very evident that this gentleman, if he has been a Christian, now no longer has faith in the sacrifice of Christ as being necessary- for salvation from sin and death. If the words of the hymn complained of are pagan and not Christianity, as he says, there, it, is very strange that the Founder of Christianity and all His inspired Apostles, as well as the faithful prophets of all previous ages, agree in their declarations^ that "without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins." Surely the Apostle made no mistake when he declared, "Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures" (1 Cor. 15:3) and "Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name (than the name of Jesus Christ) under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved" (Acts. 4:12, etc.). Well would it be for church-going people generally if their leaders who now "deny the Lord that bought them" would frankly admit that the Word of the Lord is no longer their guide and authority behind their teachings.

Surely those earnest Christians still connected with one or another of the denominations should take note of these things, and instead of trying to correct such matters within the systems, as in the case of the "Christian Anti-Smoking League," should obey the Lord's injunction to "Come out of her, My people." (Rev. 18:4.) "Flee out of the midst of Babylon, and deliver every man his soul: be not cut off in her iniquity; for this is the time of the Lord's vengeance; He will render unto her a recompense . . . He would have healed Babylon, but she is- not healed: forsake her." (Jer. 51:6-0.)

"A Review of the Doctrines"

The above is the title of a little book of 92 pages written by Bro. H. J. Shearn, of England, and which makes a review of Christian doctrines in the light of "present truth."

While there are some expressions that may not be fully endorsed, we feel sure the little work will be found helpful by the brethren generally, in that it has the truths nicely assembled in the handy size.

A supply will be on hand shortly, and in the meantime all may order who desire copies of this book. It is very neat in appearance, being bound in green cloth and can be carried in the pocket. We are not sure of the price to be charged, but it may be about 1/6 per copy, including exchange, etc., from England.,
Question Box.

Question.

Q. - In Malachi 3:5 it says the Lord will be a swift witness against extortioners and all evil-doers. If, as we are, led to believe, our Lord has been present since 1874, how is it that evil-doers are worse now, if possible, than ever before?

St. Paul also says about Anti-christ “whom the Lord shall consume by the bright shining of His presence.” In the last ten years the Papacy has been getting more power, especially in England and U.S.A., and in North Queensland they control everything, the Labour Party in particular.

Answer—A careful study of the Scriptures respecting Christ’s second coming clearly reveals the fact that He comes again secretly, “as a thief in the night,” and that He will gradually reveal His presence to His faithful people. There is much to be done before He takes His throne and begins to put the world right. The parables of Matt. 25 are given to illustrate and emphasise the teachings in our Lord’s answer to the disciples’ questions of Matt. 24:3-- “When shall these things be? What shall be the sign of Thy presence (parousia) and of the end of the world (age)?” He was not again to come in human form: that could be located in a desert or secret room, but comes a glorious spirit; in the “express image of the Father’s person.” “in the glory of the Father and all the holy angels with Him.” He comes to displace Satan and his evil spirits and to reign instead; with His Bride, the Church, no more visible to mankind than has Satan been more powerful for good than Satan has been for evil.

The Parable of the Ten Virgins illustrates the necessity of watching and of having good supply of the holy spirit, and shows the testings that will separate the wise from the foolish virgins. The Parable of the Talents shows how the Lord will first reward His people according to their faithfulness in the use of their talents. ‘First; the dead in Christ shall rise, receive their rewards and “enter into the joys of their Lord.” Then those that remain in the flesh as they reach the end of their earthly course receive their rewards and are “changed in a moment” to be “with the Lord in the air.”’

When all this is accomplished, when “the Bride has made herself ready,” the third Parable of the Sheep and Goats will begin to have fulfilment—the Millennial reign will commence as verse 31 says, “Then shall He sit upon the throne of His glory,” and all nations will then be dealt with. Not until the Church is complete—need we expect the fulfilment of Matt. 24:30, “Then shall all the tribes of earth mourn and they shall see (discern—realise) the Son of Man coming in the clouds (troubles) of heaven with power and great glory.”

That will be the further development in connection with Christ’s presence. That is what Paul refers to in Rom. 8:19, 20—the whole groaning creation waiting for the manifestation (revealing) of the sons of God. That is when the bright shining, “the Sun of Righteousness,” will arise and scatter all the vapours of superstition and errors and completely destroy the “man of sin,” the “mystery of iniquity” the great Papal system, the Roman Church.

It is a mistake to think that ‘because we are undoubtedly living “in the days of the Son of Man,” which correspond to “the days of Noah which were before the flood,” that the new age—the Kingdom age—has begun. No, not until the great flood came and destroyed the “old world” did this “present evil world” begin, and not until this “present evil world” (2 Peter 3) has ended in the fiery time of trouble, will the “world to come wherein dwelleth “righteousness,” begin. Then Satan and his wicked spirits will be bound and all evil restrained. No more will “the wicked prosper as a green bay tree,” but “the righteous, shalt flourish as the palm.”’

No doubt all long for the Kingdom and our finite minds take small views and expect things in a hurry, but the great “Divine Plan of ‘the Ages’” progresses in stately step-pings, and even seeming delays are but working ‘out the Creator’s great’ designs.

Watching Unto Prayer.

(1 Peter 4:7. Convention Address.)

We would examine the subject of our talk we all will have vividly brought to our remembrance the many texts closely associated with this topic, and additionally the many exhortations of our Master to His church to “watch and pray.” But to introduce our subject let us read A-Peter 4:7—”But the end of all things is at hand; he ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer.” Since ,

Matter so important is enjoined on the household Of faith, it surely behoves each and all to discover for what is one to watch, and how to watch; and for what is one to pray, and how to pray.

We are fully aware that “to watch” is really to be, awake, alert, ready, closely observing, to be on guard, to be vigilant and wary. And likewise we all define prayer as desire, or to earnestly petition. One poetic phrase defines prayer as “the sincere •desire of the soul, either uttered or unexpressed.” ‘ If this be true, and we believe it is, then every human being at some time or other is in an attitude •of prayer, since prayer is desire—sincere desire. But -that is a little beside our point, for when we infer “prayer to anyone we generally associate it towards ‘Cod, as our Scriptures affirm—”Let your requests ,(desires) be made known to God.” (Phil. 4: (I.) However, we believe many are in this condition of prayer, but for some reason do not see the necessity for watchfulness, or as our text says, of sobriety- attentive to the outcome of our prayers. Here is one prayer of an earnest soul :—

A PRAYER FOR LIGHT.

“Life! great mystery! Who shall say
What need bath God of this poor clay?
Formed by His hand with potent skill
Mind, matter, soul and stubborn will;

Born but to die: sure destiny—death.
Then where, oh! where this fleeting breath”
Not one of all the countless throng,
Who lived and died and suffered long,

Returns to tell the great design
That future, which is yours and mine.
We plead, O God! for some new ray
Of light for guidance on our way;

Based not on faith, but clearer sight,
Dispelling these dark clouds of night;
This doubt, this dread, this trembling fear;
This thought that mars our blessing here.

This restless mind, with bolder sway,
Rejects the dogmas of the day
Taught by jarring sects and schools,
To fetter reason with their rules.

We seek to .know Thee as Thou art
Our place With Thee—and then the part
We play in this stupendous plan,
Creator Infinite, and man.

Lift up this veil obscuring sight;
Command again: “Let there be light!”
Reveal this secret of Thy throne;
We search in darkness the unknown.”

We wonder whether the writer of this prayer fulfilled the other portion of necessity in prayer—watchfulness. If so, we are confident that the light desired would be revealed in the “Light of the world”—Jesus. (John 1:8, 9.) The many other desires of the prayer, too, would be granted in (his time, and the “Plan of the Ages” would unfold its mysteries and treasures, and the eye of understanding would be enlightened, to know something of the unsearchable riches of Christ.

It grieves us though, that because of sleepiness, or drowsiness, many of the groaning creation have such a prayer dwelling in their hearts, and do not find the answers. How many, like the writer of the above, are thirsting for the waters of life? We do not doubt the earnestness of those who pray in such manner; we do not disbelieve that their words are the “sincere desire of the soul.” Now, as the Scriptures affirm that God is “able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think,” and our Lord commissioned us to “ask and it shall be given you; seek and ye shall find; knock and it shall be opened,” etc., if we do not realise these promises there must be something wrong, either with us or our prayers—possibly “we ask amiss.” Perhaps the fault is suggested in I John 3:22—do we keep His commandments? Do we practise those things pleasing in His sight? Surely one of His commandments was “watch and pray.”

If we are convinced that our prayers are not answered and we still grope “in darkness the unknown,” let us discover why. Perhaps the answer is delayed because we are not asking according to God’s will for our welfare, or maybe the flesh is weary, like in Gethsemane when the Apostles were asked to keep watch—how drowsy and sleepy they became. And this, we believe, is the very reason why they are not partaking of God’s favour to-day they do not watch!

If we pray and do not watch, we lose the greater part of the blessing that God wishes to give, and will never know whether our prayers are heard.

Let us retrace our thoughts again to the beginning of our topic—“prayer is sincere desire.” Vain repetitions, however scripturally correct in word formation, will not avail us anything. Our prayers must be sincere desires. Could we examine, with profit, some of our prayers? We pray, “Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done”; do we watch to recognise our part in “what manner of persons we ought to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and basting unto the coming of the day of God.” It is by such observation that we discern the blessing derived from this portion of a prayer.

Briefly it means, that, if when we pray “Thy kingdom come and Thy will be done,” we are solicitous for others, and ready to help others enter that kingdom, the blessing is ours.

Two illustrations of the subject are contained in Luke 10:2 and Eph. 6:18, 19. In the former we hear the Lord soliloquising respecting the harvest, and enjoining the disciples to pray that the Lord of the harvest would send forth labourers into His vineyard. It looks on the face of it that they were telling God what to do. Having in mind the other part of our topic, of watching, we can see that the prayer was instituted on their behalf, and if they were watching unto prayer they would quickly see their part in the request they were making. It ended in a manner that showed their watchfulness, for were not these very disciples the chief instruments, or labourers, in the harvest that was then ready for reaping? Truly their watching demonstrated the sincerity of their prayer. In fact, O, referred to, was the Apostle Paul soliciting prayers in a meditation of weakness? Or was he not rather instituting a prayer, that if really offered with sincere desire, would open the eyes of his brethren in Ephesus to observe their part in the ministry he was so privileged to bear and faithful watchers would quickly grasp the opportunity offered in cooperating, that he might indeed “make known the mystery of the Gospel”?

We pray “forgive us our trespasses,” but if we do not watch for the conditions of forgiveness, we will not know whether our faults are forgiven. We pray for a larger measure of the holy spirit, in order to be more fruitful. Failure to watch for the opportunity of being less filled with our own spirit, less filled with the spirit of the world, and less under the influence of the Adversary, would result in a prayer being unfulfilled. We pray for more peace, but if we are not awake to use profitably the peace we already possess, how can we expect to inherit more? We pray for more joy, for “love rejoiceth in the truth.” Should we still take pleasure in iniquity, is it possible to receive more- joy?

We know there has been much controversy regarding which is most essential in the development of the Christian character—character-building or doctrinal soundness. We believe that one is as essential to the “man of God” as the other; and likewise in the matter of prayer. If we do not closely observe the result of our prayers, we are wasting much time.

An illustration ‘of how needful watching is associated with prayer, was uttered at a Convention some years ago.

One Brother asked the question in regard to prayer: “Did you ever pray when trying to catch horses?” Possibly few of us have had such experience, but we can sympathise with our Brother in the difficulty of reining in some fractious animal. And so great apparently was the task that he resorted to prayer. He possibly managed the task successfully by perseverance in the right manner, and the accomplishment was due, no doubt, in no small measure to his watching. He ‘was watching in harmony with his desire, and when the favourable opportunity arose, he (lid his, part in the matter concerned.

Another instance, related in the daily press, is as follows :—A doctor was summoned to a child with a chronic illness. He was too late to save the little one. The grief-stricken mother declared, “The Lord’s will be done.” The physician commenting’ on the case declared it was neglect largely that caused the child.; sickness, so if the mother had watched regarding her obligations, probably the Lord’s will would -have been sweeter for her.

The point to ask always is, what is our part? And so, if “prayer is appointed to convey the blessings God designs to give,” let us watch for them, for do we not all know “God moves in mysterious ways His wonders to perform”?

We pray for comfort. If we use this blessing we will receive, comfort, for it is given “that we may comfort others in trouble by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God.” We pray to “endure hardness,” and to be strengthened that we may wage a better warfare. Not watching unto prayer in this particular we soon would be offended because of conflicting views, or opposition from one of the many quarters that continually beset us. Sincere prayer in the request of any matter entails that we should be on watch. Are we troubled? Are we afflicted? In these matters there is much scope for growth to be made, in harmony with our prayers in which we ask for patience.

Another matter we all are concerned with is our endeavour to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace. We could hardly assert our genuineness in this request if we loved rather a factious spirit, debating, or a continual stirring up of strife, striving about many words, ever learning and never able to come to a knowledge of the truth. Again, we pray and sing, “Let us pray for one another.” This prayer is without effect if we do not closely observe the opportunity for fulfilment; being asleep as regards such a request, we never would recognise an opportunity for assisting one another. A similar thought the Lord must have had in mind is recorded in Matt. 5:44. Our prayers would not be that our enemies might continue to be enemies, but watchfulness on our part would quickly discern the moment that we might be of use to assist our opposers to come to a better understanding of the Lord’s graciousness. “Oh, that men would praise the Lord for His goodness and for His wonderful works to the children of men.”

The Apostle says, “Pray without ceasing” the necessary labour in such a matter would be our watching- in the same, and grasping as we see the opportunities of bringing every desire of ours in harmony -with God’s will, that we may receive the abundant entrance into the Kingdom of God’s dear Son.

Let our prayers be no “lip service” (Isa. 29:1:1), for “whosoever offereth praise glorifieth Me,” and we want the “words of our mouths and the meditations of- our hearts” to be the showing forth of the, “abundance, of the heart.” Much harm could be, done by-merely a lip service in the matter • of prayer; harm to both the utterer and the hearer. There would be no watching on the part 'of the former, and the latter would be inclined to not recognise the genuine when contact is made with such, associating it 'rather :with the insincerity of those who practise prayers to, be heard of men. Prayer is not a matter of eloquence, but as before stated, sincere desire.

In all and sundry who in diverse manners and various tunes pray •and desire ever so small. a blessing, even in the matter of food, let us watch to fulfil our part in the matter, and God will be quick to answer on His part. Some pray and do not watch; others watch and. do not pray.'

And in this connection, as we review our text again; we would, note in respect of "the end of all things is at hand," that many watchers see the fulfilment of Luke.21::54-6. But so many ,watchers often forfeit much peace, as- our hymn puts it, and needless pain is borne because we do not take it to the Lord in prayer.

. Now, I have a secret : Some pray,. some watch and consequently receive the blessings associated in watching unto prayer. But they still- lack the chief blessing and that is that after certain requests are granted-they are not used profitably, as all bequests should. Let. us not forget the law 'of- the Kingdom"Freely-ye have received, freely give."

In conclusion,-prayer is a privilege of which God wants us to avail ourselves, not that he does not know our desire, but rather that He. wants us to watch for the answer :and-there by become familiar with.His ways and, how He deals with us, that we may be wise in His will,-both in our own-behalf and additionally for others, so- that all may "watch, and pray."

Tell Jesus.

“Tell Jesus when the burden seems too great for you to bear;
Go, lay it at the feet of Christ, and know that He will care;
And tell Him all the little things that come to cloud your way,
The ‘puzzles and perplexities that trouble you to-day.

“Tell Jesus all there is to tell about your daily needs,
About the .dim uncertainties through which your pathway leads:
About the cherished hopes that lie crushed lifeless at your feet,
The golden dreams left unfulfilled—the labour incomplete.

“If you could know how tenderly He makes our cares His own,
You would not stand apart again and hare the pain alone;
You would not miss the joy and peace of walking at His side,
Of finding tempest changed for calm, and sorrow sanctified.

“I tell Him all the story now—no other friend can he

Health Promoted by Righteousness

The Power of Thought. "Be in Health even as thy soul prospereth."--3 John 2.

IN this day of general awakening and independent thinking many are coming to realise the wonderful power of the mind over the body. They fancy that this is something new, and some even appropriate as a name for their theories, the "new thought." Other names are Christian. Science, mental healing, hypnotism, mind cure, etc. Peculiarly enough, all these writers find the best expression of their sentiments in the language of the Scriptures, although they ignore the Scriptural teachings as a whole and very evidently do not understand them. For instance, favorite among their quotations are these : "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." (Prov. 23:7) ; "Be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds" (Rom. 12:2) ; "Changed into the same image from glory to glory, as by the Spirit of the Lord" (II Cor. 3:18) ; "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap" (Gal. 6:7). But notwithstanding tributes to the teachings of the Bible, so far as we can discern, few of these "mind-cure" teachers are really "believers" in the Scriptural sense of the word. Very generally, while referring Jesus in a respectful manner, they give evidence that they do not accept Him as the only teacher—the sent of God. Rather, they seem to class Him, with Plato, Socrates, Confucius and others of the good and great, and to accept His teachings^ as on a parity with theirs.

On a False Foundation.

We do not claim that these various theories are wholly bad. Satan now realises that it is impossible to shut out the light of the oncoming day. Hence, his transformation, by which he becomes a leader, a teacher, along what might be termed good lines in many respects. He would be a teacher of gentleness, quietness of spirit, good thoughts, pure thoughts.. In this capacity he is now flooding the world with spurious teachings, and making a special point of mental healing. Indeed, we cannot doubt that he even stands prepared to assist these theories which he is now promulgating by granting blessings of health and relief from disease to those whom he would more particularly associate with himself and his theories. This power is manifest to some extent in the healings done in the name of Mormonism, in the name of Christian Science, in the name of Spiritism, in the name of Occultism, in the name of Mind Cure etc. The Scriptures everywhere recognize Satan not only as a malevolent being, opposed to God and to righteousness, but they declare that he does possess certain powers for evil. In olden times these were known as occult powers, and the apostle wrote about those who were afflicted of the devil. Our Lord said of one poor woman He healed, "whom Satan hath bound, lo, these eighteen years" (Luke 13:16).

God declares in His Word, His ability to completely control sin, and that, ultimately, He will do this—that Satan shall 'be hound during the thousand years of the Millennial Kingdom of Christ, during which time the world will be blessed and uplifted from sin and death and the malevolent influences that are now upon mankind. They declare that even in the present time God will permit the wrath of man and the malevolent of Satan only as far as He can use these ultimately for good, and that the remainder He will restrain. In other words God at the present time is gathering out .of the world the "Little Flock," the Bride of Christ, whom He designates His "jewels," and He uses Satan and evil men and the malevolent conditions of the present time to try, to prove, to test, to' polish these saints whom He is preparing for the Heavenly Kingdom—for joint-heirship with His Son in the work of the Millennial Age—the work of uplifting humanity generally, so many as will return. We might say, then, that the adverse influences of the present time constitute the grindstone upon which these jewels are polished, and that Satan, through his various agencies, is used of the Lord in turning this grindstone. And this is the Scriptural thought : Note the experiences of Job, and how God in his case gave Satan permission to try, to prove, to test that noble man—to polish him. Note that the Apostle similarly refers to his own experiences, saying that a certain adverse condition of the flesh was used of Satan to. buffet him, but that the Lord assured him, "My grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness" (2 Cor. 12:9). Therefore, says the Apostle, I will glory in my infirmities, since I shall have correspondingly more of the grace of God wherewith to resist them and be profited by them. For, he declares, the light afflictions of this present time are working out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, while we look away from the things seen to the things that are unseen.-2 Cor. 4:17, 18.

"In All Deceitfulness of Unrighteousness."

In these words the Apostle points out that Satan will be granted by the Lord special power in the end of this age, and that as a^e result there will be especially severe testings upon the people of God. We are to closely discriminate between Divine permission and Divine authorisation. We are to remember that "God tempteth no man" (James 1:13), and that it is a totally different matter that He permits Satan to tempt. Thus the Lord would separate the wheat class from the tare class, and not only so, but divide the wheat class into two portions, two classes, a "Little Flock" of "more 'than conquerors" and a "Great Company," loyal at heart, but not sufficiently zealous to be counted worthy of a place as members of the Bride of Christ.

So much for the reasons why God permits Satan now to masquerade as the champion of pure thoughts and righteous living and to deceive and lead astray all these who, having the Word of God in their hands, have loved the error rather than the light, or, as the Apostle puts it, they receive not the truth in the love of it ; therefore, there comes now to them strong delusions that they may believe a lie, that they all may be condemned—that it may be manifested that they were not worthy of the glorious things which God has in reservation for those who love righteousness and hate iniquity, who love the truth and hate falsehood.

Selfishness and Falsehood Rewarded.

We are not uncharitable but truthful, when we say -that in the case of many of these false teachings the reward of health is sought from selfish motives purely ; nor are we too severe when we say that health is frequently secured as a reward for systematic falsification. The very teaching is that the facts are to be denied, and that the denial, the untruth, is to be insisted upon until it becomes a very part of one's being. Those who take this evil mind-cure are taught to lie to themselves as well as to others, and to say, I have no pain, I have no aches, I am well, thoroughly well. This systematic lying is rewarded, no doubt by the father of lies, who if he had the power to inflict with all manner of disease in olden times, doubtless has considerable of the same power to-day, and if he has power to inflict would also have power to release from his affliction.

But, do you say, how could Satan be interested in such a propaganda? We reply : (1) That all who follow this prescription and learn to lie thoroughly to themselves thereby vitiate their own minds and consciences, so that thereafter they cannot reason correctly because they have lost the foundation of truth. Their minds are in confusion, at least upon every religious subject. (2) By this so-called new light, new thought, new mind, science, etc. the Adversary directs and draws away from the true light, the true science, the Word of God. He kept it hidden for centuries, called the “dark ages ;” then subsequently, as the Reformation light broke in, he endeavoured to turn it aside and to twist it and to misrepresent it, so now, when the true light is shining forth, showing that the Word of God is grand and beautiful and harmonious, and that our difficulties in the past were mistranslations and misinterpretations of the Word, Satan draws attention away from it entirely to what his unwitting votaries style the power of the new thought, the new mind. (3) Those whom Satan is using in this direction, as we have already seen, quote Scriptures freely wherever they can pervert them to an apparent support of their theories, but they do not really believe the Scriptures, neither do they really believe in Christ. Does this seem a hard saying?

We answer that by their works they deny Him, for although they use the name of Christ—as, for instance, Christian Scientists—they really deny the foundation of His teachings. They deny, for instance, that man was ever perfect, in the image of God ; they deny that he ever fell from perfection into sin; they deny that a death penalty was upon him ; they declare that there is no such thing as sin and death, that belief in these are merely mental delusions that should be put away. And if they deny sin and death, of necessity, logically, they must also deny a redemption from sin and from death ; and if they deny the redemptive work of Christ they as surely deny that He is the Redeemer.

“Look Unto Me and Be Ye Saved.”

We are opposed to Satan and all his healing falsehoods and all the various delusive arguments by which he is now seeking to put darkness for light, and to make the true light of God’s Word appear to be darkness.

While, therefore, others are selfishly looking to mind-cures, hypnotism, Christian Science, Spiritualism, Occultism and other “isms” for the cure of their maladies, let us harken to the voice from heaven saying, “Look unto Me and be saved.” (Isa. 45:22.) Let us be content to have what the Lord has promised us in His Word, and to desire no more. Spiritual Israel enjoys God’s favor during this Gospel Age, but is not promised health, wealth and prosperity of an earthly kind.

Indeed, the Spiritual Israelite is exhorted to have such an appreciation of the spiritual blessings proffered him as would prompt him to gladly surrender all of the earthly blessings that he may have the heavenly--even to the extent of laying down wealth, strength, life itself in the service of the Lord and on behalf of the brethren. “We ought to lay down our lives for the brethren,” says the Apostle. (1 John 3:16.) And the laying down of life frequently means the laying down of health and strength—it means self-denial in the interests of others. It is the reverse of seeking first physical health and personal advantage. Its rule is, Seek first the Kingdom of God and its righteousness and all earthly blessings shall be added unto you according to the heavenly Father’s wisdom of what would be for your highest welfare.

The true Christians, the Elect, are urged to set their affections on things above and not on the things of the earth, for they are reckoned as dead to the world and as having become alive as new Creatures in Christ and, therefore, as enjoying with Him superior joys.

“Be in Health — Even as Thy Soul Prospereth.”

The Scriptures acknowledge sin, sorrow, pain, suffering, death, and they teach us to sympathise with those who are thus afflicted. They show us how all these are the works of the flesh and of the devil, that Satan was a murderer from the beginning, that it was through his lie that our first parents were led into disobedience. They show that Satan's course since has been to lead men downward through falsehood, through the perversion of their minds with all manner of untruth and impurity. , They show God's condemnation of sin and His declaration of sympathy, and the manifestation of that sympathy and love in the providing of Christ as man's Redeemer. They show that ultimately the Redeemer is to be the King of the world and to take His great power and bind Satan, and destroy all unrighteousness, and lift up the poor fallen race during the Millennial Age, called in the Scriptures the 'times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began.' (Acts 3 :19-21.) They tell us that this will be accomplished at the second coming of Christ, and that in the interim, between the sacrifice and the time of the establishment of the Kingdom in power and great glory, a special work is to be in progress ; namely, the selection of a Little Flock of footstep followers who, hearing of the grace of God, shall be so moved thereby to love righteousness and hate iniquity that they will accept the Master's invitation to walk in His footsteps of self-denial.

"A More Excellent Way."

We have been surprised that Christian people of considerable development and experience have been attracted by the literature and theories of mind-cure, etc., when we have heard them comment upon the good, helpful advice given in some of these writings. We have been astonished that they did not seem to know how much better advice is given in the Word of God, in comparison with which all such writings are foolish.

In illustration : These various "new-thought" instructors give out as a piece of news, as something thoroughly original with themselves, the declaration that fear is the basis of much of the pain sorrow and disease of mind and body which prevail. There is truth in this beyond a doubt; a truth not only recognised and taught long ago by every school; namely, that to fear a disease is to induce the disease; but the same lesson in much its best form is taught in the Scriptures. For centuries they have been telling such as have the ear to hear that while "the fear (reverence) of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom," the "fear of man bringeth a snare." Do they not again declare that "fear hath torment" or trouble? Do they not exhort God's people saying, "Fear not their fear, neither be afraid, but sanctify the Lord Go(11); in your hearts, and let Him be your fear and Him be your dread." In other words, fear and dread nothing except what would be displeasing to God and, therefore, wrong and injurious toward yourself and others.

On the other side of the question do not the Scriptures hold out hope and courage in a way that no other writings in the world ever did? Do they not say, "Be of good courage, and He shall strengthen thy heart ?" Do they not apply this mental medicine to all of life's affairs and interests, as, for instance, assuring us, the Father knoweth what things ye have need of, and He is more willing to give the holy Spirit to them that ask Him than are earthly parents to give good gifts unto their children? Do they not assure us that "as our days, so shall our strength be?" Do they not tell us that "no good thing will be withheld from them that walk uprightly?" Is it not written, "The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms?" "Thy help cometh from the Lord:" also, "Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." "Take no anxious thought for the morrow ; cast all your care upon Him, for He careth for you." "It is God that girdeth me with strength ;" "When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee ; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee."

Their Rock is Not Our Rock.

What a rock foundation is thus presented in the Word of God for those who have the proper faith and can claim these promises. How poor in comparison are the words of the worldly-wise of our day, who are attempting to give the world the "new thought"—attempting to take away their fear, and instead to give them hope and courage. We might say, without fear of contradiction, that the only strength their position contains is gained from the occasional misapplication of Scripture. The peace, the joy, the rejoicing, the blessing, the comfort, the refreshment, the rest of heart set forth in the foregoing expressions of sympathy and love and assurances of help are all and only for the Lord's beloved ones. These "new thoughts" are antagonistic to the Bible, and anti-Christian, in that they teach unregenerate men and women to ignore the sin which separates them from God, and to claim to be God's children and to appropriate thoughts of peace and of Divine favour. The Bible, on the contrary, denounces such doctrines as "doctrines of devils," because they ignore Him who is the Way, the Truth, the Life, and aside from whom none can come unto the Father nor under Divine blessing, nor properly have peace with God.

Cleansed, Transformed, Renewed.

These philosophies of men seem to parallel the truth, only on a false basis. This is another evidence that they are not merely of human origin, but that the father of lies has had to do with their arrangement and propaganda. They give out as a brand new thought that all disease is the result of filth, mental, physical, or both, and the proper course for man is to put away sinful thoughts, impure affections, from his mind, and to fill it instead with good things, that his body similarly should be cleansed by an abundant use of water, inwardly and externally; that the system should not be clogged by gluttony, else the blood will become impure and sickness result; that the air we breathe should be pure and plentiful, and that physical exercise is necessary to proper health. To all this we agree; it is all good, it is all useful and we wish that all mankind — the world and Christians—might appreciate it and obey its suggestions. But it would be a mistake to suppose that these things are new to a Christian who is informed respecting the teaching of the Word of God. Is he not therein taught by the Apostle, "Cleanse yourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and of the spirit (mind)?" Is he not urged to be abstemious and instructed—"Let your moderation be made known unto all men?"

"The Perfect Law of Liberty."

It is not a new thought that love should be the guiding, the controlling impulse among men everywhere, but the Bible first of all presented this teaching--love for God and the brethren, love for kindred, love for our neighbours, yea, even love for our enemies. It is the Bible that pre-eminently teaches that perfect love filling our hearts will cast out fear and selfishness, and that, relieved of these—which are the representatives of darkness--our whole bodies may be full, of light and be refreshed and re-invigorated and strengthened, and that thus we may be blessed, not only in the life to come, but also in the life that now is. But, we had, with the Scriptures, that while a kind of love may be possible to the world; the real, genuine love which is of God can come only through the begetting of the Holy Spirit, and that all other loves are merely fragments or imitations of this true love. This love alone will stand the careful inspection and criticism which the Apostle gives us in I. Corinthians 13.

In proportion as we do by faith grasp the promises, and in proportion as we daily strive to live so as to maintain our relationship with the Father and with the Son, and with their gracious promises, in that same proportion our faces will show all these—joy, peace, patience, love. These will gradually become more and more written in the lineaments of our faces, visible to all. And more and more will our health and strength prevail, spiritual and physical. And it is proper in this connection to remember the instruction of the Apostle, that we should not think about the evil and undesirable things, but think about the pure and good and noble things. Undoubtedly a poisonous effect upon the system is engendered by thinking about sinful or injurious things of any kind; undoubtedly also the body and mind are both strengthened by thinking about things noble and good and pure. The Apostle's words are, "Whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good repute; think on these things." And let us remember that the new commandment of the Master was that we should love one another; and the Apostle declares that "Love is the fulfilling of the law," and again the Master says that we should love even our enemies.

As daily and hourly we seek to cultivate this spirit of love, and to allow it to dominate in our words and thought and deeds, in the same proportion will be the measure of our blessing, because in this we will be “doers of the Word and not hearers only.” We are not, however, to place too high an estimate upon the present life, and health and earthly blessing and joys; rather we are to be content with such things as we have, and to realise the Divine supervision of our affairs and to allow all of life’s experiences to bring us more and more of the peace of God which passeth all understanding, and which should continually rule in our hearts. But while not seeking to save the present life, but rejoicing in the privilege of laying it down prudently in the Lord’s service as opportunity offers, we will, nevertheless, find that the rest and peace of mind which come through believing and through following the Lord will be a favourable influence as respects our physical health, peace, joy, blessing. We who believe enter into rest now and yet, as the Apostle declared, “There remaineth a rest for the people of God.” Heb. 4:9). We will attain that in our change in the First Resurrection—we will be satisfied when we awake in His likeness.—Psa. 17:15.

“As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he.” This is not to be understood as meaning that whatever a man thinks is true. That is a false definition the correct thought respecting this statement is that what a man may seem to be outwardly is not necessarily a correct view of his real character—his heart, his will, his intention, is the real man as God sees him. If, therefore, our hearts condemn us not we have peace with God; but if our hearts condemn us we know that God is greater than our hearts and knoweth all things, and we should not have peace, but should repent of the wrong-doing and come again into harmony with God, where we may enjoy true peace.

The Apostle illustrated this, saying, “If any man seem to be religious and bridled not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, that man’s religion is vain.” (Jas. 1:26). So surely as his heart is changed, so surely as he is begotten of the Holy Spirit, so surely as the spirit of love dwelleth in his heart and more and more abounds richly, it will affect not only his actions, but also his looks and his words. He will seek to bridle his tongue, to bridle all of his passions, to be emptied of his former ambitions and desires, and to be filled with the noblest, the purest, and the best, which come from the fountain of grace and truth in the Divine revelation.

The Power of the Will.

The majority of mankind, fearful and discouraged, fail to make the best possible use of their talents and opportunities. The Scriptures instruct those who have entered the school of Christ that the will is the first matter that is to be settled—that a double-minded man, who has never a settled purpose in respect of his life, is unstable in all his ways. They urge positiveness—a full consecration of heart, mind, body, talents, everything to the Lord ; and to those who take this position of a full consecration the Scriptures give valuable assurances, which should strengthen every fibre of the human body ; as the Apostle expresses it, “Gird up the loins of your mind and hope to the end.”

And again he says, “Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of His might ;” “I can do all things through Christ, Who strengtheneth me ;” “According to thy faith be it unto thee.” Oh, what marvellous power has come to weak and fainting hearts through the fixing of the will—the conversion of the will to do and to be in harmony with the Lord at any cost ; and the appropriating then of these promises, exceeding great and precious, which belong to no others than this class! How many have found that thus the Lord’s strength was made perfect in their weakness after they had taken the proper step of consecration—after they had exercised the faith which He called for, and which is necessary for our development ! No wonder these can rejoice in the Lord ; no wonder the Apostle says that they are able to rejoice in tribulation, knowing that tribulation is working out the lessons of patience, experience and hope, and fitting them for the glorious things to come.

In Due Time.

Time is one of the most important factors in God's plan. The days of creation were long periods of time ; the time of man's experience with evil has been six days of a thousand years each ; the days of redemption and of the development of the Church has been nearly two thousand years. Time has been necessary for the accomplishment of God's great work ; and it has also been necessary in proving to man the righteousness of God's character. Only time could prove to men his invincible justice. Six thousand years ago His sentence of death passed upon mankind, and during all that time He has permitted generation after generation to go down into the grave in the midst of agony, blood and tears. And though He loved men so, even while they were yet sinners, that He spared not His own Son, but freely gave Him up for us all, yet He has never for a moment relented so as to interpose His power for the relief or release of the groaning creation ; nor will He do so until His "due time"—the time which His wisdom appointed, which will be the very best time for the securing of the largest possible results to the race, both of knowledge and of advantageous experience, as well as for the development of several of the most important features of His plan. But, as time only can develop God's plan, so time only can manifest His love as well as His wisdom, His power and His justice.

Time will fully manifest the Divine wisdom in what seems to short-sighted humanity like pitiless delay. Already those who are privileged to view by faith the Divine plan see the necessity of time for its full accomplishment. It is in view of such necessity that the children of God are frequently exhorted to patience. God has kindly brought us to His standpoint of view, and bidden us look into the glorious future—to the outcome of His plan ; and in proportion, as we are able to comprehend and believe it, we may rest and rejoice in it. But in the meantime, being thus graciously refreshed by the cheering prospect, we must patiently wait for the end, however painful the waiting season may be.

Patience is a virtue which our heavenly Father desires to cultivate in us; and He manifests in Himself the grandest example of it. Through all the centuries past he has patiently endured the reproaches of those who, failing to understand the course of His wisdom in executing justice and in working out the deep designs of His abounding grace, attributed evil, and only evil, to His glorious and holy character. He knows that "in due time" His character will be fully vindicated, and so He patiently waits and works and endures. So also our Lord Jesus waits and endures. He endured great humiliation in coming to our low estate. Then, as a man, He patiently endured the contradiction of sinners against Himself and ungrateful persecution, even unto death, from those He came to serve. And, like His heavenly Father, through it all He was cheered in consideration of that "due time," though then in the far distant future, when His character, and also the Father's character, would be fully vindicated and manifested to every creature in heaven and in earth. And still our blessed Lord Jesus and our adorable heavenly Father await with patience the grand consummation. So, in similar attitude of mind, we must wait, for the servant is not above his Lord, and our rejoicing in view of the future will, if we have the mind of Christ, be not only because of our own prospective vindication and glory, but also in prospect of the vindication and glory of God and of our Lord Jesus Christ, and of ' the prospective everlasting triumph of truth and righteousness.

The waiting time is by no means a time of rejoicing, except in hope. This is a time when they that live godly must suffer persecution, when our eyes must look upon scenes of sorrow- and mourning, when our ears must hear the wails of distress, and when our feeble flesh must experience the pangs of death. But oh, there is a glorious release to come "in due time." Wait for it patiently. "Let patience have her perfect work !" Submit to the humbling process. The Church's pathway of present humiliation leads to the future glory.

"Humble yourselves," says the Apostle, "under the mighty hand of God, that He may exalt you in due time." Do not make the great mistake of seeking present exaltation at the expense of that which is to come in due time to those who patiently endure to the end. It is only in proportion as any turn their eyes away from the glory to follow in due time, and thus lose faith in it, that they begin to prize the trifling recompenses which the world offers for the sacrifice of their birthright. Let us, therefore, dearly beloved, keep the eye of faith fixed upon the hope set before us in the Gospel ; and, forgetting those things that are behind—all worldly ambitions, etc.—let us press toward the mark for the prize of our High Calling, which shall indeed be realized by the faithful--"in due time"; for, "Faithful is he that hath called you, who also will do it." His purposes cannot fail, nor His word return unto Him void.

Zion Heard—and was Glad.

IN the midst of all this trouble and tumult in the world to-day, what is the attitude of the Lord's truly consecrated and faithful people? Are they, too, in fear? As the judgments of the Lord fall heavily upon the wayward and disobedient, so that the whole earth reels and staggers as a drunken man (Psalms 107:27), are the saints in dismay and distress.

Ah, no; for it is written, "Zion heard, and was glad and the daughters of Judah rejoiced, because of Thy judgments, O Lord." It is the "sinners in Zion" that are "afraid." Psalms 91 and 46 show why the saints rejoice and are restful of heart while others weep and lament. It is because they "dwell in the secret place of the Most High (represented by the Holy of the typical Tabernacle), and abide under the shadow of the Almighty" (as the typical Tabernacle was covered by a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night). It is because God is their "Refuge and Strength." "The secret of the Lord is with them that reverence Him and He will show them His Covenant." Psalm 25:14.

These dwellers in the secret place of the Most High are provided in these perilous times with a clear knowledge of the Divine plan, with its times and seasons, which enables them to see both the necessity for the present method of Divine discipline upon the world and also the peaceable fruits of righteousness which shall result there from. In the midst of the storm and battle of this great Day of the Lord, they hear the commanding voice of the , Lord of Armies, and their hearts rejoice; for they have full confidence in His ability to bring order out of all the confusion. They realise that in the judgment of this day it is the Lord that speaks from Heaven—from the high place of authority and control; therefore they give thanks at the remembrance of His holiness (Psalm 30:4)—of His Justice, Wisdom, Love and Power, which ensure His doing all things well.

Question Box.

Question: What is your thought respecting prayer? In some societies and churches, men seem to pray so long and loud and work themselves up so. Is that as it should be?

Answer: When the Lord was asked, "Lord, teach us to pray," the specimen prayer He used was very short, simple, yet covered so much, and right to the point of things essential. When ye pray, say, "Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy Kingdom come. Thy will be done as in heaven so on earth. Give us this day our daily bread. Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive them that trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation but deliver us from evil."

There is no suggestion that we should scream aloud as though God could not hear. He knoweth our needs before we ask Him. Our chief concern should be "seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness." If we have faith in God's love and care for us and His power to do more than we could ask or think, we know He can read the intents of our hearts even if we but wait in silence before Him, like the worthy Hannah of old. No, shouting and screaming or "making long prayers at the corners of streets, in vain repetitions as the heathen do," is not the way to approach God. We must approach in reverence and humble confidence and "make our wants and wishes known," submissively ready to accept whatever Divine wisdom may either grant or withhold. "Thy will be done."

The object of prayer is not to inform God of anything, it is rather to bring ourselves into condition of heart and mind to receive whatever His good providence may grant. It is the drawing nigh to God, to gain supplies of grace and strength, to be encouraged by communion with our Father, that we may be able to go through our day to His glory and be a source of comfort and blessing to all with whom we come in contact.

How many prayers request things which the Lord has not promised to His people of this age. Quite often things are requested which in our consecration we are supposed to have surrendered. When we determined to take up our cross and follow Christ, and entered the covenant of sacrifice, all earthly hopes, aims, ambitions, worldly pleasures or prosperity were laid on the altar. Our hopes and aims were transformed into spiritual desires and we committed ourselves, our all to Him. "In whom we have believed and are persuaded that He is able to keep (guard) that which we have committed unto Him against that day." Then what should our prayer be but longings for His grace, thanksgivings for all His good gifts, which He bestows more than we could ask or think and a seeking to be filled with His spirit that we may overcome anything in us contrary to His will and that we may discern more and more clearly the heavenly manna, the teachings of His Word, and be able to live rejoicingly to His praise and help others to also come and glorify His name.

It is here too that we may come when the deep shades of sorrow and grief weigh heavily upon our hearts, we may here cast our burdens on the Lord and find the rest and peace, consolation, the "balm of Gilead," the solace for all woes, the assurance of such good promises.

Yes, "Come ye disconsolate, where'er ye languish,
Come to the mercy seat fervently kneel:
Here bring your wounded hearts,
Here tell your anguish,
Earth hath no sorrow that heaven cannot heal."

The Birth of a Nation.

THE following is the first instalment of an article bearing the above title, and written by Mr. H. J. Shepstone on the wonderful progress being made in Palestine. It appeared in "Pearson's Magazine" early this year, and 'Mr. Shepstone has kindly granted permission for this reprinting. While more recent reports of the trouble between the Jews and Arabs may curtail some of the progress in the Holy Land temporarily, we feel sure that this article will be of much interest to our readers, in view of our Lord's words concerning "a parable of the fig tree." (Matt. 24 :32).

The first Jewish conquest of Palestine, under Joshua, was by the sword. To-day we are witnessing another conquest of this little land of sacred memories. This time it is a commercial and industrial one, but it is, nevertheless, equally daring and thorough, and is one that bids fair to have far-reaching results upon the whole civilised world. After nearly twenty centuries of dispersion the Jews are returning to the land of their forefathers, and are creating there a new state — a Jewish commonwealth.

There is no denying the unique position the Jew holds in Palestine to-day. He recognises his power, his resourcefulness, his ability to make good, and is carrying everything before him. He sets the pace, and is largely directing the policy of the country — commercially, industrially, educationally and socially. Not least, he looks upon the land as peculiarly sacred to him and his race.

As a result of Jewish initiative, Jerusalem has been transformed from a place of pilgrimage into a city bristling with life and energy, a recognised financial and business centre. The Holy City boasts her University, educational and philanthropic institutions, and is a city of art and culture. That dreary and desolate region, the Dead Sea, has, through Jewish enterprise, become a second Klondyke. The valuable salts are being recovered at the rate of over two hundred tons a week for fertilising and medicinal purposes. Here, too, is the world's most novel Lido, Kallia, built upon the shores of this extraordinary sheet of water, lying 1400 feet below sea-level, famed for the great salinity of its waters and for its awe-inspiring scenery. The recently completed hydro-electric power-station on the River Jordan, with its four great turbines generating 32,000 horse-power, is a Jewish concern. Its erection called for the building of dams and miles of canals in the heart of the wilderness. The demand for electricity, both for light and power, has been so great, however, that a second station is now to be built. The sleepy old city of Tiberias, the only town upon the Sea of Galilee, has become a centre of great activity, with its power-station, factories, garages, banks, schools, hotels and restaurants. Its famous Hot Springs, whose waters equal those of the leading spas in Europe in medicinal qualities, have been modernised, and to the north of the town a promenade has been built, with facilities for bathing, boating, yachting, tennis, etc.

At Haifa, the only town on the Palestine coast possessing a modern harbour, the Jews have started many important industries—flour mills, soap works, cement factory, tobacco factory, textile warehouses and the like. Here, too they have founded a technical Training College, the only one in the country, where young Jews are taught the various branches of engineering and allied trades. The Jaffa orange industry has risen from an export of 400,000 cases per season in the pre-war days to over seven million cases, some seventy per cent, of this production being Jewish. Palestine is also a large exporter of grape-fruit, all grown in Jewish orchards. Bananas and table grapes are other items of export from Jewish fruit growers.

The Jewish city of Tel-Aviv, lying to the north of Jaffa, is now the largest city in Palestine, eclipsing Jerusalem in population and also in importance as a trading centre. It is the wonder city of the East and few realise now fast it has developed and the influence it is destined to exert upon the economic life of the country. Then, all over the land, from Dan to Beersheba, there are now some 120 flourishing Jewish agricultural settlements. Recently the Jewish dairy farmers of Galilee sent over a shipment of eggs which the Empire Marketing Board pronounced as “very satisfactory.”

The transport of the country is in Jewish hands. Motorbuses run everywhere, linking up the towns and villages with very efficient service. As an example of the thoroughness of the bus services, there is a bus every quarter of an hour during the day between Jerusalem and Jaffa and Tel-Aviv. a distance of some forty miles, over very hilly country, and the return fare is only 3s. 6d. Jewish ships under their own flag, now ply between Haifa and New York, and it is their intention to form a direct shipping line between this country (England) and the Holy Land. The Jewish flag is quite a pretty emblem, consisting of a white background relieved with two broad bands of blue, with the so-called “Star of David” in the centre, two equilateral triangles, also in blue.

I am aware, of course, that Palestine is being governed by Great Britain under a High Commissioner, Sir Arthur Wauchope, who resides in Jerusalem. But Palestine is not a British possession. We are administering the country under a Mandate from the League of Nations and with the consent of the leading Powers. In that administration Great Britain is far from being a free agent, and has to render to the League and to the civilised world an account of her stewardship.

The Mandate gives international recognition to the policy of a Jewish National Home, based upon the historical connection of the Jewish people with Palestine. It provides, among other things, “that the Mandatory shall be responsible for placing the country under such political, administrative and economic conditions as will secure the establishment of a Jewish National Home,” and that the administration of Palestine, “while ensuring that the rights and privileges of other sections of the population are not prejudiced, shall facilitate Jewish immigration under suitable conditions and shall encourage, in co-operation with the Jewish Agency, close settlement of the Jews on the land, including State lands and waste lands not required for public purposes.”

The Mandate also provides for the official recognition of “an appropriate Jewish agency as a public body for the purpose of advising and co-operating with the Administration of Palestine in such economic, social, and other matters as may effect the establishment of a Jewish National Home and the interests of the Jewish population in Palestine.”

In other words, the League and the civilised world have promised Palestine to the Jews as their National Home, and they mean to see, so far as they are able, that that promise is kept. This desire to found a Jewish state in Palestine has long been a dream of world Jewry. It received organised expression in the formation of the Zionist Movement, which came into being long before the war, though it was the latter that gave a real impetus to the movement. It is common knowledge how in November, 1917, the late Lord Balfour wrote to Lord Rothschild to the effect that “His Majesty’s Government view with favour the establishment in Palestine of a National Home for the Jews.”

Behind this declaration is a striking little incident, not generally known, but nevertheless authentic.

Shortly after the war broke out, the Government found itself short of a certain mineral which was necessary in the manufacture of high explosives. At this stage Dr. Chaim Weizmann, a Russian Jew who had resided in England for about twenty-five years, came upon the scene. He was a lecturer on chemistry at the Manchester University and had discovered a chemical substitute for this mineral, which he offered to the Government. He was asked by Mr. Lloyd George, then Minister of Munitions, his price. He replied that he desired no money, but asked for a promise that Britain’s power and influence would be used to free the Promised Land from the oppressor and secure it for Jewish occupation.

Dr. Weizmann is President of the Zionist Organisation, which is a kind of world parliament, representing the whole of Jewry, and is conducted on democratic lines with a duly elected President and Council which form the executive.

It has over a million members scattered all over the globe. Any Jew may become a member on taking up a shekel, which is the symbol of adherence to the Zionist programme. The shekel is issued annually, and before the war its price was one shilling everywhere, but, owing to differences of exchange, its price is not universal in these days. In Great Britain, it is now two shillings.

Every holder of a shekel is entitled to vote for delegates to the Zionist Congress, which is the supreme authority of the Zionist Organisation. The Congress meets every two years and it has just held its nineteenth session in Lucerne.

Closely affiliated to the Zionist Organisation are various other institutions, such as the Jewish Agency, whose business it is to control immigration, the Jewish National Fund, which attends to the purchase of the land, and so on. The Zionist Organisation, in fact, is made up of over fifty different federations, while, in addition, there are separate unions dealing with specific activities, such as labour, etc.

After the War, thousands of Jews from all parts of the world flocked to Palestine, built for themselves homes in the new land, and founded industries and agricultural settlements. But the trouble with Hitler in Germany and the Persecution of the Jews in Eastern Europe have been the main causes of the satisfactory position in which the Jew finds himself in the land of his forefathers. These have resulted in the settling of many thousands of Jews in the country, and the diversion to the land of many millions of pounds sterling in Jewish capital which would never otherwise have left Europe.

Among the great batch of German immigrants there were Jews of marked ability and distinction in the commercial and business world, noted educationalists, doctors, surgeons, dentists, as well as lawyers and men of letters. These men to-day, because of their superior knowledge and ability are playing a very important part in the creation of what will eventually prove to be an influential and powerful Jewish commonwealth.

He is Able to Keep.

“O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called. . For I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that day . . . That good thing which was committed unto thee keep by the holy spirit which dwelleth in us.”-1 Tim. 6:20; 2 Tim. 1 12-14.

IN these verses we have brought to our minds two aspects of the Christian life. The one is in what we must commit to the Lord; the other is what the Lord has committed unto us.

It is an important thing that we properly distinguish between things that are our responsibilities and things that are not. Perhaps there are as many mistakes made in dabbling or meddling in matters that are not our responsibility as there are in neglecting things that should occupy our best attentions. It seems very important, then, that we must exercise the spirit of a sound mind, so as to properly distinguish between things which God has committed to us and things which we ought to commit to God.

Sometimes even in our zeal for God and His cause we may be led to do things and speak of things which, while we thought to do good, have worked only mischief. We had thought we must do so, in order to save the cause, or progress the work. When too late we have learned the lesson that it is better to abide by Divine instruction, and in those matters that are out of our province to trust and know that the Lord is able, by one means or another, to preserve His cause, to guard His people. Nothing can hurt or hinder His purpose. There is nothing too hard for Him. (Jer. 32 :17; Luke 1 :37 ; Matt. 19 :26; Gen. 18 :14.) See also Isaiah 14 :27 and 46 :10, 11.

We need have no fear of the Lord neglecting to guard His own cause. He will guide and guard, His people, His elect ; none can by any means prevent the accomplishment of His purpose, His will. “All things shall work together for good to them that love God.”

What rest, what peace this happy assurance brings even in the dark days of calamity or distress, of grief, sorrow or pain. It is when faith is weak that fear takes hold and distress of mind leads to discouragement and “Doubting Castle.”

Sometimes there are great trials and testings in connection with our fellowship or our service in the Lord's vintage.

It is well that we always consider the circumstances and our own responsibilities. Sometimes friends have stepped into such matters and made things worse, when the spirit of a sound mind would have said, “No, it is not my responsibility, and ‘I fear to touch things that involve so much, my feeble hand might shake, Thine can make no mistake.’ “

We take the case of Uzzah neglecting the instructions concerning the Ark of the Lord. He thought to save it from falling by putting forth his hand and he was smitten dead. What a lesson to us all not to meddle with matters out of our province, but just trust and the Lord will take care of His own. There had been neglect on the part of the priests in not having the Ark carried in the proper manner, according to the instructions of the Lord by Moses. Had it been carried properly by the Kohathites the incident would not have occurred. Numbers 4.

How important it is, then, that we should understand and distinguish between the things that God has committed unto us and the things which we have committed unto Him, or must leave to Him.

First, it seems well that we consider what we have committed unto God, for unless we have come to Him and consecrated ourselves to Him, He will not commit to us privileges which belong only to His children. What is it that Paul had “committed unto Him against that day”? It does not take long to state this, for when we were brought nigh to God through the death of His Son, we realised that we were bought with a price—the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish”; therefore we were not our own.

It was at this stage that the invitation came to us, “My son, give me thine heart.” It was here that we heard the Lord’s words, “He that will be My disciple, let him take up his cross and follow Me.” It was here that we were invited to count the cost; were we willing to forgo the good things of this life, to tread the narrow way with its trials, persecutions, and disciplines—to be dead to the world and the flesh, and like our Master, say : “Thy will be done,” howe’er it cross mine own?

We saw with the Apostle (Rom. 12:1) that it was but our reasonable service and so we presented our bodies (ourselves) to the Lord as a willing sacrifice, made acceptable by the merit of our Lord’s death and perfect life which was a sweet incense unto God, ascending on our behalf.

So, then, we have committed our all to God, all our interests in this life—all we are and all for which we hope. That is a full surrender. Just as Jesus on the cross, sinking into death, committed His life unto God, and was fully persuaded that the Father would raise Him up out of death, which He did on the third day, so we commit ourselves and all our interests to the Heavenly Father’s care. According to our faith, or as to how fully we are persuaded (like Paul) that God is able to keep or guard it, until that day when we may awaken in the likeness of Christ, will be the rest and peace in the hard places of this life, when we do not just understand the why and wherefore of many things that are permitted. If we have trustful faith we will be able to rejoice in the thought that the Lord is doing His part in training, polishing and fitting us for the Kingdom, and so we will be able to rejoice even in tribulation. (Rom. :3.)

What a grand example of faith we have in Abraham. (Rom. 4:20, 21.) He had surely committed his way unto the Lord. Jesus, too, had committed His life unto the Father at Jordan and so fully did He trust to His good care and providence that perfect calm and peace were maintained under all circumstances. We are also assured that it is our privilege to claim the same Divine protection, for “the Father Himself loveth you,” and “If God be for us, who then can be against us?” With such confident faith, with such full submission to the Divine will, disappointments are accepted as His appointments and peace is maintained in our greatest griefs, sorrows and pains.

Sometimes we are disappointed when those we trusted and had laboured within the truth service and joined with in fellowship have turned away. Paul had such experiences like many of us. He writes pathetically to Timothy (2 Tim. 4:9, 10) : “Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me: For Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world.” Also 2 Tim. 4:16, “In. my first defence no one came to me, all forsook me.” Then, having done all we know how to regain such an one, we must not worry, or keep worrying him, but as the Apostle says, “After the first or second admonition, an heretic, or fractious person reject.” Leave him in the Lord’s hands.

“Commit thy ways unto the Lord, trust also in Him and He will bring it to pass.” There is no need to carry all the weight of responsibility, all the burdens of business or household affairs, of parental cares or the cares of the church when matters seem to go all wrong. We must take it to the Lord, seek wisdom and guidance, doing what we believe to be right and then “cast all your care upon the Lord for He careth for you.”

It is sometimes those who are nearest and dearest to us who give us most pain and anxiety and grief, and hearts might well be broken did we not have the place of refuge—did we not have faith in Him—to whom we have committed ourselves and all our homes and business and all our loved ones. But if we do “know in whom we have believed and are persuaded that He is able to keep—to guard—that which we have committed unto Him against that day,” we trustfully rest.

It is just when the hard times come, when we cannot see how to provide things honest, even the necessary things for our dependents, that faith can shine out the brightest. It is when our loved ones, our little ones, that have entwined themselves around a father’s or a mother’s heart, lie helpless and gradually sinking-away; when all has been done and there seems no hope and one’s heart seems desolate indeed ; it is then that our faith is tested. Do we really know Him, do we really fully trust Him—that He knows best, that it must be best—even to allow our loved one to be snatched from our grasp of love? If we do, if we have fully committed our all to Him, then faith will shine out in our peace amid sorrow, in our calm amidst storm, in the rest. of faith in the anguish of grief. Not that there will be no tears, not that there is less pain, not but that the love goes out to find its object flown and only memory to grasp, but there is peace, there is assurance, “We sorrow not as those who have no hope.” “The Lord gave, the Lord hath taken away” ; the Lord will restore to life in the glorious morning; “Blessed be the name of the Lord.” So there is the blessed rest in the Lord.

There are no circumstances, no conditions that can come to us but what, if we will just remember that we have committed all to the Lord, we may find peace and rest, for the Great Shepherd will guard His sheep. (See Psalm 1.21.)

It is sometimes so hard to be misunderstood and it is right that as far as possible we should try to explain and restore confidence. When we have done all that seems possible in that way, without avail, then we may remember our Example who was “despised and rejected of men”; so misunderstood as to be declared a blasphemer of the holy name He loved and crucified as a felon. “Who when He was reviled, reviled not again; when He suffered He threatened not, but committed Himself to Him who judgeth righteously.” (1 Peter 2 :23.)

The Christian way is a narrow way, a way of difficulty ; it is a way of testing, of trials, a way of faith. But it is a wonderful privilege to which we are invited, to come into Christ, to be baptised into His death—to suffer with Him—and then to live with Him, to reign and sit with Him in His throne, even as He overcame and sat down in His Father’s throne. So, then, we, know that great trials must be endured in order to perfect us in character and make us fit to partake of the inheritance of the saints in light. However, we have such good promises of grace and strength for our day, in every circumstance, with the assurance that nothing shall be permitted more- than we are able to bear. When anything seems so hard to bear let us remember that the Shepherd of Israel is ever ready, able and willing to deliver, or to sustain in every need. “Let them that suffer according to the will of God commit the keeping of their souls to Him in well doing as unto a faithful creator.” (1 Peter 4:19.)

If we come to such a position as Israel, with Pharaoh’s host behind and the sea before, let us trust and neither- murmur nor complain. We have committed ourselves unto the Lord—just trust. “Stand still and see the salvation of God.” (Exod. 14:13, 14.) “Having done all, stand.” (Eph. (3:13.)

What has God committed unto us? We may get mistaken ideas respecting our responsibilities. The great mistake of Christendom is that it was thought that God had committed to the Church the work of converting the world and to set up Christ’s Kingdom during this Gospel Age. The great Antichrist, the Romish Church, is the result of this false idea.

Some., to-day, assume a responsibility of declaring that the Gospel Age is ended, that the Kingdom of Christ is begun and millions now living will not die. This has been declared for nearly twenty years but the millions still go on dying.

But coming nearer home, there are those who conic to the knowledge of present truth who seem to appoint certain work or position to themselves and assume authority. Sometimes elders assume it to be their responsibility to rule over God’s heritage and usurp an authority above others. Also, sometimes, members in a Class will interfere with the work appointed to others. Then there is the possibility of meddling with other people’s affairs, of talking about others’ concerns. While we all have a responsibility towards other members in Christ, to comfort and encourage as we may be able—”Bear ye one another’s burdens and so fulfil the law of Christ”—we are not to criticise or judge one another. “Every man shall bear his. own burden”; we can only help as opportunity affords.

We have to “learn to be quiet” and to “mind our own business.” “For every one of us shall give account of himself to God.”

If we realise all that the Lord expects from us in the things He has committed to us, we shall realise, too, that it will take us all our time and strength, supplemented by the grace of the Lord, so that we may reach “the mark of the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.”

. What has the Lord committed to us as new creatures -in Christ? Of course every good and perfect gift comes clown from God, and should be received with thanksgiving by everyone and used to the glory of God. But God is now dealing only with those who come unto Him by faith in Christ. Even the first drawings of God, the ability to understand the message of truth, that by believing on the Lord Jesus Christ we might be saved, was something we had to act upon, and by so doing we came to be justified and at peace with God. Then a further opportunity was opened to us— that of Romans 12:1. By taking this step of consecration the Lord gave us the evidence of acceptance as a member in Christ—the holy spirit—the spirit of sonship into the heavenly family .

The Lord ‘has, then, committed to us the responsibility of sonship. We as His dear children must walk so as to honour our Father. That is a great responsibility—to let our light so shine that others may come to glorify our Father. Jude 20 and 21 says : “Beloved, building up yourselves on your most holy faith, keep yourselves in the love of God.” As God commits each item of truth to. us, we must use it before we have further truth entrusted to us step by step.

Having reached this privileged position of son-ship, having surrendered our hearts, wills, our all to the Lord, He, then, commits to us all these things which we surrendered to Him and would have us use everything as His, in His service, to His glory. Then let us remember, when questions arise as to our going anywhere, to consider whether the time can be spent in that way to God’s glory, or will it be going for our own pleasure and may be rather a hindrance than a help to our spiritual interest. The first and most important object is that which is God's will for us, even our sanctification.

Time is a talent committed to us, so we must try to "redeem the time for the days are evil." Our homes, our loved ones, we now love and serve as unto the Lord, as good stewards. While we loved these before, now we also love them because we committed them to the Lord, and we love them and serve them all the more, all the better. Even if they do not appreciate it, the Lord will, for thus we show our love to Him and desire to serve Him. So, also, in our business or service for employer—do all as unto the 'Lord. The true Christian, while not of the world, while having given up everything of selfish desire, yet will be the best master or servant, the best husband or wife, or parent, or son, or daughter.

Yes, all we have of time, our bodies, health, strength, friends and wealth, we gave up, but have received again at the Lord's hands to be used for Him. "I died, yet I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in' me,—For me to live is Christ." "Again, when it comes to using our money, the question must be : Would the Lord approve, will He think me a good steward if I purchase this Or that—can I use it, can I wear it to His glory? Would He approve of my spending for things that are vain, that do no good, let alone things that do positive injury either to self or others? We are not to judge one another in such matters; we are to judge ourselves. Some who profess Christ, and possibly even the majority of clergy, seem to think they can spend money that ought to be the Lord's in tobacco and many questionable worldly pleasures. The Lord is to be judge as to the use of our talents and the rewards will be according to faithful stewardship.

There are two parables of our Lord which illustrate and emphasise this matter—the "Pounds" and "Talents." In the first the Lord represents Himself as going to receive a kingdom and to return. He gave to His servants each a pound to use. This seems to represent something that comes to all Christians' alike and that may be justification, with the opportunity of putting it to the bankers and making some gain. That seems to be the one thing we all have in common at the beginning of our Christian course. We could not start without justification. So Paul says, "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God."

How many there are who go no further. They are like the man who tied the pound up in a napkin —made no use of it. So, at the finish, he finds the pound taken away from him. The only object of this justification by faith in this age is that we present our justified bodies a living sacrifice to God. There are many who receive this grace of God in vain.

A very important talent is the truth ; all true Christians are missionaries. "As the Father hath sent Me even so send I you." John 20 :21. (See also Matt. 28 :19, 20; margin.) That has been the privilege all down the age and those who most earnestly have obeyed the Lord have suffered for it. We have the privilege of present truth and this is a talent for which we must give account. What results are we going to be able to bring to the Lord? (1) The effect on ourselves— our own sanctification. (2) What effort have we put forth to sound the trumpet—the shout —of the Lord's presence, to give out the meat in due season, of things new and old out of the storehouse?

Another talent is membership in the Body of Christ; we have a responsibility to comfort and encourage—to edify each other. Some have talent in explaining truths, some of sympathy and helpfulness, and in conversation, but it may only be a talent of one's presence and smile, and the spirit of Christ. Do we count our talent of little consequence? Should we not feel that even the smallest service is something we can do for the Lord? Are we going to neglect this talent and allow just anything to come in and prevent our care for the Lord's cause and comfort of His members? Inasmuch as we do this or that to the Lord's little ones, we do it unto Him.

Where would we be if the Lord had been careless of our interests ; even if Paul had taken matters more comfortably ? No! We are not going to be carried to Paradise on flowery beds of ease. If we are to win the prize of the high calling it is going to be "Ne'er think the victory won, nor once at ease sit down, thine arduous task will not be done till thou hast gained thy crown.”

“Increase our faith, dear Lord,
For Thou alone can’st give
The faith that takes Thee at Thy word,
The faith by which we live.

“Increase our faith, so weak are we,
That we both may and must Commit our very faith to Thee,
Entrust to Thee our trust.”

God’s Glorious Temple.

“Ye are built up an Holy Temple,
A habitation of God through the Spirit.”
Of all the beautiful lessons
With which God’s Book is filled,
This one of wonderful sweetness
Hath most my being thrilled.

Oh! wonderful care of the Father,
Oh! wonderful love so free,
To know that the Maker of all things
Careth so much for me.
‘Tis said that the temple so stately
That crowned Moriah’s hill,
Was built without sound of hammer,
The toilers working so still.

Far off from the grand foundation,
Was all of the noise and strain
Of fitting one stone to another
From base to turrets fane.
And when all were brought together,
The stones of every size,
The columns so strong and graceful,
Each in its place to rise;

They formed so grand a temple,
As never before was seen,
So true in its great proportion,
So bright in its glittering sheen;
Yet there ‘is a greater temple,
And God is He who plans,
Now gathering His stones together
For His house not made with hands.

And each living stone will be there
Which evermore day by day,
He’s fitting for this great temple
Which will last forever and aye.
Our pains, temptations, and perils,
Our sufferings, sighs, and tears,
Are God’s chisels, tools and hammers,
Until the Master appears;
Let none shrink from the process,
Let none of the Lord’s complain,
But wait with a meek submission,
‘Twill not be long nor in vain.

Justification and Consecration.

THAT justification precedes consecration would appear very clear from Romans 5:1-2. We could not approach God as sinners in our own behalf. "No man cometh unto the Father but by Me." (John 14 :6.) It is because we are justified by faith that we become at peace with God, and having reached that step we find the way open into the grace in which we now stand, rejoicing in the hope of the glory of God.. That is, that on the basis of justification by faith we were able to accept the invitation to offer ourselves as living sacrifices to God.

It would seem, however, that this justification by faith was but intended as a temporary condition of being at peace with God until a decision should be arrived at in respect of consecration. A justification rather to friendship, at peace, but evidently the real merit of the Cross had not been applied until the consecration was made and we became "accepted in the beloved," a member of Christ's body.

We came into the Court condition with the opportunity of the laver—the washing of the water of the word—and the veil of consecration before us with its promise of spiritual blessings beyond. This seems to fit with the position to which our Lord referred, saying "count the cost." No one is even then compelled to make the sacrifice; they could still withdraw from the Court, having "received the grace of God in vain."

However, having once made our consecration of all our earthly hopes now and of restitution, of which the Cross gave us opportunity, then we could not take back the sacrifice. Having come to a knowledge of the truth, tasted of the heavenly gift and of the good things of the world to come, etc., we must either carry out our consecration or fall back into a second condemnation to death from which there would be no recovery, for Christ died but once and we have had our opportunity of life which is secured for every man.

So, then, while justification precedes consecration, it would seem that justification to life is not valid until the offering is made. We put our little all on the altar and Christ supplements it with His merit so that it may be acceptable to God—so makes it real.

Pilgrim Way Ended.

THOSE of our readers who have visited Adelaide during Convention and other seasons will doubtless remember Sister Hobbs who recently passed away after a comparatively short illness. Although well advanced in years our Sister had retained her mental faculties almost to the end.

Those who knew Sister Hobbs must surely have appreciated her many fine qualities of Christian character ; so gentle and kind and yet firm in holding fast to what she knew to be the truth of God's Word. We feel that we can indeed thank God for the memory of a life so full of loving thought for others. "She hath done what she could" was said of one who ministered to our Lord, and we think our Sister did what she could to show forth His praises to others.

It is a comfort to us to realise that as one after another the Lord's chosen ones are being gathered Home that soon the Church, the Bride, will be completed and then the blessings of the Kingdom will begin to flow to the whole world of mankind. "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven."

Change of Office Address.

Our brethren and readers generally will please note that the office of the Berean Biblical Institute is to be situated at a new address-19 Ermington Street, Kew, E.4, Melbourne, Victoria, Australia—on and after Monday, the 14th of this month (September) and all correspondence, etc., should be so addressed to reach us from that date. Arrangements will be made, also, to receive all mail matter still bearing our present address.

This new position in Melbourne for the work will be just as central as previously, and some further advantages for service are expected by making the change. Electric trams (Deepdene and Mont Albert) from Melbourne city pass Ermington Street, for the benefit of all desiring to visit the office. Also other electric trams and trains pass within walking distance.

Our telephone number will still be Hawthorn 6251, and this means of communication will be available at all hours. We just desire and seek the Lord's continued blessing and guidance on the work in His Name, on behalf of, and in cooperation with, the Lord's people everywhere.

The Birth of a Nation.

WHEN the War broke out there were some 55,000 Jews in Palestine. Apart from those engaged in trade, and toiling in the few- agricultural settlements that had been established, they were, for the most part, inclined to be fanatical and great sticklers for the law as laid down in the Talmud and other holy books. They observed the Jewish feasts and fasts, wailed at the Wailing Wall, and though fully believing in the restoration of the Jews to Palestine they seemed to think that it had to come about in some miraculous manner and not through political and financial means.

These Orthodox Jews, so picturesque a sight in the old city of Jerusalem in their long velvet cloaks and fur-trimmed hats, with curls on either side of the face in obedience to the law, "thou shalt not mar the comers of thy beard," were shocked at the tactics and daring of their more modern brethren from overseas, and even to-day they can hardly be proclaimed as ardent pro-Zionists.

One has only to note what the Jews have accomplished and their grip upon the land to realise that Jewry's dream of a Jewish state in Palestine is no make-believe affair. To-day there are just over 330,000 Jews in the country, about one-quarter Of the total population of the land. Last year the number of immigrants was 42,359; in 1933 it was 30,327. It is expected that the figures for 1935 will reach between fifty and sixty thousand, seeing that between January and June 30,474 immigrants entered the country. This is the highest number on record.

The great complaint of the Jews is that the country could absorb a much larger number of immigrants than is allowed to enter. By restricting immigration the Government is accused of holding up important developments. There is practically no unemployment in Palestine, and skilled labour is demanding and receiving a day, high wage for such a country.

Immigration into Palestine is subject to definite regulations. The -Jewish Agency submits every year to the Government a list, stating how many immigrants it can absorb. Here the Government believes in treading cautiously, with the result that often only a half, or even fewer, of the number stated are allowed to come in. But immigrants with £1000 capital can enter the country and settle there without obtaining the necessary permit. This also applies to professional men such as doctors and dentists, architects and lawyers, possessing a capital of £500, as well as to certain classes of mechanics possessing £250.

But it is not only the number of Jews in the country which is significant; it is the hold they have secured upon the land, and the influence they exert in the conduct of its affairs. Fifty years ago there were 4000 Jews in Jerusalem, out of a total population of 24,000. To-day the Holy City has a population of about 100,000, over 60,000 of whom are Jews. For the first time since the days of the Romans Jerusalem has become a Jewish city. Since the War no city in Bible lands has undergone such a transformation. To-day we have two Jerusalems: the old city within the walls, containing the Temple Area, the Via Dolorosa, the Church of the Holy Sepulchre and other sacred sites, which Pilgrims come to see—the Bible city, as it were—and Greater Jerusalem, which has sprung up outside the ancient ramparts. How the city- has grown will be evidenced when it is stated that it has spread nearly half-way to Bethlehem on the south, well on the way to Ain Karem, the birthplace of John the Baptist, on the west, and on the north to the foot of Mount Scopus, where stands the British War Cemetery. Only on the east has Jerusalem failed to expand, because the ground falls away in precipitous slopes into the Kedron Valley, making any extensions here impossible. Curiously enough this modern development of the Holy City follows closely the description of the rebuilding of Jerusalem as foretold by the Prophet Jeremiah.

Be that as it may, Jerusalem's old walls are now encircled by a score of attractive Jewish garden cities—

Talpioth, Rehavia, Romena, Mkor Haim, Kiriath Moshe, Monte-fibre, Beth Hakerem, Bait Vegan, Neve Jacob, to name but a few of them. Over a hundred miles of new streets have been added during the last twelve years or so, fine, spacious thoroughfares, many of them tree-lined, along which ply motor-buses and cars. With its attractive private residences and array of fine public and private buildings—churches, synagogues, hospitals, schools, colleges, hotels, restaurants and cinemas—Jerusalem has become a modern metropolis, possessing all the amenities of Western civilisation.

The initiative behind this development is mainly Jewish. In King George V. Avenue, close by the Rehavia Colony, stands the new Zionist Organisation Office, two wings of which are now completed and in occupation. When this great pile is finished it will prove a worthy home for the various organisations of the great Zionist Movement, the future Parliament House, as it were, of the Holy Land.

In the great boardroom can be seen the Golden Books, five in number, huge volumes elaborately bound in leather, with pictorial designs, containing the names of those who have contributed to the Zionist funds. The massive table and chairs are fashioned of eucalyptus wood, grow in the country. Hanging round the walls are portraits of famous Zionist leaders, including the late Lord Balfour. Under the latter is a heavy plate-glass with a quotation in Hebrew: "I will gather you into the midst of Jerusalem."—Ezekiel 22:19.

On Mount Scopus stands the Hebrew University, and it is significant that the first modern university to be founded in Palestine should be a Jewish institution, and that one of its principal tasks should be the revival of the ancient classical Hebrew as a living language. A more appropriate site for a Jewish seat of learning could scarcely be conceived. From the grounds one looks down upon the Temple Area, over the City of Jerusalem, and in the other direction over the Jordan Valley to the Mountains of Moab beyond. From the roof of the Library Building you can get a glimpse of Zelah, the home of Kish, the father of Saul, Israel's first king.

The ground was purchased by Dr. Weizmann when he went to Jerusalem in 1918 as head of the Zionist Commission. One of the foundation stones of the University was laid by Lord Allenby in 1918, whilst the British guns were still booming not many miles eastward. The University was officially opened by Lord Balfour in 1925. The buildings include an Institute of Chemistry and of Medical Research, an Institute of Mathematics, Einstein Institute of Physics, Institute of Science, a building for the Faculty of Humanities, an Assembly Hall and Library. The latter contains the largest collection of works dealing with Jewish literature and history ever gathered together in one place. At the time of writing they total over 300,000 volumes, and are being added to at the rate of 10,000 volumes a year.

One of the principal tasks of the University is the compilation of a Hebrew dictionary which will be acceptable to all Jews. This may appear to be a simple matter, but such is not the case. Many Jewish scholars have declared that it is an undertaking which could only be accomplished in Palestine by an officially recognised Jewish institution. Among the Jews there are many sects, and between them Hebrew has become a kind of jargon. The professors on Mount Scopus have undertaken to make Hebrew a living language which all Jews will be able to use and understand. It is a task which will occupy some time, for in addition to sorting out the roots of the various words already in use and deciding upon the right one, there are many thousands of new ones to be added, words and expressions which have crept into the world's vocabulary within recent years. Hebrew is one of the three official languages of the country, the other two being Arabic and English.

Scriptural Usage of the term Salvation.

HIGHER Critics and Evolutionists have much trouble in their endeavour to hide from the common people the fact that their theories are diametrically opposed to all the teachings of the Scriptures respecting human salvation. These latter-day philosophers do not like to be called “infidels,” “unbelievers,” but prefer to take their texts from the Bible in their endeavour to undermine faith. If Evolution theories were true the word “salvation” would be wholly inappropriate. If mankind have been climbing upward for six thousand years into perfect manhood, and if they are gradually to become angels by processes of evolution, then the word “salvation” is altogether out of place when applied to them. They should rather be let alone in their glorious upward progress. They would need no Saviour, or Redeemer; for according to this theory, mankind never was lost—never fell from perfection.

But the Bible proposition is the very reverse of the Evolution theory. The Scripture teaches that man was created perfect and holy, in the moral likeness of His Maker. It declares that when on trial to determine whether or not his life and favours might be continued to him everlastingly, Adam sinned and was sentenced to death. It tells that through Jesus God has made a provision for the recovery of mankind out of the sin and death condition into which he fell; that the work of Jesus primarily is that of the satisfaction of justice; that He died, the Just for the unjust, and that sinners are to be reconciled to God through the death of His Son. The Bible teaches that this redemptive process, this salvation of mankind from sin and death, has already begun in that Christ has already given His life a Ransom-price, and has been exalted and declared to be the Saviour, the Life-giver of the world.

But the world has not yet been saved. It lies in the Wicked One. Satan is still the “Prince of this world.” Sin and death reign. The world has only the Divine promise which was given to Abraham, but of which the majority of mankind do not even know. That promise, however, is sure—that eventually all the families of the earth shall be blessed by Messiah; and that to effect this salvation Messiah in due time will set up a glorious reign of righteousness, the Kingdom of God under the whole heavens. It shall rule; it shall conquer; it shall destroy sin, death and everything opposed to Divine righteousness and to the best interests of mankind. Thus eventually the knowledge of the Lord shall be made to fill the whole earth (Isaiah 11:9), and every knee shall bow and every tongue confess the Lord. (Isaiah 45:23.) Thus shall come the glorious opportunity for salvation through the knowledge of the Lord, and of His will. (Jer. 31:34.)

Those who desire to do God’s will shall be assisted by the Redeemer, thus to cultivate a righteous character. That assistance will include an uplifting out of, or saving from, sin and death and all the terrible associations of mental, moral and physical imperfection. That salvation will be to life, health and strength—mental, moral and physical. The earth also shall be saved—recovered from the Divine ‘sentence or “curse.” No longer will thorns and thistles cause sweat of face; but the earth shall yield her increase and be styled “The garden of the Lord.” (Zech. 8:12 ; Isa. 51:3.) “The earth is God’s footstool, which He will make glorious.” (Isa. 66:1.)

But that salvation of man and of his earthly home and future dominion is preceded by another phase, or kind, of salvation. Before dealing with the world God elects, calls, draws, instructs a saintly class. These by faith may now speak of themselves as saved, although their salvation will not really be accomplished until they share in the First Resurrection. Now they reckon themselves as passed from death unto life, as New Creatures, brethren of Christ, children of God. Into all this glorious condition the saintly ones will enter with their resurrection change, experiencing a transfer from human nature and conditions to spirit (heavenly) nature and conditions.

Thus eventually there will be two classes of saved ones—two classes saved out of the sin and death conditions which now prevail :

- (1) The Church changed from earthly to divine nature.—1 Cor. 15:51-54.
- (2) The willing and obedient of the world who, during the thousand years of Messiah's glorious reign, will be gradually changed not to a different nature but from the imperfection to the perfection of human nature.—Acts 3:20, 21.

Meantime all the wilfully wicked, disobedient or rebellious will be utterly destroyed in the "Second Death," "as natural brute beasts." (2 Pet. 2 :12.)

What the Church Sacrifices.

IN the Scriptures the word sacrifice is very properly used in two ways—first, to describe the surrender of our will in order to have God's will done in us; second, to indicate the work of our great High Priest, to whom we give up ourselves, and who makes that consecration acceptable to God. Primarily we sacrifice what we possess of the present earthly rights, privileges and opportunities; for this is what we possess. But, additionally, we give up something by faith. By faith we believe that God has made a provision that all mankind shall have the privilege of restitution to perfection during the Millennial Age; and by faith we forgo, or give up, our share of Restitution privileges. Thus our principal giving up is our surrender of what we have; and our secondary giving up is that which we have by faith in God's great Plan.

However, it is not necessary for one to have an appreciation of the coming restitution blessings in order to sacrifice these and thus present himself a living sacrifice, as the Apostle exhorts. (Rom. 12 :1.) A knowledge of Restitution . blessings is connected with a full knowledge of the Ransom. We can see that others in the past did not have this knowledge clearly. But since those who consecrate to the Lord give up everything that they have; this would include Restitution also. So, then, while the saints who lived before the Harvest period did not have this knowledge of Restitution, yet they made an acceptable sacrifice through faith in the Redeemer.

The terms offer, sacrifice, devote, etc., sometimes have different meanings. When, for instance, we read that the high priest offered the sacrifices and also that we offer our bodies living sacrifices, we would differentiate between these uses of the word offer and say that to devote for sacrifice is our part. This we do when we present our bodies. We can do no more than present them. This is shown in the type by the bringing of the two goats to the door of the Tabernacle and the tying of them there. In this sense we sacrifice—that is, we give up our own will and our own rights to everything. But the Heavenly Father does not deal with us in the sense of accepting a sacrifice from us, except through the Redeemer. As our great Advocate He stood ready to impute His merit to our offering; and as the High Priest, the representative of God, He sacrificed it. We had already presented our-elves; and our offering was completed when the High Priest accepted the sacrifice and began the killing of the antitypical goat. But this is a gradual work. In the type, the life was accepted instantly when the High Priest thrust the knife into the goat; but the sacrifice was not actually completed until the blood was taken into the Most Holy. And so in the antitype.

Our Work Not Completed at Consecration.

This work of sacrificing the Church our Lord is continually accomplishing in one way or another all through the Gospel Age. When we received the begetting of the holy spirit we 'became New Creatures. And this actual dying, and all the sufferings in the "narrow way," and our continuing to yield ourselves to the guidance of the Lord, are all parts of the work of sacrifice. When we sacrifice our will we should not entertain the thought : Now I have done my part, let the High Priest do the rest ! This is not the right thought. At any moment we may cease to will and thus cease to present ourselves; at any moment we may sit down and say, "We will take our ease." We must not do so ; but we are to continue to fill up the sufferings of Christ.

It is not all over when we consecrate. Then we gave up all of our rights and interests. It requires a great deal of grace to be (lead to the world and alive to God. This the Apostle represents when he says, "For the bodies of those beasts whose blood is brought into the Most Holy by the high priest, wherewith to make atonement for sin, are burned outside the camp." (Heb. 13 :11.) In one sense of the word that "goat" is dead. Our experiences represent the actual suffering and going outside the camp—all that happens to us while we are reckoned dead according to the flesh.

Songs in the Night.

ALTHOUGH the nightingale sings during the night-time, darkness is the time when most birds are silent and hidden away in their cosy nests. But we know that they will sing again in the morning, and we look forward to it. We know that at their convenience they will entertain us throughout the day, when not too busy with their domestic affairs. Speaking of an evening in Paradise the poet Milton wrote :- “Now came still evening on, and twilight grey Had in her sober livery all things clad.

Silence accompanied for beast and bird,
They to their grassy couch, these to their nests
Were slunk—all but the wakeful nightingale.”

The world's morning time now dawns, but it is not yet fully here. When it comes there will be songs of joy and gladness throughout the world. Regarding that period David wrote, “Sorrow may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning.” (Psa. 30:5). Again he said, “My soul waiteth for the Lord more than they that watch for the morning.” (Psa. 130 :6). Also the prophet Hosea said, “Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord ; His going forth is as the morning.” Solomon observes that the morning is the “time for the singing of birds.”—Cant. 2 :12.

Early Singers.

The world's night-time has been long and dreary, yet it has not been without its songs. Very early in the history of the human family the Lord found some to sing His praises. So beautiful and so acceptable was that early song of faith which Abel raised to God that his sacrifice was approved and he received immediate evidence of the blessing of the. Most High. Enoch also was one of the sweet singers of that early age. While the darkness of sin and death lay upon the land, back there over five thousand years before the breaking forth of the present morning light of the blessed Messianic age, he sang of the coming of the Lord with all His saints, to execute the works of righteousness and justice in the earth and to convince all the wicked of their ungodly deeds.

Evidently there always has been some of the divine plan and purpose revealed, sufficient to give assurance to all those who possessed that rare element of faith in God. When Jehovah pronounced the sentence of death on our first parents, He nevertheless gave a ray of, hope in the prophecy that “the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head.” That star of hope has shone throughout the darkest ages for those who have looked for it, impelling songs of joy. It is only when all hope is removed that one loses the power of song. God alone has held the world's hope in His own keeping, and has revealed it to His servants so that they might have courage and zeal to witness for Him, and that the power of their faith might give them joy and songs, even in this night-time of sin and death.

As we follow the course of God's dealing with His prophets, with the Jewish people, and with all His witnesses before the first coming of Christ, we find that song after song arose from true and loyal hearts. All these songs were based on the divine promises. David was a prophet, and he made reference to "an instrument of ten strings." This wonderful harp of harmony manifestly pictures the great divine plan of the ages. Just how much of that plan David knew, we are not fully informed ; but when he wrote such remarkable songs as Psalms 2, 37 and 72, he must have believed that a great Kingdom of righteousness would be inaugurated in God's due time, and that under that divine regime all corruption, injustice, oppression, and wickedness of every kind would be destroyed throughout the earth. In his mind's eye David must have seen the Lord in His coming great glory, when He takes unto Himself His mighty power and establishes His universal reign on this planet.

David's Songs Were Prophetic.

It is interesting to note to what extent the Psalmist's "songs in the night," as David so beautifully sang them, deal with the experiences of God's faithful people throughout the intervening centuries until now. For example, in Psalm 116 he says : "I love the Lord because He hath heard my voice and my supplication. Because He hath inclined His ear unto me, therefore will I call upon Him as long as I live. The sorrows of death compassed me, and the pains of hell (sheol) gat hold upon me; I found trouble and sorrow . . . The Lord preserveth the simple; I was brought low, and He helped me. Return unto thy rest, O my soul, for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee. For Thou hast delivered my soul from death, mine eyes from tears and my feet from falling. I will walk before the Lord in the land of the living . . . I will offer to Thee the sacrifice of thanksgiving, and will call upon the name of the Lord. I will pay my vows unto the Lord now in the presence of all His people. Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints."

Who is there among the Lord's people to-day who cannot appreciate the sentiments of this beautiful song of praise? Yet it is but one of the many "songs in the night" that God has had sung for our encouragement. And we, too, can join with the prophet in singing it from the heart. We all can realise that the Lord heard our voice and our supplication when we cried unto Him, and that He still harkens unto us in every time of need. The sorrows of death and the pains of sheol follow the course of humanity, for all men are condemned in Adam. But God has delivered us from a state of condemnation, and has placed our feet on salvation's mighty rock—Christ Jesus. Daily now we can say, "Return unto thy rest, O my soul; for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee." Verily, our rest is in Him ; and we know that outside of Him there is no certainty, no assurance, no peace, no comfort, no rest.

That 116th Psalm is a consecration song. The Christian knows that to be consecrated in heart and life, and to maintain that condition during each hour of the day, means to be in alignment with the great spiritual laws and forces of the Almighty. Such consecration means pureness of motive and intention. It means love of truth, because truth reveals the character of God. It means courage to stand for principle and to defend it with "the sword of the spirit, which is the Word of God." It means a discernment of the causes of gratitude, which are clearly manifest to us when we look for them. It means a constant searching of ways whereby to prove our love. It means holiness unto the Lord. It is a practical thing, a mighty thing, a thing that if established and maintained is bound to win for us the eternal blessing of God.

The Song of Sanctification.

When we speak of consecration we call attention more especially to our own side of the proposition of being a Christian. There is another term that suggests to our minds the part that God plays, and that is the word sanctification. In this connection Jesus prayed to His Father regarding His followers, and said, “Sanctify them through Thy Truth. Thy Word is truth.” The Apostle Paul said to his fellow Christians, “The very God of peace sanctify you wholly.” (1 Thes. 5 :23). And again he said, “That He (God) might sanctify and cleanse it (the Church), with the washing of water (truth) by the Word ; that He might present it to Himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing ; but that it should be holy and without blemish.” (Eph. 5 :26, 27). Of course, the Apostle says, “Sanctify the Lord God in your hearts.” (1 Pet. 3:15). But we must remember we cannot sanctify God in the sense of making Him holy, for He already is holy ; but only in the sense of fully recognising His holiness, and keeping it ever to the fore in our own thoughts.

Thus, during this night-time of humanity the Christian can sing the song of sanctification. That is, he sings of the part that God plays in the deliverance and salvation of His people. All things are of God. In the first place, He provided the plan of salvation, and He also has furnished the means whereby we can make progress in the straight and narrow way. The means He has provided cannot fail if faithfully used, for God is at the back of it, and working through it. Sanctification means a full dependence on God as the source of all grace and blessing. It keeps us in closest touch with Him who is engaged in “bringing many sons to glory.” “Lead me in Thy truth and teach me,” cries the earnest, devoted heart; “for Thou art the God of my salvation.”

The Song of Faith.

One of the sweetest theme songs in any age is the song of faith. And this song has its sweetest note when the dark clouds of sorrow gather about us, and when earthly sources of comfort and help seem far away. A poor widow, arrested for vagrancy, was asked by the judge if she had means of income. She replied, “Yes, I have my two hands, my health, and above all, I have my God.” The poorest Christian, rich in faith, is never down and, out.

This attitude of faith, that can say, “I have God,” no matter what the circumstances may be, is in itself one of the mightiest of sermons and finest of songs. Christians of strong faith give far more than they ever receive from the world and, living on a higher plane than the rest of mankind, they can appraise the events of life with an eye to the prophecies which show them the eventuality of all earthly affairs. Furthermore, a life daily lived in the power of faith is an uplifting force even when it meets with opposition from workers of iniquity.

To assist us in cultivating faith the Apostle Paul wrote the 11th chapter of Hebrews, wherein he, recounts the valiant deeds wrought by many of God’s ancient worthy ones fighting “the good fight of faith” through the long centuries of the past. He says that these all died in faith, not having received the promises; but were persuaded of them, and embraced them by faith, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims in the world. Because of their faith they will obtain a “better resurrection” than the rest of mankind. The assurances of God were everything to them, and by embracing the divine promises of restoration they remained strongly entrenched in their citadel of faith.

The Song of Love.

The most comprehensive song, and manifestly the most helpful one that God has given us to sing during this present night-time, is the song of love. This is a song that gathers into itself all the finest qualities of the Christian life. The Apostle tells us that such things as faith, hope, meekness, endurance, unselfishness, etc., all belong to the great “love” family. He says, “Love is not provoked to anger .. thinketh no evil .. rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth ... beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Love never faileth.” To learn to adequately sing the song of love is worthy of one’s utmost endeavour, for it is the highest accomplishment to which one can attain while tabernacling in the flesh. A Bible commentator, speaking of love, has aptly said :

“Love is not, like justice, an exact principle to be measured and weighed. It is three-fold in its character : it is pitiful; it is sympathetic, in the sense of kinship of soul — affectionate; it is reverential. These different forms of love are exercised according to the object upon which love is centered. Pity-love is the lowest form of love; it takes cognisance of even the vile and degraded, and is active in measures of relief. Sympathetic love rises higher, and proffers fellowship, comradeship. But the reverential love rises above all these, and delights in the contemplation of the good, the pure and the beautiful. In this latter form we may indeed love God supremely, as the impersonation of all that is truly worthy of admiration and reverence; and will love our fellowmen in proportion as they bear His likeness. The divine law commands love, both to God and to man.”

How perfectly Jesus knew the great song of love! How fully He had known it up in the heavenly state before He ever came to earth ! Of Him it was said that “having loved His own that were with Him in the world, He loved them unto the end.” He Himself said, “The Son of man is not come to destroy men’s lives, but to save them.” We are told that He “had compassion on the multitude.” He wept at the grave of Lazarus. He felt sadness for the poor groaning creation. There was no place for bitterness or unkindness in His great and generous heart. His life moved on in tune with the harmonies of heaven. He knew the divine love song from beginning to end. In singing that song He made no discords. And He has set forth the music of that song as no one else has ever rendered it from the creation of the world.

A Song That Few Can Sing.

And how wonderfully well John the Apostle learned this same song of love! He also suggests that our singing of this song is the criterion of our standing with God, saying that “we know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren.” He says also, “He that loveth not his brother, whom he hath seen, how can he love God, whom he hath not seen?” “Beloved, let us love one another, for love is of God; and everyone that loveth is begotten of God, and knoweth God.” “God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him.” “He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him.”-1 John 3:14; 4:20; 4 :7; 2 :10.

Ah, yes, here is the grandest of all the songs of the night—the song of love. As the realisation of divine love becomes sweeter as the days go by, so this love song assumes a fuller and richer tone. In the 14th chapter of Revelation the church class is pictured as standing on Mount Zion singing the song of divine love, to the accompaniment of the harps of God. “And no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth.” How strange that so few could learn a song like this !

In the fable of the nightingale it is said that he did not wish to be equalled by the other birds, so he determined to sing at night-time when the rest of the feathered choir would be in their nests and would not be able to get near him to learn his song. The Christian learns the song of love more perfectly as he keeps close to God, in the spirit of prayer and praise, and by daily contact with His Word. And how wonderful it is to realise that an important part of the great plan of the eternal God of the universe is being accomplished in us. We should pray that there be no short-circuiting of the spirit of divine grace and truth, but that under every circumstance God's will may be done in our hearts and minds without any mental resistance on our part. Then we shall be able to sing as do all those who have caught higher visions than the things of this world. Our whole life then will be a song, even as the life of Jesus was a song, and as also the lives of all the faithful disciples of the Master have been songs for the past nineteen hundred years.

The Divine Plan as an Oratorio.

An oratorio is a musical composition of many parts, all blended together into the main theme chosen by the composer. Handel's "Messiah" is a composition of this kind. Such a masterpiece invariably reminds us of the Divine Plan of the Ages. Here indeed are various parts — creation, the divine promise of restoration, the birth of Jesus, the ransom, the resurrection of Christ, the call of the church, the future exaltation of the church, and the ultimate blessing of all mankind. Was there ever anything so wonderful as this? Can we sing it?

Where are those harps of ours? If for any reason we have laid them aside, let us get them out and tune them up. They were not intended for disuse. As we endeavour to give to others some benefit from the lay of love and faith and hope which we sing, our own hearts will rejoice with exceeding great joy, and we'll have assurance that God is using us for some great purpose of His own. "What though my joy and comfort die,

The Lord my Saviour liveth;
What though the darkness gather round,
Songs in the night He giveth.
No storm can shake my inmost calm,
While to that refuge clinging;
Since Christ is Lord of heaven and earth,
How can I keep from singing

How, indeed? We have assurance that our King will soon declare Himself, and that ere long to cause every knee to bow and every tongue confess." We behold the old order dissolving before our eyes, and men are at their wits' end to know what to do to solve the momentous problems that now face the world. We know that we now have but a brief witness to give, and then we'll hear the call to "come up higher." Truly the great song of redemption and divine love and grace was never so sweet and precious to us as at the present time.

Who wants to sing the songs of God, especially the song of His great plan of salvation and deliverance? Let us get closer together in the relationship of love. Let us blend our hearts and voices in the music that God has so carefully written for us.

Let us keep singing on and on into the Kingdom.

And when we get there we'll still keep on singing, "in a nobler, sweeter strain," through the ages of the ages, this great love song of gratitude and praise to the beneficent Father of all mercies, the Author of all truth and the Dispenser of all love.

—From "The Dawn."

Communion.

“Begin the day with God;
Kneel down to Him in prayer;
Lift up thy heart to Him above,
And seek His love to share.

“Open the Book of God
And read a portion there,
That it may hallow all thy thoughts,
And sweeten all thy care.

“Go through the day with God,
Whate’er thy work may be;
Where’er thou art—at home, abroad,
He is still near to thee.

“Lie down at night with God,
Who gives His servants sleep;
And when thou treads’t the vale of death,
He will thee guard and keep.” —Selected.

Europe's Big Crisis.

"Waiting for War," says American.

EUROPE is face to face with the most serious crisis in its history—a catastrophe which only a miracle can avert," says Mr. Arthur Brisbane, internationally-known journalist, who returned recently to New York from a tour of Europe.

"In prize fights unimportant preliminaries precede the main event, in which a black man knocks out a white one or a German knocks out a coloured brother," he said. "Europe is waiting for the main event—the next world war."

"It has been watching the preliminaries—the knock-out of Haile Selassie by Mussolini in a few rounds, and the savage and bloody civil war in Spain, which still rages.

"The newspapers will have told you that the hideous Spanish conflict is based on political and religious hatreds. The rebellion is a protest against the establishment of a Red Government along Russian lines.

"Statesmen and newspapers in European countries, regardless of their sympathies with either side, urge their Governments to stand aloof, avoiding the possibility of making a new enemy if the other side should win.

"The present Radical French Government's sympathies are with Spain's Government. France does not want an active Fascist enemy beyond the Pyrenees and fronting on the Mediterranean.

"The ultra-Radical French newspaper 'L'Humanite' declares that Mussolini and Hitler have furnished 22 fighting planes to the Spanish insurgents. Both dictators doubtless pray for victory for the rebels and Dictator Franco, if they ever pray. But they, too, want no enemy. Europe is waiting for the main event.

"So it goes on in far off China, which, like some huge afflicted dragon biting at its own coils, endures a permanent condition of civil war, complicated by famine and flood.

"There South fights North, while quiet, thoughtful little Japan bites out choice pieces here and there.

"The new situation in European politics shows the united air fleets of Russia and France theoretically opposed to those of Germany and Italy, with England isolated.

"The aeroplane presents a difficult complication with the heart of the British Empire—the Royal palaces, West End shopping district, hotels, Houses of Parliament, Bank of England and the Stock Exchange—crowded into a few acres and Six million Londoners packed together waiting to be bombed and gassed.

"In the next war the nation that drops the first bombs —explosive and gas—on the capital city, will probably win, at least temporarily. In the long run, fortunately, the highest intelligence will be found, not in any single dictator or personality, but in the intelligent will-power of the nation attacked."—Melbourne "Herald."

The above summary of the present world outlook by Mr. A. Brisbane is just one of many such predictions respecting a fast-approaching catastrophe that threatens to consume the boasted civilisation of modern times. These statements are coming from thinking men the world over, though how few seem to look in the right direction to discern the cause of such a dreadful upheaval, and so they are at a loss to know of the gracious remedy that the Lord of the Universe has in store for the poor, groaning creation.

When we find that over nineteen hundred years ago our Lord foretold the very conditions existing to-day—"Upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity ; men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth" (Luke 21:25, 26)—and that the Scriptures assure us that eventually the whole creation "shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God" (Rom. 8:21), the wonder is, that the understanding of God's Word, as the Divine revelation to man, is so little sought after.

How dark and gloomy indeed is the outlook in world affairs apart from "the more sure word of prophecy," which the Apostle exhorts "whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place." (2 Pet. 1:19). But what relief comes with a clear understanding of the purposes of God. While "darkness covers the earth and gross darkness the people," on account of man's disobedience and fall into sin, yet, after the exaltation of the complete Body of Christ, and the subsequent passing away of the present order of unrighteousness in the great time of trouble that looms ahead, a better and grander day is promised wherein "all the families of the earth shall be blessed."

The Lord in His wisdom has seen well to permit the present reign of sin and death to continue over the ages, because in no other way could all mankind be so well impressed with the results of disobedience than by a personal experience in its fruits. Having had their teeth set on edge by the "sour grape," the lesson will be a lasting one with the majority, and so when the Lord's Kingdom is established in the earth it will surely be "the desire of 'all nations.'"

How thankful, then, we are to know that though the present distress and troubles must later become intensified throughout the whole world, and be the means of bringing all humanity to their knees before the Lord of Hosts, that the rich blessings to follow will much more than compensate when "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

The Lord's people, surely, may well rejoice at every evidence of the near approach of the Kingdom, at the same time giving earnest heed to the words of our Lord—"Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man." (Luke 21:36).

The Birth of a Nation.

THE wonder city of Palestine is Tel-Aviv, lying to the north of Jaffa. It is a startling example of what Jewish initiative is capable of accomplishing. Upon what was nothing more than sand dunes a quarter of a century ago there has arisen a go-ahead and modern metropolis with a population of just over 130,000, all Jews. What is more, it is still rapidly expanding. It is not only the largest city in Palestine, but an important economic and distributing centre for the Middle East.

The story of Tel-Aviv is a wonderful romance. In 1908, the heads of sixty Jewish families in Jaffa decided to form a little residential settlement of their own. They were led to do this because of the lack of suitable accommodation in Jaffa, while they were also anxious to live their lives in their own way. So they went out to the sand dunes to the north of the town and there erected sixty little cottages, and called the place Tel-Aviv, meaning "The Hill of Spring" after a Hebrew settlement on the Euphrates during the Captivity. When the War broke out, the settlement had grown to 139 houses, with a population of 1416. Then it was closed down, the houses sealed up and the place evacuated, to come to life again at the close of hostilities.

Since then, its growth has been phenomenal. It is today a prosperous and flourishing city of spacious boulevards, fine public buildings, stores, shops, restaurants, cafes, cinemas, theatres, synagogues, schools and colleges. It has its own electric power plant, railway station, police force, and a municipal council elected by popular vote, with an annual budget of £400,000.

As you stroll about its streets and note the general air of prosperity everywhere, you are quickly aware that it has a personality and atmosphere of its own. It is not Oriental, being far too modern and new for that. Neither is it entirely Occidental, nor even a mixture of the two. Yet you sense there is something about the city and its people that singles it out as different from all others. Then you discover the reason. It honours and favours one race, though it despises none. Written all over the city is Hebrew. All notices and signs are in this language, and you hear Hebrew spoken on all sides. Not that English and Arabic are not used, for they are. In fact, at Tel-Aviv you can hear almost any European tongue but the dress, manner and bearing of the people bespeak their race, and they do not hesitate to emphasise it.

When you reach the shore with its casino and fine stretch of sands, and note the facilities for bathing, the rows and rows of deck-chairs and refreshment kiosks, you begin to understand how Tel-Aviv has developed into a pleasure resort. It has become the Riviera of the Near East. At night the municipal band plays in the casino, and restaurants and cafes along the front are crowded. In the town are modern cinemas, with the latest talkies, an opera house, two large theatres, a stadium and gymnasium, a museum, and an art gallery.

The great surprise about Tel-Aviv, perhaps, is the discovery that it is the home of over four hundred factories, large and small, all of them to-day in a flourishing condition. With its lack of raw material and cheap power, Palestine was never regarded as anything but an agricultural country. The Jew has shown that such a view needs modification. Not only are the factories of Tel-Aviv catering for local consumption, but the larger concerns are exporting to neighbouring countries and elsewhere such products as textile goods, boots and shoes, false teeth, wireless sets, engineering products, chocolate, sweets, cigarettes made from native-grown tobacco, preserved foods and a host of other articles and commodities.

The city now boasts its own permanent International Exhibition, covering 100,000 square metres of ground, with buildings specially designed for exhibition purposes. Then, Tel-Aviv is the home of several large publishing houses which now supply Hebrew readers at home and abroad with their literature, both original and translated. There are two Hebrew daily newspapers and several weekly and monthly journals.

The Jews' success in the ordinary realm of farming has astonished many people. It used to be said that you could never make a farmer of a Jew. But the Jew has proved a very successful farmer in Palestine, easily beating his Arab neighbour by his more up-to-date methods, and business acumen.

The Arab still ploughs with a primitive wooden instrument, fitted with an iron shoe, and drawn over the ground by an ox or mule. He cuts his corn by hand, by means of a sickle, and it is carried to the threshing-floor, where the grain is laboriously trodden out by oxen, the chaff and straw being separated from the grain by winnowing—a method which is undoubtedly picturesque, and a reminder of that followed in Bible days.

The Jewish farmer, on the other hand, resorts to the latest mechanical devices. The soil is turned over by petrol-driven tractors, and the harvesting and threshing are done by a mechanically-operated machine, which cuts, threshes, and sacks the grain in one continuous operation.

There are now some 120 Jewish agricultural settlements scattered about the country. They vary considerably in size, and also in population; ranging from 800 to 1500 acres in area, and from a score or so of settlers, to as many as 700 or 800. They are in every sense of the term model institutions of their kind. Some of the colonies devote themselves to mixed farming, others to dairy farming, others again to raising cereals, citrus fruits, or other products. Much depends upon the soil, situation, the kind of produce it is proposed to cultivate, and the type of settler.

In some colonies the farms are individually owned, and run much as farms are in this country. The settler either buys his farm or is assisted in its purchase by one of the Jewish financial agencies, such as the Keren Hayesod. Then some settlements are split up into small holdings, where each farm is managed by the settler and his family, and is held on a hereditary lease. Then there are what are termed the communal settlements, where the whole estate is worked and developed in common. Every member has equal rights, "each giving according to his capacity and receiving according to his needs." All income and expenses are pooled, and members use a common dining-room.

Many of these modern farm villages stand on what was, a few years ago, swamp land. Take the colony of Nahalal, in the Plain of Esdraelon as an example. It was founded in 1922, covers about 2000 acres, and has a population of some 600 souls. The greater portion of the land on which it stands was swamp, the breeding-ground of mosquitoes. One section of the swamp was known to the Arabs as "ain sommune," which means "poisoned well," and it was said that anyone who drank its water died of malaria. Not only were the swamps drained, and the mosquitoes got rid of, but the water was purified, and is now looked upon as the best drinking-water in Esdraelon. Furthermore, the water which was running to waste here is now used for irrigating the fields and orchards.

The Jews now own about 178,000 acres of agricultural land, upon which some 48,000 Jews are engaged. The greater majority of these settlements were founded since the War, and are today self-supporting. In addition to meeting their own food and forage requirements, the settlements sold on the market last year, through their cooperative sales organisation, milk and dairy produce to the value of 1130,000; various fruits, £22,000; and vegetables and honey and other produce, 125,000.

The Jews have certainly demonstrated the agricultural possibilities of this sacred land. Success has resulted from long, hard, patient toil, backed by practical and scientific help. There is a Jewish Agricultural Station, with several experimental fields in various parts of the country. The Station has devoted its energies to such important items as cereal growing, cultivation of fodder and vegetables, feeding of livestock, cross-breeding, improvement of cattle strains, efficient and rational utilisation of the soil, crop rotation, fertilisation and plant and animal disease.

Such, in brief, is the Jewish hold upon the sacred land of Palestine. During the past twelve years, the Jews have sunk over £40,000,000 in the country. They are spending something like £180,000 a year upon their schools and education, and another £160,000 a year on medical work. The Rothschild Hospital in Jerusalem is being converted into a recognised medical school. Eminent Jewish scientists from Germany are being invited to join its staff. Seven have been brought out within the last four months, making a total of twenty-one such refugees from Germany since 1933. I am aware, of course, that the Arab population does not look with favour upon this Jewish invasion. But the Jew is already there, he has dug himself firmly in, and nothing but a miracle could drive him out. Was it not the land of his ancestors? It was in Palestine that the Jews were welded into a nation, there that their racial characteristics were formed, there that their language, literature, religion, culture and customs were fashioned and fostered; there that their kings ruled, their prophets taught, their psalmists sang.

Palestine means everything to the Jews as a nation, and throughout the centuries of their dispersion they have remained indissolubly linked with it in hope, memory and ideals, their longing for a return and a restoration animating all their religious celebrations and enshrined in all their prayers. That age-old dream of world Jewry is now being fulfilled, and the historian of the future will record how it was hastened by Europe's persecution of the despised race.

(Concluded.)

When Christ is King.

The Hope for Humanity.

MANY have thought that Christ is King of Earth to-day, and that He has been trying to gain control of His Kingdom through the activities of His people. People have been urged to “win the world for Christ,” and evangelists have taught that the more conversions that were made the more Christ’s Kingdom was extending, and that when all the world had become Christianised then Christ’s Kingdom would have come.

As we view the world in comparison with even fifty years ago, we have to confess that it is less Christian today than then. Not only is there a larger percentage of heathen and avowed agnostics and atheists, but we have to deplore the fact that there is less real earnestness among professing Christians. There are fewer real consecrated Christians understanding what it means to take up the cross and to follow Christ in the churches to-day than there were. We realise that if all the heathens of India, Africa, China and Japan were converted to the present condition of Christendom they would need still to be converted to be Christians, for there is probably more evil and wickedness in what are called the Christian nations than among the heathen.

In view of this condition of things, it should be evident to all who will consider the matter that if we were to wait for the coming Kingdom of Christ until the churches should “win the world for Christ,” we should wait in vain, for it would never come at all.

Yet all men have a hope of a better day coming, and socialists and others have a hope of establishing such a system of national economy that will mete out justice to all, and recognise that every man should have a good opportunity of providing for the necessities for himself and his family without so much worry and anxiety and sweat of face—that there must be less of class distinction and luxury and waste on the one side, and less of poverty and need on the other.

Leaders of such thought may not be Christians at all, yet no doubt it is with good purpose they think to bring in a better day. While some alleviation of those who have been oppressed has taken place, yet the results of their schemes only demonstrate that man by his own effort cannot establish an arrangement that will mete out justice to all and make the world a happy brotherhood. Even if that could be done, there is still the fact of calamities, sickness and death, which only the lifting of the Divine curse on account of sin can stop.

It is to the Bible that we must turn to learn of the sure hope for the poor “groaning creation.” Here we find a clear plan for ultimately releasing mankind from the death sentence and leading all the willing and obedient up the highway of holiness (Isaiah 35) back again to the perfection and happy condition enjoyed by our first parents prior to the fall.

We see that in God’s wisdom mankind was represented in Adam, on trial in Eden, and therefore all were condemned by that one man’s offence (Romans 5 :12-19), so that in due time, when all shall have tasted of the baneful results of that disobedience to Divine Law, they might be released from that penalty of death by one man’s righteousness and death (Heb. 2:9 ; 1 Tim. 2 :3-6).

In this way justice, which is the foundation of God’s throne, could be satisfied—life for life—so God provided a way that, while still being just, He might be the Justifier of him who believeth in Jesus (Romans 3 :23-26).

Nineteen hundred years ago the great sacrifice was made; Jesus “bore our sins on the tree” ; He bought us with His blood ; His flesh He gave for the life of the world, as “the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world.” “Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures.” Thus, “He is the propitiation for our sins (the Church’s sins) and not for ours only, but ‘for the sins of the whole world’” (1 John 2:2).

Without the cross of Christ there was no hope for humanity; death would simply have swept us all away. There would have been no resurrection and no hope beyond the tomb. Thus the mission of Christ at His first advent was to lay the foundation for His intended work at His second coming. The effect of the cross of Christ would have been no use to mankind generally without the work to be done at the second coming. To have released man from the condemnation to death, while so weak and erring through hereditary taint, would only have meant that he would soon have sinned again and so each would have personally incurred the second death penalty.

It is on this account that God has arranged to leave the world in the hands of His Son during the Kingdom Age of 1000 years, so that He may lead them step by step towards righteousness (Psalm 72; John 5:22-29; 1 Cor. 15:22-28).

As steps towards holiness and righteousness are taken there will be rewards of life and health and prosperity, while wickedness and disobedience will have corresponding punishments. This course is termed in John 5:29 a “resurrection (raising up again) by judgment.” (R.V.).

The seeming delay since the first advent has been on account of the Divine purpose to select the Church, the Body of Christ, or the Bride Class, to be “joint heirs” with Christ in the Kingdom, to - reign with Him, to bless all the families of the earth (Gal. 3:9, 16, 29).

Soon now the Gospel Age will close, its purpose being accomplished, and then “the kingdoms of this world will become the Kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ” (Rev. 11 :15).

Our Lord foretold, as did also the prophets, particularly Daniel 12 : ; Matt. 24 :21-22 ; Luke 17:20-30, that just such days as we see about us at this time should come at the end of this dispensation and precede the establishment of Christ’s Kingdom on earth.

How Christ Comes.

Many people expect our Lord to reappear in human form, but such is not in accord with the apostles’ teachings, for 1, John 3:2 informs us that we do not know what our Lord’s glorious body is like (since • His ascension) and we are to see Him “as He is.” When He came to earth as a babe, He changed from the spiritual body to the human “for the suffering, of death”; “made a little lower than the angels.” Jesus said, “My flesh (human nature) I give for the life of the world,” and again, “The World seeth Me -no more, but ye shall see Me because where I am shall ye be also” (that is the Church) (John 14 :19, 3). Paul said, “Though we have known Christ after the flesh, henceforth know. we Him (so) no more.” No one ever saw Jesus in human form after His ascension. Paul, in order that, as an apostle, he should be a witness of His resurrection, was granted a sight of Christ in His glorious spiritual body. (“There is a natural (human) body, and there is a spiritual body”).

Prior to His ascension Jesus appeared in different forms to His disciples in order to converse with them, but never after His ascension.

So now we do not look for Him to return circumvented by a human body, but in His glorious spirit body, “in the express image of the Father’s person,” “in all His glory and all the holy angels with Him.”

Thus He comes to dethrone Satan and all the wicked spirits that have been so long deluding mankind through witches, necromancers, medicine men, mediums of spiritism, and the oracles of paganism. Satan has been the prince of this world (age) and so selfishness, lust, strife, wickedness, superstition, and error have prevailed to ruin and deceive mankind.

What a relief it will be when Christ, instead of Satan, is King, when all the evil influences are restrained, when all inducements to sin are taken out of the way, when error and superstition are exposed and when evil and wickedness are quickly detected and justly punished.

Then, when the Kingdom is the Lord's and He is Governor among the nations will the people learn righteousness (Psalm 22:27, 28; Isaiah 26:9);

Instead of selfishness, ambition and greed, the spirit of the new King will prevail, the spirit of love and care for one another, a spirit of brotherhood among men. No more will false teachings deceive men, for when the fiery time of trouble is over, the high-minded, the proud and hard-hearted will have been humbled and melted, and the pure teachings of God's Word, showing His great and good purpose respecting mankind, will be made known and "all with one consent will turn to the Lord" (Zeph. 3 :8, 9).

The Ships.

One ship drives east and the other drives west,
With the self-same winds that blow,

'Tis the set of the sails, and not the gales,
Which determines the way they go.

Like the winds of the sea are the winds that blow,
As we journey along through life;

'Tis the set of the soul,
That decides the goal,

And not the storm and the strife.
"He bringeth them unto their desired haven."

The Binding of Satan

“And the God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly.”—Rom. 16:20.

IN this passage of Scripture in Matt. 12 we note at once the particular circumstances that -brought forth our Lord’s words respecting the binding of the strong man and the spoiling of his house.

Our Lord had performed one of His notable miracles in restoring the sight and speech of the blind and dumb man possessed with a devil—in other words, He broke the power of the demon and thus relieved the man of the afflictions. Undoubtedly this action of our Lord’s indicated the great power invested in Himself and expressed in verse 28 I.—”If by the spirit of God I cast out the demons, then has suddenly come among you the majesty of God.” (Diaglott).

We realise that the Lord used such occasions as these for special purposes. — in the first place to impress faith and confidence in those in the right heart condition at that time, that He was truly the Son of God, so that they may be drawn to Him and desire to follow whithersoever He may lead. Secondly, our Lord’s power exhibited in various ways, was intended as an illustration of His coming glory, when, in due time, He would not only cast out an occasional demon and restore to health one here and there of the multitudes of poor humanity, but would exercise His great power worldwide, restraining the prince of demons and all his evil associates, and restoring the human family to health, strength and eternal life.

As was so often the case during our Lord’s ministry, the Pharisees, who evidently loved darkness rather than light, and thus placed themselves in the hands of the prince of darkness, at once sought to discredit our Lord’s power in the eyes of the people by declaring as stated in verse 24. This brought forth our Lord’s reply in the following verses, which we believe were especially declared and recorded as a guide to God’s people living at the end of the age, even to-day--a time when “Satan would cast out Satan.” That is, the activities of the evil one would so change to endeavour to hold continued sway over the masses of mankind that they would be of an almost opposite nature on particular occasions to what they had been previously. Our Lord was surely refuting the argument of the Pharisees in a way that only He could do, and at the same time laying down a lasting warning for his followers throughout the Gospel Age.

It is not our purpose here to deal so much with the special activities of Satan as he would “cast out Satan” along the lines of Spiritism, Christian Science, faith healing, miracles of tongues, etc., as it is with the binding of the great adversary after all these efforts to evade the power of the greater One has failed. That Satan is to be bound, eventually, most Bible students are agreed, though at what particular time this is to take place, there is not agreement. Some hold that the Adversary is bound at the present time, while we maintain that all the Scriptural evidence favours the contrary view—that Satan is still very active, and will not be restrained, until, during the great time of trouble the present “heavens” pass away with a great noise and the “new heavens” take control fully and completely.

That our Lord had no intention of entering the strong man’s house and binding the strong man, either in His day or during the Gospel Age seems evident from His words on another occasion : “My kingdom is not of this world” (age), John 18 :36, indicating, we believe, with the Apostle, that “the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience,” would continue to hold sway until “the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat.”

Let us note from the Apostle Peter (2 Pet. 3), that the “heavens”—spiritual ruling powers—which shall pass away with a great noise, is the same as those existing in his day. He says, “the heavens which are now, by the same word (that is, by the Word of the Lord that confirmed the passing away of the former “heavens”) are kept in store, reserved unto fire.” If, then, we believe that Satan as the leader and his associates constituted the “heavens” in the Apostle’s (lay, what authority is there to suppose that the same. “heavens” or spiritual controlling powers would be without the great leader at the end of this Gospel Age? No, there is every indication emphasising the activity of Satan in these last days, rather than to the contrary.

Turning again to Matt. 12; verse 26, to our understanding, though disproving the accusation of the Pharisees at that time, does not intimate that this very state of affairs would never take place. Rather, the inference to be taken from these words of our Lord is, that should we detect “Satan casting out Satan,” then he is divided against himself, and his kingdom is tottering to its fall. And what do we find to-day as we even casually observe the numbers of mankind being attracted by various miracles and faith healings, etc. The Apostle Paul declared that there would be “false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ. And no marvel for Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light.” How strange that Satan should seek to be a bearer of light, but then it is not in the sense of leading to the true light, but rather to captivate the minds of the masses along the lines of deceptive light in which Satan is active. So, then, if we are able to determine such workings abroad in the earth to-day as never before, surely then we are not mistaken that these words of our Lord are having fulfilment in our very midst—“If Satan cast out Satan he is divided against himself.” But how could this be if Satan was already bound? Just as surely as Noah was present “in the days of Noah,” and our Lord is present “in the days of the Son of Man,” so also Satan must still be active, unrestrained, up to a certain limit, when “Satan casts out Satan.”

Further, how do we understand our Lord’s words in verse 20? Did our Lord mean that on his return as the Chief- Reaper of the harvest of this Gospel Age He would immediately bind Satan and spoil his goods, or his house? We do not think that is the correct meaning of His words. We remember in our Lord’s parable of the young nobleman, at his return (representing His own second coming) His first work is indicated as reckoning with His servants and nowhere do we find in the Scriptures the promise that Satan would be bound during the final testing of these servants as to their worthiness of entering into the Kingdom. So far from the harvest or closing period of the Gospel Age being made easier by the binding of Satan, we find that this period is described as being a perilous time, when “a thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand.” Our Lord declared of this same time, “There shall arise false Christs and false prophets and shall show great signs and wonders, insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect.” What, then, did the Lord mean when He referred to binding the strong man and spoiling his house? Let us consider the words of Paul in 2 Cor. 4:3, 4 :—”The god of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not.” One writer has stated that, the minds of men constitute the battle-ground between the holy spirit and the spirit of evil, therefore, if the god of this present evil world (Satan) has blinded the minds of the majority of mankind, would not these vast multitudes constitute his domain, his house, over whom he reigns? And when do we expect the Lord to free mankind, also some of the disobedient angels, from the power of this great opposer? Was it to be (luring this Gospel Age, or even in the harvest of the age? We remember the claims of some that their efforts are directed towards winning the world for Christ at the present time, but that is not found in the Scriptures as being the Lord’s design in the matter. We read concerning our Lord’s return :— “When the Son of Man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?” indicating that at our Lord’s second advent the world would be far from converted, being still under the dominion of “the god of this world.” However, we do read of a time when “Christ must reign till He hath put all enemies under His feet, the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death.” Just as death will be the last enemy to be put away at the end of the Millennial reign, so we believe that the great Adversary, who brought death into the world, will be bound at the beginning of that age. This seems to be the Apostle’s thought in our other text in Rom. 16:20 :—”The God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly”—under the feet of the Christ, crushing out all evil during that thousand years, by the hand of the Lord and His saints who are promised to reign with Him in liberating mankind from the sway of the evil one.

The Apostle, not knowing the length of the Gospel Age, was encouraging the Roman Christians to look forward by faith to the time when Satan would be bound and ultimately destroyed, just as he said on another occasion :—”The night is far spent, the day is at hand.” How much more may we appreciate this fact to-day, as we stand on the very brink of the change of dispensations? However, we must not run before the Lord, but exercise the spirit of a sound mind in endeavouring to determine from His Word the times and seasons for the various phases of the wonderful plan of salvation.

So, we realise that God has a due time for everything, and while it seems from our Lord’s words—”Now shall the prince of this world be cast out”—that at that time Satan’s fate was sealed, even as it is recorded in Hebrews that Christ “partook of flesh and blood that through death He might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil,” yet for another two thousand years—the whole of this Gospel Age—God saw well to permit Satan to continue to deceive all mankind, except the few who, by placing themselves in the Lord’s care, are able to resist successfully all the wiles of this evil one. What we wish to impress is the fact that God has been in no hurry to restrain Satan, because He sees some very good purpose is being served by the permission of evil, as a means of developing the members of the Body of Christ, as well as enabling the world to learn lasting lessons respecting the sinfulness of sin, so that when the “strong man” is bound, the majority will have no further desire to eat the “sour grape,” but by obedience may go on to everlasting life.

When we look around in our land and see all the distress and troubles that afflict the people and which are the result of the reign of the prince of this world, we can at once realise the necessity of spoiling or doing away with Satan’s goods, and this, when considering only a mere handful of people in comparison with the millions throughout the world. When we think of all the vast multitudes the world over, living in extreme darkness and superstition, the immensity of the task of ever getting the true light to shine into all hearts is presented to us. This task, surely, would be too much except that the Lord undertake it, but we know that as He has promised “to lighten every man that cometh into the world” (in due time) He will certainly perform it.

Nevertheless, we are not surprised to find in the Scriptures that one thousand years are set aside for the spoiling of all that Satan has done—in other words, for the rolling back of the curse, as recorded by the prophet Isaiah, which please note (Isa. 25:7, 8). What a wonderful transformation that will be, and what would be more reasonable than to expect that the great Adversary should be bound prior to the actual restoration work, as the old order passes away never to return, and the “new heavens” —Christ and His saints—take control and establish their reign of righteousness.; for “God hath appointed a day wherein He will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom He hath ordained.”

Let us note, then, that there is a great difference between Satan being bound for the thousand years’ reign of Christ, and his being actually bound in this harvest of the Gospel Age. The latter view would create many difficulties, apart from the lack of Scriptural support, for to conclude that Satan is now bound would be implying that Christ is now reigning instead of Satan, that the present evil world was ended, and Christ’s Kingdom established in the earth. We look around us and must say: ‘Not so, Christ is not yet Governor amongst the nations. Besides., the last members of the Church would be gathered home, the Marriage of the Lamb would have taken place, and we would behold the world being blessed at the hands of the exalted Zion. While we are longing, yea, yearning for the Kingdom, we cannot be deceived into thinking that it has yet come. We still pray, “Thy Kingdom Come, Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven,” in earnest expectation and hope that this. prayer will be answered in due time, when the last members of the Bride of Christ have made themselves ready, by the Lord’s grace, and entered into the joys of our Lord to participate in the great work of that Kingdom. We believe that all truly consecrated children of -God may continue to have every confidence in yet gaining the abundant entrance into the Kingdom, as they continue to give all diligence to make their calling and election sure.

We note the words of St. Paul in Gal. 1:4, where he speaks of the redemption that the Lord’s people have through the sacrifice, of Christ. We ask, was that promise of deliverance from this present evil world not for all the Lord’s people right down to the close of this age? Surely it was. Admitting, then, that we are still living in the time spoken of as. “this present evil world,’ inasmuch as all the Lord’s people have not yet been delivered, but “even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body,” how strange it would be to claim that “the god of this world” is bound prior to the close of this world or dispensation.

The same Apostle, in 2 Cor., declares of Satan—“We are not ignorant of his devices”—implying that the workings of the Adversary are mostly of a subtle nature. Again the faithful Apostle warns us in Ephesians 6 to “put on the whole armour of God that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil . . . against the rulers of the darkness of this world” (this present evil world).

When we examine our Lord’s great temptation in the wilderness (Matt. 4), when the devil tested Him so severely on the three main points, of using His heaven-given power to supply bread for food, of making a great demonstration by casting Himself down from a pinnacle of the temple, of avoiding the sacrifice even unto death by gaining authority over the kingdoms of the world if our Lord would fall down and worship Satan, and then compare the Apostle’s statement in Help. 4:5, it would seem clear that all members of the Body of Christ would need to resist successfully these special temptations to the end of the pilgrim way, as did our Lord. The verse in Hebrews says :—“For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin.” That is, as we are as New Creatures. Just as mentioned previously that the minds of mankind is the battle- ground between the holy spirit and the spirit of evil, so this is true respecting the new minds of the spirit-begotten children of God. This same principle was true of Satan himself, as we read in Isa. 14, concerning this Lucifer, son of the morning:—“Thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend in to heaven.” What wonder, then, that. this Adversary sought to control our Lord’s- mind, back there after Jordan, and has used the same means of endeavouring to control mankind and in which he has, up to the present, been largely successful, except in the case of the Lord’s people who have learned to resist the devil by the same power from on high as did our Lord. So, we realise that this side of the veil, all the Lord’s people will need to continually “be sober, be vigilant,” as the Apostle Peter says, “because your adversary the devil walketh about, seeking whom he may devour : whom resist, steadfast in the faith, knowing that the same afflictions are fully endured by your brethren in the world.” From our standpoint, looking back over the Gospel Age, the same afflictions have been fully endured by, the faithful saints, and their examples are surely of much encouragement to us, as we likewise seek to walk in the footsteps of our Master.

Let us, then, not under-estimate the powers of the great opposer, for just as his was the great master-mind behind the death of our Lord amidst all the ignominy and shame of the cross, so likewise similar experiences may yet come to us. We have truly covenanted to be dead with Christ, “if so be that we may live with Him,” and we have not yet resisted unto blood. No doubt Satan imagined he had gained the victory over our Lord by His death on the cross, but just as this was so wonderful and important a feature of the plan of redemption and a means whereby Christ was raised, even to the Father’s right hand, so the sacrificial death of His followers, by whatever experiences this is accomplished, is just the means of their entering into the heavenly Kingdom to live and reign with Christ. So, we realise that all the evil intentions of Satan will but work out the design of the great Master Builder, as He makes up His jewels — those of fine, developed characters, those that have been beheaded for the witness of Jesus and for the Word of God, rare and precious in the sight of the Lord. “Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints.”

How thankful we are, that, while the great opposer is not yet restrained, that the time is at hand when he shall be bound for 1000 years, being shut up, that he should deceive the nations no more. That will be the time of which Isaiah speaks, when describing the highway of holiness—”No lion shall be there nor any ravenous beast go up thereon”; and further, “for nothing shall hurt nor destroy in all the Lord’s holy kingdom.” And because there is no hope of Satan ever turning from his evil course, the Lord sees good that at the end of the Millennial age he be destroyed, also all other beings who still wilfully resist the goodness and mercy of God. “All the wicked will God destroy” -- they shall be as though they had not been—and not a stain of sin or evil will mar a perfect universe; all beings shall praise and worship the Lord in the spirit of holiness. In the meantime let us take comfort from the words of the Psalmist, and be encouraged to press on, fighting the good fight of faith, in the power and strength of the Lord. “He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. Surely He shall deliver thee from the snare of the fowler; because thou hast made the Lord even the Most High thy habitation, there shall no evil befall thee, for He shall give His angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways.”—Psa. 91:1, 3, 9-11.

Divine Love's Consummation.

Beholding heaven's starry blue,
I said, "Dear Lord, I will be true;
Thy will shall be my chief delight,
Clothe me in robe of spotless white."

As I His glorious realm behold,
He beckons me with crown of gold.

"Lord, this is all my heart's desire
That I may join the heavenly choir
And sing Thy praises evermore,
Whom angels worship and adore.
O guide me to my Father's home,
To sit with Thee upon Thy throne.

"My child wouldst thou this honor gain?
The way 'is narrow, full of pain,
For he, who shares the throne with me
Must pass through dark Gethsemane; ,
Must often suffer scorn and loss
With patience daily bear His cross

"Yea, gladly Lord, yet not alone,
Since Thou wilt not forsake
Thine own With open face
beholding Thee As in a glass,
O let me be Changed into glory like to Thine
Until I in Thine image shine."
Transcending joy! He speaks to bless
In tones of loving tenderness!

"As sweet incense thy prayers arise,
Thy God accepts thy sacrifice,
Though thou art in the furnace proved,
I'll ne'er forsake, nor cease to love,

"Though hard the way and tempest riven,
Meat in due season will be given;
Thy faith and courage thus sustained
Press forward till the goal is gained,
As temple stones both true and tried,
Thy Father loves and owns my Bride."

O love divine! Amazing grace!
I shall behold Him face to face,
Lean on thy well beloved's arm,
My heart, He'll keep thee from all harm,

Bow down in adoration sweet;
Be for the heavenly throng made meet.
"Thy Kingdom come, the earth to bless
With healing, truth, and righteousness,

'Till quick and dead sin-cleansed shall be,
Death swallowed up in victory;
And joyful anthems rend the skies—
The earth restored to paradise.

The Seven Times Seven Postulates.

A BOOK of the above title, written by Leo. Lorrett, and published in U.S.A., in 1932, has just recently come under our notice. One of our brethren has prepared a short review of this work which we think well to place before our readers as follows :—

“I have read the book ‘The Seven Times Seven Postulates.’ A postulate is described by the International School Dictionary as ‘a position claimed as well-known or self-evident,’ but I fear that many of the views expressed in this book and the positions claimed are far from being ‘well-known or self-evident’ ; indeed, some can easily be proved to be incorrect.

“It is repeatedly asserted that we are living in the 7th Millennium, and have been for 60 years, i.e., that it is 6060 years since the creation of man, up to 1932, when this book was written. The chronological table on which this estimate is based cannot be proved as correct. It seems clear that it has not been the Divine intention to provide us with a clear line of chronology ; had this been provided it could have been known just when the 7th Millennium would begin, and this would mean the beginning of the reign of Messiah.

“While this work assumes that we are 60 years into the 7th 1000-year period, it recognises the fact • that Christ’s Kingdom has not yet begun.

“While there is much in the book that is true and forms pleasant reading, there is so much that is pure imagination. The writer appears to have fallen into the ‘too common practice of general speculation which, when applied to divine prophecy, is too apt to give loose rein to wild theory and vague fancy. Those who fall into this dangerous habit generally develop into prophets (?) instead of prophetic students.’ (Divine Plan, p. 13).

“It is better to be content with such things as can be proved by the Word of God than to be wise above what is written.

“There is no Scripture to warrant the view that Christ and the saints who reign with Him will materialise and visit their friends on the earth or that they will be able to travel from Tauri or Alycone to earth in a second of time—’To go in a second from one galaxy to another, the distance of which we now calculate to be thousands of light years.’

“The writer also expects that the remaining members of the Church will be all caught away in a ‘rapture’ prior to the setting up of the Kingdom, and which in one sense seems to support the unscriptural teaching that the last members will not die, but be caught away bodily. Also the writer teaches that many on earth will never die, and this sounds like the expression given out about twenty years ago from U.S.A., that ‘millions now living will never die.’ The Scripture reads rather the other way, that the time of trouble will be so severe that if the days were not shortened, no flesh would see through it. There can be no doubt that some will pass through that time, but there is no definite promise that they will not die, for ‘death passed upon all men.’

“While, as has been stated, there is much that is good in the book, it is too imaginative, and we do well to dwell on those things which we know and of which we are assured. Imaginations may form pleasant reading, but they fail to sanctify or build up in faith and holiness; only truth as revealed in God’s Word can do this.”

Justification and Sacrifice.

SOME thoughts on the above subjects are also to hand from a Brother, who says :—"While appreciating 'Old Paths' references to Tabernacle and other appropriate ones in their literature, in studying 'Justification by Faith,' I find it necessary to differ on many statements therein. I have grouped my thoughts resulting from study, and find that these matters are expressed by Bro. Russell. in a much better way. We are grateful that Bro. Russell expressed them so plainly for our guidance."

The thoughts are as follow, and no doubt will be appreciated by all who understand and rejoice in the deep things of God's Word :—

"In considering the value of the merit of our Lord's sacrifice for the redemption of the world, and its relation to the sacrifice thus made possible by the church, the value (efficacy) of that merit should be clearly recognised.

"The merit in our Lord was that of the willing mind and obedient heart which was tested unto death, bringing forth the Divine appreciation of such perfect conduct during the period of His testing. By His obedience He demonstrated His loyalty to God, and was. rewarded with the highest award on the Divine plane. By keeping the law He earned the right to a perfect human life ; this He did not forfeit, but at the time of His death laid it down that He might receive it again. Just as we will away at the time of our death anything we may have possessed while living, in the same way Jesus, by fulfilling the needs of the law, reserved the right to give to Israel, and through them to the world, the privilege of perfect human life.

"In the Divine arrangement the value of laying down a life not worthy of death is at our Lord's disposal. The application of the benefit of Christ's sacrifice to the Household of Faith imputes to them earthly - rights restitution, human perfection-- _solely for the -opportunity this will give them-of receiving these blessings by faith and sacrificing them by faith, laying them down like our Lord. This •work of -faith- justification and faith-sacrifice has been under the control of our glorified High-Priest throughout the Gospel Age. The presentation ,matter is ours, the acceptance of the offering as a sacrifice is wholly the Lord's, the High-Priest's :work. Our justification is by the Father (Rom. 8: ;33). : Our sanctification is of God, by Jesus.

"The Church as a whole was accepted through its presentation at Pentecost; the evidence of its acceptance- was the impartation of the holy spirit. Our difficulty is-that, though willing, as imperfect beings, 'we have nothing to offer as a perfect sacrifice, so God's arrangement is that those having the sacrificing attitude of mind, may be dealt with by the Lord Jesus that He may, as their Advocate, impute to them His merit, and He gives what will suit His purposes best, an imputation of His merit for past sins, to, allow their sacrifice to pass the Divine propitiatory satisfactorily. Even then they cannot carry it out to completion unless He continues as their Advocate; thus they can go to Him with .-every blemish that is-unwillingly theirs and have _cleansing from all sin --through the merit of His Sacrifice. - - "By His death the Lord surrendered his earthly rights to seal the New Covenant, and by permitting justified believers to join with Him in His sufferings's,- He permits us to share as His body members in the Sealing, of, this New (Law) Covenant, thus Passing- -the merit of His sacrifice through the Church.

"Our Saviour guarantees to those who will faithfully lay down their lives in sacrifice that His merit will continue to be applied for all their unwilling imperfections.

"The blood (merit) which our Lord will apply on behalf of the world, as soon as the Church shall have finished her share in His sacrifice, will be His own blood) in the sense that He accepted or adopted. us as. His members, we losing our individuality in Abe transaction a bride does in becoming-. married."

Convention at Digby

THERE was a happy gathering of friends at - • • Dig-by on the last week-end of September. Digby is a small place in the S.W. district of -Victoria, and so out of the way that not many are able to visit the earnest little company rejoicing in the present truth there. However, great numbers are not necessary in order that seasons of refreshment in the presence of the Lord may be enjoyed; this was fully demonstrated and appreciated by every one present.

Five travelled in motor car from, Melbourne, covering well over .500 miles there and back, and had a happy time of fellowship during the days spent at Dig-by.

There were four Bible Studies-Psalm 15 ; 1 Pet. 5:5-0; E'ph. 4 :1-7; and Luke 10:1-13. These covered the Friday and Saturday sessions, and were very helpful and interesting. Probably the one ill Luke 10, seemed the most difficult, yet, when the parable was taken in its correct setting and seen to apply not to the Christian Church but to the Jewish nation when about to be "left desolate," or in other words, that Divine favour was to be withdrawn, the difficulties disappeared. It was noted that the parable is preceded by the parable of the Prodigal Son, which relates to the Scribes. and Pharisees and is followed by that of Dives and Lazarus, also relating to the changing dispensation, showing that Israel was to die to Divine favour and be in trouble, buried among the nations, while the godly from the Gentiles were received into Abraham's bosom (Divine favour). (Gal. 3:16, 29).

It was pointed out that parables that referred to the Christian Church usually began with such words as "The kingdom of heaven is likened unto," and that this is a guide in locating a parable to its proper period of application.

The last day (Sunday) was profitably spent considering five good questions in the afternoon. (1) Phil. 1:17, Have we each a similar responsibility? (2) Heb. 2. 15, Who are referred to? (3) Gal. 4:12, \\\-hat is the Apostles thought here? (4) How do we understand 2 Cor. 13:4? (5) How does the thought of the Sin-offering compare with that of the- hansom? The solutions, it seemed, were satisfactory to all. The concluding meeting was an address on Col. 1:22, 23, after which we sang "God be with you till we meet again," and prior to the Melbourne friends leaving next morning we joined in "Blest be the tic that binds our hearts in Christian love." The whole occasion was such as to be an encouragement to other small Classes to arrange, if possible, similar gatherings.

Christmas Convention.

The Melbourne Class wish to make known to all friends that the Annual Convention is to be held again this year over the Christmas season.

A hearty invitation is extended to all able to attend these gatherings. With the blessing of the Lord, as on past occasions, these gatherings are expected to be equally encouraging and refreshing.

As the programme is now in preparation it would be helpful to hear as soon as possible from all who expect to - attend. Accommodation can be arranged as required, and further information as to meeting rooms, etc., will appear in our next issue.

Breaking the Winds.

(Excerpt from "Christian World" by Dr.. James Black).

AT the near end of my little garden there is a gully that sends the cold north winds sweeping between the gable of my house and a high wall that separates my neighbour's place from mine. Try as I would, I found it almost impossible to grow anything worth while growing in this abandoned corner. The blasts of January, but even more so the chill winds of late Spring, simply mowed down any green shoots that were foolhardy enough to appear. So I planned what people call a "wind-break." I put up some good solid planks and nailed or tied them to even more solid poles. Now, I said, let the wild winds do their worst: I have saved my plants from the blasts of Boreas!

Had I? Not one little bit. In fact, my elaborate wooden wall only seemed to make things worse. For, as I discovered to my cost and sorrow, the cold icy winds swept hard against my barrier, then were deflected and driven upwards, only to fall with increased intensity and malice upon the poor plants on the other side.

I went with my tale of sorrows to an old gardener-. . . After I'd told him all I had done, he looked at me with a sort of droll pity. "Ach, you learned folk--there's an awfu' lot in this warld ye donna ken. Now what ye ought to do is just to knock down your fine big solid wall and stick up some thin dry branches or even a bit o' wire netting. One-inch mesh will do fine. You try that, sir, and see what happens."

I'm afraid I laughed at him, and certainly I doubted the value of his advice. If a solid protection like my "wooden wall" was of little or no good, of what possible use could pea-sticks or wire-netting be? However, in despair — not, let me frankly confess, because I was in any way convinced --I was driven to try the old man's suggestion.. I put up a thin trellis of criss-cross wood which seemed to me at the moment to be only a ludicrous protection. But I gladly eat dust, for the thing worked. I find that I can grow plants in the old desolate corner with more than passable success. My grand, solid wall failed ; the thin trellis does the trick.

Why? The reason, as I know, is this. My former solid wall only threw the, cold winds up, and then sent them swirling down on the top of my wretched plants. But the thin trellis breaks up the wind, jumbles it together, sends it back on itself, and so acts as a finer protection for the flowers than the solid bulwark. A hedge, for instance, that breaks the wind and yet lets it through in moderated fashion is a better protection than a thick wall.

You can apply this to anything you like, and you will find it true. What is the best way to protect and shield your children? Build a high strong wall around -them, as -so - many fond people do?- But that sort of thing can never save them from the driving winds of life. Discipline, sorrows, -.and trials, against which no human_device can ever elude them, are only deflected to be thrown down on their heads with greater force and devastation. It is far better acid saner to let the winds of Our common experience play around them: moderated only by such natural protection as love and common sense alike can- provide. Sheltered lives, are never really sheltered—. If we do manage to build a high wall of 'selfish exclusion around them, that generally does one of two things—it either softens them into flabbiness or leaves them a prey to the double swirl of the swooping blasts. Let the winds through, tempered by the natural hedge of love, care and wisdom. Give every good. natural protection — love, care, counsel, warning and brave advice. But don't be fool enough to think that walls of wood or walls of gold can save your beloved from the inescapable winds.

I saved my flowers by a modest trellis. Temper or break the winds, if you like. But let them through. Wooden walls bring their own special kind' of disaster.

The Gift of Cod.

“Freely ye have received—freely give.”
God’s understanding- love!
To Him we come

Misunderstood,- misjudged,
Motives impugned, and explanations spurned,
Love all aquiver with its deep-driven pain—

And lo! He soothes us with His understanding love Giving us credit for the best we are,
And what we strive to be.

Draws from the wound its bitter sting.
And with His loving confidence gives strength
To bravely bear,

Freely He gives us this groat love,
And we He bids to give it forth again as free,
To those we meet upon our daily path,

Giving each credit for the best he is,
And what he strives to be-
With-understanding love, give strength to bear,

And thus the burden of our brother share
Who gives another strength of soul will find
That he, himself, is not one whit behind.
So may we live!

Freely we have received love- -Freely give!

Melbourne.

Dear Sir,

I think it must be about time I renewed my sub. for "People's Paper," so I am sending postal note for 2/6. I enjoy the paper very much; the article on Palestine in the last three issues has been very interesting.

As there is a few shillings to my credit with you I would like you to send me the book "A Review of the Doctrines," and "The Plan of God in Brief." I received the book "Desolations of the Sanctuary" and am sorry to say it is only too true. Some of the articles in the "Tower" since that book was written have gone still further astray, but I suppose that is only a sign of the times.

With kind regards, I remain,

Yours faithfully, B.W.J.

September, 1936. Dear Friends,

I write to thank you very much for the two copies of the "Studies" you sent me. It is indeed a help to have the explanations of the present times, which can be plainly seen in the European situation of to-day. I am looking forward to the end, as I know that whatever happens in between, the kingdom is coming afterwards. When I read a newspaper now I read it with the knowledge of the present truth, and am not alarmed unduly.

Times are still very difficult, but the Lord still provides just sufficient to carry us on from one week to another.

I shall be very pleased to have the copy of "Foregleams of the Golden Age" later on. At present I am busy with "The Time is at Hand," which I find very interesting. The more I read and understand the more I understand what I have already studied.

Thanking you again, with Christian regards,

Yours in Christian Fellowship, B.A.

Dear Sirs,

I happened to pick up a piece of an old Adelaide “Chronicle” the other day and I saw your advertisement, of which I enclose the coupon. I would be very thankful to be enlightened on the subjects you name.

Would you please send me items Nos. 1 and 4 of the coupon? I would be very grateful if you could oblige. Yours faithfully,

Z.B.P.

South Australia,

12th October, 1936. Dear Sir,

The enclosed coupon I have taken from the Adelaide “Chronicle.” As I am deeply interested in the subject “Upon the earth distress of nations,” I shall be pleased if you will send some pamphlets on the subject.

Thanking you kindly,

Yours faithfully,

B.FA.

Will be for ever past;
Thy coming will disperse the gloom
And sunshine bring at last.

Duties of Daily Life.

LIFE is not entirely made up of great evils or heavy trials, but the perpetual recurrence of petty evils and small trials is the ordinary and appointed exercise of the Christian graces. To bear with the infirmities of others, their bad judgment, their perverse tempers—to endure neglect when we feel we deserve attention, and ingratitude where we expected thanks; to bear with the company of disagreeable people whom Providence has placed in our way, and whom He has provided on purpose for the trial of our virtue—these are the best exercises of patience and self-denial, and the better because not chosen by ourselves. To patiently bear with vexation in business, with disappointment in our expectations, with interruptions of our retirement, with folly, intrusions, disturbance—in short, with whatever opposes our will or contradicts our humour—appears to be more of the essence of self-denial than any little rigors or afflictions of our own imposing. These constant, inevitable, but inferior evils, properly improved, furnish a good moral discipline—.F.L.S.

Be Still.

How many have learned to hold still and wait upon Him? Some may be disappointed because their prayer was not answered immediately. They think the work should be done instantly. But this does not give occasion for us to become impatient, anxious or fretful. Only wait and see the salvation of the Lord. He is interested in His children; He is watching over us. His everlasting arms are beneath us. Neither can the enemy touch us unless He allows it. A refuge and a fortress is our God.

The Present Truth.

“Holdfast that which thou hast.” (Rev. 3 :11).

THE closing of the year is always a good time for considering progress and prospects, and to review conditions.

We are not concerned with things social, political or national, excepting as we can recognise in these connections the fulfilment of Prophecy. It requires no great power of discernment to those acquainted with the Scriptures to note how perfectly the present-day conditions fulfil what has been foretold by the Lord, His Apostles and the Prophets nearly and over 2000 years ago. We may say in the words of the historian Rollins, who viewed the fulfilment of Daniel’s prophecy in the events he was recording : “Can any reasonable man who makes use of his understanding ascribe such a prediction either to mere chance or to the conjectures of human prudence and sagacity? Can any light but that which proceeds from God Himself penetrate, in this manner, into the darkness of futurity and point out the events of it in so exact and circumstantial a manner?” In this connection we need only mention one or two passages as instances :—Daniel 12 :4; 2 Pet. 3 :2-4 ; 2 Tim. 3 :1-7; Luke 17 :26-30, etc. The state of the world to-day becomes more and more “as it was in the days of Lot” in Sodom, and “as it was in the days of Noah” before the flood, and there can be no doubt that a greater calamity on the human race is impending.

Our particular thought, however, is in connection with the present truth and the privileges, prospects and dangers which exist at this time.

There is quite prevalent a notion that it matters little what one believes, and that there should be no divisions on account of differences in faith. There are even those who have understood present truth, who underestimate the value of “the things we have received and know of whom we have received them,” and seem ready to compromise for the sake of preserving unity.

In the past our fathers so valued their convictions of truth that they preferred death rather than betray their faith. The question arises, who is right, who is the more pleasing in the sight of God—those who love unity by compromising truth, or those who in Christian spirit most stand firm for truth at the expense of unity?

We readily concede that quite often differences are magnified and extremes are taken and bitter separations have taken place which were quite unnecessary, and indeed even when divisions are unavoidable, bitterness can never be excused. However we may differ, even on the most fundamental principles of Christian faith, Christian love should so prevail that there could be no unkindness, but simply a committing the whole matter to the Lord with the prayer that He may open the blind eyes and, if He will, lead us again into the unity of the faith and happy bonds of fellowship.

We need, however, to remember that the Christian religion is not a flexible, compromising one. Systems established and governed by men may make changes to meet circumstances, both in their principles and methods, but the principles of Christ established at Pentecost are fixed, and no authority on earth can change them. Many authorities have, however, sought to accommodate Christianity to times and circumstances, and have brought in many anti-Christian teachings so that the creeds and dogmas of the churches to-day very greatly misrepresent God and His great plan of salvation. The downfall of the church was not through faithful men and women maintaining an attitude of loyalty to truth and righteousness, though history records many such noble characters. The downfall of the church came about because there were not sufficient unflinching defenders of the faith once delivered to the saints, and because the majority sought conformity with the world and undervalued the truth.

Particularly in this day is the spirit of compromise abounding. It is the Laodicean spirit that is neither hot nor cold, and says, do not trouble about doctrine, only let us join together in one great confederacy.

There is a spirit which is quite prevalent, to let clown the standards of truth and ethics. It has indeed wrought havoc in the churches, so that they have become altogether worldly and indifferent to the true spirit of the truth and consecration, as taught by the Lord and His Apostles. The adversary would seek in the same way to “quench the spirit” among those who have become awake to the “present truth” (those things which have been revealed by the opening up of the Scriptures as “meat in due season” or truths specially applicable to our day). It is no doubt these matters pertaining to our Lord’s Second Presence, the harvest work, the closing down of the present age, etc., that we are exhorted to “Hold fast that no man take thy crown.”

The questions arise as to what does a true Christian really need to believe? What are the essentials of our faith?

What is it that we must “Hold fast?” Does it mean only that we preserve a clear knowledge of truth, or does it not imply “walking in the light?”

What, then, constitutes a Christian? The Bible shows how in due time “God will have all men to be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth,” and how under the New Covenant and its great Mediator all the willing and obedient will be assisted to work out their justification to life by work of obedience and righteousness. The New Testament just as clearly shows that the Divine purpose for this Gospel Age, or “The Kingdom of Heaven” Age, as the Lord designated it, is to select a spiritual class to be joint heirs with Christ, to reign with him in the coming Kingdom Age, when the wider opportunity will come to all mankind. That will be when the Church or Bride of Christ will be complete, and “the Spirit and the Bride will say, come, and whosoever will let him come and take of the water of life freely.”

This class of “Priests and Kings”—the Church—is dealt with quite differently, in its selection, from the way the rest of mankind will be in the next age. That will be an age of works, justification by works. This is an age of faith, justification by faith, and that faith is the gift of God. (Eph. 2:8). Our Lord declared, “No man cometh unto Me except it be given him of My Father”; “No man cometh unto the Son except the Father draw him”

The first essential then is that we be invited. How are we invited or drawn? It is through the Word, as the Lord intimated in His prayer, “Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe through their word.” (John 17:20). So it is God who invites those who may be joint heirs with His Son, by bringing His Word to their attention, and by His holy spirit He grants the faculty of faith. There is the conviction of sin, and the longing to be at peace with God and to be righteous. Then in true penitence, faith in Calvary's atoning sacrifice lifts the load of sin and we find peace and rest. What a great favour—this is, first to be called of God. and then instead of being slowly justified by. works under the New Covenant of the next age to be at once “Justified by faith and at peace with God.” This particular arrangement of grace is in order that we may be able, through the merit of our Redeemer “to present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God.” This is the second step of Romans 5:1-2, after being. justified by faith through our Lord Jesus Christ, “By whom also we have access into this grace wherein we stand, and now rejoice in the hope of the glory of God.”

Following this step of consecration, we receive the begetting of the holy spirit—the spirit of adoption—and God calls us His sons. This holy spirit begets in each one a new mind, a new heart, a new creature, so that though the human being is laid upon the altar of sacrifice to be done to death, for “as many as have been baptised into Christ have been baptised into His death” (Rom. 6:3) ; yet a new life is begun, a spiritual life, and as new creatures we have become Christians in the full sense.

As Christians then we have so far these essentials —The favour of having been called of God. The gift of faith. Justification through the exercise of that faith. The holy spirit of sonship through the further step of faith— consecration. The wonderful hope of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

Having reached to these things are there no other essentials for the Christian? We would answer that the new creature needs nourishing. If we fail to feed upon the Lord's word, if we fail to drink of that water of life which is provided for us, we shall fail to develop and probably soon lose our faith and our hope. We must go on from these first principles and learn to appreciate the deep things of the Word. We remember how St. Paul felt that it was useless to try and explain the deeper things to the Hebrews because they had not exercised their minds along the lines of truth.

They had stunted their growth, they were still babies feeding on milk, when they ought to have been able to. teach others.

How essential is the present truth as it is revealed from God's Word. The Word of God is the instrument not only for calling the saints, but also for supplying grace and strength and enabling them to meet the difficulties of the way.

It unfolds its precious truths as “meat in due season” to meet the needs of the Christian in his own day. It is then very essential that we understand present truth—the Word of God—as it opens up, in order that our Shield is bright and strong, our Helmet of hope is firmly fixed, the Breastplate of righteousness properly adjusted, that our feet be shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace, our loins be girt about with truth and that we may be able to wield the Sword of the Spirit, and be overcomers in the “good fight of faith.”

How important is the truth. It is the means by which we are sanctified and strengthened to run our course. Just as truth helps so error hinders.

How far may we differ from one another in respect of truth without interfering with our fellowship? The fact of differing on what we may call non-essentials provides opportunities for the exercise of brotherlikindness in respecting the opinions of others though not endorsing them.

It is quite a different matter when we come to deal with the clear lines of faith and hope, or truths which are Divinely revealed for the purpose of accomplishing some particular feature of work in connection with God's great plan. It would indeed be presumptuous to say that such truths were of so little importance that it did not matter whether or not we believed them. We would also find it impossible to enjoy the same helpful fellowship with those who denied or belittled these things as we could with those who appreciated them, and who were seeking to faithfully sound forth the message and conform their lives to it.

It is quite understandable that those who do not know present truth, who do not recognise that we are living in “the days of the Son of Man,” and the harvest time of the age, etc., should think such things are non-essentials. They cannot see the present truth to be essentials if they do not recognise that the harvest work is in progress, and that the separating of the “wheat” from the “tares” is taking place. They cannot value the truths now revealed as we do, who realise the presence of the Lord as “Reaper,” and that He is now reckoning with His people respecting the use of their talents and their structure building of character and teachings, and that the present truth is indeed the feast which He promised to the faithful watchers in Luke 12:37 and Rev. 3:20: What may seem non-essential to some may be very essential to others, for it is the “present truth” which is doing the harvest work. On the one hand it sanctifies and prepares the Bride class for the great consummation of her hopes, and on the other hand it separates those who from some cause or other seem unable to understand it.

The “present truth,” or “meat in due season,” or the unfoldings of truths respecting the Divine Plan, the second presence of Christ, the Harvest, the gathering of the saints and the consummation of the age, etc., appear to be essential to those to whom they have been revealed, if they will make their calling and election sure. Those who lightly esteem such things will surely fail in the use of their talents.

Similar conditions existed at the first advent of our Lord. New truths were sent forth. Many were inclined to say such matters were all right and might be true, but they should not be carried too far, they were not essential, they could still hold on to the Law ceremonies and synagogue gatherings. The then “present truth” was, however, essential to such as the Lord was calling, and it did its work of separating the “wheat” from the “chaff.”

Let us not undervalue the things which God has revealed to us, which have opened our eyes to see the wideness of His purposes and shown us that we are at the end of the age and living in “the days of the Son of Man,” and that “as in the days of Noah” preceding the deluge, so now a great calamity is pending, which will end this dispensation, after which the new age will commence when Christ shall be King over all the earth.

These things we are exhorted to “hold fast” in the message to the Philadelphia Church. (Rev. 3:10-11). “Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation which shall come upon all the world to try them that dwell upon the earth. Behold I come quickly, hold fast that which thou hast that no man take thy crown.”

We are living in a day of such a variety of confused teachings. We are forewarned of the many deceptions that were to come, so that even if it were possible the very elect would be deceived. Peter says that there should be false teachers and that many would follow their pernicious ways, by reason of which the way of truth should be evil spoken of. Paul admonishes, “Be not carried about by strange doctrines, for it is good that the heart be established with grace.” The church is called “the pillar and ground of the truth.” It is her responsibility to preserve the truth in its purity, to guard it and to let it shine. Our Lord declared, “To this end came I into the world that I should bear witness to the truth,” and it is for those who will follow Him to do His work, and to be among those who are “beheaded for the witness of Jesus and for the Word of God.”

Many are the injunctions of the Apostles respecting this matter of “Holding fast the form of sound words” and the truths which God has revealed in His Word. The following are some texts showing our responsibility regarding knowledge :-2 Tim. 1:13; 2 Tim. 2:14-18; 2 Tim. 2:23-26; 2 Tim. 3:13-14; 2 Tim. 4:3-4; 1 John 2:20-24; 1 John 3:1-3; 2 John 7-11; 1 Tim. 1:3-6; 1 Tim. 4:16; 1 Tim. 4:20-21 (Diaglott).

That, however, is not all we must “hold fast.” There is the possibility of holding fast the form of sound words, of having a correct understanding of the main features of the truth, even of being “virgins” (justified by faith) and of understanding “present truth,” and yet to fail to be prepared, and so fail to enter the marriage chamber.

A clear head is a good thing to have, but if the knowledge does not go down to the understanding heart, it fails in its intended purpose of sanctification, and we should prove to be but sounding brass and tinkling cymbals. The trials of our day will not only try the doctrines, but will test our faith, our hope, our love and our loyalty to God and to one another as members in Christ.

Other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid in Christ Jesus. There is no standing before God apart from His Son, our Saviour, but having this foundation we must build thereon. What must we build?

We must build our doctrine and see that all our teachings are in line with the foundation; we must also build character. We must hold fast our foundation, our faith in the great Ransom for all. We must hold fast our consecration, our love to God in operation; we must bind the sacrifice with cords to the altar. We must “hold fast the confidence of our hope firm to the end.” We must keep on the whole armour of God and continue the good fight of faith. We must preserve our zeal for the Lord’s cause.

There is everything in this day to discourage us. Some have trials and temptations in one way, some in another. Maybe the failure of brethren whom we had highly esteemed in the Lord is apt to discourage us. Sometimes in contact with the world we meet plausible arguments against the truth by agnostics or scientists, and if we trusted to our own wisdom and strength to save us we might go down, but let us hold fast the Word of God. If we cannot understand everything, we do understand enough of God’s wisdom, justice, love and power, which we have exemplified in His dealings with Israel and explained in His Word and experienced in our own lives, so that we can reasonably trust where we cannot quite understand. Even our Lord Jesus was tested in this way. He could not understand why the light of the Father’s countenance should be withdrawn just at the moment when, more than any other, He needed the assurance of His favour and presence. We must nerve ourselves and seek to grow in grace that we too may reach that condition of heart that can say, “Yea, though He slay me yet will I trust Him.” •

Probably all can look back upon trials and temptations and trace the kind hand that has overruled for our protection, guidance and provision, and thus tracing the way God has led us shall we not hold fast the confidence of our faith firm to the end?

Let us hold fast our love to the Lord. If we love God we will also love those begotten of Him, and it will be painful indeed to us to even think evil of a fellow member. We would shun listening to reproaches against brethren we would be loyal to God and defend His children and each member in the body of Christ would be loyal to one another.

That loyalty, however, will be secondary to our loyalty to God and His Word and the doctrine we have proved to be true. It may be necessary for us to withdraw even from those we love in Christ, if they teach things which we believe to be contrary to the truths that we have been by God’s grace entrusted with, to preserve and to proclaim.

While we may thus sometimes find separations unavoidable, there is never any occasion to be unkind. We may have to speak plainly against wrong teachings or practices, but we are not to condemn nor cease to love those who think differently. As long as they believe in the Lord Jesus Christ as the Saviour of mankind, by His own blood, and profess consecration to God, we may still think of them as brethren, though they may be erring brethren.

Let us hold fast our faith, our hope, our love, our doctrine, which includes “present truth.” “Continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of knowing of whom thou hast learned them.” How important it is that we hold fast that which we have proved to be an unfolding of God’s Word—”Meat in due season.” If we begin to let slip this or that truth, other truths will likely soon be lost, and “if the light that is in thee become darkness, how great is that darkness? “Hold fast that which thou hast that no man take thy crown.” (Rev. 3:11.).

Hope.

“What though the blossoms fall and die?
The flower is not the root;
The Sun of love may ripen yet
The Master’s pleasant fruit.”

“What though by many a wayward fall
Thy garment is defiled?
A Saviour’s blood can cleanse them all;
Fear not! thou art His child.”

“Arise! and leaning on His strength,
Thy weakness shall be strong;
And he will teach thy heart at length
A new perpetual song.”

“Arise! to follow in His track
Each holy footprint clear.
And on an upward course look back
With every brightening year.”

“Arise! and on thy future way
His blessing with thee be!
His presence be thy staff and stay
Till thou His glory see.”

The Witness Work.

WHILE at regular intervals attention is drawn to the privileges of witnessing for the truth by whatever means may be at the disposal of the Lord's people, a further reference at this time will not be out of place, specially as we have had some encouragement along this line.

As mentioned in our yearly reports for some years past, the use of free literature coupons in suitable newspapers has been a helpful means of placing the truth literature in the hands of a large number of people, with good results in quite a few cases. The Melbourne and Adelaide papers have been used mostly in the past, and with a view to encouraging the work amongst the friends in other centres one of our friends writes :— “It seems that perhaps more good could be done in this country by more advertising in the Saturday daily papers, or in suitable weeklies. I am wondering to what extent this has been tried, say, in Perth, Sydney or Brisbane, or throughout New Zealand and Tasmania. . . . It would be interesting to know to what extent the friends in the ‘various Classes throughout the Commonwealth would like to co-operate in placing the advert. in the most suitable newspapers in their various localities. Those Classes needing some assistance. to meet the cost could be helped from an Advertising Fund. I would like to offer an amount as a start to help a work of this kind.”

The spirit and assistance of this offer is much appreciated. Whilst realising that the chief work is amongst the brethren in this advanced stage of the harvest work, in encouraging and assisting them along the way, there is also, no doubt, a work yet to be done on behalf of those still desiring the refreshing and comforting message of truth here and there throughout this great land, as in other parts.

For the benefit of all, it is now mentioned that the Adelaide Class expect to use a coupon in the Christmas number of a suitable weekly paper in that city; we are to make use of a very suitable weekly in Melbourne at the same time, and arrangements are being made so that the same may be undertaken. in Sydney and Brisbane with the cooperation of friends there. Let us trust that with the witness going out from the four large cities, some real. good may result, according to the Lord's good will, and the prayers of the brethren are asked to that end. If but two or three are blessed by the truth message, what a privilege to be associated in such a work, and. the Lord is fully able to give the increase—we are not responsible for that. All literature supplied free to enquirers is provided by the general Tract Fund of the Institute, to which the brethren in all parts give support, as they are able.

Much more can be done with the coupons and tract distribution, etc. We shall be very pleased to hear from all Classes and individual brethren who are interested in this work, and would like to co-operate. Samples of coupons which have already been used with some good results will be gladly forwarded, also information as to financial assistance available to those unable to undertake the expense or all the expense in their particular localities.

The Birth of Christ.

“Thou shalt call His name Jesus, for He shall save His from their sins.”—Matt. 1:21

THE great thought with the birth of Jesus is that the first-born of every creature left ‘ the glory of a spirit existence, the glory which He had enjoyed with the Father before the world was made, and in conformity to the Divine plan for human salvation, “humbled Himself,” to human nature, became a man, “was made flesh, and dwelt amongst us.”— John 1:14; Phil. 2:7-9. But, why did He do this? The Scriptures reply that He took our form and nature—the form of a servant—for the suffering of death. It was for the sin of man that He was to atone; and, to do so, to pay our debt, to give our ransom price, to be our substitute, He must be a man—that, as by a man came death, by a man also should come the resurrection of the dead.

No wonder, then, that the birth of the babe Jesus, the first step in the divine plan for our salvation from sin and death, was hailed by angels as well as by the wise men and the shepherds as a most notable, a most momentous event. And only those who see quite clearly the necessity for a ransom (a corresponding price), before sin could be forgiven or one member of the condemned race in Adam could be set free from.. the death penalty resting upon all, can appreciate the depth of meaning there is in that song which the angels sang: “Glory to God in the highest; on earth peace, good will toward men.”

The great salvation of which the man Christ Jesus is the centre is all of divine arrangement—to the Father of glories therefore we ascribe the “highest” glory for all the blessings which through it we enjoy.

The infant Jesus was the first ray of light and hope to men; because He would become a man, and as the man would give His life a ransom for Adam and all condemned in him; and thus, by virtue of having paid our price, “bought us with His own precious blood (His life given),” He would be legally qualified before the divine law to be the “Mediator of the New Covenant,” made effective with His own precious blood—”the blood of the New Covenant shed for many for the remission of sins.”—Matt. 26:28.

The great plan for human salvation, begun by the birth of Jesus, has not yet reached completion. It will not be complete until His people have been saved from their sins and from the penalty of their sins—death, which includes degradation—mental, moral and physical. The ransom, thank God, has been paid, and Justice has accepted it; and now God is seeking out “His people.” First, during this Gospel Age, He seeks His peculiar people to be the “Bride of Christ,” and in the age to follow this, the Millennium, He will cause the knowledge of the divine offer of life under the terms of the New Covenant to be, made general: all shall know, and then, “whosoever will may take of the water of life freely.” And all whom He shall be willing to own as “His people” will gladly avail themselves of ,the gracious arrangements and return to full ‘favour with God—all others will be wilful sinners, and as such will be cut off from life in the Second Death.

Let us, then, who know ,the blessed story of the love of God in Christ tell abroad the gracious message, the foundation for which was laid in the birth of Jesus.—”Behold; we bring you glad tidings of great joy, which shall be unto all people.” “He shall save His people from their sins.” Let us make sure that we have accepted Him and are “His people.” Let us be true, wise men, and present to Him our treasures—all that we have and are-our hearts.

Christmas Gifts.

“Thou hast received gifts for men.”—(Psalm 68:18.)

Christmas gifts for thee,
Fair and free!
Precious things from the heavenly store,
Filling thy casket more and more;
Golden love in divinest chain,
That can never be untwined again;
Silvery carols of joy that swell

Sweetest of all in the heart's love cell;
Pearls of peace that were sought for thee
In the terrible depths of a fiery sea;
Diamond promises sparkling bright,
Flashing in farthest reaching light.
Christmas gifts for thee,
Grand and free!

Christmas gifts from the king of love
Brought from His royal home above;
Brought to thee in the far off land,
Brought to thee by His own dear hand.
Promises held by Christ for thee
Peace as a flowing river free,
Joy that in His own joy must live,
And love that Infinite love can give,
Surely thy heart of hearts uplifts
Carols of praise for such Christmas gifts.”

Take my life and let it be consecrated, Lord, to Thee.”

ONE of our friends has sent along the following in memory of the author of the above beautiful hymn, the 14th of this month being the centenary anniversary of her birthday. “Frances Ridley Havergal was born on -the 14th December, 1836, and, in due course, every talent she possessed was consecrated to the Lord. She recognised early that, In God’s great field of labour, all work is not the same; He hath a service for each one who loves His Holy Name,’ and, as we sing the praises so ably written and expressed by this servant, our thanks ascend to the ‘Giver of every good and perfect gift,’ for the faithfulness displayed in the use of these gifts. Her pen ceased not to declare in a most pleasing ministry the praises of Him who knew no sin.

Father, we bless Thee with heart and voice
For the wondrous grace of Thy sovereign choice,
That patiently, gently sought us out
In the far off land of death and doubt;
That drew us to Christ by the Spirit’s might,
That opened our eyes to see the Light,
That arose in strange reality
From the darkness that fell on Calvary. (Isa. 62:12; Eph. 2:13).

“There was also in her music constantly a sense of insufficiency in self, and a desire to ‘Let every thought be captive brought, Lord Jesus to Thine own sweet obedience--That I may know in ebb-less flow, the perfect peace of full and pure allegiance.’ (2 Cor. 10:5.).

‘While we would draw attention to her many delightful works, we would also call to remembrance that in her ministry much pain was endured, inasmuch that, in the employment of her talents for the Lord, many were drawn to herself. These she had to re-direct, and, whilst she cherished dearly the love and affection of many, she desired it only for Jesus. ‘I want you,’ was said to many, but I want you for Jesus.’

‘Singing for Jesus, our Master and Friend,
Telling His love and His marvellous grace,
Love for eternity, love without end;
Love for the loveless, the sinful and base,
Singing for Jesus and trying to win
Many to love Him and join in our song.’

“God has surely supplied all our need. Sonic may appreciate a particular ministry more than another, and yet, as (me string reverberates faithfully the music it is intended to sound, its companion strings will, if in tune, reciprocate and absorb sympathetically. One hundred years will not dim the music of love that rings out from the heart of Frances R. Tiavergal.”

“I know, O Lord, though all around is dark,
I need not fear;
Rough are the waves that toss my little bark,
But Thou art near.”

The Great Multitude of Rev. 7:9-17.

A THOUGHT has been expressed that these are human beings restored to perfection, but this view would not harmonise with the setting of this passage, nor with the Scriptures as a whole.

It would seem that the Revelation which John received was particularly in regard to matters concerning the history of the Church—the events of the Gospel Age leading to the establishment of the Kingdom of Christ on earth.

The Lord had indicated in His parables that the great system of error—the Roman Catholic Church — would develop ; that truth would be so polluted and that tares' (imitation Christians) would become more plentiful than the wheat (true Christians). in this Revelation given to John symbols are given, which the developments of the age would lead the earnest student to comprehend as the fulfilment of these signs.

Until Christ came, and, by His death and Resurrection, became “worthy to open the Book” (which, until then, the Father had “kept in His own power,” no one but the Heavenly Father knew what was to take place during the Gospel Age. The mystery was represented as a Book sealed with seven seals.

As these seals were one by one opened, John saw the visions recorded, and these symbolised certain features of the Gospel Age. The first six seals deal only with features between Pentecost and the second coming of Christ; but the seventh seal gives a full view from the first advent and the death of Our Lord, “as the Lamb slain,” to the time -when all the willing and obedient will have been brought up the highway of holiness and presented perfect to God.

It will be noticed that the matters contained in Rev. 7, including the seeing of this great multitude, are observed by John after the breaking of the sixth seal, and therefore as there is no earthly promise held out for any during this Gospel Age—the calling of the present time being to a heavenly inheritance—this “great multitude,” before the heavenly throne, must be heavenly, i.e., spirit beings. The Apostle definitely says, “ we are all called in one. hope of our calling.”

No one is called to be of this Great Multitude; all who came into Christ are called to be “joint-heirs with Him.” “If any. man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of His.” If we have received of His spirit, then “the spirit beareth witness that we are children of God, and if children then heirs, heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ.” (Rom. 8:9, 16, 17.)

However, whilst many are called, few are chosen (for the elect) ; many fail to make their calling and election sure. They allow the things of earth to attract and hold them back, and so they receive tribulation, hard experiences, to help them to give themselves entirely to the accomplishing of the Divine will. Paul says, regarding such an one, that he was handed over to Satan (to get experiences), so that the fleshly mind might be destroyed, “that the spirit (life) might be saved so as by fire.” These would, while losing the great reward, yet be saved and ultimately gain the victory': but, instead of being on the throne as “joint-heirs with Christ,” would be servants before the throne, probably of similar nature to the angels.

As no one is called to be of the Great Company there is no very definitely plain Scripture statement concerning the class. There are, however, several Scriptures that seem to show that there would be those to serve before the throne. For instance, in the beautiful picture of the selection of the Bride of Christ in Genesis 24, Rebecca, who signified the Bride, had her nurse, who was also brought across the same desert to the same place as her mistress and served her in the new home. In Psalm 45, too, the Bride or Queen in gold of Ophir had “the virgins her companions that followed her.”

There are no hopes of an earthly nature held out to believers of the Gospel Age—the promises -are all spiritual. The justified human nature has been presented as a living sacrifice. (Rom. 12) The human nature having been placed on the altar must be consumed and cannot be reclaimed ; and it would indeed be a sad thing if there was no provision for all those who though at heart loyal to God and loving righteousness, had been overtaken by the good things of earth and. hindered by the adversaries—the world, the flesh, and the devil from being counted overcomers to sit with Christ in His throne.

Paul speaks of such a class in I Cor. 2:12-15. They continued faithfully on the foundation Jesus Christ—trusting in His shed blood for their peace with God and hope of heaven; but their works have been faulty. They have not embroidered their garments (Psalm 45), or in other words, have not zealously prepared themselves by attaining the predestined character (Rom. 8:29)—"conformed to the image of God's dear Son." Though their works are unacceptable, and they fail to gain the prize of the "high calling of God in Christ Jesus," they are saved so as by fire,—fiery trials, great tribulations are permitted so as to assist them to let go the things of earth and overcome those things that hinder. They have "palms" of victory, • though are not "crowned"; they serve before the rainbow circled throne instead of "sitting with Christ in His throne, even as He overcame and is set down with His Father in His throne." (Rev. 3:21).

It has been suggested that this great multitude are human beings who will serve before the throne. on earth, and that Jerusalem is to be the throne-of the Lord. However, the scene in Rev. 7 is a heavenly one, and is before the rainbow circled throne. The multitude unnumbered are seen in white robes, and the time is at the close of the Gospel Age.

Not until the end of the reign of Christ when the Kingdom is to be handed over to God will the multitudes of earth be restored to righteousness and perfection (have white robes of their own), and have right to the tree of life. (Rev. 22:14.)

Other Scriptures in types or parables also indicate this great multitude—for instance, the Virgins Parable, and the scapegoat of Lev. 16. After Aaron's bullock had been slain and its blood applied in the Most Holy, the two goats from the people were brought to the vail of consecration. One is called the "Lord's goat," and that was dealt with the same as the bullock, only the incense offered with the bullock was evidently still burning in the Holy, thus making the Lord's goat acceptable, for with the goat itself no incense is mentioned. So it is the perfect doings of our Lord Jesus (whose humanity was represented by the bullock) which is incense sweet to God, Making the prayers of the saints who walk in His steps acceptable. (Rev. 8:3, 4.) The other goat for "Azazel" (see margin), the scapegoat, well represents those who need the wilderness experiences—the tribulations, the fiery trials—so that their flesh may be destroyed and their spirits be saved so as by fire.

This is a gracious provision of the Divine Plan, which would seem incomplete otherwise, for so. many coming short of the mark for the great prize of the high calling would otherwise be simply lost, although, in their hearts, they really loved God and righteousness. So it is that Paul says that in the Resurrection one star differeth from another in glory, and our Lord declared, "In My Father's house (universe) there are many places of abode." There will be the Twelve Apostles, the twenty-four elders, the 144,000, and the cherubim and seraphim—"All things in heaven"—and then the Ancient Worthies, natural Israel and the whole race of mankind, small and great—"all things on earth" shall be gathered together in one. (Eph. 1:10, 20-23.)

Feasts of the Lord's Table.

(Convention Address).

"Can God furnish a table in the wilderness?" (Psa. 78:19.)

"Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies." (Psa. 23:5.)

THE great Creator is a gracious God, "plenteous in mercy," and has made bountiful provision for all His creatures. Even in the present sinful condition of mankind how plenteously does the earth yield its increase.

There is abundance of food, materials for clothing, and shelter for all earth's millions, the difficulty being how to make proper distribution of it. That is because man has so fallen from the likeness of God, and instead of being kind and unselfish, instead of having a care for others as for himself, he has imbibed the spirit of Satan—the prince of this world. This, so soon, was evidenced in the expression of Cain, who slew his brother—"Am, I my brother's keeper?" The earth was cursed for man's sake; that is, that it should produce pests and weeds — thorns and thistles, etc.— which should prevent it yielding its fruitage too easily. That was a blessing in disguise, for it has kept man busy; kept him with an object in view. Idleness is a great source of evil; the idle rich are a curse to humanity. It was idleness and fullness of bread that led the Sodomites to wickedness and destruction.

When mankind has been brought back to the image of God--when the spirit of the Adversary has been eliminated and God's spirit is poured upon all flesh so that peace and good-will prevail, the curse will have been removed. "The earth shall yield her increase." "Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the briar shall come up the myrtle. For ye shall go forth with joy and be led forth with peace: the mountains and hills shall break forth before you into singing and all the trees of the fields shall clap their hands." (Isa. 55:13, 12.)

Man will then know how to profitably occupy his time, and there will be no more long weary hours of labor with sweat of face. No longer will there be the cruel sweating of women and children and men, for everyone will seek each other's welfare in justice and love, and gladly share the bounties of the Lord's good table.

How beautiful was the provision made for Adam and Eve. The Garden already prepared, and a lovely table spread with all that they could need in that paradise. How terrible were the consequences of their disobedience; what a history of wretchedness and woe was then begun. The poor groaning creation having lost the Divine providence and protection has been ever degenerating and getting further away from God, multiplying wickedness, craft, lust and strife through selfishness, ambition and cruelty, leading to wars and carnage and rushing on towards the inevitable consequence—a time of trouble such as never has been since there was a nation; and history records some very terrible times.

The great Creator's table has been ignored, for there has always been a table for those who would seek God and His righteousness. But the experiences so soon to reach the climax will bring man to his senses and they will "turn to the Lord with one consent" (Zeph. 3:8, 9), and will find that He has prepared "a feast of fat things" for all the willing and obedient. (Isa. 25.)

While man runs his own course "at enmity with God through wicked works" the Lord has provided good things for those who have turned to Him and sought to do His will. How He rewarded the faith of the Ancient Worthies and blessed Abraham, Jacob, Joseph and Moses, and provided such blessings and favors for His people under the Law Covenant.

Jesus likens Israel under the Law Covenant to the rich man in the parable; and Paul tells us that Israel was rich indeed—"To whom pertaineth the adoption and the glory and the covenants and the giving of the Law and the service of God and the promises."—Rom. 9:4. (See also Psa. 147:19, 20; Deut. 28:1-12; Psa. 78:19-25.) The Lord surely dealt bountifully with Israel. What blessings and privileges were theirs; had they remained faithful they would have been powerful above all nations and never wanted for any good thing, but they were weak and sinful and lost the great blessings.

To Israel, according to promise, was the adoption. Messiah came to them, and to them only was offered the privilege of becoming "sons of God" and "joint heirs with Christ." "To as many as received Him to them gave He power to become sons of God, even to them that believe on His name." (John 1:12; Matt. 15:24.) "If sons, then heirs, heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ." (Rom 8:17.)

There were many faithful during that age, and these enjoyed rich blessings from the Lord's table. Thus the Psalmist sings: "O taste and see that the Lord is good . . . They that fear the Lord shall not want any good thing." (Psa. 34:8-10.) Again (Psa. 31:19), "O how great is Thy goodness which Thou has laid up for them that fear Thee." David realised the Lord's good providence and protection when he sang: "Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies . . . my cup runneth over" (Psa. 23:5).

All who in any age have sought to come into line with God's will have found that He graciously provides for their best interests. Yet the good things provided under that ancient dispensation--the Law Covenant -- were only shadows of the "better things" promised to the followers of Christ in this age, during which the spiritual seed of Abraham is being selected.

Those under the Law had a feast of Passover—the slaying of the lamb by which the firstborns were saved and subsequently the whole nation was delivered from the bondage of Pharaoh in Egypt—but this was but a shadow of the slaying of Christ our Passover by which the Church of Firstborns is saved from sin and death, and the power of Satan. The next day foreshadowed the leading of the whole poor, groaning creation—all the willing and obedient—across the sea of death safely to eternal human life under the greater mediator than Moses, delivered from all bondage and oppression, as the hymn expresses it

"He comes to break oppression
And set the captives free.
To take away transgression
And rule in equity."

In that day they had their wonderful Tabernacle, in which the Psalmist so much delighted as the House of the Lord, but that was only a shadow of the real tabernacle of God. Their Temple also being a figure of the Temple of God, as Paul says: "Ye are the temple of God," and again: "An holy temple in the Lord in whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God." (I Cor.-. 3:16; Eph. 2:21, 22.).

In the typical Tabernacle was the "shew bread" but we feast upon the real "bread of life that came down from heaven." There was also the candlestick for light in the Holy, but we have "the light of the world," and the holy spirit to illumine the Word of God and show light on our pathway in the holy condition of consecration as under priests, with Christ as "the High-priest of our profession." There was the Golden Altar of Incense, without which sacrifices could not be acceptable, but we have the sweet incense of our Lord's perfect life, as it were, arising continually before God on our behalf, making our prayers and offerings of ourselves acceptable to God.—(Rom. 12:1).

Jesus at one time had been invited to a dinner and it appears that as they lounged around the table, in the manner of that time, He took the opportunity of instructing the host and others. One listening to His words of grace and truth gave utterance to the expression, "Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the Kingdom of God," and this brought from Jesus the parable of the great supper which a man made and invited many. Jesus here intimated that the Kingdom, of heaven was then opening up. The invitation was indeed going out to the house of Israel, and was the most wonderful privilege that had ever been offered any of God's creature> angels or men.

It came first to Israel in fulfilment of the promise made to Abraham, and none but the descendants of the faithful Patriarch through Jacob were at first invited to this Gospel Feast. Only a remnant of that nation was found to be in heart condition able to recognise the Messiah and to respond to the invitation. Israel as a nation rejected the very favor which they thought to obtain. "Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for, but the election hath obtained it and the rest were blinded,"—because of unbelief. Their table became "a snare and a trap and a stumbling block . . . and through their fall salvation is come to the Gentiles." —(Rom.).

So- it was that Israel generally was too much engrossed in earthly aims and pursuits, to be attracted to the spiritual feast. The invitations to the great supper then went out into the highways and hedges—to the Gentiles. What a wonderful spread of the exceeding great and precious promises was revealed to the faithful, when, after Pentecost, the riches of heavenly grace began to be perceived. The mystery which had been hid from ages was now made manifest, that God was selecting a “little flock” to be the Bride of Christ—to be joint-heirs with. Christ—to sit with Him in His throne, to be spirit beings changed into the likeness of the glorified Saviour, so that they might be joined with Him as the Abrahamic seed and thus be used to “bless all ‘the families of the earth,” in the coming age. —(Gal. 3:16, 29)

Only “such as. the Lord would call,” were invited to this table of the Lord. Under Moses, manna had been supplied to Israel in the wilderness, but Jesus said, “My Father giveth you the true bread from heaven. For the bread of God is He which cometh down from heaven . . . I am the bread of life: he that cometh to Me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on Me shall. never thirst. Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink His blood ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth My flesh and drinketh My blood hath eternal life; . . . For My flesh is meat indeed and My blood is drink indeed. He that eateth My flesh and drinketh My blood dwelleth in Me and I in him.”—(John 6:32, 33, 35, 53-56). This table (antitype of the Passover) was a stumbling block to Israel. Israel had failed to note the sufferings of Christ which were to precede His Kingship.

The table of the Lord during this Gospel Age indicates suffering, sacrifices of natural privileges and human life and earthly hopes. “He that will be My disciple, let him take up his cross and follow Me. ‘“Ye shall indeed be baptised with My baptism and drink of My cup.”— (Matt. 16:24; 20:23). Only if . we suffer with Christ can we hope to reign with Him. Our Lord was perfected by suffering and it was no easy way by which He gained His crown.-All who shall share the riches of His grace must walk the same narrow way—cut off from the world, going against its stream, for: “by much tribulation shall we enter the Kingdom.”

Yet, though we travel through an enemy’s land surrounded by foes, “oft in danger, oft in woes,” still, we can rejoice and sing, “Thou preparest a table before Me in the presence of mine enemies; my cup runneth over.” So that while we, sometimes, like our Master, taste the bitterness of the cup, yet the joys far exceed the tribulations, as Paul has said, and he had a big share of the hard experiences —”These light afflictions which are but for a moment, work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.”—(2 Cor. 4:17)

What a favor it is to be invited to such a table—”To a station we could ne’er by merit win.” Even angels are not invited, and not all mankind either, only “such as the Lord our God shall call.” “No man cometh unto the Son except the Father draw (Invite) him.” and “many are called but few are chosen.” No wonder, then, as the Apostles came to understand the wondrous “high calling of God in Christ Jesus,” that their letters to the churches are full of exhortations to faithfulness, so as to make our calling and election sure.

Then there is also the promise of the particular feast at the end of the age—the times in which we are now living. “Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the end of the 1335 days.”-(Dan. 12:12) These 1335 days appear to have been reached in 1874, and we enquire, was there any particular blessing that came to the Lord’s .people at that time? Perhaps this can better be answered in’ the words of one who experienced the joy then:-”Oh the blessedness of this favored time! Oh the harmony, the beauty, the grandeur of the Divine Plan as it began to unfold when the 1335 days were touched. It is to express as far as lies within our power this blessedness and fuller unfolding of ‘the Divine Plan now due to be understood by all the ‘holy people’ now living, that this Scripture Studies Series is being published.

This message concerning Michael’s Kingdom gradually opening from 1829. onward is symbolically represented in the book of Revelation 10:2, 8-10, as a little book which the wise of the holy people represented by St. John,” are instructed to eat.”

It was there in 1874, at the end of the 1335 days, the Lord fulfilled His promise that at His second presence, He would gird Himself and prepare a table, a feast for the watchers—the faithful servants. The same promise is intimated to John at Patmos, in the message to- the church of Laodicea (Rev. 3:20.) “Behold I stand at the door and knock, if any man hear My voice and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him and he with Me.” How happy are they who have heard the knock and have opened their hearts in the spirit of the little hymn--”O come to my heart Lord Jesus; there is room in my heart for Thee.”

But so many have their hearts full of sectarian pride—full of their own thoughts and theories--full of churchianity and respect for human doctrines and ceremonies and dogmas, and they do not hear the knock. Those who have heard and opened their hearts, have indeed entered upon a feast of good things, and can say with the Psalmist —”Thou hast put a new song in my mouth even the loving kindness of our God.” The wideness of God’s mercy was revealed and wonderful truths respecting the presence of Christ, the object and manner of His return, also concerning the harvest work and closing features of this age, the glorification of the Church, the day of preparation for the Kingdom of Christ and the restoration of Israel, etc.

Soon now the wilderness journey of the Church will be all over and the antitypical Canaan be entered and then the Messianic Kingdom will be established to bring righteousness and peace to the troubled world.

The knock of the present Lord is not heard by Christendom's leaders any more than the message of Messiah's presence was heard by the leaders in Israel at His first advent. Their hearts are too fully centred in their own and sectarian interests, too full of pride and confidence in their much venerated dogmas, creeds and ceremonies which were mostly formulated in the dark ages, and so are satisfied with such a table. The condition is pictured in Isa. 28:7, 8; also Rev. 18:2-4.

That joy will include the happy work of serving life on earth, without aches or pains, calamities or out another feast to all the willing and obedient, death, but there will be a feast of knowledge of for, while only those invited by the Father could God and His great purposes. The Gospel truth come to the Great Supper, when the Bride is come will be made so plain that a "wayfaring man need complete and with Her Lord, then, "the Spirit and the not err therein." All will receive a clear under Bride will say, come and whosoever will, let him standing of the principles of God's throne; all the come and take of the water of life freely." (Rev. willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land 22:17) and will rejoice to comprehend the breadth and

Of that time Isa. 25:6-9, speaks in beautiful pictorial language— length and height and depth of Divine love, and "The Lord of Hosts shall make the "depth of the riches both of the wisdom and unto all people a feast of fat things, of wines on knowledge of God."

God the Provider.

"My God shall supply all your need, according to His riches in glory by Christ Jesus."

Who shall tell our untold need,
Deeply felt, though scarcely known!
Who the hungering soul can feed,
Guard, and guide, but God alone?

Blessed promise! while we see
Earthly friends must powerless be,
Earthly fountains quickly dry:
"God" shall all your need supply.
He hath said it! so we know
Nothing less can we receive.

Oh, that' thankful love may glow
While we restfully believe—
Ask not how, but trust Him stilt;
Ask not when, but wait His will.
Simply on His word rely,
God "shall" all your need supply.

Through the whole of life's long way,
Outward, inward need we trace;
Need arising day by day,
Patience, wisdom, strength and grace.
Needing Jesus most of all,
Full of need, on Him we call;
Then how gracious His reply,
God shall "all" your need supply.

Great our need, but greater far
Is our Father's loving power;
He upholds each mighty star,
He unfolds each tiny flower.
He who numbers every hair,
Earnest of His faithful care,
Gave His Son for us to die;
God shall all "your" need supply.

Yet we often vainly plead
For a fancied good denied,
What we deemed a pressing need
Still remaining unsupplied.
Yet from dangers all concealed,
Thus our wisest Friend doth shield;
No good thing will He deny,
God shall all your "need" supply.

Can we count redemption's treasure,
Scan the glory of God's love?
Such shall be the boundless measure
Of His blessings from above.
All we ask or think, and more,
He will give in bounteous store,
He can fill and satisfy,
God shall all your need "supply."

One the channel, deep and broad,
From the Fountain of the Throne,
Christ the Saviour, Son of God,
Blessings flow through Him alone.
He, the Faithful and the True,
Brings us mercies ever new;
Till we reach His home on high,
"God shall all your need supply."

The booklet bearing the above title, which took the place of last month's "People's Paper," is being printed in further good quantities, as it is thought well to use it rather extensively amongst the interested.

All our friends desiring to co-operate in this distribution may do so by ordering supplies or forwarding us lists of names and addresses where they would like copies sent. None need feel diffident about sending long lists, and the smallest will also have our best attention.

The Tract Fund will provide for this work in a general way, but those wishing to meet the cost of their supplies may do so at the rate of 3d. per copy, or 2/- per dozen, posted. Let no one fail to assist in this work because of lack of means.

Passover Memorial. 1937.

This year the Jewish date of Passover corresponds with Easter, the 14th of Nisan being Good Friday, commencing at sundown on the previous evening. Thursday evening March 25th, after sundown, would be the anniversary of the Memorial, and the appropriate time to celebrate by the followers of Christ.

Christmas Convention.

IT is a pleasure to report a most helpful and refreshing season on the occasion of the recent Christmas Convention held by the Melbourne Class in this city, over the four days—December 25th to 28th inclusive.

Our heartfelt praise ascends to the Lord for all rich blessings bestowed, and it appeared that these were appreciated to the full by all in attendance. The presence of visiting brethren added greatly to the encouragement of the local friends, and from the expressions of the visitors we were assured that the effort and zeal manifest, as well as the expense entailed in coming long distances, were much more than compensated by the spiritual good things from the presence of the Lord.

Each day of the Convention was opened with Praise and Prayer, followed by a Bible Study, Fellowship Meeting and Addresses, tea also being served by the local Sisters, which was appreciated and during which there was the opportunity of more informal fellowship amongst the friends.

The passages of Scripture taken for the Bible studies are as follows—Col. 1:21-29; 2 Cor. 4:1-11; Heb. 12:18-24; and 2 Tim. 4:1-8; and our readers will understand the amount of valuable instruction and encouragement received from these beautiful portions of God's Word. Each day one of these. Studies engaged the attention of the assembly for an hour and a half with much benefit to all in attendance. One of these Studies, at least, will be given in some detail in a later issue.

Addresses by the brethren comprised a wide range of topics—"Character"; "John 14:27": "Signs of the Times"; "Watch ye, Stand fast, be Strong"; "Feasts of the Lord's Table"; and the Bible Characters of "Joseph," "David," "Moses," "St. Paul," "St. John," and "Timothy." The thoughts expressed were very encouraging indeed, each speaker bringing out in his own way many helpful lessons and exhortations. Two of these addresses appear in this issue and others will follow as space permits.

The Fellowship Meetings gave further opportunity for Praise and Testimony, also a Question Meeting, and on the closing day the session on "Helpful Thoughts from the Convention," enabled the brethren to give expression respecting the particular thoughts with which they had been most impressed. •

At the conclusion of the Closing Address, the brethren gathered round and partook of the Love Feast while singing "Blest be the tie that binds." Then came the parting hymn, "God be with you till we meet again," and the concluding prayer commended all the Lord's people present and in all parts of the world into the care of our loving heavenly Father, the Great Shepherd of the sheep.

"The Life and Teachings of our Lord, Jesus Christ"

THIS little book of 160 pages is published by the Oxford University Press, and gives the life and teachings of our Lord in the words of the four Gospels fitting in the various features into one connected whole.

It was brought to our attention by one of our brethren in England, who writes as follows:—"At our Sunday meetings we are having very precious times. In the morning for the last two years we have been studying 'The Life and Teachings of Jesus Christ,' and the little book is now driving to a close. It has helped us wonderfully to follow as closely as possible chronologically our Lord's life on earth, and to see how beautifully He opened up His teachings as the disciples were able to receive them. I can never recall a study where our Saviour's life has been brought so intimately to my mind, and I think this has been the experience of all."

Copies of this book will arrive from England early in March, and all orders placed will be filled as received. Those friends desiring copies should order now; the price will be about 2/6 or 2/9, posted.

Zionism in Prophecy.

The helpful series of articles entitled "Zionism in Prophecy" appearing in 'The Dawn' of last year are now in booklet form. This is a very useful little book dealing with the ancient prophecies concerning Israel.

Some few copies are on hand, and a further supply will reach us later. We are not sure of the price at present, though it will be about 1/-, or little more, per copy. Those desiring the booklet may order right away.

Correspondence.

N.S. Wales, 20th Dec., 1936. Dear Brother,

Will you kindly send me a copy of “Daily Manna for the Church” if you have one left, and keep the few shillings over for the Tract Fund?

It was very kind of you to answer my letter of a month or so ago at such length. One gets very perplexed at times, and needs the help of the brethren to explain matters. I am more than sorry at the disagreement between the brethren in U.S.A., but can see that Bro. Hoskins is in the right. Some of the articles in the “Herald” still read very nicely, but I have read good sermons by ministers of all denominations, even Catholics.

Another year has almost gone, and it looks as if 1937 \V be the most eventful year yet. One cannot help but marvel at the rapidity with which the storm clouds are banking up, and the world in part so heedless, though the hearts of thinking people are indeed failing them for fear.

With kindest regards to all the brethren, and may the coming year still see us all standing firm in the one great hope.

The Life of Joseph.

(Convention Address)

Who will not agree that this beautiful story of one of God's servants of the Jewish Age, is one that compares with any among the writings of nations?

The thoughtful reader, especially if he be a child of God, cannot fail to be touched with the simple pathos' of this story. Reading on from the 37th chapter to the end of the book of Genesis, we see the various stages of the life of Joseph, son of Jacob, who was destined to play an-important part in God's .dealings with the children of Israel.

Very -aptly we can apply to Joseph the text of I Sam.- 2.:30-"Them that honour me I will honour," and do -we -not find throughout his whole life, the one great aim and object—the desire to please God and gain His righteous approval in all his doings?

The Apostle in the 11th chapter of Hebrews makes mention of Joseph's faith in God, in His promise and -in a future resurrection of the dead, and so we can see that Joseph realised that to be a friend of God and an heir to His promises, called for purity of heart and a life which God could approve. No doubt as he looked back he saw the influence of God's great promise upon the life of his great grandfather Abraham, upon his grandfather Isaac, and- upon his own father Jacob, and we. see that this same promise influenced and con- trolled him to his own great advantage.

So, we find Joseph a bright shepherd boy of 17 years,- the special favorite of his father (Gen. 37:2, 3)- who made him "a coat of many colours," which proved later to have a special significance, being a 'sign of special favor, or royalty. His brothers evidently looked upon it as an indication of their- father's purpose to bestow -the chief blessing upon him; This feature, along with Joseph's innocent, pure and guileless life before them seemed to engender within their hearts a spirit of jealous envy.

Later we read of Joseph's dream, (Gen. 37:5-8). His brothers, taking this as an indication that he . should at some future time have dominion over them, hated him the more. Then followed another dream, this time that the sun, moon and eleven stars made obeisance to him, and when he told it to his father and his brothers they rebuked him again, Jacob saying—"Shall I and thy mother and thy brethren bow ourselves down to thee?" It is recorded that Jacob observed this saying, but his brothers envied him. Ah, how little they knew of the experience God had in store for them and how that even their hatred of Joseph was playing a part in the working out of His purpose concerning them.

What a striking contrast we have in this picture! On the part of Joseph we see the spirit of love manifest in his every action, while on the other hand we see the spirit of jealous hatred and envy which his brothers allowed to control them to such an extent that they began to plot against his life. Here we are reminded of the words of Solomon 8:6, 7.— "Jealousy is cruel as the grave; the coals thereof are coals of fire which hath a most vehement flame." On the other hand, love is strong as death—"Many waters cannot quench love, neither can the floods drown it."

Now we read that an opportunity came for the jealous brothers to give vent to their bitter feelings toward Joseph. (See Gen. 37:12-20). They said—"Behold this dreamer cometh. Come therefore and let us slay him and cast him into some pit," but Reuben persuaded them not to kill him but to cast him alive into some pit,. thinking to afterwards' rescue him secretly and deliver him to his father again. This suggestion they acted upon, until, seeing a company of Ishmelites travelling with spicery, balm and myrrh down into Egypt, Judah suggested selling him to them, which they did, for twenty pieces of silver, and so Joseph was taken down into Egypt. Later he was sold to Potiphar, one of Pharaoh's officers, and thus became the forerunner of all Israel into the land of Egypt. How cunningly the brothers deceived their father to hide their wicked deed by taking Joseph's coat of many colors, dipping it in the blood of a goat, which suggested to Jacob that some wild beast had devoured his well beloved son.

What a severe trial for Jacob, for evidently Joseph was the one in whose line of descent he looked for the fulfilment of the divine covenant, being the eldest son of his beloved Rachel, and a child after his own heart, in whom was the reverence of God and a love of righteousness. The coat of many colors seemed to have been the expression of this hope. But, alas, now it seemed his hopes were shattered, yet he faithfully held to the promise of God and waited patiently for its fulfilment.

How severe also must this trial have been for Joseph. From being a favorite son, he was suddenly carried off as a slave into a foreign and heathen land. This bitter experience, along with the thought of the cruelty and hatred of his cold hearted brothers and his father's subsequent grief and loneliness, without any prospect of ever seeing him again, and no means of communication must have caused Joseph much grief, being of such tender years. Although he had left the scenes of all that was so dear to him on earth, he carried with him the staff of the divine promises, resolving to be loyal to God, and maintain his integrity under whatever circumstances he might be placed.

What a grand example for any young man to follow. Instead of yielding to the evil influence of his surroundings, we find that his being thrown more and more on his own resources and coming into contact with a new and at that time advanced civilisation, he received a new and valuable education which otherwise he could not have received and a discipline that developed manly strength, tact and firmness of character.

Reading on in the 39th chapter we find Joseph serving his master faithfully. Still trusting in God, he cheerfully carried out his duties, and this soon won him the confidence of his master, who, we read, saw that God was with him and made all that he did to prosper, and so in turn Potiphar made him overseer over all his house.

In this way Joseph spent some ten years, but now came to him even a worse experience; he was falsely accused by his mistress in such a subtle way that, because of his purity and innocence of such a sin, he was cast into prison. Here, too, he still remained, loyal to the principles of righteousness and made the best use of the situation: We find -(verse 21), "that the Lord was with him and gave him favor in the sight of the keeper of the prison," who, in turn, "committed to Joseph's hand all the prisoners that were in the prison."

Surely, then, Joseph was one whose faithfulness in little things prepared him for larger fields of usefulness. He was rightly exercised by the experiences of life; kind to the thankful and the unthankful, and never allowing the injustice and harsh treatment which he received to harden his heart. Never was there a sign of distrust of God or of complaining against Him, but rather he trusted where he could not trace Him. "I would rather walk in the dark with God than go alone in the light" expresses Joseph's position very well.

Passing on into the 40th chapter, we find further instances of God's favor toward Joseph. It was given him to interpret the dreams of the king's chief baker and butler, who were also in prison, and in this Joseph thought he saw a possible way of being released—see verses 12 to 15. However, the ungrateful butler forgot his benefactor. Then the door of opportunity swung open, not only to freedom, but to honour and advancement. Gen. 41—Pharaoh had dreamed two dreams which troubled him, as there was not one among all his wise men who could give him the interpretation. Then the chief butler remembered how Joseph had rightly interpreted his dream, and made mention of him to the king, who had Joseph brought hastily out of the prison, that he might tell him his dreams. And so Joseph, being led of God, was able to explain to the king how that there would be seven years of plenty, followed by seven years of famine, throughout all the land of Egypt, which would be very grievous.

Then followed Joseph's wise advice to Pharaoh, suggesting that he should set up a competent man over all the land, who in turn could appoint overseers to put by a great store of corn during the seven years of plenty, so that the land should not perish during the predicted famine. Pharaoh at once recognised that Joseph was led of the spirit of God, and had great faith in him, and realised that he could do no better than appoint Joseph as his prime minister, to be next to him on the throne of Egypt.

What an exaltation! What an honour was bestowed on this young Hebrew, now 30 years of age, who had risen suddenly from the prison house to the throne of Egypt. Yet he did not become puffed up with pride and lose his head, as many would have done. Even though, having reached such a high office, it was not the goal of his ambition, for, like his fathers, he looked for the long promised kingdom of God. There was his treasure, and there was his heart, and from thence he received the inspiration of his noble life, and now he only esteemed this position in the court of Egypt for its privileges of helpfulness to others.

We pass on now over the next period of about nine years to another interesting incident in Joseph's life. He had been next to Pharaoh on the throne, and the seven' years of plenty had ended, during which he had gone throughout the land laying by supplies of grain in every city. He had also married, and now had a happy home of his own, with a wife and two children. The great famine had now been in the land for two years, but we read in Gen. 41:54—"There was bread in all the land of Egypt."

We now come to the beautiful story of the reunion of Joseph with his brethren. The famine had reached far beyond Egypt, so that all the countries around came into Egypt to buy corn from Joseph. Jacob, too, away in the land of Canaan, had heard that there was corn in Egypt, and consequently sent his ten sons down to buy food, but little did they know that this great governor of the land was their young brother whom they had sold into slavery some 23 years before. What humiliating experiences were in store for them! We see how wisely Joseph dealt with them (42nd chap.). Treating them roughly at first and accusing them of coming as spies, they did not recognise him, and bowed.

Volume XX. No. 3 MELBOURNE, 1st MARCH, 1937. Price-Twopence Halfpenny

“Watch Ye, Stand Fast, Be Strong”

(1 Cor. 16:13.) (Convention Address.)

IN this exhortation of the Apostle's the necessity 'for watchfulness is mentioned first and is to be regarded as a matter of very great importance to every footstep follower of Christ. The watchful Christian is the one who is awake, alert and vigilant, and his standing fast in the faith will require careful, continual watchfulness.

That our Lord regarded watchfulness in His followers as a very important attitude of mind is evident from His frequent reference to this matter.

The questions arise: How are we to watch, for what must we watch? and, what advantages are to be gained by watching? Looking through the 13th chapter of Mark's gospel it is noticed that Christ used the word “watch” three times, and another word rendered “take heed” is used four times in the same chapter. The word rendered “take heed” has the thought of “beware,” and is frequently used to warn us of dangers either present or likely to come upon us. In Mark 13:5, 6, 21-23 we find warnings to beware of being led astray by false teachings. The Lord expects us to “prove all things” and “hold fast to that which is good,” that which is clearly sustained in the Scripture.

The warnings in Mark, 13th chapter, were given by our Lord in answer to the question, “What shall be the sign of Thy presence?” (See Matt. 24:3, Diaglott). There has seemed to be need for watchfulness in regard to the matter of discerning the signs of the Master's presence. We have been tidily blessed in these days in having God's Word explained to us so clearly and harmoniously in the “Scripture Studies.” For instance, what a great help it has been to us to understand not only the “object” but also the “manner” of our Lord's return. (See Vol. 2.) Yet it would seem we are being tested in respect of our appreciation of the light of present truth. So we must watch and “continue in those things which we have learned and been assured of.” (2 Tim. 3:14.) It is sad to see - how some who once enjoyed the truth concerning the second presence of Christ, now seem to be losing 'their appreciation, and begin to question and deny the Lord's presence. Evidently the Lord is permitting the testings and it becomes us to take heed to ourselves. Writing to Timothy the Apostle says (1 Tim. 4:16), “Take heed unto thyself and unto the doctrine, continue in them; for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee.”

The deceptions of Satan are presented in such a subtle manner that only the humble, watchful ones will be able to detect them. Our Lord warned us that the deceptions would be such that they would “seduce the very elect,” if such a thing were possible. Only by the Lord's grace can we hope to resist the snares; and yet the Lord expects us to watch and we must each do our part to keep ourselves pure and to assist to keep each other clean and in harmony with the message of present truth. In this connection we must not overlook our responsibility 'in the matter of our appointments of Elders. The Apostle lays down for us the necessary requirements of an Elder. Such should be found “holding fast the faithful word as he hath been taught, that he may be able by sound doctrine both to exhort and convince the gainsayers.” (Titus 1:9.) Writing to Timothy the Apostle says, “O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust.” (1 Tim. 6:20.) And again, “That good thing which was committed unto thee keep by the holy spirit which dwelleth in us. (2 Tim. 1:14.)

If Paul had been living amongst us here to-day, do we think he would have us regard the present truth, i.e., the understanding of “Tabernacle Shadows,” the Church's part in the sin-offering; and the light concerning the “Parousia” of our Lord, as matters of minor importance? Would not the Apostle require that these important doctrines be firmly held and fearlessly presented, especially by Elders and representative brethren? The question arises: Can we have the Lord's approval if we endorse and uphold brethren as teachers who do not affirm their loyalty to the harvest message of Present Truth? There seems to be much need for earnest watchfulness to keep ourselves from the tendency to lower the standard of truth for the sake of, gaining numbers. Unity is a good thing; but unity that is attained at the expense of loyalty to the truth is undesirable. "Look to yourselves," says the apostle John, "that we lose not those things which we have wrought, but that we receive a full reward." (2 John 8.) So we must watch against the subtle influence of false teachings.

Then, again, we are to watch ourselves in regard to the way in which we meet trials and persecutions; see Mark 13:9-13. These verses describe some of the tribulations which would come upon the Lord's followers because of their faithfulness to His cause and name. When persecution or opposition come upon us we must take heed to ourselves and seek for grace and wisdom from above that we may manifest the Lord's spirit and patiently endure The trial of our faith and love. Let us consider Him who, "when He was reviled, reviled not again, when He suffered He threatened not, but committed Himself to Him that judgeth righteously." We must seek for that spirit that will be ready to do good to those who may oppose and hinder us.

Then we need to watch ourselves and preserve the spirit of love and kindness toward brethren who may view certain truths of Scripture differently from us. While we may not be able to have the same degree of happy, helpful fellowship with brethren who do not esteem the message of present truth sufficiently to contend earnestly for it, yet love for them would hope that they may be recovered from their condition of indifference. But what is the best way to help brethren who are getting into the luke-warm condition respecting "present truth"? We think the best way is not to condone their lack and hide our light under a bushel, but rather to let the light shine out and demonstrate our loyalty to our Lord and to His message—the message of the "present truth."

The message of the Lord through the prophet Jeremiah says: "He that hath My word let him speak My word faithfully." (Jer. 23:28.) Loyalty to the truth requires that we let the light shine out. We are to speak the truth in love and in kindness but at the same time with fearlessness. We must not have that fear of man that brings a snare.

Another line along which we must watch is brought to our attention in Luke 21:34-36, which please read. Along with our watching and taking heed to ourselves there must be prayer. Watching and praying must be combined.

As another has said: "Whoever would make progress in the spiritual way must not only pray with the spirit and understanding, but he must also watch against the sinful tendencies of his own flesh—self-gratification and selfishness; also against the allurements of the world toward so-called pleasures, worldly ambitions, honour amongst men, the love of money, etc. Also he must watch against the wiles of the Adversary, —whose deceitful attacks usually come upon the Lord's people as 'an angel of light'—to deceive them into forms and ceremonies of churchianity substituting before the mind, affections and consecrated intentions, human sentiments, methods, works and objectives, instead of the 'hope set before us in the gospel' (Col. 1:23) and its various exceeding great and precious promises by which incentives the Lord has called us to walk and to run, by faith and not by sight, following in the footsteps of our Redeemer."

In thinking of this matter of watching we realize that all true watchers must also be prayers, and that all fervent prayers will also be watchers. Prayer represents the faith; watching represents the works which must accompany it, so long as it is a living faith; for as the Apostle declares, "Faith without works is dead"—it speedily loses its vitality, its value, its very existence.

In Luke 12:35-37 our Lord gave a parable to illustrate this lesson of the necessity for watchfulness. A wealthy householder is represented as absent for a considerable portion of the night at a wedding feast, and expecting on his return that the servants of his household would be awake and alert to receive him and any company he might bring with him. It was expected of such servants that they would not only not retire to bed, but that they would not even get drowsy. To give their master a proper reception they should be thoroughly awake, quick to hear and respond to his knock, and to "open unto him immediately." Hence, in the parable, such servants are represented as having their loins girt about and their lamps burning brightly. The custom of Orientals at that time was to wear long, loose, flowing robes. These, when they were resting, were loosened at the girdle, but when attending to business they were drawn tightly at the waist with a girdle or belt to prevent them from interfering with proper service. Lamps, which were the mode of illumination, were also necessary in the night, and should not be permitted to grow dim, but be trimmed as necessity required.

Our Lord points out that such faithful servants would be appreciated by their master, and that he would give them a reward—he would honour them by treating them as his friends, and bring forth to them of the good things of his pantry. He would indeed gird himself as a servant and serve these faithful ones; and for the master of the house to do this would imply the bringing forth of the very best that he possessed. But in order to fulfil the conditions and be thus acceptable to their master they must be ready in whatever hour of the night he might come.

The parable without question refers to the second coming of our Lord Jesus, and points out to all of His faithful servants the proper attitude of watchfulness and preparation to receive Him at whatever time His second advent should occur. It also indicates that it was the Lord's good pleasure not to reveal definitely and positively to His people when to expect His arrival, but rather that all the way down through this night-time which we designate the Gospel Age, and which must necessarily precede the morning of the Millennial Day, they should be continually awake, alert, waiting for Him, ready to receive Him at any moment. They should have the loins of their minds girt up and be active in thought, in word and in deed, in every matter pertaining to the Master's service, that they might be approved of Him. The lamp of the divine Word, so necessary to their enlightenment, should be with them, well supplied with the oil—the holy spirit—and well trimmed, in the sense of rightly dividing the Word of Truth, and seeking to understand through it their proper attitude of heart and conduct, to be pleasing to their Master.

The parable is a very simple one, and could scarcely be misapprehended by the class for whom parables are intended—the consecrated Church. These realize at once that the central thought with them, as the Lord's servants, must be such readiness of heart and mind and character as will be pleasing to the Master when He shall come to gather His "jewels,"—His watching, faithful servants. This thought of the return of the Lord, and of the blessings which He has promised to His faithful ones at that time, is the great incentive set before the called ones of this Gospel Age. It is for the Master's favour and the consequent exaltation with Him to a share in His kingdom, then to be established, and a share in the great work of blessing the world of mankind, then to be accomplished, that all of the saints are seeking, watching, praying, striving.

Well has the Apostle said, "He that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as He (the looked-for Master) is pure." It is this hope that leads the faithful servants continually to the lamp of the divine Word, to trim it and to thereby keep themselves thoroughly awake, quick of ear and quick of eye in respect of any and every thing relating to the will of the expected Master, and such conditions of heart-purity and robes of righteousness as would be pleasing and acceptable in His sight at His arrival.

Addressing the church at Sardis (Rev. 3:3) our Lord shows what would be the result for those who grow careless and fail to watch. His words are: "Remember, therefore, how thou hast received and heard, and observe it, and reform. If, therefore, thou shouldst not watch, I may have come on thee as a thief, and thou mayest by no means know at what hour I may have come on thee." (Diaglott.)

There can be no mistake concerning the application of our Lord's parable. He applies it in a few words, saying,

"Be ye, therefore, ready also; for the Son of Man cometh at an hour that ye think not." That is to say, watchfulness for the great event of the King's return would be absolutely indispensable, and would constitute a mark or indication of those worthy to be called true servants or "brethren." We are not to make the mistake of supposing our Lord to mean, Watch incessantly, for you will not know when I do come. This would be an absurdity. The central thought of the parable is that the faithful servants, awake and watching, at the proper time will hear the knock, will recognize the Lord's presence, will open to Him, in the sense of believing and accepting His presence, and will be rewarded by Him with special knowledge respecting heavenly things which would be "meat in due season" to their comfort and joy. All who are faithfully watching shall know when the event occurs, as surely as those who do not watch shall not know.

The apostle Paul speaks of this same great event and of the same class of watchers, designating them brethren; and after explaining that the second coming of our Lord would be upon the world as a thief and a snare, and that the world will not escape certain trouble and overthrow of their systems and politics, he explains that on the contrary,

"Ye brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief"—you have your lamps trimmed and burning.

As he further explains, the brethren worthy to know and to escape the troubles incidental to that time do not sleep as do others; they are watchful; they are alert, and thus they know of the Bridegroom's arrival, of which the world knows not; and in the time of His presence these brethren are fed with special spiritual food. The Master Himself is sending forth, at the hands of His servants, the needed meat in due season, things new and old for the strengthening of His household for this present time of trial, and for the perfecting of the saints for the work of ministry to which He has called them. (1 Thess. 5:1-6.)

In verse 41 Peter says, "Lord, speakest Thou this parable unto us, or even to all?" He wondered whether or not the Lord meant that the specially chosen twelve apostles were these servants who must watch and wait for Him at His second coming, or whether the parable was of general application, and meant that everybody should watch. Our Lord's answer indicated that whoever was faithfully serving the household of faith and watching for his Lord would be greatly blessed and rewarded.

Every child of God is a steward — a steward of his own talents, opportunities, privileges, abilities in the Lord's service—and each one is to recognize that his responsibilities as a steward in these respects is toward the Master who gave him the talents, ;and who will require at his hands an account thereof—an increase by reason of proper use. We are not therefore to understand our Lord's answer to Peter to imply that none of the household but the one are in any sense of the word regarded as stewards. Such an interpretation would be in conflict with numerous Scripture. We are to notice that the stewardship mentioned is a stewardship of spiritual food.

Neither does it imply that in the end of this Age, and at the time of our Lord's presence and the sending forth of meat in due season, that the special steward alone will have to do with the dispensing of the food for the household, for, as shown in Matthew's account of this parable (Matt. 24:45-51) there are "fellow-servants" whose duty and privilege it would be to co-operate with this steward in the dispensing of food to the household of faith. The thought would seem to be that in the interest of the household, and for its comfort and joy and blessing, the Master at an appropriate time would furnish to some one of his servants a key to the precious things of His Word, thus providing "things new and old" for the sustenance and joy of the household and minister these through numerous fellow-servants, as well as through the one to whom the key of this stewardship would be specially entrusted.

In this connection we are to remember that every stewardship brings with it weighty responsibilities, and while such responsibilities are not to be shirked, neither are any of them to be undertaken lightly, without appreciating the fact that everyone who becomes a servant of the household of faith has thereby a larger degree of responsibility, not only toward the household, but toward the Master of the house, from whom comes every commission. And every servant is to remember that unfaithfulness would surely lead to his removal, even as every manifestation of humble faithfulness on his part will endear him to the Master and to every faithful member of the household, and imply his continuance in the Master's service. So we are to "watch," to "take heed" to ourselves in respect of the stewardship now entrusted to us; and seek to be faithful and wise stewards.

The Lord bless you and keep you.

"In thy going out and coming in May God protect thee,

When skies hang low and faith grows dim
May God direct thee,

When ways are long and hills are steep
May God uphold thee,

And all thy days safe in His love
May God enfold thee."

Christ our Passover Sacrificed for Us

THE observance of the Memorial of our Lord's death becomes increasingly sacred and precious to those who make progress in the knowledge and understanding of the full significance of His sacrificial death. Recognising our Lord Jesus as the centre of the Divine Plan and His death on Calvary as the basis of God's redemptive purpose, the Passover Supper becomes a holy reminder, not only of God's boundless grace, but also of our own sacred duties and responsibilities. Without doubt it is to the edification of Christ's followers that they earnestly and reverently heed the example of and listen to their Divine Master, in respect of the observance of the simple yet powerful Memorial,—“This do in remembrance of Me.”

Most of our friends are familiar with the Passover lesson found in the typical experiences of ancient Israel, centuries in advance of our Lord's first advent, but a further review will no doubt prove of benefit to all, and to this end the chapter in “The New Creation,” entitled “The Passover of the New Creation,” is highly recommended.

From experience, we gather that it is much more impressive and inspiring to celebrate an important matter on its anniversary, if possible; to recall the deeds and words and place ourselves with the chief actors of that greatest of all dramas which nineteen centuries ago ended at Calvary. It is always an inspiration to the devout follower of the Lord to bring before his vision the general picture of that first solemn Supper instituted by the Saviour. As one has written concerning that sacred evening: “It was towards the evening, probably when the gathering dusk would prevent all needless observation, that Jesus and His disciples walked from Bethany, by that old familiar road over the Mount of Olives, which His sacred feet were never again destined to traverse until after death. We catch no glimpse of the little company till we find them assembled in that ‘large upper room’ —perhaps the very room where three days afterwards the sorrow-stricken apostles first saw their risen Saviour—perhaps the very room where, amid the sound of a rushing mighty wind, each received ‘power’ from on high with Pentecostal blessing.”

Apparently it was just when the regular Jewish Passover Supper was ended that our Lord instituted the Memorial, as it is recorded: “When the hour had come they sat down to eat the Passover, and Jesus said unto His disciples, ‘With desire I have desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer.’” Probably one reason He specially desired to eat this Passover with them was that He there designed breaking the truth of its significance to them, to the extent that they could receive it. See Matt, 26:26-28, We cannot doubt that the design of the Master was to call their minds from the typical lamb to Himself, the Antitype.

There seem to be little room for difference of opinion as to the significance of the emblems. Obviously, the bread and wine symbolized the body and blood of our Lord. As a man He was the living bread (literally, bread of life) which came down from heaven to give life to the world. The illustration is perfect: mankind is dying for want of life and needs some food so full of life-producing qualities that it will arrest the wasting of death and repair and restore to life.

Taking our Lord's words in their simple, obvious sense, how beautiful is their lesson. Unleavened (pure) bread, henceforth, would at this Memorial represent our Lord, the Bread from heaven, of which: we may eat and have everlasting life. But this. “bread” must be “broken” in order to be appropriated. So we see that it was necessary not only for our Lord to come from heaven as the “bread,” but necessary also that He be broken in death—sacrificed for our sins, ere we could appropriate His merit and enjoy everlasting life.

The “fruit of the vine” was also introduced as an important part of this Memorial of our Lord's loving sacrifice. He explained that it represented His blood—“The blood of the New Covenant shed for many for the remission of sins.” What a reminder this is of the ransom-price necessary; the broken bread taught a part of the lesson, the “cup” taught the remainder of it.

The Lord's disciples must by faith partake of (appropriate) both the “bread” and the “cup,” or they cannot be one with Him. More than this: the Apostle shows that there is another subsequent view of this Memorial. We who thus eat and drink—who thus partake of our Saviour's merits—are reckoned in with Him as His “members,” as His “Body,” being broken; and our lives sacrificed in His service, under His direction, are counted as a part of His sacrifice. The Apostle's words are found in 1 Cor, 10:16, 17.

The drinking of the Lord's cup by the Church represents our participation in the sufferings of Christ- in-the-present time. If we drink -not of His cup, neither shall we share with Him in His glory. He said, “Drink ye all of it.” All must drink, and the entire cup must be drained during this Age. And let us never forget what a great privilege it is to be permitted to have a share in the sufferings of Christ. We see that our beloved Lord drank of the bitter cup to its dregs, and did so, thankfully; and we are to remember that He gave the cup to us. “If we suffer (with Him) we shall also reign with Him.”

Through lack of proper appreciation of this Memorial which symbolizes both our justification and consecration, to be dead with 'Christ, the Apostle says, "Many are weak and sickly among you and many sleep." The truth of this remark is evident; a failure to appreciate and a losing sight of the truths represented in this Supper, are the cause of the weak, sickly and sleepy condition of many in the Church. Nothing so fully awakens and strengthens the saints as a clear appreciation of the atoning work of our Lord, and their share with Him in His sufferings and sacrifice in behalf of humanity.

"Let a man examine himself and so let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup." These words are not to be taken as a discouragement by any sincere follower of Christ, but rather to impress the solemnity and depth of meaning that should be always associated with partaking of the emblems. Let us then count all things of this earth as loss and dross that we may win Christ and be found in Him. As the experiences of the consecrated way come to us, let us not be afraid, nor "think it strange concerning the fiery trials that shalt try us," "for unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on Him, but also to suffer for His sake"—to suffer for our beloved Master now, and by and by be glorified together with Him in the Kingdom eternal.

"Lord I would follow Thee
In all the way
Thy weary feet have trod;
Yes, if I may."

Ah, yes! How deep are the Lord's lessons ! And the deeper we look, the more beauty we see, the eyes of our understanding opening more and more as we appreciate and heartily obey. "Let us keep the feast," in both senses, then: (1) Appropriating and feasting on the great work done for us by our Redeemer and the riches of grace granted us through Him; and (2) appreciating our privilege of joint-sacrifice with our Redeemer—laying down our lives in His service, for the brethren, and thus "filling up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ." Left behind, not because our Lord could not suffer enough for all, nor because His sufferings were not sufficient for all, but because He wished to have us with Him, to share His nature and His glory, and only by suffering with Him as His members, could we be allowed to share. His glory, honour and immortality.

"I'm not my own, dear Lord—to Thee
My every power, by right belongs:
My privilege to serve I see,
Thy praise to raise in tuneful songs.

And so, beside Thy sacrifice,
I would lay down my little all.
'Tis lean and poor, I must confess;
I would that it were not so small."

Do you believe

Do you believe that the whole of your affairs—trivial as well as great, irregular as well as the ordinary 1” 1 course—are under His absolute, daily, hourly supervision and control?—that nothing can possibly arise, to you or any other, which is not foreseen by Him, arranged for by Him, brought by Him within the circle of His great plan?—that the little incidents of each day, as well as the solemn crises of life, are His ordering? Here, then, lies the real remedy for the uneasiness of mind which is caused by interruptions. View them as part of God's loving and wise plan for your day, and try to make out His meaning in sending them. They are the good works, which God hath before ordained that thou shouldst walk in them. “I have created him for My glory.”—Goulburn.

Convention Bible Study.

THE four Bible Studies at the Christmas Convention were much enjoyed, and the one in Heb. 12:18-24 is now reported for the benefit of our readers everywhere.

In the introduction it was pointed out, that in order to understand this epistle of Paul's, it was necessary to remember that it was written to Israelites, and was a book of comparisons between the types under the Law Covenant and the antitypes—that is, between shadows of good things to come and the realities which began with the commencement of the Gospel Age. (Col. 2:16, 17.) "The law and the prophets were until John, since then the kingdom of heaven is preached." (Luke 16:16.) Paul writes somewhat similarly to the Corinthians in 2 Cor. 3.

In the verses leading up to those selected for the study Paul had spoken of the necessity of "looking diligently," and of making straight paths for our feet if we were to inherit the "birthright," and had referred to the fact of Esau having sold his birthright for a mess of pottage. What Esau forfeited was an earthly blessing. "For ye are not come to Mount Sinai with all its smoke and burning, fire and blackness, darkness and tempest, the sound of a trumpet and a voice of words . . . so terrible was the sight." Such was the occasion of negotiating the Law Covenant with Israel, with its commandments and laws based on absolute justice. That arrangement came to an end at the Cross, when the temple veil was rent and no more typical sacrifices of bulls and calves were acceptable to God, for the real sacrifice, the Lamb of God, had died for the sin under which man was burdened. (Col. 2:14.1)

We have come to the beginning of the fulfilment of the antitype, which will ultimately mean the establishment of the New Covenant promised in Jer. 31:31-34. So we have come to Mount Zion, that is, the kingdom of heaven class is being chosen—the Church, the little flock to whom it is the Father's good pleasure to give the kingdom—as joint heirs with Christ. This class is seen in Rev. 14:1, with the Lamb that stood on Mount Zion. This is "the city of the living God," "the heavenly Jerusalem." The "city" represents the new government of which Christ will be King. Paul speaks of it again in Gal. 4:25, 26, where he says Hagar represented the old Jerusalem under the bondage of the Law, but Sarah represents the Jerusalem which is above, "which is the mother of us all."

This will be the new government of earth when Satan and his angels are dethroned and bound so that they can deceive the nations no more. There will be Christ in His throne and the overcomers, the saints, are "to sit with Him in His throne," and an innumerable company of angels will serve them. There will be the general assembly of the church of the first born, whose names are written in heaven. It was understood that this referred to all who were saved out of all nations during the Gospel Age, including the "little flock" and the great multitude of Rev. 7:14, 15. The spirits (lives) of just men made perfect it was thought referred to the ancient worthies, some of whom Paul had mentioned in the previous chapter (Heb. 11).

We have come to Jesus the mediator of the New Covenant; not that He is operating under the New Covenant yet;

He is only negotiating or establishing it. The blood has been shed and the Church is being dealt with and prepared as "ministers of the New Covenant." The blood of Abel cried out for vengeance, but the blood of Jesus speaks of peace through the payment of the penalty of sin and the inauguration of a covenant by which all the willing and obedient will be reconciled to God. This New Jerusalem or Mount Zion must continue its rule until that is accomplished—"He must reign until all enemies are under His feet, and when all things shall be subdued unto Him, then shall the Son also Himself be subject unto Him that put all things under Him, that God may be all in all." Cor. 15:25, 28.)

Several questions were considered and probably the following quotation from S.S., Vol. 4, pages 629-31, covers most of the points:—"That Moses the Mediator of the Law Covenant was a type of Christ the Mediator of the New Covenant is clearly taught in the Scriptures and generally recognised, but all have not recognised that Moses was a type of the entire Christ,—Head and Body—and that in this sense the entire Gospel Age has been the period of Christ's raising up. This, however, is the only application of the type which will fit in a number of cases; for instance, in Acts 3:22, 23.

"At the institution of the Law Covenant at Mount Sinai, Moses seems to have been a type of the complete Christ (Head and Body) at the introduction of the Millennial Age, when the New Covenant will be introduced to the world,—after the sound of the great trumpet and the black darkness and great earthquake, etc., of the day of vengeance shall have appalled mankind and made them ready to hear the voice of the great Teacher and glad to accept His New Covenant. This is distinctly pointed out in Heb. 12:18-22.

"After this Moses went up into the Mount (Kingdom) and was glorified in type; that is, the skin of his face did shine so that Israel could not look at him. This would seem to typify the completion of the Church (Christ, Head and Body) in glory. And the veil which Moses afterwards wore before the people, but laid off when with the Lord in the Mount, would seem to typify the earthly phase of His kingdom, the ‘princes of all the earth; through whom the Christ will speak to the people and be represented, the glory being hidden. This seems to be a striking illustration of the intimate relationship which will exist between the earthly ‘princes’ and the heavenly Kings and Priests.

“As the first tables of the Law that were broken represented the failure of the Law Covenant, by reason of the ‘weakness of the flesh,’ so the second tables represent the New Covenant, of which Christ is the Mediator, and which will not fail. This New Covenant will become operative toward the world after the Body of Christ is complete; meantime the electing of the members of the great prophet like unto Moses continues. (Acts 3:23.) Now note the fact that it was when the second tables of the Law were delivered, that Moses was changed so that thereafter he wore a veil before the people, because his face shone.

“The inauguration of the Covenant will be accompanied with such awe-inspiring scenes as will cause the whole world to tremble with fear and to gladly recognise the Anointed of the Lord as King of the whole earth. As Israel intreated that the Lord would not speak to them any more—by the terrible sights and sounds witnessed at Sinai --so here, all peoples will desire to have the Lord Jehovah cease speaking to them in His wrath and vexing them in His hot displeasure and will be glad to hear instead the great Mediator, to recognise Him as the King whom Jehovah sets over them, the great antitype of Moses—the veiled (hidden) Prophet, Priest and King. Compare Heb. 12:19 and Psa. 2:5, 6.”

Correspondence.

[This letter from our Canadian Brother has been unavoidably held over till this issue.]

Canada,

December, 1936. Dear-Brethren,

Loving greetings in the name of our precious Redeemer!

Here we are at the close of another year—and what a ..year it has been—just overflowing with momentous events. Surely we are enabled to see more clearly the stately stepping of our God in the mighty upheavals of • the world's affairs.

Europe is again trembling with the tramp of mighty armies; factories are working day and night turning out new implements of death and destruction; chemical laboratories are creating diabolical gases for wholesale slaughter—and even while the nations bowed their heads for a two minutes silence in memory of the poor boys who fell in that terrible four years carnage to make the world “safe for democracy”—even in those moments, shots and shells „were shrieking through the air and creating a reign of terror in war-torn Spain.

The waste-paper baskets of the League of Nations are being filled with “scraps of paper” as one after another of the world's great treaty clauses are being torn up and violated. The rule of Dictators is becoming supreme—while Democracy weeps by the open grave of her forlorn hopes for world peace and safety. The talk of war is heard in all countries—and the mad rush for armaments is on; yet the fear of anarchy and revolution haunts all states-,men, even as Great Britain's Prime Minister said, “the inevitable end will be anarchy and revolution.” We are more and more convinced of the truth of that Scripture ‘Which says “the wisdom of their wise men shall perish.”

We have witnessed a world with over sixty millions of its ‘inhabitants unemployed—and hundreds of millions on -the verge of starvation—and we have heard the “powers ‘ that be” dolefully claiming that no money was available 'to create employment nor to relieve the intense sufferings Of the people. Loudly and sonorously they asserted that “all their money was gone and all their “assets were frozen.” Yet-, overnight as it were, we have observed them “give the lie” to their own solemn statements, by opening up their purse-strings and recklessly pouring out billions of dollars for the increase of navies, enlarged armies, additional submarines, augmented war planes, guns, ammunition, poison gases and all the many and varied devilish ‘machines for slaughter that could be invented by minds that were under Satanic influence. What a picture! Verily, it is a picture of a world gone mad. Truly did the prophet say: “Darkness covers the earth and gross darkness the people.”

With what indifference the people around us view these Colossal happenings. Football, baseball, horse-racing, dancing, anything at all—no matter how trivial (just as the Master said in Luke 17:26-30)—easily fills their foolish minds, while the greatest scene in the world's history is being enacted, namely, the close of this long night-time of sorrow, suffering and death—the ending of the present evil age and the absolute destruction of all its vaunted might and power by a terrific outburst of bloody revolution and fiery anarchy that will spread to every quarter of the globe. Truly a fitting climax to a reign of six thousand years of misery, injustice, hatred, starvation and oppression—where LOVE and JUSTICE had no place and where only MIGHT was considered RIGHT.

And how do WE feel as WE view these things in the light of the glorious truth of God's Word and perceive the ten kings arising to have their power for “one hour” with the beast? Why, our hearts go out in praise and thanksgiving to our Heavenly Father for all His manifold love and favour to us in drawing us out of darkness. into His marvellous LIGHT; and as we ponder over the momentous events of our day, we remember that “the nations are as a drop of a bucket and are counted as the small dust of the balance” (Isa. 40:15) in the sight of our great God, who is working out His wondrous Plan, and using these very nations for the accomplishment of His great purpose.

We bow our heads in humility and reverence as we recall that “known unto God are ALL His works from the beginning” and that our loving Heavenly Father planned it all for the one grand final outcome of BLESSING ALL THE FAMILIES OF THE EARTH—after they have learned the futility of their own folly and their need of a Saviour and a Mighty One.

As we take a survey of this chaotic scene—and then remember that our Master is indeed present and in full control of all of earth's affairs—we have absolute confidence and we look around with full assurance of faith for some tangible sign of His glorious Kingdom, and we recall His words: “Look at the fig tree and indeed all the trees.” (Luke 21; 19, Moffatt.) Ah, yes, we have been closely watching “all the trees”—all the Gentile nations—and we see them in a state of chaos and decline preparatory to their final overthrow. We see the “night-time when no man can work” even now settling like a thick cloud over Russia, Germany and Italy. and rapidly spreading to other European countries as they become engulfed by fascism or communism.

Let us, however, take a look at the “fig tree”—the Jewish nation—and notice how it is putting forth its leaves.

The reports from Palestine in the last two decades give us great cause for rejoicing for we see the Jews returning and rebuilding their ancient home-land, and their progress is truly marvellous and worthy of our highest admiration.

True, the Jews are returning to Palestine in unbelief and have yet to experience another spasm of very severe trouble before they finally become the world’s foremost nation, nevertheless, the many prophecies concerning them are being rapidly fulfilled before our eyes; and now that the lease of power to the Gentile nations has expired we can trace God’s favour returning to His ancient people, and we see that their work of rebuilding Palestine is a preparatory work to God’s raising up their Ancient Worthies, and of their becoming the nucleus of God’s Kingdom on earth after the fire of anarchy has swept the present evil systems and governments out of the way.

Therefore, dear Brethren, we can discern more clearly than ever before not only “these things” BEGINNING to come to pass. BUT HURRYING ON TO THEIR FINAL CONSUMMATION, and we can, with added confidence, LOOK UP and LIFT UP our heads knowing that our DELIVERANCE is very nigh. And so, let us not cast away our confidence which has great recompense of reward, but let us continue to do with our- might whatever our hands find to do, running with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the Author and Finisher of our faith. Let us take fresh courage—our pilgrimage is almost over—so let us see to it that “no man take our crown,” for we know that He is faithful who promised.

With much Christian love and Christian greetings to all you dear ones,

By His kind favour

Your Brother in Christ.

Bear, therefore, since God bears with thee: he that bears most with others, shows the greatest strength. He that sympathises most with the infirmities of others, approaches most nearly the spirit of his Master.—From “Golden Treasury.”

Character.

(Convention Address. 1 Pet. 5:10.)

WHAT is the origin or meaning of this word “character”? According to record it is the same word in Greek as in English, and in the first place was the name of a sculptor’s tool. Then it takes in the thought of the tooling process, the shaping or forming of the sculptures. The word to-day is given a still higher meaning also, and may be associated with as high a connection as the Divine character, which is the perfect example. ‘speaking in Hebrews of our Lord as the “express image,” this in the Greek is “charaktare,” and is interpreted in Strong’s Concordance as, engraver, •the tool or the person.

Now, as an engraver must have a set idea in his mind in regard to that which he is going to hew out of the rough material, so must the individual Christian recognise the true ideal of life and follow it with unwavering will and purpose. Thus we realise how important it is that we have proper ideals before our minds, that they be noble ones, of high standard. And this is where the value of the doctrines of Christ set forth in the Scriptures are manifest. They set before God’s people the only true and noble ideal and thus enable those in the school of Christ to develop the character which God can approve.

It has been recorded that every man is the sculptor of his own career. To a large degree this is so, but with the Christian there is a great difference. He gives himself to the Lord, who undertakes to work in him, as we read, “both to will and to do His pleasure.” In another passage it says, “We are His workmanship.” The Lord does not work in us without our co-operation, but He is the mainstay and we are leaning on Him.

While the Scriptures are particular to maintain liberty of conscience for all the Lord’s people, they distinctly set before us the thought that God is the supervisor of the affairs of all His children and that their prosperity will result from their appreciation of Christ’s headship and recognition of those whom God hath “set in the body” as teachers and helpers. The “liberty wherewith Christ makes free,” does not give us a liberty to do things in opposition to His will; but rather gives freedom from sin.

A necessary disposition all real Christians must fully realise in the development of character is to “pray without ceasing.” It constitutes one of the greatest of God’s blessings. The privilege of approaching the throne of heavenly grace to obtain mercy and find grace to help in every time of need cannot be too highly esteemed. The interests of the day committed to the Lord in the morning should be continually remembered as being in His care throughout the day. The experiences of life as they come should be accepted as under the Divine will, and thanks should be rendered for them whether agreeable or disagreeable to the natural man, “for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you.” This is living up to the high privilege His grace has provided for us.

We read in the Scriptures, “God is light”; our Lord Jesus was called “the true light,” and we remember it was He that said of His followers, “Ye are the light of the world.” The Psalmist declares, “Thy Word is a lamp to my feet, a lantern to my footsteps.” The holy spirit of the Father and the Son has been enkindled in our hearts through the Word of grace and in proportion as we have fed this spirit with the truth we have become burning and shining lights in the world. But how easily such a holy flame may be grieved or even extinguished, and perhaps very quickly, too! A sufficient intake of the spirit of the world might extinguish or quench that flame. If not in one way, then in another we fully realise that our besetments come from the world, the flesh or the Adversary, yet the Apostle intimates that we are responsible or the indwelling of the spirit with us. We can take ourselves out of the Lord’s hands if we choose, but the Adversary is powerless to do this, if we abide in the Lord in faith, love and obedience. As the flame of love is to be kept burning in our individual hearts, so in the congregation it is also to be guarded.

An element very necessary in these days in developing character is that of patience. We know that God is operating all things according to His own will, along the lines of His wise and righteous laws, and to be impatient would be the greatest folly as He would not be likely to alter any of His fixed principles to suit the various hurried inclinations some possess. It is prudent at all times to wait the Lord's time and way, and the indications of His will in every case, both with regard to ourselves and others. "They that put their trust in Him shall never be confounded." "Let patience have her perfect work"; "Rest in the Lord and wait patiently for Him."

We notice in Rev. 3:10, the reward of those who exercise His patience: "Because thou hast kept the word of My patience I will also keep thee from the hour of temptation." In this instance special significance is laid upon patience. Examining the word more closely we notice that it is translated from two different Greek words, and the one in this passage of Scripture has the thought of constancy, cheerful endurance—to endure evil in a cheerful, willing, patient manner. This is therefore an element of character which represents something more than just restraint of feeling and action. It signifies such a development of heart and character as manifests itself in an endurance of wrong or affliction with contentment, without rebellion of will, with full acquiescence in the Divine wisdom and love.

It is only proper that the Lord should demand that those whom He would account worthy of joint-heirship in the kingdom shall not only appreciate His goodness and His character, but that they demonstrate their loyalty thoroughly to those principles to the extent of a joyful willingness to suffer for His sake—to endure patiently on behalf of right. A transitory endurance of one, two or three short trials would not prove the individual to have established character for righteousness, but a patient, cheerful endurance even unto death would prove and demonstrate such a character.

The Apostle Paul exhorts, "Let us run with patience (cheerful endurance) the race set before us." We live in a time when this endurance is most necessary. How few wish to endure anything for righteousness sake, for Christ's sake, or anyone else's sake, and if endurance be thought necessary it is generally with very much of impatience, very much of complaint, more than formerly. This general tendency of the civilised world to non-endurance and impatience necessarily has its bearing and influence to some extent upon those who are seeking to walk in the narrow way, going against the current of public sentiment and custom. We may expect • the growth of this disposition of impatience in Christendom, the general thought amongst its leaders being that they must become more aggressive, with the feeling that if they had taken things into their own hands the world would have been converted sooner. But those who have kept the Lord's word of patient endurance and have sought from Him the needed wisdom, have learned that He has a due time in which His purposes shall all be accomplished. They realise that what is permitted is for a wise purpose in connection with the call and preparation of the little flock to be heirs in the kingdom.

In his letter to the Thessalonians the Apostle gives some further intimations respecting the peculiar trials of the hour of temptation, which has not yet reached its intensity, but which is already working, sifting and separating, because the judgment begins with -the house of God. We are informed that in the closing period of the Gospel Age Satan will put forth great effort with all power and signs and lying wonders. The Apostle explains the reason why it will be thus, "Because they received not the truth in the love of it, that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusions that they should believe a lie, that they all might be condemned who believed not the truth."

Our main object in studying God's Word and His character should always be to bring our own hearts and minds into closer sympathy and likeness and co-operation with His. The Apostle says, "All that will be godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." Now, why should the godly suffer? To be godly would be to live in obedience to God. The Scriptures inform us that "God is love," and if we are godly we must love after the same manner as God. And this is what He desires to see in His people, not just an outward manifestation of devotion to Him and to the brethren. Some people may have the view that love is doing all nice things, conceding to all their ideas and agreeing with them in what they appreciate—that you show no opposing feelings in any way. But that is not the love God shows towards His people. Justice must be behind it all, and often stern justice, too. How pleasant it would seem to some if we just blunder along satisfying our own ideas and all this being passed over by the Lord as if it could not be helped. Why, the lesson would be altogether lost. We know by experience and also by observation that those who live godly in this evil world will suffer to the extent that they are out of harmony with the present evil conditions, yet the promised blessings are to those who are in Christ Jesus.

Satan's arts seem employed at times in getting those who are trying to live godly to contend with one another. One device seems to be used in making some think that their viewpoint is something most important and if not accepted with the same enthusiasm by others they become touchy, if not offended. In this way some bring trouble upon themselves but think they are suffering for righteousness sake. We must see, then, that our influence upon others is uplifting; that we are careful we do not cause others to grieve and cause suffering unnecessarily.

In framing- our characters, trials and sufferings are very helpful. The sufferings that come through heredity cannot be classed as sufferings for Christ. We should rather speak of the sufferings of Christ as being voluntary. The Apostle says that if we suffer with the Lord we shall also reign with Him; he means the sufferings which we bring on ourselves through faithfulness to Him. He speaks further of “filling up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ.” These are not inherited. We are informed that our defects in character are works of the fallen flesh, and in our case (as Christians) these inherited failings and others brought upon ourselves by the violation of the laws of God prior to our entrance into His family as sons, while not sufferings for Christ, will be made advantageous to us. These weaknesses the Father sees fit to leave with us, but assures us that His grace is sufficient to enable us to overcome.

In the building and buttressing of character we need- to watch that we are not cultivating self-assurance, which interferes with true fellowship, but that we develop in that full assurance of faith that results from sanctifying truth. Confidence in self is certainly to be discouraged; we need a strong heart desire to lead us to join wholeheartedly in co-operating with the Lord in His discipline against this self-centred tendency of our flesh. Probably not until His grace has led us to see the flesh in all its uncomeliness can we understand the true situation. The frailties of self had taught the Apostle to abandon such as a guide and to place all his dependance upon the “Captain of our salvation.” He says, “We have a strong consolation to lay hold upon the hope set before us; which hope we have as an anchor of the soul both sure and steadfast.”

The Apostle Peter spoke of “stirring up your pure minds by way of remembrance.” Here it is noticeable that even the pure minds need stirring. Mental alertness is of great value and helps us to give close attention and concentration upon any subject investigated. With some this is very difficult because the mind wanders off on something else, like a person getting sleepy. Our thoughts determine our character, and according to our energy in thought on Christian principles will we progress, by the Lord’s grace and strength.

Question Box.

Question.—Regarding the claim of some that 6000 years of human history was reached in 1872 or 1874, and that Christ’s kingdom began about 1878, how could that be so, seeing that the Times of the Gentiles did not run out until 1914?

Answer.--It ought to be evident to all that Christ’s kingdom on earth could not commence until the “Times of the Gentiles should be fulfilled.” (Luke 21:24.) When Christ begins His reign on earth, Satan, who is the present ruler, will have been bound that he may deceive the nations no more, and all the evidences before our eyes to-day demonstrate the fact that he is still the “Prince of this world.” It would be sad indeed if; after all, our anticipations and prayers such as “Thy Kingdom ‘Come” and “Thy Will be done on Earth as in Heaven,” the last 60 years were a sample of the “peace and good-will” promised under the reign of the Prince of Peace. While the world was bad enough prior to 1878, it was probably never in a more godless condition than it is to-day. During the past 60 years the most terrible war has taken place, and the prediction of St. Paul (2 Tim. 3:1-7) becomes more and more definitely fulfilled.

We do not believe that 6000 years of human history ended with 1872-4, nor that it has yet been reached. Without any question we are living in the “Time of the end” (Dan. 12:4), and that the end of this “Time of the end” will be reached before the present generation passes away. We think it reasonable to suppose that the end of the “Time of the end” will be the end of 6000 years, and that the 7th thousand years will be the period of Christ’s reign on earth.

We think it reasonable to suppose that the period of probation at the end of this “present evil world” will be about the same as that at the end of the “world that was before the flood,” and we rejoice to know that with the establishment of “the world to come wherein dwelleth righteousness” (2 Pet. 3:6, 7, 13) will come a time of blessing, of peace and joy and goodwill among mankind. We still pray “Thy Kingdom come, Thy Will be done on Earth as in Heaven.” (Zeph. 3:8, 9.)

Buoyant Strength.

Oh, to go back across the years long vanished,
To have the words unsaid, the deeds undone,

The errors cancelled, the deep shadows banished,
In the glad sense of a new world begun;

To be a little child, whose page of story
Is yet undimmed, unblotted by a stain,

And the sunrise of primeval glory
To know that life has had its start again!

I may go back across the years long vanished,
I may resume my childhood, Lord, in Thee,

When in the shadow of Thy cross are banished
All other shadows that encompass me:

And o'er the road that now is dark and dreary,
This soul, made buoyant by the strength of rest,

Shall walk untired, shall run and not be weary,
To bear the blessing that has made it blessed.

World Facing Paganism:

What of the Churches and the Gospel?

SPEAKING at the Methodist Conference, 'the Rev. J. Mackenzie, Moderator General of the Presbyterian Church, said that the world was to-day challenging the Christian Church, and it was very largely in revolt against Christian principles. The world was facing paganism. He raised the question whether the Church had accepted too largely the spirit of the world—he felt that the Church seemed powerless to stem the tide of paganism.

It is sad indeed that the Churches have reached such a condition. It may well be asked: What is wrong that they should have lost the inspiration and power of the past ?

When the Church was young, and “ not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble were called” (1 Cor. 1:26), and when the preachers were mostly described as “ignorant and unlearned men,” these could stand up in the power of God and withstand paganism—the truth conquered, and paganism was overthrown.

Has the Gospel, “which is the power of God unto salvation,” lost its power? or have the Churches lost the Gospel and failed to perceive the Bible message for to-day?

Mr. Mackenzie suggests where the fault lies, i.e., the Churches have indeed accepted the spirit of the world. Not only by using worldly methods of raising funds for Christ's work, but also in adopting worldly pleasures in the . endeavour to hold their congregations together, including card parties, dances and various clubs and games, is this in evidence. Then, too, the same is shown by adopting worldly titles, seeking worldly honours in higher educations, etc. In the seminaries for the preparation of ministers, the studies are along the lines of the classics, what is called the higher critical study, the object of which appears to be to find fault with what is written, so that by the time a young minister is turned out to preach the Gospel, he has lost faith in the inspiration of the Bible—he really has no Gospel to preach. He may know all about the ancient philosophers, all about mythology and anything that sounds learned, but very little respecting the Divine Plan of the Ages, or God's great design for blessing all the families of the earth—the good news which shall be to all people.

We may rest assured that the Gospel is still the power of God unto salvation. It is just as “good news” to-day as when first proclaimed; indeed, it shines “brighter and brighter unto the perfect day,” and is just as powerful to withstand paganism, agnosticism, higher criticism and atheism as every other enemy of light and truth.

The Bible can be more clearly understood to-day than ever before. It reveals a glorious design on the part of the Creator that has been and continues to work out as the ages roll along. God is still in the heavens, and is fully able to control; nothing can hinder the progress of His great purposes. He has declared, “My word goeth forth out of My mouth, and shall not return unto Me void; it shall accomplish that which I please.” “The Lord hath purposed, who can disannul it?”

The very conditions of to-day have been clearly foretold--Bible prophecy is fulfilling before our eyes. The following Scriptures will verify this statement:-1 Tim. 4:1-3; 2 Tim. 3:1-5 (this refers to those professing to be godly); 2 Pet. 3:3, 4; Luke 17:26-30; Matt. 24:36-40; Dan. 12:1-4, etc.

God can, and will, make the world halt in its present mad course at the right time. In His wisdom He is allowing it to go its own way and bring experiences which will teach necessary lessons and prepare the hearts and minds of men for the Messianic Age.

At the right time the prince of this world (Satan) will be restrained and Christ will take control of earth's affairs. “judgment will I lay to the line and righteousness to the plummet”; “The knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.” (Isa. 28:17; 11:9.)

The time of trouble now developing like dark clouds over all the earth will bring men to their senses and teach them that there is no life worth living apart from God and His righteousness. Obedience to the Divine rule will bring peace and goodwill. This is shown throughout the Bible; for instance, Zephaniah 3:8, 9. When the fiery time of trouble has destroyed all the selfish and unrighteous human systems then the pure language (the true Gospel) will be turned to the people, and they will call upon the name of the Lord with one consent.

The difficulty with the Churches is that the leaders do not know their Bibles; they do not know the Gospel, and therefore they have not the power to withstand the errors and worldly influences. The truths of God's Word have been beclouded by the false doctrines of the dark ages, introduced into Church teachings by paganism. The clergy of today are like the clergy at our Lord's first advent, blinded by traditions which contradict the law and the prophets.

As then, so now, these leaders in Christendom cannot think that anyone out of their "standing" or class could possibly assist them to understand the way of the Lord more perfectly. The Jewish leaders were persuaded that they were the only people through whom God would send any message. Jesus spoke against their traditions, and anyway, "He was only the carpenter's son from Nazareth," and "could any good thing come out of Nazareth?"

Just as it was in that day when the Nathaniels had to "dig for truth as men dig for silver," so now the earnest truth seekers must search for themselves. Finding that no reasonable solutions to difficulties can be found in the Churches, they have to seek elsewhere. The Scriptures show that this condition of things would prevail at the time of the end—that the true Christians would be gathered out of the religious systems. Indeed, when the Laodicean condition of the Church is reached God's people are commanded "to come out of her" (Rev. 3:14-21; 18:4, 5), and in the Lord's great prophecy (Luke 17:30-37) we find they would be gathered like eagles around a carcase, feasting on the good things of revealed truths.

"He Faileth Not."

Each happy morn when I awake,
This promise for the day I take,
"I'll never leave Thee, nor forsake,"
He faileth not.

How sweet His word unto my soul,
To cleanse from sin and make me whole,
To cheer, encourage and console,
He faileth not.

Along life's road I'll fear no ill,
For Christ my Lord is with me still,
He never failed! He never will!
He faileth not.

In daily cares and troubles sore,
When Satan tempts me, o'er and o'er,
His promise stands for evermore,
He faileth not.

When dark the days and drear the skies,
And often bitter trials rise,
When all else fails beneath the skies,
He faileth not.

He bears my burdens, carries, too,
My cares and sorrows all life through,
How good the promise, and how true,
He faileth not.

He has not failed me in the past,
He will not fail while life shall last,
For whereso'er my lot is cast,
He faileth not.

The Saviour's cooling from above,
To take me to His home of love,
His promise I shall faithful prove,
He faileth not.

And when I reach that golden shore,
My trouble and my labour o'er,
I'll sing this song for evermore,
He FAILED me not!

—Selected."

And He went as He was wont to the Mount of Olives.”

Luke 22:39.

THE mountains are Nature's monuments. Like the islands they dwell apart, and like them they give asylum from a noisy and irreverent world. In their silence many a meditative spirit has found leisure for the longest thought, and in their Patmos-like seclusion the brightest visions and largest projects have evolved; whilst by a sort of over-mastering attraction they have usually drawn to themselves the most memorable incident which variegates our human history. And, as they are the natural haunts of the highest spirits, and the appropriate scenes of the most signal occurrences, so they are the noblest cenotaphs. Far off they arrest the eye; and though their hoary chronicle tells its legend of the past, their heaven-pointing elevations convey the spirit onward towards eternity.

We do not wonder that excited fancy has sought relics of the Ark on the top of Ararat; and in the grim solitude of Sinai, it is solemn to remember and easy to believe that the voice of God has spoken here. Elijah has made Carmel all his own and the death of Moses must be ever Pisgah's diadem. The words of Jesus seem still to linger on the hills of Galilee, their lilies forbidding "thought for raiment," and their little birds twittering "No thought for to-morrow," whilst every grassy tuft and scented flower is breathing its own beatitude. But though heavenly wisdom spake on that mountainside, and excellent glory lighted up the top of Tabor, there is another height to which discipleship reverts with fonder memory, and which it treads with softer step—that mountain where beyond any spot in Palestine "God was manifest in flesh"—where the great Intercessor was wont to pray, where Jesus wept over Jerusalem, on whose slopes He blessed the Apostle-band, and sent His message of mercy to mankind—the mountain at whose base lay Bethany and Gethsemane — on whose gentle turf His feet last stood—the Sabbath, pensive and expectant Mount of Olives.”—

“Watch Ye, Stand Fast, Be Strong”

ALONG with the thought of watchfulness, the . Apostle urges us to “stand fast in the faith.” The Scriptures frequently exhort us to stand —“stand fast in the Lord” (Phil. 4:1); “stand fast in one spirit” (Phil. 1:27). Again, in Eph. 6:13. 11, we are exhorted to take the whole armour of God “that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day and having done all to stand. Stand, therefore having your loins girt about with truth.” To stand is to adhere to fixed principles; or, in other words, to be steadfast. To stand fast in the faith we must have loyalty to it, a love for the truth, and an earnest desire to be guided and controlled by the Word and spirit of God.

The prophet Malachi says (ch. 3:2): “Who may abide the day of His coming? and who shall stand when He appeareth ? for He is like a refiner’s fire and like fuller’s soap.” Again the Psalmist says: “Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who’ shall stand in His holy place? He that hath clean hands and a pure heart.; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity nor sworn deceitfully. He shall receive the blessing from the Lord, and righteousness from the God of his salvation.” (Psalm 24:3-4.)

Psalm 91 speaks of a time when a thousand shall fall, yea ten thousand at thy right hand. Is not this condition of things with us today? Do we not’ see that, as the result of false teachings, many have had- their faith severely shaken. The Apostle Paul foretold that in the latter times some would depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils. (1 Tim. 4:2.) Again he exhorts in writing to Timothy: “Continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom, thou hast learned them.” (2 Tim. 3:14.) “For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth and shall be turned unto fables.” (2 Tim. 4:3; 4.) “But watch thou in all things,” he urges; be on guard against the many deceptive influences, and “hold fast the form of sound words which thou hast heard of me, in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus.” (2 Tim. 1:13.)

How we need to hearken to the exhortations of the word of the Lord if we would be of those who will stand fast during this time of trial and testing. We are living in a time when the work of every man (i.e., every one in Christ) is being tested—made manifest; for, says the Apostle (1 Cor. 3:13), “the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man’s work of what sort it is.” How important that we use the proper material in the building of character —the gold, silver and precious stones, representing the proper understanding of the truth of God’s Word, His plan of salvation, and the application of His Word to our hearts and lives. How necessary in the first place that our faith in the ransom-sacrifice of Jesus Christ be clear and firm, and, then, having made a full consecration of ourselves to be dead with Christ, how important- it is that we strive daily to carry out our consecration vows, seeking by the Lord’s help to develop more of the fruits of the spirit. This is the main object of all God’s dealings with us now. As another has said: “Coming to the Scriptures to ascertain God’s will, we find that the great work which God asks of us not work for others, but work in ourselves; subduing-, conquering, ruling self. ‘This is the will. of God (concerning you), even your sanctification.’ (1 Thess. 4:3.) Everything else, therefore—our service of the household of faith, and our doing good unto all men—is subservient to this most important work within, For, as the Apostle by inspiration declares: Though we should preach the gospel eloquently to others, and though we should give all our goods to feed the poor, or become martyrs for a good cause, without love, the spirit of Christ and the Father, developed in us as the ruling principle of life, we would be nothing from the divine standpoint.”

Standing fast in the faith does not mean standing still. As branches in the true Vine, the Lord expects us to respond to the prunings and bring forth the fruits of His spirit. It does us good sometimes to examine ourselves to see if we can discern indications of growth; we want to build up along those lines where we find we are lacking. We must not allow our failures and shortcomings to hinder our progress in the narrow-way. Satan would try to hinder us and cause us to be discouraged at times; but we need to call to mind the promises of God’s Word. The fact that we may have slipped or stumbled into saying or doing something we ought not, must not be allowed to keep us from the throne of grace. The Scriptures invite us to come with confidence to the throne of grace that we may obtain mercy and find grace to help in time of need. Let us remember the Apostle’s words: “If any man sin we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ, the righteous,” and “If we confess our sins He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.”

The Apostle Peter exhorts us to beware lest we fall from our steadfastness. (See 2 Pet. 3:17.) In the same connection (v. 18) he says: “But grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.” If we are progressing—growing in grace and knowledge—we will not be in danger of falling away. So we must keep pressing on-- “Ne’er think the victory won,

Nor once at ease sit down,
Thine arduous task will not be done,
Till thou hast gained thy crown.”

We must not allow the feeling to grow upon us that there is nothing- we can do to help our brethren in our Class meetings. While it would be quite wrong and harmful to over-estimate one’s abilities and usefulness, yet on the other hand we must avoid the tendency that inclines some to say, “I cannot do anything to help the Class in its meetings.” Paul would urge Timothy to “stir up the gift of God which was in him.” (2 Tim. 1:6.) Similarly, Peter exhorts: “As every man has received the gift even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God.” (1 Pet. 4:10.) The truth has been entrusted to us not to enjoy in a selfish way; if we have accepted it for ourselves we have a responsibility toward it to minister it to others; because it is for the entire household of faith. Let us be zealous in doing our part, “holding fast” and “holding forth” the “word of life.” (Phil. 2:15, 16.)

In order to stand fast in the faith we must not allow any compromising spirit to influence us. The Lord puts His Word on a level with Himself, saying, “If a man love Me he will keep My words”; again, “He that loveth Me not keepeth not My sayings.” So we are to be tested. Our love for the Lord and for the truth is to be proved. “The Lord your God proveth you to see whether ye love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul.” Let us see to it that we do not allow anything to hinder our full heart devotion to God. Let us ever remember our great high calling and allow the precious promises to inspire our hearts and strengthen our hands for every duty and privilege and service. As our text exhorts, let us “quit ourselves like men” and “be strong.”

The Psalmist says: “The Lord will give strength unto His people; the Lord will bless His people with peace.” A comment on these words of the Psalmist is as follows: “As we look back over the years that have passed since first we learned to ‘know the joyful sound’ of the true gospel and consecrated ourselves fully to the Lord, we view with sorrow the imperfection of even our best efforts; and as looking forward we see the difficulties that seem to obstruct our onward course, we shall greatly need to reinforce our courage with the special promises of:divine grace to help in every time of need. Among others, we have the blessed assurance that ‘the Lord will give strength unto His people’: ‘Call upon Me in the day of trouble and I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify Me.’” (Psa. 50:15.)

As soldiers under our great Captain, we have enlisted in no uncertain struggle unless our own faint-heartedness or unfaithfulness should make it so. We are fully supplied with the whole armour of God, which will amply protect us against the fiery darts of the Adversary, if only we accept it and carefully buckle it on. We have with us the constant presence of our Captain, so long as we are closely following His leading. Above the din of battle His inspiring voice may be heard saying, “Fear not, little flock; for it is the Father’s good pleasure to give you the kingdom.” “Be of good cheer; I have overcome.” (Luke 12:32; Jno. 16:33.) If we are weak we have only to remember the blessed promise, “The Lord will give strength unto His people”; and by our faithfulness we shall glorify God, who will deliver us from all our foes, both seen and unseen.

Like all others, the Lord’s people need fortitude and patience, else they might soon become discouraged in the conflict with the world, the flesh and the Adversary. They need strength; they need encouragement. In the text under consideration, the word “strength” means, in large measure, courage. The Lord will give courage to His people. He encourages us in a variety of ways; He encourages us through each other, as we build one another up in the most holy faith.

We, nevertheless, look to the individual, innate strength and to its importance. “Be of good courage, and He will strengthen your heart, all ye that hope in the Lord:” None have this particular kind of strength, that of the “inner man” except those who have become new creatures in Christ, to whom “old things have passed away, and all things have become new.” (2 Cor. 5:17.) With this particular spirit-begotten class all of the Lord’s dealings are intended to develop character. “Desire the sincere milk of the Word, that ye may grow thereby,” and become strong. (1 Pet. 2:

2.) This milk of the Word the Lord gives at first to His children, that the new nature may, grow thereby and become able to digest stronger food and thus develop in character-likeness to our Lord. To all His own He has provided nourishment—milk for babes, strong meat for those more developed. (Heb. 5:12-14.) And any who would be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might (courageous) will avail himself of the divine provision.

Our faith, however, is the basis of both our strength and our peace. No matter how fiercely the storms of life may assail us, we must never let go our anchor and allow ourselves to drift; but always remember that “The foundation of God standeth sure,” that “His truth is our shield and buckler,” and “What He has promised He is able also to perform,” notwithstanding our human imperfections and frailties. Covering these, we have the imputed righteousness of Christ, our Surety and Advocate, and the assurance, “The Father Himself loveth us,” and that “He knoweth our frame and remembereth that we are dust,” and so has compassion for the sons of His love and is very pitiful and of tender mercy. (2 Tim. 2:19; Psa. 91:4; Rom. 4:21; Jno. 16:27; Psa. 103:14.) Indeed, “what more could He say than to us He has said,” to assure our faith and to steady and strengthen our hearts to patient endurance in the midst of the trials and conflicts in the narrow-way of sacrifice?

With abounding compassion and tenderness, our Lord, on the last night of His earthly life, bestowed upon His beloved disciples His parting blessing, His legacy of peace. It was the richest legacy He had to bequeath, and was of priceless value. It was the promise of that tranquillity of soul, that rest and ease of mind which He Himself possessed - -the peace of God. It was the same peace which the Father has always enjoyed, even in the midst of all the commotion which the permission of evil has brought about. In Jehovah, this peace is self-centred, because He realises in Himself omnipotence and infinite wisdom. The peace of Christ was centred not in Himself, but in God, through faith in His wisdom, power and grace. So if we Would have the peace of God, the peace of Christ (My peace), it must, like His, be centred in God, by faith..

The peace promised is not the short-lived peace of the world, which is sometimes enjoyed for a little season; but “My peace,” which endures through loss, persecution, scorn and contempt, and even amidst the agonies of the cross. This peace is something which none of the vicissitudes of this life can destroy and which no enemy can wrest from us.

“There is no peace, saith the Lord, unto the wicked.” (Isa. 48:22.) “The wicked are like the troubled sea, continually casting up mire and dirt.” Their hearts are not in accord with peace and righteousness but are filled with selfishness. The wicked are self-seeking and grasping, filled with anger if they cannot always get what they want; with malice if they see someone enjoying what they cannot have. All of these things indicate a lack of peace.

To the extent that any of the Lord’s people have any of these evil propensities they cannot have the “peace of God which passeth all understanding”—which passeth all description. In this peace lies a satisfaction for all the various qualities of the mind; in proportion as the mind develops the desire of pleasing the Lord, of communicating to others the- knowledge of the truth and the blessed opportunity of salvation, it becomes our ambition to do good, instead of evil. So, ambition being turned into a right line, the peace of God which none can comprehend save those who possess it, comes to the mind and heart.

This promise, that God will give peace to His people, seems to apply only to a peace of heart. Our Lord and the Apostles possessed it to such an extent that they enjoyed themselves much more than did their enemies. Paul and Silas in prison were able to sing praises to God instead of berating the governments and threatening what would be done to them. So with us. In proportion as we see matters from the divine viewpoint, and appreciate the precious promises and let them inspire our hearts, we shall rejoice in those promises, and our hearts will be blessed. Even if we have trials and difficulties that we are not able to surmount, if these are working out for us the fruits and graces of the spirit, we may rejoice and give thanks for these evidences of God’s love.

We see that the peace of God is compatible with great commotion and with sorrow and pain of various kinds; for it is not dependent upon outward circumstances, but upon a proper balancing of the mind and the condition of a perfect heart. The promise in the text—“The Lord will give strength to His people; the Lord will bless His people with peace”—belongs to us now; let us draw near and claim this precious promise.

Let us be loyal to the truth; to God’s Word, and to the principles of righteousness. Let each of us write upon his heart the precious promise—“The Lord will give strength unto His people.” Let us be faithfully “His people,” and let us earnestly desire and faithfully use the strength promised. “Faithful is He that calleth you who also will do it.” “He is faithful that promised.” (1 Thess. 5:24; Heb, 10:23.)

So then, if we lack the strength or the peace promised the fault is our own, not God’s. Either we have not the interests of His service closely enough at heart, or else we do not make proper use of the strength He provides. “The Lord will give strength unto His people” (His trusting, faithful servants, who are using to His praise the talents possessed), “the Lord will bless His people with peace.” (Concluded.)

The Garden of the Lord.

(Convention Address.)

THIS topic naturally directs our minds first of all to that garden or Paradise which the Lord planted “eastward in Eden.” The word “Eden” means delight or pleasantness, and denotes any place remarkable for beauty or fertility. It suggests that this garden was situated in a most delightful and pleasant part of the earth, and indicates, too, that the rest of the earth was yet in a very imperfect state.

This Garden or Paradise or perfect place, “eastward in Eden,” was a suitable place for the trial of the perfect human pair that the Lord was about to create: There, man was surrounded with loveliness and; beauty of nature and with the animal kingdom all subject to his control, having the Lord’s approval and command to rule the earth, ‘multiply, and fill it. It was a beautiful and perfect illustration of what the whole earth will be at the close of the Millennial Age, when all the proved and worthy of mankind shall have been brought back to obedience and perfection. (Matt. 25:34.)

This Garden was originally intended for man’s everlasting home. He was commanded to dress and keep it, but through disobedience to a special command Adam lost his beautiful, natural home, and was driven out among the thorns and briars, the unfinished earth, away from, the Lord’s love and care—condemned—’dying thou shalt die.’

This does not mean, of course, that the Lord’s original purpose and plan for mankind was for ever destroyed. No; He could see that it was wise to give mankind a bitter experience by following his own selfish inclinations and wisdom. For 6000 years now the human creation has groaned under this influence and rule of sin and death.

We understand the seventh one thousand years, the great seventh day of rest and restoration of mankind, will be that great day referred to in the Scriptures as the day of Christ—His one thousand years of rule, to restore that which was lost. So, then, the preparation for the restoration of this garden, which shall yet spread over the whole earth, has taken quite a considerable time already, and it will not be until the end of the Millennial Age, that all things will be made new. At that time, the world, i.e., human society, will come to its final state, just as tulips or the daffodil will come to blossom next spring. They are in the bulb now and must pass through the winter time, but they will surely come to blossom. So the world, too, will yet come to the blossom time. (Isa. 35; Jer. 31:11, ‘12; Ezek. 36:33-36; Acts 3:19-23; Rev. 22:1-4.)

As it takes a good many years to bring an orchard to full fruit-bearing, so with mankind; but in due time, in the very near future, men will begin to be fruitful unto God, and the whole globe will be a great garden of the Lord, filled with fruits of righteousness and love on every side.

Turning to Daniel 4:10-17, it will be seen that although this had a fulfilment upon the King of Babylon, it has, nevertheless, a much greater and far-reaching fulfilment written for our learning. This dream describes man’s original dominion in Eden and its removal because of disobedience (“cut down the tree”), but also the certainty of its restoration to begin after the seven times of Gentile rule, shown by the root and stump (God’s purposes), which should not sprout again until the appointed time.

Again, in Isa. 5:1-12, we read of another Garden vineyard laid waste and the Gentile nations; it represents the nation of Israel. Here again great preparations were made; much time and care was spent. It was planted with choice plants; nourished with rich, glowing promises of the Messiah and His Kingdom—the blessing of Israel and all the families of the earth. He provided a watch tower for it in the prophecies, and hedged it about with the Law and the prophets. Seeing then that much care and attention was bestowed on this vineyard—the House of Israel—it was right that the Lord should look for and expect choice fruit from it. However, it produced wild, bitter grapes, and it was in the same condition when the Husbandman sent Jesus, His Son, into this vineyard (Matt. 21:33-41). They said, “This is the heir, let us kill him; let us seize on his inheritance.”

Finally, the hedge was broken down and the vineyard laid waste and the Gentile nation (represented in another prophecy as wild beasts) trampled it underfoot, and the vineyard was temporarily abandoned. From that time until just recently the Jewish people were scattered. Now we see that nation beginning to bud again. Isa. 5:7, tells us the kind of fruit that the Lord expected to find—“justice and righteousness”—but found it not.

Many of the experiences of natural Israel were typical of spiritual Israel. In John 15, Jesus is Jehovah’s pleasant Plant—His choice Vine—and the members of the Church are the branches. Great care and attention was, and still is, lavished on this choice Vine. In the beginning, it was especially nourished and watered with the exceeding great and precious promises and with power, and soon became firmly and deeply rooted.

Christendom claims to be the Israel of God, but like natural Israel it also has failed to appreciate the Messiah and the Kingdom blessings for all mankind. Now again in the end of the age there is a harvest time; a remnant are faithful and respond, but the great mass of professors are found unworthy; again there are found wild grapes. See Rev. 14:14-19. The fruit has matured on this false vine. It is crushed in the winepress of God’s wrath, because of the spirit of worldliness, selfishness and pleasure seeking. Only a mere form of godliness is in evidence with all who thus seek after mammon and its friends.

But, let us bring these truths nearer to ourselves, as individuals. The Scriptures refer to Christians as plants, trees and branches, and the Lord looks for fruit on each individual plant. “Herein is my Father glorified, if ye bear much fruit.” John 15:8; see also Psa. 1:3; 92:12; 104:16; Isa. 61:3; Jer. 17:8.

Before there can be fruit the seed must be planted. As in nature, so with the Christian. The seed planted in the garden of our hearts is the Word of God. (1. Peter 1:23.) First comes the blade, then the stalk, and later with it develops the ear, in which the ripe fruit grain is formed and matured. (Mark 4:26-29.) Then there is use for the sickle, for the harvest is come.

Even with the common blade of grass, God has a set time and definite laws for its development to perfection. How much more necessary, then, it is that Christians must have time to develop the fruits of the spirit, seeing that God has invited them to be joint heirs with Christ in the future Kingdom, as Kings and Priests. (Rev. 20:4-6.)

Yet, some sincere but misguided people will declare that God can save a sinner and fit him for such a responsible position as a joint-ruler with Christ in less than three minutes. Surely they do err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the Lord’s requirements. The present Garden of the Lord is one of spiritual fruits and flowers. There must be a high degree of development in justice, truth, love and mercy, and this cannot be developed on a death bed.

Upon the garden of our hearts shines the sunshine of God’s love. The most conspicuous plant is the “Rose of Sharon.” He is the fairest among ten thousand blossoms, and soon attracts attention by His sweet perfume of love and self sacrifice—grace and truth flows from Him. Without this “Rose” there would be a sad want; in fact no garden could be perfect or exist without Him. (Song of Solomon 2:1-3.)

He is also called “The Lily of the Valley.” This dainty, pure-white, fragrant flower speaks of Jesus’ lowliness, humbleness and purity. In the garden of our hearts let us plant and cultivate these choice flowers we see in Christ Jesus—lowliness, humbleness and purity. Let the fragrance of the “Rose” float from our hearts, so that others may be attracted to the Gospel and that it may be known we have been dwelling with “The Rose.”

In nature’s gardens there is also the pansy; like delightful little faces with blending of colour. Pansies for kind thoughts; so, let us grow this’ beautiful flower in our hearts. “Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love.” Rom.,- 12:10.

Then there are those dainty little blue forget- me-nots—a cluster of little blue flowers. Blue for faithfulness; to be faithful in little things is important. Faith is also the fertile soil out of which the other graces of character grow. Let us try and live all our lives so that others may think of us and remember our Christian walk and conduct in that Age to come, “in the day of visitation,” mentioned in 1 Peter 2:12. When all nations shall be blessed they will remember and not forget your good works of the present time. Neither will God; see Heb. 6:10. “God is not unrighteous to forget your labour of love.” May it be said of us, “gone, but not forgotten.”

Further, there is the tall, bright, broad, and conspicuous sunflower. Among the flowers they are the first to see the sun rise. Let us cultivate this flower in the garden of our hearts. The higher we are the more we can see. Let our thoughts be golden and soar up high above the thorns and thistles of our old human nature, intent upon spiritual things. "Lift up your heads . . . for your deliverance draws nigh,"

Did you ever notice some sunflowers? In the morning they are facing the east, the sun-rising, while in the evening the bloom will be facing the west. They follow or turn with the sun. So, just like that, let us keep our faces to the Sun "The Sun of Righteousness"—or, as the Prophet says, "keep our faces toward Zion."

Another flower is that known as the Golden Trumpet Daffodil. Of course, they do not blow their trumpets, neither should we blow our own trumpets. We want to blow the Gospel "Trumpet, and send out the Golden Message, or to use another figure "A word fitly spoken how good it is; it is like apples of gold in pictures of silver." Let the sound be the same as the angels heralded—"Glad tidings of great joy which shall be yet to all people." This is a very clear note sounded out many centuries ago. If the world ever needed a message, surely it needs one to-day, one that is clear and true.

There are, indeed, many trumpets blowing; some are blowing their own trumpets which are so indistinct and uncertain, while others harshly grate on our ears. "If the trumpet give an uncertain sound who shall prepare himself for the battle?" We have got the message that is clear and beautiful to those who have ears to hear. Some say it sounds too good to be true; others, the great majority, are deaf and cannot hear. Nevertheless, we are glad that the Divine Plan has provided that all deaf ears shall be unstopped and blind eyes opened when the seventh trumpet sounds throughout the Millennial Age. And the sound shall go out through all the earth and all mankind will take up that great trumpet blast, which will reverberate from heaven to earth and from earth to heaven, proclaiming- liberty and victory. Rev. 5:13.

Another thing that We Must not forget, in fact, it will force itself upon any who would keep and dress a garden, and that is to keep down and pull up weeds. They simply will grow. With the best of attention you will find odd ones lurking under shrubs or delicate plants. In order to do this, bending or stooping down is required—it will require humility to see and root out our faults.

Satan has a counterfeit for most things. He has planted a garden, too, and many of his flowers look like genuine plants. You will also find a likeness in some weeds to your garden plants. So, if we would cultivate the various flowers and fruits of the spirit, we must be diligent in getting the weeds out. Get them out early, before they have taken any deep rooting. It is much easier and less work then. But if we neglect them they will soon spread out their roots; then what will the harvest be? The Apostle James 1:14, 15, tells us something about that. In Col. 3:5-9, the weeds of the old nature are mentioned, but we are to "set our affections on things above," "to walk after the spirit." Gal. 6:7, 8, refers to sowing and reaping and the harvest will be accordingly.

As you know, if you plant a peach tree you will get a harvest of peaches. The tree bears fruit not only for its own beauty but also that others may take and eat. In Prov. 11:30, it is said that "the fruit of the righteous is a tree of life by whose virtues and fruits others may be blessed. Let the sunshine of the Gospel tint our lives with the beauty of holiness like the sun tints the peach with a lovely, rosy beauty.

Spurgeon says, "What are the distinguishing marks of a ripe character? One mark is beauty ;. ripe fruit has its own perfect beauty. As the fruit ripens, the sun tints it with surpassing loveliness and the colour deepens until the beauty of the fruit is equal to the beauty of the blossom and in some respects superior. There is in ripe Christians the beauty of realised sanctification which the Word of God knows by the name of 'beauty of holiness.'

"Another mark of ripe fruit is tenderness. The young, green fruit is hard and stone-like; the mature Christian is noted for tenderness of spirit.

"Another mark of ripeness is sweetness; the unripe fruit is sour. As we grow in grace we are sure to grow in charity, sympathy, and love. We shall, as we ripen in grace, have greater sweetness toward our fellow Christians. Bitter spirited Christians may know a great deal, but they are immature.

"Another, and a very sure mark of ripeness is a loose hold upon the earth. Ripe fruit easily parts from the stem."

A further thought in regard to plants. Perhaps you have experienced that some plants will not thrive in certain positions, but on removing them to another place they go ahead and develop remarkably well. The Great Gardener has the oversight of all the plants in His Garden, and He knows better than anyone else just the situation and environment each plant needs. Perhaps the situation is such that the growth is all in one direction. If so, He knows how to prune or remove, while others will develop in that position.

Deep rooting is another essential to good healthy growth; we need to be rooted and grounded in love and in the truth because the winds of strife and false doctrines will blow across our garden. We do not want to be like the reeds growing in the water. When a breeze blows on a bed of reeds, all heads bend gracefully, not one resists. But it costs the reeds nothing to yield and when the wind changes you will see them all pointing the other way. This is a picture of a weak, compromising spirit, but it goes under the name of a charitable spirit amongst some people and their religions. "Be not blown about by every wind of doctrine," says the Apostle Paul. No, rather let us be diligent in growing the fruits of the spirit mentioned in Gal. 5:22, 23, "The fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance."

Convention News from South Australia

THE Easter Convention arranged by the Adelaide and Gawler Classes, was evidently much blessed of the Lord. The almost forty brethren present, including six visitors from Melbourne and one from Digby (Vic.), and two from Murray Bridge (S.A.), seemed to fully appreciate the rich spiritual food set before us. It was just a little season of feasting together on the Word of God.

The Bible studies seemed to be particularly helpful, and were as follow:—Rom. 12:1-8; Col., 2:1-7; 1 Peter 1:3-9; 1 Cor. 13:1-8. These passages of Scripture formed the basis of our studies, one portion being taken on each afternoon of the four Convention days. Whilst the time allotted for these studies was found in almost every case to be insufficient to deal with all the details of the verses, yet we believe the main thoughts were well presented by various brethren, and nicely summed up by the brothers acting as chairmen. We seem to get more real help in our classes when each member comes to the meeting with the lesson well prepared beforehand, with thoughts and Scriptures bearing on the study, and when the chairman encourages the brethren to free expression. "Counsel in the heart of man is like deep water; but a man of understanding will draw it out." (Prov. 20:5.)

The exhortations by various brethren were also helpful and encouraging. In this brief report we cannot do more than mention the topics, viz., "The balances of life"; "Contentment"; "What doth the Lord require of thee?"; "Our Saviour"; "The Garden of the Lord"; "The Lord your God proveth you"; "Put on the armour of light"; "The Books of life."

At the Praise and Testimony meetings and Fellowship meetings, a number of the brethren spoke of how the Lord was caring for them and blessing them in their affairs.

We feel grateful indeed to the Lord for His goodness and for the blessings received at this special season of fellowship and spiritual refreshment. We are grateful, too, to the dear brethren who came to visit us from other parts, and whose presence and loving efforts to serve in various ways all helped to make this Convention a success. It was pleasing also to note the spirit of loving co-operation among the friends in Adelaide and Gawler Classes. The efforts of the sisters of the local Classes in providing tea for all present were also much appreciated.

At the Baptism service held on Easter Saturday morning, two sisters symbolised their consecration to be dead with Christ. We trust and pray that our sisters may be richly blessed as they seek to follow the Master's steps along the narrow way that leads to Life.

To those friends and Classes who forwarded messages of Christian love and good wishes to us, the following verses of Scripture were sent:—Psa. 133; Eph. 3:11-19. What beautiful sentiments are expressed in the prayer of the Apostle here; and surely it is our desire that all who read these lines may realise by the Lord's goodness the fulfilment in themselves of the great Apostle's prayer.

We trust and pray that the good lessons received during this Convention may have their designed effect upon us, making us more humble and obedient and Christ-like, and thus cause us to be fitted more and more for "the inheritance of the saints in light."

"When all Thy mercies. O my God,
My rising soul surveys,
Transported with the view,
I'm lost In wonder, love and praise."

Observances of our Lord's Memorial.

Melbourne and Digby, Vic.

THE Melbourne friends gathered together again with solemn, and yet joyful: hearts to keep the Memorial in remembrance of Christ, and in confirmation of their own pledge of full consecration to God: Solemn, because as we view the cruel cross we realise how much it cost our dear Master to redeem us—"the just for the unjust that he may bring us to God"—and joyful, in that our risen Lord overcame death and the grave by His faithfulness, and would have us always rejoicing in Him on that account.

The Service was opened with the beautiful, old hymn, "Rock of Ages" (245), the sentiments of which were so expressive of the meeting as a whole. Other hymns sung during the evening were—"In Memory of the Saviour's Love" (118), "Christ Gave His Life for Me" (31), "According to Thy Gracious Word" (2), and "Lord, I am Thine, Entirely Thine" (155). (Numbers quoted are from "Christian Hymns.")

The prayers of the brethren were full of deep appreciation and thankfulness to our loving heavenly Father for His greatest Gift—His dear Son—to be our Redeemer, Master and Head, as we have been privileged to accept Him as such, coming unto God by Him and laying down our lives in His service in response to the great invitation. Fellow members in Christ, in every place, were especially remembered and commended to the Lord for His blessing and guidance throughout the remainder of the pilgrim way.

The readings by various brethren of Isa. 53; Matt. 26:17-46; and John 18:28, to 19:19, while well known to all, impressed as fully as ever the tragic yet redemptive features of the holy, harmless, undefiled One pouring out His soul unto death from Jordan to Calvary.

Viewing the Lord's instructions to natural Israel on the eve of the first Passover, every feature was seen to have a very important lesson for spiritual Israelites (the antitypical first-borns) as they are delivered from this present evil world by the shed blood of the Lamb of God and by carrying out all the other requirements in connection with this "so ;rent salvation." The Christian "eats" (i.e., appropriates to himself) the Lamb, during the present "night time" of this Gospel Age. This brings him to the condition of justification, and as he delights to join his Master and enter upon the full deliverance across the "Red Sea" to the heavenly Canaan, he presents his justified life a living sacrifice to God, and thus by the begetting of the holy spirit becomes one of the first-borns, henceforth to have his loins "girded," "his shoes on his feet," and "his staff in his hand," alert and in readiness to follow the Lamb whithersoever He may lead. The attitude of heart and mind will then be "I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord,

O'er mountain or plain or sea;
I'll do what you want me to do, dear Lord,
I'll be what you want me to be."

Yes, indeed; how precious is the privilege to be thus united to Christ, both in respect of "filling up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ," and then, as each one proves faithful "of entering into His glory." With this, the great lesson of the Memorial so fully in heart and mind, and with the Lord's blessing upon both the bread and the cup, the brethren partook of the emblems with grateful hearts and in silent prayer to Him "who is able to keep that which we have committed to Him, against that day."

"What shall I render, Lord, to Thee,
For all Thy benefits toward me?
The Cup Thy hand of Love hath poured,
I'll humbly take, most gracious Lord.

• • • • •

“Salvation’s Cup—of suffering, too
Of suffering with God’s chosen few,
Dear Lord, I’ll drink of this, Thy Cup,
And smiling through my tears, look up—

A mingled Cup of grief and joy,
Of blessedness without alloy,
Of love and fellowship divine,
A foretaste of the Kingdom-wine.”

—(G. W. S.)

IN the Lord’s providence the entire Digby Ecclesia of six were enabled to meet together once more to commemorate the Memorial of our Lord’s death, and incidentally to remind ourselves of our privilege to be associated with Him in suffering now, that in due time we might also share with Him the joys of His Kingdom.

We read Matthew’s account of our Lord’s institution of the Passover Supper on the eve of His death as “the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world,” together with the Apostle’s account in Corinthians which associates the Church’s offering with our Lord’s.

Before partaking of the emblems the elder read a brief account of both type and antitype bearing on the subject, which clearly brought to our attention the solemnity and importance of the occasion for which we had met together, as did also the prayers offered and hymns sung.

What a privilege for the remaining members (4 our Lord’s Body to thus meet, obediently complying with His instructions—”This do in remembrance of Me.” We more and more appreciate this as one of His means of grace used to keep us in the narrow way, and so our hearts go out in thankfulness, and with the poet we can say “Lord I would loyal prove to Thee!

Let Thy reproaches fall on me,

To spend my days in Thine employ Shall be my chiefest earthly joy.”

Burnie, Tasmania.

ON the 25th of March, six assembled to keep the antitypical Passover. We commenced at 7 p.m., our very dear old Brother Badrock partaking at (as near as possible) the same time in the Launceston Hospital.

This is about the 22nd year that we have done this “in remembrance of Me,” and always on the correct date, believing much of its forceful meaning becomes measurably clouded at any other time. Two at least came much out of season to themselves.

What a wonderful blessing is received, the more so as we see the day fast approaching. How the simple aspect and the deeper meaning becomes not altered but magnified; the oneness of the Christ, felt in the depths of the heart, a living, bright reality, indeed, so that we can lift up our heads and rejoice that very soon we shall “drink it anew with Him in the Kingdom”; the dear, departed brethren with us in one large family of God.

Truly, “Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth,” has an added meaning, for our Father is able to do exceedingly abundantly above all we can ask or think, so, shall close, dear Brother, with Paul’s admonition: “Rejoice, and again I say, rejoice.”

Adelaide and Gawler, South Australia.

ONCE again the friends in Adelaide realised the wisdom and love which led Jesus to leave us the little service, to be kept annually, by which we could keep in memory how faithfully He gave Himself for us as the antitypical Passover Lamb.

By prayers and reading of the appropriate Scriptures, the singing of suitable hymns, and an address, our thoughts were directed to the circumstances and dreadful experiences of our Saviour. We could again realise to some extent what it cost Him to thus pay the price of sin, “not for us only, hut also for the sins of the whole world.” (1 John 2:2.) That is, that the price was first applied, like the blood of the passover lamb in Egypt, for the deliverance of the “church of the first-born.” Then, as all Israel was saved as a consequence and delivered from bondage to Pharaoh and Egypt, so, the whole race of mankind, who will be obedient to the great Prophet like unto Moses, will be delivered from Satan’s power and from sin and death.

We were reminded once more of our privilege “to follow His steps,” as “He was led as a lamb to the slaughter.” So Paul expresses the ‘matter in Rom. 8:36, “We are killed all the day (Gospel Day) long, we are counted as sheep for the slaughter,” that we may thus be counted in with His death. “Know ye not that as many as were baptised into Christ was baptised into His death”; to suffer with Him that we may also be glorified together with Him. So we solemnly remember the Apostles’s words in 1 Cor, 10:16, 17; and so many other Scriptures showing how graciously the Lord is willing that we be accounted worthy through the merit of our Redeemer to “fill up that which is left over of the sufferings of Christ,” so that the Body (the Church) may be complete.

As He had so freely laid down His life for us, we ought to lay down our lives for one another, and how we should with all joy endure all trials permitted to come upon us, knowing that His Father and our Father loves and cares for us, as He did for His Beloved Son. “That the love wherewith Thou hast loved Me may be in them and I in them”; “That Thou hast loved them even as Thou hast loved Me” (John 17:26, 23).

How great was the joy when the sufferings were over and Christ again entered the heavenly courts and shared the glory with the Father. So, we too shall count the hard things of the present, all the sorrows and trials but nothing, when we enter the heavenly home.

What a help and blessing comes from complying with our Lord’s request that we should keep this Memorial of His sufferings and reminder of our consecration to “follow the Lamb whithersoever He may lead.”

”Behold your King! Though the moonlight steals
Through the silvery sprays of the olive tree,
No star-gemmed sceptre or crown it reveals,
In the solemn shade of Gethsemane.
Only a form of prostrate grief,
Fallen, crushed like a broken leaf!
Oh, think of His sorrow! That we may know
The depth of love in the depth of woe.” —(F. R. H.)

IN Gawler, the little band met in the usual hall and assisted by brethren from Adelaide once again kept the little Memorial of our Saviour’s death. It was a homely little gathering, and as we met around the table it was observed that there was just the same number present as when the Lord instituted this little observance. Then, He was present in the flesh, but though now invisible to human eyes, He was still present with us, according to His promise.

We read Isa. 53, and sang such hymns as also led our hearts and minds along the lines of Christ’s sufferings and our own consecration “to be dead with Him.” We also read a portion of John’s Gospel (parts of the 18th and 19th chapters) then the address was to assist us again to realise all that it cost our Lord to thus pay the penalty of sin and to bring life and hope, first to the Church (the first-born) and later to the world as a whole.

We again endeavoured to realise what a privilege it is to be among those “who first trusted in Christ.” (Eph. 1:12, 14) the saints of this Gospel Age, that we might present our justified human lives “a living sacrifice,” and be accounted as suffering with Him and then if faithful to reign with Him—joint-heirs in the kingdom that is to bless all the families of the earth.

It was a simple little service as we sat around the table, gave thanks for the bread of life and for the shed blood, passed round the emblems and after silent prayer rose and sang, “ ‘Tis finished, so the Saviour cried, and calmly bowed His head and died”; and so, as they did on the night on which He was betrayed, we “went out,” without any concluding prayer or parting greetings.

“He suffered!” Saviour, was Thy love so vast
That mysteries of unknown agony,
Even unto death, its only gauge could be,
Unmeasured as the fiery depths it passed?
Lord, by the sorrows of Gethsemane Seal
Thou my quivering love for ever unto Thee (FHR)

Sydney, N.S.W.

AT the Rawson Chambers Class twenty-one members gathered for the Memorial, and the Service was conducted in the usual way with humility and reverence. The chairman made a few suitable remarks respecting the privilege it is for God’s children to be able to meet together to partake of the emblems of the Memorial the dear Lord had instituted of His death. He pointed out who were eligible to partake of the emblems, and after the usual Scriptures had been read, and hymns had been sung, a Brother was asked to address the meeting.

In the opening remarks we were reminded of the words of 2 Peter 3:1, and then our attention was drawn to the typical picture of the lamb being killed and the blood being applied to the posts and lintels of the doors as a token for the angel as it passed over. As it was only the first-borns who were in danger of death that night, so the same applies only to the spiritual first-borns of this Gospel Age. These, being the first fruits unto God of all His creatures—the Church of the First-borns—are passed over, having responded to the grace of God and made a full consecration of themselves to Him and His service, and in turn have been begotten of the holy spirit. With these their faithfulness and remaining in the household of faith is a matter of life and death, for they enjoy greater knowledge and privileges in every way than the world. Thus, “Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us.”

The importance of the broken bread and the cup and that these represented the broken body and shed blood of Christ was impressed to us. We must accept of His sacrifice and appropriate it by faith, thus receiving life from that source. There is no other way by which we can obtain the new nature than by accepting the Lord’s invitation to drink of His cup and be broken with Him as members of the one loaf; to be buried with Him by baptism into His death and thus be with Him in His resurrection glory, honour and immortality. Rom. 6:3, 5.

We closed the meeting by singing the hymn, “God Be With You Till We Meet Again,” as several of the brethren through sickness and old age had been able only by much effort to attend the Memorial Service.

ANOTHER service is reported as follows:— “You will be pleased to learn that we had a blessed time at ‘showing forth His death’ in His directed way, by taking the cup and the broken loaf as symbols of Him who is our life.

“We renewed our consecration and felt encouraged to go forward throughout another year ‘outside the camp.’ Ten assembled here and amongst us were two Sisters ripe in age but deeply appreciative of the service. A Brother gave a suitable address and our minds went out to others gathered as we, also to a dear Sister in hospital and three other aged ones who were glad to receive the symbols and so join in the great communion.

“A question that was brought to our minds related to the true significance of the Master’s words, ‘With desire have I desired to keep this passover with you.’ It had been so much in mind during the week by most of us, because of it being so impressive. It seemed to add to the refreshment to talk of it.

Perth, West Australia.

WE had a very nice time on the day of the Memorial. In the afternoon we read Exod, 12 for the type and then we studied the antitype from Vol. 6. It was very refreshing to go through these things; one never tires of the deep things of God; truly our hearts burn within us as we review them.

There were ten present in the afternoon and in the evening we had fifteen present for the Memorial. Service. The Scriptures read were Mark 14:12-50; John 18:19-40; 19:1-19; and 1 Cor 11:23-26; and the remarks of the Brother giving the address were very appropriate and helpful. We were reminded of the typical people of Israel and their deliverance from Egypt, and how that prefigured the deliverance first of all of the first-born ones, and in due time of all the families of the earth. Many good thoughts were also presented from the words of Jesus at the closing scenes of His life, and we were exhorted to drink of His cup and be broken with Him, if so be that we may also reign with Him in the Kingdom. "Fear not little flock it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom."

What love and joy should be in our hearts when we think of His love and suffering for us. Let us keep the feast; seven days' feast is our entire life. Only a few more years and we will rejoice in the Lord for our victory of faith.

Then two Brothers blessed the emblem's and we all partook of them, renewing our consecration to death, and after singing a hymn we went home. We all enjoyed the time spent on the day very much, and hope all the friends everywhere had a deep spiritual time, like we did.

Regarding "What P.R. Taught."

This book on the Covenants, Mediator, Ransom, Sin-offering and Atonement is now definitely out of print, and as we are receiving requests for it from time to time, the suggestion has been made that some duplicated copies of typewriter print could be prepared. As a reprint in book form would seem to be out of the question at this time, the work on duplicating sheets, page for page with the book and then assembled in magazine form, could possibly be done in our own office. However, it would depend upon what demand there may be for it.

If all interested friends would kindly advise us, as soon as possible, how many copies they could use if the work was undertaken, the matter could then be decided. All the brethren realise the value of the matter in this book, and the cost of duplicated copies would be sufficient only to cover materials, etc.

The Lord's Desire.

“With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer.” (Luke 22:15.)

Our Lord spoke these words to His twelve Disciples on the occasion of the last Jewish Passover, as they gathered together for the usual annual observance. Probably the Disciples were no more interested in this Passover than the previous ones they had kept with their Lord; but with Him it was different. •

The disciples at that time seemed unable to understand that their Master was about to leave them through death, though He had explained this to them more than once (Matt. 16:21). But “Jesus knew that His hour was come that He should depart out of this world unto the Father.” (John 13:1.)

Our Lord's realisation that He was “the Lamb of God,” and that, according to Daniel's prophecy, He would be “cut off” . . . “in the midst of the week” (34 years after His consecration at Jordan—see Dan. 7.:25-27)—revealed to Him that this Passover sacrifice was the one of which all the previous Jewish Passover sacrifices had been typical. Year after year Israel had slain the typical lamb, but now the time had arrived when the Lamb of God was to be slain—the perfect full sacrifice which alone could take away the sins of the world—for it is not possible that the blood of bulls and goats should take away sins.”

Can we wonder, then, that this momentous occasion was weighing heavily upon our Lord? He had come to be man's Redeemer, quite voluntarily—“Lo, I come, in the volume of the book it is written of Me, to do Thy will, O God”; but this did not mean that it was not a severe experience; surely it was. He had been laying down His life over the 34' years, but now it was to be consummated fully in death, and at this particular Passover. So we read: “And when the hour was come He sat down and the twelve Apostles with Him, and He said unto them, with desire, I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer.”

It would seem that this “desire” or “longing” was mentioned by our Lord, because at that time He had purposed the institution of the Memorial of His death, which should henceforth take the place of the annual Jewish Passover Supper, and which would include His revealing the blessed oneness that was to exist between Himself and all His faithful followers who would from that time be broken with Him and drink of His cup, so that they may ultimately live and reign with Him in His throne. It was, then, that He sought to draw His beloved band into closer relationship before He would leave them, that when the holy spirit should come this great union might be the more appreciated and rejoiced in, though it would mean laying down the earthly life in the cause of Him who had gone before. With this last, important, earthly mission fulfilled towards His disciples, He was then ready to suffer and die, as would be the Father's will for Him.

From this standpoint we can realise the sincere desire or longing on the part of the Master, to impart the deep truths connected with the institution of the Memorial, that His apostles and all who would believe on Him through their word may discern the terms of true discipleship and thus fulfil their vows of consecration loyally to the close of the way, as He was setting an example.

Correspondence.

Tasmania,

Dear Brother, April, 1937. Greetings in our clear Redeemer's Name.

I received your welcome letter containing so many kind expressions of love and sympathy from yourself and the friends concerning me, which I greatly appreciate. I desire to thank you dear Bro., and them too, and also for your prayers. I wish to say that I receive and think of them as from the Lord through you; they are strengthening and comforting; how true the living Word is,—”as every joint supplies.”

I am at present at Sister -- and will be, D. V., until about the beginning of May, when, should it please the Lord, I shall go to Burnie. I am very weak at present; strength seems to come very slowly, but I cannot expect anything else under the circumstances. It was by and through the Lord's blessing that I am here. The Drs. have only patched or made it possible for me to live perhaps a. few months. But oh, how nice and pleasant and joyful to know that soon my course will be ended here. Dear Bro., tell the friends my desire is towards them, that they would strive by prayer, study of the Word and obedience thereto to get to know our heavenly Father and the Lord Jesus Christ more perfectly—to know His character of justice, wisdom, love and power. By so doing He makes us strong in tribulation; He is strength in our weakness. The better we know Him, the more we trust and love in Him. We love Him because He is lovely, the fairest of ten thousand to my soul.

From your Bro.. by His Grace, T. B..

Scotland,

Dear Sir, 24th February, 1937.

In answer to the advert. which appeared in “The Queenslander, “I would be grateful if you would send the free pamphlets; should anything have to be paid, please let me know and I'll pay it.

Trusting this order will be executed, as I am really interested. Yours in anticipation, M. B.

Berean Bible Institute, 12th April, 1937.

Dear Brother or Sister in Christ,

In acknowledging and thanking you for the booklet, “God and Reason,” I would like to tell you of my appreciation and endorsement of the views it sets forth. Reasonable conclusions, entirely new to me; I might say quite in contradiction to those held with the little meeting with which I break bread. There have been so many things I could not understand because they seemed so opposed to the love of God to His fallen creatures.

In reply to your question: “Hell, Death, Spiritism,” or failing that “Where are the Dead?” either of these I would much like to see.

Thanking you again,

Yours faithfully, C.E.

Upon the Earth Distress with Perplexity.

(LUKE 21:25)

The Troubled World's Hope.

WHILE it was the hope of many that, when the great war was concluded, Millennium conditions would soon prevail, class distinctions were to cease, everyone was to have an opportunity of earning an honest living without too much "sweat of the face," how differently it has all turned out. Instead of bringing in righteousness and peace, the war seemed to loosen the standard of morals, and the world is more wicked today than it was before 1914, perhaps we may correctly say, than it ever was. Instead of amity betwixt classes, strikes and labour troubles have increased, and there is a deadly, stealthy undermining of principle being continually carried on throughout the world, while the anarchistic spirit is gradually eating its way among all nations. Unemployment is prevalent everywhere. The overcrowded parts of the world are puzzled to know what to do with the great surplus of population.

On the one hand, the wonderful inventions and discoveries that are continually being made open up a vision of comfort, luxury, and even freedom from many of the dread diseases which have so long preyed upon the human race such as cancer, tuberculosis, etc.

On the other hand, there are the murderous inventions of destruction, submarines, airships, air torpedoes, poison gases, etc. What a day of possibilities for good in all this increased knowledge in every department of life, and yet, what a day of dread probabilities, because of man's greed, selfishness, ambition and strife! Who can doubt the outcome of all we see about us? There is no human force able to control present-day influences. It seems almost as easy to resist the ebb and flow of the mighty ocean; mankind, like the mighty torrent of Niagara, sweeps on to the great fall, the precipice. The great systems of unrighteousness, trusts, unions, combines and pools formed for selfish ends, and restricting the free commerce and liberties of the people, also the great religious systems with their manmade creeds and dogmas, which "fetter reason," and which drive men away from religion and hinder a true knowledge of God, will go down like a millstone into the sea.

All thinkers seem to see the dread prospects, but with all their good desires they cannot devise a way out of the trouble. Some suggest one thing, some another, but the best suggestions are only such as might postpone the evil day. The world is mad with selfishness and extravagant indulgence on the one side, while the submerged classes strive to carry on an existence with sweat of face and anxiety to provide for dependants.

Among all the remedies which have ever been suggested, and we have some splendid examples in old Grecian History, there has been nothing to equal the Law Covenant with Israel. There was an economy which, lived up to, would have resulted in a condition of righteousness, peace, prosperity, and health. The people with which this covenant was made were of the best stock among men, and no greater, nobler leader of men than Moses has ever been found in the world. The fact that it did not achieve the possible happy results demonstrated that mankind is incapable of lifting itself out of its troubles, and of establishing righteousness and peace, or, in other words, of bringing in the Golden Age.

The Desire of All Nations.

Both the Old and New Testaments predict that a better time is coming: a time when justice and righteousness will be established in the earth, and peace abound everywhere. The apostle in Rom. 8:22, 19, speaks of the whole creation groaning and waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God. Hag. 2:6-7 also speaks of the desire of all nations coming, but indicates a great shaking time preceding that event. "Yet once more will I shake the heavens and the earth and the sea and the dry land, and I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come."

Peter, in his second epistle, chapter 3, speaks also of a new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness, and also describes the great time of trouble preceding the establishment of same. He speaks of the heavens being on fire, and being dissolved, "The earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up." It is clear that the apostle is speaking in figurative language, for if the earth and the heavens were literally to be so destroyed, there would be no people left to enjoy the "new heavens and the new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness," which he assures us is to follow the burning-up time, just as the prophet declares that after the great shaking "the desire of all nations shall come."

Peter simply refers to the destruction of the present order of things in a fiery time of trouble, just as the first heavens and earth, which were before the flood had passed away. The "earth" refers to the social arrangements or order among men. The heavens refers to the spiritual or religious portion of humanity. These elements have both got out of accord with God and righteousness. The whole earth is ungodly and selfish, and the religious elements have become confused in teachings and have lost the spirit of Christ, and have become but worldly institutions. The Apostle Paul (Heb. 12:26-27), quoting Haggai, says. "Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven, and this word yet once more signifieth the removal of those things that are shaken as of things that are made, that those things that cannot be shaken may remain."

Thus the apostle and the prophet refer to the woes of earth and the great remedy that God has provided, and which is soon to be applied. The declaration of the prophet that God will eventually establish a reign of righteousness in the earth which, when realised, will indeed be the desire of all nations, is borne out by the testimony of every prophet and apostle (Act 3:19-21), and cannot, therefore, be disputed by any who acknowledge the inspiration of the Bible.

The cause of all creation's groaning and pain is sin; for all the moral and physical degradation which directly or indirectly causes the pain and groaning of humanity is part of the wages of sin. Humanity is thus under a blight, and suffers both individually and as a whole. Its own imperfect and often unjust governments, as well as its aches and pains of body and mind, are the natural consequences of its imperfect, fallen condition; and although men can do something toward general improvement, their efforts are at best but feeble and spasmodic—they are utterly incapable of releasing themselves from their difficulties.

What all mankind have longed and vaguely hoped for, God, through His prophets, has clearly and definitely foretold; and, further, He has shown exactly how it will be achieved, namely, through the agency of the Lord Jesus Christ, who, nineteen centuries ago, redeemed mankind by giving His life as a ransom-price for the life of the world, and who will shortly set up His kingdom and establish His authority over the redeemed race.

The only hope for the world is in this Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. It is God's long-promised remedy. Man's extremity will be God's opportunity; "The desire of all nations shall come." at a juncture when human ingenuity and skill will have exhausted themselves in seeking relief without avail. The present world-wide disorders are all factors in the "time of trouble," the "day of vengeance," with which this age is closing. Not only will it be a just recompense for misused privileges, but it will tend to humble the arrogance of men, making them "poor in spirit," and ready for the great blessings God is about to pour upon all flesh (Joel 2:28). Thus He wounds to heal.

God's Kingdom will be established in due time, when He "whose right it is," will "take the Kingdom." Yes He, who bought it with His own precious blood, will "take unto Himself His great power and reign." Force will be used—"He shall rule them (the nations) with a rod of iron—as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers." (Rev. 2:27). He will gather the nations, assemble the kingdoms, and pour upon them His fierce anger, and the whole earth shall be devoured with the fire of His jealousy; then, when they are humbled and ready to hear and heed His counsel, He will turn unto them a pure language, that they may call upon the name of the Lord to serve Him with one consent (Zeph. 3:8-9).

Not only will the Kingdom be established with force, and be a power that men cannot resist, but it will so continue throughout the 1000 years of Christ's reign, which is for the specific purpose of vanquishing the enemies of righteousness. "He must reign, till He hath put all enemies under His feet," "His enemies shall lick the dust," "The soul that will not hear (obey) that prophet (the glorious Christ—antitype of Moses) shall be destroyed from among the people" (in the Second Death). 1 Cor. 15:25; Psa. 72:9; Acts 3:23.

Satan will be bound; his every deceptive and misleading influence will be restrained, so that evil shall no longer appear to men to be good, nor good appear undesirable, and evil; truth shall no longer appear to men untrue, nor falsehoods be caused to appear true (Rev. 20:2).

The reign of Christ, however, will not be one of force only, but side by side with the rod of iron will be the olive branch of mercy and peace for all the inhabitants of the world; who, when the judgments of the Lord are abroad in the earth, will learn righteousness (Isa. 26:9). The sin-blinded eyes shall be opened, that the world may see right and wrong, justice and injustice, in a light quite different from now—in “seven-fold” light (Isa. 30:26; 29:18-20). The outward temptations of the present will be suppressed, evils will neither be licensed nor permitted, but a penalty sure and swift will fall upon transgressors, meted out with unerring justice by the glorified and competent judges of that time, who, nevertheless, will have compassion upon the weak.—1 Cor. 6:2; Psa. 96:13; Acts 17:31; Mal. 3:5.

Obstacles to Belief in Christ’s Kingdom.

All this would seem reasonable to thinking people but for two reasons. One is, the unscriptural view that Christ is now reigning over and ruling the world. And yet, if versed in the world’s history, all candid minds must admit that up to the present time there has not been a rule of righteousness such as the prophets predicted of the reign of Christ (Isa. 32:1). On the contrary, it is manifest that the kingdoms of this world are all under the power and subject to the invisible “prince of this world,” Satan, who takes advantage of the darkness of human ignorance, superstition, and depravity.

The second reason lies in the long delay before the establishment of Christ’s Kingdom. People naturally wonder that God has not long since exerted His great power to suppress sin, and to lift mankind out of its present state of depravity, disease and death; and since nearly six thousand years have passed without such an interposition, many reason that God’s future dealings should be judged by the past. Hence they conclude we cannot expect such a rule or kingdom in the future, believing that all things must continue as they are now, and have been from the foundation of the world.

We answer, it can be shown that the Scriptures teach that not only has God promised such a Kingdom for the purpose of blessing the world, but He has also foretold the long period intervening in which evil has been permitted, good and sufficient reasons being given in the Bible for the nearly six thousand years that have elapsed. Yet, in examining these reasons for the apparent delay in the establishment of the reign of righteousness, let us not forget that it is only measured by the shortness of the present life that six thousand years seem very long; with God, “a thousand years are but as yesterday” (Psa. 90:4). When clearly seen, this should remove every obstacle to belief in the promised Kingdom of blessing.

Why the Long Delay?

The long delay and its purposes are clearly marked in the Scriptures. Over four thousand years after the first promise of deliverance, given in Eden (Gen. 3:15), the redemption was accomplished on Calvary. Nearly two thousand years more fill the measure of the Gospel Age during which time God is selecting and developing the Church—the Bride of Christ. Furthermore, this long period of six thousand years was designed to give the race a necessary experience with the dreadful effects of sin, its exceeding sinfulness, and the firmness of that justice which will by no means clear the guilty violators of God’s just and holy law. Such an experience will be of inestimable value to all for all eternity and by contrast it will lead to so great an appreciation of righteousness, during Christ’s reign, as to make it, when realised, what the prophet predicted—“The desire of all nations.”

The delay, from the time of the redemption to the Kingdom Age, while fulfilling this purpose to the world, serves particularly the further purpose—the development of the Church, a “little flock” of believers in and followers of Christ, sharers of His reproach in the present time, and therefore chosen and counted worthy to share His spiritual Kingdom, His glory, and His work, to reign with Him as joint-heirs of the long-promised Kingdom of God for the blessing of all the families of the earth.—Gen. 28:14; Gal. 3:16, 29.

Present So-Called Christian Kingdoms. During the first century of its existence the church held firmly to the apostolic teaching and waited for the second coming of the Lord Jesus, to bring the establishment of the long-promised kingdom of God, with its rule of righteousness.

That first century was the period of the church’s purity and fervour, before she left her first love. As time passed, and the expected Lord came not, the love of many waxed cold, and their hopes turned in other directions. Then, as Christianity became formalistic, Grecian philosophers came into the church, and the doctrines of Christ became blended with heathen mythologies, producing the great apostasy, or falling away from the true faith (2 Thes. 2:3). Nevertheless, there was always a faithful though small minority, which clung to the truth.

It was at this time 'hat the degenerated Christian system conceived the view commonly held since, that the church was to establish Christ's Kingdom and that Christ would come after the Millennial reign of the church had ended. This view introduced into the nominal church an aggressive political policy, under which the church sought influence and affiliation with the civil power—(Rev. 17:3-5, 18:7).

By this policy, everything was changed; instead of suffering, came honour; instead of humility, came pride; instead of truth, came error; and instead of being persecuted, she became the persecutor of all who condemned her new and illegal honours. Soon she began to invent new theories and sophistries to justify her course, first deceiving herself, and then the nations, into the belief that the promised reign of Christ had come, and that Christ, the King, was represented by her popes, who reigned over the kings of the earth as His vicegerents. Her claims were successful in deceiving the whole world. She made all nations "drunk" with her erroneous doctrines (Rev. 17:2), intimidating them by teaching that eternal torment awaited all who resisted her claims. Soon the kings of Europe were crowned or deposed by her edict, and under her assumed authority.

Thus it comes that the kingdoms of Europe to-day claim to be Christian kingdoms, and announce that their sovereigns reign "by the grace of God," i.e., through appointment of either Papacy or some of the Protestant sects.

For though the Reformers abandoned many of Papacy's claims to ecclesiastical jurisdiction, etc., they held to this honour which the kings of earth had come to attach to Christianity; and thus the Reformers fell into the same error, and exercised the authority of monarchs in appointing and sanctioning governments and kings, and denominating such "Christian kingdoms," or kingdoms of Christ. So we hear much to-day of that strange enigma, "The Christian World" — an enigma indeed, when viewed in the light of the true principles of the Gospel.

Christ's Kingdom—The Desire of All Nations

When Christ's Kingdom has come, it will be just what all men need. At first it will rule with a rod of iron, dashing the now tottering kingdoms of this world in pieces like a potter's vessel (Psa. 2:9); breaking up civil, social and religious systems of tyranny and oppression; putting down all opposing authority and power; humbling the proud and high-minded; and finally teaching all the world to be still and to know that the Lord's Anointed has taken the dominion (Psa. 46:10). Then the blessing of its peaceful reign will begin to be experienced. Truth and equity will be established on a sure and permanent footing; justice will be laid to the line, and righteousness to the plummet (Isa. 28:17); and the great restitution work will progress grandly to its glorious consummation.

No creature of the redeemed race will be too low for Divine grace to reach, through the all-powerful and blessed agency of the Kingdom. No degradation of sin will be too deep for the hand of mercy to fathom. to rescue the blood-bought soul; no darkness of ignorance or superstition will be so dense in any heart but that the light of Divine truth and love will penetrate its gloom and bring to it a knowledge of the joy and gladness of the new day, and an opportunity to share the same by obedience. No disease that can attack and pollute the physical system will be beyond the prompt control of the great Physician. And no deformity, monstrosity, redundancy, or mental imbecility will be able to resist His healing touch.

The grand work of restitution, thus begun on the living nations, will presently extend to all the sleeping families of the earth; for the hour is coming, yea, is not far distant, when all that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of Man, and shall come forth; when earth and hell (hades, the grave) shall give up the dead which are in them; and the sea shall give up its dead (John 5:28-29; Rev. 20:13).

What a glorious prospect! the changes from one dispensation to another in the past have been marked and prominent, but this change will be the most eventful of all. Close your eyes for a moment to the scenes of misery and woe, degradation and sorrow that yet prevail on account of sin, and picture before your mental vision the glory of the perfect earth. Not a stain of sin mars the harmony and peace of a perfect society; not a bitter thought, not an unkind look or word; love, welling up from every heart, meets a kindred response in every other heart, and benevolence marks every act. There sickness shall be no more; not an ache nor a pain, nor any evidence of decay—not even the fear of such things. Think of all the pictures of comparative health and beauty of human form and feature that you have ever seen, and know that perfect humanity will be of still surpassing loveliness. The inward purity and mental and moral perfection will stamp and glorify every radiant countenance. Such will earth's society be; and weeping bereaved ones will have their tears all wiped away, when thus they realise the resurrection work complete.—Rev. 21:4.

No wonder that the thought of such a spectacle—of a whole race returning to God with songs of praise and everlasting joy upon their heads—should seem almost too good to believe; but He who has promised is able also to perform all His good pleasure. Though sorrow and sighing seem almost inseparable from our being, yet "sorrow and sighing shall flee away"; though weeping in sackcloth and ashes has endured throughout the long night of the dominion of sin and death, yet joy awaits the morning; all tears shall be wiped from all faces; beauty shall be given for ashes; the oil of joy shall replace the spirit of heaviness, and the whole earth shall be at rest.—Isa. 14:7.

The Church's Hope.

A clearer knowledge of the world's hope should, and does, increase the church's appreciation of God's loving arrangement for His creatures. It adds new lustre to the church's hope when we realise that the glorious object of the call and discipline of the church in this Gospel Age is for the development of characters, which being proved loyal to God, to righteousness and truth will be associated with Christ in the great and grand work of uplifting whosoever will of men out of ignorance, sin, and degradation, into God's likeness, and favour, and love. The apostle declares "He that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as He is pure" (1 John 3:3). It is a hope that helps onward to God and holiness. All interested in the further study of this blessed hope should address us for reading matter.

Making Pearls.

IN the last book of the Bible we are shown a vision of the City of God with its twelve gates, every gate a pearl.

Every road into the Holy City, every entrance into the heavenly life, is through a gate of pearl.

What does it mean? It all becomes plain enough if we learn how a pearl is made. And here is the story, as science tells it.

A wound is made in a shell, and a grain of sand, perhaps, gets embedded in the wound. At once all the resources of repair are rushed to the place of hurt. The wound may be made by any of the thousand accidents and vicissitudes of the life of the shell. But when the hurt has been healed, a softly tinted pearl is found closing the wound.

In other words, the Gates of Pearl, by which we enter the City of God, are made by our defeats, injuries, hurts, losses and heartaches on earth; every gate a Pearl. There is no easy way to the highest life, no rosy road to clear insight and understanding. If to us life sometimes seems to be too hard, it is because we do not know what we are saying.

But, it may be asked, does suffering always ennoble us? Manifestly not. In suffering as such, there is no value or meaning apart from the way we take it. The natural reaction to pain, suffering, defeat, is resentment, rebellion, and if it is long continued, bitter despair if not degradation. That is to turn defeat into disaster.

There is another way of facing the worst that can happen to us, without letting it make the worst of us. There is a way of finding in our own souls a faith, a courage, a power by which we may endure and triumph over anything that life or death can do to us, turning darkness into light, making a hurt into a gem.

It is not a pious theory; it is a matter of observable fact. Look into the lives of those whom you most admire for their worth and beauty of character, and you will find that each of them has faced loss, difficulty, pain, disappointment — and won out. God knows it is not easy to do, but it can be done, it has been done, and we can do it, too—Selected.

The Past Twelve Months

EACH year's work for the Berean Bible Institute, closes with April, and we feel that the past ' twelve months has been an encouraging and helpful period again by the Lord's overruling providence. It is to our Heavenly Father that much praise and thanksgiving is rendered as we call to mind the many privileges and blessings received at His hands in connection with the work. To the dear brethren also, both near and far, who have assisted and co-operated by prayer and means in every way in the service of the truth, sincere appreciation is extended.

The work each year is along similar lines—mainly in the publication of our monthly "Peoples Paper," supplying literature in the interests of the brethren, maintaining a centre of correspondence for the benefit of all and providing free literature for general distribution.

In September last, the office of the Institute was transferred to the present address and, as expected, the change has provided additional means of service and is beneficial in every way.

The circulation of the "Peoples Paper" has continued at about the same number, many readers expressing appreciation of its contents. It is compiled with articles contributed by various brethren and for which we are very grateful. The message of "present truth" is proclaimed continuously, as well as the other features of the great plan of redemption on behalf of the world of mankind. A number unable to subscribe, are on the free list, and as the "Paper" is not self-supporting the balance is made up from the Tract Fund. All that is necessary in the case of friends desiring the visits of the "Paper" but who are unable to provide the subscription, is that request be made each year and it will be gladly continued. Extra copies and back numbers are freely supplied to all zealous enough to pass them on where good may be done and perhaps other subscriptions result.

In the early part of the past year, the second edition of our pocket "Daily Heavenly Manna" was produced, and is being distributed and appreciated overseas, as well as in Australasia. Our general Bible Helps have also been placed in the hands of readers over a wide area with some good results. Now, at this time, the producing of "The Bible Teachings on the Covenants, Mediator, Ransom, Sin' Offering and Atonement" is to be undertaken, notice of which will be found in this issue.

The advertising of free literature by newspaper coupons has further advanced throughout the past twelve months. More co-operation has been manifest on the part of Classes and individual brethren and the results have been very encouraging. Other benefits are no doubt received of which nothing is heard. There is scope for further activity in this direction, and as mentioned in December 1936 issue of "Peoples Paper," arrangements can be made to assist Classes or individual brethren desiring to engage in this witness work, who are unable to bear the expense, or all the expense in their particular localities. Should no suitable paper for this work exist where some friends may like to help, their efforts could be combined with others where better results could be obtained.' The free literature for all enquirers is provided by the Tract Fund.

The general tract distribution has been carried on with steady effort on the part of a number of friends. Some allot a portion of their time to this work and visit the homes, passing the papers personally to those who will promise to read; others keep the tracts on hand to enclose in their correspondence, etc. Good supplies of various topics are on hand, the main article of this issue,—"Upon the Earth Distress with Perplexity"—being available again in quantities. An economical method of procuring the papers is to have some enclosed each month with your "Peoples Paper"; while those able to use larger numbers to advantage can have parcels sent at any time. All should feel free to order what tracts they can profitably use as a talent of time should not be wasted any more than other talents.

The Tract Fund Account shown below represents the financial aid received for the work and expenditure met over the twelve months' period. Much sacrificing is no doubt represented in the freewill offerings of the brethren, and inasmuch as it has been rendered as unto the Lord, we trust all have realised His blessing in thus doing what they could, in the service of our Master and His truth. The increase over the previous year has enabled more to be done in various branches of the work, and in the balance carried forward to commence the new year, a small credit is included especially available for advertising.

As we enter upon another years' work, realising the momentous times at hand, it is with faith and confidence in the Lord that we look for His guidance- and the necessary grace and strength to fulfil all His good pleasure. The many loving and cheering messages from the brethren and assurances of prayers on our account are much appreciated and most encouraging. It is humbly requested that we. May share a continued interest in the prayers of the brethren and assure the dear friends everywhere of our warm Christian love for them and remembrance before the throne of heavenly grace. It is a pleasure to hear from all regularly and any suggestions for assisting or improving the work in these closing days of the age will be gladly received. May the efforts of the Lord's people everywhere be directed towards still more progress and upbuilding in the graces and fruits of the holy spirit, by the truth, both personally and to all with whom they come in contact, and to this end the service of the Institute exists. "To them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints, with all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both their's and our's: Grace be unto you and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ."

The Bible Teachings on the Covenants, Mediator, Ransom, Sin-Offering, Atonement,

With the responses from some brethren to hand, in reply to the notice in last month's "People's Paper" respecting the duplicating of the book on the above subjects, it now seems clear that the work should be undertaken. While the demand is as yet comparatively small we feel sure that many more friends will avail themselves of this book on these very important truths when they realise it will be available. It is necessary to add that the new work will be exempt from the personal and other references found in "What P.R. Taught" which are quite apart from the truths discussed, but the index and page numbers will still be preserved. It is proposed also that it should take the title as above and to have it bound into a book which will make it handier and more durable than in the larger form suggested in last month's notice, and giving a much better appearance.

Some time will be taken in getting this work through, but we expect to commence in the present month (D.V.). The price will be as low as possible—the book being prepared for service and not profit. An announcement as to cost will be made next month. It would be appreciated if other friends desiring copies could forward their orders as soon as possible. It will be a most useful book for class study or individual use.

Bible Study Meetings.

Regular Class Meetings for Bible Study, etc., are hold each Sunday afternoon and evening, also mid-week, in Melbourne and Adelaide, at the following addresses:-

Clyde House, 182 Collins Street, First Floor. Room 5, near Town Hall, Melbourne.
Liverpool Buildings, Flinders Street Adelaide, South Aust.

The gatherings are quite unsectarian, and all desiring to attend will be very welcome.

Contentment.

(Convention Address.)

“Let your conversation be without covetousness; and be content with such things as you have: for He hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee.”—Heb. 13:5.

THE same apostle that spoke the words of our text, said, “Godliness with contentment is great gain,” (1 Tim. 0: 0) and we notice it is the contentment with piety that constitutes the gain. There are people who are contented in themselves, in their own satisfied condition, which is perhaps anything but godly. However, the world in general is very discontented, and can we wonder that it is so, under the conditions that prevail at the present time?

With the true Christian, begotten of the truth, how different it should be. He sees what the world does not see—why God is permitting all the sufferings and sorrows, etc. Whoever has heard the glorious message, in the true sense of hearing, . that is with the hearing of faith and acceptance, has received what might be termed a double blessing. If the forgiveness of sins and reconciliation to the Lord through the blood of the cross, the Christian’s first experience in grace, was a great blessing, still more is the second blessing a cause for fullness of joy, in that it has brought to us the begetting of the holy spirit, whereby we become sons of God. We would reveal ourselves as very ungrateful and unthankful if we were not content with these blessings which we have; under adverse circumstances we have such things that should console us and make us happy.

All, of us who have taken up the position of followers of Christ in an intelligent manner, knew right at the start that the way would be narrow, strait and rough, and that we should content ourselves with being a nobody, to being beheaded—that our wills should be the will of our Lord. If we fully meant it when we sang that good old hymn:

“Not to ourselves again,
Not to the flesh we live;
Not to the world henceforth shall we
Our strength, our being give,

No truce with vanity,
Or this world’s idle show:
Dead to this world, and all
Its gaiety and pride,” etc.

we would certainly be content and feel, “No longer far from rest I roam; my soul is satisfied at home; the Lord my portion is.” Thus making melody in our hearts, though disappointments come, we can know no real disappointment because we accept what the Lord has measured out for us.

When we see the example of our Lord in suffering and enduring patiently the mockings and contradiction of sinners against Himself, and also that of the Apostles who followed closely in His footsteps, this all indicates that we of the present time, who have not yet resisted unto blood striving against sin and the wiles of Satan, have much for which to be thankful that our lines have fallen into such pleasant places. ‘We have no reason whatever to murmur and yet can we all say we do not murmur over our lot, which may not be very pleasing to us. Then, perhaps there is some resentment against others who have done things of which we are dissatisfied and unhappy, yet there it is and we must fight it.

We are not only to be appreciative of the smooth places along the narrow way in which the Lord gives rest to our weary feet, but we must be thankful also for all trials and tribulations, for does not the Apostle inform us that tribulations work out the fruits of the spirit. We must lay hold by faith on the assurances of the Lord’s Word that all things are working together for good to those who have made their covenant with Him and are striving to perform it. Though many trials and -difficulties at the time may seem grievous, they will be seen later on to be blessings, designed to develop in us a character like unto our Lord’s which is to make us fit for the inheritance of the saints in light. We must certainly take precautions not to rush into temptation, nor to bring upon ourselves persecution by unwise or foolish conduct, yet when these things come to us as the result of fidelity to principles of truth and righteousness exercised in the spirit of meekness, we may rejoice in them as so many ministries of evil toward us and which under divine guidance are fitting and preparing us to further reflect the Lord’s likeness and be His ambassadors for righteousness.

An explanation by one, on these things, seems very appropriate here,—’Evidently only a small number of those who have named the name of Christ and who have made consecration of life and time and influence to Him have ever appreciated these matters in their true light, and hence, not only are the so-called Christian nations the most discontented people of the world, but professed Christians are often among the most discontented and unhappy of individuals. Even some of those who have made consecration to the Lord, and who have come to a considerable knowledge of present truth and respecting the present time in which we are living, are not enjoying the rest which God provides for His people but are unhappy, restless and are among the discontented.” So we realise that these are not having “the peace which passeth all understanding,” to rule in their hearts, at the same time keeping all the other affairs of life in subjection and in proper order. Such things ought not to be, and it behoves all who are in this condition to see to it that it does not continue.

Whatever we have more than necessity, is that much more than the Lord has promised to us in this present time, and it should be a cause for thankfulness of lip and gratitude of heart. If we fully understood and viewed things rightly, where would be the occasion or the desire to complain or murmur about such things or conditions that we have?

Where would be the desire to wish for, hope for, or ask for more than the Lord has promised to give us, and more than His wisdom has seen would be best for us? If all these lessons which come to us were observed and received into the good soil of honest hearts, they would bring forth, under the guidance of divine care, a hundredfold more of peace, joy, trust, contentment, happiness and love in the lives of all who put them into use. Thus the influence upon all others around us will also be helpful and beneficial.

Let us take for an instance the discontent expressed upon the condition of the weather; as a matter of course a great many people use it, just as an expression, perhaps, without feeling any discontent. Others again will complain that it is too hot, or too cold, too windy, too wet, or too dry and thus growl and grumble their way through life. However, we have the great consolation of knowing that the time will come when such will growl and grumble no more.

Those who moan and murmur do succeed somewhat in making things different around them and that is, they make many feel very miserable in their atmosphere. Why, there are enough black and dark days arising which need brightening by the best influence we can muster; how much we should help to make others feel more contented, by Manifesting the spirit of contentment. We remember the words of a good old hymn,—“If our faces lighten, let it clearly prove, that we seek to brighten, those ‘mongst whom we move.”

In past experiences it has been observed how some depressed and melancholy people have been much cheered by the influence of another who had been through similar experiences, and had lived them down to a great extent. If we are not in the best of health, it is little use moaning and complaining; let us feel thankful that it is no worse. We do not want to be like those who meet so much trouble that never comes. Whatever, therefore, we have, may we be thankful and grateful, realising how much worse it could be, and thus upholding a standard of endurance that is commendable.

When the Apostle says, “Be content with such things as you have,” it is not only a good medicine to console us and bring us spiritual health and joy in the Lord; but it is also very beneficial for our physical health. There is not the slightest doubt that many people aggravate their complaints and diseases physically, by an imaginary and unhappy condition of mind.

The Psalmist says, “Delight thyself also in the Lord, and He shall give thee the desires of thy heart”; and what would these desires be? Surely nothing that would be against His will, for we pray “Thy will be done,” and should be contented whatever our course may be. So, may we “commit our ways unto the Lord, trust also in Him and He shall bring it to pass; rest in the Lord and wait patiently for Him.” He will bring the things to pass if it is really best for us, and we so desire; and if it is not best for us, far better it is that it does not come to pass, for He knows better than we, what is best for our different dispositions.

While the Word of God abounds in precepts and admonitions, warnings and instructions, and lifts high the standard of moral excellence, so high that in our weak condition we cannot attain unto it, and in our efforts to do so in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation we encounter the anger of the powers of darkness entrenched in the hearts of fallen men, this same Word comes to the faithful in the very midst of this battle with refreshing consolation. If our position in life is a humble one and requires plenty of hard work to gain the necessary things in life, let us not complain, but on the other hand may we be thankful for the health and strength to perform the needed labor; thankful that the present short life is the schooling time, that the lessons of our experiences rightly learned will bring riches of grace and glory which the world can neither give nor take away. We need to realise how favorably situated we are in that we have such riches of faith, trust and contentment made available to us.

The Apostle has urged us to be “content with such things as ye have,” and gives the reason,—“for He hath said,

I will never leave thee nor forsake thee.” This is the true ground of contentment — the realisation of the Lord’s care and that His wisdom and grace are being exercised toward us and that such things as He grants are the things which are best for us and which we would choose for ourselves if we had sufficient wisdom and insight into all the circumstances of the case. So, then, we may boldly say, “the Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me.”

The testings which the Lord designs for His people are not merely doctrinal tests, and consequently we can expect that separations amongst those who come to a knowledge of the truth will be considerably along the lines of character and of the fruits of the spirit. The Lord’s final decision is, “If any man have not the spirit (disposition or mind) of Christ, he is none of His.” It is of the greatest importance that all soldiers of the cross put on not only the intellectual covering, “the helmet of salvation,” but also the heart covering, love of righteousness and truth, goodness and purity with “the shield of faith.” The “breastplate of righteousness” will be found to be one of the most important pieces of armour in the battle which is upon us, and respecting which we are told that thousands shall fall at our side.

The fruits of the spirit will not grow in the garden of the soul where the weeds of discontent are permitted to sap the strength and taint the air with their noxious presence and influence. The sentiments of another of our hymns is quite to the point and we desire for all the Lord’s people that condition of faith, consecration and contentment which will permit us to sing from the heart with the spirit and understanding.

“He helped His saints in ancient days
Who trusted in His name;
And we can witness to His praise,
His love is still the same.

His presence sweetens all our cares
And makes our burdens light;
A word from Him dispels our fears,
And gilds the gloom of night.”

Let us remember that we will not be faithful in large things unless we have learned to be faithful in little things. May we all faithfully continue the transformation of our lives along this line of godliness with contentment in all the affairs of life. We will thus be preparing ourselves for greater trials and tests that the Lord may be pleased to impose later that we may be developed unto every good work and meet for His use in the Kingdom now at hand.

Today’s Furrow.

Sow the shining seeds of service
In the furrows of each day;
Plant each one with serious purpose,
In a hopeful tender way.

Never lose one seed, nor cast it
Wrongly with a hurried hand;
Take full time to lay it wisely
Where and how thy God hath planned.

Thus the blessed way of sharing
With another soul your gains,
Which though losing life, you find it
Yielding fruit on golden plains;

For the soul which shows its blessings,
Great or small, in word or smile,
Gathers as the Master promised,
Either here or afterwhile.

Sow this day the seeds of service in some life as you can spare.
Bend above the soul you strengthen
For a moment’s silent prayer.

Trust that somehow God will nurture
Deeds which love and faith afford,
Till the angel hands shalt reap them
For the garner of the Lord.

Peace I Leave with You.

(Convention Address.)

“Peace I leave with you, My peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled neither let it be afraid. ’ —John 14:27.

THESE lovely words were spoken by our Master the last night of His earthly life.- It was a choice blessing He would give them, a tranquillity of soul, a rest of heart and peace of mind which He Himself possessed—the peace of God.

Now to whom and why were these words spoken? A passage from the “Herald” would perhaps answer best:— “Every consecrated child of God in whom His holy spirit dwells is a temple of God; a .royal residence for the King of kings; this high privilege being theirs through the precious blood of Jesus who redeemed them: thus made them eligible for the call of God, to be thus set apart, a holy sanctuary, an habitation of God through the spirit, and it is their blessed privilege in reverent humility to realise the condescending love of God in thus making them His chosen vessels and to profit by all the hallowed influences of His presence and favour.”

- There are different conditions of peace; but the peace we would mention is that which is not dependent on outward circumstances; it is born from inherent goodness. The words of F. R. Havergal which appeared recently in our “People’s Paper” maybe are helpful here:—”That I may know in ebbless flow, the perfect peace of full and pure allegiance.” There are various verses in the Bible speaking of peace, and we would all have our favourite, but the one we will mention here is in Isaiah 26:3:—”Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on Thee; because he trusteth in Thee.”

There are few things more wonderful than memory; of the many capacities which God has endowed man, it surely must be one of the most potent for good. Our surroundings change, our hair, our health, our bodies change; but this one faculty, this vital tenacity of the mind never changes. We can go back through the vistas of years and bring back subjects of our lives of the dim past, and make them to be a living force. Speaking to the memory of her angel mother, General Booth said, “Oh, how choice a gift of God is that memory that can bring into the strain and stress of present life those sweet, pure days and ways of our earliest years.” Though the years had piled on her head, her words seemed to come back with added power. Oft when pressed with the difficulties and problems of life how helpful the counsel given, how sweet the memory when her mother laid aside her work, and gave to her children her evening blessing of prayer and song.

Wilhelmina Stitch, who conducted a “Fragrant Minute Column” to five million readers daily, sought to create and thus enhance a love for God’s beautiful things, and thus a love for God Himself. She died mourned by many and left behind her a fragrant memory.

What fragrant moments from a fragrant memory God’s children may have, because from the lips of Jesus fell the sweetest and finest fragrance. Back in Deuteronomy is a passage said by scholars to be one of the finest in the Bible. Deut. 32:1, 2—“Give ear, O ye heavens, and I will speak; and hear, O earth, the words of My mouth. My doctrine shall drop as the rain, my speech shall distil as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herb, and as the showers upon the grass.” This verse has reference to Him who spake as never man spake. For, “all bare Him witness, and wondered at the gracious words that proceeded out of His mouth.”

To you and me, in our common task, what words could be more helpful than the words of our text: “Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid”? What power and peace they contain; also the verse previous: “The Comforter which is the holy spirit shall teach you all things and bring to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you.” “Call to remembrance,” says the Apostle, “after ye were illuminated.” How helpful to memory are these verses. Does a little bit of heaven—heavenly-mindedness—come down to us through memory of the vision of the golden candlestick shedding light upon our way? “Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee.”

Why are we prone to forget? Is it not through lack of prayer or lack of zeal in allowing our minds to drift? Even the beautiful and fruitful vine needs to be trained, tied to a support that it may grow upward. So the new creature which has its old brain with which to think, realises all are leaky vessels, apt to forget. “Set your affection on the things above,” the Apostle tells us. How can we do it? David wrote, “Great peace have they which love Thy law”—or will.

There is a little poem of the Night Scented Stock, an insignificant flower through the day, but like other precious flowers it freshens up at night. Those who value it, place it near a door or window, where the dew and the evening breeze flood the room with its wonderful fragrance.

“All day it looked so weedy and forlorn,
But lo, at eventide blooms newborn,
Making my garden, now, a holy shrine
Of sacred memories, and love divine.
May I, in fashion like to this sweet flower,
Even when at length the evening shadows fall,
When fear and loss so many hearts appal,—
Make of my life a gracious fragrant bower,
That sad and weary hearts may find in me
Refreshment, from a heart at peace with thee.”

Have we ever felt like that ourselves, when, perhaps not long after reading our “Manna,” we have fallen into some besetment and struggled through the day in the slough of despond? When the evening quiet steals into our hearts, do we feel like David?—“Let my prayer come before Thee as incense and the lifting up of my hands as the evening sacrifice.” ‘Tis sweet to know we can always come boldly to the throne of grace, with a true heart in full assurance of faith.

Truly, “Great peace have they which love Thy law.” How may we learn to love God’s law? By reading the Bible.

In her "Fragrant Minute Column," Wilhelmina Stitch gave her opinion, under the title, "Your Bible and Mine," as follows: "The reading and expounding of it is not an intellectual pursuit set aside for the clergy. When I am reading it, it is exclusively mine; it excites and feeds my imagination; it delights my sense of rhythm. It guides me in my problems; it comforts me in my griefs. It rejoices with me in my gladness; it mourns over my failures, pleads with me for my repentance, and promises me—yes, me—salvation. This is what it is to me, when I am reading it alone in my room. But when I am talking of it, or writing about it, then I remember it is yours. My great desire is to share with you the beauty I have found in your Bible. Behold this shining gem. Perhaps you have forgotten it; perhaps you have missed it altogether. Look then with me. It is yours and mine."

How would you and I approach the Bible? He who would grow beautiful roses must first grow them in his heart. We must have a love for God's word like Jeremiah—"Thy words were found and I did eat them and they were unto me the joy and rejoicing of my heart." "If thou seekest her as silver and searchest for her as for hidden treasure; then shalt thou find the knowledge of God." What sweet Balm of Gilead; what waves of compassion; what spiritual vitality; what thrones of light; what joyous fountains of truth; what wells of purity; what hills of hope—"Beautiful waters that sparkle so free; bringing their sweetness and life to me." "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life," said our Lord, and such life as Paul told Timothy—"Life that is life indeed" (I Tim. 6:19, RN). If we can keep these things and not let them slip, when the Lord, by His spirit, brings them to our remembrance, our lives would be an impelling peace, aiding us in our common tasks to develop that deepness, constancy and sweetness that in some measure should make us the salt of the earth, and the light of the world, as our Master intended His followers to be.

Speaking to Bible Students can I say the experiences of a soul are not transferable, that the visions of God fall only on those who seriously, very seriously, obey at every step of the pilgrim way their truest impulse, and follow the highest they know? The choicest jewel that can be found in any character is purity. Even the heavenly wisdom is first pure. A mind illumined with the heavenly wisdom, to what can we compare it? "His works of grace, how bright they shine; how deep His counsels, how divine." What a monitor upon our way that can aid us to spiritualise our thoughts and turn life's intonations into gateways to God. What a guiding star through life; what a blessing of light upon darkness.

Hideous may be the thought, most insidious the approach of a wily Adversary, or of hosts of wickedness in high places of Satan's kingdom of darkness. Let us not be discouraged if we should experience this fiery ordeal. Even the great Apostle who had the mind of Christ experienced the warring of the mind. What an example of a voice in the mind we have in Elijah. How discouraged he was, and how strengthened and refreshed he was by the angel of the Lord. So, God can and does send aid to His tempest tried little ones. How sweet and comforting when a Scripture sometimes comes to our memory such as came to Daniel: "O man greatly beloved, fear not; peace be unto thee, be strong, yea, be strong." God wants strong characters that can win out and overcome. "Resist the devil and he will flee from you: Draw nigh to God and He will draw nigh to you."

When the Apostle Paul summed up the seventh chapter of Romans in those sublime and heartfelt words, "I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord," how he valued our Master and His words. So, to you and I there may be times when those words are not only a fragrant memory, but can be of truest loveliness and most infinite preciousness. "Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid."
